The other Sunday a bright little girl of three years attended service in an Episcopal church, where the rector was one of her particular friends. She objected to her mother making the response, saying:—"Don't speak, mamma—don't say anything. Uncle John isn't talking to you."—Boston Transcript.

WORKINGMEN
We cordially thank you for your very liberal patronage and desire to call your attention to the fact that in every department of our establishment we have an enormous stock adapted to your wants.
Medium and low-priced Overcoats at prices so low that it will pay you well to buy for next season.
Durable, substantial Suits, of all qualities, in great variety. Many of these goods are selling at just about what they would now cost us to manufacture.
We have an enormous stock of Pants of every grade at exceedingly low prices, as we just bought 2,400 pairs of Men's, Youths' and Boys' Kentucky Jeans Pants, all of which are offering at old prices, though they are actually worth 10 to 25 per cent. more. We also have just opened up a large lot of Men's Tweed Pants, all wool, in the latest patterns, fitted through, for $1.
In our Furnishing Department we are offering great bargains in Shirts, Underwear, Hosiery, &c., &c.
In Hats and Caps we can do you good. We are selling more Hats than any other concern in Michigan, and better goods for the price than you can get anywhere else.
We want the trade of the workingmen of LONDON, and are always prepared to give bargains.

AUCTION SALE
— OF —
HAT AND CAP STOCK,
MESSRS. MANVILLE & BROWN have received instruction from Catharine McCann, Administratrix of the late Philip McCann, to sell without reserve, in the store, Market Lane, formerly occupied by the deceased, the whole stock in trade and good will of the business on Thursday, 1st ult., at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at so much in the dollar.
The stock amounts to about $1,500, all seasonable goods, and in good condition. The great proportion of it has been recently bought. Inventory may be seen at the store, and terms made known on day of sale. A lease of the store can be obtained on advantageous terms. This is a most favorable opportunity for anyone wishing to go into the Hat and Cap trade, as a very successful business has been carried on in these premises for a number of years.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Composed, Compiled and Corralled by "Free Press" Reporters.

Lent does not impress starvation in the matter of whist.

The secret of fashion is to surprise and never to disappoint.

Paris was recently so foggy that the policemen held torches at the street corners.

In all the guilty train of human vices there is no crime of deeper dye than that of ingratitude.

Soft solder mends many a hole in a hard pan, and taffy heals many a wounded spirit, if judiciously applied.

Two buttons are considered a sufficient number for kid gloves when they have tops of the new kid lace.

Yeddo foulards are fine, thin, but not diaphanous cotton fabrics with a slightly ribbed, silk-finished surface.

Whoever is honorable and candid, honest and courteous, in a true gentleman, whether learned or unlearned, rich or poor.

Summer time will come again,
With its sunny-blowing zephyrs
Leaving kisses on the fields,
Roses are cows and cows are heifers.

The greatest novelties in the dry-goods market that have appeared for several years are the Yeddo crapes and Yeddo foulards.

Swedish lace is now used as a decoration for household linen. It is a kind of drawn work in which the squares are worked with embroidery.

Grenadine with a rainbow tinted surface, striped with black velvet, is to be very much worn under the season. It is expensive, but very enduring.

Young men who stand in front of church doors waiting to see the congregation come out might be used as stands to hang wraps and umbrellas on.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Music Question Elicits a Lengthy Discussion.

A Resolution to Dispense with the Teacher Voted Down.

Monthly Reports—Accounts—Notices of Motion, etc.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education was held last night in the Council Chamber, Col. Moffat presiding, and present Messrs. Jones, Smith, Cousins, McPhail, Bayly, Lee, Durdin, Wilson, T. J. Reid, Powell, Christie, E. B. Reed, Denton, Boyle, Checkley, Thornton, Johnston, Williams, Fraser, Wright and Thornton.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were presented: From A. D. Cameron, 104 cords wood, $2.87; Silas Bass, 12 loads black loam, $6; A. S. Murray & Co., eight-day clock, $6; Thos. Bryar, hair brooms, $6.40; M. D. Dawson & Co., advertising, &c., $25; A. S. Abbott, disbursements, $20.91. D. Fraser, supplies for repairs, $1.45; G. Clampit, carting wood, $1.50; for extra teaching, $25.15. The last account was ordered to be paid, and the remainder referred to the proper Committees.

MONTHLY REPORTS.

Rev. Mr. Checkley, Head Master, presented the usual monthly report of the Collegiate Institute, which showed the attendance to have been—boys, 149; girls, 144; total, 287; daily average, 246.

Inspector Boyle presented the monthly report of the attendance at the public schools. The total number entered on the registers was 9 687—boys, 1,438; girls, 1 249. Average daily attendance, 9 021—boys, 1,100; girls, 921. The report also drew attention to repairs needed.

FINANCE.

Mr. E. B. Reed, Chairman of the Finance Committee, presented a report, recommending the payment of accounts to the amount of $514.10—Collegiate Institute, $94.80; Public Schools, $480.78. He also referred to the other accounts which were before the Committee, and suggested that they be passed. These accounts were from John Ostinoe & Co., $12.05; S. McBride, $55.; McLennan & Fryer, $2.18.

The report was adopted.

IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. Wilson (Chairman) presented the following report:—

1. That they be authorized to plant trees around High and Public Schools where necessary.

2. That a good practical man be employed at a stated salary to attend to repairs, &c., under the supervision of this Committee.

3. That your Committee called for tenders for 100 cords green and 50 cords dry wood, at least 50 per cent. to be maple, and awarded the contract to T. J. Wilson, of Hesssall, at $3.35 per cord, 75 per cent. to be maple.

The report was taken up clause by clause.

The first clause passed.

The second clause elicited considerable discussion.

Mr. Jones moved that the clause be struck out.

Mr. Christie considered the suggestion was a good one. He had no doubt whatever that the Inspector did his best in certifying to the accounts for repairs. He believed it required a practical mechanic to properly certify to the repairs.

Mr. Wright thought the expense was not so much for labor done as for material used.

Mr. Wilson was not in favor of the clause.

Mr. Cousins considered if the clause was carried a difficulty would present itself in obtaining one person able to do the work. It would require a "Jack of all trades."

Mr. T. J. Reid gave a list of the accounts for labor and material separately during the past year.

The Chairman said the question was a live one, and merited consideration. He considered it would be better to lay the matter over for a time, holding it in abeyance, than to strike it out altogether.

Mr. Bayly agreed with the Chairman, and moved that the clause be referred back to the committee, with instructions to bring in a report at the next monthly meeting of the Board as to the cost of both labor and materials used in repairs to the public schools during the past seven years.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. Durdan, and carried without a division.

The third clause passed.

On the Council resuming, the report as amended was adopted.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. Wilson gave notice that he would move at a subsequent meeting that the salary of the music teacher be $800 per annum, it being paid as during the whole of the time the schools are kept open, and a proportionate amount for the time employed in teaching in school hours.

Mr. Wilson gave notice that at the next meeting of the Board he would move that the School Management Committee report on the question referred to them in February of last year, in reference to home studies.

The Board then adjourned.

THE WATER-WORKS BOARD.

Contracts Awarded—Arbitrator Appointed—More Land Offered, &c.

The Water Commissioners met in the Board Room last night, and after routine, nineteen tenders for fencing, lead piping, brass cocks, &c., were opened.

AWARDING CONTRACTS.

For lead piping the tender of Mr. James Robertson & Co., Toronto, at $5.09 per 100 lbs., being the lowest, was accepted.

The tenders for cocks and other brass work, as per specifications, was awarded to Kielly & Co., of Hamilton, at $340.45.

Unable to supply the demand of the East, seventy feet fence with bottom board, per rod, $3.85; six feet of fence with bottom board, $3.50; same height of fence without bottom board, 25 cents per rod, less double gate dressed lumber hung complete, gate as per plan, $19.75; single posts cased, $7.75.

On motion, it was resolved that laborers at the works should be allowed one dollar and a shilling per day.

APPOINTMENT OF AN ARBITRATOR.

The Mayor enquired of the Secretary whether a minute had been entered in the appointment of Mr. Magee as arbitrator in the Kinney matter.

The minutes proving informal, it was moved by Mr. Lewis, and seconded by the Mayor, that Mr. Magee be appointed as arbitrator in the case, and that the Secretary be instructed to communicate the appointment to Mr. Magee. Carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A communication was read from Mr. Eli Griffiths, of Byron, offering to convey the Griffith Springs to the Board, and also the property known as the Pond Field, for $3,000.

The Mayor stated that Mr. Griffiths had called upon him relative to the matter, and he had told him to make a definite offer in writing. He thought it might be advisable to consider this offer, and suggested that the Engineer should report upon the facility for utilizing the streams spoken of.

A resolution was passed in accordance with the suggestion.

A letter was also read from the Clerk of London East Council, explaining the absence of that body from the meeting of the Commissioners.

THE WASTE WATER.

The Engineer submitted estimates for utilizing the water running at waste at the grounds. With conduit 850 feet long the probable cost was placed at $1,800.

After some discussion, it was resolved to commence the work at once.

The Board then adjourned.

A THREATENING LETTER (?)

Previous to the sitting of the Board, Mr. Rayner exhibited the appended letter, which requires no explanation or comment. It read as follows:—

City, Feb. 28th, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—I feel it to be my duty to write you and give you warning that it is decided on by a number of citizens to have you wounded, as you were elected a Water Commissioner when an Alderman, contrary to law. They have had the opinion of two of our best lawyers, also one in Toronto, and all agree that you can be unseated, but action will be deferred until after Tuesday evening next, when I understand a deputation with a petition is to wait on you to request that old man Hanna as Caretaker of the reservoir. If you refuse to do so action will be taken at once, as stated above, but if their request is granted no action is to be taken. You can think what you had better do. A number of your best friends would be sorry to be deprived of your services as Chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners, and give the mincing fly for this time being a triumph. It is the opinion of the long-robe gents, as I am informed, that the judge could give the seat to Christie or order an election, when you would run again, but you would have a strong opposition. This we all talked over in my hearing yesterday, when I determined to write you this note of warning, as I have nothing particular to do, and I move around a good deal. If I hear of anything outside stamp time against you I will not fail to let you know. With best wishes for your present and future welfare, I am, yours, &c.

COUNTRY NOTES.

Tile Drainage and Drains—How to Make Them—The Depth, and How to Grade Them—Drainage for Health—What it Costs per Acre to Drain, and the General Results Therefrom.

HOW TO MAKE DRAINS.

The drains ... of the soil, their terminal by the nature ... A loose, depth, and the amount of fall. ... torous soil will permit water to reach the drains for a long distance, while a heavy, compact clay is almost impervious to water, and requires the drains to be made much nearer. In a block, loose soil drains at the depth of four feet are sufficient at a distance of ten rods apart; but, if the land is a hard-pan or stiff clay, to drain it thoroughly the distance apart should be from four to six rods.

But few persons realize the great advantage that deep drains have over shallow ones. There are few persons that drain to a depth averaging over one and a half to three feet. Persons pay taxes on their land all the way down (and on wet lands it often amounts to a rent), but they never get any agricultural benefit from it any deeper than they drain; but they do get the benefit of it that deep, even if it is eight feet; in fact, an orchard or vineyard should not be drained less than that depth. The time is probably not far distant when such shallow drains will be taken up and put down again at a proper depth. Persons often say that it costs too much to drain so deep; when the fact is the cost is less. For instance, it would cost but very little more to to dig two drains to the depth of four feet than it would to dig three to the depth of two and a half feet, and the two deep drains will drain fully as much land as the three shallow, and will drain it much better and save the expense of the third line of tile.

PUT THE DEPTH OF BRAINS

is not always a matter of choice, as very often the outlet is not sufficient, and it is very often noticed that persons are some times extremely contrary about ... their neighbors about them an outlet, and very often spend more time and money in having about it than would do the whole work, besides creating a bad feeling. In making an improvement of this kind, that is to last for all time to come, it is much better to secure a good outlet in the first place, if it does cost something more, especially if the land is flat and you have but little fall; but in all cases it is best to have a good outlet, so that the water will fall from six to twelve inches with it when at work. However, a tile drain that is properly made will not fill up; if the outlet does fill up fifteen or twenty inches the water will boil up like a spring and keep the tile washed out. It is well to have the first twenty-five inches in the hundred feet—a five-inch tile will carry off as much water as a six inch will if the fall is but four inches in the hundred feet, the greater the fall the more rapidly the water will flow, and a smaller-sized tile will answer. One great consideration in draining land is to get the greatest amount of water off in the shortest time possible with the least expense. A great many persons do the opposite of this.

In draining, always remember that wherever you make a change in the soil and stones there, becoming more warm in passing through the surface of the ground, which warmth it carries off with it, the greater the drained. However, in some cases, the ridges are too high to dig through, and laterals must be used.

THE LATERALS OR SIDE DRAINS,

as they enter the main drain, should be made to enter at an acute angle, pointing down stream. Experience shows that if their current enters square across that of the main drain, one or the other stream is apt to become stopped, and sand or gravel deposited, injuring the water-course.

The angle should be a very acute one, and lay your tile as the ditch is dug, stand on the tile in laying them and turn them until the joints fit, and fit them after with your boothool so as to keep them close together, and lay broken pieces of tile over the joints where they do not fit and cover the tile as you lay them with a few inches of clay out of the bottom of the ditch to keep them warm and from washing at the joints, after which fill in as much top soil as possible; it will facilitate the forces of the water in leaving the drain at any time put a board or flat stone at the upper end so as to keep rubbish from washing in, and on finishing the drain at the upper end it must be well closed. The last tile at the lower end should be twice as long and have three small holes through at the end, not over an inch apart, with wires so as to keep all animals out of the drain.

To know the size of the tile needed learn all you can about drainage, and use your own judgment. One inch tile will only carry off as much water as an open ditch four inches wide and two deep, and is sufficient for an outlet for fifty acres. Never continue tile of the same size all the way down, because the largest size of water tile will do from that point on and so on. It must be borne in mind that the tile is the water-way all the time, at every joint, and at home at the same time. When she comes in, I go out, and when I come in, she goes out. The plan works admirably, and we are both very happy."

The new hosiery this season is indescribably pretty. Among the many choice novelties in this line are black silk, with instep and front exquisitely embroidered with bunches of roses and forget-me-nots in the natural colors; white silk, woven in alternate plain and lace stripes decorated with colored silk embroidery, while fine new thread balbriggans, almost as soft as silk, are elaborately embroidered in floral designs in white and in colors to match the fashionable evening shades.

Sophie, who has been dining at Green-wich with a few "choice spirits," returns home rather later than he feels his wife would approve; so he draws off his boots and steals noiselessly into his room; but, alas, his better half awakens. Quick as thought he creeps to his Fenelon's cradle and begins to rock it, softly humming a lullaby. A voice is heard—"Charles, what are you doing there?" "Why, dear, I have been trying to get this boy off to sleep for the last half hour!" "But he is here in bed with me!" Tableau!

Men frequently criticise women who look into the show windows of millinery and dry goods stores. But men themselves are really greater window gazers than women are. They will look into windows that contain fancy cloths for coats, or well burnished firearms, or nicely polished shoes, or photographs of pink tights stuffed out like sausages, or big, captivating oysters, or cheap diamond scarf pins. They think that women are silly, while all the time they are more silly. Some men will even look into an empty window if they may see the reflection of their narrow figures. Women love object teaching as much as men do, and sometimes they have little else in their lives.

The seed show held in the Agricultural Hall was, as far as quality of seeds shown, both from the United States and Canada, brought fairly remunerative figures on arrival in England. The inboard at once heavy shipments from New York, Boston, Toronto and Montreal, which, together with an unusually large home supply being put upon the market, produced such a demoralizing effect that prices receded from 60s to 35s 6d in very short time in Liverpool. Quantities of clover which have gone forward, and have yet to be heard from, cost from 54s 6d to 54 5d per bush in Ontario. The market here and in the West is inactive, and while holders quote from $6 50 to $6 75, shippers now most positively that $5.50 cannot be obtained for car lots on this market. In Chicago there is a somewhat firmer feeling in clover seed, and prices are quoted there at $4.20 to $4.50, and at 7½c. to 7¾c. per lb in New York. Timothy seed is firm, at $3.40 to $3.50 in round quantities, the sale of two carloads on spot being reported at $3.40 Seedsmen have been paying farmers $2.75 for what has been brought in so far. Timothy meets with a good demand in Chicago at $2 70 to $2.75 for prime seed, and in New York it sells pretty readily at $3.05 to $3.10.

The Thunderer Gun Experiments.

From the London Times.

The fragments of the 38-ton gun, destroyed for experimental purposes on the bursting mill in the proof grounds, Government Marshes, adjoining the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on Tuesday last, have all been recovered, and are found to number about 190 pieces. They have all been marked, and are being washed and arranged for inspection. The two projectiles were taken from the sand butt in front of the gun, both broken in pieces, and it is evident from the appearance of the bore that they broke up before leaving the gun, the marks of the rifling being in parts quite effaced. The muzzle end of the steel tube, about three feet in length, is intact, with parts of the wrought iron upper-coil remaining attached, and a singular appearance is presented by the ragged end of this fragment, the steel having been violently rent and inverted as though a shot of lighter fragment, moving faster than itself, had overtaken it and struck it with considerable force. The crusher gauges fixed on both projectiles have been recovered, but give no positive data respecting the pressure produced by the explosion. A very great pressure had been expected, and the copper crushers had consequently been subjected to a pressure of 35 tons to the square inch before being inserted in the plugs. This pressure was not exceeded in the explosion, and the only apparent definition arrived at of importance is that a strain which would not be alarming in the powder chamber has sufficed to burst the gun at the spot where its thickness and strength suddenly diminish. The remnants of the gun and projectiles have been watched by Police on account of the temptation which they offer to seekers of curiosities, and it is hoped that the whole of them will be ultimately put together in their proper places for exhibition. The Thunderer's two 38-ton guns, which have had such similar fate, were the only two 12 inch guns of their weight in the service, having been supplied to meet a requisition, before an increase here was decided upon. All the 38-ton guns now in existence have a calibre of 12½ inches and fire spherical projectiles, whereas the Thunderer's guns always employed the shot prepared for the original Woolwich Infants of 25 tons. It appears that the gun burst at almost exactly the same place as the gun which burst on board the Thunderer; the broken tube corresponds almost precisely with that of its sister gun, which is now on view in the Royal Gun Factories.

TROUBLE AT PARKHILL.

The Council are going to take Simon McLeod's lot for a market site, whether Mr. McLeod is willing or no. There exists a strong feeling here just now, and there will likely be trouble. The Council served Mr. McLeod with a copy of the by-law passed at their late meeting. The lot selected is on the corner of Mill and Main streets, opposite the Exchange Bank. There will likely be a tug of war over the matter yet.

Latest Notes by Telegraph and Mail.

THE SEED TRADE.

Account sales of Canadian clover seed are said to be awaited from Great Britain, with anything but pleasant feelings by shippers here. A party in this city has just received the intelligence by cable that 1,000 bags of clover seed was sold in Liverpool at 35s. per cwt. Upon this lot he admits a loss of about $1,000. He has since refused to know if he will accept 30s., which is the best bid on another lot. A second exporter said the thing was simply ridiculous, and must be wrong information for publication. A combination of circumstances appears to have aided in forcing such a disastrous decline as "panic" and "break" in prices on the other side. The first consignments of the season being light both from the United States and Canada, brought fairly remunerative figures on arrival in England. The inboard at once heavy shipments from New York, Boston, Toronto and Montreal, which, together with an unusually large home supply being put upon the market, produced such a demoralizing effect that prices receded from 60s to 35s in very short time in Liverpool. The N. Y. Dog Show.

The Fourth Annual Exhibition of the Westminster Kennel Club.

Mr. Charles Lincoln, superintendent of the fourth annual dog show of the Westminster Kennel Club, which is to be held at the Madison Square Garden, New York, on April 27, 28 and 29, is receiving entries. A considerable number have already been received. Extensive exhibitors walled until near the opening before making application for space. There will be an unusual number of fox terriers on exhibition this year, and the Western breeders, who last year kept out of the Eastern exhibitions, will be out in force. One reason for the interest this more than usual interest is the fact that this show will probably be the only one of the kind held in the East for all the states this year. Mr. Lincoln says that they will expect to have 1,500 dogs on exhibition. The largest show ever held heretofore was that at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, England, last spring; 1,300 dogs were on exhibition. The largest show at the last New York exhibition were 965. Prince Albert Bolnes, kennel editor of the London Field, has been invited to act as one of the judges, and it is understood that he will consent to act. Prince Albert Bolnes and Rev. Mr. Meadows, two of the most experienced European judges, have signified their intention of making entries, and will no doubt be present. The entries will close on April 13.

A Lunatic in a Sleeping Car.

John Hickman, one of the cattle kings of Colorado, during a temporary fit of insanity, assaulted several persons in a sleeper on the Kansas Pacific road last night. He has been addicted to similar fits for some time, and was on the way to Hot Springs, accompanied by his wife, hoping to find relief from his ailment. They took the sleeper at Denver, and when night came retired together in a lower berth. About 10 o'clock Hickman roused up and commenced pounding his wife unmercifully. Her screams only made him worse, and he jumped from the berth, drew a long knife and slashed away at the occupants of the upper berth, cutting an old Englishman severely in the arm and side. By this time the conductor, Mr. Ward, entered the car, and Hickman rushed at him with the knife, saying he would kill him. Ward surmised the condition of his assailant, and by the device of rare presence of mind succeeded in convincing him that he was his friend, and would help him clean out the whole car if necessary. By this means the crazed man was quieted, and when the brakesman slipped Ward a revolver he levelled it at Hickman and told him to lie down. He succumbed, and was securely bound until the train reached Wahkeeney, where he was turned over to the authorities, and the wounded parties left in the care of friends.—*Topeka (Kan.) MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, March 3, 1 a. m.—Indications for the Middle States, increasing cloudiness; for the Lower Lakes, increasing cloudiness and possibly occasional rain.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The London East Council meet this evening for business.

John Lewis has been summoned by Thos. H. Stanton on a charge of using abusive language.

The Rev. W. H. Milburn, the blind orator, lectured to a large audience in Strathroy last evening.

The fine weather of yesterday induced owners of rigs to turn out, and the streets were consequently lively.

A cow belonging to Mrs. George Fair, 7th concession, West Williams, gave birth to three fine healthy calves one day recently.

John Rice, who died at Shelby, O., the other day, was at the battle of the Thames, and with his own eyes saw Col. Johnson kill Tecumseh.

Mrs. O'Mara, of Detroit, obtained the gold watch by the drawing at the R. C. bazaar at Ridgetown last Friday. A full list of the prize-receivers will appear on Thursday.

Mr. Wm. Hayden, G. W. R. station agent at Woodstock, sold tickets yesterday afternoon to Mr. R. Thompson, Charles Davidson and Miss Frazer for Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and for San Francisco to Mr. and Mrs. James Torrington and Mr. George Trimble.

FOR NEBRASKA.—A carload of farmers and their families, numbering altogether from twenty to thirty, coming from the neighborhood of Gifford and Milldmay, passed through here yesterday on their way to Nebraska.

CONTINUING THEIR TRIPS.—Mr. John D. Noble, of Petrolia, and Mr. John R. Minhinnick, of London, are still in Ontario making experiments in the gravity and fire tests of American and Canadian coal oil, and have fitted up a laboratory there for this purpose, where they will be engaged for some time in testing the oils and in furnishing Wednesday all to the Government as they may require to enable them to carry out the prop-sed regulations with regard to coal oil. It is said that the Government will increase the standard of Canada oil to 120, which is considered equal to American oil at 130.

MILITIA NOTES.—The formation of the St Thomas Rifle Guards Institute Drill Company for the purpose of drill is authorized by the last Gazette. The officers chosen are—Captain, Joseph Edward Mitchley; Lieutenant, George Edson Burns; 2nd Lieutenant, Selbourne Anderson. The following officers have been granted second-class military school certificates:—Captain Nathan Ellis, 29th Battalion; Captain James A. Spence, 30th do; Lieutenant Arthur W. Kent, 26th do; Lieutenant James Wolfe, 36th do; Lieutenant James Neil do; 2nd Lieutenant Richard Flynn, 22nd do; 2nd Lieutenant, T. C. Somerville, 24th do.

Y. M. C. A. PARLOR ENTERTAINMENT.—There was a fair audience at Victoria Hall last evening on the occasion of the parlor entertainment given under the Y. M. C. A. auspices. Mr. H. C. Green presided, and introduced a programme of music by the ordinary interest, in which the following ladies and gentlemen took part:—Instrumental music by Master Wm. Barrow and Mr. Wm. Taylor; readings and recitations by Misses A. B. Sage, Collins, Thompson and Prof. Harrison, T. R. Parker and Mr. Winlow; vocalisms by Miss Green, and Messrs. J. W. McIntosh, Gray, Morrison, W. Cross. Votes of thanks to those who took part and "God Save the Queen" closed a very successful entertainment.

LONDON SOUTH MISSIONARY MEETING.—The annual missionary meeting of the London South Methodist Church was held on Monday night, and was well attended. Mr. R. Smith presided. Addresses were delivered by Rev. B. B. Keefer and Joseph Colling, which were well received. Subsequently $170 was raised by subscription from among the audience. The annual report was read by Rev. T. Colling, the pastor. The choir, under Mr. John Ward, contributed largely to the success of the meeting. Votes of thanks to the collectors, Mesdames Westman and Stanton, who were reappointed, and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Keefer closed the evening's proceedings.

POLICE COURT PROCEEDINGS.—Before his Worship the Police Magistrate yesterday, Meyers Meyers was handed over to Chief Hunter, of Dunham, he having been arrested on a warrant from that town charging him with fraud. Edward Lynch paid $1 for an injudicious fullgnon in "old rye." James Jones and William Wright, the once famous member of the Connell Minstrel, were arraigned on charges of vagrancy. They showed themselves willing to be discharged, and, with permission of the P.M., went down the couniness. Daniel E. Baudmann, the Shakespearean actor, was charged by Jas. Reid with breach of the cab by-law. It seems that on alighting at the G. W. R. station, yesterday, he ordered the complainant to drive him and his wife to the Grigg House. This was done, and the cabman demanded fifty cents, the legal fare for two passengers. Mr. Baudmann offered a quarter, which was refused, and a satisfactory settlement not having been effected at, a warrant was issued for the actor's arrest. A compromise was effected, however, and on payment of $2.60 costs the charge was withdrawn.

AUCTION SALE OF MISSES TO-NIGHT.—Maxville & Brown will sell at their rooms, at 7.30 p.m., a large lot of pier and mantel mirrors. This is the last opportunity, as the consignment must be closed out immediately after.

THE BLIND MAN ECQUENT.—Rev. W. H. Milburn, whose fame as a lecturer is world wide, is announced to give his views on "Modern Priestley Sheridan, the Orator and Wit," at Victoria Hall this (Wednesday) evening. Those who desire to be instructed as well as interested should make a point of being present.

CONTINUATION OF THE INQUEST.

William Donnelly's Evidence at the Examination Read Over.

Johnny O'Connor Again Cross-Examined.

MARTIN HOGAN'S EVIDENCE

He Recognized None of the Murderers of John Donnelly.

THE JURY BRING IN AN OPEN VERDICT

But Disagree Concerning the Murderers of John Donnelly.

LUCAN, March 2, 9:45 a.m.—Preparations are fast going forward for the opening of the investigation this morning. The Crown Attorney and Mr. Macmahon, counsel for the defence, arrived here at 8:30 this morning, and the prisoners, who are momentarily expected, are six in number, viz:—Jas. Carroll, John Kennedy, John Purtell, Martin McLoughlin, Patrick Ryder, jr., and Thomas Ryder.

The investigation continues to be held in the Council Chamber instead of being adjourned to the Town Hall, as was anticipated, but the public, all except those interested and the reporters, will be excluded owing to want of space for the large crowd in attendance.

The Coroner took his seat at 10.05 a. m. and the inquest resumed as per adjournment.

The Coroner opened the proceedings by calling over their several names, as follows—John Maguire (foreman), E. R. Hodgins, T. Robinson, H. Wilson, John Bawden, J. W. Orme, W. Pratt, George Kernick, J. Palmer, T. Cabbon, W. Quigley, James Mayo, John Judge and Wm. Henry.

The County Attorney then read over the cross-examination of the boy Johnny O'Connor, as taken in the city of London, it being agreed by counsel for the defence, Attorney and counsel for the defence that this mode of procedure would be adopted, in order to save going over the whole evidence given in London, as it would be substantially the same.

William Donnelly was then sworn, and a copy of the evidence taken in London before the Magistrate's examination read over to him, the same which has been published in the press already.

The prisoners arrived at the court-room at 11.50 a. m. precisely, having been delayed on the road by the break down of their conveyance. They were lined at the court room door by a large number of their friends, male and female, and cordially greeted by them. At the time they were being saluted they seemed in the best of spirits and quite cheerful. At this time the Crown Attorney finished the reading of the first day's evidence given by Wm. Donnelly in London, and commenced to read his cross-examination on being recalled the following morning. The whole of Donnelly's evidence was finished reading by the Crown Attorney at 12.40, and the witness acknowledged its correctness.

At this point the counsel for the defence asked that an adjournment of any further cross-examination of Wm. Donnelly until such time as the prisoners had time to get some refreshments and be present during the cross-examination.

This was agreed to by the Crown Attorney.

Dr. Flock, being duly sworn, said:—On the evening of Wednesday, the 4th, at the residence of Mr. O'Connors, in Lucan, I made a post-mortem examination of the late John Donnelly there were no bruises or appearances of injury to the head; some blood on the right cheek, when I washed off there was found a wound, there was blood also on the hands and face, but no wounds, all the upper part of the right side of the chest, in front and at the base of the neck adjoining, there were numerous small holes or openings somewhat blackened by contusion, about thirty in number, such as might be made by a gun shot, they covered a space of about three or four inches square; by blood; in one of them was a small sliver of wood, not a half inch long and as thick as a match, none of these wounds were large, yet a few were a little larger than the rest; on the right side, in the neighborhood of the groin, about two inches above the haunch bone; there was one wound somewhat contused; it was about half an inch across in one direction, from without upwards, and a little less in the other direction; that is it was rather oval; here the integuments or skin were pressed and the edges of the wound inverted; on the right side behind nearer the middle of the body was a low down was another wound irregularly circular, with inverted and ragged margin, and protruding with discoloration or contusion; these were all the marks or wounds observed externally; upon laying open the chest and exposing the lungs, there was external wounds between the [illegible] and the base of the [illegible] found a great quantity of blood in the parts beneath the skin, and deeper the soft parts were liter say mangled and torn; the collar bone and first rib fractured the large vessels in this region lacerated; I probed amongst these parts with my fingers, but could not find any foreign body; the broken ends of the bones and the fragments broken from them and the lacerated soft parts were all that I felt; I felt the right side of the cavity of the chest contained a large quantity of blood, at least three pints, some of it coagulated, the greater portion fluid; I then removed the right lung, and found in its upper part numerous small holes corresponding with those on the outside of the chest; the substance of the lung here contained a considerable quantity of extravasated blood, but no great quantity; I found the lower part of the lung, as if whatever made them had passed through a substance; in the substance of each, there were tracks back to the woods, and I told the Whalens I would show them each; the consternation took place in our own house; Ellen Carty was in the house then; I don't remember any men who were in the house at the time; I never told any one that the old man's hands were tied—to a reporter I was told—the old man's hands were tied; I never said I never told they were tied of my knowledge; I only heard others say it; when I heard parties say his hands were tied I said it was not so; the reporter spoke to me in presence of my mother and Mr. Hodge; I cannot account for it; I said to the reporter my sister told me Purtell was at the wake; I did not see him, neither did I point him out either on the Wednesday or the Thursday; I was with Constable Hodgens and some other fellow at the funeral; I did not see Purtell then; the funeral was on Friday; I don't know if I said shoes during the night or Thursday night; I heard one first; I heard Purtell say this while under the bed; I told him to keep quiet; whenever Donnelly started to tell me anything I told him to keep quiet, so I did not want to hear anything; to the best of my recollection William never came in the house after I first went under the bed; I was under the bed all this time; when we got up we all went into the kitchen; none of us had breakfast there; it would be about 7 o'clock when I went to Keefe's; I was gone about half an hour; not certain if Hogan was there when I returned from Keefe's, but saw him there afterwards; during all this time I never told Hogan I knew anyone; I looked out from behind the blinds for about two or three seconds; I looked out again about four o'clock.

To Mr. Hutchinson—I asked Hogan if he had seen anybody; he raised up his head, and said, don't talk to me about it at all; keep to yourself what you know and I'll do the same; I made no further attempt to find out whether he knew any of the parties or not; he (Hogan) also stopped me before from talking as already mentioned; did not seem to want to speak at all; I considered he was very much frightened; I considered him out at the front of the house; the parties might be around and we not see them; for this reason I kept quiet and he kept quiet also, afraid to let my wife go out to call Walker when I told her to go; the reason I got up before daylight was because Morley, a neighbor of mine, was up, and had a lamp lighted; I considered I was safe then; I cannot say whether my wife gave any morning when the crowd was near Mr. Porte's office; I don't think I had any talk with Jas Keefe that day at all; I don't think I had any talk with Keefe then; am not certain about it; I cannot tell who said that the old man Donnelly's hands were tied; the conversation took place in our own house; Ellen Carty was in the house then; I don't remember any men who were in the house at the time; I never told any one that the old man's hands were tied—to a reporter I was told—the old man's hands were tied; I never said I never told they were tied of my knowledge; I only heard others say it; when I heard parties say his hands were tied I said it was not so; the reporter spoke to me in presence of my mother and Mr. Hodge; I cannot account for it; I said to the reporter my sister told me Purtell was at the wake; I did not see him, neither did I point him out either on the Wednesday or the Thursday; I was with Constable Hodgens and some other fellow at the funeral; I did not see Purtell then; the funeral was on Friday; I don't think it was; I described Purtell to the Chief; did not see Purtell either at the wake, house or funeral at all; I told Pope and Wm. Donnelly what I knew; I told Pope Purtell; I told the Chief that I knew Purtell by his looks without referring to his cap at all; I think I told the Chief on Thursday at our house; I told my sister said Purtell was at the wake; I said a light moustache, light hair and whiskers; told the Chief it was old Tom Ryder's brother; I said Tom Ryder and Purtell were standing around at the foot of the body of Donnelly, they were standing near the room door where Tom's feet were; there would be a dozen standing around there; Tom Ryder and Purtell were nearest to where I lay; I said I was not sure whether it was a lamp or candle; the light was shining; could not tell that whether it was a candle or lamp; I just seen the light shining; somebody about there was holding it; don't know what way they were holding the light, whether high or low; I just seen the light shining; I saw the blackened one's face; also one with side whiskers; he was standing a step or two from Ryder and Purtell. he was look at Tom Donnelly; the man with the side whiskers was middling tall; took no notice to his dress; did not hear him speak; don't remember having seen him before or not; I would not be able now to tell who the man with the moustache was if he came in here now; I did not notice what kind of hat he had on; could not tell whether he was fat or not; just seen the one face; I just looked at him and pulled my head back again; recognized none of the men inside of the house; there were all the marks or wounds observed externally; upon laying open the chest and exposing the lungs, there was [illegible] inches above the haunch bone; there was one wound somewhat contused; it was about half an inch across in one direction, from without upwards, and a little less in the other direction; that is it was rather oval; here the integuments or skin were pressed and the edges of the wound inverted; on the right side behind nearer the middle of the body was a low down was another wound irregularly circular, with inverted and ragged margin, and protruding with discoloration or contusion; these were all the marks or wounds observed externally; upon laying open the chest and exposing the lungs, there was external wounds between the [illegible] and the base of the [illegible] found a great quantity of blood in the parts beneath the skin, and deeper the soft parts were liter say mangled and torn; the collar bone and first rib fractured the large vessels in this region lacerated; I probed amongst these parts with my fingers, but could not find any foreign body; the broken ends of the bones and the fragments broken from them and the lacerated soft parts were all that I felt; I felt the right side of the cavity of the chest contained a large quantity of blood, at least three pints, some of it coagulated, the greater portion fluid; I then removed the right lung, and found in its upper part numerous small holes corresponding with those on the outside of the chest; the substance of the lung here contained a considerable quantity of extravasated blood, but no great quantity; I found the lower part of the lung, as if whatever made them had passed through a substance; in the substance of each, there were tracks back to the woods, and I told the Whalens I would show them each; the consternation took place in our own house; Ellen Carty was in the house then; I don't remember any men who were in the house at the time; I never told any one that the old man's hands were tied—to a reporter I was told—the old man's hands were tied; I never said I never told they were tied of my knowledge; I only heard others say it; when I heard parties say his hands were tied I said it was not so; the reporter spoke to me in presence of my mother and Mr. Hodge; I cannot account for it; I said to the reporter my sister told me Purtell was at the wake; I did not see him, neither did I point him out either on the Wednesday or the Thursday; I was with Constable Hodgens and some other fellow at the funeral; I did not see Purtell then; the funeral was on Friday; I don't think it was; I described Purtell to the Chief; did not see Purtell either at the wake, house or funeral at all; I told Pope and Wm. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Cost of the War in Afghanistan.

Shall England or India Pay the Bill?

Mr. Gladstone's Utterances on the Subject.

How the Budget Speech Was Received.

London, March 12.—In the House of Commons.

Henry Fawcett, member for Hackney, brought forward the resolution which he had given notice of, declaring it unjust and iniquitous for England to throw upon India the entire cost of the Afghanistan war. An excited and important debate followed Mr. Fawcett's remarks in support of his resolution.

Mr. Gladstone supported the motion in a speech which lacked nothing of his old vigor and acrimony. He declared the Imperial Government, having transformed what was merely a local difficulty into an imperial war, should not shrink from the pecuniary responsibility of defraying its cost by the expedient of throwing the whole expense upon the already overburdened and impoverished people of India. He called the attention of the House to the fact that early in this campaign, when Lord Lytton, Secretary for India, was intimated in his dispatches to the India Office that in his opinion the entire cost of the war should be defrayed by India, a question address ed to the Government elicited a half promise that the expense of the contest, should it prove a protracted one, should be properly pro-rated between the Imperial and the Indian Governments. Mr. Gladstone went on to draw a graphic picture of the dangers upon the empire in peril of famine, sometimes perishing by tens of thousands for want of food before the completion of the railway machinery on the Government could extend the needed aid, ground into the very dust by onerous taxation, and all the while burdened month to month, with a single garment to cover their nakedness, and a handful of rice their only means of sustenance. He appealed to the Government to say whether in their opinion it was just that out of the blood of these people upon the altar of necessity, to pay for a campaign which had its origin in the blunders of the servants of the Imperial Government, and which had been prosecuted to gratify that lust for conquest and that pride of imperial domination upon which Her Majesty's Ministers now seemed determined to rely as the best and strongest appeal for popular support in the coming election. Mr. Fawcett finally withdrew the resolution.

THE BUDGET.

London, March 12.—Sir Stafford Northcote, when speaking of the deficit in the Budget address, said that while he regretted to state that there would be a deficit of £3,940,000 on the last year's revenue, a few words would make it plain to the House that this deficit was brought about through causes which were not anticipated when the Estimates were submitted to the House one year ago. At that time no one in the country would have been justified in predicting that the war in South Africa would attain the dimensions which it subsequently reached, nor involve the treasury in its necessity for so large an outlay. The cost of suppressing the revolt in Zululand had been £5,138,000. At this point expressions of affected astonishment and dismay were heard from the Opposition benches. Sir Stafford waited for a moment until the House had been quieted, and then, with perfect coolness repeated the statement, and added: —"Honorable members can not regret idle expenditures or useless loss of money when such loss occurs more than myself, but I take occasion to assure the House that in my opinion the South African struggle was worth all, and even more, than it cost, even when the item of blood, so much more valuable than money, is taken into account. That struggle has settled forever the question of British ascendancy in South Africa, a question which was destined sooner or later to be settled in this manner beyond doubt. We shall have no more serious trouble, and an old bone of contention is removed from the debates of Her Majesty's Parliament. It has done even more than this. The result of the war has been to open to the enterprise of our manufacturers and merchants a practically illimitable field for the disposal of their goods and the expansion of our trade. Moreover, I do not hesitate to affirm my conviction that it has opened the way so that other process could have opened it for the civilization and evangelization of the natives of this benighted region, a result for which the British nation should count no sacrifice of time, toil, life, or treasure too great to offering."

When the Chancellor stated that the Government in its estimates for the coming year did not find it necessary to advise the imposition of any new taxes, while at the same time it did not propose to remove any, cheers and counter cheers followed. The Liberals, having been compelled to propose an increase of the income tax or some still more obnoxious method of meeting his deficit, were clearly disappointed by his statement.

The statement of the Chancellor as a whole is regarded as extremely favorable. Gladstone says that the Budget before he had taken his seat were somewhat acrimonious, but it is not believed that the debate upon the Budget will be protracted, nor result in any weakening of the Chancellor's position.

RUSSIAN TREACHERY.

Berlin, March 12.—Considerable interest has been aroused in this capital, and throughout the country, by an article in the Cologne Gazette stating in substance that various facts have recently come to light indicating that the St. Petersburg Government made secret overtures last summer to the Governments of France and Italy, through certain highly trusted and accredited agents, for the purpose of bringing about a combination of the three powers in opposition to Germany and Austria, but notwithstanding the caution with which this business was managed on the part of Russia, the authorities at Berlin got wind of it, and contrived the Austro-German alliance as a defensive and offensive arrangement in case trouble should arise from the machinations of Russia. The Gazette says that although Prince Bismarck was perfectly aware of the secretary machinations by the representatives of Russia, and was taking precautions to spoil the success of the scheme, he left it to them his one to betray any lack of confidence in her professions of friendship. While all this was going on under the surface, the shrewdest diplomatists and politicians of Europe who had not, as a matter of course, been introduced to the cards or cachets, were puzzled to account for the sort of so much running to and fro between Berlin and Vienna. The Gazette considers the danger now averted, from the fact that the Emperors of both Germany and Russia have solemnly declared that during their reigns no month, with a single garment to cover their nakedness, and a handful of rice their only means of sustenance. He appealed to the Government to say whether in their opinion it was just that out of the blood of these people upon the altar of necessity, to pay for a campaign which had its origin in the blunders of the servants of the Imperial Government, and which had been prosecuted to gratify that lust for conquest and that pride of imperial domination upon which Her Majesty's Ministers now seemed determined to rely as the best and strongest appeal for popular support in the coming election. The Public Buildings Promised to Chatham—Kingsville Harbor.

Special to the City Correspondent

Ottawa, March 12.—Notwithstanding any reports to the contrary, the answer to Mr. Rufus Stephenson by the Minister of Public Works, concerning the erection of a public building at Chatham, will prove from results to be of a most satisfactory character.

A deputation from Kingsville was introduced to-day to the Ministers of Public Works and Interior, by Mr. J. C. Patterson, respecting the erection of a Harbor of Refuge at Kingsville.

A return shows that the estimated cost of the Trent Valley Canal would be in the neighborhood of $6,000,000.

Mr. Gault's Bill for the winding up of the Consolidated Bank stipulates that there shall be five liquidators appointed—three by the shareholders, one by the Government and one by the creditors.

A return was brought down showing all the teas imported into the Dominion since the 14th of March, 1879, up to February 1st, 1880, on which an additional duty of 10 per cent. has been collected, with the weight and value and amount collected thereon. It shows as follow:—

	Quantity.	Value.	Collected.
Ontario.....	1,042,606	$229,314	$ 76,041
Quebec.....	295,895	164,606	56,982
Nova Scotia.....	77,440	16,330	4,833
New Brunswick.....	84,932	18,851	5,430

British Columbia.....	33,113	11,755	2,549
Prince Edward Island.....	32,962	6,762	6,952
Total.....	2,116,927	$453,579	$149,660

A return was made to-day, showing the quantity of sugar entered at ports of entry in Canada for the six months ending 31st of January, 1879, and for the same period ending January 1st, 1880. It showed the following importations:—

	Jan. 1, 1879. Lbs.	Jan 1, 1880. Lbs.
Ontario.....	32,317,040	9,885,012
Quebec.....	19,896,332	46,048,911

Capture of W. W. Sproule, the Absconding Bailiff.

St. John, N. B., March 12.—W. W. Sproule, for nine years bailiff of the First Division Court, County of Elgin, Ont., charged with decamping with several hundred dollars that came into his possession in his official capacity, was arrested here by J. Murray, Chief Provincial Detective of Ontario, and the prisoner is now on his way to that Province.

Toronto, March 12.—Ontario Government Detective John Murray arrived in the city to night from St. John, N. B., having in charge W. W. Sproule, of Vienna, Elgin county. The prisoner was a bailiff in the First Division Court, Elgin. Some time ago he served a summons upon Walter Hoag, merchant, of Straffordville. The latter paid the debt and costs to Sproule, who absconded with the money. It was ascertained that he was in New Brunswick, and Detective Murray went down, and after considerable difficulty, succeeded in arresting him. The prisoner will be taken to St. Thomas to-morrow.

LATEST FROM TORONTO.

Toronto, March 12.—At this season as a rule business is quiet, and the present year is no exception to the rule, the open weather and bad roads contributing to limit trade. Complaints of slackness of remittances are general, still it is noteworthy that the impression is everywhere confidently made that things promise well for a good spring business. Dry goods houses are, as a matter of course, busy, the orders from travellers being a good deal ahead of last year's, and the dealers in millinery, whose stocks are now fully assorted, are kept busy in waiting on customers. In groceries, teas and sugars are rather dearer. Hardware, though not active, is firm, glass being decidedly dearer. In boots and shoes, provisions and drugs prices are sustained, and prospects are hopeful. In produce, in sympathy with the western and English markets, very little has been done, prices closing entirely in favor of buyers, and with the merest demand for immediate use. The stock market has been fairly steady all week, and closes with prices rather enhanced.

If a conviction is recorded against Messrs. Kero & Barnes, of the Royal Opera House, they intend to press the charges against the Methodist Churches for taking collections on Sunday. They also intend to proceed against the newspapers for employing labor on Sunday.

Powell Martin has entered an action against the Globe newspaper to recover arrears of salary due him for acting as advertising agent for that journal.

The De Courcier murder trial will come up at the Assizes on the 26th. The prisoner is anxious for trial, says that he is not insane and does not care what becomes of him.

THE INSOLVENT ACT DISPOSED OF.

Hon. Mr. Adam Hope moved the "six months' hoist" in the Senate with respect to the Bill from the Commons annulling the Insolvent Act. But in view of the contrasted opinion expressed in the popular branch of Parliament the motion was defeated by a vote of 47 to 17. The Bill was then read a second and third time, and passed. The commercial public will now have to condition their affairs with reference to the Sheriff rather than the Official Assignee. Under an Act of the Ontario Legislature creditors will be able to rip up an estate and divide it among themselves. Any one creditor can issue an execution, and thus compel those not with him in the dismemberment or pay off his claim. Those who have been hostile to the Insolvent Act will soon learn how much cheaper estates will be disposed of under the tender mercies of the Sheriffs than they have been by the Official Assignees. It is in the nature of things that the proceedings will be more expensive and rigorous, and seeing that an execution can be issued upon a protested note within about eight days of its non-payment, some debtors may find their estates torn to pieces in a manner which will be surprising. The course of proceeding which Mr. Mowat's Act has established will give the determined, importunate creditor, the man without compunction or bowels of compassion, the greatest advantage. Only let him get his paws upon a debtor, and the rest of the creditors will be compelled to see the property scattered. It will no doubt be found that creditors for comparatively small amounts will thus form the running, and compel those more deeply interested to "settle" with them, or be dragged into a position in which heavy loss is a foreordained condition. Whatever outcry may have been made against the Insolvent Act in certain quarters, leading to the abrogation of its provisions, the opinion may be ventured upon that, before another year has gone by, a vigorous demand for the re-institution of an insolvent law will have sprung up. Possibly, the only way to put an end to the chronic grumblings against the presence of an insolvent law is to let things take their course. Estates which under the Insolvent Act would have been continued or bountifully wound up will now be rent asunder. The Senate did quite right in retiring from the position it took up last session, but the parliamentary interference with the commercial public that has taken place will, we believe, be found to result in general disadvantage.

JUST LIKE THEM!

The Grits seem to be of the same stripe the world over. You never know when you have got them. Just as you think you have them buckled down to principle and particular principles of political action, away they go like a wild kite, and no one is able to tell the direction they will take. In Ontario they have been seen to twist and wriggle over public questions like a fish out of water. The questions of tax exemption, the erection of new Parliamentary buildings, and aid to railways are familiar instances of their hesitating, unsettled and Jonah-like policy. On these public matters opinions are advanced and then withdrawn, shifting and changing like a weather cock. There is no evidence of deep conviction, no strong ground taken up and defended. In Dominion affairs it is the same. The principles offered by the Grits while formerly in opposition, were severally and ostentatiously abandoned the moment they got into power. Their politics changed hue in every fresh light, and on no fixed platform were they to be found at any time. Promises were made only to be broken when the next occasion served. And now Mr. Gladstone, the English Grit leader, shows that he is no more stable in his views, in regard especially to foreign affairs, than his Canadian allies and imitators. Every one remembers what he thought, or said in his public speeches, concerning the Turk, during the progress of the Russo-Turkish struggle. It was that the Turk should be driven out of Europe, "bag and baggage." Mr. Gladstone opposed the Russian cause in its tiniest expression, and was willing to break up the "rotten and effete" Empire, and set up in its place an "enlightened Christian rule," under Czar Alexander. No one was more rejoiced than the English Grit leader at the success of Russian arms, or spoke more fiercely in opposition to the intervention of England to stay the hand of spoliation, and snatch from Russia the complete disposal of the map of Eastern Europe. But the opinion of Mr. Gladstone has now veered round in the opposite quarter. In his election address, just issued, he charges the Beaconsfield Ministry with the high crime and misdemeanor of being a party to the "aggrandizement of Russia," and with having "lured Turkey into dismemberment and ruin." The very line which Mr. Gladstone did his utmost to promote, and assist Russia to advance, and which was opposed by the Government constantly through the Crimean and Afghan difficulty, he now accuses them of having facilitated for the past three years. Such an accusation will be looked upon as one of the broadest of humorisms in the light of the facts with which the whole world are familiar. But it is like the Grits all over.

The Montreal Gazette remarks on the Budget:—"The statement which Sir Leonard Tilley was able to submit last night will have a reassuring effect. Last year the estimated deficit was over $2,000,000. The actual deficit would undoubtedly have been very much more, but for the fact that, according to the estimate based upon the best information at the command of the Department, upwards of $700,000 of customs duties and $600,000 of excise duties which, properly speaking, belonged to the year 1879-80 were collected in the year 1878-79. In spite of this large exceptional revenue, the deficit was still $2,100,000. Sir Leonard Tilley hoped to raise, by means of his tariff, about $2,500,000 additional revenue, and the result certainly justifies the hope that although he has not entirely wiped out the deficit, owing to the fact that much of the revenue which belongs to this year was paid in the last, he has so far reduced it as to remove all anxiety as to the future position of the Dominion. The expenditure of the present year, including Supplementary Estimates, which have been brought down, will amount to $24,878,000; the revenue, judging by the information now in the hands of the Government, will amount to $24,450,000, so that the deficit for the year will not largely exceed $500,000. This is a very much better exhibit than was generally anticipated. As to the next year, Sir Leonard Tilley's estimate, if they are realized, of which there seems no reasonable ground for doubt, will leave a surplus in the Treasury of about an equal amount."

Lord Derby to the workingman:—"We have heard a great deal recently about the peasantry becoming owners of land and having gardens, fields and farms of their own. Now, an acre of good agricultural land is worth, on an average, about £80, or as nearly as possible $5. for every square yard. I wonder how many workingmen consider that when they order threepenny worth of beer or spirits they are swallowing down a square yard of good agricultural land."

THE LOOK-OUT IN ENGLAND.

The Beaconsfield Government have determined to test the temper of the people. The Opposition have for some time past been clamorous for a dissolution, and now they have their desire. Both sides are preparing for the fray, both sides anticipate a hot campaign, and both look forward to lively times in the constituencies. A short time ago, the Opposition would have selected as their line of attack, the foreign policy of the Government, but recent revelations through the medium of the ballot box have taught them, that this would be an imprudent selection for a battle field. Still the Conservative Chief has made up his mind that he, like General Grant, will fight it out on this very line. Of course he cannot prevent the introduction of extraneous issues, and an Opposition have to some extent like an attacking force, the power of choosing the point or points on which their assault shall be made.

A year ago, and the foreign policy of the Government might have afforded more assailable and weak points than they do today. The Turkish question, the affairs in South Africa and Afghanistan may be said to be settled, and this settlement is very decidedly in favor of England, and therefore, must tell in favor of the Beaconsfield Government. It is quite evident that the British people are not in harmony with the views and policy of the Opposition in reference to an isolated position on the part of Great Britain. Much of the prosperity of England depends upon European peace, and the influence of England, when to hands that know how to use it, as Lord Palmerston did and Lord Beaconsfield does, becomes a potent force in the preservation of this peace. The nation chafed under the slights, the ill-concealed contempt with which England and England's power were treated under the Gladstone regime, and they cannot but feel the changed condition in which she now stands, the influence she now wields in the councils of European princes, and the respect now accorded to her wishes as made known through her representatives. The Government may count with certainty on the popular feeling being with them on this question, but it is by no means certain, that some question of local policy, some cry of extravagance raised against the Government, some measure of economy in this administration, or some proposed reform of the ad captandum species, may not be started which will cause the people to waver, and lose a constituency here and there.

The election in Liverpool has taught the Beaconsfield Government that the English people are completely hostile to the Parnell brigade and the Home Rule agitators generally. This the Premier takes up in his manifesto and makes it one of the two leading planks in his platform. But Lord Ramsay's defeat will teach the Liberal party a little political wisdom, and they, too, will likely steer clear of Parnell and his little clique of agitators. It must be expected that the Liberal organs and the leaders of the party will make little of this manifesto, that they will attempt to show that the only successful policy for Britain is to steer clear of European complications, remain content with her insular position, and lead a kind of oyster life, seeking happiness in the manufacture of millionaires on the one hand, and paupers on the other. This is no policy for the Englishman of our day any more than it was the policy for Englishmen in the past, and, therefore, unless some one or two stirring questions of local interest or popular reform can be found, the Beaconsfield party are likely to be the victors in the coming contest.

The carelessness which caused the recent disastrous explosion in the capital of Chili, astounding as it seems, is not without parallel. During the Paraguayan war, several Brazilian officers were found serving out ammunition with lighted cigars in their mouths! Had this characteristic reckless caused a similar disaster at Iquique or Tarapaca, it might have gone hard with the Chilian army, for such a catastrophe has more than once produced decisive results in warfare. The capture of Acre by the English, in 1840, was wholly due to the panic caused among the Egyptian garrison by the explosion of a magazine. The same thing occurred at the seige of the Sikh fortress of Moultan, in 1849. Wellington's attack on San Sebastian, in 1813, offered a still more striking example. The British stormers, having failed in their first assault, lay down at the foot of the breach which their own batteries then commanded over their heads, the shots striking barely two feet above them! A shell at length exploded the ammunition laid by the French along the rampart, killing 600 man at once, and making a gap in the defenses through which the English poured in and carried the place.

The New York Post, speaking of the continually recurring fatal accidents arising from the use of American petroleum oil, says:—"These accidents are becoming more frequent than ever, and indicate criminal carelessness in some cases, and carelessness scarcely less criminal in the use of the dangerous material. Most persons are but too apt to forget that there is a first time for everything. They turn lamps up too high, they carry them in a slovenly or incautious manner, they put them where children can overturn them, or in other ways they imperil their own lives and those of others. The risks arising from kerosene are in truth so many, and its use is so general, as to prompt the conviction that present legal and mechanical safeguards are inadequate, and that fresh measures are required for public protection. The insurance companies are large sufferers in respect, interesting sufferers from this destructive agent, and if Mr. Edison's light does not soon make its appearance either some other cheap illuminator or new and substantial preventives of accident will become imperatively needful to keep down the ravages of kerosene."

Montreal Gazette:—The feeling to day was general that Mr. Cartwright richly deserved all he got from Sir Chas. Tupper last night. His attempt to beguile the workingman into a belief that he was being fleeced because of the sugar duty and the coal duty, his sneers at Sir Leonard Tilley's alleged incapacity, and at the National Policy, his supercilious manner, his evident glorification of himself as far away the superior of the Finance Minister, evidently provoked Sir Charles, who took up the cudgels in behalf of his colleague in a way that Mr. Cartwright little expected, and in a manner so warm and whole-souled as to effectually dispose of the rumor, carefully fostered by the Opposition, that Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Leonard Tilley were jealous rivals.

Ottawa Citizen:—The weakness of the old Opposition arguments, still the only ones that side has, lies here—that they do not fit the new events which are happening, and the new situation which is being developed. The new policy has new events for arguments on its side, while its opponents have nothing but old, worn-out arguments to bring forward. This is the way that things are going, and the result cannot be doubtful. Every month that passes weakens the Opposition case against the N. P., and it is a strong probability that ere the snows of another winter set in there will be no case at all on that side.

An ers of Granger regulation of railroads appears to have begun in Georgia. Last year the Legislature established a Railroad Commission and gave it large powers. This commission has just had printed an elaborate schedule of rates for freight and passengers, and will soon begin to enforce it.

Telegram:—Mr. Blake is said to be cultivating the members assiduously and successfully, although the appearance of the Aurora disturber in the role of a dinner-giver is almost enough to give a body the shivers.

A POINT IN QUESTION.

A serious question of law has arisen in the locality of the Grand Trunk Station. A landlord there is afflicted with an obnoxious and defiant tenant, who will neither pay rent nor move out. Threats cannot intimidate, nor bribes budge him. He is determined to "Hold the Fort." The other day a bailiff was put in possession, having gained entrance by stratagem. But in the course of human events, he left for a few minutes, after being for some time at his post. Immediately the key was turned, and he found himself a "prisoner" out of doors. What next? He cannot get in again either by stratagem or force. The process is "out." The inmates keep the doors locked, and all their needs are served after nightfall, when, the coast being found clear, one of the members of the family is let out, and the door locked again with the promptness of a steel trap. The same when he returns. The bailiff cannot use force. If he attempts to mount the roof or get in at the window, he may by the laws of our country be treated as a burglar, and the inmates threaten to shoot and slay all trespassers in that behoof. Under these circumstances the landlord feels himself in a serious dilemma: being dispossessed of his own property by the most summary and unjust of all processes, and against which the law has provided no remedy. The question with him now is, how can he regain possession of his own house, which stands at present an absolutely forfeit as though it had been taken from him by a correct course of legal procedure. The lawyers have been appealed to in vain. They can render him no aid in the premises, and advise the landlord that he stands at the good will and pleasure of the obstinate tenant. Can it be that this is really the case? If so, a change in the law seems to be imperatively called for.

The work of the Swiss Earthquake Commission will be watched with much interest just now on account of the great number of earthquakes, some very destructive, that have distributed different parts of the world within the last two or three months. The Commission have districted Switzerland, for the purposes of observation, and each district has a chief observer assigned to it whose business it is to make the inhabitants serve as his assistants by distributing among them a pamphlet describing the phenomena of earthquakes, and the best means of observing them, and blank forms containing a series of questions, carefully prepared and intended to form a skeleton history of every earthquake that is observed. Instruments for measuring the force, direction, duration, and so on, of all earthquake shocks, are to be placed in the hands of skilled observers at certain stations. The Commission is nearly ready to begin active operations, and very important results are anticipated.

The report of the Department of Inland Revenue on the adulteration of food shows that, during the year, 896 samples have been analyzed, of which 286, or a little more than 30 per cent., were adulterated, and 42 returned as doubtful. Compared with previous years, there is a perceptible improvement. In 1876 the percentage of adulteration was 51.66 per cent. In 1879 it had fallen to 26.72 per cent.

An English jury having been locked up eight days, the judge, when discharging them, complimented them for the great care, attention, and patience which they had given to the case. The only reason perhaps he had power to make was the assurance that he would take care that they were not called upon to serve again "for some long time to come."

A MATRIMONIAL MUSS.

Feared by the Bishop of Ontario

Special to the Free Press.

Ottawa, March 11.—The following petition has been presented to the House:—

To the Honorable the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the Bishop of Ontario humbly sheweth:—That your petitioner has heard with surprise and alarm that a bill has been introduced into your honorable House to legalize marriage with the sister of a deceased wife, and also to legalize the marriage of a woman with the brother of her deceased husband; and your petitioner prays that the said bill be not passed, for the following reasons:—

1st. That there has been no demand for or petitions in favor of such a Bill, and that its enactment is prompted by those who, having broken the law, wish for indemnity.

2nd. That the Church of England in Provincial Synod assembled, in the year 1877, solemnly re-enacted in the table of affinity which forbids such marriages, and that the Synod was composed of the Bishops and representative clergy and laity from the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

3rd. That these marriages plainly forbids such marriages. In Lev. 18, 16, and 20 and 21, a man is forbidden to marry his brother's wife, and by parity of reasoning a man may not marry his wife's sister unless it be agreed that the Tenth Commandment does not forbid a man to covet her neighbor's house and because such prohibition is not stated in so many words.

4th. That by the law of Christ a man and his wife become "one flesh," and that therefore the church for 1,400 years after Christ held that a man's wife's sister becomes his own sister.

5th. That infringement of the table of affinity in the case of marriage with a deceased wife's sister must inevitably lead to the abolition of the whole code, so that a man may marry his wife's mother or his wife's daughter.

6th. That history proves that relaxation of the prohibited degrees, "wherein whosoever are related are forbidden in Scripture and our laws to marry together," leads to laxity of morals and frequency of divorce, and that if a man may marry his deceased wife's sister, he may marry his divorced wife's sister.

7th. That the proposed bill for the abolition of aunts and sisters-in-law will wholly revolutionize domestic life, and introduce jealousies into families now happily free from them.

8th. That there is no force whatever in the argument that the sister of a deceased wife is the best and natural guardian of her nephews and neices. She may be as in the capacity of an aunt, but by no means necessarily as a stepmother.

9th. That these great departments of Christianity, the Church of Rome, the Church of England and the Church of Scotland are wholly opposed to the principle of the proposed Bill. It is true that the Church of Rome grants dispensations, but the fact of dispensation is a witness against the lawfulness of the marriage in question. Moreover, the first dispensation was given A. D. 1500, by Pope Alexander, sixth Borgia, to the King of Portugal. For the aforesaid reasons your petitioner humbly implores your honorable House to postpone action regarding the proposed bill, and allow the various religious bodies of the Dominion an opportunity of expressing their convictions. And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

J. T. ONTARIO.

Ottawa, 11th March, 1880.

Mr. H. McKinney, of Great Bond, Pa., has published a short pamphlet on the importance of temperance, in which occurs the following passage:—"Paul to Timothy (a young preacher):—'Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities.' This is clearly medical, and with judicious medical treatment we have no beatisms."

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

REPORTS.

Ottawa, March 12.—After routine, Mr. H. Cameron (Victoria) presented the second report of the Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. Robinson presented the eighth report of the Committee on Standing Orders.

NEW BILLS.

The new Bills introduced were:—By Mr. Kirkpatrick—to amend the Act relating to the Fort Whitby Harbor Company; by Mr. McCarthy—to remove doubts as to section 19 of the Northern Railway Company Act.

Mr. Mackenzie said it was very irregular for a private member to introduce a bill to interfere with a private Bill. He said if this was permitted no private interests were safe. He hoped the Government would not permit the Bill to pass.

Mr. McCarthy said the object of the Bill was in the interest of certain stockholders, in order that doubts might be removed concerning their rights.

Mr. Mackenzie said the petition for the Bill should have come from the company itself.

Mr. McCarthy said that it would be very strange if a minority could not obtain redress from Parliament if their rights were infringed on.

Sir John Macdonald said he concurred in the remarks of the member for Simcoe.

PORT STANLEY HARBOR.

SENATE EXPENDITURE.

Mr. Kirkpatrick moved that the House send a message to the Senate asking that it instruct its clerk to supply a return, showing the expenditure of moneys for salaries and contingencies, and members' indemnity, and mileage and number of days of attendance of each Senator. He said that the motions were of a character for which there was a precedent.

THE MARRIAGE BILL.

Mr. Jones moved that a petition from the Bishops of Ontario against the Bill to legalize marriage with a deceased wife's sister be printed in the Notes and Proceedings.

Mr. Mackenzie said that he thought the precedent would be a bad one. He thought the stample would be followed too often.

Sir John Macdonald said the petition could be printed for distribution. He had asked the member who had charge of the Bill to postpone his Bill, so that those who wished to be heard against the Bill could be. Mr. Jones said the Bill should be delayed as long as possible.

The motion was carried.

CHECKING ITS PROGRESS.

Mr. McCarthy moved the suspension of the rules, so as to introduce the Bill concerning the Northern Railway Bill. Lost.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. Robinson moved that the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be extended for four days. He said that in Manitoba there had been violent storms, and communication had been broken, and so the request was made.

Mr. Blake said that the point was one which reopened the question discussed before. There was no objection to an extension in special cases, but it was objectional to advocate a general extension.

Dr. Bhilin introduced a bill to incorporate the North-West Colonization Company.

Mr. Drew moved that the time for receiving Private Bills be extended six days.

Sir John Macdonald said that the House had already decided that the time should only be extended for six days.

The motion was lost.

A message was received from the Senate announcing that it had passed the Act to repeal the Insolvency Law without amendment.

Mr. Vanasse introduced a Bill to regulate the fi sating of cordwood on the River St. Francois du Lac.

THE DEBATE ON THE BUDGET.

Mr. Mackenzie, in resuming the debate on the Budget, said that he had been showing that the tariff had been detrimental to the sugar interests. In Ontario it seemed that the Government was determined that there should be no refinery. The falling off in imports had been, in Canada, from $4,000,000 to 2,000,000 lbs. Duties had been unpaid, prohibiting the importation of sugar by way of any route save that of the St. Lawrence. The increase of imports in Quebec showed a increase of 90,000,000 lbs. to 40,000,000 lbs. The increase of the tariff had put a cent a pound into the pockets of the monopolists. He denied that the tariff was of benefit to the English market. The returns showed that the imports had fallen off from the United States to the extent of eighteen per cent., and from England only 15 per cent., or merely three per cent. He proceeded to show that the figures of imports showed that the tariff had discriminated against the English manufacturers. Some change had virtually been promised to the Manchester manufacturers. The English people were generally hostile to the tariff. He proceeded to reply to certain arguments of the member for Cumberland in connection with the statements of Lords Salisbury and Derby. The hon. gentleman also dissented from the views of the Minister of Finance as to increasing revenue. The contention of the Government as to the deficits was not borne out by the facts. There had been many sums in excess of the previous century, owing to subjects which the Government could not prevent. Those he defended, and said that with the exception of the Supreme Court, the late Government who not responsible for the majority of the expenditure. The Government had been compelled to spend an increased amount, as the exhibitors at Sydney and the fisheries question, and other matters entailing outlay had been forced on the Administration. So far from being blameable for over-expenditure, the late Government, he thought, deserved the thanks and confidence of the country. He proceeded to notice the argument that the tariff was of benefit to the farmers. This he denied. The tariff on woollen goods was also hard and grinding on the poor man. As regarded the woollen goods made, it was especially worthless. He condemned the strictures of the member for Cumberland concerning the negotiations for reciprocity. He thought that the efforts made were more of advantage to Canada than by the Washington treaty, in which the interests of Canada were not concerned. He also condemned the efforts made to obtain reciprocal trade with Spain and France, which he said had been most costly. He depreciated the attacks on the United States, and objected to the establishment of such a policy, for the trade interests of Canada were too closely bound up with those of the neighboring country. He hoped that the United States would come to see that it was their interest to approach closer and see the need of the establishment of trade relations. Competition with these in a hostile manner was impossible. The result of the tariff was that the malt trade was destroyed. He anticipated more dangerous results following. He denied that there was any great immigration in consequence of the tariff. On the contrary there was a great departure from Canada. This was especially the case in the west, where 23,000 people had left for the United States.

Sir S. L. Tilley said that in that case the Americans should not be annoyed at the Canadian policy.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie said that there was no connection between the points. He deplored that Lord Beaconsfield should have been misled by a wandering Canadian, and had descended to the position of an emigration agent. The statement that the late Government was hostile to manufacturers was not correct, for it had done its best to make the manufactures of Canada known all over the world. The tariff had also acted detrimentally to the shipbuilding interests, and in Quebec the trade had never been so bad as at present. It had been alleged that the late Government had determined in 1876 to institute a higher tariff, and was frightened out of the proposition by Mr. Alfred Jones. This he denied, and also that the late Government had obtained office by unholy means.

Mr. Rykert said that he should have thought that the Opposition ought to join hands with the Government in endeavoring to alleviate the condition of the country. On a former occasion they had joined hands with their opponents and accomplished Confederation, but then, true to their instincts, had turned round and left the country to take its chances of success. He alluded to the attack made by the member for Centre Huron on the member for Cumberland, and said that the Opposition sought to justify their conduct when in power by saying:—"We were not over virtuous, but our opponents are even more corrupt than we are." Last year the Opposition predicted that this session the National Policy would be abandoned and the Government compelled to return to a revenue tariff. Of course it was never expected that the National Policy would be productive of great results in one year; but even in one year the results have been most satisfactory, and the Policy was pronounced a success by all. So much was this true, that the Opposition were obliged to magnify every trifling business misfortune in order to decry the National Policy. For his own county, he (Mr. Rykert) could say that the trade policy of the present Government had given every satisfaction. The manufacturers of that county had increased their facilities more than fifty per cent., and many new factories were springing up. The fact was the Opposition was so chagrined at the success of the National Policy that they had to resort to decrying the credit of the country in order to embarrass the Government.

After recess,

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following Private Bills were advanced a stage:

To incorporate the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada (as amended by Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines).

To authorize the establishment of superannuation, provident and insurance funds by the G. W. R. Company, as amended by the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Respecting the Niagara Grand Island Bridge Co.

To authorize and provide for the winding up of the Consolidated Bank of Canada.

To amend the Act respecting the Montreal Telegraph Company.

To incorporate the Quebec and Ontario Railway Company.

To incorporate the Lake Erie Valley Railway and Transportation Company.

To incorporate the Rapid City and Morris River Colonization Railway Company.

To extend the corporate charter and powers of the Direct United States Cable Company to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Rykert resumed his speech. He thought the record of the member for Centre Huron (Sir R. Cartwright) did not entitle him to lecture the present Minister of Finance upon the management of that department. The late Government when in power violated every principle professed by the "Reform" party when in opposition. Had the hon. member for Centre Huron been offered a Cabinet position he would not be following the present leader of the Government. While acting as Finance Minister the hon. member for Centre Huron had rolled up deficit after deficit, and low seeks to excuse himself by referring to the fact that other Finance Ministers have also, in former times, contracted deficits. By the rule applied by the Globe to the deficit of the late Finance Minister in 1876, the deficit for the year ending June 30th, 1879, should be charged to the late Government. The Globe also, in 1873, did not entertain a very good opinion of the financial ability of the hon. member for Centre Huron. In that year the journal referred to described him as a "mixer and muddler of figures." He (Mr. Rykert) thought that the language used by the member for Centre Huron towards the Hon. Minister of Finance called for a strong rebuke from every right thinking person. The corruption practiced by the Grit party was notorious. Of the members supporting that party, some twenty eight were unseated. Mr. Blake as Aurora admitted the corruption practiced by his political friends. On the eve of the election in 1878 the late Government called for tenders for constructing the railway line from Yale to Kamloops, in British Columbia. That line had never been surveyed or located, and now the ex-Minister of Public Works says he did not intend to construct the line, although he called for tenders. The only conclusion, therefore, to be arrived at was, that the calling for tenders was a dishonest electioneering dodge. The "free trade" professions of the present Opposition were altogether hypocritical. He quoted the speeches of several hon. members of the Opposition delivered in 1873, in which they declared themselves strong Protectionists. Even, in 1879, the Toronto Globe had to admit that under the influence of the National Policy the business of Canada was steadily improved. In 1879 the workingmen of Ottawa were described by the Grit organs as roughs and tools of the Tory party, while now the Grits profess great sympathy for the unemployed workmen, who are described about election times as the "bone and sinew of the country." Not many years ago the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Oliver) moved to put an increased duty on flour, meal, grain and coal. These were the articles most generally consumed by the poorer classes. Now, however, great fault is found with the present Government for placing a duty on those articles. This was a fair sample of the hypocrisy practised by the present Opposition in reference to the trade question. It was true some people were leaving the country, but where were they going? They were going to the United States—a more highly protected country even than our own. He said that he had no fear that our protective policy was forcing people to leave this country and go to the United States. As a representative of Ontario, he would congratulate the present Government upon the faithful manner in which they had carried out their pledges with regard to the trade policy. The people of Ontario recognized the benefits of the National Policy, as they looked upon it as the policy which has to bring about national prosperity.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex), thought that Mr. Rykert, who was formerly an opponent of the present Government, was not in a position to charge the hon. member for Centre Huron, or any other member, with inconsistency. He retained Mr. Rykert's career as a member of the Ontario Legislature, and indulged in a most vindicative attack upon that hon. member. The present trade policy of Canada was calculated to alienate the sympathy of the English public from the Dominion. Moreover, the Opposition objected to the present tariff on the ground that it did not bear equally on all the Provinces. The increased customs duties were much higher in some Provinces than others. In Ontario the increase was $1.16 per head, while the increase in Quebec was only 35c. per head. Again, Ontario had to pay nearly the whole duty received from coal importation. The Maritime Provinces imported very little coal, and consequently paid little or no duty on that commodity. This was very unfair Residents of all the Provinces should be made to contribute to the revenue. He contended that the agricultural classes were completely deceived in regard to the National Policy. No product of the farmers had been increased in price, neither had any farmer been able to reap any advantage, while the woollen goods and other articles consumed by the farmer had been enhanced in the price. Since the National Policy came into operation wages had actually declined, while the cost of living was increased everywhere. Every promise held out to the workingmen previous to the elections had been violated, and the workingmen had been deluded and grossly deceived. Neither had the lumbermen obtained any advantages from the tariff. In fact, the whole tariff seemed to be framed in the interest of a few manufacturers.

The debate on the motion of Mr. McCallum was then adjourned.

And the House adjourned at 11.55.

The churches throughout Spain are decorated with the canvases of the early painters, but so long, says a correspondent, that there is no hour in the day that a good light can be found on them. At Seville, for example, I tried to find a light that would show what damage had been done the famous "St. Anthony," from which the figure of the saint had been cut, in 1874. It was quite impossible to detect the work of restoration, which was owing to the dim light of the cathedral rather than the skill of the restorer.

Uxbridge advises say that fall wheat has been completely ruined in that district and the clover crop badly injured.

BARBARA.

George Leland thought of Flossie as he saw the middle-aged gentleman, bald headed, largely whiskered, sitting at his desk, busily engaged in polishing a filbert shaped thumb nail. He thought of Flossie as he glanced at the window, with a sudden descent from which she had been so often threatened.

"Pray sit down," said Mr. Trevornock, polite ly.

He laid aside his penknife, and waited for his visitor to explain his business, taking it for granted that his visitor was a new client. A man who wanted to borrow money, most likely, and who had heard of Mr. Trevornock as a likely person to assist him in that mysterious process known as doing a bill.

"I must premise that I have not come on law business," said the explab, "but on an affair of a still more delicate nature."

"Ah," thought Mr. Trevornock, "of course he wants to lose money."

"For the last four months I have had the honor to be an inmate of your wife's house."

"Ah," said Mr. Trevornock, "my daughters told me their mother was going to take a boarder. A very foolish proceeding, and not likely to be profitable in the long run. Pardon me for saying so. And so you are the gentleman who answered Mrs. Trevornock's advertisement. My younger daughter told me something about you."

Mr. Trevornock's manner had suddenly lost its courteous blandness. He suspected his wife's lodger of some evil intention. This officious stranger had come to plague him about Mrs. Trevornock's taxes, perhaps. The girls had built upon a new way of tormenting him for money. It would be like the impertinence of that youngest one —the father did not choose to know the younger Flora's pet name—buttonpunch a thing.

"May I ask what induced you to favor me with this call, Captain Leland?" he inquired.

"I have come to ye, Mr. Trevornock, to tell you that your daughter Barbara has done me the honor to accept me as her future husband. Have her mother's approval, but I thought it right that you should receive the information from my lips before I go back to India."

"Oh, you are going to India!"

"Very shortly."

"Does my daughter accompany you?"

"I regret to say that, in the present disturbed state of the district in which I am going, I cannot ask her to go with me. We have waited more peaceful days. It is Mrs. Trevornock's wish that our marriage should be delayed for two or three years. I hope by that time to be in a better position to maintain a wife as—as she ought to be maintained," faltered the captain, with an uncomfortable feeling that he was talking to a man who had never maintained his wife at all, and who might be sensitive upon the fact.

Mr. Trevornock accepted the position with as lofty an air as if he had been the most immaculate of fathers.

"I suppose I ought to feel honored by this confidence, Leland," he said; "but I confess that when all things are taken into consideration I consider the prospect a brilliant one for my daughter Barbara, who is a girl really remarkable attractions, and much lick high."

Captain Leland wondered inwardly where the girl was to look for a loftier suitor, unless it was threepenny omnibuses, or on the Camberwell high road.

"I am sorry to find you consider the alliance unworthy of your daughter's merits. I own that she is exceptionally lovely in person and mind, but she has lived a most secluded life. It is my happiness to be her first suitor."

"She is very young," said Mr. Trevornock—"too young to be caught up in this absurd way. I don't want to offend you, Captain Leland, but cannot give my cordial approval to an engagement which seems to me only marketable for its imprudence. A girl nineteen to engage herself to a man who is going to India almost immediately to fight the Sikhs, who may be not before the year is out, and who, if he does not, may not come back to England three or four years hence to make her his wife—"

"Barbara has no means of her own, constancy than I have of hers," said the captain. "I came here, Mr. Trevornock, because I considered that would be an ungentleman-like act to leave England without seeing you. But knowing your past indifference to the fate of your daughters, I certainly did not expect to find you opposed to any decent alliance which either of them might please to make."

"You are impertinent, Sir," said the solicitor, twiddling nervously with his penknife, as if that Sheffield blade still wanted some touches to arrive at perfection.

"No, Mr. Trevornock, I am only plain spoken. I come of a good old English family—a family that never had a black sheep in it. Young as I am, my name is not unknown in the Company's service. If you know people who know what has been going in the Punjab during the last few years, you may ask them any question you like about me. I am not afraid of the answer. I have the honor to wish you good-morning."

"Good-morning, Captain Leland. I am sorry I have made myself disagreeable, if you have taken me by surprise. I had higher views for my daughter."

"Would it not have been better to prepare her gently for the elevation for which you destined her?" asked the captain with quiet scorn. "Rather too like that you ever had any views about her."

"I am not responsible for her folly. When the proper time came I should have told her my intentions. Well, she has chosen to go her own way. I shall not interfere. I wish you all prosperity in your career, Captain Leland, and that you may be faithful to an engagement which I still consider hasty and ill judged."

"I hope the result may convince you that you are wrong, Sir," said the captain, mildly. "Good-day."

He opened the door so abruptly that he brought himself almost into collision with the nose of the artist clerk, which was inconveniently close to the panel.

"A message from your Devonshire client, Sir," said Mr. Mantled, nothing abashed. "He is sorry he can't be here till one."

"That fellow was listening," thought Captain Leland, as he went down the crooked old stairs. "He is the image of Uriah Heep, and I hate the idea of Barbara's seeing him every time she visits her father."

He had arranged to meet the two girls at a pastry cook's in the Strand, and to finish the day with them at a picture gallery. He made his way across Lincoln's Inn Fields, pierced Clare's lanes and narrow streets, and arrived in good time at a tawdry little shop, where Bab and Flossie were sitting at a marble table, in a fly spotted apartment garnished with libellous looking glasses, contemplating a salt-cellar and a pepper-box. In these dark ages the eating places of London were small, obscure, and inconvenient, with some few brilliant exceptions which were strictly masculine. The handy little Italian coffee and ice shops were unknown. One might have roamed all over London in quest of a steak and potatoes a la francaise, and a good cup of coffee.

"Well," said Flossie, eagerly, when the captain had ordered strawberry ices, and taken his seat at the marble table, "did you see papa?"

"Yes."

"And was he nice?"

"Do you wish me to be strictly candid?"

"You know I delight in candor."

"Then I'm afraid I must say that he was nasty."

"Now you'd hardly expect that from a man who is nobody's enemy but his own," said Flossie, with an aggrieved air. "I thought he would have been delighted at the idea of getting rid of one of us. I dare say if you had offered to take me to India, he would have been in raptures. But Barbara never asks him for anything; she only sits and twiddles her parasol."

Advertising Cheats.

It has become so common to write the beginning of an elegant, interesting article and then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such cheats and simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible, to induce people to give them one trial, as no one who knows their value will ever use anything else.

HEAD INJURED.—On Thursday afternoon, while Mr. Alex. Dobie, of Glascow, was assisting in pulling down the verandah from the front of John F. McRae's old store, previous to the removal of that building, one of the beams fell, striking him on the head. His injuries, although painful, are not serious.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Composed, Compiled and Corralled by "Free Press" Reporters.

LENT.

Is this a fast, to keep
The larder lean,
And cleanse
From fat of seales and sheep?

Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still
To fill
The platter high with fish?

Is it to fast an hour,
Or read to go,
Or show
A downcast look, and sour?

No, 'tis a fast to dole
Thy alms of wheat,
And meat
Unto the hungry soule.

It is to fast from strife,
From evil deeds
And hate,
To circumcise thy life.

To show a heart grief-rent,
To starve thy sin
Not bin;
And that's to keep thy Lent.

The Earl of Dysart attained his majority on the 3rd of March. His grandfather, who died last year, left estates worth £40 000 a year and more than £1,000,000 in personal property for the young man's benefit. The late Earl was eccentric, almost to insanity.

Even Madame Patti herself did not seem in possession of her ordinary faculties. This is, perhaps, no wonder, considering that she is so ill supported. The curtain fell amid silence, and it is doubted whether, in each circumstances, the representations can be continued to the end."

AN ETOBICOKE SLAVE DRIVER.

His Inhuman Treatment of English Immigrants.

Among many cases heard lately by Judge McKenzie at the York County Court, was that of Roberts vs. Ward. It was an action brought by Henry Roberts, an English immigrant, who landed in Canada in May last, to recover wages due him by John Ward, a milk vendor living in the township of Etobicoke. It appears from the evidence, that the plaintiff (Roberts) hired with the defendant a few days after his arrival in this city. Before being engaged by the defendant, he was compelled to sign an agreement drawn and also signed by the latter. As the document played a principal part in the case yesterday, it is worthy of publication. It would appear from the reading that Ward has made a study of legal phrases, and so bewildered the unfortunate immigrant with the mystifying words, "the said," that he was incapable of fully understanding its meaning. The following is a copy of the agreement:—

"The said Roberts agrees to work for the said Ward for one year at any kind of work the said Ward requires or directs him to do, commencing May 15, 1879. The said Roberts must be ready to go to work at five o'clock in the morning, and continue faithfully and truly at work until eight o'clock at night, with an interval for meals, at the direction of the said Ward, and also on Sundays. The said Roberts is to milk ten cows, and take care of and feed thirty cattle, take proper care of the milk, milk pails and cans, according to directions from the said Ward. The said Roberts is not to use or carry any pipes, matches, or cigars, nor use anything that will intoxicate. Lost days, from any cause, to be deducted from agreement. The said Roberts is liable to be discharged at any time by the said Ward without permission. The said Roberts is to receive board, not washing, and one hundred and eight dollars ($108), that is at the rate of nine dollars (9) per month for one year's work."

The defendant was asked if he thought the agreement was a proper one to make with a man not accustomed to the ways of the country, to which he coolly replied in the affirmative. The defendant, it was learned, was a member of the Etobicoke Township Council for 1879, and now occupies the position of leader of the church choir. Roberts, the plaintiff, stated that he was dismissed from the services of Ward on Friday, September 5, without a moment's notice, and without one cent in his pockets. During the holding of the late Exhibition in Toronto, Roberts, after doing a heavy morning's work, received permission to visit the city, and for doing so the defendant deducted one day's pay.

The question given to the jury was to decide whether the above agreement was obtained by fraud. After five minutes' deliberation they returned to Court with a verdict for the plaintiff (Roberts) for $121, allowing him one dollar per day while he was working for the defendant, and they also found that the agreement was obtained by misrepresentations on the part of the latter.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A COLUMN OF AMUSEMENT FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

A STRANGE END TO A FIGHT.

Two skulls of stags, with their horns so firmly locked together that they could not be separated, were once found in the mountains of Colorado. It is quite plain that they once belonged to a couple of stags who had a terrible fight in the solitude of the mountains. After the combat had been kept up some time, their horns became so entangled and locked together that they could not get them apart. It is very probable, that when this happened they stopped thinking of fighting, and tried their best to get away from each other. But this was of no use. Their horns were so firmly interlocked that they could not twist nor pull them apart. So they stumbled about for the rest of their lives, with their heads close together. We cannot know how long they lived this way. They may have been able to eat a little grass, if both of them agreed to put down their heads at the same time. But at last they died. And how curiously things turned out! Each of them hoped to kill the other, and yet the result of the quarrel was to bind them together as long as they lived, and even death did not part them. And if they thought that no one would ever know of their fight, how greatly they were mistaken! The record of their combat—these two skulls fastened together—has remained for many along year, and will remain for many a year to come. It was truly a strange end to a fight.

Shakspeare makes Polonius say:

Of entrance to a quarrel; but, being in
Bear't that the opposer may beware of thee.

Those stags did that with a vengeance; didn't they?

It very often happens in other fights or disputes that the fighters cannot stop and separate just when they wish to. Something is apt to get hopelessly interlocked and tangled, such as good-will or self-respect, or fairness, or honor. Still, one master's be too peaceable, as the Quaker said when he took up a pitchfork as he saw the mad bull coming.

HOW TO MAKE A WIND-HARP.

As I happen to have an old paper telling people just how to make one, I will tell you. First get a long, narrow box, as long as the window in which it is to be placed. It must be made of thin pine, four inches deep and five in width. On the top, at the ends, fasten two bits of oak about half an inch high and a quarter of an inch thick. Into one of these pieces put seven "twisting" pegs, such as are used for fiddles; into the other piece fasten the same number of small brass pins. To each pin tie one end of a small cord, and when tight and twist the other end of the string around a peg, tuning the string in unison with the first. Proceed with the rest in like manner. Place over the row of strings, and three inches above them, a thin board held up by four pegs fastened into each end, glued to the ends of the box inside. The harp is then complete and should be put in a window partly open. Now, the increase the draught of air, the door or an opposite window in the room should be open. If the harp is placed in a strong current of air in a grotto or arbor, or hidden in some shady nook near a waterfall, the effect of it will be greatly improved.

THE GREAT CITY.

A young correspondent, who must be fond of surprising facts and figures, sends us the following information, which he has gathered concerning London, Eng.:—

It covers within the fifteen miles' radius from Charing Cross nearly 709 square miles.

It numbers within these boundaries 4,000,000 inhabitants.

It comprises 100,000 foreigners from every quarter of the globe.

It contains more Roman Catholics than Rome itself, more Jews than the whole of Palestine, more Irish than Dublin, more Scotchmen than Edinburgh, more Welshmen than Cardiff, in short, more people than the counties of Devon, Warwickshire, and Durham combined.

It has a birth in it every four minutes, a death every eight minutes, and seven accidents every day in its 7,000 miles of streets.

It has an average 36 miles of new streets opened, and 9,000 new houses built, in it every year.

It has 1,000 ships and 9,000 sailors in its port every day.

It has an influence with all parts of the world, represented by the yearly delivery in its postal districts of 238,000,000 letters.

JAPANESE MANNERS.

A school boy was watching a very dowdy meadow some time ago, with a sharp-nosed man, who seemed to have taken him quite by surprise. He was standing straight into the round eyes of the little fellow.

"What call the Japanese 'half-civilized?' Why, their servants and laborers are as polite as possible themselves, no less than toward persons of high station. It seems to come natural to them to say:—'I condescend to thank you,' instead of 'I possess it,' 'With pleasure,' 'Pardon my rudeness,' 'Allow me to offer you a cup of tea,' and so on; and it never appears to be constraint or stiffness. Now, when you can show me habits so courteous and a spirit so gentlemanly among

I did n't catch any more of what the sharp-nosed man said; but he went striking off beside the little boy, shaking his head high in air. For aught I know, he might have been going to wind up with some unpleasant reference to ——, but I don't see what use there can be in my guessing.

OUR BUDGET—NO. 9.

WORDS SQUARE—I.

1. A battle.
2. An animal.
3. An ominous body.
4. A girl's name.

II.

My first is a tree,
My second is washed by the sea,
My third must be cut,
Birds make my fifth out my first.

JUNOA.

ENIGMA.

I am forever needed, and not alone by one,
But by the millions, millions upon the glorious sun;
I'm never seen, but sometimes heard; I wait on every breath;
With you I take my yest at birth, and only quit
at death.

Hark! swelling on the evening breeze, with music
soft and clear,
Does not my sweet and thrilling strain delight
thy listening ear?
Now look at yonder stately dame, be sure full well she knows
The wealth of grace and majesty that unto me she owes.

I'm thin and unsubstantial; yet, by some strange fantasy,
I find that many clever men will build their hopes
on me;
Looking for my name you need not try to watch me,
For though I may be felt by all, I'm sure you cannot catch me.

ISABELLE.

CHARADE.

My first is to injure, to hurt or impair,
A take you, too, may receive,
Next a proposition, not very rare,
A conjunction third in the line
Fourth, a vessel, sacred, I believe,
Or a measure for wine.
My whole, views of the sea, I opine.

GRAMMATICAL QUESTION.

(Sentences to be corrected.)

1. You are, as usual, in good humor. That always pushes me up.
2. The expenses of doing the work, strangely to say, is increasing.
3. I wish it was equally certain that every glance at vice lowers a ladder from her pinnacle, and that on a scare; and more steadfast look she grows lubacious.

HIDDEN WRITERS.

1. My neighbor's cottage was destroyed by fire last night.
2. Send Milt on ahead with the basket.
3. When it does occur 'tis time to bell all.
4. When I rap, open the door.
5. She is sitting by it on the doorstep.

5. A city on an island of Asia, and leave a city in China.

CROSS WORD.

My first is in letter, but not in word;
My second in owl, but not in bird.
My third is in new, but not in old;
My fourth is in daring and also in bold.
My fifth is in low, but not in high.
My sixth is in rubbing, but not in pie.
My whole is a city of wide renown,
Which dear Mother Goose has called a town.

Several very good puzzles, as well as replies to some of our correspondents must stand over till next week.

WM. SCARROW } Auditors.
M. CURRY }

Mr. J. M. O'Mara stated that the Society had also distributed upwards of $200 in relief at Christmas.

The report was adopted.

A circular was next received from Dr. Hagarty in reference to emigration, which, on motion, was referred to the Executive Committee.

The following new members were balloted for and elected:—Rev. Father Mahoney, John Yorick, Richard Wright and John Ranahan, jun.

The President stated that the efforts being made in behalf of the Irish sufferers were meeting with great success upwards of $2,000 having been already subscribed. He also paid a tribute to the corporation for their response to the appeal of the mass meeting.

Mr. D. Glass, Q.C., moved a vote of thanks to the Mayor and Council for voting $1,000 towards the Relief Fund, and also to Aldermen Thompson and Buckle for their manly course at the Council Board.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. D. Regan, and carried unanimously.

Aldermen Thompson, Taylor and Scarrow, on behalf of the corporation, acknowledged the resolution.

Mr. John Smith then moved the following resolution, which was carried unanimously by a standing vote:—

"WHEREAS, it has pleased Providence to call from our midst Mr. Philip McCann, late member of this Society; it is therefore

Resolved, That while bowing with submission to the Divine will of the Almighty, we, the members of this Society, hereby sympathize with the widow and family of deceased.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the widow and family of our late Bro. Philip McCann, and published in city papers."

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with, and resulted as follows:—

President—Mr. D. Regan.
First Vice-President—Mr. B. Cronyn.
Second Vice-President—Dr Sippi.
Third Vice-President—Mr. J. M. Keary.
Treasurer—Mr. J. Mahon.
Financial Secretary—Mr. J. M. O'Mara.
Recording Secretary—Mr. C. Hevey.
Executive Committee—John Smith, H. D. Long, Dr. Mitchell, Ald. Thompson, Ald. Scarrow, Ald. Taylor, D. Glass, J. J. Gibbons, Ald. Sharman, D. M. Fraser, Jas. Magee and P. F. Boyle.
Auditors—Messrs. T. Coffey and J. P. O'Byrne.
Marshal—Mr. Stephen O'Dwyer.

Messrs. Regan, Keary and O'Mara returned thanks for the honor conferred.

Mr. John Smith moved, seconded by Mr. Keary, that the thanks of this Society be tendered the St. Patrick's Society for the use of their hall. Carried.

On motion, the President vacated the chair, which was taken by Mr. John Smith.

Messrs. D. Regan and D. Glass, in moving and seconding a resolution of thanks to the retiring President, Mr. H. D. Long, paid a high tribute to the indefatigable zeal displayed by that gentleman.

The resolution was carried on a rising vote, amidst applause.

Mr. Long acknowledged the sentiment of the resolution in suitable terms.

A resolution was then proposed, and unanimously carried, that the thanks of the Society be tendered Mr. P. F. Boyle, the retiring Recording Secretary, and that he be made an honorary life member, for valuable services rendered during the past two years.

Mr. Boyle returned thanks for the resolution, and the meeting shortly after adjourned.

TO COUNTY CONSTABLES.—The following circular has been issued from the office of the Provincial Secretary :—"Provincial Secretary's Office, Toronto, March 8, 1880. —Sir,—With regard to services rendered in connection with the administration of criminal justice by police officers or constables who are paid for their services by salary out of municipal or other funds, I am directed by the Hon. the Provincial Secretary to advise you that in future no claims rendered by such officers or constables for such services will be admitted against the Government, or paid out of the consolidated revenue, unless the officers or constables have been specially employed to perform the services by directions from the Department of the Hon. the Attorney-General.—I have, etc., HENRY TOWER, for the Secretary."

There is no place like San Francisco for enterprise, after all. Last week the wife of a well known business man, residing on Ellis street, eloped. The departure was discovered about 10 o'clock in the evening, and at the same hour the next morning the husband had the furniture sold by auction, and delivered up the key of the house to his landlord on the same day. He was terribly afraid she would change her mind and return.

HORRIBLE MURDER IN DAWN.

A Lone Indian Found Stabbed to Death in His Wigwam.

Special Correspondence of the Free Press.

The north-eastern part of the Township of Dawn has been thrown into a considerable state of excitement on account of an Indian being found brutally murdered in his wigwam, on lot 25, 11th con., this evening (10th inst.). His body was literally covered with wounds. He was stabbed thrice in the neck, either of which would prove fatal, once in the upper lip, once on the nose below the eyes, once over the left eyebrow, and one through the right eye. There were nine wounds on his neck and face, while his limbs and body were covered with gashes, evidently made with a butcher knife, while, to judge from the scars on his hands, he must have tried hard to save his life. It is supposed he was murdered some days since, as no smoke has been observable from his hut during the past week.

"Ben," the name of the murdered man, belonged to the Bear Creek tribe of Indians, and was one of the most harmless creatures. He always took up his abode in the vicinity of the whites, and did a little mixing with other Indians, seemingly preferring to live near the white fur whom he could buy cheap and do odd jobs for as he liked. He was also a good hunter, and used to kill a great many deer. He was a favorite with fellow Indians, owing to his kind and obliging disposition, although not particularly bright in intellect.

The Coroner will be notified this morning, when it is hoped something will be elicited to throw some light on the murder. There is no doubt, however, but it was committed by some of his own race. As he used frequently to change his quarters the finding of his body was the result of accident. Each brother-in law, living in the adjoining township of Euphemia, having occasion to come to Dawn, was asked by his wife to call and see her brother, and was horrified to find his body in the condition described, covered with some loose straw and dirt in a corner of his wigwam.

CANADIAN ITEMS.

—Col. Williams has consented to command the Canadian team at Wimbledon in June.

—Seale, the Hop Bitters man, entertained Hanlan and some of his friends at Toronto last night.

—Manager Hickson, of the Grand Trunk Railway, imported six thoroughbred mares in the steamer Quebec. When the steamer arrived at Portland the other day every mare was dead.

—Three Toronto boys, aged between eight and twelve years, were fined 82 each, or two hours in cells, for throwing rotten eggs at their teacher—Mrs. Stewart.

—The dead body of Sarah Lancaster, a well known vagrant, was found on a gravel road in the first concession of Thurlow yesterday morning, an inquest was held, and a verdict of found dead returned by the jury.

—The internal decorations and upholstering of the masonic hall, St. Thomas, are rapidly approaching completion, and the room will be dedicated on the evening of the 18th instant by Grand Master Henderson with appropriate ceremonies.

—Much merriment has been caused at Quebec City by the action of Recorder Dury in having a detective summoned before him, whom he accused of laughing at him. The press having ridiculed the matter, the Recorder has now summoned the detective again, and accused him of having told the story to the papers.

—On Monday night a widow, Mrs. Prudhomme, residing at Lakefield, was taken ill after taking a dose of some unknown medicine, and died on Tuesday morning. Suspicion was aroused by the suspicion that the medicine was administered to procure an abortion, but a coroner's jury returned a verdict of, "Died of apoplexy caused by some unknown drug."

—An elderly man named Jos. Silvester, from Lake Canada, while proceeding from Sarnia to Quebec, threatened to shoot Conductor McIntyre. It appears Silvester went to sleep and Conductor McIntyre shook him to get his ticket, when he got into a passion and threatened to shoot the train man. He was placed in the Toronto police dock and fined $20 and costs, or one day's imprisonment.

—The deciding match for the Gibbon gold medal was played at Wingham, Thursday, between the Goderich and Wroxeter curling clubs. The medal was presented by Sheriff Gibbon, of Goderich, to be played for by the Goderich, Seaforth, Wroxeter and Wingham clubs. Wingham was beaten by Wroxeter on Monday, Goderich defeated Seaforth on Wednesday, leaving Goderich and Wroxeter to play off for the medal. Wroxeter won Thursday by five shots.

The Fifteen" Puzzle.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—I observe in yesterday's issue that Mr. Charles E. Solis, of Cartwright, sends you what he calls a "solution of the popular craze," and hopes that it will prove "satisfactory" to all whom it may concern. "Any person of the slightest application" might be saved a large proportion of "the nervous perspiration of unutterable disgust" by making the following moves in working out Mr. Solis' position:—

2	3	8	11	11	14	7	8	13	11
1	5	13	1	5	6	8	11	11	10
10	15	2	2	15	13	12	13	14	9
15	2	9	8	10	11	14	7	13
1	10	12	14	9	6	8	6	15
10	11	5	4	11	13	11	5	13
15	3	14	12	5	7	9	9	11
11	13	4	14	9	8	5	10	14
12	6	6	3	13	12	6	15	12
1	9	13	2	6	14	7	9	15
10	14	10	1	12	13	13	10	14

Thus finishing the game in 102 moves, instead of 144. Again, his second position can be worked out in 16 moves, instead of 84, thus:—

13	13	15	14
9	14	10	15
10	12	9	11
15	11	13	12

He says he could go on and show how to finish the "little fraud," but thinks he has taken space enough. Be kind enough to allow him space to send on the balance of the positions, solved with "the least number of moves."

Yours,
JOHN C. WALLACE.

The Inman steamship City of Richmond, which arrived at New York on Wednesday, reports furious gales during nearly her whole passage from Liverpool to New York; and the Adriatic, of the Another Line, became disabled a few days out from London, which she left for America February 14th. The injury, however, only affected one of the engines the other remaining staunch; the Australis arrived on the 10th. The Elysia of the same line spoke the Australis in longitude 56° west, and left her in good order, working along with one engine and helped by her sails. When the Elysia was two thousand miles from Queenstown she ships, which are to have four engines or possibly more of the most approved structure, begin to ply on the Atlantic, these casualties or their consequences will be greatly reduced, we are assured, and the delays and disconforts of the past may be looked upon much as the days of the Sirius and the Great Western are regarded by travellers of our own time.

WANTED WINTER QUARTERS.—Constable Aldridge, of London East, Thursday p.m. arrested John Kendrick on the charge of breaking a window on the Hamilton Road. John was drunk when he committed the damage and said he did so because he wanted to secure winter quarters. Squire Peters has him in hand.

LOCAL LEGAL.—In the Court of Chancery, at Toronto, on Thursday, the following local case was heard:—Re Deane; Deane v. Ferguson.—An appeal by the plaintiff and cross appeal by the defendant, Grace Sinclair, from the report of the Master at London. Street for the plaintiff; R. Meredith for the defendant, Grace Sinclair; Plumb for the infant defendants. Reserved.

CONCERT.—A large audience assembled in the Mechanics' Hall last night on the occasion of a concert under the auspices of the Young Men's Conservative Club. The first part consisted of a number of concert selections by local ladies and gentlemen, which were received with deserving appreciation. The second part embraced an amusing piece of comedy by the Dramatic Club in connection with the Dufferin College. The female impersonations were life-like, and the general playing highly pleasing.

MONTHLY REUNION.—The usual temperance meeting at the Memorial Church Thursday night was well attended, and an enjoyable evening was spent. The chair was occupied by the pastor, the Rev. J. B. Richardson. The programme was carried out in a manner that reflected the greatest credit on the following ladies and gentlemen who took part:—Messrs. Singleton, Abel, Reddoy, Darnell, Jones, Bryant, and Misses T. Barnard and Outten. During the evening addresses were delivered by Messrs. Bowman and McGowan.

ST. THOMAS KNIGHTS TEMPLARS.—The installation of Bartleigh Preceptory Knights Templars by Very Eminent Sir Knight D. B. Burch, Prov. Prior, and Past Eminent Sir Knight A. G. Smyth, of London, took place on Wednesday evening at the Masonic Hall, St. Thomas, as follows:—Eminent Preceptor, Sir Kt. Robt. McKay; Constable, Sir Kt. H. A. Graunis; Marshal, Sir Kt. Wm. H. King; Prelate, Sir Kt. Wm. Davis; Sub Marshal, Sir Kt. J. H. Thompson; Recorder, Sir Kt. A. N. Pettit; Treasurer, Sir Kt. Isaac Morse; Capt. Guard, Sir Kt. Chas. O'Neil; Guard, Sir Kt. Edward Climie.

CURLIANA.—The London and Ingersoll clubs—four rinks each—played a game at the Covered Rink in Ingersoll yesterday. The Londoners defeated their Ingersoll brethren by 26 shots. The score cards of the London Club were protested by some member of the club who, no doubt, thought it out of place to give the different players the credit due them (by publicity) for the shots made in the match.—Another curling match was played yesterday at St. Thomas between the Forest City Club, of London, and the St. Thomas Club, which resulted in favor of the latter club by 38 shots. The score stood:—London, No. 1 rink, 17; St. Thomas, 20; No. 2 (London), 5; No. 2 (St. Thomas), 40. Totals—London, 22; St. Thomas, 60.

THE FATAL ACCIDENT AT NEWBURY.—In the published account of the death of Mr. George Middlemiss, who was killed on the G. W. R. track, near Newbury, on Saturday night last, it was stated that he mentioned to passengers on the train and at Longwood station that he expected his team to be in waiting there to take him home, a distance of six miles. The reason the team was not at that station was in consequence of Mr. Middlemiss informing his wife, previous to leaving home, that he would return by way of St. Thomas. At the London station the writer heard Mr. Middlemiss ask Constable Logan if his train was gone. That officer, thinking, no doubt, that Mr. Middlemiss intended going to Longwood, as was his custom, said, "No, George; there it is" pointing to the Windsor Mixed, whereupon Mr. M. immediately entered the car.

CARNIVAL.—The fancy dress carnival in the Covered Skating Rink last night, in aid of the funds of the 7th Fusileers, was not very well attended. Owing to unfrequent notice being given of another Hippodrome Club, whose performances on a previous occasion proved so amusing, were not able to be present. About two hundred and fifty tickets were sold, and those who were present had a splendid time, plenty of room being available on the best ice for skating that has been enjoyed this winter. The music of the Fusileer Band, as usual, lent a charm to the evening's enjoyment. The costumes were not remarkable, being of the old-reputed characters. The "Game of 15" had a representative, besides which only the following cards were handed in for publication:—Henry Morgan, Stratford, "Evening Star;" W. G. Galbraith, "White Bear;" J. S. Saunders, "Ape and Bear;" John Gray, Stratford, "Volunteer;" J. P. Street, "Right Bower;" J. G. Dawson, "Prince Lepoleon the Fool;" E. R. Minhinnick, "Four of Diamonds."

COMPLIMENTARY SOCIAL.—Between 150 and 200 ladies and gentlemen, comprising members of the Bible Class, Sunday School teachers and friends met in the lecture room of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Thursday night and tendered the pastor, Rev. J. A. Murray, a complimentary social entertainment. Mr. Andrew Thompson occupied the chair, and opened the meeting with a short address. The following programme was then introduced and carried out to the satisfaction of all present:—Glee, choir; solo, Mr. J. W. McIntosh; reading, Mr. W. Fairbairn; duet, Mrs. Jones and Miss McLeod; solo, Master Chas. Maynard; instrumental, Mr. Taylor; solo, Miss Freeland; glee, choir. During an intermission in the intellectual part of the programme, choice eatables were passed around, and partaken of with relish. A presentation to Miss Bella McLeod, the organist, of an address and purse of $25, following which the Rev. Mr. Murray replied on behalf of that lady. After speeches by the chairman, Mr. Duff Cameron, and others, a very enjoyable evening was brought to a close in the usual way.

The Donnelly Murders.

Further Examination of the Accused.

Martin Hogan in the Witness Box.

His Testimony at the Inquest Gone Over.

Patrick Whalen Lives up the Proceedings,

And Martin Hogan, jr., Shows the Vigilance Committee in a new Light.

Evidence of Young William Maher—The Examination at an End—Formal Decision to be Rendered this Afternoon.

The examination of the prisoners in the Donnelly case was continued at the Court House yesterday, Squires Peters and Fisher presiding. The number of spectators at the opening of the Court was not quite so large as on previous days, but the seats were nevertheless completely filled. Mr. W. R. Meredith appeared for the first time in the interest of the prisoners, and sat with the other counsel for the defence.

Mr. Hutchinson then read the evidence to the witness, which was the same as published in the FREE PRESS at the time.

Witness continued—That was the evidence I gave at the inquest; I recollect meeting the Chief of Police at Maclean's Hotel in Lucan some time after the deed was committed; I made a statement to him in a private room, with no one present but ourselves; I no not recollect telling him that I saw William looking out of the window after I heard the shots; I cannot say that I did not tell him that, but to the best of my knowledge I never said it; I recollect the Chief taking down my statement in writing, but I do not recollect him reading it over once and asking me if it was correct; I do not deny his having done so; it was after the funeral, and a few days after the murder.

To Mr. Macmahon—In my evidence before the Coroner's inquest I said I did not see William Donnelly looking out of the window, nor could not have done so; I drew the body into William's room past the front of the bed; I did not notice a large quantity of blood at the foot of the bed in the morning; the head of William's bed would be at the north wall, and against the window; I did not help Mrs. Donnelly to move the beds, nor did I see her do it; I did not notice how near the bed was to the window, nor did I ever say it was not close to the window; the side of the bed did not come along beside the window, that I know of; I returned to the house in the forenoon, but did not notice whether the bed was there or not; the foot of the bed would almost be against the bedroom door.

To Mr. Hutchinson—Looking out of the window we would look north; I cannot say whether the glass door was closed that night, nor can I tell which way the house faces; I think it faces west; the road runs north and south; this glass door was not in the front of the house; if the window was in the north the bed was running the other way; I don't understand these diagrams; when under the bed I was not lying close up to the stove; I drew the body into the foot of the bed, and should think the head of the bed would be pretty close to the north wall; I now say that the bed would be close with the kitchen door; the door was not in the way when I was drawing John's body to the foot of the bed; I didn't bed; I drew it straight along from the kitchen to the foot of the bed.

To Mr. Macmahon—I did not see William Donnelly in bed that morning; the room being so dark; the bed John and I slept in ran north and south, and, to the best of my knowledge, Will's headed in the same line; going into Will's room from the kitchen, the window I speak of was to the left hand side; I was in the north end of the room; it was between ten and eleven when I returned again, but I took no notice of the bed then; I mean distinctly to say that the head of the bed was north and the foot south; when I came back to the house there had been no change in the position of the bed. I did not notice that there was a half door in the room, but I believe there was some sort of a window in the front part of the house.

To Mr. Hutchinson—When I returned to the house in the forenoon I observed the trail of blood quite plainly.

The Court then adjourned until half-past two.

The Court resumed at 2.30.

William Donnelly, recalled—I was at home from the time I came from Keefe's until I went away with the body; the body headed towards the north, and was headed in that way until it was moved away.

Patrick Whalen was sworn, after which the Crown Attorney read the evidence submitted by the witness at the inquest on the night following the murder. The witness objected to a number of points.

Witness—The evidence was read over to me at the inquest, and I signed it; I did not let O'Connor in, but my wife went to let him in; he shoved the door open himself; I did not ask him his name, it was my wife; he did not say first that the Donnellys were killed; I want is corrected to read that he said he came from the Donnellys; that a lot of men had come in and run them to the woods; he said they were all dressed in women's clothes; I never said I could distinguish the remains of four persons after the fire burned down; I saw but two; at the time the noise came to the door it was about half-past 12 or 1 o'clock, and the women got up,but when she got to the door the boy was in; she asked him what he was, and he said he was a son of Mr. Connors; he appeared to be a boy; nothing without hat, stockings or hat, and his coat under his arm; I think he said, "call up the old man," and after I had tried the fire I put the little feet upon the hearth; it took about fifteen minutes to warm the little fellow, and then I asked him what brought him out this hour of the night; he said a lot of men in women's clothes had come and run the Donnellys to the bush; he said the house was on fire, and asked me to call up the boys to go over and quench it; I looked out and saw something like a temple to the front window; I turned to him and said, "You must be fooling; there is a fire there," he said, "call up the boys;" I looked again, and the fire seemed damped out, because I could see no light; I said "You are a regular little fool for telling such a story as that; are you in the habit of getting up at nights like this?" "No," says he, "I am not, for Mrs. Donnelly's killed;" "How do you know?" says I; "I heard them moaning," says he; then I looked out and saw the rack kitchen on fire; it was then fifteen minutes to two o'clock; then I got on my boots and put down to my son John's; John was standing on the floor, and I hollered to him "The Donnelly's house is all a fire;" "I see it is," says he; so then we went over to the Donnellys' and went up to the front of the house, and tried to look into the window; the glass was all smoked, however, and while I was trying to look in the window flew in I think it was the shot of a gun that broke the window; I swore by the mortal gob I was shot myself; it was in the front room that I saw the body; at that time my son John came, and young O'Connor a while after; we stood there a good while, and not being able to see no more, we all came over to my house; I asked young O'Connor if John Donnelly came home, as I saw him going down the road; he said he could not tell me; that he went down to James Keefe's for a cutter "to go to the law to-morrow;" so I said, "We'll see if he's burnt," and I went to the stable to see if the cutter was there; I could see no cutter, and said to myself, "John Donnelly wasn't in the fire;" then I went to the back kitchen fence, and observed Mrs. Donnelly in the fire near the back kitchen door; I recognized her body although the flesh had begun to burn; so at that time I went home to prepare to go to Granton; I think Johnny O'Connor was then in bed; I heard a couple of words to my wife, and the name of one Carroll was mentioned; I don't know whether it was me or my wife who asked him how he knew it was Carroll, and he made answer, "by his voice"; he mentioned no other names; I believe my wife told him that she didn't want him to say anything; that she didn't want to be got into trouble and he brought up, or something in that way. I am not positive whether that was after he mentioned Carroll's name or not; I met Casey about half-past six, on my way to Granton; I told him what had happened; I met Carroll in Granton that morning, and on the way met James Hobbins, before I met Casey; I went in to Richard Curtin's and had my breakfast there; I told the people there; I told Casey, Hobbins and Curtin that I saw two of the bodies; I got to Granton at about nine o'clock, and about that time I saw Carroll; it was to meet him that I went; I did not mention to Carroll about the Donnellys; I had gone to Granton to settle some costs with Carroll; the people in Thomas Culver's tavern were wondering where the fire was the night before, and I said "what'll you give to know where the fire was; Carroll was there when I told them; we had a "throw" of whiskey a piece.

Mr. Hutchinson—"That was an unusual thing to do."

Witness—"Well, if you had walked as far as I had, you would have taken two or three (laughter); there were five or six in the bar room, and the news excited a good deal of interest."

Mr. Hutchinson—"You had had this 'throw' before you told Carroll?"

Witness—"Yes; and I'll want another if I'm kept there much longer (laughter); Mrs. Winslow was not in Granton on that day; it didn't run in my head to tell the people at Granton that the boy had mentioned Carroll's name; it was an hour after I went to the fire that the roof fell in; I could not say whose body was in the front room, but I partly guessed it was Thomas; I got a good view of him before he was burned much, and I took it to be Tom; it was near the door leading to the kitchen; I saw his head; it appeared that he had his coat on, but I could not say the same with regard to the old woman; it was a fine night, but it was snowing; I saw tracks around the house, but did not pay particular attention to them; I thought young O'Connor was foolish when he came over; I heard no noise before the boy came over.

To Mr. Macmahon—I think it was about half-past one when the boy came to my house; I did not hear anything about blackened faces until I saw O'Connor's evidence in the papers; the flames and smoke were about the bodies; the fire was through the roof of the back kitchen before I arrived; when I told Casey, on the way to Granton, about the fire, he didn't seem to be very much surprised; the Granton, Casey and I did not talk much about anything in particular while I was there; I was asked when I went to Granton if I had been there; I asked, "What?" and they said, "You know what is meant;" I could not say the exact explanation they gave, but it was something about the book in the church; the house was divided between those who took any break members in that night; the question was put to the meeting and the majority were against accepting any new members; I then stood up and walked out.

Mr. Hutchinson—"Was anything said to you about an oath?"

Witness—"Yes; something was said to me about an oath; some one asked me if I would take my oath; I was not present at a section with my being asked to join; they did not tell me what the oath would be; I could not say whether there was any one else there who was not a member; John Heenan asked me if I would take the oath, but I cannot say who put the question about membership to the meeting; those who were in favor of taking no new members went to the right side of the house, and those against it went to the left; Carroll, Kennedy, McLoughlin and nearly all the rest went against a new member being taken in; this was the first meeting I had had any knowledge of."

To Mr. W. R. Meredith—"I was at the Church and know most of the people; I was at a neighbor's house and saw the light in the school-house; I signed the book at the church; those present were as respectable as ordinary men; I had not been drinking that evening, and was sober; a person was standing inside the door when I entered; it was James Heenan; I heard no discussion about their business.

To Mr. Hutchinson—"Heenan was against the door, and only partially opened it when I went up; I did not go any further than the porch at that time; there was a porch door and a door to the school-house; there were persons at the outside door when I went out; when the vote had been taken some one said the majority was against me, and I went out; a good number of persons had signed the book at the church before I did; I supposed the meeting was that of a Vigilance Committee, or something of that sort.

William Maher, sworn—I am a son of James Maher, of the Township of Biddulph, and know James Carroll; he usually lives at our house, and keeps his horses there; I do not recollect him coming to our place the morning after the murder; his horses were in the stable, one of them being a dark bay and the other one a white horse; none of these horses were out the morning after the murder; I was not home that day; I left home about eight o'clock in the morning; none of these horses were out of the stable before that hour; Carroll could not have ridden one of them to Granton; he was not at our house that morning, nor did he sleep there the night after the murder; I usually attended to the horses, but could not tell whether any of them had been out; the horses were at his own farm that day.

Mr. Hutchinson—"That's quite a different thing from what you told us."

Witness—Carroll's farm is about a quarter of a mile from our place, and I attended the horses there; they were there when I left for school; I usually saw the horses between seven and eight o'clock; I did not go back home before going to school; I recollect making a statement to the Chief of Police, which he wrote down; I did not tell the Chief that Carroll was at our place before he went to Granton; I saw Carroll's handcuffs with him, and also saw them up stairs; I remember when Carroll was appointed a constable, and I soon saw him with handcuffs; they used to be lying about sometimes; he also had a baton, which lay on the shelf over the door; it is become of it; it is two or three months since I saw it. I have no knowledge of any handcuffs having been found at our place; the school was held at Whalen's all day; Carroll had a pair of grey frilled cloth pants which he used to wear; I saw them at our place after the murder.

To Mr. Macmahon—I did not know that Carroll's baton belonged to Mr. Hodgins, of Lucan.

Chief of Police Williams, recalled—I heard the statement made to-day by young Maher; I questioned him on the Saturday after the murder, and he told me that went to Granton; Martin Hogan made the statement to me which is produced; I read it over to him; he told me he saw William Donnelly looking out of the window.

Mr. Macmahon objected to this evidence being taken.

Mr. Hutchinson pointed out that accurate correspondence in evidence was not always convincing, and while Hogan had not corroborated William Donnelly in every particular, he wanted to show by the Chief of Police that he was withholding one fact.

Mr. Meredith asked if he could use the evidence at the trial.

Mr. Hutchinson submitted that the present examination was quite different to a trial. The Crown desired to have every point of information brought out, not knowing what effect it might have upon the trial. All the way through the Crown had been struggling with unwilling witnesses, and with the greatest difficulty succeeded in drawing from them the evidence already taken. Even an old man like Mr. Whalen, who under ordinary circumstances was a trustworthy and respectable man, and with no particular friendship for the prisoners, was actuated by abject fear to withhold information.

Mr. Macmahon said Mr. Hutchinson should not make such statements.

After Mr. Macmahon had made a lengthy defence for Mr Whalen, and Mr. Hutchinson had again stated his reasons for wishing the evidence taken, the Magistrates allowed the testimony to be signed.

Mr. Hutchinson said the Crown had now concluded the case.

The Magistrates announced that they would give a decision at two o'clock this afternoon.

THE BIDDULPH MURDERS.

Rumored Change of Venue in the Case—Either Hamilton or Toronto.

A prominent legal gentleman of this city, who arrived from Toronto yesterday, is our authority for the statement that the Attorney-General has decided upon a change of venue in the trial of the persons accused of the Donnelly murders, and that either Hamilton or Toronto will be chosen. Representations have been made to Mr. Mowat to the effect that the ends of justice would be best served by removing the trial from London to some other town or city distant from the scene of the tragedy, and it appears that these representations, notwithstanding the strong opposition of the removal will entail, have been deemed sufficient to warrant the Attorney-General in complying with the request. It is not definitely settled as yet at which trial will be held, but [illegible] since the [illegible] legal gentlemen state that [illegible] informed on the question [illegible] either Hamilton or Toronto will be chosen, with the chances in favor of the former city. It has been frequently asserted that a change of venue in a trial of this nature could not be procured until after an indictment had been found by the Grand Jury, but the eleventh section of the Act regarding "Procedure in Criminal Cases" will set the matter at rest—

"Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Court or Judge hereinafter mentioned, that it is expedient to the ends of justice that the trial of any person charged with felony or misdemeanor should be held in some district, county or place other than that in which the offence is supposed to have been committed, or would otherwise be triable, the Court at which such person is or is liable to be indicted, may at any term or sitting thereof, and any Judge who might hold or sit at such Court, may at any other time either before or after the presentation of a bill of indictment, (the Licensed Commissioners), recovers sufficiently from the effects of the demonstration to be able to read what the FREE PRESS said correctly, and apologizes for suggesting what was said in those columns. It will be time enough to tell the public what became of the money.

A Couple of Youthful Thieves.

How They Went Through a House in Morris Township.

Chief Constable Davidson, of Wingham, left here yesterday for home, having in his charge two youths belonging to this city named Wm. Martin (17) and Henry Anderson (18), who were arrested the day previous on the charge of burglary. It appears that previous to leaving London, Martin went to Grayson's grocery and bought a jackknife, and when the grocery-man for $4. This amount the latter paid on the youth's representations, and the day after receiving the money the couple left for Wingham. They were unable to obtain work—if indeed they desired employment—and conceived the idea that they could live much easier by stealing than by laboring for a living. Accordingly they set out upon a tramp, and while going through the township of Morris, called at a farm-house where the wife was alone, and asked for a drink of water. While she was in the act of procuring something to eat, as they allege. They knocked at the door, but receiving no answer, entered. Finally they resolved upon returning to the house, and pushing in the door, made free with the contents of the larder. Mrs. Parr was an eye-witness of their doings from the house of a neighbor near by, and after they had ransacked the bureau drawers, broken open a trunk and abstracted some of the contents, they were disturbed by Mrs. Parr, who met them at the door as they were in the act of leaving. She enquired their business in her house, and received in return impertinent answers. They then left as fast as their legs could carry them, and Mrs. Parr, on examining the trunk and house, missed quite a number of articles of value. A few days afterwards she gave information to Mr. Davidson of the robbery, and described the youths so minutely that he had no difficulty in determining their identity. Word was given to the police authorities here of the theft two weeks since, but until Thursday the boys had been keeping out of the way. They will probably be held to account for their thievish pranks.

MORE OIL CROOKEDNESS.

A dispatch from Montreal yesterday bears out the statement made in these columns some months since, that the fees men in one or two oil refineries of this city are somewhat lax in their inspection of the quantity of oil put into the barrels for shipment. It may be, as has been stated, that this "sin of omission" is unknown to the proprietors, but it nevertheless gives the refiners of London a name to which we feel sure they are not entitled. The telegram says it has been found that petroleum gauged and inspected in London, Ont., is often found short by consumers here to the extent of from one to five gallons per barrel. The attention of the Government is called to this fact by the Herald this morning.

SARNIA FIRE BRIGADE.—The Fire Brigade met in the hall on Tuesday evening, for the annual election of officers of the Department. Chief Johnston in the chair. Chief Johnston and Assistant Chief Ellison presented their resignations. On calling for nominations, Thomas Fowler was declared Chief by acclamation, John Lyys Assistant-Chief, and John Copland, Sec.-Treasurer. The following officers were also elected:—Hoser Hose.—Captain, Charles Ellis; Lieut., E. A. Clark; Sec., H. Allen; Foreman, No. 1, William Vidal. Foreman, No. 2, George Wesino; Foreman, No. 3, Wm. Ireland. Reserve Hook & Ladder Co.—Capt., J. H. Hoskins; Lieut., Wm. Eveland; Sec., Charles Finch; Treas., D. Graham. The Brigade then adjourned to Chief's Hotel, where, after partaking of a splendid supper, they spent a pleasant evening with speeches, and songs.

A local mathematician has calculated that a single individual, working ten hours a day on all legal working days, would be occupied for about forty years in counting the estimated revenue of England during the coming fiscal year. The amount is £81,560,000.

Mr. James S. Macabe, for the past six years connected with the General Superintendent's office of the G. W. R., in Hamilton, has received an appointment as [illegible] writer in the office of the [illegible] at Kingsbridge, Chicago, and leaves for [illegible] new place this morning.

A man in the township of South Dorchester, who lives near Springfield, tied his wife's hands behind her and then horsewhipped her within an inch of her life a few days since. She should have sewed the buttons on his shirt when told to do so. This is what comes of talking back to the "boss," you see!

Rev. H. W. Brown, the well known Baptist evangelist, and for many years a resident of London Township, has closed successful revival services extending over a month at Lockport, N. Y., and will conduct services at Waterford and Brantford. Ont., for some time to come. The Lockport press speak of him as an earnest, plain spoken Christian man.

In the TIMES report of the recent demonstration to Mr. John Waters, M.P.P., at Parkhill, Mr. John Dawson, the chairman, is reported to have said that "the FREE PRESS stated that there was a deficit of $940 in the License Fund of North Middlesex. When Mr. Dawson, who is no doubt one of the political wire-pullers (prior to the operations of the Scott Act), recovers sufficiently from the effects of the demonstration to be able to read what the FREE PRESS said correctly, and apologizes for suggesting what was said in those columns. It will be time enough to tell the public what became of the money.

A Losing Joke.

A prominent physician of Pittsburgh said jokingly to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill-health, and of his inability to cure her, "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.

POLICE COURT NOTES.—The blotter at the Central Station comprised "three of a drunk," and these of the class designated Mary Ann Stokes was fined $1 or go down to the hill overlooking the Thames for ten days. She accepted the alternative. Fred. Rankin and Sam Henderson were her companions in crime, while the head of the proprietor was turned, endeavored to steal a box of cigars, but succeeded only in getting a handful. He has been bailed to appear on the 17th inst.

EDUCATIONAL MEDALS.—His Excellency the Governor-General has signified to the Lady Principal of the Hellmuth Ladies' College his intention of annually awarding a medal to be competed for by the students of that institution. His Lordship the Bishop of Huron also presents two gold medals.

Our National Hymn.

The following is the first verse of the new Canadian National Hymn, by Arthur Sullivan, the composer, sung at the Government House private theatricals on Thursday night:—

God bless our wide Dominion,
Our fathers' chosen land,
And bind in lasting union
Each ocean's distant strand—
From where Atlantic terrors
Our hardy seamen train,
To where the east sun mirrors
The vast Pacific chain.
O bless our wide Dominion,
True freedom's fairest scene;
Defend our people's union,
God save our Empire's Queen.

A BEREAVED FAMILY.—The Rev. A. C. Falls, Episcopal minister of Amherstburg, has been sadly bereaved of late by the serious illness of his five youngest children and the death of three of them. Last week two of the little ones were laid in the tomb together, and on Monday the third was deposited by their side. The eldest of the five is recovering, while the youngest at last accounts was in a very low state. The cause of the sore affliction was scarlet fever and measles combined. It would appear that the fever has alarmed the people of Amherstburg to such an extent that it is next to impossible to procure nurses in families afflicted with the disease; and in his great grief this fact affords him a pleasure of reminder:—That of the five or six ladies who assisted to care for his little ones in their sufferings, one is a Presbyterian and two Roman Catholics, who were most devoted in their labor of love, thinking never of their own danger, but anxious only to act the part of the good Samaritan. Such behavior under the circumstances merits all praise.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTIONISTS.

Contradiction of Official Reports.

The Popular Disaffection Rapidly Increasing.

Vienna, March 15.—Reports recently telegraphed from St. Petersburg, stating that General Loris Melikoff's appeal to the population has been eagerly responded to, is in complete contradiction of intelligence received through another channel, which represents general disaffection of the most respectable class of inhabitants as one of the worst features of the situation. What is called St. Petersburg society in the report referred to is not, properly speaking, Nihilists, but it is strongly opposed to the existing regime, which, under the present circumstances, comes practically to the same thing. St. Petersburg society, then, is not at all reassured by the appointment of Gen. Loris Melikoff, nor by that of other members of the Supreme Executive Commission. They inspire no confidence. They are amongst the very men who have hitherto acted as wire-pullers at St. Petersburg. They now stand in front of the Czar instead of behind, and this change of position, really unimportant in itself, is mistaken by many people for the Emperor's abdication. Nothing has been changed. The application of a radical, far-reaching remedy is needed, but the appointment of the Supreme Executive Commission is the reverse of that. It increases the power of the men by whom the evil itself has, to a great extent, been wrought, and that is why St Petersburg society expects nothing from it but further mischief. The emancipation of the serfs, due entirely to the initiative of the Czar, dates from the time when the object had not yet established their infamous character. It is well known the fact that the emperor's inclination for liberty and popular right was opposed, and successfully by many of those still not of his councillors. They closed forever the bright era that seemed to be opening for Russia at the beginning of Alexander's reign. The period from 1857 to 1862 is talked of by Russians as the most hopeful they have known. The Czar's emancipation of the peasantry had given the signal for a general impulse toward liberal and enlightened measures throughout the Empire. Works of education and science were published by subscription. Sunday schools were opened at Kief, Charkow, Poltowa, and in many towns a Russian translation of the gospel was propagated. In fact, it was a national movement to the direction of social and political reform. The Government hesitated for a time, but the presence of this unexpected manifestation, but their hesitation was not of long duration. From 1863 repression got the upper hand. The people demanded liberty. That the state of siege is, however, spreading in Russia is proved by the fact that the police have been greatly enlarged for night service. The importation of all explosive articles, or articles that might be used in the fabrication of explosives, has been prohibited. Railway trains are often stopped, and the gendarmes search and arrest individuals travelling with false passports.

At Warsaw, March 15.—The police arrested a meeting of Socialists here and captured two civil engineers, a medical student and thirteen artisans.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—Everything tends to show that Melikoff does not depend entirely on harsh measures. The system of wholesale arrests has been discontinued. There are individual arrests under special circumstances, but they include nobody of note. Signs of better times are noticeable in the greater freedom of the press.

The Swiat dwells on the harsh treatment of the students, and the Golos quotes Swiat's article, and says that the young men should be treated with more consideration.

THE HARTMANN AFFAIR.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—Two officials of the United States Embassy at Paris are expected to-day with documents explaining the refusal to extradite Hartmann, from a legal point of view. The Russian Government will be guided in its further conduct regarding the matter by the contents of these papers.

COLLIERY ON FIRE.

London, March 15.—Dixon's colliery, near Glasgow, is on fire from a gas explosion. Sixty persons more are out of employment. One death resulted.

JARKOFF'S ASSASSINATION.

Berlin, March 15.—A St. Petersburg correspondent writes:—Jarkoff, who was recently executed by Nihilists, worked as a compositor at the printing office of one Gorlika, and was at the same time working on the secret press of Narodnaia Voliar, and took part in distributing numbers. A police investigation made at Gorlika's resulted in the arrest of Jarkoff. While the latter was under arrest he stated that it pardoned he would give information concerning a number of printing rooms. He was accordingly liberated, and gave such information as led to the discovery of a second printing press, and the arrest of the parties concerned. The notice announcing the assassination of Jarkoff was very imperfectly printed by hands.

AUSTRIA AND ITALY.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

London, March 15.—A dispatch from Rome says:—Gen. Menabrea' stay in Rome, and his long conferences with the Foreign Minister, are thought to give importance to a statement of the Milan Perseveranza, to the effect that Austria has asked Germany how a hostile declaration on her part with respect to the Italian Irredentist movements would be regarded by her. The Perseveranza replies to the Fanfulla's denial of this by very categorical and earnest protestations of the truthfulness of the above statement, and it is stated that the War Minister has given to his Department the necessary orders for the sudden mobilization of the army.

SEDITIOUS PAPERS.

Vienna, March 15.—Sunday, being the birthday of the King of Italy, a proclamation, issued by the Italia Irredenta party, was circulated in Trieste, announcing that the volunteers intend to make a raid into Austria. The police seized 300 copies.

FRANCE.

RUPTURE WITH MADAGASCAR.

London, March 15.—A rupture has occurred between France and Madagascar. In consequence of a misunderstanding between the French and the Government of the Island the Consul hauled down his flag and appealed to his Government.

FERRY'S EDUCATIONAL BILL.

Paris, March 15.—The Senate debate took place on the second reading of Ferry's educational bill. Pellatin moved that the clause be reinserted. Premier De Freycinet said despite our wish for conciliation we have not again brought forward clause seven in a new form because we think the original draft was already compromised by the clause having been rejected, it only remains for us to apply existing laws." Pellatin's motion was rejected by 149 to 132, the entire bill as amended was adopted by 189 to 108. In consequence of De Freycinet's firm declaration, it is probable the Left will renounce their intended interpellation in the Chamber of Deputies. A meeting of the Left Centre resolved to demand application of the existing laws to religious congregations.

SPECIAL CABLE NEWS.

The Coming Elections—Military and Naval News—The Young Princes in Canada.

London, Eng., March 15.—Large sums of money are being speculated with on the result of the coming elections. However, it is difficult to ascertain definitely whether Beaconsfield's party or the Opposition are the greatest favorites, although several "monkeys" were offered at two to one on the former by a nobleman who is well known on the turf.

Very many of the officers who have recently returned from the Cape are volunteering for service in India.

The universal impression, outside military circles, is that Wolseley is to be given an appointment on the staff at the headquarters more to keep affairs quiet than anything else.

The Duke of Edinburgh is expected to re-commence his duties at the Admiralty as Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves early next week.

There was a rumor here this afternoon that Beaconsfield was not free from gout twinges. An attack of this malady, which the Premier is subject to, would, "at a moment like the present, be rather serious to his party." So said a prominent member of the Opposition.

It is believed that H. R. H. the Prince Leopold during his tour will be the guest of Lord Napier of Magdala, at Gibraltar, after which H. R. H. will proceed to Malta, where, if his health will permit, he will be right loyally entertained.

It is stated that the Bacchante, with the two young princes, Albert Edward and George Frederick, will be at Halifax, N.S., about a month or six weeks, when they will, in all probability, be granted leave for a run ashore, and it is not improbable that they may pay a hasty visit to their royal aunt at Ottawa.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

London, March 15.—In the House of Lords Lord Oranmore and Browne (Liberal Conservative) called attention to Lord Beaconsfield's letter to the Duke of Marlboro, and inquired whether it was not the duty of the Premier to take measures to stop the meetings held with the avowed object of inciting tenants to the non-payment of just debts.

Lord Beaconsfield said he thought it was unnecessary to apply to Parliament for fresh power governing Ireland, as he understood that the usual rent demonstrations were decreasing. The Peace Preservation Act will expire shortly, and the new Parliament will, according to circumstances, either repeal it, or, if necessary, grant fresh powers. His letter to the Duke of Marlboro is a letter from one friend to another, and he said it requires no explanation.

GREAT BRITAIN.

LORD DERBY'S SECESSION TO THE LIBERALS.

London, March 15.—Although its appearance has been for some time past predicted in political circles, the publication of a letter from Lord Derby, announcing that he proposes to act henceforth with the Liberals, has struck consternation into the Conservative ranks and produced corresponding exultation among the Liberals, who are delighted with the addition of so strong and prominent a recruit to their numbers. In his letter his lordship declares that the present situation of the two great parties of the country and the avowed character of the foreign policy of the Conservative leaders leave him no choice but to declare himself, however reluctantly, among the opponents of the latter. He further states that it is quite impossible for him to maintain an attitude of neutrality during the present crisis. The condition of affairs demands that every lover of his country should be a pronounced advocate of some policy, whatever it may be, which he conscientiously believes to be best adapted to secure the ends most to be desired. "Therefore," says his Lordship, "were I finally to withdraw myself from active participation in public affairs as conducted by the party with which I have formerly acted, and stand on one side as an unconcerned spectator of the great drama now passing before us, I should be evading a public duty and violating my own sense of personal obligation." The stand taken by His Lordship is commented upon in eminent Conservative circles as involving a regretable loss to the Conservative strength, on account of the fact of his well understood and predominate influence with conservatives of the middle and laboring classes. It is said the defection of no other one man in the party would be likely to draw so large and respectable a following, especially in Liverpool and other large cities in Lancashire.

LORD SALISBURY.

Lord Salisbury has sufficiently recovered from his late severe indisposition to enable him to go to the south of France, on which journey he started to-day, in the hope of receiving benefit from the milder temperature of that section.

THE STEAMER MONTANA.

London, March 15.—The receding tides lessen the chances of saving the steamer Montana. The cargo is being removed.

NEW ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

The Central Arctic Committee appointed May, 1881, as the time for the sailing of the new British Arctic expedition.

THE QUEEN.

Vienna, March 15.—It is announced that Queen Victoria will during the approaching sojourn on the continent meet the German Emperor at Baden or Wiesbaden.

CHUNG HOW'S FATE.

London, March 15.—The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"We understand that Chung How, late Ambassador to Russia, will not be beheaded. He is under sentence of death, but it is regarded as probable that the sentence will be commuted."

THE ELECTORAL CAMPAIGN.

London, March 15.—The electoral campaign is very active. Numerous Liberal and Conservative meetings were held in London and the provinces to-night.

GERMANY.

RELATIONS WITH ROME.

London, March 15.—A Berlin dispatch says the Pope having made a concession that the names of the priests appointed to livings are henceforth to be officially communicated by the Bishops to the secular authorities, peace between Berlin and the Vatican is become possible. About a thousand vacant livings will be refilled, and some vexatious clauses of the ecclesiastical laws will be repealed.

SHIPPING.

London, March 15.—Arrived, Holland.

Queenstown, March 15.—Arrived, 8S. Germanic.

London, March 15.—Arrived out, 8S. Circassia and 8S. Rhoda.

...Writing of Hartmann, the Constitutionnel publishes an article on extradition and mentions the case of the Bishop of Montauban, whose head was demanded by Henry VIII. The French King replied that the prelate had no head—an answer which so tickled Bluff King Hal that he allowed the matter to drop. In 1835 Prussia delivered up Bardon, accused of complicity in the Fieschi attempt, and in 1845 Switzerland took the same course with regard to another regicide, while in 1848 the French government delivered up the murderers of the Duc de Liechtenstein. In 1864 an attempt was made to blow up Napoleon III. on the Northern line, between Lille and Calais, and the extradition of two Frenchmen, the supposed authors, was demanded from Belgium. After some negotiation France withdrew her demand, and the Belgian Parliament changed its laws with the view of being able to hand over any malefactor in future attempting to take away the life of a foreign sovereign.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Ottawa, March 15 — Lieut.-Governor Robitaille, Sir W. B. Richards and Chief Justice Richards occupied seats on the floor of the Commons this afternoon during the motion and speeches concerning the death of Hon. Mr. Holton. The scene in the House was very touching. The friends of the deceased gentleman were deeply affected, and it seemed as though the presence of death in the Chamber, so to speak, and the "empty chair," were overpowering sensations. The sincerity of the grief, and the sincerity of the expressions of respect, were beyond doubt. The attendance of members at the funeral on Wednesday will be very large.

The debate on the Pacific Railway lands will be very protracted.

Rumors of a change in the leadership of the Opposition are abroad.

SUSPECTED PATRICIDE.

A Domestic Brawl that Ends in Murder.

Seeley's Bay, Ont., March 15.—This morning a farmer, named Silas M. Muller, of Pittsburg, living about two miles from here, came to his death under very suspicious circumstances. While his son was quarrelling with him about a sum of money, his daughter, the only other inmate of the house, ran to a neighbor for assistance. When she returned she found him bleeding from a wound in the head. The son went for Dr. Bowen, who, on arriving, found the old man dead. A coroner's inquest will be held.

A TUG CAPSIZED.

Fatal Termination to a Race Between Two Lake Mate—Three Lives Lost.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 15.—The tugs Gem and Lamont started at Fountain's wharf, Grand Haven, yesterday afternoon for a race to Ludington, 54 miles, a distance of 108 miles out and back. The Gem outlimed to Ludington. The Lamont was found to-day, canal, two miles north of Pentwater Lake Canal, by the George and Captain Palmer Hill are lost.

NEWS PARAGRAPHS.

DOMINION WIRELETS.

Passenger traffic on the railways is reported as light.

Mr. Justice Ogier has declared himself strongly in favor of the continuance of the Grand Jury system.

Eight new cases of small pox and one death were reported in Markham last week. There are now 29 cases in the township.

Samuel Dallimahm, conductor on a freight train, was killed by being struck by a low bridge and knocked between the cars, near St. John, N. B.

John O'Brien, a Toronto laborer, was leaving his home for his work yesterday morning, when in the act of speaking to his wife he dropped dead.

His Excellency the Governor-General, accompanied by his staff and several of the guests staying at Rideau Hall, paid a visit yesterday to the Rideau Iron mines.

Beaneman & Co., contractors for canal section 53, and T. B. McNamee & Co., contractors for section 54, to-day advanced laborers' wages from $1 to $1 125 cents per day.

Father Dowd, of St. Patrick's Church, Montreal, descended from the pulpit on Sunday and the leaders of the Irish National Societies for abandoning the usual procession on St. Patrick's day this year.

At Ottawa, flags were flying yesterday at half mast from the Parliament buildings and all the hotels, out of respect to the memory of the late Mr. Holton. Mr. Mackenzie to-day forwarded to Montreal the contents of the lamented gentleman's desk.

At Princeton, Jeremiah Gowan, Esq., ex-Reeve of the Township of Blenheim, and one of the oldest and most esteemed residents of the village, and one of the earliest settlers in the county, having settled there in 1820, died suddenly at his residence yesterday morning, aged 78.

Public notice is given that the Attorney General of Ontario is of the opinion that the name of some locality in the Province of Ontario or the name of the Province itself should constitute part of the name of all companies incorporated under Ontario letters patents. Applicants for charters of incorporation are therefore instructed to govern themselves accordingly.

The Famine in Persia

A private letter received by a Detroit lady from Miss Dean, the well-known missionary at Ked Jan, Persia, bearing date January 15, gives a terrible account of the famine now prevailing in Oroomiah and other northwestern districts of that country. The calamity appears to be separated by the fact that, as in the case of Ireland, the food-producing power of the stricken districts is amply adequate to meet the wants of the victims of official avarice. The governor of Oroomiah, who came into power last fall, seems to be an eastern despot of the worst type. Heartless, tyrannical, and grasping to the last degree, he has grown rich while his subjects were starving. A few poor people once appealed to him for relief, but he calmly replied, "You have not eaten your children yet." About Christmas time a committee of the Christian residents of Oroomiah drew up an address to the charitable throughout the world, asking aid for their starving neighbors. The circular was signed by a native Christian named Malek Yonan, and narrated at length the extent, nature and details of the famine. In the meantime the English and Americans of Oroomiah have opened a soup kitchen in the city, and forty or fifty individuals are being fed every day. All such effort is, however, confined to the foreign residents; for charity to the poor, according to the writer of the letter referred to, has no place in the Mussulman creed, and she urges that the present opportunity of practically demonstrating the superiority of the Christian religion be not allowed to pass without action on the part of the Christian public.

...A sad story is told by the New York papers of a family upon whom misfortune came thick and fast. The family consisted of a thrifty carriage painter named Dugan, his wife Honora and five children. The first blow came in the death of the three eldest children, which impaired the reason of the poor mother. While her husband was at work she wandered aimlessly about the streets with her boy and her babe in her arms, begging, and searching, she said, for her missing ones by turns. She was arrested and sent to Blackwell's Island as a vagrant, and her children with her. To the husband, who was searching for his wife, word came that she was in the lunatic asylum a raving maniac, and that the babe was dead. Of the boy he could learn nothing; before he could reclaim the unfortunate woman he fell out of a fourth floor window and broke his neck. The relatives of the poor woman are now trying to find the only survivor, the little boy of five years.

...Queen Victoria seems to have taken her cousin, Frederica of Hanover, entirely under her protecting wing, and has appointed an English lady as the Princess's lady in waiting. The Princess, who figures in Les Rois en Exil, was her father's most devoted attendant.

LONDON ONTARIO.

DEATH OF THE HON. LUTHER HAMILTON HOLTON.

The Hon. Mr. Holton died at the Russell House about one o'clock on Sunday morning. He had been in his usual apparently robust health up to the fatal hour. The Committee on Banking and Commerce held a session at eleven o'clock a. m. on Saturday, which he attended, and where he took an active part in the discussions, as was his habit. In the evening he attended a dinner given by the Hon. Mr. Bowell, Minister of Customs, and those who bade him good night when the party broke up little thought that he was within the shadow of the great darkness, and that that farewell was the last. After midnight, having retired to bed, he rang his bell and summoned the night porter to whom he complained of severe illness, and who he asked to send for a physician. It happened that there was no medical man in the hotel at the moment. The telephone was put into requisition to summon Dr. Grant, but when the porter returned a few minutes afterwards to Mr. Holton's room he found that life had ended.

The deceased gentlemen was born in South Leeds in 1817, and removed to Montreal at an early age, where he entered mercantile life, in which he was very successful. His public career began in 1854, when he was elected for Montreal to the Canadian Assembly, and sat until 1857. He was again elected in September, 1863, for the Victoria Division of Lower Canada, and resigned in 1868, upon taking office as Finance Minister in the Sandfield Macdonald-Dorion Administration. He was then elected for Chateauguay, and has ever since that time held a seat for that constituency in the general Parliament. He held office under the Brown-Dorion Administration during the few days of its existence in 1858, as Commissioner of Public Works. He sat in the Local House (by dual representation) for Montreal Centre, where he led the English wing of the Opposition from 1871 to 1874. Strong political views and predilections attached him to the original Reform party, and he continued to act with the gentlemen who guided its destinies and the destinies of its survivors in Ontario and Quebec up to the day of his lamented death.

On the accession of Mr. Mackenzie and his friends to power in 1873, it was generally expected that Mr. Holton would assume in some manner the responsibilities of office, but he did not do so. Whether from disinclination to take upon himself what might be open to him, but not in accordance with his desires and habit, or for other reasons, he remained foremost in the foremost ranks of the private members who supported Mr. Mackenzie's Government, and faithfully and effectually fought their battles upon his own lines of action with a true loyalty, sometimes perhaps with personal opinions not wholly in accord with the course of the responsible leaders. His constant attention to the work of the House and its routine, which never escaped him; his infrequent absence, and his accessibility and readiness at all times to advise upon the questions which were his specialty, were remarkable. He seldom addressed the House at much length, but his brief speeches always commanded respectful attention, even in the midst of the highest excitement, and he had the command of a terse, incisive, vigorous and invariably accurate style—the result of much culture and extensive reading of the best English authors—which was enunciated in clear, deep, sonorous, well modulated accents. His accurate and retentive memory enabled him to speak with an authority that was generally acknowledged on both sides of the House. He had logical powers of a high order, which served him in applying general principles to special cases, and seldom misled him; and he always exercised a powerful, and on the whole a restraining and conservative influence in the general legislation of the country, and the measures of his party. Notwithstanding the tenacity and inflexibility with which he advocated, in theory, certain political principles which were radical in tendency, his persuasions in that direction were rather those of sentiment and sympathy, than of practical application; for he was at the bottom of strong conservative tendencies, which he evinced throughout his Parliamentary life, in all legislation affecting private rights. He entertained his principles and advocated them without a trace of bitterness, and in private life his relations with gentlemen who were not in accord with his party were always courteous and kind, and in many cases cordial and affectionate.

Whatever he may have been in the earlier portions of his career, in later years his habits of mind and thought were rather judicial than controversial, and a wide and accurate knowledge of the procedure of the House, its precedents, and rules of order, gave him a magnified authority which greatly strengthened the hands of those with whom he acted, and was very seldom at fault. His range of general reading was extensive, especially of that which bore upon the great struggle for Parliamentary liberty which agitated England during the greater part of the 17th and 18th centuries. His mind was cast in a mould that put him in strong accord with the men who were the leaders of the Parliamentary party during the stormy years that closely preceded and immediately followed the overthrow of the Monarchy under Charles the First; and his conversation exhibited a close and thoughtful study of the causes and consequences of that momentous event. His genial temper and disposition made him in his hours of social intercourse and friendly relaxation a delightful and instructive companion. His loss to his party, now struggling in opposition, is truly irreparable. The loss of a ripe and wise and fair-minded adviser in Parliament is a most serious one to the whole House and the country. He will be long and sincerely mourned by hosts of friends, and it may be doubted if he had a political or personal enemy. Few men have been suddenly called upon to close their public or private record who had fewer pages that they might have wished to blot out than Luther Hamilton Holton.

"A WANDERING CANADIAN."

Mr. Mackenzie might be content with arrogating to himself all the talents and all the virtues to be found in Canada, but when he assumes the rôle of the Chesterfield of the House of Commons, he becomes just a little too grasping, too ambitious of distinction, and leaves it open to be said of him as of another great man whom he only resembles in his devotion to classical literature—"What a pity that Mackenzie should attempt to shine." Well he certainly does attempt to shine, and that too in a domain in which nature never intended him as a luminary. He started his caricature of a speech on the Budget with a compliment to his own distinguished Finance Minister, whose want of skill and foresight the people of Canada will long deplore. He thought that gentleman ought to be proud because the Government were unable to answer this magnificent effort of Sir Richard Cartwright's, and therefore they put up Sir Charles Tupper, the most abusive man in the House, in the estimation of Mr. Mackenzie, to deal out vituperation in place of argument. It would be interesting to ascertain how many of the members of the House who listened to this powerful address entertain the same views as Mr. Mackenzie. It was a speech not more remarkable for the completeness with which it reached its object, that of pricking the windy proletion of the ex Finance Minister, than for its eloquence, the happiness with which every thought was expressed, and the terseness and directness with which every winged word was sent home. But it was more remarkable still for the fact, apparent to all, that it may justly be considered extemporary, as most of the points sprang naturally and logically from the false statements and illogical conclusions of the gentleman to whom it was a most crushing reply. But Mr. Mackenzie seems to have a knack of calling that abuse which shows up their blundering extravagance in the management of the affairs of Canada, and the doubtful honor and morality which guided their administration. Unpalatable truths are in most cases the bitterest kind of abuse, and he has often been proved, the only kind of abuse in which Sir Charles Tupper ever indulges is that of applying the scalpel to Grit corruption—unmercifully it may be, but skilfully it must be admitted to be.

Now let us see how this Grit Dogberry, who prides himself upon his politeness, plays the part he voluntarily assumes. When the strabilions feeling consequent upon the honorable reception which awaited the visit of Sir John A. Macdonald in England, so contrary to Grit expectations and Grit predictions, could not be suppressed, he gives vent to this envy and bitter feeling in calling him, Sir John, a wandering Canadian, and the Premier of England, the Earl of Beaconsfield, an Emigrant Agent! Such terms, such insulting epithets, applied to Her Majesty's First Minister in Canada, and Her First Minister in England may be a specimen of Grit politeness, but it looks exceedingly like what all well informed people call vulgar impertinence. However, the votes of the Canadian Chesterfield must prevail, and henceforth our Canadian fellow subjects will deem it the correct thing to call an English Prime Minister an Emigrant Agent, when he interests himself in our affairs, and takes upon himself the duty of enlightening the people of Great Britain on Canadian matters, pointing out the advantages of this country as a field of immigration, its unbounded resources, and the superiority to the neighboring Republic in the promises and facilities it holds out to intending settlers.

The readers of the FREE PRESS will observe that there is a no inconsiderable difference introduced into the code of etiquette and courtesy on the authority of our Canadian Chesterfield, as respects our manner of speaking of an English Prime Minister, who may show himself so much of a friend to this country as to speak a word in its favor, to that he charges is equally noteworthy when he, Mr. Mackenzie, comes to teach us the style in which we ought to speak of a Canadian Prime Minister, who has been the recipient of more signal marks of Her Majesty's personal favor, than has ever been bestowed upon a Canadian Minister or a colonial minister before. In future when a Canadian of distinction becomes the guest of her Majesty or her Majesty's Prime Minister, we may speak of such a man as "a wanderer," that is "a vagrant," for the terms are synonymous. The Earl of Beaconsfield, therefore, according to the Mackenzie code of court etiquette, may be called an Emigrant Agent, and the Prime Minister of Canada, when he visits England on Canadian affairs, and receives distinguished marks of royal favor—favors which show the value the Sovereign places on his long and able services—may with propriety be called a vagrant, or wandering Canadian!! Will this serve to show the value of Mr. Mackenzie's denunciation of Sir Charles Tupper as an abusive speaker, and a man whose language is so coarse as to render his arguments unworthy of being answered by a refined and polished gentleman like himself?

"Everyone in the city," exclaims the London News of the 23rd of February, "is cheerful. A year ago most persons were sad. Firms which were bankrupt in the sense that their assets, if realized at prices then current, would not have equalled their liabilities, subsequently surmounted their threatened difficulties, and have now a balance on the right side; owners of plant, of public and other securities, even of land, have sat still and complacently seen the money value of their capital increase by surprising strides. Factories, works, mines and warehouses are now going concerns, and are valued as such. Everything has lately worn an appearance of cheerfulness and confidence."

DRIFTING IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

The Globe puts forth some figures indicating the condition of the Debt and the annual interest payable upon it, and asks the hackneyed question "Whither are we "Drifting" The Debt fifteen years ago was $75,728,641—the interest $5,221,022. In 1881 the Debt will be about $160,000,000, but the interest will be but $9,086,945. The fact is clear, then, that the rate of payment has largely decreased. In general terms the annual interest in proportion to the Debt in 1867 was as one to 15. To day it is but as one to 13. So far as that goes the "drift" is in the right direction. But, then, it may be said "true, yet we are actually paying nearly $4,000,000 a year more now than we were then." Yes; but the country is far better able to pay $9,000,000 now than it was $5,221,000 then; and especially so when it is borne in mind that the increase of debt has been for public works such as the Intercolonial Railway, the new Welland Canal and the Pacific Railway, which in two years will be completed to the extent of 700 miles. Of course, Mr. Cartwright's deficits to the extent of $8,000,000 has helped to swell the debt to a large extent. However, the "drift" that is going on to-day is in the direction of better times, and greater national efficiency.

The London Lancet makes this sage remark:—"The man who resolves not to take cold seldom does." The Lancet's theory is that "taking cold" is the result of a sufficient impression of cold to reduce the vital energy of nerve-centres presiding over the functions of certain organs; that sneezing and shivering are efforts of nature to rouse the dormant centres, and enable them to resume work, and avoid evil consequences, and that there is no more potent influence by which to restore vital energy than a strong and sustained effort of the will. No doubt there is much truth in this theory, and there is no month in all the twelve in which there is more need of putting it into say and every theory into practice which lessens the chances of cold-taking than March. Those who fortunately ward off sore-throat, cough, and catarrh all the rest of the year, often succumb during this month, which has usually fully sustained its reputation of being disagreeable and unwholesome. So that if all we need to do is to "resolve not to take cold," we had better make the resolution instantly, and keep it in mind as constantly as that it will have its legitimate influence upon our every-day life. Moreover, whoever feels a cold "coming on" should at once commence fighting it against its approach with vigorous determination, for it once the enemy gains a foothold it is not easily dislodged.

LOW PRICES OF PETROLEUM.

Bradford, Penn., March 11.—The low price of crude oil that has prevailed for a year or more has been attributed to two causes, one class of operators asserting that it was due to over production, another class declaring that the whole trouble was owing to the grasp the Standard Oil Company had on the oil interest, aided by the railroads. This latter class held that if the Standard Oil Company was shorn of certain privileges it possessed; forced to occupy a footing in dealing with the railroads and transporting lines on a level with other operating companies and pay as much per barrel as the majority of shippers, compelled to take oil to the fullest extent of its storage and pipeline capacity, the price of oil must necessarily advance until it was at a figure that would return a suitable profit to the producer. The actual production of petroleum in the markets of the world is 40,000 barrels a day. Careful calculation places the amount produced in the Pennsylvania regions to be above 60,000 barrels daily. This violation of the law of supply and demand has been permitted in by the producers of oil for years. It was this persistence in over production that more than any one thing enabled the Standard Oil Company to obtain the great power it wielded in the oil trade, as by constant manipulation the drill the producer became so crippled in resources that his interests fell an easy prey.

The Standard Company, as a consequence, gradually drifted toward dictatorship in the oil business. Gaining control of different branches of the trade, it finally had the great bulk of the business at its command, and transporting lines found it to their advantage to make carry-wards. He was one of the last, if I may use the expression, of the old party which used to meet years ago in the old Parliament, and I feel, to use the words of Edmund Burke, "What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue." Sir, I think that we ought to make this an exceptional case. I feel that were any member to rise to-day and enter into any discussion of importance he would see that empty chair, he would think of that kindly countenance, and he would feel with me that we ought to show respect to his memory by adjourning the business of the House to-day.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie said that every one would join heartily in the remarks made by the right hon. leader of the Government, and especially those who had felt the influence of the deceased, and knew his great personal qualities. It was impossible for those who had been associated with him at present fully to appreciate the loss they had undergone. Anything that could be done to convey a sense of the impression which the loss of his great merit should be done.

The hon. gentleman was proceeding, but was overcome with emotion.

Mr. Laurier said that from personal grounds, which perhaps in view of a national calamity ought not to prevail, he could speak in terms of lament at the death of the hon. member, whom he had known from early youth. From the time his acquaintance commenced their friendship had been uninterrupted, and the sessions were numerous in which his many noble qualities were exhibited. Even members who knew him only as such could appreciate those qualities—his lofty mind, which governed all his actions, and also his sense of duty. His vigor without bitterness, and the strong moderation with which he defended his position were also worthy of admiration. His private virtues were known to his friends to be equal to those public ones, and all his domestic virtues were of the highest character. He was now no more, and the best tribute that could be paid his memory was that of following along the line of the right hon. First Minister, who had well said that his loss would be felt as keenly by his opponents as by his friends. Although engaged all his life in party strife, he had not left an enemy behind him. All would mourn his loss, and all feel the presence to-day of an overpowering gloom, not alone for this session, but for many sessions to come. His fellow countryman of French origin would feel his loss as keenly as those of his own kindred. They, as Canadians, felt that one had departed from them who was a link between the many discordant elements in their midst. He was always regarded as one with themselves by the French. His life had been that of a man who would always have sided with the few against the many, and consequently he had often taken the part of the French Canadians against others. The hon. gentleman concluded by saying the loss caused by the death of the hon. gentleman was irreparable.

Mr. Wright said, as one who had met in Parliament with the hon. gentleman since 1863, he desired to lay a "sprig of Ottawa pine" upon his coffin. He was one whom he had always respected, admired and esteemed. He thought neither the House nor the country fully appreciated the loss of the latter, probably on account of its suddenness. The extent of the loss was very great, indeed. The House had suffered losses before, as in the case of the late Mr. D'Arcy Magee, and Sir George Cartier, and others, but the House, save in the former case, had never suffered such a shock as that now experienced. In most cases a warning was given, but this blow came fiercely and ruthlessly, and the loss entailed was one not easily to be repaired. As a representative of the rank and file of the Conservative party, he would say that they all joined in placing a wreath on his coffin with a regretful "farewell."

Hon. Mr. Langevin said he was unwilling to let the present occasion pass without adding his testimony to that of the Premier and Chief of the Opposition, to the sentiment of profound regret and grief which all experienced on hearing of the death of their late confrere. For more than a quarter of a century Mr. Holton was a member of Parliament, and during all that period he (Mr. Langevin) had the honor and pleasure of sitting with him, and though they were politically opposed, he had always found him able to meet his political adversaries next day, and shake hands as cordially as if there was no difference between them. Mr. Holton's death was doubtless a great loss to his party, but it was a still greater loss to the Province of Quebec, which was proud to claim him as one of her sons. He (Mr. Langevin) heartily endorsed what had been so well said by the Premier, and, like the latter, he regarded his sudden decease as a warning to all, but especially to those who were no longer young. He trusted that Mr. Holton's example would be followed by other members, so that it could be said of them when their turn came, as it was said of Mr. Holton, that they left no enemies behind.

Mr. Plumb said every member of the House felt that a great loss had been sustained and that the force of the calamity would be sufficient excuse for his entering into the expression of general mourning. A few hours only had passed since the deceased was in full health and vigor, and attending to his duties. He was in the Banking Committee a few hours ago, and exhibiting the resources of a well balanced mind and a brain full of resource. He (Mr. Plumb) had held an interview with the hon. gentleman not long before his death, in which he had referred to Sir George Cartier, and his passages of public life together with him. He was then apparently in the full vigour of health, and none would have supposed he was about to be called over to the great majority. He (Mr. Plumb) had lost in him a sincere friend, and one from whom he had received much kindly advice and instruction. His parliamentary knowledge, both in practice and history, was great, especially of the great struggle in the reign of Charles I. His knowledge and judicial character was felt by the House very deeply, and his loss made a gap hard to fill. He was sure that his wife of the House would fully sympathize with the other on this occasion. A deep sympathy would also be felt for the family of the hon. gentleman, and he was certain that no man had worn the white crown of a blameless life more than he did. Few men could have been found to go to their last account with as clear a record as the late Mr. Holton.

Mr. Cornoll said, as a member for Montreal and an intimate friend of the deceased, he desired to express his deep sorrow at the sudden death of his friend. Mr. Holton had died like a soldier at his post. He could personally testify to his goodness of heart and benevolence—a goodness of heart which led him to do his acts of kindness in such a manner as the world could not see them. French Canadians more than others had cause to regret his death. Mr. Holton had always shown himself their friend when it was in his power to do so. For this, French Canadians would always hold his memory in grateful remembrance.

Mr. Gault also said a few words of eulogy.

Mr. Richard said that ever since 1854 Mr. Holton had played an important part in public life. He had the rare tact of promulgating his opinions without giving offence.

Mr. Mousseau said that for the younger members of the House, Mr. Holton had always shown great political consideration and wisdom, and they, especially, would regret his loss. He, as a French Canadian, could bear testimony to his consideration for them.

Mr. Tasse said that if there was one title which Mr. Holton had earned more than another it was that of friend and counsellor of younger members of the House. He was always ready to aid by his advice all those from either side of the House who desired to consult him, and had done so with rare urbanity, which had endeared him to the unfailing love of the young members. The grief expressed by Sir John Macdonald on the present occasion recalled the touching incident of the Emperor of old, who not alone wept on the death of his rival but who raised a statute to him. He, too, as a French Canadian desired to reiterate the statements of his goodness to that nationality. His popularity with the people was evidenced by the fact that for many years he had represented a constituency which was composed by a two-thirds majority of French Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Macdougall referred to the fact that the old school class of politicians was passing away. He now saw but few faces of the old Parliament of Canada to which he belonged, and when he, as a young man was a colleague of the deceased. From 1849 to Confederation it had been his privilege to gather political knowledge from the gentleman whose loss they all deplored. He (Mr. Macdougall) had always coincided with the hon. member. The only period in which they had disagreed being that of Confederation. He thought the time was not fitted for it, and that the change would involve embarrassments and change. These apprehensions were not groundless. He, however, concurred in the change at last. His loss would fall on the House with the greatest weight. As a Parliamentary authority his place could not easily be filled. He thought that the career of the deceased should be a beacon light to the younger members of the House, and prove to them that the following of public duty would always be appreciated.

The House then adjourned at 4 p.m.

CANADIAN ITEMS.

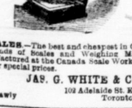
—News has been received in Hamilton of the death in South Africa of Mr. James Fearnside, of Fearnside & Kerr, commission merchants.

—There are twenty-five students in Toronto University, who are in several stages actively preparing for the degree of LL.B., 200 to the degree of M.B., and 400 to the degree of B.A.

—Yesterday morning a middle aged man, named John O'Brien, died suddenly at his lodging on Albert street, Toronto. Coroner Riddell was notified, but declined holding an inquest, as under the circumstances it is required that the coroner shall make an affidavit that he believes the deceased came to his death by foul means.

—A little girl named Annie Finnigan narrowly escaped death in Compton's cereal factory, Toronto, on Saturday afternoon. While attaching a belt to a sewing machine, at which she was working, her hair caught in the belting, and she was drawn to the shaft running along the ceiling. The foreman, with great presence of mind, cut the belt, and the girl fell heavily to the ground, sustaining some ugly bruises but no serious injuries.

—Intelligence has been received in Montreal of the death by an avalanche of snow, near Carson City, Nevada, of Samuel Kennedy and M. Lane, late of Argenteuil county, and serious injuries to one McFaul. While passing along the face of one of the mountains, where they were cutting wood, an avalanche came down, burying them in snow before the bodies were reached. Kennedy leaves a young wife and three children in Argenteuil.



(—The origin of the fire yesterday morning at Barrie is not known. The losses are estimated at: Mr. Garton, building, $2,800, insured for $1,000 in the London, Liverpool & Globe and $600 in the Queen's; L. P. The Rhymers' Squabble.

For the Free Press.

A mighty frolic appeared of late,
The favor'd clipping of some lucky fate;
For inclination of whose youthful mind
Show'd wit, good sense, and rhyming all combined.
The issues met, and consultation held
How to dispose of this their favorite child.
And soon from every or celestial love
Summon'd this worker to the realms above.
When one fair goddess rose above the rest,
And that the fourth with heavenly words address'd:
Sir, we permit thee to the realms below,
Bear this our sacred charge before you go.
With all those powers inner time by lyre.
And to our commands inner time by lyre.
Lest thou attempt to bar and cage into Sir,
For evils try made, while other poets s rum
Their weighty themes; such may strike them dumb.
They (ere that chant the most bewitching rhymes—
Their sound be matchless, and thy works sublime.
The youth departed; under the mortal throng,
Kept to their duties with appointed song;
But to our wonder, for his rapid flight
He quite forgotten with omni dire effect
From the fair daughters of celestial Jove,
A stream of nonsense turned from his brains.
Thirty two elements I need not here display—
Paris, March 1, 1880. OLD MAID.

BARBARA.

Barbara rose and drew up the blind very softly, though she need hardly have been so careful, since the Seven Sleepers never slumbered more profoundly than Flossie for the time being. It was by the quantity and not by the quality of their slumbers that the fairies Sweet distanced the younger Miss Divernock.

The morning was lovely. That exquisite strong utility of early day beautified, even glorified, the prospect which Barbara looked out upon. The dark tracery of the hard trees was so delicately defined against the crimson sky. The slender honey shafts of the aspiring steeples, had one of deepest purple yonder where the sun or heaven was brightening to rose-diamond. Clouds like painted dragons sailed lazily across the sky. There was such an air of fancied freedom upon all things that Barbara felt there was no one awake in the world but herself.

"Yes, I dare say it is wrong," she said to herself, softly, as she quietly began her toilet, "but I will go. Why should I not enjoy myself once in my life, for his sake? It will make me happier to have been him at the very last. Yes, it will be just one ray of light in the darkness of the years to come. Three years, three long years, at the very least. Oh love, how can I bear my life without you for three years!"

She was dressed in a quarter of an hour, and then she sat down at her own particular little table and wrote a few lines in pencil to Flossie:—

"DEAR FLOSS.—Tell my darling mother that I felt almost too unhappy to live this morning, and that only chance of consolation is to go down to Southampton, and see him for one little moment at the very last. I am safe by the parliamentary train, third class, and I shall be back sometime before dusk to-night. I have just enough money by me, I fancy, though I dare not to forgive me. She knows how dearly I love him. Your affectionate BARBARA."

This note she impaled upon the pincushion with a fishawl pin, and then she leaned for an instant, smiling at her own image in the glass half in sadness and half in jest.

"It seems such a desperate thing to do," she said to herself. "I feel almost as if I were going to elope."

She wore her plainest garments—a dark dress, a black cashmere jacket, a neat straw bonnet, and thick veil. It was in the days of bonnets and veils, when women's faces were not much in evidence as they are now. A gallantry as Barbara might pass you in the most unobserved if she wished to do so.

Barbara kneels way to Vauxhall peer—ede, and she is a splendid walker. There was nearly an hour for the walk, for Amherwell New Road and Kensington Road, and streets roads beyond. Away ... and streets roads beyond. Away ... the bridges the early morning, ... the brightening sky, finding as she ... that there was a good many people ... in the world besides herself. Just ... came to a station her courage ... and suddenly failed.

"Suppose he could think is a very unbecoming thing to do?" she ashed herself. "It is unlikely. Yes, I feel it is. A indysht to sit at home and quietly, all herself. Besides, if he ... excited to seize again, he might have to Camberwell. However much he ... to do at first, he might have changed it sometime."

These reflections came upon her at the foot of the squall wooden stairs leading up to the station. She paused, hesitated, and half inclined to turn back, when she ... and the shrick an engine. Her train, ... thought.

"I don't care what he may think of me," ... said, "I will see my darling once again. ... do I know but he will even come ... to me? How do I know that he will ... the Sikhs will let him him?"

Up quickly the stairs, and arriv ... the booking ... breathless, and took ... place in a little procession of shabbily ... travelers—shabby, but happily not ... or disreputable. A better kind of ... ers was the well-to-do than Luxury, ... in the pallid corner of a Pullman would imagine.

Barbara took her ticket, and waited for ... nearly half an hour, wandering in and ... it itself labouriously into the station ... minutes after her arrival on the platform. A few calves were the only homeliest ... it brimmed over with small children, ... ors and enthusiastic about the ex... with their parents and guardians ... laughter them small "Punting Billy"—children who looked upon a railway ... as a perpetual feast of gartlicoated ... peppermint drops, and who made the ... spirits savory with those compounds. ... turn found a corner in a woman of ... ies, a regular housekeeper ... Two Mexicans fought a duel with lances at Atoka, Indian Territory. Each was mounted on a strong horse and armed with a lasso, or rope with a slip noose at one end, such as is used in catching wild cattle. Starting at a signal, they rode warily toward each other, with lasso ready, and when 20 feet apart, threw them simultaneously. One missed, but his own neck was encircled by the noose of his adversary, and he was jerked from his horse so forcibly that he died within an hour.

LUCAN.

The announcement by wire on Saturday afternoon of the commitment of the prisoners that was received with little or no comments, it being a foregone conclusion in the public mind that a commitment would be the result of the investigation. There was, however, a report in circulation that Mr. Macmahon had sent out word to the friends of the prisoners, requesting them to be in readiness at the close of the examination to bail any of the parties who the magistrate would allow out on bail terms; but when it became known that such was not the case, there was a good deal of disappointment. The boy Johnny O'Connor was in the village on Saturday afternoon, and for a short time created quite a flutter amongst his juvenile companions. Some of them think his position an enviable one, such "bully times" as he has, riding around the country, and living like a city gentleman. Josh is their opinion of Johnny's life at present—all sunshine. As to a change of scene, some parties are uncharitable enough to say that the verdicts of the coroner's jury will be the chief argument in favor of taking the trial to Hamilton or Toronto; that this expression of the Lucan jury is a fair specimen of what might be expected from the yeomen of Middlesex when placed in the jury box at London. Insinuations of this kind are unfair to the men of Middlesex, and such remarks on the decision of the Coroner's Jury are uncalled for.

The Rev. Mr. Magahy, Incumbent of Holy Trinity Church, Lucan, has been the recipient of a load of oats, contributed by his parishioners, resident on the 4th and 5th con. line of Biddulph, for which generosity on their part he desires to return thanks. We say to those on the 2nd and 3rd con., why not do likewise.

The business men of the village are applying to the Postmaster-General for the establishment of a night mail east on the G. T. R. The arrangement, if carried out, would be specially beneficial to the great merchants and the bank, as the time of the daily mail leaving here at present renders the replies from Toronto and other points east from there extremely inconvenient.

We understand the Postmaster at Lucan has received instructions to report as to the feasibility of the undertaking.

A scarcity of firewood and ice are amongst the items of complaint on every hand.

THE NORTH-WEST BUDGET.

Lates News from Battleford Edmonton, Prince Albert, Etc.

The Saskatchewan mail arrived at Winnipeg on the 6th March, bringing with it the Saskatchewan Herald of Jan. 26 and Feb. 9, from which we clip the following items of news:—

BATTLEFORD AND VICINITY.

Lots of snow to the east and west of our favored valley.

Several of the Mounted Police, whose time will expire in the spring, intend to stay west and farm.

For the week ending Feb. 9, it has been just cold enough to prevent a thaw. Vernor's cold February don't reach us.

Application has been made for a license to put a ferry on the Assiniboine, at the mouth of the Scouts River.

During the past few weeks, several heavy consignments of merchandize have been shipped from Battleford to the west.

There has been great fatality amongst Indian horses at Eagle Hills, owing to the usual feeding grounds having been burned over last fall.

The supply of beaver skins in this market have this season proved inadequate to meet the local demand for mitts and caps. One of the police now leads the fashion in Eagle Hills marten. They are stylish.

The Finlayson Brothers have obtained the contract for cutting posts for the stockade around the barracks. They expect to get nearly the required number off the island in the Saskatchewan, opposite the barracks.

An insane Indian from Eagle Hill—nephew of the one who shot himself there some weeks ago—is in confinement at the barracks. His confinement there has never recovered from the nervous shock he sustained on his uncle's death.

One of the questions forcing itself on the attention of the people of the plains is what shall we do for shoes? Hitherto the buffalo have furnished the moccasins, but they are gone; and to-day there are many settlements where not a dressed skin fit for the purpose is to be had.

The Cypress mail arrived on the 4th Feb. The buffalo are going south, the Indians following, and getting meat enough to maintain themselves. Many of the Sioux have gone across the line. About four hundred Indians—chiefly those who were unable to go to the plains—are being fed daily at and near Fort Walsh.

On Saturday afternoon, January 24th, Red Pheasant and Strike-him-on-the-Back, accompanied by their councillors and a number of followers, waited upon Mr. Orde to discuss the situation, and to report that they had to work too hard for the amount of food he gave them. "Some had two hours' talk that really amounted to nothing, and ended in Mr Orde giving each of the chiefs a bag of flour, some bacon and tobacco.

The Beardy, the Duck Lake chief, promised, as he usually does when he is hungry, that he would have his reserve surveyed, and in return for this pledge the agent gave him some flour. Whether he will adhere to his promise is another thing. Sakahkotoob, a Fort Pitt chief, killed an ox belonging to the band, which set gave offence to his followers and caused so much feeling that he resigned his chieftainship. Makkyo, a chief of a band near Fort Pitt, died lately.

Mr. Fisher, at Batoche's old crossing, is already preparing for next season's crop, and has made some very desirable improvements in putting two scows on the river, by which a great saving of time will be effected. Each scow will now be laid out in the spring from the Elbow to the Fisher road will strike straight from the Elbow to Batoche's, about Duck Lake, and will, it is claimed, shorten the distance between that interesting outpost possibly be fully remunerated for their exertion in opening it up.

The collection, which was a generous one, was then made, after which a vote of thanks, to the lady collectors was moved by Mr. Church, seconded by Col. Shanly, and unimously carried.

The meeting was then closed by his Lordship pronouncing the benediction.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—The anniversary services in connection with the Pall Mall street Methodist Church were held on the Sunday last, large congregations being present. Last night the annual missionary meeting was held in the church, which was in every respect successful. The attendance was large, and the deepest interest was manifested in the proceedings. After the usual introductory services, Mr. Bourrow was called to the chair, and briefly addressed the meeting. An anthem by the choir, and the reading of the annual report by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Hodgson, was followed by an address from the Rev Mr. Kettlewell, of Delaware being very welcome. A number of addresses were then delivered by ministers of our Church, it therefore becomes the imperative duty of those who are in older and more favored districts to contribute as God enables them, in order that the privileges which they enjoy may be extended to those who in the Providence of God are now deprived of them."

Mr. W. J. Imlach, in seconding the resolution, was glad to have the privilege of advocating the cause of missions, and thought that the duty of assisting this work was not sufficiently well understood. He referred in glowing and pathetic language to the hardships endured by the early settlers in the back townships, and gave a number of anecdotes illustrative of the benefits of religious instruction. He concluded an earnest address by expressing the deep interest he himself felt in the work.

The resolution was unanimously carried, after which

Rev. G. G. Ballard, of St. Thomas, was then introduced. In referring to his first visit to this country, he said he was struck with a most peculiar noise, and was informed that it was the croaking of frogs. He had never before heard the croaking of frogs, and thought their croaking was quite out of place in that beautiful spring time. He had, however, heard the croaking of human beings almost since he was born, but felt that in this happy Dominion there was no cause for croaking. He proceeded to speak of the state of the Church in Ireland, and drew a pleasing contrast in the grand machinery for carrying on the work of the Church. He paid a glowing tribute to the energy and ability of the Bishop and the clergy, and the efficiency of the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. E. B. Reed. In eloquent and touching language he urged upon his hearers the motives which should actuate every true lover of Christ to assist in carrying the light to those who are sitting in darkness. He showed, also, the duty of supporting themselves to the work of propating souls for Christ, and possibly be fully remunerated for their exertion in opening it up. He concluded an able address by a brilliant peroration.

The collection, which was a generous one, was then made, after which a vote of thanks, to the lady collectors was moved by Mr. Church, seconded by Col. Shanly, and unimously carried.

The meeting was then closed by his Lordship pronouncing the benediction.

WORKINGMEN.—Before you begin your heavy spring work, after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Bilious or Spring Fever, or some other Spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month. Don't wait.—Burlington Hawkeye.

SCENE.—Dinner at a wealthy French merchant's. Prosperous advocate, alluding to his career:—"My first client was a consummate scoundrel, but he had money and got him off." After dinner enters a particular and important friend of the host, who presents him to the lawyer. "I do not need," he says, "to be presented to this gentleman. I gave him, I may say in I was his first client."

Latest Notes by Telegraph and Mail.

The British Cattle Market.

Week ending February 28th.

London, Monday, 23rd February.—Cattle at market, 2,400; sheep at market, 12,260. Best beef, 6½ to 9½ per lb.; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 7½ per lb. Best mutton, 9½ to 10½ per lb.; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 8½ per lb. The cattle trade has shown greater steadiness. Supplies are shorter, and there was a rather better demand. The receipts of beasts were only moderate; a fair number came to hand in good condition, but the general appearance of the stock left room for improvement. A rather healthier tone characterized the enquiry, and the tendency of prices was against the buyer. The sheep pens not so well filled, but market firmer.

Liverpool, Monday, 23rd February.—Cattle at market, 1,385; sheep at market, 4 992. Beef, 6½ to 8½ per lb. Mutton, 7½ to 9½ per lb. The supply of cattle was rather larger than on last Monday. The sheep supply was smaller. The demand slow for both cattle and sheep, at the full prices of last Monday for each.

Glasgow, Tuesday, 24th February.—Cattle at market, 1,240; sheep at market, 2,836. Best beef, 6½ to 8½ per lb; inferior and secondary, 5½ to 7½ per lb. Best mutton, 9½ to 10½ per lb; inferior and secondary, 7½ to 9½ per lb. Ordinary number of quality of cattle at market today, many of secondary and middling quality. Demand dullish and no alteration from last week. Short supply of sheep; quality generally good. All kinds in demand at prices rather higher than last week's.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

London, March 13.—This week's Economist says:—The rate of discount for bank bills, 60 days to 3 months is 2 to 3 per cent. and for trade bills, 60 days to 3 months, 3 to 3½ per cent. The stock markets are relapsing into a less excited state, as business is being curtailed. Both the enquiry of the money market and the approaching elections are already inducing operators to close outstanding accounts. The speculative strength has been visible throughout the week, and all the principal changes, whether in Government securities, railways, telegraphs, mining and manufacturing companies, or American markets, are downward. Even bank shares are lower, though the demand for money increases their profits, and might therefore well be expected to have acted favorably upon them. This week's traffic returns and the relapse in trans-Atlantic shares and produce markets have also tended to cast a shadow over business here. Apart from the Colonial and Indian stocks, during which firmness was partly sustained by the continued activity of various departments of trade show a tendency to decline. This is still most conspicuous in the iron trade, in which speculation reflected from America is very decidedly on the wane. Cattle, too, is weaker, which in a measure is due to over-increase in the number of goods to India finding slow sale, and to the great surplus of raw material sent from the United States. The corn market has been easier here, reflecting a drop of 4 or 5 cents per bushel on wheat in New York and a corresponding reduction in Liverpool early in the week, but there has since been a partial recovery in New York. Meanwhile it is gratifying to find that Australia is sending us large supplies out of her abundant harvests.

London, March 13, 12:30 p. m.—Atlantic and Great Western first, 26½; do. second, 27; New Jersey Central, 39; do. consols, 109; Erie, 46; Illinois Central, 105; Lake Shore, 103; Central, 52½; Reading, 35½; New York Central, 134½.

THE RECENT REDUCTION OF WOOL.

Some further particulars have been learned concerning the actions of the United States Customs authorities at St. Albans, Vt. In the early part of last month a large quantity of wool, valued at $18 000, and belonging to Mr. J. H. Moore, was seized at St. Albans by the Customs officers on the alleged under valuation.

It was stated by them that the wool which they seized was invoiced as "combing wool." It was really "clothing wool." A committee of experts was appointed to examine the wool, three by the owners and two by the officers, and after a thorough investigation it was declared that the wool was "combing" and not "clothing," and therefore Mr. Mooney was returned his property.

A few days ago a single lot of 40 bales consigned to the same gentleman was seized at the same place on the same charge. It was claimed that the wool was worth about 32c when it was worth more. The owner states that he can prove the wool to have been invoiced at full value from the price he paid for it, and from collateral evidence, and as 32c is a fair figure it would appear that the Customs authorities are at fault.

THE LIVE STOCK MARKET.

Montreal, March 12.—There was a good supply of milch cows at Viger market to-day, but the quality was only fair, choice commanding from $45 to $50, and common from $25 to $38 each. A small cow and calf of the Alderney breed sold for $40, and was considered cheap. Inferior beasts sold from $18 and $22 to $25 each. Very few fat cattle were offered, prices for which ranged from $4.50 to $5.50 per 100 lbs., one good sized bull calf bringing $7.50.

NEW YORK MARKET.

Trade in live stock generally on this forenoon was active, and values were firm, with an upward tendency in sheep. At Bristow Street Yards horned cattle sold at 9½c to 10c per lb., weights being from 1,250 to 1,400 lbs. Harsimores Cove Yards prices ranged from 8½c to 11c per lb., weights being from 1,200 to 1,500 lbs. Dressed beef allowed not; top steers obtained 27 lbs. net. Quality of the herds, as above reported, was good. Calves sold at $30 to $50 per head; bobs at 5c to 7c per lb; fair quality veals, 7½c to 9c per lb; sheep sold at $6.50 to $7.25 per 100 lbs. Lambs, 7½ to 7½c per lb; ewes, 6c per lb; on coarse quality flocks a mixed lot sold at 6½c per lb. The top lambs, as reported, ranged from coarse to choice, being in the aggregate good. There were no live hogs on sale. City dressed sold at 6c to 6½c per lb. Market pigs 7½c per lb.

WESTERN STOCK RAISERS.

The North-western Texas Stock Raisers' Association, which has been in session at Jacksborough, Texas, for the past few days, has adjourned. One hundred and fifty representative stockmen, residing between the Red and Colorado Rivers, and about twenty railroad live stock agents and commission men of St. Louis and Chicago, were present. They were unanimously in favor of the railroad railroad bridging, and agreed that unless the Texas roads lowered their shipping rates, owners would drive their cattle to Kansas, as was done prior to the construction of the roads. A combination was formed, and 1,000 carloads of stock were subscribed for shipment north over the road offering the best terms.

THE PIANO MAKERS' STRIKE.

New York, March 13.—There is a strong probability that there will be a prolonged contest between the piano manufacturers of this city and their men. On Monday morning will begin the greatest lock out of workmen that has ever occurred. Fully 4,500 piano makers are in the employ of the manufacturers, and every one is to be informed that there is no work; that the lock out has commenced. There seems to be no possibility of preventing it, as the men on a strike from Steinway's factory have resolved that they will not return to work except on their own terms, which are a general increase in all branches of 10 per cent., and 12 to 18 per cent. to varnishers and machinists. They are backed up by the Piano Makers' Union.

THE WESTERN WINTER WHEAT CROP.

Chicago, March 13.—The Times publishes comprehensive reports from eleven States in the North-west concerning the winter wheat crop, as follows:—Taken altogether, the estimate is a safe one that the increased yield in eleven States will be about sixty per cent. It is, however, to be taken into consideration that much depends upon the weather for the next three weeks. In nearly every locality the dearth of snow is deplored, but should no severe changes occur, the winter wheat crop will be a bountiful one.

General Notes.

A share of stock in a Providence, R.I., bank was transferred last Saturday by an agent for after remaining in one name since 1795.

The most determined of those Milwaukee millers who have been keeping their mills idle, awaiting lower prices for wheat or higher prices for flour, announce the intention of resuming operations during the coming week. There has been a better demand for some of the special brands in the local market, with indications of a slight improvement generally.

Owing to the mildness of the season eggs have been plentiful and cheap the past winter. The packers have lost money on their stock of lined eggs put up last summer. The consumption of eggs by the people of this country is enormous, and the New York city alone consumes about 3,000,000 many paid for eggs in that city alone is over $2,000,000. All which is eggstraordinary.

The New York Commercial Advertiser states that in one of the largest savings banks in Utica, which has nearly 16,000 depositors, the largest proportion are domestic servants, and the smallest are artists—which goes to show that there is more money made and saved by the wielders of the scrubbing brushes than by those who wear more delicate brushes are supported by the mahlstick. And there are thrifty clerks, too; for we find recorded the names of 852 persons who follow that avocation and have comfortable balances to their credit."

Messrs. Vipond & Hart, wholesale fruit dealers, who left for Ottawa yesterday for the purpose of interviewing the Finance Minister regarding a reduction of the tariff on grapes, have returned. They state that they were cordially received by Sir Leonard Tilley, who, on hearing their complaint, promised to consider the subject, and if it was as stated by the delegation a reduction would likely ensue. The effect of the proposed tax of two cents per pound would be to abolish American grapes from our market.—Montreal Post.

A Montreal telegram says:—A seizure has just been made by the Canadian Customs authorities here. About three years ago a valuable horse was brought in bond to an exhibition in London, Ont., from Kentucky, and the owner, wanting to keep it in the country, substituted in its stead another horse looking like it, which was taken to the States. Thomas McLaughlan, of Lowell, Mass., and long ago purchased the Kentucky horse in this market from a party living behind Brockville, and was about shipping it to the States again when the seizure was made. McLaughlan, of course, made the purchase in good faith, and representations are being made at Ottawa in his behalf.

A curious accident happened at the pumping station at Oil Centre, Pa., from where crude oil is pumped to Salamanca, fifteen miles away, the pressure on the pipe being 1,200 pounds to the square inch. On Wednesday night the pipe burst 150 feet away from where a jet of natural gas was conducted from a pipe-arth through oil passed out of the pump house and struck the gas light. Instantly before the pump could be stopped and the further supply of oil shut off the pumphouse was wrapped in flames, and the inmates had to fly for their lives. Before the fire could be controlled, four pumps, worth $8,000, and several hundred barrels of oil were destroyed.

Free Press Correspondence.

That Memorial Window.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

DEAR SIR,—I noticed a few days ago in your valuable paper, a letter signed by W. H. Whitehead, Esq., seeking to correct an error in your notice of the Memorial Window recently erected in St. Paul's, in memory of the late Rev. B. Bayly, who was loved and respected by all. Now, as I am certainly the Church Warden referred to, by him, I think it due to myself, as well as others in the congregation of Christ Church, to say a few words on the subject.

Had Mr. Whitehead thought proper to attend the congregational meeting (not vestry) which was called by Mrs. Whitehead, when the subject was freely discussed by all, he would not have placed all the odium on me, he would soon have been convinced that the Church Warden referred to was not the only one who had "conscientious scruples" against the pattern chosen, and adopted by Mrs. Whitehead and her friends. I am sure all would admire that beautiful subject (the Good Shepherd) in the school-room or in many other places, but it was introducing the figure (life size) into our place of worship, and little church, in the form of a memorial window, that was the object to.

There are those, sir, who still cherish the idea of seeing something erected in Christ Church in memory of Mr. Bayly which cannot offend the consciences of any.

To show that my conduct was approved of at the annual vestry meeting which followed, I may say it was again unanimously chosen the People's Church warden for the present year, but as I had served two years, I thought it best that some one who was not mingled up in this unhappy affair should take my place.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN TREE.

Late People's Churchwarden.

Hints to Emigrants.

To the Editor Free Press.

SIR.—As a great many people are intending to emigrate to Manitoba the coming season, I thought a few hints from one who had one year's experience here might be of interest. First come and secure your land, put in a small crop and build a house before bringing your family, as houses can't be had here, and camping out here in the spring is everything but pleasant for women and children. Everyone coming here should fetch a good yoke of oxen and as many cows as he can, a breeding sow and some poultry. They are a well-filled pork barrel. For all the above-named articles you will have to pay ruinous prices here the coming season. The people here, as a rule, have a faculty of asking the full value for every thing they have to sell. Yours, &c.,

Geo. Wood.

Honoring a Painstaking Man.

To Editor London Free Press.

DEAR SIR,—A small incident of a friendly character occurred to day on board Mr. Patterson's special freight, which left for Paris for Manitoba March 1. The drovers and those in charge of stock read an address and presented Mr. David Allison, who was in charge of the train, with a fine gold ring for the able and efficient manner in which he managed the train under difficulties. Mr. Allison replied in a few suitable words, expressing his entire surprise. He stated that had he known anything of our feeling with regard to him, he could and have done more than he did for the benefit of all concerned. The address which accompanied the gift was signed by the following:—John Thacker, Woodstock; W. McClevser, Brantford; A. McDonald, Burford; G. E. Jory, Exeter; A. McPhail, Galt; H. Ridgar, Paris; T. A. Shoolreed, Elora.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London, Eng."

..A revision of the distribution of taxes in Prussia shows that the house rent paid by an average family of five members in that country is:—In Berlin, $150; in Prussian cities, $48; in Hanoverian cities, $43; in towns of Silesia, $36; of Pomerania, $46; in Posen, $39, and in towns of eastern Prussia, $46. This points to very cheap living in Germany, outside of a few great cities. House rent in Berlin has declined enormously since 1875.

MIDDAY WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, March 16—1 a.m.—Indications for the Lower Lake ... cloudiness, rain or snow, followed by falling temperature.

INTERIM SESSIONS.—Before His Honor Judge Elliot yesterday, John Dawson, the alleged Delaware wife-beater, was brought up and arraigned. He pleaded "not guilty," and his trial was fixed for Wednesday, the 17th inst.

LOCAL LEGAL.—In Common Law Chambers at Toronto on Saturday the case of Tennant vs. Tennant came up for hearing, Mr. Hoskin, Q. C., moved to change the reference from Toronto to London. Macdonald contra. Order made.

DISORDERLY CHARACTERS.—Cornelius Ryan and Hattie Harvey, the latter a half-breed, were arrested in London East yesterday afternoon by County Constables Aldridge and Pope, for being disorderly characters. The couple, with others, have been acting in an indecent and disorderly manner in the vicinity of the Race Course for some time past. They have been remanded to appear before Squire Peters on Saturday next.

POLICE COURT PARAGRAPHS.—Before His Worship the P. M., yesterday, William O'Brien, a one-armed pensioner from the U. S. army, was made to pay a specific duty of $1 on the old rye he had absorbed on Saturday night. Robert Devine, charged by F. C. Crawford with being drunk and disorderly, was remanded until the 17th. The alleged copper boiler thieves, Trait and Henshaw, were bailed to appear on the 18th inst. Alfred Henderson, charged by Rebecca Henderson with assault, was discharged on payment of costs.

THE OIL BUSINESS.—Mr. John D. Noble, of Petrolia, leaves for Ottawa to-day for the purpose of consulting with the Government with regard to the oil business. Mr. J. R. Woodcock is there already for the same object. Mr. Noble is authorized to place the views both of producers and refiners on the all question before the Government, for the purpose of devising means to prevent explosions from improper oil, and suggesting trade regulations which will tend to prevent such oil being sold, and secure to the trade more uniform protection in the best sense as regards contents of packages and other matters.

FAMED THOUGH.—Sheriff McEwan, of Sandwich, accompanied by Constable Smith, of that town, passed through London, per G. W. R., yesterday for Kingston with three prisoners named Beatty, Hines and Nolan. The two latter are colored, and were log-ironed together. Beatty, who is a big-ironed slave, seemed completely broken down by the result of the trial. His wife, who had refused food of any kind since he was remanded for trial, has disappeared, and it is feared she may have suicided by drowning herself, through grief at her husband's fate.

PRESENTATION.—The employes of the London Oil Refining Company assembled together yesterday afternoon for the purpose of manifesting their regard for Mr. Sinclair Lotteridge, one of their number, who is about leaving for Hamilton. An address, breathing words of friendship, was then read to him from the employes, and during the delivery Mr. Lotteridge was requested to accept a handsome silver headed cane as a further token of the esteem entertained for him. The address was signed on behalf of his co-workers by Messrs. George Minshall and John Bradley.

CONFIRMATION.—The Lord Bishop of Huron paid a visit to Petrolia Parish on Sunday last, and met with an enthusiastic welcome from the church people of that place. His Lordship administered the rite of confirmation to over one hundred persons—sixty-six in St. John's Church, Wyoming, and forty-one in Christ Church, Petrolia. The Bishop addressed candidates in both churches on the nature of the solemn vows they were assuming, and also preached, once in Wyoming and twice in Petrolia, on the same day. The Rector of the parish, Rev. W. Hinde, appears to be doing a good work in this place, and the Bishop expressed himself as much pleased with the evidences of prosperity in every part of this now well-sustaining parish. Crowded congregations greeted His Lordship each service. The Bishop leaves again to-morrow for the purpose of holding confirmations in Bothwell and Thamesville on that day.

Many have wondered why, in this enlightened century, when every science has advanced to almost perfection, some one actuated by a desire to promote the health and welfare of his fellow-being, has not given to the world a medicine which would prove efficacious in the cure of diseases. To such we would say, that at last a remedy has been found in JOHNSTON'S COMPOUND EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA. It only requires a trial, to prove its unlimited extent.

HERE'S READING.—Prof. D. C. Bell, the well known elocutionist, gives one of his literary meetings at Victoria Hall to-night, when he will present a programme of rare excellence, including readings from Shakespeare, Tennyson, Twain, Leighton, Barham and others. Mr. Bell's long established reputation should assure him a crowded house.

THE WATER WORKS RE-AUDIT.

Alleged Crookedness and Absconsion of a Former Employe.

Interview with the Secretary—About $150 Missing.

AN ANSWER WITH A SIGNIFICANT MEANING—HOW THE MONEY WAS OBTAINED.

The brief announcement which appeared in our morning edition yesterday in reference to an alleged defalcation in the Water-works office, caused considerable excitement throughout the city, and was the main subject of conversation in business and other circles during the day. The majority of citizens had no difficulty in "placing their fingers," as it were, upon the person alleged to have committed the wrong-doing, and since the statement made has been fully corroborated, it is only fair to the other employes of the Board of Commissioners that the name of the delinquent should be given to the public.

THOMAS N. GREENE,

a man who on two or three occasions within the past ten years has had a bright future before him had he chosen to follow honestly and conscientiously the path laid out for him by his friends, is the culprit, and so far as the Auditors have been able to ascertain, his present which amount has been taken at various times and when the opportunity presented itself, as has been suggested. The first payment of money discovered by the Auditors and not accounted for in the Day Book or Ledger was by Messrs. Deacon & Rodgers, the second by Horner & Somerville, and so on. The discovery of the first payment was due to the fact that Greene had entered the item on the wrong side of the page of the book mentioned, and an examination of the other books revealed the information that this and other item had not been transferred to the pages of the cash book, and from there to the others mentioned.

GREENE LEFT ON WEDNESDAY NIGHT

for the other side, and the hasty flight was no doubt resolved upon in consequence of a casual conversation which he had with Mr. I. Danks, the Secretary, between twelve and one o'clock that day. It occurred in this way:—While Mr. Danks was on his way to dinner, he passed Mr. Geo. G. Magee and Mr. Greene, who were conversing in front of the Post Office. Mr. Danks bid them the time o' day, to which both responded. Greene, when Danks had gone a few yards, accosted him, and, as was his custom, enquired "how things were going in the office," and if "the Auditors had finished their work?" Mr. Danks replied:—"I believe they have got through the Ledger and Day Book and Accounts, and are now at the Ward Rolls." Mr. Greene, on hearing the latter statement, asked:—

"WHAT DO THEY WANT TO GO THROUGH THEM FOR?"

Mr. Danks replied:—"I suppose the Commissioners desire them to audit every book in connection with the office, and that they are carrying out their instructions." Mr. Greene did not offer to continue the conversation, but, as he said, "I don't suppose, Tom, they'll find much more than a cent or two astray in the ward books, and think will be most likely in the discounts." Greene did not unburden his mind to Mr. Danks in reply to this, and they separated immediately afterwards, each going about their business. It so happened that the first inaccuracy was discovered the same afternoon, but the Auditors, thinking it would right itself as they progressed, did not do more than cursorily draw the attention of Mr. Danks to the fact. Another payment, similarly discovered, was made later in the evening, caused Mr. Danks to recall to memory the items made by Mr. Greene several hours previous, but no action was taken by him that evening to acquaint Greene of the discovery. The next day he wrote a note to Greene, to the effect that he would like to see him when convenient. This gave to his mind, when the boy's return from dinner, Danks enquired if his father would soon be down. The boy replied that his father had gone away the night previous to the other side, on business, and that his mother did not know when he would return. That is the last that has been heard of him.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Tillsonburg has a circulating library.

The Sarnia Asylum opens this afternoon.

Mr. N. Currie, of Glencoe, has been on a visit to Ottawa.

Mr. Peter Conover, of Leamington, intends planting a peach orchard of 1,000 trees.

The programme for St. Patrick's concert at Mechanics' Hall to-morrow night will be found in another column.

Jake Knowdell, formerly a Tecumseh base ball player, will play with the Westerns, of Topeka, Kansas, this season.

Mrs. Raymond will conduct the concert at the Chapter House this evening under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Association.

A lazy person who never gets up early enough Sunday morning to attend divine service in the forenoon, says he belongs to the P. M. Church.

The Hamilton barber who fooled the London girl was named Wm. Breimer, and formerly worked for Mr. Tracy in this city. He is now in Chicago.

A number of the confiding people of Tilsonburg were defrauded of various small sums of money by an agent selling a receipt for artificial honey, the other day.

Mr. Wm. Saul and family, formerly of Colchester, but for the past five years residents of this city, have again removed to Colchester, where they will remain permanently in future.

Messrs. Teasdale, Donohue, John Gibson and McNab, of the Stratford Fire Department, visited London yesterday and brought with them the steam fire engine borrowed from the city a week ago.

The Fire, Water, unable to controvert the statements made in the FREE PRESS yesterday, regarding the beneficial effects of the N. P. in the manufacture of "Clippe a la Puzzle" by Mr. Wm. Bryce, "gives itself away," by informing its readers that some person in the city "won $6.80 the other night playing poker, and he never did that before the N. P. came in force." The staff of the "only religious" evidently requires reconstructing.

London Gospel Temperance Union.

Formation of a New Association—Election of Officers.

A few days ago mention was made in these columns of the preliminary steps taken to organize a Temperance Union in this city. Last night the organization was successfully carried out. Quite a large number of the friends of the temperance cause took part in the proceedings, which were held at Victoria Hall, with Mr. Peddle in the chair, and Mr. A. Brown officiating as secretary. After a short discussion the election of office-bearers was proceed with, resulting as follows:—President, Mr. John Green; First Vice, Mr. Fred. Willmott; Second do., Rev. J. Philp; Third do., Mr. M. Knowlton; Chaplain, Rev. D. Cameron; Cor. Sec., Mr. A. Brown; Fin. Sec., Mr. H. N. McEvoy; Treasurer, Mr. A. Simpson; Executive Committee, Messrs. Bell-Irving, Evans, A. March, C. Fairidge, Manville, Peddle, Cathcart, B. Sproston, Draywood, Lambkin, Wright and Howie. Messrs. Knowlton, McEvoy and Willmott were named a committee to draft constitution and by laws, to report a week hence. The Union starts under very favorable auspices.

A GOOD HOUSEWIFE.—The good housewife, when she is giving her house its spring renovating, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than many houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the disease arising from spring malaria and miasms, and she must know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines.—*Concord (N. DISPUTE ABOUT A HORSE.—Mr. C. J. Mills, of Mount Brydges, was arrested on Saturday last, and brought before Squire Peters, who remanded him till to-morrow, on the charge of stealing a horse. Mr. Hiram Flanigan, of Caradoc, is the complainant, and he alleges that the horse found in Mills' stable belonged to him. Mills insists that the animal belongs to him.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE LAST NIGHT,

Alley's Dry Goods Store Burned—Great Damage to Stock and Building—Fifty Valuable Pigeons Suffocated.

At twenty minutes to eight o'clock last night Constable Barton, while passing along Carling street near the Central Police Station, observed a glare of light in the rear of Mr. H. B. B. Alley's dry goods store, and at once made an inspection of the yard and back premises. The reflection observable from the windows in the second floor warranted him in giving an alarm, and very shortly after the firemen put in an appearance at the front of the store, on Dundas street and quickly laid two lines of hose. Just then Mr. Wastie arrived upon the scene, and noticing that the fire was burning furiously at the rear of the building, ordered one of the lines to be removed to that point. In consequence of this unavoidable delay, the fire gained considerable headway, and when the firemen commenced to play upon the building at the rear the flames had secured a firm hold upon the woodwork of the interior, and was making great headway through the centre of the store. At this juncture the water was let into the hose at the front of the store, and the large panes of glass in the doors were crashed into fragments instantly. The draft thus created caused a dense black smoke to issue from the apertures, and hindered the operations of the firemen considerably. But the copious streams of water thrown upon the burning pile were so well directed that the flames soon gave place to steam, and an inspection of the premises was ventured upon. From the manner in which the woodwork in the millinery room was seared, it was not a difficult matter to determine the locality of the fire. In this room, at the extreme north end of the building, a coal stove was found, which Mr. Alley says he left quite secure at 6.15 p.m., the hour at which he closed for the night. Previous to shutting up he noticed that the dampers of the stove were open, and fearing that too much draft might jeopardize the premises, he closed the dampers, and subsequently saw that the door and windows were secured. The next he heard regarding the place was from a messenger, who informed him of the fire. The origin is thus involved in mystery. The flames must have ascended with terrific fury up the stairway leading to the second story, as the wood-work at every step was seared to the depth of a quarter of an inch or more. At the head of the stairs, Mr. Alley had a large number of pigeon cotes, in which about fifty of the most valuable birds in Canada were kept. The stifling heat and dense smoke played sad havoc with them, and on examining the premises after the fire had been extinguished, every one of them were found lying dead on the floor. Two pairs of "carriers," a rare species, were valued at $50 a pair, while the "tumblers," and other breeds comprised a selection not surpassed in Canada. Mr. Alley's loss from this source, will not be less than $400. The building, owned by Mr. George G. Magee, was considerably wrecked. That gentleman gave it as his opinion that the insurance upon the same would cover the damage. Mr. Alley had a stock of goods estimated at between $7,000 and $8,000, the bulk of which has been rendered unsaleable through the smoke and fire which permeated every portion of the building. The insurances were as follows:—Imperial, $2,000, and British American $2,000, on fixtures, $300 in the Imperial Company—total, $5,000. Mr. Alley allowed a policy of $1,000 to lapse less than a month since. Luckily his new stock of goods, bought in Montreal last week, had not been removed from the station. The stores adjoining, Mr. T. J. McDonough to the east and Mrs. Galloway to the west did not suffer to any appreciable extent, and it is fortunate that the fire was so quickly mastered by the firemen.

A CALL FOR ASSISTANCE FROM STRATFORD.

At twenty minutes past twelve o'clock this morning an alarm was rung, consequent upon the receipt by Mayor Campbell and Chief Engineer Wastie of telegrams from Stratford, asking that an engine and men be sent there as soon as possible. The Chief ordered No. 1 steamer to be got ready, and selected Messrs. Reeves, Woonacott, W. Biddle and M. Gleeson to accompany him to that town by special train, which was in waiting at the G. T. R. depot. The men and engine were ready to leave in ten minutes after the message had been received. It was stated that a large fire was raging in the east of the town, and that four stores had been burned at the time of sending.

THE VENUE IN THE BIDDULPH CASES.

A telegram from Toronto yesterday says it is understood that the venue of the Biddulph murder case will be changed from London to that city and that Messrs. Emslie Irvine, Q. C., of Hamilton, and James Magee, of London, will be Crown prosecutors. It is probable that Mr. Dalton McCarthy, Q. C., and Mr. Nicholas Murphy, of this city, will be engaged with Messrs. Meredith and Meredith, of London, to defend the prisoners.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

An Assessment Question Considered—License Commissioners—Runaway Horse.

A joint committee meeting of the representatives of the Township of London and the village of London East was held in the Town Hall on Saturday afternoon. Reeve Watson occupied the chair, and there were present Deputy-Reeves Lilley and Nelson; Reeve Routledge, of London Township; Deputy-Reeves Marshall and Robinson, and Jas. Grant, Township Clerk. The question to be decided was as to what portion of lot 10, in Concession C, should be assessed to the village and township respectively. For some time past the assessors of each municipality have considered the lots in his department, and the people interested have been in a quandary as to when the taxes should be paid. The lots in question number about twenty-five, and are situated between the Great Western Railway and Grand Trunk Railway lines, south east of the car shops, in what is known as the Hutchinson property.

Mr. Marshall moved, seconded by Mr. Lilley, that Mr. J. McMillan, P. L. S., be instructed to survey and define the line between the east and west halves of lot 10, in concession "C," and give a statement showing the approximate proportion of each lots through which said line runs in the different surveys of said lots, lying respectively in the Township of London and the village of London East. Carried.

Mr. Bellton moved, seconded by Mr. Routledge, that the Engineer be requested to furnish the clerks of the two municipalities with a list showing the sub-lots in different surveys which belong to each municipality. Carried.

Adjourned.

The East Middlesex License Commissioners met on Saturday afternoon for the first time since their re-appointment. Mr. John Kennedy was elected chairman, and Mr. E. S. Jarvis secretary. It is stated to be the intention of the Commissioners this year to materially reduce the number of licenses

A horse belonging to Mr. Huston, of London East, ran away on Dundas street last night. The rig collided with the lamp post at the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets, and a short distance further on was overturned, throwing the horse. A young man, who was walking on the street, caught the lines and held the animal. It was then discovered that there was no occupant of the vehicle, and no one turned up to claim it. The buggy, which was damaged, was left on the street and the horse taken home.

COUNTY MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

Before Squire Peters.

John Kendrick appeared before the court to answer to the charge against him for wilfully and maliciously breaking a window, and doing damage to glass, the property of D. T. Lee, of London East. Prisoner pleaded guilty, stating drunkenness was the cause. The Magistrate imposed a fine of $2 and costs, to be paid forthwith; in default 30 days in prison. He was committed.

John Collins, jun., and Jeff. Sullivan, of Petersville, appeared to answer a charge laid against them by Jerry McDonald, of said village, for acting in a very improper manner and threatening to do injury to himself and property. For said offence the Court imposed a fine of $5 each and costs, or 30 days' imprisonment at hard labor.

Andrew Kearney was likewise committed from custody on promising to do better.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

Business Session Last Night.

Increasing the Salaries of City Officials—An Open-hearted Alderman—Miscellaneous Municipal Matters.

A meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held in the Council Chamber last night, the Mayor in the chair. Present, Ald. Pritchard, Meredith, Thompson, Cowan, Skinner, Taylor, Jones, Hocks, Milroy, Glass, Browne, Wilson, Wyatt, Sharman, Buckle, Boyd, Peel, Muirhead, Murray, and Hiscox. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS WERE READ

From John Tierney, asking permission to move his house on Albert street back, and raise the kitchen. Fire, Water & Gas.

From the Secretary of the Irish Benevolent Society, returning thanks for the grant of $1,000 towards the Irish Relief Fund. Fyled.

From George Gibbs, of Port Hope, asking the Council to assist him by a bonus in establishing a nut and bolt factory in this city, to employ from 25 to 75 men. Finance Committee.

From P. H. Attwood and eight others, asking a grant of $2 per week to Richard Clarke for three months, owing to his inability to work. Hospital and Relief Committee.

From S. A. Adams and others, praying that a new sewer be constructed on Dundas street, from Talbot to Bidout streets. Board of Works.

From James H. Fraser and others, asking that Dundas street, between William and Maitland streets, be watered. Fire, Water and Gas Committee.

From J. O'Donohue, asking permission to use fifty feet of the Carriage Hall on the Exhibition Grounds. Exhibition Committee.

From S. H. Graydon, drawing the attention of the Council to Dr. Wilkinson's claim of $25 for professional services. Finance Committee.

From F. Templar and W. Patton, asking to be appointed collectors of back taxes. Finance and Assessment Committee.

From a large number of pupils of the Collegiate Institute, asking that a sidewalk be laid down on Dufferin Avenue, between Clarence and Waterloo streets. Board of Works.

From J. M. Lawrence and others, drawing attention to the condition of South street, near the City Hospital. Board of Works.

FINANCE AND ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE.

Ald. Pritchard, Chairman, submitted the report of the above Committee, recommending that two hundred copies of the Auditors' report be printed; that accounts to the amount of $1,252.39 be paid; that no action be taken with reference to the petition of the Secretary of the Protestant Orphans' Home. The recommendations adopted at the meeting of the Committee with reference to the sale of Exhibition Grounds.

The items referring to the hospital and relief accounts were laid over.

The clause referring to the distance the Exhibition Grounds should be from the city was made to read "two miles from the City Hall."

The report was then adopted as amended.

BOARD OF WORKS.

Ald. Thompson submitted a report from this Committee, recommending the investigation of J. H. Robinson's claim; that the petitions of E. Gillett and W. McDonough be laid over; that the City Engineer draw up plans for heating the City Hall by steam; that specified streets be cleaned; that the sewer on Dundas street be repaired; that an estimate be obtained for repairing the roof of the City Hall; that steps be taken to have the street railway track repaired.

The report was committed, and after the first clause had been passed.

Ald. Jones moved, seconded by Ald. Taylor, that the street sprinkling be placed where the member of the ward on the Board of Works shall see fit.

Ald. Thompson pointed out that the Street Commissioner could fill the unused water tanks at a cost of $1, whereas the cost by any other means would be $17.

The clause in the report was adopted.

Ald. Browne at this stage demanded that better order be kept.

The report was then adopted.

FIRE, WATER AND GAS.

Ald. Pritchard drew the attention of the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Gas Committee to the necessity of immediate street watering.

Ald. Jones explained that the time had not expired for petitions for street watering. He would attend to the matter.

Ald. Murray denounced the system of street watering as a "regular fraud."

Ald. Glass asked why a fire engine had been loaned to Stratford without the sanction of the Council.

The Mayor explained that the Stratford engine had given out, and in response to a telegram he had sent one from this city.

SALARIES COMMITTEE.

Ald. Peel, Chairman, submitted a report from this committee recommending that the salary of the License Inspector be $900.

The report was committed.

Ald. Buckle and Skinner moved the adoption of the report.

Ald. Meredith and Taylor moved that the salary of the Inspector be $400.

The mover and seconder explained that Mr. Dundas' time would be fully occupied with his duties.

Ald. Skinner pointed out that to raise Mr. Dundas' salary for doing work that other officials had hitherto performed, would be a gross injustice.

Ald. Peel entertained similar opinions.

Ald. Glass moved, seconded by Ald. Sharman, that the matter be referred back to the committee, with a view to the consolidation of several of the offices.

The Chairman explained that the by-laws defined the duties of the Inspector, and there would be no necessity of discussing that matter.

Ald. Meredith's amendment resulted as follows:—

There being a tie, Ald. Pritchard (in the chair) voted yea.

That portion of the report laid over from last meeting was read.

Ald. Buckle moved, seconded by Ald. Hiscox, the salary of the Assessors be $450 each.

After a lengthy discussion the clause was adopted on the following division:—

NAYS—Hiscox, Milroy, Hocks and Buckle.

Ald. Meredith moved in amendment to the recommendation of the report, that Street Sweepmer's salary be $1,000. The mover said that after a thorough investigation the Fire, Water and Gas Committee had resolved to recommend an increase of salary. It had been ascertained that Mr. Wastie could better his circumstances by leaving London, and in looking around it was discovered that a successor could not be obtained at the amount asked. He was satisfied that Mr. Wastie would leave the city unless his salary was increased.

Ald. Murray seconded the amendment.

Ald. Glass opposed the amendment, on the grounds that Mr. Wastie was being sufficiently paid already. Many men could be got to take his place, and the man who voted for an increase were not worthy of a seat at the Board.

Ald. Jones saw many good reasons for an increase of the Chief Engineer's salary. Mr. Wastie had brought the Brigade to its present state of efficiency, and it was well known that his place could not be filled by a competent man at a similar salary.

Ald. Skinner thought Mr. Wastie sufficiently paid.

The Mayor said that the importance of Mr. Wastie's services was higher than some Aldermen around the Board thought. In the case of fire, hundreds of thousands of dollars depended on the judgment and skill of the Chief Engineer, and there was every reason why he should be well paid. To Mr. Wastie was due the efficient state of the Brigade, his mechanical genius was infinitely valuable to the city, in saving of repairs, &c. He could not be replaced.

Ald. Cowan favored the increase, and pointed out that the reduction of insurance rates had been owing to the efficiency of the Fire Brigade and the excellent supply of water. Mr. Wastie had spent his best years in the service of the city.

Ald. Peel favored the increase, believing that Mr. Wastie was the most efficient fireman in Canada.

The vote was then taken, and resulted in the carrying of Ald. Meredith's amendment on the following division:—

NAYS.—Ald. Skinner, Hiscox, Milroy, Glass, Buckle and Sharman.

Ald. Jones moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Wyatt, that the salary of the first driver be $450.

After the mover had explained his reasons for moving the increase of $50, the vote resulted in the carrying of the amendment.

The report was then adopted as recommended.

HOSPITAL AND RELIEF COMMITTEE.

Ald. Hiscox, Chairman, submitted the report of this Committee, recommending that no action be taken on the petition of Amos Pring; that accounts to the amount of $695 53 be paid. The report of the amount of relief distributed during the month was also embodied in the report.

Ald. Pritchard pointed out that a larger sum of cash had been distributed in No. 6 Ward during the past month than ever before. He thought there was something decidedly irregular.

Ald. Meredith said the Committee had adopted a new system of relief distribution.

Ald. Buckle explained why the outlay had been so large in No. 6 Ward. He thought the grumbling came with ill-grace from men who had favored every salary grab during the last few nights of meeting. The relief had been necessary, and he had given the orders.

Ald. Cowan suggested that Ald. Buckle be let down lightly.

Ald. Peel was pleased to know that such Christian men as Mr. Buckle sat around the Board.

Ald. Boyd justified the expenditure.

The report was then adopted.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Ald. Meredith submitted the report of this Committee, recommending that minor advertisements be inserted in but one paper, which was adopted.

THE PARK.

Ald. Milroy recommended, on behalf of the Park Committee, that $600 be granted for Park improvements.

Ald. Pritchard moved that but $250 be granted.

Ald. Cowan said $500 was the smallest amount ever asked from the Council. The average annual amount had been over $6,000.

Ald. Murray pointed out the manner in which Mr. Milroy was personally supervising the improvements, and thereby effecting a great saving.

Ald. Browne explained that after the mortgage payment from St. James' Park had been appropriated, that but $250 had been expended on the Park last year.

Ald. Milroy made an able appeal in support of the grant, and said he would give his entire attention to the Park this season.

The recommendation of the Committee was adopted.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Ald. Hiscox gave notice that he would move that the streets through the Exhibition Grounds be opened.

Ald. Thompson gave notice that he would move for a consideration of Lawrence Powers' salary, as bell ringer, by the Sala-ries Committee.

The Council then adjourned for two weeks.

SPECIAL CABLE NEWS.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Gen. Godeleff is expected to arrive at the headquarters of the Russian troops in Turkestan immediately. During his stay here he has been daily in communication with General Skobeleff, receiving his final instructions before taking up the important appointment on the staff in Turkestan.

London, Eng., March 19.—The Duke of Argyle has been working very frequently upon affairs in Afghanistan, and many are impressed with the idea that His Grace will get out of his depth, if not very careful, notwithstanding that he is given an immense amount of credit for making the very best use of his time in making himself acquainted with matters connected with India during his former tenure of office as Secretary of State of that Empire. Such at a time like the present may, it is presumed, take from him that popularity which he is known to possess in Scotland, and obtain for him the reverse.

Colonel Stanley, the Minister of War, apparently favors the opinion of Sir Garnet Wolseley that Dr. Russell must be in error in regard to the statements about the troops in Natal. The pen and sword warfare which is now the topic of conversation at all the military clubs, messes, &c., would by Colonel Stanley's showing weigh upon the question that it is "not these letters but those letters" which appeared in the Telegraph that Sir Garnet referred to and stigmatized as gross exaggerations.

London, March 19.—A most important survey has been completed of the intricate channels of the Straits of Magellan, and the Admiralty officials who are now engaged in this service hope to have the whole finished by the end of the year, whereby some additional amount of safety may be ensured to all vessels making this difficult and somewhat dangerous passage from the Pacific to the Coast of North and South America, instead of the longer voyage of rounding the Horn.

Since the Head Master of the Norwich Grammar School recently saw a visionary spirit in the library of Lord Orford's, at the latter's seat in Norfolk, and gave publicity thereto, there is scarcely a day passes that we do not hear of some ghost story cropping up in some remote part of our isles.

Dean Stanley is obdurate in regard to the Prince Imperial's monument in Westminster Abbey. He will not listen to the illiterate and vulgar longue of the great unwashed, but says the Committee has not I have decided that the monument shall be placed in the Abbey. We have the money, the monument is finished, and they (the Committee) and I have determined that our proposition shall be carried out.

Notwithstanding that the Roman Catholic priesthood are so severe in the Masonic brethren, the various lodges in the United Kingdom and Free Masons individually have up to the present moment, it is computed, contributed more than any other three societies put together towards aiding in the relief of the Irish peasantry.

There is every probability of considerable modifications and alterations in the system of School Board Inspectors being carried out shortly, whereby it is believed that a considerable number will be shelved.

IRELAND.

THE RELIEF MEASURES.

Dublin, March 19.—The Mansion House relief fund amounts to £120,300. The grants for relief now far exceeds the funds coming in.

THE NATIONAL LAND LEAGUE.

London, March 19.—The National Irish Land League has sent an appeal to all the local branches in Ireland to give Parnell a fitting welcome, and light bonfires on the hills and in towns throughout Ireland next Sunday evening.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE TURF.

London, March 19.—The Liverpool Spring Cup was to-day won by Lorillard's Parole, Machell's Advance second, Duke of Montrose's Strathconan third. Eleven ran. Parole was objected to on the ground of cruss, and was disqualified. The race was awarded to Machell's Advance. The Grand National steeple-chase at the Liverpool spring meeting was won by Duncan Kippen, with Lonsdale second and Downpatrick third. In the race for the Liverpool spring cup the judges award third place to Kingsmill's Pet.

London, March 19.—The time of the race for the Liverpool spring cup, to-day, was 2.16.

ADJOURNED.

The House of Commons adjourned until the 24th inst.

PARNELL AND THE PARLIAMENTARY CAMPAIGN.

London, March 19.—A dispatch from Queenstown says a deputation of Home Rule members of Parliament is now at that place awaiting the arrival of Mr. Parnell, who is expected to reach there to day or to-morrow by steamer from New York. The friends of Parnell have been actively at work preparing not only for his reception, but mapping out for him a very extensive campaign. He is announced to speak at different places on almost every afternoon and evening between now and the day of election.

The peasantry of Munster will light bonfires on the hilltops, Sunday night, in honor of Parnell.

A HOME RULE M. P. NEARLY CRUSHED TO DEATH.

London, March 19.—Joseph Cowen, a Home Rule member of Parliament, was crushed and severely injured while entering the Hall at Newcastle-on-Tyne to address his constituents.

AUSTRIA.

ITALIAN VESSELS CAPTURED.

Trieste, March 19.—An Austrian revenue cutter has seized two Italian trading vessels in the Dalmatian waters, because they surreptitiously conveyed six thousand breech-loading rifles and a quantity of ammunition, apparently destined for Albania or Herzegovina. The crews were arrested. This rather high-handed proceeding is justified in Government circles here on the ground that the disturbed condition of affairs in those provinces, which are now under Austrian control, might easily be influenced into revolution should means of fighting be put into the hands of a large number of the people. It is generally admitted, however, that the affair will scarcely tend to assuage the already strained relations between Italy and Austria.

FRANCE.

BRILLIANT DEBUT OF AN AMERICAN SINGER.

Paris, March 19.—Marie Van Scandt, a young American soprano, aged 19, made a very brilliant debut in the Mignon Opera Comique last night. Adeline Patti, Clara Louise Kellogg, and Christine Nellson were present.

THE PARIS MISSION.

Paris, March 19.—State Prince Orloff will be replaced as Ambassador to France by Gen. Ignatieff or Prince Labanoff.

London, March 18.—A Paris dispatch denies the report that Father Beckx, General of the Jesuits, has arrived in Paris.

AFGHANISTAN.

MARCHING ON GHUZNEE.

Cabul, March 19.—It is reported that twelve regiments of infantry and four of cavalry from Herat are marching on Ghuznee.

GERMANY.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Berlin, March 19.—It is stated that Prince Alexander of Hesse has arrived from St. Petersburg to complete the reconciliation of Russia and Germany.

TURKEY.

ON TRIAL.

Constantinople, March 19.—Field Marshall Foad Pasha is on trial before a special tribunal, charged with a conspiracy against the Sultan.

RUSSIA.

Doings of the Czar's Enemies.

THE TROUBLE WITH CHINA.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—It is authoritatively stated that Russia will decline to hold communications with the new Chinese Ambassador, until his Government ratifies the Livadia Treaty. It is also stated that the Chinese are already making inroads into Russian territory. The embroglio grows daily more complicated. The Government becoming alarmed at the recently developed friendship between Li Hung Chang and Rescondeski's Administration, the indications are that Russian encroachment in Central Asia is to suffer a serious check.

THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—It is reported that Prince Orloff will be invited to resign his position as Ambassador to Paris, and that he will not be replaced.

AN UNREASONABLE REQUEST.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—The Russian ambassador to Constantinople, who is now here, delays his departure for his post until the conclusion of the trial of Colonel Controeff's assassin. Should he be acquitted, or receive any other than the death penalty, Russia will discontinue diplomatic relations with Turkey. A dispatch from Constantinople says it is shown in evidence that the ball extracted from Commaroff's body does not fit the pistol found on the prisoner.

HARTMANN'S PLOT.

London, March 19.—One of the sensations of the day is the declarations of Hartmann, who, within a few days after his arrival here from Paris, when the French Government refused to surrender him to Russia under the extradition laws, feeling himself safe from all danger of arrest, freely sold to personal friends and others the whole story of his connection with the Moscow affair. He says that with the assistance of friends he planned and executed the explosion, which failed only because of mistakes on their part as to the train. Hartmann declares that he personally fired the fuse in which the electric battery and instruments were found, and conducted the arrangements, which were calculated to act as a blind to ward off suspicion. After the explosion he fled, and although his pursuers were often close upon his track he succeeded in getting out of the Czar's dominion. He refuses to divulge the slightest hint that might direct suspicion upon his associates. Most of whom, he says, are now at St. Petersburg working for the good cause, and intimates that if the Russian Government officials knew their names they would be considerably surprised. He glories in the prominence he has in the affair, and says he only regrets the failure of his well-laid plans. On being reminded that in case he had succeeded in blowing up the right train many innocent persons might have been killed or wounded, he replied that such a result would have been regretable, but in a struggle like that now going on in Russia, when open war is yet impossible, it is necessary to take those chances. Hartmann intends to start for the United States on Saturday, from which country he hopes to assist the Nihilists at home in various ways. He thinks it probable that the admission of his complicity in the Moscow affair will so enrage the Russian authorities with France, for not lifting him for further offence, that it may easily lead to the breaking off of diplomatic relations, if not to an open rupture between those countries.

THE SICK AND UNHAPPY CZARINA.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Well authenticated reports from the Winter Palace agree in stating that the Czarina is declining worse than any time since her return from Cannes. She is said to be suffering from deep mental anguish and nervousness and depression. Her Majesty partakes of but little food, and her sleep is broken and unrefreshing. She is said often to bemoan her fate to her intimate friends, and to allude in bitter terms to the misfortunes and anxieties of her life. The Czar is kept advised of his wife's condition, but expresses no sympathy and gives no advice.

SMOKING DEVIL-DOGFISH.

London, March 19.—The Globe of St. Petersburg publishes an article on the camp at Tchikislar during the last campaign which reveals a state of disorder and uncleanness that is almost incredible. The details are so horrible that no English paper could publish it. It is a noticeable fact that the Russian press, since the appointment of Gen. Melikoff, has been remarkably outspoken.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—The Minister of the Interior has again prohibited the Golos from publishing advertisements for two months.

ITALY.

A STORMY TIME IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Rome, March 19.—The debate in the Chamber of Deputies was continued yesterday. Signor Mancini having remarked that Bongni, Minister of Public Instruction in the Depretis Cabinet, had treated the Left with Olympian hauteur, he was called upon by the President of the Chamber to withdraw his language. A warm altercation ensued between Mancini and the President, the former maintaining that the expression he had used was not insulting, while the President persisted in calling Mancini to order and having the Presidential right respected. Finally Mancini announced that he relinquished the right to further address the House. Much excitement prevailed, during which the president quitted the chair. The members of the Right proceeded in a body to the semi-circle facing the Tribune and the ministers left the House. The Vice-President then declared the sitting suspended for a half hour. On the resumption of the proceedings Mancini said the unpleasant incident was due to a misunderstanding, and he never insulted the President. The Vice-President then declared the sitting closed, and expressed the hope that the President would resume his seat to-morrow.

THE IRREDENTA QUESTION.

Rome, March 19.—In the Chamber of Deputies Cavallini, of the Extreme Left, defended the Italia Irredenta, and said Austria was threatening Italy because, on account of her internal necessities, she had need of a war against Italy.

Premier Cairoli replied that the friendship between Italy and Austria is founded in respect for the treaties, and in the sentiments of duty. He said, we appreciate Austria's good will, and intend to maintain friendly relations.

Rome, March 19.—In the Chamber of Deputies, the Minister of the interior denied that the Ministry ever entertained a design against Albania.

Duelling in Virginia.

Richmond, Va., March 19.—Intelligence is received of a duel in Brunswick Co., between R. A. Raney, lawyer, and Richard Jolly, travelling salesman. The difficulty originated from a political dispute. The weapons were regular dueling pistols. At the first fire Jolly received a slight flesh wound in the arm while his ball cut off a lock of his antagonist's hair. While about to have a second shot, which was demanded by Jolly, a constable appeared and arrested the parties. They have been bailed.

The "Faxton" Safe.

Detroit, March 19.—The propeller Faxton reached Tawas City last night, having been over seven days out on a trip that takes but seven hours, usually. All on board were well and in good spirits.

SHIPPING.

New York, March 19.—Arrived, Wieland, from Hamburg.

Queenstown, March 19.—Arrived, Wisconsin.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Special from our own Correspondent.

Ottawa, March 19.—The Railway Committee met this morning and passed several bills. The Montreal & Province Line Bill was thrown out because it was astonishing upon the charter of the Montreal & Champlain Railway, but Sir Charles Tupper said that if the work of the latter was not vigorously pushed forward next year the Government would have to permit the Bill to pass.

The Government Bill on that subject proposes to extend the operations of the Act for the better prevention of crime "until the end of the now next ensuing session of Parliament."

A petition from the Bank of Ottawa has been presented in the Senate praying that the Bill to extend the Canada Guarantee Company's Act may not become a law.

The Immigration Committee met this morning, and Mr. Lowe gave a number of interesting statistics as to immigration. He stated that there were 10,000 immigrants from the United States last year.

A return to day shows that eleven persons claimed $4,500 for drawbacks on ship material, and obtained $2,895.

The Governor-General gave a dinner party to a number of members to night.

Senator Macpherson is about again.

FIRE IN FOREST VILLAGE.

From a Correspondent.

Forest, 18th March.—St. Patrick's Day shood quietly here until the alarm of fire was given at 11 30 p.m., when a blaze was seen to issue forth from the roof of a story and a half frame building on King street, situate in the most part of the village, between Mr. Polly's store and Messrs. Smith's Bank, occupied by Mr. McVean as a fruit and grocery store, owned by Mrs. Livingston, of your city. The fire originated from a defective flue. By the supernatural efforts of the neighbors the stock was pretty much removed, at the fire subsided and confined to the building in which it originated, leaving it a total wreck. Had there been any wind no one can tell what might have been the extent of the loss, as the town has no appliances for extinguishing fires. I must modify this, as the town well adjacent prevented the spread of this fire, with one of a few buckets secured on the spur of the moment. I say on the spur of the moment, because two citizens broke into Mr. Kilbourne's store and emptied the same of buckets, and afterwards sent a messenger to call him out of bed to coolly inform him that his store was broken open.

Mr. Morris, hardware merchant, next door to the fire, is a large sufferer by the hasty removal of his stock into the street. Mr. Drought's furniture store, being in danger from the fear of the premises on fire, was also emptied of its contents. Mr. McVean has a partial insurance in the Empire, of Toronto, which he might as well not have. Mr. Morris is insured in the Waterloo, and Mr. Drought in the Empire.

ALMOST A CREMATION.

Narrow Escape of the Remains of Recorder Sexton—The Mysterious Lot Down by a Rope.

Montreal, March 19.—A fire broke out this morning in the house occupied by late Recorder Sexton, through the drapery in the room where refreshments were laid out catching fire from the burning tapers around the catafalque. Although two policemen were in the room at the time, yet the flames befriended all those efforts to subdue them, and the whole interior of the dwelling, which is situated on St. Hilaire St., is completely gutted. Mrs. Sexton, Mrs. Fair, Mrs. Bellechasse and a servant girl, who were sleeping in the upper story, were lowered from a balcony in the rear, fifty feet, in their night dresses, by means of a rope, their hands being much lacerated in the operation. Mr. C. A. Bignell, a boarder in the house, succeeded in the rear and was rescued by the firemen. Mr. Sexton's remains were saved by the salvage corps with only a slight singeing. The house is owned by Mr. Desnoyer, Police Magistrate, whose loss will probably amount to $4,000. The furniture and effects were the property of Mrs. Bellechasse, who kept a boarding house. Her loss will exceed $5,000. Both landlord and tenant are insured. Mr. Fevar, the undertaker's, loss will amount to $600. Mr. Sexton's body has been removed to the City Hall, from which the funeral will take place to-morrow. Mrs. Sexton is almost crazy, and the deepest sympathy is felt for her.

AQUATIC.

Hanlan and Trickett — More About the Hop Bitter Race.

Toronto, March 19.—To day Hanlan received a telegram from Edward Trickett, as follows:—"Will go to England if you meet me there in July." To this Hanlan will reply:—"Impossible. I will write." Until Hanlan has rowed Courtney or Riley, on the 19th of May, it is impossible for him to do anything. He will be able to row against Trickett before January, and he will write saying so to Trickett. Soule has made a proposition to the oarsmen, much in accordance with the views expressed by Hanlan in the Walker House interview, though there are even material departures from what was then advanced. Hanlan says he is tired of negotiations that he has had with Soule being willing to put the $6,000 in Blaikie's hands. He merely will stipulate for one opponent, leaving the details to Blaikie. He will row at Baltimore, Philadelphia or Wassington. Hanlan expects his new boat to be here before long, and he has a paper shell lying in the Troy factory. In a day or two he will go into training in his skiff. He feels very strong, and should nothing go wrong he expects to to row faster this year than ever.

BRIGHT AND A UNITED EMPIRE.

Happily for the integrity of the British Empire, England possesses but few snak patriots as the Right Hon. John Bright. It is true that for the sake of party and party supremacy, he has for a few years past been in abeyance his opinions regarding the advantages that would accrue to Great Britain, from denuding her of all her possessions, except the two little islands of some hundred thousand square miles that constitute the Parent State, and reduce her to the condition of a Little Britain. He affects to believe that Canada and Australia have taken the first steps towards separation, and, if he so believe, he undoubtedly relishes at the prospect of throwing off what he holds a source of distasteful responsibility, without any corresponding advantage. Though Mr. Gladstone repudiates all desire for ontting the British dependencies adrift, thus admitting their willingness to retain power at the expense of their principles, yet the blunt and honest Quaker cannot always, like a more polished and practised politician, repress the opinions he holds, as the interests of the party demand.

An examination of his letter to Mr. Forbes will show, that he looks forward to the breaking up of the most powerful Empire of ancient or modern times, not only with calm indifference, but with evident satisfaction. He tells us plainly that he "has no belief in the maintenance of the Empire upon which the sun never sets," and he contemplates the disintegration as likely to promote the cotton trade of Manchester — a thing of far more importance in his eyes than the preservation of the Empire and the consolidation of its numerous members. But Mr. Bright is not a statesman. He is an orator and a merchant, and the country may rest assured that the destiny of Britain is not in his hands. He makes no secret of what he would have to use, and what he would no doubt hasten had he the power, and as Canada and Australia will not take his advice, or be obey his summons, why he would say to them, as Mr. Blake said to British Columbia, "Pack up your traps and go."

But it is strange that a gentleman who devotes the greater part of his time and attention to commercial pursuits should not yet discovered, that Canada under the system of taxing English goods a little higher than before, has nevertheless caused a large increase to the volume of English trade with this colony as re spects both English exports and imports. Now with a reasonably well-informed man like Mr. Bright, absolute experience ought to have more weight than mere theory, especially as this theory is now laid in doubt by many men quite as capable of judging of the economic aspect of the question as he is. Canadian statistics show, that under the action of the Tilley tariff, the trade with England, especially as respects our imports from that country, has greatly increased, and, therefore, Mr. Bright's calculations have not been borne out by the facts, and facts, after all, must settle the question.

Mr. Bright is correct on one point—the Canadians would scarcely regard England's commands to tax themselves in a peculiar direction, if, of this direction the country did not approve. From the Imperial authorities imposing a tax upon the colonies, and ordering them to impose certain taxes on themselves, designed to affect their trade relations in a way the colonial authorities believe to be injurious — is but a very short step, and yet the former lost Great Britain half a continent, and the adoption of the latter in our days would likely lose her three times the extent of territory sacrificed by Imperial blundering on the occasion alluded to. There can be no receding on our part from the position already gained, and Canada being now invested with the right to settle her own commercial policy, will not surrender the right unless some reorganization of the Empire should take place. The possession of this right and its judicious exercise are of all things under the sun the least likely to become the operative principle in bringing about separation. England might, and under such influences as those of Mr. Bright would say—Go; but the very concession that entails the calamitous right to coin and issue money which shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that no individual or corporation shall be allowed to issue any note or bill to pass as current money.

2. That the ruinous system of borrowing money abroad for the construction of public works shall be discontinued, and that in future all public works shall be paid for with Government money.

3. That the money of the country shall at the option of the holder be convertible into Government interest-bearing bonds, and that the proceeds of these shall only be used to pay the foreign duty of the country.

TRUSTEES IN A DILEMMA.

A news paragraph to the effect that Rev. Mr. Bray and his congregation had abandoned Zion Church, Montreal, and will for the future meet for religious services in a public hall, has its significance. For a long time the congregation has been oppressed with that dreadful incubus—a church debt, which has now reached $30,000. The salary for the pastor was unusually large—$4,000—it had been $5,000 which together with the matter of interest and current expenses made going to Zion Church a somewhat expensive luxury. This Montreal Church (speaking of it as a congregation) was not what it once was, before the split took place, and an influential section went off and started a similar interest for themselves, at what is now known as the Emmanuel Church. The natural effect of this was to throw upon those who remained an unusual burden, under which they struggled manfully for some time; but finding that matters, in a financial sense, were going from bad to worse, at last ceased their endeavors, determining to commence with a clean slate somewhere else. Empty churches are not good property to hold, and the Trustees may now find an increased difficulty in scraping together the necessary interest on obligations due, and in keeping the buildings weather-proof and in tenantable order. Some are found saying that the Rev. Mr. Bray is to blame, and that while Zion Church was a paying institution under Rev. Mr. Chapman, the peculiarities of Mr. Bray's teachings have depleted the congregation, and struck the chink in the collection plates with paralysis. It is no doubt, the fact, that Mr. Bray does not plough in the too oft-traversed furrows, but gives his congregation something to think over. This is troublesome, because the average attendant would prefer that all the thinking should be done for him, previous to his going home to his roast beef and horse-radish at or about 1.30 p. m. on Sundays. That is a sort of thing that Trustees cannot control. It may be their misfortune that the congregation has his upon a man who empties at once pews and plates, leaving them to foot the liabilities which inevitably accumulate against an expensively built and conducted church. No doubt it is hard on them. In the case of the celebrated Zion Church, at Montreal, one set went off and established a community of their own, leaving heavy liabilities on those that remained; those, in turn, frequenting the building no longer, but performing their devotions amid their financial exigencies at a public hall. All this has a serious significance.

James Payn, writing in the Nineteenth Century of "Sham Admiration in Literature," says that man "may not only go past the whole curriculum of a university education, but take high honors in it, without the least intellectual advantage beyond the acquisition of a few quotations. This is not, of course (good heavens!), to censure the classics have nothing to teach us in the way of poetical ideas, but simply to point out that the ordinary mind the acquisition of a poetical idea is very difficult, and when conveyed in a foreign language is impossible. If the same commonplace given to us in the form of a monstrous thought, of course, but not inaccurate—to the cultivation of Shakespeare and the old dramatists, or even to the more modern English poets and thinkers, he would certainly have got more out of them, though he would have missed the delicate suggestiveness of the Greek mind and the exquisite subtleties of the particle de. Having acquired these last, however, and not for nothing, it is not surprising that he should esteem them very highly, and being unable to popularize them at dinner parties and the like, he falls back upon praise of the classics generally."

The Government of Japan provides its people with Post Office Savings Banks as in Canada. Of these there were last year 596, an increase of 80 as compared with 1878, and of 576 as compared with 1876, the year of their establishment. The statistics show a rapid advance in other respects. The number of depositors in 1879 was 97,086, more than twice as many as the year before. The deposits amounted to $881,106 77, an increase of nearly fifty-five per centum. The amount of interest paid was $15,503 73, nearly thirty times as much as the year before. These figures speak well for the growing thrift of the Japanese and the careful management of the investments.

Under the heading "Don't Come," the Winnipeg Times gives advice to young men looking for soft jobs not to seek them in Manitoba. There are no sinecures there now, it says. There have been thousands of instances that could be cited of young men who have become disgusted and disheartened by disappointment, and to sit who have not capital or means of settling on the land, the cry of "Don't come" to Manitoba has become so general that young men capable of performing office work, and clerkships of all kinds, are far in excess of the demand. The learned professions, too, are becoming crowded beyond the requirements of the population.

A return has been called for by Mr. Farrow, showing the number of actions for seduction tried in the Courts of the several provinces for the past six years, the number in each year, &c. Upon the assumption that such actions are increasing, it is probable that some new legislation will be attempted regarding the subject generally. The proposal to make it a criminal offence, punishable with imprisonment, finds favor with many.

A correspondent of the Telegram reminds the Babbatarian prosecutors in Toronto that the friends of the noted, or notorious, D. L. K. Rine, gave him a benefit concert on Sunday afternoon in the Grand Opera House, at which 25 cents admission was charged, and also that Vice-Chancellor Blake took the chair. Oh! oh! Prodegious.

The Man Who Wounded Bismarck.

From the London Globe.

When Prince Bismarck, then simply Herr Von Bismarck Schonhausen, was a student at Gottingen, he was known for his boldness and undaunted courage. Freely abandoning himself to the rather rough pleasures of a German university life, he entered into them with the vigor so often displayed by him in graver matters. First in the "kneipe," the students' tavern, and in the "Fechtsaal," their fencing hall, he was but little seen in the colleges rooms. Listening to the lectures of the learned Professors. Dreaded on account of his acknowledged skill and prowess, there was hardly any one among his fellow students venturesome enough to measure swords with him But even here the modern Goliath found a David in the person of a young Westphalian, who, offended at Prince Bismarck's arrogant manners, challenged him, although he was vainly dissuaded on all sides from a contest with the sturdy Pomeranian nobleman. Herr Bindewald, the gentleman in question, stood his ground with such skill that he, after wearying his adversary by his skillful defence, finally dealt him a heavy blow, the signs of which are still discernible on the Chancellor's face. Long years passed before the two antagonists again met. While the one had risen to the highest rank, the other devoted himself to the welfare of his native town, which ultimately returned him to Parliament, where he, a strong representative of the Liberal party, found himself obliged to oppose the reactionary measures of Prince Bismarck, whose championship of the rights of the throne and altar had not yet been mitigated by his subsequent success in unification of his Fatherland. Herr Bindewald's death, occurring a few days ago,has vividly recalled the interesting incidents of his encounter with the leading statesman, which also formed the subject of a popular song, well-known among Germans.

Russia cannot avoid confronting the problem of popular education and reform. The Czar must face the moujik.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

Special Telegram to the Free Press.

Ottawa, March 19.—The Speaker took the chair at 3 p.m.

THE IRISH RELIEF GRANT.

Mr. Galt said he was in possession of a telegram from London which stated that the Canadian vote for the Irish relief was to be expended in the purchase of fishing nets and implements for the poor. He objected to this, and asked if the Government had any information.

Hon. Mr. Anglin said it was a good thing the matter had been brought up. If the telegram was correct, the Mansion House Committee of Dublin did not approve of this mode of distribution, but will take the money on those conditions if they must do so. He thought it was the intention of this Parliament that the money should be devoted to those who were actually in want of food.

Mr. McCraig said the money had been transmitted to the Secretary of State for the colonies, and he had every confidence that the money would be properly spent, and he thought the raising of the question was improper.

Sir S. L. Tilley said it was not improper at all. He had no information to give, as a member of the Government, except the cable message received by the Governor-General, which asked which of the two funds—the Mansion House Fund, or the other—the Canadian vote should be handed over to. He thought the Governmental answer was that the Government had no choice, and would not object if it was distributed between the two organizations.

Hon. Mr. Anglin said the main objection was that the money should be diverted from its original purpose, which was to relieve those famishing from want. The object of the British Government was, no doubt, a good one, and if the demand for food was not so great there would be no objection to the grant.

REPORTS AND PETITIONS.

Hon. Mr. Langevin presented the third report of the Committee on Railways.

Mr. Ryan moved that the petition of D. W. Hagarty, M.D., and others, a committee appointed on a public meeting held in Ottawa, praying that a committee be appointed to consider and report upon the advisability of taking steps to relieve the suffering pauperity of Ireland by the encouragement of Irish emigration to Manitoba and the North-west, and to report to the Government of Canada the most economical and speedy mode of such re-payment of any loan for the purpose above mentioned, be referred to the Committee of Immigration and Colonization. Motion withdrawn, as it was found out of order, inasmuch as it involved the outlay of public money.

Mr. Rose (Middlesex) complained that a return he had moved for as to confidential printing had not been properly made. Nothing more than the report of the Secretary of State had been brought down, while his motion required considerably more information.

THE TARIFF RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Weldon resumed the debate on the Tariff resolutions. He contended that the Provinces had been deceived in connection with the change, and that his city had not benefited by it. He thought a petition recently presented from that city against the tariff was considerable evidence that it was unpopular and that its working was unsatisfactory. The petition was no doubt got up by the Finance Minister and his friends if they could raise the ire of the National Policy, and had said it was not before the people, and that its discussion should be postponed until after the elections, on the 5th of June, and that the only issue before the electors was the relative merits of the conduct of Mr. Meredith and Mr. Mowat.

After recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following private bills passed Committee, and were read a third time:—

To amend and consolidate the Act incorporating "The Dominion Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry of Canada."

An Act to incorporate "The Mail Printing Company."

To amend "An Act to incorporate the Anchor Marine Insurance Company" (as amended by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce).

To amend the Act thirty sixth Victoria, chapter one hundred and eight, intituled, "An Act to grant additional powers to the Quebec and Gulf Ports Steamship Company."

The following were read a second time:

To remove doubts as to the true construction of section twelve of "The North Railway Company Act, 1877."

Respecting the Presidents, Directors and Company of the Bank of New Brunswick. (From the Senate.)

To incorporate the Souris and Rocky Mountains Railway Company.

Mr. McCarthy moved the second reading of a Bill to remove doubts as to the true construction of Section 12 of the Northern Railway Company, 1877.

Hon. Mr. Anglin said the Bill should be postponed.

Mr. McCarthy said the Bill was a necessity, and should be read a second time at once.

Mr. Cameron (Victoria) said the Bill was most objectionable, as it was one which had a tendency to make the House a Court to set aside the decisions of Courts of Law.

Mr. Masmillan said that there was a very great high handedness exhibited by the managing director, who controlled the whole matter, instead of being the servant of the stockholders.

Sir John Macdonald said that the Bill had better go to the Committee on Railways.

The Bill was read a second time.

Bills respecting the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of New Brunswick, and to incorporate the Souris & Rocky Mountains Railway.

THE TARIFF DEBATE.

Mr. Robertson (Hamilton) resuming, said that he had stated that it was an argument of the Opposition that Ontario had passed no longer in favor of the National Policy. He had shown that the National Policy was not the issue at stake. The challenge had been thrown out by the leader of the Opposition and his colleagues, and the Conservatives had wished to contest the election on that ground, but the Opposition would not contest the issue. In Hamilton a resolution had been passed affirming the principle, but the Opposition would not accept it, and the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman proceeded to read from the Hamilton Times by-gone days when the late Mr. Mackenzie, at the time of May 18th, referring to Murray's candidature, it had denounced as the "veriest nonsense that the idea that a man was an issue in the local election, and had added that Mr. Mowat, Mrs. Washington Hibbert had in her left hand, while making her inimitable curtsy, a large bouquet of violets arranged very prettily in the shape of a fan; while another lady, with a train of dark velvet stuff, had the legend embroidered on its large silver letters, length ways, so that all might read, the appropriate legend from an old song, 'In rural lovers' retreat the Vic.' Lady Musgrave's dress was another that attracted much attention from its beauty and quaintness Most of the ladies rigorously observed the Queen's wish that their feathers should be worn where they could be seen. It seems that this is not so difficult as I was led to suppose, and I am greatly relieved that by leaving the plume mounted on wire something after the fashion of a wreath, the fair wearer may depend on her own attractions, whether abundant or scanty, without the aid of borrowed locks.

There were just enough people present to make it a full Drawing room, and not enough to entail crowding or scuffling, unless people insisted upon it. There are always some who will push and hustle,even though there is not the slightest necessity for it. The arrangements were excellent, each room being only about half filled at a time, and there were more chairs than were made for them. Several ladies, however, preferred to stand all the time, that they might be to the fore the moment the barrier was opened.

In spite of there being good fires the rooms were rather chilly. A little shawl would be an immense comfort to bare shoulders, but there is no possibility of having it there if it be of a showy and pretty description. Some seem absolutely not to know what is expected of them, and even forgot to take off their right glove, which has now and then to be torn off by an official at the last moment. To the most self possessed woman in the world the moment of appearing for the first time in the august presence must be a nervous one. She should take every precaution to go through the ceremony as creditably as possible.

At the Queen's Drawing-room.

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

The Drawing-room on Friday went off exceedingly well. The only drawback was the weather, but even that subject have been worse; for at intervals there was brilliant sunshine, which was welcomed by every one except the ladies in the immediate vicinity of the windows of the reception rooms of the Palace. Light and sunshine are very delightful things as a rule, but not to a woman doubtful of her complexion and décolletée at midday; and light and sunshine you get with a vengeance in Buckingham Palace. Friday being mild and rather damp, complexions and shoulders were less tried than usual; very few fair ones had resorted to artificial means to heighten their charms. The glare from the long windows of the salons is positively cruel, outside in the garden would be indeed a boon. One is tempted to wish that this "morning performance" could, like others, be gone through with closed shutters or gas, or better still, wax candles.

There was a larger attendance than usual of Royalties; the august line even turned the corner, and the Prince of Wales was almost at the curve. The Queen looked exceedingly well, and returned the homage of the ladies who passed before her with the most gracious condescension. Before the ceremony began, her Majesty conversed for some time with the Russian Ambassador, evincing the deepest interest and concern. The Princess of Wales looked more charming than ever, and displayed her usual perfect taste in dress; and the handsome Princess Frederica was generally admired.

The dresses on the whole were very elegant and well chosen,though there were, as is always the case, one or two that made one wonder if the wearer had no friends. White was worn by many who were not debutantes, and while it always looks well when it is fresh. In many instances it was not only fresh but very handsome, figured velvets and brocades being favorite textures.

Miss Maynard and Miss Violet Hankey, two charming debutantes of opposite types, were considered to bear away the palm for beauty; and Mrs. Wheeler came in for a considerable share of admiration. Miss Wombwell, daughter of Sir George and Lady Julia Wombwell, was also greatly admired, and generally looked well. Mrs. Brooks' diamonds and laces were worthy of notice—indeed, her dress altogether was excellent taste. Lady Constance Milnes, Mrs. Robert Webster (whose dance the same evening was one of the principal events of the season), Miss Lowther, all looked well in a quaint dress and train of rich gold plush, a sort of old-gold color and shape, and carried pretthily in the shape of a fan; while another lady, with a train of dark velvet stuff, had the legend embroidered on its large silver letters, length ways, so that all might read, the appropriate legend from an old song, 'In rural lovers' retreat the Vic.' Lady Musgrave's dress was another that attracted much attention from its beauty and quaintness Most of the ladies rigorously observed the Queen's wish that their feathers should be worn where they could be seen. It seems that this is not so difficult as I was led to suppose, and I am greatly relieved that by leaving the plume mounted on wire something after the fashion of a wreath, the fair wearer may depend on her own attractions, whether abundant or scanty, without the aid of borrowed locks.

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.

TO THE

Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:

This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America.

Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods, figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profit. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily see the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

That Silly Girl Again.

To R. C. F., Dalhousie.

Poor R. C. F., your eloquence
Lacked the necessary sense;
Put your talents to better use,
And you will blush with less abuse.
Talk itself we girls care do,
Despised we'd be if we were to Prove to them his ignorance.
And indeed be for instance
Go to school and study well.
For in the future (who can tell?)
You may "a famous poet" be,
Stranger things we "sometimes" see.
For the present I'd advise you
To shut village lore be true;
To her your remarks ere of address.
That you may find "true happiness."
Unfortunate is P. T. F.
But to close not abuse my little ear;
I will say nothing of woman's rights;
I'm tired of all such horrid frights.
Besides, what's the use?
I would only man's tongue loose.
Yes, P. T. F., my duties I'd strive to do;
The Old Maids' duties are but few.
They are quite sufficient for me.
And collected I ever will be.

BARBARA.

"I don't think Captain Leland would like us to take another boarder," said Mrs. Trevornock.

"Perhaps not; but it's rather hard that Captain Leland's jealousy should be allowed to stand in my light," protested Flossie.

This ill-used damsel found her wishes over-ruled by the majority. No further advertisement, from this one particular lady, with a house larger than she required, appeared in the columns of the Times, and the Trevornocks managed to fight the battle of daily life without the aid of a boarder. The house looked bright and pretty, the little maid-of-all-work received her wages on quarter day, the tax-collector went away satisfied, and the surrounding tradesmen had no right to speak evil of Mrs. Trevornock. If the dinners at 20 South Lacs were stinted—or sometimes even non-existent—the teas were luxurious. The little servant was red and chubby, though there were days on which no butcher's-meat crossed the threshold of her mistress's door.

Captain Leland had proved, so far, an excellent correspondent. Every mail brought Barbara a letter, in which, on the dimmest of paper, the captain related all that he had done, and discoursed eloquently upon all he felt, in a language which is the delight of lovers, and the wonder of everybody else.

Barbara read and re-read the flimsy letters, wept over them a little in secret, and replied in letters of even greater length, lavishing the treasures of her young soul upon her far away lover, having nothing to tell him but her love, and telling that with the reason of an undeveloped poet.

The happiest days of her eventless life were those on which she wrote to her betrothed. Those days were held sacred in the little household. Mother and sister respected her privacy. Bab must have the front parlor all to herself, they said. Bab was writing her lifelong letter. And on such days Flossie and her mother would devote themselves to some special task of tidying or mending, and to ease might be. They would look over the half-forgotten treasures of some up-stairs cupboard, as various as the contents of a marine store dealer's shop. They would arrange and classify ancient rubbish, and waste time with assemblages of being intensely industrious. Only by such innocent self-deceptions, unconscious as the delusions of lunacy, could the hours pass of a monotonous life have sat so lightly on these simple servants' shoulders.

One bright July morning Mrs. Trevornock sat down to breakfast with a countenance of unusual gravity. She breathed a gentle sigh as she poured out the tea, and she watched Flossie's bold onslaught on the four ounce pat of butter with a gaze of mild reproachfulness.

"My dears," she said, presently, "I have got another tax."

"Oh, mother dear, don't say that!" cried Bab. "I thought we were clear till next Christmas."

"So did I, Bab, when I told you so," sighed Mrs. Trevornock. "But you know I always have been stupid about those tax papers—"

"Frightfully dense, poor dear ma, I admit," interjected Flossie.

"And I had quite overlooked this one. It's the Queen's, I believe, and it's rather heavy."

"Queen's, indeed!" ejaculated Flossie. "Why can't Victoria carry on her affairs without worrying us? We don't go to Windsor Castle to worry her. It's a ridiculously one sided arrangement."

"It comes to one pound seventeen and sixpence for the Leaf year," said Mrs. Trevornock; "and if it's not paid by next Thursday, I shall be summoned."

Here Mrs. Trevornock became suddenly absorbed in the tea pot, which wanted more water; and when she had gazed into the tea pot for some moments, as if intent upon finding an angry in the leaves, she lifted her eyes and looked with mock appeal at Flossie.

"Oh," cried that young lady, with an impatient shrug of her shoulders, "I know what you mean, ma, and you might just as well speak out. You want me to go and see if I can get the money out of Mr T."

This was Flossie's way of speaking of her father.

"I thought you and Barbara might call on him this morning, dear."

"I and Barbara!" exclaimed Flossie. "You might just as well say I and an umbrella. Bab is no more use than one. She doesn't back me up by so much as a word, but only sits and looks a picture of placid loveliness. However, I suppose we must go and see what can be done. It's lucky you've one daughter who's not afraid to speak her mind. I should never get a six pence out of Mr. T. if I didn't make him shake in his shoes."

Half an hour after breakfast the two girls set out upon their expedition. Fonds were at a low ebb in South Lane, too low even to allow the cheap luxury of a Waterloo omnibus; but the distance was nothing of a walk to Gray's Inn on a fine fresh summer morning, when the shops in the Walworth Road looked their brightest, and there was a gayety in the atmosphere as of unseen birds and butterflies. There was a good deal of dust at the corners of gy streets, but the newly watered roads breathed a refreshing coolness, suggestive of woodland streams. Gray's Inn, with its grassy lawns and famous catalpa-tree, planted by Francis Bacon, endowed a tavern of greenery on this July morning.

"What a nice, shady, sober old place it is!" cried Flossie. "I always wish we had chambers here. It would be so handy for the theatres."

The accountancy boy opened the door, and Mr. Manford emerged as usual from his adjacent den, eager-eyed and politely officious.

"I think you will have to wait a few minutes, Miss Trevornock," he said addressing Barbara—he always ignored Flossie. "Your papa has a client with him."

"The hells shall be rung, and the mass shall be sung," murmured Flossie, to whom an actual client in her father's office seemed a phenomenon worthy of note.

"I believe he's just going," said Manford. "I'll announce you, if you like, and that will hurry him."

Before Barbara could say no, the articled clerk opened the door and announced, "Miss Trevornock and Miss Flora."

A tall, ungainly looking man was standing in front of the office table talking to Mr. Trevornock.

Barbara thought him the awkwardest man she had ever seen. He was largely made and broad shouldered, but hourly. All the angles of his figure were prominently defined under his loose gray garments. His clothes seemed of coarser fabric than the stuffs commonly worn in those days. He had large features, not bad in outline, but ruggedly ugly. His face was weather beaten; his coarse hair and whiskers were of dull brown mixed with duller gray. His shaggy brow made a pent-house over his small gray eyes. He wore no gloves. His boots were thick and clumsy, and he wore a very indifferent hat flung carelessly on the back of his head.

"A very common kind of person," thought Flossie, dropping into a chair, after saluting her father with a pert little nod.

The client looked round at the entrance of the young ladies, and hastily removed his hat, which appeared to be a repository for old gloves and between documents.

"I think that's all, Trevornock," he said. "You perfectly understand me? I'll stand no nonsense from those people."

"I should have known what without your telling me," said the lawyer, without looking up from his desk. "You never do stand nonsense of that kind."

OUR ENGLISH LETTER.

Special Correspondence of the Free Press.

March 1st, 1880.—Since last I wrote you many events of public import have taken their place in the chronicles of the past. The final session of the present Parliament has been opened in person by the Queen, and political excitement has for the most part been confined within the walls of Parliament, where the Opposition threats and attacks on the Government have of necessity been of a somewhat less extravagant nature than those which characterized Mr. Gladstone's Midlothian campaign, and that of other Liberal leaders in other parts of the United Kingdom. The commencement of the session was marked, it is true, by some sharp, smart fighting on both sides, which seemed at one time to be growing too warm to last; but outside events have tended to tone down the high handed course of the Opposition, and the Government have fallen back to some extent on that demeanor of dignified reserve which so much characterized the Speech from the Throne. A few weeks ago, when a coalition of the Irish Home Rulers and the English Liberals seemed imminent, supporters of the Government were no doubt more or less anxious, but the decisive vote of Liverpool, and the feat of wrestling a seat from the Liberal stronghold of Southwark, have compelled the Liberal leaders to change their tactics. The right hand of fellowship, so cordially extended to the Home Rulers, and the countenance given to Home Rule demands by Lord Ramsay, the Liberal candidate for Liverpool, and more or less acquiesced in by Lord Hartington, gave the opportunity for the Conservative party to raise the cry of "Dismemberment of the Empire," and that with so much genuine sincerity and common sense as to gain the support of a large vote of Moderate Liberals and Whigs, the result being an overwhelming Conservative victory at both Liverpool and Southwark. The effect on the Liberal party of such unlooked-for defeat has been magical, both inside the House and out of doors. Godlessly to the Irish party, so ostentatiously paraded in Midlothian and Liverpool, has been superseded by a systematic snubbing of the Irish party on all and every occasion. In fact, it has been carried so far as to result in the black-balling at the Reform Club of a gallant Irish colonel because he happened to be a Home Ruler. Another fact, which has no doubt had considerable influence in silencing the Liberal party can not afford to wink at. The direct insinuation against the honor of Her Majesty, and the attempt to prove that the famine was the work of English political conspiracy, smack too much of treason, to go down even with very advanced English Radicals. The result has been that the Home Rule party have cut their own throats.

But the cold-shouldering of the Irish party has not been the only effect of the re-cent by-elections on the Opposition, the late violence of their stump oratory is only to be excelled by the mild blandness of their present demeanor, even Mr. Gladstone has made a speech in which he has not charged the members of the Government with being out-throats and traitors to the best interests of the country. In fact, he was agreed, in a great measure, with the Government measure for dealing with obstruction, and only differed in a few minor points. In fact, it is quite amusing to compare the mild, milk-and-water utterances of to-day, and compare them with those which filled the columns of the Italian prior to the meeting of the House. One of the principal measures introduced into the House of Lords has been one, comprising four acts, for the alteration of the Land laws, so as to place real property on the same footing with personal property. The scheme is considered feasible, although a somewhat hazardous experiment. In the Commons much time has been needlessly wasted by the debate on the address and a movement of amendment by the Irish party. This led to the interruption by his Chancellor of the Exchequer of what is commonly styled the Obstructionist motion, which, having led to an interesting debate, I think it worth while to insert the resolutions in full, simply stating that twenty-four amendments were now placed on the list, mostly by Irish members. The motion was as follows:

"1. That whereupon any member shall be named by the Speaker, or by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, as disregarding the authority of the Chair, or abusing the rules of the House, by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House or of any committee, if the offence has been committed in the House, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question, on a motion being made, no amendment, adjournment or debate being allowed, 'That such member be suspended from the service of the House during the remainder of the day's sitting;' and if the offence has been committed in a Committee of the Whole House, the Chairman shall, on a motion being made, put the same question in a similar manner, and if the motion is carried shall forthwith suspend the proceedings of the Committee, and report the circumstances to the House, and the Speaker shall thereupon put the same question, without amendment, adjournment or debate, as if the offence had been committed in the House itself. If any member be suspended three times in one session under this order, the suspension, on the third occasion shall continue one week, and until a motion has been made, upon which it shall be decided at one sitting of the House, whether the suspension shall cease or for what longer period it shall continue; and on the occasion of such motion, the member may, if he desires it, be heard from his place. 2. That this be the standing order of the House."

It is almost a certainty that these resolutions will pass unaltered, and if such is the case the Government will be able to push business through the House with greater dispatch and more comfort.

A debate on "Privilege," brought on by the somewhat extraordinary course of Pilmoll thought necessary to accept to some members of the House who thought proper to oppose his Shipping Bill, and a second committee of quite a sensational character between a noble Irish member and an English county member. The following is supposed to be the correct version.—

Irishman—Sir Charles Mapier, M. P. for Limerickshire, (Hit!) I believe you was supporting Sir Stafford Northcote's practical vote of censure on Mr. Pilmoll, and he remarked, I believe, as quite true with this somewhat distinguished speaker, rather warm for his opponents; in the course of his speech he made some remarks about the House being an assembly of gentlemen. The O'Gorman Mahon therefore, in a loud voice, expressed the equivocal opinion, that the House consisted of gentlemen fifty years ago, a remark which irritated Mr. Egerton into something not very complimentary to the member for County Clare; whereupon that gallant gentleman gave his card to Sir George Bowyer to present to Mr. Egerton, who threw it on the floor. Subsequently The O'Gorman-Mahon sent a challenge, but the matter seems to have been "arranged."

Just now the affairs of Europe are in an uncertain and menacing condition. There is no doubt that there are signs, and diplomats say unmistakable signs, of an early rupture on the continent, but as to whom, when, and how, everybody seems about equally in the dark. Whether the German legions are once more destined to invade the sunny provinces of La Belle France, or for a change to march into the less hospitable climate of Russia, with the sad fate of the great Napoleon staring them in the face, or whether Austria and Germany intend a joint action, are all problems which time alone can solve. One thing is very certain, that Prince Bismarck is very active just now, and politicians on this side of the water shake their heads, look wise, and say nothing. It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good, and in the event of a large European war prices for live stock, horses and grain would make an appreciable advance on both sides of the Atlantic, which would tend to pull things together a little in these dull times.

Apropos of military matters, it may be well to mention that the charges made against the English troops, of sacking, robbing, and murdering in Natal, have been proved upon unimpeachable evidence to be grossly exaggerated, and simply to amount to a few individual cases of drunkenness, by men who had long been to the front in Zululand, and unable to obtain anything of an intoxicating character. Whilst the charges made by a distinguished nobleman against the character of General Roberts and his staff has been found to be one without foundation. I refer to the charge that General Roberts was causing men to be executed by scores, for no other offence than fighting for their country. It appears that every individual who has been hanged has been proved to justly merit such a penalty. In fact the government have dispersed of every charge brought against them, and come out with flying colors.

In agricultural circles, the shortage is a subject of grave concern. From an account which I have just laid down it appears from a careful examination of statistics that at least 40 per cent. of the flocks will be lost, and that the clip this year will be short by quite that amount. Some large flock masters report a loss of two-thirds; others their entire flocks. In some counties you may travel for miles and not see a single sheep. The cause of this mortality is two fold, the principal being flukes in the liver, which multiply until they devour the "beast's blood," and the animals die of weakness. The other cause is the enlargement of the nasal organ, which brings dreary Canadian farmers may rest assured that we will be worth something this year, although the Dominion flocks have been drained very low by American buyers the last year or two.

The season so far has been fairly favorable for farmers, who are gradually falling into a way of looking forward to a good season instead of bewailing the disastrous results of last; this is a healthy sign, and it is to be hoped that their pluck will be rewarded.

There is quite a stir in volunteer circles just now, the Easter Monday Review at Brighton, which used to be quite an institution, has of late years been suspended. It is this year to be revived. The volunteers will be placed under Brigadiers of the Regular Army, and will act according to a set plan of operations for a sham fight, by which process it is hoped that some instruction of a more or less intelligent description may be imparted, whilst not detracting from the enjoyment of what is neither more nor less than a military picnic for the Metropolitan volunteers.

Of the Opera and Drama, it would be remiss not to mention the performance of Ada at Her Majesty's Theatre. The production of this spare comedy, Mr. Carl Rosa's promised programme—Mignon, Taming of the Shrew, Sobieski, have in turn proved a hit, and have all been produced in a style which command success. It may interest some of your readers to know that Ada was originally produced at Cairo in 1872, and was not heard in England until four years later, and that after (if my memory serves me) it had been produced in Philadelphia. An originality produced at Covent Garden. Miss Adelina Patti was the heroine, Signor Nicolini, Graziani and Mille. Emma Giuglini were the other principals. Such a cast, with the beauty of much of the music, was enough to ensure success.

It is to be regretted that the performances of Macbeth at Sadlers Wells cannot be so favorably spoken of. In fact, the whole performance, with the exception of Miss Bateman's Lady Macbeth, was decidedly mediocre, and it is probable that before long Miss Bateman will come to the conclusion that Shakespeare must be produced regardless of expense or not at all.

VIGILANT.

Fired Thirteen Times in a Night.

A California Family Have a very Lively Time of it.

From the San Francisco Call.

Brooklyn is stirred by an intense excitement generated by the mysterious and repeated attempts of an incendiary to fire the dwelling house of Andrew Baird, on Monday night. In all, thirteen attempts were made, and though some destruction was effected, the fire was discovered in the incendiary evidently intended, and fortunately did not result in loss of life. The building is a two-story frame, and has a wife and three children, mother-in-law, sister-in-law, servant named Mrs. Broderick, and two Chinese employed in the grocery store underneath. The first fire was discovered at a few rods distant from the dwelling-house about 10 o'clock on Monday night. The second fire was lighted early Monday evening. The barn was quickly destroyed. During the night a shingle, which had been caught fire from the flames of the burning building. The latter fire was no sooner extinguished than the attempts were renewed, and while Baird was engaged in fighting the flames was attacked by a third fire, the defendant's own house. Joseph Parker, a neighbor who was assisting the Baird family, ran to the house, and found a pile of excelsior and shavings in flames. The tree was extinguished that there was little chance that the fire could be communicated to the dwelling, as the adjoining trees were green, and would not burn. The supposition is that the incendiary entered the house and hauled to the sides of the bag. Your kind hope is accomplished! Baal from top to bottom. He must think all the birds got to housekeeping before June, and you know, often they build more than one nest in the course of the season. Well, I think you there are too many cats about, I think you may be pretty sure of a change.

When I made my little house, I had no idea it would last more than one summer, but it is now standing the test of four winters and still looks well. Every spring the wrens and blue-birds squabble and fight for possession, and I am totally sorry to say, always coming off conquerors! And every spring I watch the nest-building from my window with great satisfaction.

FRED.

P. S.—I shall try to illustrate this next week, so look out for a strictly original sketch.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

FROM THE ISLAND.

There's an old saying (and none the worse for being old either) that informs us as "one swallow don't make a summer." If I had only borne this in mind on the very identical day I wrote my last lively composition for this identical column, I should have been a wiser man, and last week's number might have had me for a contributor again. But tempted by the fineness of the weather into a temporary oblivion of the almanack, deluded by the blueness of the sky and worked up to enthusiasm by the mildness of the breeze I took too much of it—a deal too much, and abandoning my coat and vest, while I worked in the garden, laid in such an aggravated form of cold as I don't really remember to have ever knowed the like of. So I may say I have sneezed and coughed and choked my way into the first month of spring, more like a defective gas pipe, as regards notes, than a man and a Mason. But, that's enough of that. I'm out again, and don't mean to be took in again by the balmiest zephyr as ever blowed, till June, at latest.

Here is an extract from a pleasant little letter as came to console me last week:—

"Dear Fred, Nellie and Mr. Mapes, We were so pleased to read your letter this morning (Saturday, March 6th,) and to find things getting the right side up once more. The paper looks like itself again now, with its pleasant Saturday face. Here is a little puzzle for insertion, if you like.

Welcome again to your wonted vase,
Dear, old friend with the smiling face!
We're so glad again to see your name.
That into a puzzle we work the same.
But every one will straightway guess it
And for very fun will smile and bless it.

1. A stuttering lad, matured and yet complete.
2. A steady old horse, fat and slow of feet.
3. One thousand followed by troops of monkeys.
It may be ourselves, our friends's small fry.
Key.

Well, wait till my head gets clear and my throat likewise, and then see if I don't pipe such a song (or leastwise make so bold as to attempt) in these columns as you ain't heard the like on yet.

Nellie and Fred are away for a week. I expect they will be found speaking for themselves next week.

JACOB MAPES.

P. S.—By the bye, have you had a few minutes' interview with the game of fifteen yet? I have—while I was about it. Think of that! "Age cannot wither or custom stale its infinite perplexity." J. M.

MY BIRD-HOUSE.

My bird-house, by the way, is not my own invention. I read in some newspaper that an oyster keg made a good bird house, and an oyster keg is what you must have in the first place. Most of you know what these kegs are, and can easily get one from some store or some oyster-stand. If you can't get an oyster keg you small fellows may be made to answer. Leave the heads in, and stop up the bung-hole; then cut a round hole, two inches in diameter, in one side, about two inches from the end you design for the floor of your house. Nail this end firmly to a square piece of board large enough to project a couple of inches all round, like a ledge. Then proceed to cover the outside of the keg with pieces of rough bark. If you have a wood pile to go to, you can easily find bark enough, for you can pry off wide, curving pieces that will go half round your little house; but, if not, you must get something like this from the woods, and trim them with a knife to fit side by side; no matter if the joinings are not very close, when the house is fastened on some arbor or trellis, no eyes but the birds' can possibly see the crevices. And they are not critical, bright as they are. Use small brads for nailing on the bark, and if driven in a little on the slant, they will hold the bark more securely. For a roof, nail two wide strips of bark to the upper rim of the keg in such a position that their upper edges will meet in a gable just over the middle above the door. It is not necessary to have this roof water-tight, because the head of the keg will keep out the rain; tried to the interior of the house. Fill the space between the roof and the head of the keg with cotton, and the house is complete! Nail it to a tree or to the side of a building, and see if the birds don't find it out in the spring. Don't forget to have a door in front, and a perch just below it. Some of you may like to make a more elaborate house than this, but I think you will find this a very good one for a beginner.

FRED.

The Effect of Cooking on Meat.

The application of heat to flesh effects a transformation in its substance. The albumen of the surface is first hardened into a crust dense enough to contain the juices of the meat without obstructing the passage of that quantity of oxygen necessary to the change of its elements. The fat is melted and partly mixed with the mineral salts and serum of the blood. The tissues connecting the muscular fibres are softened and gelatinized so that they can be readily digested, and the fibres undergo a similar change. As albumen does not harden sufficiently to confine all the juices of the meat under a moderate degree of heat, the reason is at once plain why it should be put into actually boiling water, or a hot oven, or exposed to the action of a clear, bright fire if it is to be juicy and well flavored when cooked. Meat loses about one-third of its bulk in cooking, the following being the ratio of loss under different methods:—four pounds of meat will lose in broiling and roasting about one pound and a half; in baking about one pound and a quarter; and in boiling and stewing about one pound.—Juliet Corson, of the New York Cooking School.

To the Editor Free Press.

DEAR SIR,—Seeing R. H. Grave's solution, or fabled solution, of this great "13, 15, 14" position, I wish to insert a few lines in your columns concerning it. He says, "When you first try this you will find it hard to place them as in rule 1." In the 13, 15, 14 position, to do it, he will have to lift one block out, as he cannot get his rule 1 or 2 any other way. What he takes 70 or more moves to do, he might as well do in two. Let him take the 15 between his forefinger and thumb, and lift it up, and place it the other side of the 14, and he will be doing the same as he does in his 70 or more moves. The puzzle is bound to end one of six ways, viz.—13, 14, 15; 14, 15, 13; 15, 13, 14; 13, 15, 14; 14, 13, 15, or 14, 15, 13. The first three positions can be done. The last three I defy him or any other man to get with square blocks. Mr. R. H. G must have started with either of the first three positions or he cannot get the position he has in rule 1 or 2 with any of the others. To prove that the 13, 15, 14 cannot be done, let him place the 15 blocks in the box in their regular order, then let him set down to work and get the following positions if he can:—15, 13, 14; 15, 14, 13, or 14, 13, 15, and have all the other blocks in position. He says the puzzle is solved as last. He makes a mistake. The puzzle has been solved some time; or all that can be solved, and what cannot be solved is no puzzle.

Yours respectfully,
W. J. MCHAFFIE.

That Maddening Puzzle.

To Editor London Free Press.

SIR,—Re "15" puzzle, I was surprised to learn in "New Hamburg's" letter in the Free Press, that the Screw can be placed in such a way that it cannot be worked out, although the number 13 and 14 are not next each other. I beg to differ with your correspondent, and to say that I can work out the puzzle in five different ways, and place the position the figures may at first be placed.

Yours, &c.,

INGERSOLL.

March 19th.—The entertainment given in the old Catholic Church, on the evening of the 16th inst., was a grand success in every particular. The various pieces were exceedingly well rendered, and in the majority of cases elicited a hearty encore from the large audience that filled the Church to the doors. The Rev. Father Molphy and Mr. James Brady both gave stirring addresses, in which they referred to the superior condition of Irish men in this country, compared to their suffering brethren of Ireland. Both addresses were frequently and loudly applauded. The audience dispersed about eleven o'clock, all well pleased with their evening's amusement.

Around the market, where our business man have occasion to be frequently, there is now [illegible] the sidewalk and flitty appearance of the Market Square, and any person with bein' half [illegible] can see that they have no business [illegible] for discomfort. As it is a very prominent place in town, and as it is exceedingly [illegible] for business, we commend, to Mr. Frank Stuart, the Chairman of the Market Committee.

The editor of the Chronicle, in this week's issue, makes the daring assertion that your correspondent is a "little off," and that his remarks on the question "require no reply." That is just the way the Germans have always done it. He does not seem to have much to say, only being a "little off," when he will copy them from the P. C. for his own paper, always forgetting to give credit. When he starts anything that does not agree with his Grit principles the disease has been [illegible] and wishes his brain cannot grasp, he quietly slips it out of it by briefly remarking, "It requires no reply."

To Editor Free Press.—Oxford Rifles, will meet for drill on Monday evening next, at the armory.

A social, to repair the damage done to the Erskine Church by the late fire, was held at the residence of Adam Oliver, esq., on Tuesday.

Mr. Arch. Lamont, of Komoka, has succeeded in constructing an excellent machine for sowing clover and grass seed. It is combined with a machine for taking bugs off potatoes. It sows evenly, and can be regulated to sow thick or thin as desired. His dainsy is discovered that it contained coal oil, and he swallowed a quantity before he could extricate himself from his position.

—In the Toronto Division Court yesterday Judge Boyd gave judgment in the case of Quinny Crown Attorney Fenton v. the County of York. Mr. Fenton some time ago personally expended $14 26 in the interest of criminal justice at the instruction of the county, and the latter, when the bill was presented, refused to entertain it. Mr. Fenton, consequently brought suit, which was of much interest to lawyers. His Honor spoke decidedly against the action of the county, and found for plaintiff with costs.

Hannay's Diamonds.

Some of the Hannay diamonds have been brought to America by Prof. Vaughan, of Providence, R. I. He was present at the investigations over the McKenzie and Hannay diamonds, and was presented with eight stones out of the last batch made by Mr. Hannay, and they are to be shown to scientific men here. "Mr. Hogarth," says Mr. Vaughan, "who was assistant to Mr. Hannay, is coming out here in a few days, and he will explain the methods by which the Scotch chemist manufactured diamonds. The diamonds I have brought are very small, scarcely larger than grains of sand, but they are true diamonds. They have the same hardness and the same refractive brilliancy. Hannay has daughters are wearing them now. There is no yet, and never may be, any certainty about this process. Prof. Hannay himself says that there were times that he despaired of success. At one time he produced diamonds, and again, under the same conditions, he found none. They may cost more than the genuine diamond, and they may cost less. We don't know yet. There is no occasion, I think, for the dealers in precious stones or the owners of diamonds to be alarmed. It will probably be a long time before their interests are interfered with."

Oxford and Lambton Assizes.

CRYDD.

The Spring Assizes for the County of Oxford have just concluded, there being thirteen cases on the criminal calendar and eleven on the civil docket. Justice Armour presided. Following were the cases in which action was taken:—

Lammon vs. Walsh.

Hayes vs. Wood.

Action on promissory notes which are supposed to have been forged by one S. F. Clinton, formerly of Ingersoll. The notes were endorsed by defendant, father-in-law of Clinton, and money had been raised on them through the plaintiff, a broker in Ingersoll. Verdict for defendant. Brown & Walls for plaintiff, J. F. McDonald for defendant.

Miles vs. Coon.

The parties to this suit live near Norwich. The action was for slander. Verdict for defendant. Fisbober & Finkle for plaintiff; Hardy, Wilkes & Jones for defendant.

Shaw vs. Russell.

An undefended assessment on an action for seduction. Five hundred dollars granted plaintiff. J. G. Regler for plaintiff.

Lindsay vs. Coakle.

An action to recover a sum of money lent. Verdict for defendant. Beard & Neilin for plaintiff; Fletcher & Finkle for defendant.

Smith vs. McConnell.

Action on promissory note. Undefended. Verdict for plaintiff, $2,444. J. F. McDonald for plaintiff; Fletcher and Coldick for defendant.

Canadian Bank of Commerce vs De Blaquiere, et al.

Moon vs. Murray.

Action between two farmers in Zorra in reference to a line fence. The case was settled during trial, each party paying their own costs. Beard & Neilin for plaintiff, Fletcher & Finkle for defendant.

White Sewing Machine Co. vs. McGaw.

McGaw was acting as agent for plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' claim was for $100, in two sums, one for $50 and the other for $50. The defendant in the sale of machines as payment, but to secure themselves against any of the notes proving worthless he gave a bond. There proved to be a deficiency and this action was brought to recover on the bond. Verdict for plaintiff $1,106 42. Finkle & Finkle for plaintiff, Ball & Ball for defendant.

In all the criminal cases true bills were found by the Grand Jury, but the following were discharged at the trials:—Albert Clapp, charged with stealing wood. Matthew Stewart, forgery. Walter Hall, larceny and shop breaking. David Ell, false pretenses. F. Wood and Sarah Wood, forgery, and Sarah E. Wood and Thos. Nicholls, perjury.

LAMBTON.

The Assizes for this county were continued at Sarnia on Wednesday. The following additional cases were disposed of:—

Forbara vs. Becker et al.

This was an action brought against a Division Court bailiff and his securities for selling goods covered by plaintiff's mortgage. Verdict for plaintiff, on the third count, for $20.20, and for the defendant on the first and second counts. Fraser, of Wallaceburg, for plaintiff, Lister for defendant.

Jacob Utter vs. Henry Utter.

This was an action to quiet title. Verdict for plaintiff, by consent, for one shilling damages, the defendant to pay costs of suit (by Macmahon) for plaintiff. Lister for defendant.

The following true bills were found:—Peter Wilson, cattle stealing; George Taylor, having counterfeit tools in possession. Thos. Vas, forging and uttering counterfeiting. In the case of Nelson Horne, accused of rape, the indictment was ignored.

James Tait vs. Elias McPherson et al.

This was an action for ejectment. Mr. John Cowan, for plaintiff (Mr. J. Hughes counsel); J. F. Lister for defendant.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, March 20, 1 a.m.—Indications for Lower Lakes, partly cloudy, with occasional snow.

FILLING UP THE TANKS.—Under the superintendence of Ald. Rooks, chairman of the Board of Health, the tanks throughout the city are being emptied of the filthy water they have contained, and filled with earth. From a sanitary point of view this is a praiseworthy move.

CITY GAS COMPANY.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the above company was held a few nights since. It was decided to reduce the number of directors from nine to five, and the election proceeded on that resolve, the following gentlemen being elected:—Messrs. John Beattie, Wm. Bowman, Geo. S. Birrell, J. H. Fraser and Isidore Hellmuth. At a subsequent meeting, Mr. John Beattie was chosen President and Mr. William Bowman, Vice-President.

SEAFORTH CRICKET CLUB.—A meeting was held at the Commercial Hotel on March 15, for the purpose of reorganizing the Crescent Cricket Club, of Seaforth, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Patrons, M. P. Hayes, A. H. Ireland; President, Dr. Coleman; Vice-Presidents, R. J. Girdlestone, F. Holmested; Captain, J. S. Roberts; Secretary, J. S. Harcourt; Treasurer, A. Wilson; Committee—H. Cameron, G. Baird, R. J. Girdlestone, J. L. Harcourt, T. E. Joslin, J. Watson, A. W. Bleasdell. The financial statement of last season shows a deficit of about $21.

R. C. MISSION IN NORTH MIDDLESEX.—A mission was held in Father Corcoran's parishes, commencing Monday and concluding the churches of Parkhill and Williams. The mission was conducted by Revs. Fathers Donnelly, O'Keefe and Reilly. Large numbers approached holy communion, and the results of the exercises are such as to bring comfort to the minds of the popular pastors of the parishes, the two fathers who took charge of the mission and the people under their spiritual care. Not in Canada can be found a more staunch and exemplary body of Catholics than those living in the township of Williams.

COLLISION.—Yesterday afternoon Mr. McMullen, a draywan, had his new dray badly smashed at the Clarence street crossing of the Great Western Railway. It appears that a freight train was backing along the track and had nearly reached Mcmullen a few feet. He then attempted to drive across, but before he had gone many feet the train came along in the opposite direction and struck the vehicle at the front wheel, smashing and twisting the rig into shapeless fragments an instant thereafter. The horse stood its ground like a statue and was unhurt, and the driver also escaped unhurt. It is difficult to say upon whom the blame rests.

DISORDERLY ON OUR TRAIN.—John Willard, of St. Mary's, one of the persons accused of being disorderly on G. T. R. train, the other night, writes:—"I am one of the parties mentioned in the circumstantial description of the case, as the bully of the party. I wish to say that your correspondent has misstated the facts. On the approach of the conductor, I at once gave him my ticket. Two other passengers, with whom I had no connection whatever, made some excuse to him about their tickets. He left the car, refusing shortly after with Mr. Bayly, the Station Agent at St. Mary's, who was on the train, and a brakesman. The Conductor demanded tickets from the young men, and they gave him their pasteboards. I was amused at the forbearance of the Conductor, when he thought he had a backing, and changed me with leading the concerte against him. Having had no interest or connection with the affair, other than as a spectator, I used some sharp language to the officious Conductor, for making an uncalled for, and ungentlemanly attack on me."

THE GRANTON PRESBYTERIANS.—At the meeting of the Presbytery of Stratford a few days since, a petition from parties at and near Granton, transmitted by the Session of Biddulph, praying for the erection of a congregation or station there, was read, whereupon Mr. Mann objected to the reception of it on the ground that it contained false statements, and had appended thereto a false certification, as also one or more false signatures, and that the Session had taken initiatory steps with a view to subjecting the principal parties in the petition to church discipline. The petition was laid on the table till the 25th inst., when the grounds of objection are to be investigated. A letter from Mr. James Grant was read, acknowledging that he had, through failure of memory, said, contrary to fact, that he had not signed the petition in the case McComb vs. Mann. The parties who protested against the decision of Presbytery in the matter of their charge against their minister at Granton, instructed, by Mr. Alex. Mitchell, that they had agreed to fall from their protest.

LOCAL NOTICES.

MARBLE mantle pieces in new designs at reduced prices. J. W. SMITH & Co.

CROCKERY AND GLASSWARE.—Mr. L. C. Leonard announces in another column his intention of selling off his stock of crockery and glassware at cost, from now until the 1st of April. Call in and secure some of the bargains.

IMPORTED French cambric shirtings opened to-day. Order your shirts at Garlick's.

GRAND CONCERT.—Those who had the privilege of attending a recent concert at Victoria Hall, in this City, and hearing Mrs. Caldwell and Mr. H. Clark, of Hamilton, and Dr. Bippi and Miss McGarry, of London, sing, will be glad to learn that on Wednesday evening next the concert will be repeated at the same place. A combination of vocal talent, such as named above, should draw out every lover of music, and their name is legion, in London.

HEAVY night shirt cloth.—Order your night-shirts at Garlick's, 174 Dundas street.

HAIR (MISS) CARRIGAN.—Mr. A. E. Hourd, the well-known manufacturer of Richmond street, has taken Mr. Smith, an experienced workman, into partnership, and the firm desire to remind the public that they keep on hand children's carriages of all the latest styles of their own manufacture. They guarantee every article turned out of their establishment to be first-class, and their invite inspection of their work. The trade supplied. Those in search of a really serviceable article should not fail to call at 550 Richmond street.

PRIZE MEDAL CLOTHING.—In this issue Mr. J. M. Dunton, the popular clothier and gents' outfitter, announces the reception of his spring stock of West of England cloths and English and Scotch tweeds, which he is prepared to make up in a style that "can't be beat." This is said advisedly, and the medals awarded him at the various exposition, at home and abroad, have a significance in this connection which ought to weigh largely with the public, and especially those in search of a suit of clothes, of good material, and a tip-top fit.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Composed, Compiled and Corralled by "Free Press" Reporters.

If horses are not well attended to after slipping they frequently acquire rheumatism.

Songs written by London composers this season are hardly up to the average of merit.

A critic says the more brutal a crime is the greater is the interest taken in the criminal.

Mr. Vennor thinks we have yet to experience the coldest portion of the month of March and heavier snowfalls.

And now the starch manufacturers have formed a ring and are going to put up prices. They mean to stiffen the market.

A St. Louis theatre manager was asked why he employed such bad actors. "Would you have me let the poor devils starve?" he replied.

The Saturday Review thinks that vicious pleasures are enhanced when it is possible to persuade oneself that they are the fulfilment of a duty.

Probably there is nothing more humiliating than to have a man ask you how you liked his article on such-and-such a subject, when you wrote it yourself.

A woman fell dead in church while the plate was going around, and before it had come to her pew. This incident teaches—now what would you say it taught?

"Humph!" said a young gentleman, at a play with a young lady, "I could play the lover better than that myself." "I would like to see you try," was the naive reply.

The Saturday Review endorses an English traveller, who says that in the United States the negroes are the best, most agreeable and most courteous of hotel servants.

Corporal punishment in the British navy is now confined to twenty-five lashes, whether the punishment be awarded by the commander of the ship or sentence of court-martial.

Up to midnight Mrs. Epperson was the sole occupant of the police cells. She had been raised by F. C. Maguire on Bathurst street in a beastly state of intoxication, and was brought to the station in a grocer's waggon.

Mrs. Swanson heard a sermon on hell, in Chicago, and the preacher's vivid description of eternal torture greatly frightened her. She brooded over the subject several days, then became possessed of the idea that she had committed the unpardonable sin, and finally sank into incurable lunacy.

The Boston women of "culture" came across an old fashioned mile-stone in the suburbs. One read the inscription, "1 from Boston," and they boiled it down to "Here is a grave, perhaps of some young girl, who wished it written on her tombstone—'I'm from Boston.' How simple and sufficient!"

The Saturday Review says that in England the amount of money invested in public loan is reputed to possess has much to do with the interest which he excites, while in France the money of a nobleman is counted for little, ancient origin being regarded by some, and intellect in connection with a title being the admiration of many.

Recently one of the children of the Princess Royal of England, now the wife and heir of the German Emperor, had been ailing, and with maternal solicitude the Princess personally supplied the little invalid with many of its requirements. This innovation on German court etiquette produced quite a flurry, and was brought to the notice of the Empress, in answer to whose expostulation the Princess replied: "If my mother, the Queen of England and Empress of India, can carry milk in to one of her children, who is so much more because given by her, I think I may do so without forgetting my position."

The morbid desire to possess articles of any description belonging to persons who have met with a violent death was singularly exemplified at a recent sale in England of the personal effects of one John Brown, a murdered farmer. The sale was remarkable for the extraordinary prices which it realized. The first bid on an iron kettle was $5; four chisels and a hatchet in a carpenter's box brought $8, and other things in proportion. A large number of pieces of dress goods and embroidery were sold at $10 a piece, therefore, as the idea was prevalent that they were stolen and of extra quality. All the personal effects, worth about $400, fetched nearly $1,000. At the conclusion of the sale the crowd overran the premises, tearing the shingles off the house, and cutting off pieces of the fence and bars as relics.

The youths who joined the Collegiate Institute Drill Association have donned their military uniform of grey, trimmed with red. Messrs. Boyd & Son made them.

Mr. Jabel Robinson, the Worthy Master of Elgin Division Grange for the past three years, was recently presented with a book-case and secretary from the brethren for his past services.

Many of our citizens will hear with deep regret that Mr. James Dunbar, an old and highly esteemed resident of London, is dangerously ill from an attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

The business of Haggart Brothers, agricultural implement manufacturers, is to be carried on in future by a joint stock company, with a capital of $250,000. A branch of the company will be continued here.

Mr. R. Pincombe, miller, of Strathroy, has been making enquiries of the Port Elgin Council as to the bonus they offered some time ago for starting a flour mill up there. He has been informed that the amount was $2,000.

"Mr. E. Blake" was assessed $15 by Messrs. Smyth & Reid, marble dealers, yesterday, for knocking down and breaking into three pieces a slab of marble which stood in their yard at the corner of Dundas and Wellington streets. "Mr. Blake" gave a fictitious name, without a doubt.

It is suggested that the Globe procure a second group of pictures for publication in its columns, and that the likenesses of Detective Murphy, and County Constables Clay, Pope, Hodge, Brown and Moore should in all fairness be given. They were in Biddulph shortly after the murder took place.

The Knights of Liberty Tent of the Maccabees of Wilton Grove, Westminster, gave an entertainment there a few nights since, which proved a pleasant affair. Sir Knight T. Tomlinson presided, and among those who contributed to the success of the entertainment were Messrs. McNamara, Allan, Lloyd, Cook, William Walker, J. Hay and others.

Messrs. Hutchinson, County Attorney, James Magee, Hugh Macmahon, Q. C., and Chief of Police Williams and Detective Ford, Esq., for $4,250, detached house on Queen's Avenue to Dr. Arnott for $2 000; wood and terrace to James Eaton, Esq., for $2,350; east end residence to N. Reid, Esq., for $2 075. The Exmoutine all property was withdrawn. The attendance was large, the executors rooms being crowded.

THE ROOMING BREEZE.

A Zephyr from Florence Concerning Him.

A Bothwell correspondent sends us the following:—

Rev. J. T. Breese, some two years ago, got in an appearance as an Episcopal Methodist minister, and stated he formerly was a Presbyterian minister, but preferred the Methodists, and was sent by the latter body to preach in the village of Florence. He represented himself as a widower having a daughter that was going to keep house for him. After an unsuccessful attempt to get furniture, stove, &c., on credit there, he came to this town and made the same attempt, but failed to accomplish his purpose in swindling our people out of their goods by making false representations. Then he came near getting a coat of tar and feathers for making too free with a respectable girl in Florence and other females in the vicinity. He made tracks for parts unknown. He is a bad man and a hypocrite, and wants passing around.

LEX LOCI.

Proceedings at the Local Tribunals Yesterday.

The charge against Squire Owrey, previously referred to, is on peculiar grounds. He sentenced a colored man named Johnston to twenty days, and made out the commitment for thirty days. Johnston, therefore, sues for damages. In Common Law Chambers, Toronto, yesterday, before Mr. Dalton, Q. C., in Francis Johnson qui tam v. James Owrey, Mr. Bartram shewed cause to a summons moved absolute by Mr. Aylesworth for security for costs of defence in his action for $240 penalties for not returning convictions. While admitting the right to such security, he desired to place before this Court the fact that one penalty sued for in this action was for not returning a conviction of the plaintiff made by the defendant as a Justice of the Peace, and that another action was pending for false imprisonment for 30 days upon which defendant was clearly liable, and to that extent defendant would have security, should the plaintiff fail in this action. Defendant's affidavits had brought out prominently that plaintiff was a colored man; but three of the affidavits for defendant were made by County Constables who were acting under the defendant. He felt it his duty, in view of all circumstances, not to have the plaintiff give security without an order of this Court, which in all cases of this kind is discretionary. Mr. Dalton could not detach himself from this case, and granted the order. Costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

Sacred Cantata Last Night.

After a season of patient practice, the choir of St. Andrew's Church sang the Sacred Cantata of "Daniel" before a large and appreciative audience last night. The singers were arranged within the altar, and although slightly crammed, there being but forty ladies and gentlemen, managed to sing in a manner highly creditable to themselves and their leader, Mr. J. Dowland. The music was not of a difficult character, but admitted of expressive and sweet singing, and the members of the choir seemed to have intelligently caught the idea of the composer. The choruses were characterized by pleasing harmony, although a larger organ would have enabled Miss Harriston to give fuller instrumental assistance. The solos, duets, trios and quartettes were ably sung, and among those who took part in them is thoroughly deserving of particulars. The soprano solos by Misses Freeland and Gilmour are, however, worthy of special mention, as but fair to say that with cultivation the latter lady bids fair to become one of the sweetest singers in the City. Her voice is unusually rich, and maintains its clearness as well in the upper notes, like clinging of his military genius. Mr. Meech's bass solo was clear and strong. The cantata did not admit of much exercise of the voice, but on the whole was rendered valuable assistance. Taken altogether, the cantata was most creditably rendered, and in addition to the pleasure it afforded the audience will result in considerable financial assistance to the Women's Foreign Missionary Society in connection with the church.

The Cascaden Libel Suits.

The examination of John Edgecombe, of Port Stanley, as the defendant in a libel suit in which the M. P. P. for West Elgin is plaintiff, took place in St. Thomas before Thomas Paine, Esq., Deputy Judge of the County of Elgin. This involves a charge of forgery, one of the highest offences that can be made a statement very damaging to the character and reputation of the plaintiff. The examination was private. Mr. Edgecombe, while denying that he used the words that "Dr. Cascaden was a forger," admitted that had said repeatedly in public and in private that Dr. Cascaden had produced and delivered a forged receipt, purporting to have been signed in his name by one Abner Sanders, late of Iona, upon which he based a claim amounting to some $49.50, on the estate of the orphan children of Sanders, that Dr. Cascaden was pushing for false imprisonment for 30 days upon which defendant was clearly liable, and to that extent defendant would have security, should the plaintiff fail in this action. Defendant's affidavits had brought out prominently that plaintiff was a colored man; but three of the affidavits for defendant were made by County Constables who were acting under the defendant. He felt it his duty, in view of all circumstances, not to have the plaintiff give security without an order of this Court, which in all cases of this kind is discretionary. SUPPER AND PRESENTATION.

The members of No. 2 Company, 7th Fusiliers, entertained their Captain, W. DeLay Williams, to a dinner at Mr. F. Campbell's restaurant last night, and in addition to the members of the Company, Major Miller, Adjutant Griffith's, Capt. Mahon, of No. 7 Company, and Lieuts. Williams and Hunt, of the Field Battery, sat down to the excellent repast. They were forty jolly good fellows in every sense of the term. Major Miller presided, and after the bill of fare had been agreeably discussed, proposed the usual loyal and patriotic toasts. They were received with enthusiasm.

"The Army and Navy" was responded to by Lieut. Williams, of the London Field Battery, and Adjutant Griffiths.

Sergt. Major Randell sang "The Death of Nelson," in fine style, and being encored gave "Old King Cole."

"Our Guest" was drunk with "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and cheers.

Captain Williams, in reply, could scarcely find words to express his feelings. He had been taken entirely unawares, and could do no more than thank the members of the Company from the bottom of his heart for this recognition of his services. He should treasure it through life. He thanked the Company for the charity with which they had overlooked his official shortcomings, and expressed the desire to do all in his power to make it the best Company of the Battalion. He concluded by reviewing some of the pleasant reminiscences of the 7th, and again thanking the Company for their evidence of respect.

"Our Commanding Officers" elicited suitable responses from Adj. Griffiths and Major Miller, who wished No. 2 prosperity.

Corp. Redd put the company in good humor by a comic song, and in response to an encore gave "The Man in the Moon is Joking."

Lieut. Love gave several selections from "Pinafore," and was warmly applauded.

"Our Invited Guests" elicited happy replies from Capt. Mahon, Lieut. Hunt, of the L. F. B., Lieut. Love and others.

"The Ladies" and several volunteer toasts concluded a merry evening.

The K. O. T. M. Difficulty.

A Mass Meeting of the Bees Uphold Mr. Osborne.

At a meeting of Judas Tent last evening the late difficulty at Buffalo was spoken of, and after the members and visitors had dissolved themselves into a mass meeting, it was moved by Sir Kt. John Tweed and seconded by Sir Kt. P. Slaght, and resolved—That the Knights assembled, after hearing the Past Great Officers' report in Edgehill Block on the night of the 16th inst., with regard to the charges preferred by them against the present Gt. Sir., J. A. Osborne, and after hearing those charges ably refuted by the Gt. Hs. J. A. Osborne, and others, that there is not sufficient evidence to substantiate the charges made.

A Brilliant German Admiral.

From the London Telegraph.

Gen. Stosch, the chief of the German Admiralty, is at once an able strategist and an ardent reformer. Instructed some years ago by the Emperor William with the management of the imperial Navy, he energetically addressed himself to the task of improving the fleet, tightening its discipline, and introducing a new system of naval tactics, the offspring of his military genius. After profound and exhaustive reflection he came to the conclusion that it would be highly advantageous to the German Marine to retain technological terms, which he held to have been hitherto incorrectly interpreted, and in addition to the usual terms there were the words "starboard" and "starboard." Gen. Stosch was prompted by the success of his inner convictions to decree that for all time to come starboard should be larboard in the German Navy, and vice versa; and it was so. The only concrete result to the Fatherland heretofore achieved by this notable reform has been the fusion of the Grosser Kurfurst, involving the loss of 300 lives and 6,000 000 marks; for having effected which remarkable feat, by the aid of Gen. Stosch's improvements, Rear Admiral Batsch has been rewarded by appointment to the post of principal officer in the German naval administration.

An Old Settlers' Gone.—Mr. Reuben Short, one of London's first settlers, was buried from his late residence yesterday afternoon. At the time of his death he was aged 73 years, and had spent over one half of his life in London. He was a shoemaker by occupation, and carried on business for many years on Dundas street, near where the Mechanics' Hall now stands. He acquired considerable property by his thrift and foresight, a good deal of which has increased in value of late years. He leaves one son and four daughters, and twenty-two grandchildren. Six of the latter acted as pall-bearers at the funeral.—Mrs. McMillan, mother of Hugh McMillan, of Tuckersmith, and Duncan McMillan, of Stanley, died at the residence of her son, Alex. McMillan, in the county of Bruce, quite recently. Mrs. McMillan had attained the good old age of 96 years. She came to this country in the year 1850, and with her family settled on the 10th concession of Tuckersmith. Her husband died in the old country before the came away. She was always in good health, and only went to bed a couple of hours before she died. Deceased was a native of Argyleshire, Scotland.

A Foggy Sentence.—A young man named William M. Dwyer, who formerly lived in London, but latterly kept a marble shop in Ingersoll, was tried at the Woodstock Assizes on Wednesday for forgery. It appeared that during last year the prisoner sold a tombstone to Mr. Edward Fogg, of East Oxford, in part payment of which, Mr. Magee gave his note for $140, for twenty-four months. In the note the word "six" was written in figures. Prisoner wanted to raise money, and, in order to do so, changed the "24" to "six" thus making the note read as payable in six months. It was perfectly evident from the appearance of the note that the figures "24" had been partially erased, and the word "six" substituted therefor. Prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in the Central Prison.

A Good Housewife.—The good housewife, when she is giving her house its spring renovating, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than many houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the disease arising from spring malaria and miasma, and she must know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines.—Concord (N. H.) Patriot.

...Extract from Pepys' Diary, to be published March 1980:—"To the great saleroom in King street, where a mighty fine collection of blue and white old ginger pots from China; and I did see one man give £650 for one, and another man £610 for another. Yet they do say there be folks without dinners and many little children with no clothes to get on them, over in Ireland. All which do seem to me mighty contradictory and not a little sad to think on, so I will no more trouble myself about it."

...London World:—"There is, I understand, every reason to believe that a contract of marriage will shortly be entered into between a prince of our royal house, whose modesty and learning have won for him golden opinions, and a debutante who was universally admitted to bear away the palm for beauty at the last drawing room, and who is the daughter in law of a Scottish earl distinguished for his gallant bearing and literary attainments."

...A scheme to erect a magnificent crystal palace on the ruins of the palace of St. Cloud is, the Figaro asserts, under consideration by the French government. It would be surrounded by a model farm and a botanical garden, with conservatories and an aquarium, and would contain a museum, library, gymnasium, observatory and galleries for art exhibitions. The cost is estimated at 15,000,000f.

...A curious article on "Nihilism in China" is published by the Presse, of Vienna. The writer says that nihilist doctrines first made their appearance in China in the tenth century, when Buddhism began to take the place of the old national religion based on the worship of the forces of nature.

Yale's Young Inventors.

Said to be the First to Utilize Frictional Electricity.

A Novel Device for Separating Flour from the Bran—Claimed to be an Invention that is Worthy to be Ranked with the Cotton Gin.

New Haven, Conn., March 14.—The son of Superintendent Smith, of the Atlantic Flour Mills, noticed some months ago, while watching the process of bolting flour, that the electricity pervading the bolting used in connection with the purifying machines attracted the bran and caused it to cling to the belts in large quantities. Thus was suggested the machine that was patented last month under the name of the "Electro Middlings Purifier," and which his friends say is an invention equal in importance to that of the cotton gin, and the first application of frictional electricity to any practical use.

On Saturday forenoon last a notable gathering assembled in a dingy room in the third story of a machine shop in this city to see one of the purifiers in operation. Among those present were President Porter, Profs. Lyman, Thatcher, Johnston, E. H. Dana, Brush, Wright, Norton, Dr. J. P. G. Foster and Librarian Van Name, of Yale College; Prof. Blake, of Providence, R. I.; and ex.-Gov. English, the Hon. Henry B. Harrison, Eli Whitney Blake, Thomas R. Trowbridge, and Arthur Osborne, of the Board of Education of New Haven. Several ladies were also there. Thomas R. Osborne, a young man of twenty years, explained the invention. He is half owner of the patent, and is a member of the junior class in Yale College. Young Smith was his classmate until recently, when failing eyesight compelled him to leave college. When he conceived the idea of an electric purifier, he went to young Osborne and asked him to get a machine constructed embodying the frictional electricity idea. Working together, the young men brought forth the present invention.

In the bolting machines now in use the bran is separated from the flour by a powerful air blast, which blows off the lighter bran. Considerable steam power is needed, the work must be done in an enclosed chamber on account of the dust, and there is great waste, because the air current carries off with the bran the finer particles of flour. In the new invention electricity is designed to take the place of the air blast. Just over the wire bolting cloth, which has a rapid reciprocal motion, are a number of hard rubber cylinders, slowly revolving. As they turn they rub against strips of sheepskin, which are made to press down upon them, thus generating the electricity. As the middlings are sieved by the reciprocal motion, the lighter bran comes to the top of the moving middlings, and is attracted to the rollers. To these it clings, as do pieces of paper to a stick of sealing wax when it has been smartly rubbed, until a certain quantity is thus attracted, when it drops into receiving troughs, whence by a simple mechanical arrangement the bran is brushed out of the side of the purifier into receptacles below. The middlings are then sieved in pairing out of the other side of the machine, while the "sailings" drop out at the end opposite the hopper.

The persons who saw the new purifier in operation on Saturday agreed that it was a most ingenious invention. Although shown unembossed, in an ordinary machine room, the power was neither lost nor wasted. It was said that the purifier could be run by one man working at a crank. The electric power was in proportion to the speed of the roller. In the experimental purifier eight six-inch rollers were used. Mr. Smith is now in Minneapolis, arranging to put one into one of the largest flour mills in that State, which will have eighteen eight inch rollers. It is claimed that the new purifier can be manufactured at less cost than those in present use. Last March the Atlantic Mills burned, causing a loss of $1,000,000. Had the new purifier been in use, the fire would probably have been confined to a single mill, and the loss would not have been more than $100,000. It is claimed that there can be no explosion where the electric machine is used.

While exhibiting the electric purifier Mr. Osborne explained that it was separating whiter wheat middlings, and said that they are the most difficult to purify. The young man's explanations of the manner of operating the new invention were very clear. His father is a member of the local Educational Board, and has been for many years Clerk of the Supreme Court. The Hon. Henry B. Harrison, a prominent lawyer, is the young inventor's uncle, and his grandfather, Blake, has invented a successful stone crusher, and is himself the nephew of the cotton gin inventor, Eli Whitney. Mr. Osborne is a popular man in his classmates, and since his invention he has been styled "Yale's Young Edison."

Dr. Jones is cautiously treating a sick man, and he will not disturb him because he is asleep. "Doctor, I want a steamer to ship to day! Did he sleep well?" "Yes, sir; he slept; but not left the lamp burning turned down very low." "Ah, he slept well, did he? I thought he would. And you left the lamp burning—turned down low? Good, very good; all is going on very nicely. And he takes his bath." "Have you no instructions, sir?" "If, not sure, in order to avoid the least dying sensation of concerns creminals, suffer intent; and I do hope you do not intend to be so degraded as to real ta wan you have about mentioned."

SPECIAL CABLE NEWS.

London, Eng., March 20.—All the volunteer officers commanding are very busy—none possibly more so than Lord Bandleigh—in preparing for the grand review, which promises to be one of the most brilliant ever held at Brighton.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—It is understood that the proposed operations of the Russian army at Tashkend against the Turcomans are to now be modified if not absolutely altered. The attack on the enemy if possible will be attempted to be made on the flank from the west, and if possible in the rear. Colonel Gonekoff is expected to arrive at the headquarters immediately to assume a position of some importance on the staff.

London, March 20.—Although the proposed disposal of the money by the Secretary of State for the Colonies contributed by Canada for the relief of the distress in Ireland is approved of generally, it has been urged in some quarters that it might have been utilized and appropriated to meet practical relief. If the Canadians had decided it to the assistance of the Irish emigrant to Canada, in providing him lands, &c., in the Dominion, the money would then have been turned over to the colony itself.

Consiadt, March 20.—All the Governmental establishments here are pushing everything forward with a vigor indicative of something more than ordinary, which in the minds of many tokens rather somber proceedings anything but pacific.

Paris, March 20.—His Holiness the Pope continues much in the same condition, although in Catholic circles it is stated that his symptoms cause no serious alarm to his medical advisers, and if he can only be prevailed upon to quit the Vatican for a short time for change of scene there is little doubt but he may soon convalesce.

Constantinople, March 20.—Grave fears are entertained for the safety of Colonel Synge, although nearly all are fain to confess that his present detainers—with whose band he is supposed to be now—are attributed with possessing more braggadocio than bloodthirstiness.

London, March 20.—A cablegram from Yokohama states that the Japanese navy is as far as possible in a state of perfection as could be imagined, and officers and men have exhibited the characteristic of their race in the extraordinary ageness they have evidently displayed in acquiring a knowledge of seamanship, navigation and gunnery, under the tuition of European officers. The army is also in a splendid state of discipline and efficiency, and, except for their uniforms and height, could not readily be distinguished from many European troops in the dexterity displayed in their various military evolutions.

GREAT BRITAIN
THE ELECTORAL CAMPAIGN.

London, March 20.—The electoral campaign increases in activity, and it has been almost impossible in the past week to get a sufficient number of members of Parliament together to make a House. All the important measures that could be disposed of this session were pushed through. The Commons will meet on Wednesday only for the formal prorogation preliminary to dissolution. The Liberals seem more active and confident, and their organs are freely predicting an overwhelming victory. Gladstone's speeches alone occupy more space in the newspapers than those of all the other candidates together. Thus far his speeches followed the lines of his previous utterances on questions of policy, the only remarkable development being the latter denunciation of Austria in his first speech at Edinburgh. Constantinople reported that the Emperor of Austria had told Sir Henry Elliott, the British Ambassador at Vienna, that he was leaving the suppression of the foreign policy. The Emperor hoped Beaconsfield would be successful at the coming elections, and Gladstone, after repeating this statement, said if the electors approved of Austria's foreign policy, he would advise Queen Victoria to send for the leader of Beaconsfield Ministry. Austria, he said, has ever been the unflinching enemy of freedom in every country in Europe, and there is not a spot on the whole map where one could place his finger and say, "There Austria did good."

The Conservatives conduct the campaign more quietly, but every doubtful seat will be contested to the bitter end.

SCOTTISH ENTHUSIASM.

New York, March 21.—The Tribune's cable says that Gladstone is a weakening great enthusiasm in Scotland, and his speeches are regarded as sounding the keynote of the campaign. The Liberals have nominated his son Herbert for Middlesex, and agreed to pay his election expenses—about $50,000.

The Irish voters are disposed to support the Liberal candidates in British towns. Parnell's friends will endeavor to induce him to acquiesce in this programme.

PRINCESS FREDERICA'S MARRIAGE.

Sir Stafford Northcote's assurance that Parliament would not be asked to give a dower for the Princess Frederica of Hanover is explained by the announcement that it is intended to provide her husband with a sinecure office.

PERSONAL.

Archibald Forbes, war correspondent, expects to visit America next autumn and deliver a lecture.

PARNELL GIVES A RECEPTION AT QUEENSTOWN.

Cork, March 21.—Parnell arrived at Queenstown to-day and was enthusiastically received, and to-night was entertained at a dinner by the Farmers' Club. Among those present were Biggar, M. F. and Davitt and Daly, the indicted agitators. A large crowd, with bands, tar barrels and torches, accompanied Parnell to the station on his departure for Dublin. The demonstration was much smaller than anticipated, and was marked by the absence of all persons of local influence.

AFGHANISTAN.

AYOOB KHAN AND THE PERSIAN SHAH.

Candahar, March 21.—Ayoob Khan undoubtedly has commenced to negotiate with Persia. An Envoy from the Shah has reached Herat with an escort of three hundred cavalry.

SUBMISSION OF CHIEFS.

Cabul, March 21.—General Roberts has received a letter, written ostensibly by the boy Prince Moosa Khan, and signed by all the chiefs at Ghuznee, intimating that they are ready to submit. The various local chiefs of Loghar and Khohistan have also been invited by them to submit. It is probable that Abdul Rahman Khan will come within the sphere of the expected negotiations.

GREECE.

RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.

Athens, March 20.—The Greek Ministry has resigned in consequence of a resolution adopted in the Chamber of Deputies on the 18th, expressing disapproval of the policy of the Government.

EGYPT.

THE LIQUIDATING COMMISSION.

Cairo, March 21.—United States Minister Maynard interviewed the Khedive on the financial situation, and said Russia and United States will probably not deem the decision of the proposed Liquidating Commission as binding on Russians and Americans.

ABYSSINIA.

INSURGENTS DEFEATED.

Cairo, March 21.—Ras Governor-General of Massowah telegraphed to the Khedive that two bodies of insurgents had been defeated and captured by the troops of King John of Abyssinia.

RUSSIA.

MILIUTIN'S COUP.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—An Imperial decree places a separate corps of grand armee temporarily under the immediate control of Milutin.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CHINA.

London, March 21.—A St. Petersburg dispatch says Russia intends to renew negotiations on the Kuldja question only through the Russian Charge d'Affaires at Pekin. It is therefore likely that the visit to St. Petersburg of the Chinese Ambassador at London will be fruitless.

MORE ARRESTS.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—Arrests continue to be made. Among those recently taken into custody are employes of the Military of War and Communications and some 30 students.

FRANCE.

HARTMANN'S ALLEGED CONFESSION.

Paris, March 21.—A letter from Hartman has been published denying that he confessed to the attempt on the Czar's life at Moscow.

UNCERTAIN ISSUE DESPATCH OF PRINCE ORLOFF.

London, March 21.—A Paris dispatch says:—Prince Orloff departed without paying an official visit to or leaving his card with the President or Premier. Persons in a position to judge assert that Russia eagerly seized this opportunity for showing a coolness to France in order to retrieve the blunder of Gortchakoff's famous open advances to her. Matters were so managed the extradition of Hartmann was refused, whereupon the offended air was assumed. Now that nightmare of the Franco-Russian alliance is dispelled, Bismarck can offer Russia his hand.

An Odessa despatch says sixty arrests have been made there during the last few weeks, mostly of teachers, some filling important public posts.

NEWSPAPER CENSORSHIP.

London, March 21.—A Paris dispatch says that after nine years' operation the censorship of the French newspapers sent to Alsace Lorraine has been discontinued.

TURKEY.

ANOTHER CRAFT HOMICIDE.

Constantinople, March 21.—Five doctors, appointed to inquire into the sanity of the assassin of Col. Comeroff, pronounce him insane.

PROHIBITION TO CARRY FIREARMS.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has addressed a circular to the various embassies and legations here, stating that foreigners are forbidden to carry arms.

CHINA.

LARGE ORDERS FOR CARTRIDGES.

New York, March 20.—An order has been received by the Winchester Arms Co. for from fifteen to twenty million cartridges for the Chinese Government. This is the first order ever given by the Chinese Government to foreigners for cartridges. It is rumored in trade circles that an immense number of guns have been made in England and shipped to China for use against the Russians.

The Railroaders' Strike at St. Louis.

St. Louis, Mo., March 21.—The St. L. & S. E. Railway acceded to the demand of the strikers. The men have resumed work. The Cairo & St. Louis narrow gauge will pay strike under roads do. The Ohio & Mississippi will pay the same as the Transit Company, which is the full price demanded, but will not take back the strikers. The Belt Road and East St. Louis and East Carondolet have acceded to the demands. The Indiana & St. Louis, and Chicago & Alton offered to pay the firemen sixty-five dollars per month, and helpers fifty five, but the offers were rejected. At Vandalia yards all the men are out. The strikers last night organized a Union. The most perplexing factor in the strike is the fact that the coal supply will not last twenty four hours. Business is already suffering.

Serious Disaster and Panic.

Ephrata, Pa., March 21.—During an entertainment given by a public school at Lincoln, last night, at which 500 were present, part of the floor gave way, precipitating from one hundred to one hundred and fifty persons to the floor below. Many escaped by jumping from the windows. Thirty persons were injured, some seriously. Among the latter were Mrs. Kunigmacher, Misses Bowman, Springer, Miller, Erb and Benjamin. During the confusion the scholars rushed on the stage, overturning two lamps, one of which exploded, setting fire to the carpet, but the fire was extinguished before any serious damage was done. Intense excitement prevails. It is not yet ascertained if all of the injured will survive.

A Romanist Row in Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky., March 21.—A card inspired by the congregation of Shelbyville Catholic Church accuses Bishop McGlenky, of Kentucky, of persecuting their pastor, Father Hugh Daly. It is stated that the latter was taken from his bed last July and imprisoned on a charge made by the Bishop of monomania, but on trial he honorably acquitted. Daly is now nearly dead from the alleged effects of blood poisoning. His friends suspect foul play, and assert cut glass was placed in his salt by servants. The Bishop's side of the story is not yet given.

Kearney's Crowd.

San Francisco, Cal., March 21.—The Board of Ward Presidents of the workingmen's party to-day passed a resolution denouncing the sentences of Kearney and Garnon as outrageous, and charging the police judge with permitting himself to be used by the enemies of the workingmen. At the Sand Lots to-day Kearney denounced the police judge, prosecuting attorney and a number of prominent citizens. He advised language that could be construed as incendiary. Drilling is active in the Sand Lot Brigade.

A Romantic Elopement Story.

New York, March 21.—Lord Drummond, grandson and heir of the Earl of Perth, eloped to America some years ago with a maid of low degree. For this he was forbidden the ancestral mansion and his allowance taken from him for several years. At Breakhaven, L. I., he earned a humble living by fishing and shooting. In view of a probable reconciliation with his grandfather, Drummond has sailed for Scotland.

Edison Makes a Sale.

New York, March 21.—Edison sold the patent on the electromotograph to the Western Union Telegraph Company yesterday for $100,000.

THE FIRE RECORD.

Woodstock, Ont., March 20.—About half-past one o'clock this morning the old hotel situated on the Norwich Road, at Currie's Crossing, was totally destroyed by fire. Cause, unknown.

Fort Stanley, Ont., March 20.—This evening, at 11 o'clock, as James Payne was going home he discovered a fire breaking through the roof of Mr. Finlay's block of wooden buildings. The part where the fire occurred was occupied by Mr. Hatton as a dwelling house. Mr. Payne gave an alarm, and was quickly on the roof, and, assistance arriving promptly, the application of a few pails of water soon put the fire out, but had it been undiscovered five minutes longer, nothing could have saved the block, and all the rest of the business part of the village, as the wind was blowing fresh from the north-west at the time.

Boston, March 21.—A fire in the Journal office, to-night, caused great damage. The insurance is $60,000, which covers the loss. F. A. Searle, job printer, also loses heavily. The paper will be issued to-morrow as usual.

OTTAWA NOTES

Special from our own Correspondent.

Ottawa, March 21.—A number of members will leave to-morrow for the holidays.

It is said that the constituency of Chateauguay stands a splendid chance of being redeemed, if the opinions of several prominent Montreal politicians are to be credited, and if perfect unity prevails among the Conservative party.

Mr. Colby will propose in his princeless test bill a standard of 110°.

Messrs. Baker have the contract for supplying the provisions and forage for the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. Mills, the Fallowphar of Bothwell, is said to have a most elaborate speech on the stocks upon the subject of the Tariff. He will probably follow Mr. White (Cardwell), who opens the adjourned debate on the tariff when it is resumed. As it is expected that a number of speakers wish to say something, it is impossible that Sir S. L. Tilley will be able to wind up on Wednesday next, though every effort will be made to accomplish this.

The reports circulated as to the result of the bank deputations must be taken very much cum grano. The Globe correspondent affects to have learnt all about it, but while the deputation of bankers were courteously received and their representations duly considered, the final results of the new Banking Law have not been decided on.

NEWS PARAGRAPHS.

DOMINION WIRELETS

A man named Bellepin was crushed to death near Aylmer, Que., by a falling tree on Saturday.

The Ottawa fleet will be increased this spring by nine barges, each with a carrying capacity of 240,000 feet.

The Nun of Kinmarra has sent a letter of thanks to Principal McCabe, of Ottawa, accompanied by a magnificent bunch of real Irish shamrocks.

The House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island passed a Bill abolishing the Legislative Council by a vote of 22 to 5. What the fate of the Bill will be in the Legislative Council is yet unknown.

Sir Jno. A. Macdonald was taken ill in St. Alban's Church yesterday morning and was obliged to go home. Dr. Grant says it is nothing serious, and he will be able to attend his Parliamentary duties to-morrow.

In St. Catharines, a stranger named McCreeson was committed to jail for present lodging as a lunatic. He says that some years ago he threw away a coat, and this coat turned into a copperhead snake, which has been pursuing him ever since.

Bankers generally express the opinion that under the new Government Banking Bill the bank charters will be renewed simply as they are, and that the circulation will be made a first charge upon the assets of the banks and that the Government will take the circulation of bills under the denomination of $5.

The liabilities of Wm Bannerman, M.P., for the Building of the County of Renfrew, who was placed in insolvency on the 26th ult., are estimated at $200,000, of which over $100,000 is to the Merchants' Bank, which institution is reported to hold as security the entire assets of the estate. Mr. Bannerman was engaged in the lumber business some five or six years ago. On withdrawing from the house of Barnet, Bannerman & Co., he was reputed worth $100,000.

LATEST FROM THE NOR' WEST.

Winnipeg, Man., March 20.—Last night's train brought to this city three Canadian families who are leaving the United States after some years' residence there.

A gambler named Horse stabbed Adams through the neck at Hat Portage last night. Adams is reported to be fatally wounded.

Paterson's second party of immigrants are not now expected to arrive here until the 30th, being delayed by snow in Minnesota.

The building of a temporary railway between Winnipeg and the junction with the main line progresses very slowly. On account of the frequent snow storms last month only four miles of track were laid. A train with material became stuck in the snow near Bay view a short distance out, and a locomotive which was in the rear returned. Since then the track has drifted over.

Soft weather has now set in, and it is very doubtful whether it will be practicable to complete the track from here to Rocky Mountain in time to get the rolling stock and material there before the ice on the extensive intervening swamps becomes unsafe. In that case the proposed plan of building a permanent track southward to Winnipeg from the Rocky gaps at Stoney Mountain cannot be accomplished this season.

LATEST FROM TORONTO.

Toronto, March 21.—The Union Methodist Church, corner of Spadina Avenue and College street, was opened this morning by the Rev. Dr. Rhron, of Troy, N. Y., preaching the introductory sermon. The building is constructed of white brick, the style of architecture being the gothic. It was filled to its fullest capacity, which provided seats for 900, at a cost of about $12,000.

Every bed in the hospital is at present occupied, there being 226 patients registered on the books to-day.

To-day being Palm Sunday, special services were held in the various Catholic churches.

A circular from Dr. King, of this city, the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Ontario of I. O. O. F., recently published, shows that the total number of lodges are 184; the present membership is 12,986, and the amount of relief paid out during the year was $23,225.82, being an average of $130 per lodge. The receipts of subordinate lodges for the same period were $108,945.57.

Col. Bob Ingersoll will shortly make a lecturing tour through Canada, visiting the principal cities and towns. He will be under the management of Mr. Barnes, of the Royal Opera House, of this city.

LATEST FROM MONTREAL.

Montreal, March 20.—Mr. J. P. Sexton, son of the late Recorder, makes the seventh candidate in the field for the vacant position.

The body of the late Mr. Masse, notary, which was stolen from the vault of the Parish Church, of Richelieu, by medical students, has been recovered in this city. The police have a clue to the guilty parties.

Ald. Thibault is a second candidate in the Conservative interest for Chateauguay County.

Jno. Boaner has been captured for two hundred and forty-five dollars.

The local Board of Trade has forwarded a strong-worded memorial to the Minister of Railways, requesting that he will take measures to have the Welland Canal opened at the usual early period, as any delay like that reported in the press as probable would be disastrous to the carrying trade of the Dominion.

Panic in a Church.

St. John, N. B., March 21.—A panic occurred in St. Peter's (R. C.) Church, Portland, this evening. While a very large congregation was attending the concluding service of the forty hour devotions, a piece of plaster fell, causing an alarm and an instantaneous rush for the doors. Order was restored in a few moments, and, fortunately, there was not a single accident. Half a dozen women fainted.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

A Number of Men Injured at the Island in Toronto Bay.

Toronto, March 21.—An accident of a serious nature occurred at Hanlan's new hotel on the island at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. A number fifteen men were engaged on the work of placing the rafters in position when a heavy gust of wind from the lake levelled the structure with the ground. After the accident a wild scene of excitement ensued. The champion oarsman, with the assistance of those who escaped injury, set to work to release the unfortunate men from the fallen timbers. Those who were injured are named as follows:—Thos. Johnson, foreman carpenter, shoulder dislocated; Robert McGinnis, carpenter, foot; P. McQuinn, laborer, arm dislocated; Wm. Beckett, carpenter, leg injured and face cut; John Campbell, carpenter, foot sprained; Wm. Elder, carpenter, badly bruised about the body; Peter Sinclair and an unknown man, arms hurt. Hanlan immediately boarded a tug lying at his wharf, and which was used for carrying supplies, and started across the bay to the city for medical assistance. At 7.30 this morning the men were carried to the steps on the steam

RUIN FOR CANADA.

The people of this country have now for some eighteen months been dosed even ad nauseam with bold assertions, mingled with confident predictions, that the Dominion of Canada either is, or is just about to be, hopelessly ruined by the commercial and financial policy of the present Government. It is in vain that nineteen-twentieths of those whose interests are mainly affected, have declared themselves in opposition to this statement made on their behalf, but without their concurrence and in direct contradiction of their own experience and most solemn convictions. This important fact is of no avail whatever with the public men and journalists, who seem to have been retained by themselves to speak for and represent clients, who firmly repudiate such advocacy. The people of Canada, whether engaged in agricultural, commercial or manufacturing pursuits, have given a more unanimous verdict on this subject than they ever did on any other question submitted to them, and it must be admitted even by the enemies of the present tariff that the question was amply discussed in all its bearings before this verdict was rendered. It was indirectly before the people long before the dissolution, and after its formal submission to the national jury, the silent advocates of the old tariff and a Grit policy were heard, until it was evident that they had nothing more to say. This defence of a system which, in their hands at least, had brought the people face to face with national bankruptcy, was listened to with indifference, if not contempt, and they declared on the 17th, with wonderful unanimity, that they had faith no longer—neither in their doctrine nor in themselves. On every opportunity afforded the people since, they have confirmed the deliverance then given, and they have taken special pride in showing to the world how little they value opinions enunciated by Grit statesmen and journalists, and how honestly they scorn the motives that actuate them in their course.

The farmers of Canada are the objects of their most tender solicitude, and on this class especially have been lavished the sympathy and condolence of these bitter opponents of the Tilley tariff. Now, no one can blame them for remaining unconvinced by the arguments already adduced, and by the experience already enjoyed upon the working of this question provided their only object was the good of the people and the progress of the Dominion. But if this were the case, then the new system, having been launched and placed upon its trial, honesty and prudence would alike dictate the propriety of allowing the new tariff laws full time and a fair trial. The friends of the National Policy are now in power with such a sweeping majority as puts out of the question all hope of displacing them for the present Parliamentary term at least, and, therefore, every argument brought forward by the Opposition against this tariff and based upon either mistaken views or willful misrepresentation, will have been found out long before they could be made available in changing the complexion of the House. In the meantime, if the present fiscal arrangements should be found to have been based upon a false foundation, and with a five years' experience proved to have worked woe rather than weal to the commonwealth of Canada, then this system, now assailed in vain, and assailed not without loss of patience and hopes to the assailants, will be ready to totter and fall of its own weight.

A more temperate opposition, therefore, to a scheme in which such a vast majority of the people have expressed implicit confidence, and which such an overwhelming majority of their representatives support, would be more likely to secure the respect of the people and conduce to the regaining of that confidence lately exercised in pursuit of a selfish object. A great deal of what is served out to the people of the Dominion as proof of the unwisdom of the Tilley tariff is such pitiful trash, and so evidently got up for effect, that to the least intellectual of the readers of Opposition literature can discover the intent and estimate the value for themselves. The farmer is coolly told he is daily and hourly robbed and ruined by the operation of these laws; but the joyous feelings with which he surveys his present stores, and the bright anticipations in which he feels warranted to indulge respecting the future, enable him to live cheerfully and sleep soundly under these gloomy valetudinations and stern realities with which he is so constantly douched by the Grit croakers. The same course is pursued by the Opposition press and speakers in reference to the mercantile class. If these people were only open to conviction, they would long since have wound up their business and retired, while yet they had something to retire on, and before this gaunt ruin so forcibly depicted in these ominous wailings overtakes them. But the merchant trusts more to his balance sheet and bank account than to Grit predictions, and while the former tell a flattering tale, he is able to possess his soul in patience and smile sweetly amid the imaginary ruin that surrounds him. These prophets of dire distress are not quite so severe upon the manufacturing classes. These are the bloated aristocrats of trade, the selfish, grasping monopolists, who amass enormous fortunes out of the working classes, and who coin into gold dollars each drop of blood and sweat tortured out of the vital energies of the poor.

Now the people know and know well that all this is pitiful rant, without even a respectable element of truth on which to rest. If the people feel as here set forth by the Opposition, let them speak. All that can yet be produced or has been produced as a feeling in opposition to the Tilley reform of the tariff, is but a drop in the bucket compared with the all but universal approval that has been accorded to it, and it may be taken for granted, that when the present tariff presses heavily upon the industries of the country, and starts its prospects for the future, it will then be in order for those who suffer to complain, and demand a redress of the grievances under which they labor. In the meantime, they who speak for this class evidently do not represent them truly, and until they who bear the burdens complain that these burdens have been made heavier rather than lighter by the new tariff, the course pursued by the Opposition, and their persistent misrepresentations of the prosperity of the country, must be held as made in the interests of a party, not in the interests of the people of Canada.

CONSERVATIVE PROSPECTS IN ENGLAND.

The rather extravagant hopes expressed by the London Daily News, as lately cabled, in regard to the Liberal election prospects in England, are more than offset by the admissions of more candid Liberals. The London correspondent of the Montreal Witness may not be regarded as likely to give very favorable testimony for the Conservatives unless compelled to do so by an undeniable state of affairs, yet he says in his last letter that the "Conservative newspapers are fairly bursting with jubilant hopefulness." The correspondent goes on to say:—

"The clouds are clearing, the fog is gone, the winter of national discontent has melted away, and on the full tide of the nation's hope the Tory party expect to sail safely into the haven of renewed power. And it must be owned that these expectations are very likely to be fulfilled. Lord Beaconsfield is nothing if not lucky. To be sure, his dazzling Berlin and Cyprus achievements were for a time eclipsed and the little campaigns with which the nation was keeping its hand in seemed to offer more plague than profit. But Zulu and Afghan succumbed; and the last little idea of utilizing Persia as a sort of buffer against Russia meets with considerable favor. Even the terrible news from St. Petersburg is a godsend to the Beaconsfield Government. It seems to show Russia so cled and crippled as to be unable to offer effective resistance to the quiet consolidation of British projects. With an enemy not at, but within the gates, a foreign war of any dimensions would seem out of the question. So our English cart can lay his plans as he chooses, unconcerned about king or kaiser.

"Another windfall for the Conservatives is the prosperous state of the Indian exchequer. A Chancellor with a surplus may defy even an Opposition which has a secret policy at its head. A strong point against the Government has been the cost of the Afghan war, but the average Briton will think far less of its unrighteousness when he finds that somebody else has to pay the charges. No; there is no denying that the Indian budget is another dash to Liberal hopes. And I am afraid that Lord George Hamilton is justified in his confident expectation that Mr. Gladstone will be beaten in Midlothian, and the party generally beaten throughout the country. Of course, unforeseen causes may work presently to affect this easy prediction; but it cannot be denied that the Liberal prospects are at present deeply clouded."

PERTINENT TESTIMONY.

Some of our Grit contemporaries having called in question a recent statement in these columns, to the effect that there is scarcely a single town or city in the Dominion that hasnot experienced some revival of trade, some new industries opened or old ones extended, the Huron Record bertikes as follows:—"We know full well that every resident of Blyth, at least, is well aware that business in our village has largely increased during the past year. Our population, we learn from good authority, has increased by some three hundred. Our principal merchants declare business quite brisk; our salt well is in full blast; the proprietor of our planing mill, sash and door factory has more work on hand than can be turned out without putting on extra hands, and, in fact, we do not know of a single instance in which business is not as good or better to-day than it was twelve months ago. Blyth, at least, is prospering. We Are You, that there is at least one village in the county of Huron which has felt the beneficial effects of a National Policy that is calculated to promote the interests of the country at large.

The Tay Bridge disaster proves on examination to be the result of the grossest criminal negligence. The evidence of the defective construction of the bridge is overwhelming. Moulders employed in the work of making the cast iron columns say that in twenty-seven years' experience they never saw worse material; holes and cracks were filled up with cement so as to conceal the defects, and none of the imperfect columns, which were numerous, were broken up, but all went into the bridge. The testimony of one of the foremen, that the iron was "not so terribly bad for building iron," botokens that other disasters of a similar nature may be imminent, wherever structures from these iron works are to be found. The wonder is not that the accident occurred, but that it did not occur long before. It is in testimony that although a rule of the railway company is that no train should go faster than twenty five miles an hour when crossing the bridge, the actual speed averaged thirty five miles an hour. Sometimes, when trains were late, they ran across the bridge as fast as forty-two and forty-seven miles an hour.

The next volume of Dickens' letters will be read with deep interest. It contains also that big enough talk of correspondence between Mr. Dickens and the late Lord Lytton on the subject of "spiritualism." These two famous writers held opinions on that subject precisely opposed to each other, and their letters are understood to convey the grounds for their antagonistic beliefs. The mystical tendency early foreshadowed in "Vanoni," and which found confirmatory expression in "A Strange Story," was characteristic of a mind readily attracted by theories and their alleged illustration in facts which were repellant to the author of Pickwick and the creator of Gradgrind; and it will be to many a subject of curiosity to see how the respective notions of these two celebrated men were set forth and upheld.

An extraordinary outrage is reported from County Galway, Ireland. Seven acres of grass land at Cloobarn, on the estate of Major Vesey, were dug up and rendered worthless as pasture land. The land formed a portion of a larger farm held by a tenant named Geraghny, who, being in arrears, had been forgiven his debt and made to surrender this part. He was left in possession of a piece of land which was thought sufficient for him, and the rest was given to two other tenants. There must have been 200 men at work in cutting up the field. They dug in several places shapes of coffins, and the words "Keep of the Hills." They also posted threatening notices on the houses of the new tenants.

The increase in cable telegraph business is so great that two new cables are to be laid the coming summer by the Anglo-American Cable Company, one from Valentia to Heart's Content, with a new form of outer covering for its better protection in deep sea, and the second from Pisccntia to Sydney, touching at St. Pierre, containing at least three conducting wires, with an exceptionally heavy outer covering, weighing seven tons per knot, and the shore ends of a heavier type. In consequence of this increase of capacity, the Western Union Telegraph Company are to put up an additional wire to be worked quadruplex.

A contemporary observes:—"We used to be under the impression that there was a Senator of the Dominion by the name of Brown; but the other day we happened to glance at the list of members in attendance, as given in the Votes and Proceedings, and as we didn't see the familiar name there, we had the curiosity to look further, revealing the fact that he has not yet put in an appearance this session."

The Salvation Army has issued a formal high sounding proclamation, in which it threatens to leave New York if the Mayor does not permit its members to preach in the streets. The ordinance forbids such preaching except by regularly ordained ministers. Perhaps the ordinance might be amended. It certainly discriminates in this respect somewhat unjustly.

The Government Bill on that subject proposes to extend the operation of the Act for the Better Prevention of Crime "until the end of the new next ensuing session of Parliament."

IMMIGRATION.

From immigration reports just submitted it appears that last year the arrivals from Britain numbered 41,000 persons, mostly of the agricultural class. There has been a general decrease in the expenditure of the department except in the item of assistance to the west from Quebec. Of that sum Ontario paid two-thirds, and the Dominion one-third. From Toronto west, the Ontario Government paid the free passage of those requiring such aid. The tenant farmers' delegates, who visited this country last season, have all reported very favorably of their mission. The effect of these reports is said to be marvellous, and we may confidently expect a large influx of this desirable class of settlers during the present year. As a result of this general circulation of the reports throughout England, Mr. Annand, the Dominion Agent, is in daily receipt of from fifty to one hundred letters. The cost of the delegations to the Canadian Government was about $10,000. One of the most gratifying facts which have come out is that no less than ten thousand immigrants came to Canada from the United States in 1879. It shows that if some of our own people have emigrated to the other side, they have gone to a land with which large numbers who have tried it are disatisfied.

The Boston Advertiser of Saturday says It is stated that the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada have decided to remove their Portland office to Boston, for the purpose of facilitating and increasing the business of the corporation. In view of the attempt in railroad circles during the past two months, to the effect that the Grand Trunk Railway was anxious to get to this city over its own iron it is surmised that the company's relations with the Eastern road will be of a more intimate character in the near future. The removal of the company's office to Boston also may have some connection with recent reports that the Grand Trunk steamships intend hereafter to make this port a point of departure for Europe, instead of Portland. And in connection with the improvement of the Tudor wharf property for steamship purposes, which has just been decided upon, it is reasonable to believe that the transfer of the Portland office of the Grand Trunk road to this city has more significance than the mere announcement of the change would seem to indicate. The fact that the Hoosac tunnel is the Erie Railway's connection with the Hoosac tunnel route has given an impetus to the foreign export trade of this city, and that it will have a tendency to attract other lines of foreign steamships hither. The fact that steamships can be loaded at this port with grain for Europe at a less expense than at New York would seem to indicate that the Hoosac tunnel route is about to assert itself as a good investment for the State and an advantage to commercial Boston.

The Change of Venue Denounced.

Stratford Beacon.

It is reported that a strong effort has been made to get a change of venue in the trial of the men accused of murdering the Donnellys. We doubt very much if it is wise to resort to such an unusual procedure. To drag these unfortunate men away to another county seems more like persecution than prosecution. In all but other cases in which political issues are involved it may sometimes be necessary to change the venue, but in a matter like the Biddulph murder the circumstances are entirely different. An effort to parade on such a case as this is keeping with the spirit of the times. No one doubts that it is a felony to shoot men and club them to death. The only issue to be tried is the guilt of the number belonging to another county. And this leads us to say that a change of venue will be a farce on every count in the case. It will then be presented to the Chambers, beginning their day's labor. Practice was somewhat delayed at both universities owing to the presence of Ice in the rivers, but the trials showed that the Oxford men were rather a better lot all round than those of 1879. Cambridge was at first the favorite at very considerable odds, but the watchers soon pronounced that the Oxford was the superior crew, and for some days past the Dark Blues have been backed so strongly as to become hot favorites. The course over which the Oxford-Cambridge races are rowed has already been described on the occasion of previous races. It is up the Thames from Putney bridge to the Ship Inn at Mortlake, the river making a big bend after that the course is a horseshoe, with the two ends a little elongated and turned up. The crews tow up Crabtree Reach, past Craven Cottage, the grass wharf (one mile) Rose Cottage, the Doves Inn, Dove's Villa, the Soap Works (one and a-half miles), and the distillery to Hammersmith bridge (one and three-quarter miles). At the top of the curve is The Doves (two miles), and just beyond the Oil Mills, when the course lies down Corney Reach (two and a-half miles), past Chiswick Eyot (or island) and Chiswick Church into Horse Reach (three miles), become Barnes, Barnes' bridge (three and five-eighth miles), the White Hart, the brewery (four miles), with the finish among the osier beds.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN NOTES.

An Englishman well acquainted with Herr Krupp's establishment at Essen says that since the Turco-Russian war Russia has purchased here no fewer than 700 cannon, mostly of large calibre.

Ms. ALLPORT, the retiring traffic manager of the English Midland Railway, has a pension for life of £1,200 a year, at a salary of £4,000 a year. He now takes a seat at the board worth about £800 a year, and is president with a handsome salary of £10,000. His family is to receive a service of plate, and his portrait is to be painted.

The French Minister of Dessation, as a disciplinary tribunal, has dismissed from office M. Nourry, Deputy Judge at Niort, for protesting in a public meeting at Niort against the suspension of a Mayor who had got up petitions against clause 7 and attended a Legitimist banquet. He further he avowed himself the "irreconcilable enemy" of the Republic.

Even the most innocent and harmless of royal folks across the Atlantic are in mortal terror for their lives in these days. Some practical joker exploded a fire cracker as the carriage of the Queen of the Belgians was passing the other night, and her Majesty fainted away at the noise. Her attendants, who had not been informed of the cause of the explosion, thought that the Queen had been shot at by an assassin, and were in a terrible state of excitement.

The Paris correspondent of the London Truth says:—"Mr. James B. Keene's thirteen race horses are on their way to England. The two old horses, American Spendthrift and Lord Murphy, have each of them cost above £3,000. Lord Murphy's career on the British turf will be watched with interest, as he is purely American-bred horse. Spendthrift is the son of an imported Australian, who is himself the son of West Australian. All the other horses are 2 year olds, bred in Kentucky. When Mr. Keene's horses arrive at Newmarket there will be about 150 foreign horses in training there."

The idea of connecting the Baltic with the North Sea by a canal navigable for large sea going ships and steamers has of late been again much discussed in Germany. A canal from St. Margareten-Brunsbuttel, in the estuary of the Elbe, to Kiel or Eckernford, in the Baltic, would save vessels sailing to the latter sea from the North Sea a troublesome detour of 204 nautical miles through the intricate waters of the Cattegat and Sound, while it would shorten the voyage of vessels sailing from the estuary of the Elbe or Weser by 387 miles. Consequently, steamers using the proposed canal would save from 21 to 48 hours, and sailing vessels probably at least a week.

He had been at Walkerton, intelgol too freely, reached Riversdale about 10 o'clock at night, and was found next morning dead, on the side of the road, between the village and his home.

THE RACE FOR THE LIVERPOOL SPRING CUP.

London, March 20.—The Sportsman and Bell's Life concur in stating that it was the general opinion in the Paddock and Ring yesterday that the stewards would award the Liverpool spring cup to Parole. Both journals say there was certainly foul riding, but not more than is frequently passed over without notice, but if a hard and fast line is to be drawn hereafter, no objection can be taken to the precedent. The stewards who investigated the case yesterday were Lords Coventry, Sefton and Marcus Beresford, W. Gerard and Col. Forbes.

The reporter of the Times, in his account of the race, says:—When half-way up the distance, Advance tried to get through on the rails, but there was no room, and Archer, who rode, had to pull round both Strathblane and Parole.

WILL CONTEST THE SEAT.

Dublin, March 20.—Major Gray will contest Carlow County for a seat in Parliament.

LOSS OF LIVE STOCK.

Liverpool, March 20.—The steamer Palestine, from Boston, lost many sheep, owing to the heavy weather.

THE LONDON "TIMES" ON THE PANAMA SHIP CANAL AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

London, March 20.—The Times, on the Panama ship canal, says:—The Monroe doctrine, even in its most restricted shape, has never been admitted into the law of nations. Certainly no such extreme interpretation has been attempted to be fastened upon it by American as it is made to bear in President Hayes' messages to Congress, and the resolutions of the Select Committee of the House of Representatives. According to these two statements, had the Colombian Confederation itself undertaken charge of the project, the United States would have been justified in prohibiting the works. That the United States, by furnishing the money, should obtain a special right to watch over the safety and peaceable use of the new channel is what Europe, and particularly Great Britain, would most of all desire, but the world is entitled to ask the United States the following plain question, Has Lesseps do the thing himself by the resources at his command or to charge themselves with the task.

FRANCE.

THE WAR ON THE JESUITS.

Paris, March 20.—A circular appears in this morning's papers, marked "Confidential." It is addressed by M. Andrieux to all the Commissaries of Police in this city, calling upon them to hand in, within twenty days, exact lists of all authorized and unauthorized educational, charitable and religious communities in their respective districts. It instructs them to mention particularly those congregations governed by foreign superiors, and to make of them a separate list from those subject to the jurisdiction of bishops. The Bonapartist organ, L'Ordre, accuses the rival journal of the same political affiliation, Le Pays, of superb ignorance for affirming that the existing laws against the Jesuits are a dilmora of the time, but in a measure like the Oxford men are all from different colleges, their places of study being in their order Brasnose, Hertford, Keble, Pembroke, Exeter, University, Magdalen, Christ Church and Corpus. The Cambridge crew, Jones, Armytage and Baillie belong to Jesus College, Sandford, Barton and Clarke to Lady Margaret, Warlow and Prior to Queens', and Davis to First Trinity. There was a good deal of pressure put on the Oxford bow, as it was in 1864, 1866 and 1865, rowed down river on the ebb-tide, both by those who feared to see the usual large and fashionable attendance, and by the innkeepers and others who profit by a late race and a long day, but it was in vain. It is worthy of remark that the last early race took place in 1866, when there was a tremendous crowd, the working people coming in thousands to see the race before the day's work began. The Oxford crew are somewhat delayed at both universities owing to the presence of Ice in the rivers, but the trials showed that the Oxford men were rather a better lot all round than those of 1879. Cambridge was at first the favorite at very considerable odds, but the watchers soon pronounced that the Oxford was the superior crew, and for some days past the Dark Blues have been backed so strongly as to become hot favorites. The course over which the Oxford-Cambridge races are rowed has already been described on the occasion of previous races. ITALY.

STORMY SCENE IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Rome, March 20.—During a heated debate in the Chamber of Deputies Signor Mancini remarked that Baught, Minister of Public Instruction in the Minghetti Cabinet, had treated the Left with Olympic hauteur. He was called upon by the President to moderate his language. He answered that the expression was not an insult, and engaged in a discussion with the President, who finally left the chair, and the Vice-President adjourned the session, but Baught tendered his resignation when the Deputies again met, but it was not accepted.

In the Chamber of Deputies, to-day, debate on the Government foreign policy ended, and a vote of confidence in the Ministry passed—290 to 89. Previous to the vote of confidence, Minghetti, of the Right, declared that he fully accepted Premier Cairoli's declarations relating to Italia Irredenta agitation, and the maintainance of good relations with Austria. Twelve members of the extreme Left abstained from voting.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT—SEVEN PERSONS KILLED.

London, March 20.—A dispatch from Halle, Saxony, says:—In a collision between two passenger trains at the railway station here seven passengers were killed and many injured. Several railway carriages were broken to pieces.

A Kentucky "Calamity."

Louisville, March 19.—A Courier-Journal special from Grayson, Ky., says:—"Another "calamity" took place on Upper Big Sinking Creek, Carter County, last night. A party of regulators, consisting of 100 citizens, rode to James Binion's house, asked for John Boggs, quite a notorious character, who was concealed about the house. Binion refused to open the door, but commenced a fusilade on the regulators, firing 50 shots, killing it is believed, one of them. This enraged the regulators, who had come mostly to notify Boggs to leave the country, and in their rage they broke down the doors of the house. In the onslaught three shots were fired at Binion, who was instantly killed, while a "rock" thrown at the door to break it down hit Binion's wife and broke her right leg. Thereupon the regulators seized John Boggs, and after a short trial took him to a walnut tree, standing fifteen steps from the house, where they hung him with a cotton rope, and then fired two shots at him. one perstrating his baby, the other piercing his hand. In this condition Boggs was found this morning by Dr. Stesl, who cut the rope and took his corpse to Boggs's family. A 19-year old son of Binion was also arrested and whipped by the regulators for having joined the fusilade against them.

The University Boat Race.

The Contest To Day—Personnel of the Crews.

London, March 20.—There is no little disappointment experienced here to day, and the clerk of the weather receives a liberal supply of uncomplimentary addresses. The great boat race, which was to take place between the Oxford and Cambridge University crews, is postponed until Monday morning, when the start will be made at half past ten o'clock. The weather to-day rendered the postponement necessary. The morning was raw and chilly, a white fog hanging over the streets of the metropolis and being so dense on the river as to exclude every object from sight. This impenetrable pall continued so long that it was soon felt that it would be impossible to row the race. It is rarely, indeed, that a beautiful day can be counted on for the contest, which is made a semi-holiday for London. Last year and three years previous the race was rowed in the afternoon, and, the hour being propitious, the concourse of people on the banks, the carriages and the ladies made the scene quite picturesque. This morning the fog and gloom hung heavily over the river, making the spectators feel very uncomfortable. The attendance on the banks of the river from Putney Bridge to Mortlake was comparatively thin, but thousands upon thousands lined the tow-path. Many of the well-known points usually thronged by ladies wearing the badge of their favorite University were almost tenantless. The numerous stands which were erected as a thriving business were all but deserted, and the elongated countenances of their proprietors indicated anything but a gala day for them. At half past eight o'clock the hour set for the start, it was announced that the race would be postponed until Monday.

London, March 21.—To-morrow (Monday) will take place the thirty-seventh regular boat-race between the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, over the customary course, from Putney to Mortlake, with a very good chance—for the betting is an almost infallible guide to the merits of the two crews—for Oxford increasing her lead in victories from one race to two. The following are the names of the two crews and their weights:—

Oxford—Dark Blues.
Place.	Name.	Age.	Lbs.
Bow	H. M. F. Poole		121
2	H. E. Brown		130
3	F. M. Hargreaves		149
4	R. D. Bourchier		154
5	H. S. Kindersley		157
6	G. P. Rowe		157
7	J. H. T. Warren		157
Stroke	R. H. West		142
Cox	G. A. W. Hunt		103
Cambridge—Light Blue.
Place.	Name.	Age.	Lbs.
Bow	H. R. Evans		139
2	G. Sandford		153
3	W. Barton		160
4	C. Warlow		166
5	G. Armytage		182
6	H. O. Jones		182
7	R. G. Prior		182
Stroke	W. W. Baillie		158
Cox	R. S. Gaeke		112

Of the Oxford crew, Wharton and Southwell rowed last year, and Southwell also rowed in the crew of 1878. Of the Cambridge men, Sandford and Davis rowed last year, Davis then being stroke, while Jones rowed bow in 1878. The Oxford men are all from different colleges, their places of study being in their order Brasnose, Hertford, Keble, Pembroke, Exeter, University, Magdalen, Christ Church and Corpus. The Cambridge crew, Jones, Armytage and Baillie belong to Jesus College, Sandford, Barton and Clarke to Lady Margaret, Warlow and Prior to Queens', and Davis to First Trinity. There was a good deal of pressure put on the Oxford bow, as it was in 1864, 1866 and 1865, rowed down river on the ebb-tide, both by those who feared to see the usual large and fashionable attendance, and by the innkeepers and others who profit by a late race and a long day, but it was in vain. It is worthy of remark that the last early race took place in 1866, when there was a tremendous crowd, the working people coming in thousands to see the race before the day's work began. The Oxford crew are somewhat delayed at both universities owing to the presence of Ice in the rivers, but the trials showed that the Oxford men were rather a better lot all round than those of 1879. Cambridge was at first the favorite at very considerable odds, but the watchers soon pronounced that the Oxford was the superior crew, and for some days past the Dark Blues have been backed so strongly as to become hot favorites. The course over which the Oxford-Cambridge races are rowed has already been described on the occasion of previous races. It is up the Thames from Putney bridge to the Ship Inn at Mortlake, the river making a big bend after that the course is a horseshoe, with the two ends a little elongated and turned up. The crews tow up Crabtree Reach, past Craven Cottage, the grass wharf (one mile) Rose Cottage, the Doves Inn, Dove's Villa, the Soap Works (one and a-half miles), and the distillery to Hammersmith bridge (one and three-quarter miles). At the top of the curve is The Doves (two miles), and just beyond the Oil Mills, when the course lies down Corney Reach (two and a-half miles), past Chiswick Eyot (or island) and Chiswick Church into Horse Reach (three miles), become Barnes, Barnes' bridge (three and five-eighth miles), the White Hart, the brewery (four miles), with the finish among the osier beds.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.

TO THE

Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:

This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America. Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as to trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods, figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

BARBARA.

"Of course not. If they can't pay, they must turn out. What is it to me that they and their people have had the land seventy years? That kind of sentiment won't fill my pockets."

The client took up his walking stick, which was cut out of a young tree, and waved it towards the door slowly, hesitatingly, in danger of falling rock on the office floor in the intensity of his wonderment. When the two girls had entered he had been alarmed in his business, and had not honored them with a glance. Only by the clerk's announcement and the rustling of their garments had he known that they were women. Now he perceived that one of them was a lovelier woman than his eyes had ever looked upon, or so at least Barbara seemed to him in this moment of surprise. He was not a student of female loveliness, or of art, or books, or any of those things which make life beautiful; but he had an instinctive idea that this face on which his eyes were riveted was perfect beauty.

He forgave it for a few more words to Mr. Trevornock, and then went slowly out of the room, with his gaze fixed on Barbara's face.

"What an utterly horrid man I" exclaimed Flossie, directly the outer door had shut on the stranger.

"You wouldn't say that if you knew who he was," said Mr. Trevornock.

"Yes, I should. My knowledge of him wouldn't make the slightest difference. Such hair, such hands, such clothes, such boots, such a hat! The creature will haunt me like a nightmare. Barbara, are all your clients like that, pa?"

"I wish they were. That is one of the richest men in Cornwall."

"Then what a beggarly county Cornwall must be!" retorted Flossie. "Can't the poor thing afford himself a decent pair of boots?"

"The poor thing could think no more of buying a thousand acres of land than you would of having a new bonnet," retorted Mr. Trevornock.

And your bonnets cost ridiculous books. Perhaps they are fashionable in Cornwall, though? Really people should not be allowed to come to London without being aided and abetted by a competent person. And pray what is this gray gentleman?"

"He is one of the largest land owners between Launceston and St. Ives," replied Mr. Trevornock. "He is the owner of slate quarries that produce ten thousand a year. His grandfather was three times member for this county. He belongs to one of the oldest families in Cornwall. His name is Vyvyan Burnell. Do you want to know anything more about him?"

"Yes," answered the matter-of-fact Flossie. "I should like to know who's his tailor; so that, in the unlikely event of my ever wanting a riding habit, I might go to somebody else."

"Ah," sighed Mr. Trevornock, producing his penknife, and using it to cut a notch in his nails, which had been constrained to neglect for the last hour, "if your sister could marry such a man as that, now, instead of her beggarly Indian captain, she would be a lucky woman."

"I would not exchange my Indian captain for an emperor," said Barbara, flaming up at this insult to her absent lover. "And as for that horrid gray man, I would not marry him if I was a beggar in the street, and he offered me half his fortune."

"Well, you are not likely to be tempted," said Mr. Trevornock. "Penruth is not a marrying man. He has come to eight-and-forty years of age without ever thinking of a wife. It is very likely he'll begin now."

"Eight-and-forty!" echoed Flossie, "I should have thought he was a hundred. He looks like a fossil."

"So would you, perhaps, if you had lived the best part of your life in a wild country on the centre of a pasture the Cornish moors, with only a brother and sister for your companions, and nothing to differ from morning till night but richmond your own land."

"Then why does he do it?" demanded Flossie. "Why don't he take a house in London, and enjoy himself? Why hasn't he a yacht? Why doesn't he keep racehorses? Is he a miser?"

"I think not. Debts have never fallen into the way of adding much drift, sandwiched with other rich men. His portage a little dull. He has no tastes or music. He has been brought up a stupid, secluded way; and he observes to his duties and his old country house as the real observes to his shell. He is not a bad fellow by any means."

"I dare say not, to those who can appreciate him," sneered Flossie.

Barbara gazed dreamily out of the window at a blank spoadbus sky, and sighed in a yawn.

Flossie proceeded in the business of the day. She made her application with firmness, but with as much modesty as she could command; and Mr. Trevornock yielded with a beargrace than usual, tossing three sovereigns across his desk for his younger daughter to pick up from among his papers. She she did deftly, and then pushed through a little wicket.

"We walked all the way here," she said, "and it was very warm. I am sure you would not like us to walk home under the mid-day sun. If ye could spare a little silver—"

"I wonder you dint ask for my teeth," growled the outraged parent, as he reluctantly produced three shillings.

"They wouldn't be any use to us," said Flossie, naively; "but a few pence to buy some buns."

"Oh, dense take ye!" cried Mr. Trevornock, flinging her another sixpence. "Why can't you ask for what you want at once? Here, do you want any paper and envelopes, sealing wax, pens?"

He shoved some stationery into a sheet of newspaper, and handed the packet to his unabashed child.

"If you know what a struggle it is for us to buy even those trifles," said Flossie, apologetically.

"Oh, nonsense! Tax my father's butter off than I am. She has office to keep, no clerks to pay."

"No; but she has two daughters to provide for," answered Barbara, who rarely took any part in these discussions.

"Well, good-by, girls," said her father, hurriedly. "I've a good deal of work to get through this morning."

His daughters took the hint and their departure, Flossie delighted with her success.

"What would made if she hadn't me?" she exclaimed, triumphantly.

CHAPTER XI.

PATERNAL INSIGHT IN MR. T.

Three days after that visit to the office in Gray's Inn, the most wonderful event had passed. Mr. Trevornock sent his elder daughter a card for a private box at the Haymarket Theatre.

Such a thing had never before befallen the little family in Seth Lane. That Mr. Trevornock should voluntarily stretch forth his hand to give them pleasure was as altogether inscrutable thing.

"It doesn't look like an order," remarked Flossie, with a learned air, "but it must be one, all the same. Mr. T. would never put his head in his pocket to buy us a treat of this kind, I suppose someone gave him the ticket, and he didn't know what to do with it, until it flashed upon him all at once that he had a wife and daughters."

There was even a little note with the ticket:—

"DEAR BARBARA,—I inclose a box for the Haymarket for next Tuesday evening. Ask your mother to take you and Flora. I understand the comedy now being performed there is well worth seeing.

Your affectionate father,

"T. TREVORNOCK."

"It's monstrously civil of him," said Flossie. "I begin to think that he must be dotingly fond of us, after all."

Hunting Crows by Night.

For three nights parties of eight or ten men have been going out to the crows' roost, a mile from the city, and slaying them hip and thigh. They enter the bush and fire at once, at which the crows rise and fire at once, making a sound which resembles thunder. They rise only a short distance above the trees and circle around, forming a black mass, into which the huntsmen fire, sometimes killing half a dozen at a shot. An old negro man, who does all the cooking, went through the lines in the vicinity, and reports that he collected nine bags three hundred of the birds.—[Memphis (Tenn.) Avalanche.

Gleanings from the Winnipeg and Provincial Papers.

WINNIPEG AND VICINITY.

In a recent address presented to Mr. R. W. Prittie, by his party of exconstituents, thanks were tendered to the officials of the railway lines over which they had passed, excepting the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba line and Pembina Branch. The Times says this exception seems strange, as every one knows that the Superintendent, Mr. Lynskey, during the short time he has occupied that position, has been indefatigable in his efforts to serve the travelling public. He cannot control the elements, nor can he remove mountains of snow and contend with the other difficulties to be encountered without their attendant inconveniences being felt by those who happen to be travelling on the road. But we venture to assert that he and his assistants have done their utmost to facilitate travelling and that, while admitting the fact that serious delays and inconveniences have occurred, in no way is the blame to be attached to the officials for any "hardships endured." In addition to this it has been shown by the passengers that the censure was written in the address after they had signed it.

John Collins was been working on the St. Paul and Pacific of late. He came to St. Boniface a few days ago and got drunk. He persistently kept drunk. On Thursday night he went out, laid down in the snow and was badly frozen before he was picked up. Yesterday morning he got another touch of the frost. He looks very bad, his head being greatly swelled and his skin being badly disordered—in fact he is perfectly black down to the shoulders. Not being able to obtain admission to the hospital, he was lodged in gaol.

In contradistinction to the views held by Prittie's party, the following extract from a letter in the Free Press goes to show that the railway authorities of the Province must see not the persons they have been elected to. Prittie and his party are concerned may feel thankful that the Pembina Branch is in the hands of the Government, and under such energetic management as that of Mr. Lynskey. I heard Mr. Patterson remark when he came into the slaughter house at Emerville, that he had been holding the lamp for the last hair with Mr. Lynskey, Superintendent, and Mr. Rowan, District Engineer, and other officials were working side by side shovelling snow from the blocked engines, in order that they might be relieved when the extra engines arrived from St. Boniface.

Mr. A. H. Taylor, of Ottawa, left on the 13th for the East. He expressed himself well pleased with the efforts put forth by Superintendent Lynskey and other officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as well as those of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway.

A gentleman who arrived in Winnipeg from Rat Portage says that the excitement over the mining prospects in that region continues unabated. Mr. Wm. McKinnon has with him a number of specimens of very valuable appearance, and which give evidence of gold in considerable quantities, but it yet remains to be seen whether it will pay to develop those mines.

Winnipeg markets on the 17th: Flour $3.25 per bag; oatmeal, $4.50; wheat 85c per bushel; oats 50c; peas, 40c; corn, 81; barley, 45c; butter, 25c per lb; eggs, 30c per dozen; beef, 8c; pork, 6c to 7c; mutton, 15c; fowls, 4c to 5c; chickens, 40c per pair; potatoes, 35c to 70c. per bushel; wood, $4.50 to $5 per cord.

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE.

Building now commences to be active at the Portage, both at the east and west ends.

A first class hotel is much needed in addition to what we have now.

Mr. Bannister, D.L.S., is now occupied making a map of the municipality of Portage la Prairie, for the use of the Council. The map is about 5½ feet by 3½ feet, the farm reserves being 80 chains to the inch shows the lands and the names of the residents, the parishes of Portage la Prairie, High Bluff and Poplar Point, together with the H. B. lots, the whole being tinted in various colors. The work is an excellent one, and will be very useful for reference.

Land is beginning to change hands rapidly, and the speculative spirit seems rife.

The roads between here and Winnipeg are in a terrible drift of, notwithstanding which the stage and mail have succeeded in getting here in due time.

Some of Paterson's parcle of immigrants arrived at the Portage on Wednesday evening, and all feel that they have found the land of Goshen at last.

There is now a good prospect of a branch of the Merchants' Bank being started here, a gentleman having visited the Portage to lead during the week.

Thomas Wallace is a farmer, and lives a mile or two from the Portage. On Tuesday last he went to load some wood, leaving his wife and child at home. While Mrs. Wallace was out to the barn for a few minutes the house caught fire from a defective stovepipe, and when she returned she found the roof flames had gained such headway that she was unable to extinguish them. She accordingly got all the goods she could out of the house, but most of the contents were burned. A man with a team came along and went on to drive her to a neighbor's house, about three-quarters of a mile distant, but on the way the team became fast in a snow drift, and the lady was compelled to get out and walk the rest of the way with the two children. When she arrived at the neighbor's her feet were badly frozen, and she was pretty well used up. Mrs. Wallace is a sister of Mrs. C. Montgomery and Mrs. John LeCappelain, of Winnipeg.

WEST LYNNE.

Messrs. Thompson & Williams are erecting their implement warehouse. The Maxwell Company have selected Mr. Wm. Bunn, of this place, as their agent. They have got the right man in the right place, as he speaks German fluently.

Large numbers of Mennonites from Red River are arriving daily with their household effects on their way to the prairie west of us, leaving considerable behind to be moved with our snowbanks. As many as fifty teams can be counted at one time here on the streets. They continue to bring in wheat, though in diminished quantities.

Mr. W. Mills, our Collector of Customs, will remove over on Monday, 22nd.

Kaiser Traill and his clerk, Mr. Anderson, camped out on the prairie the whole of Friday night, 19th, during the blizzard. They were returning from Nelsonville, and when they reached a point about three miles from West Lynne they lost the road. The most diligent search failed to discover it. The lights of West Lynne and Emerson were in sight at intervals, but yet the pair could not bring them any nearer. Mr. Traill had his nose slightly frozen. Those hardy settlers seem to enjoy the severest cold and brave the fiercest storms. It is worth remarking that they take good care of themselves, notwithstanding, and go about well clad from ears to heels. In this particular they have doubtless borrowed from the Russians, who are said to stand any amount of heat and any quantity of cold.

The Messrs. Tennant, proprietors of the Emerson Ferry, have removed the ferry building from the east to the west side of the river, and placed it at the foot of Brydge's Avenue, nearly opposite to where it stood on the Emerson side. They think this is the best side for it.

EMERSON AND MORRIS.

The Emerson public school is shut up because the poverty-stricken inhabitants can't afford to buy wood to keep them warm. Emerson, it will be remebered, is the place where they talk about business houses, building bridges, buying fire engines, constructing railways, and so on.—Free Press.

Mr. Irving, of St. John's College, had a narrow escape from freezing to death last week. He left home for Morris to take part in the Masonic concert, and the roads being heavy his horse gave out between Union Point and Morris. No horses being near, he had to stay out in a blizzard all night, and got his feet badly frozen. Great anxiety was felt during the night by his friends in Morris, but not knowing the circumstances no efforts were made to assist him. He arrived home on Saturday.

Morris came near having two papers, but the rival publishers, Messrs. Weldman and Douglas, combined forces, and will unite in giving the Morrisonians a sheet of which they ought to be proud.

Mr. Thomas Tennant, of Emerson, is again to the fore with the first lamb of the season in this neighborhood. One of his ewes had a fine lamb on the 10th inst., and Mr. T. also was the first last year to record a similar production.

Mr. W. J. Curtis, the well-known piano tuner from London, Ont., is in Emerson at present.

Latest information from the Souris River coal fields, located 140 miles west of Emerson, brings the cheering intelligence that at a depth of sixty feet the miners struck a vein of coal seven feet thick, which is exactly the same thickness of the vein now being worked in the "Baby Mine," 40 miles west of Bismarck, Dakota, and about 180 miles south of the Souris River coal fields, and coal from which is being used in the locomotives on the Yellowstone and Dakota divisions of the Northern Pacific Railway.

MINNEDOSA.

Minnedosa, March 11.—The Rev. Thos. Lawson and his wife suffered most severely from the cold last Sunday while on their way here from Rapid City. Mrs. Lawson felt a sleepy sensation overpowering her, and the rev. gentleman was obliged to drive his horse at the top of his speed the last few miles of the journey.

Mr. Jones has his house, for the accommodation of the travelling public, nearly completed, and will move into it at once.

Telephonic communication is to be established between the Dominion Land Office and the post office.

Several teams passed through here today, with the boiler and machinery for Messrs. Roberts' & Whitmster's sawmill.

CRYSTAL CITY.

This go-ahead place is sadly in need of a Land Office agency, and the immigrants and prospective settlers clamor loudly on the Government to have an agent appointed as soon as possible.

Mr. Broomhead has the walls of a store erected on the banks of Cypress Creek. Mr. Baker, the contractor for the store at Crystal, says he will have it completed by the 25th of the present month. Mr. Robt. Rollins, of Centralia, Ont., is coming by the first party to open out a general business in the store.

Mr. West, of the firm of Smith & West, of Seaforth, Ontario, is at present here with a portable saw mill, and reports that he is an immense settlement here to be supplied.

Arrangements have been made for the erection of a steam grist mill at Crystal City, to be ready to start operations by the 1st October next, and in time for the first crop. It will be a great boon to the settlers, as the nearest mill at present is at Mountain City, 45 miles from here. There is also every likelihood of a water mill being established quite long enough, so if they take their seats at the next meeting of the Council I will come forward in behalf of the ratepayers and take steps to bring them to justice.

Yours truly,

JAS. ATHERTON."

I have since made enquiries and find that I was mistaken, and that both Mr. Blanning and Mr. C. Young have the necessary qualification for their respective offices as Councillor and First Deputy Reeve, and I hereby tender to both gentlemen an apology for having asserted to the contrary.

JAS. ATHERTON.

Windsor, March 19, 1880.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

DEAR SIR,—If not trespassing too much upon the columns of your widely circulated journal, shall feel obliged by your publishing the foregoing.

The aspersions set forth in Mr. Atherton's first letter went broadcast throughout the country, much to the detriment, perhaps, of myself and colleagues in the Council, but presume the second effusion explains itself and needs no comment.

Yours truly,

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. PETROLEUM IN MONTREAL.

Although no improvement can be reported in the market, the demand is as brisk as could be expected for this season, with prices a little easier than last week. Regarding the proposed legislation to raise the fire test from 105 to 116, we make the following extract from a circular published by a large refining company in London, Ont., and which has just come to hand:—"To raise the test of Canadian oil will have the effect of increasing the consumption of crude petroleum, as it will take a larger quantity of crude to make a given quantity of refined of the higher test. This must extend ultimately to raise the price of the article." It further says that "there has been a slightly increased demand for refined oil, many sections of the country having cleared off their stocks laid in last December, and that the demand there for black oils and winter pressed oleine is good." The prices are as follow:—Car lots in London, 13½ in Montreal, 16c; five and ten barrel lots, 16c to 17c; single barrels, 17c to 17½.—Post.

Latest Notes by Telegraph and Mail.

The British Cattle Market.

Reported by John Bell & Sons.

London, March 1.—Cattle at market, 2,690; sheep at market, 12,470. Best beef, 8½ to 8¾ per lb.; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 7¾ per lb. Best mutton, 9¾ to 10½ per lb.; inferior and secondary, 7d to 9½ per lb. Cattle trade to-day quiet and sheep and lambs without feature. Supplies not large, but sufficient. Sales progressed quietly, and prices were about 4 per cwt. with those current last week. The sheep pens were fairly well filled; the demand was not active, but was fairly steady at previous currencies.

Liverpool, March 1.—Cattle at market 1,434; sheep at market, 4,609. Best, 6¼ to 8½ per lb; mutton, 7½ to 9½ per lb. The supply of cattle was about the same as last Monday; of sheep less. The demand good for the extreme prices of last market. Sheep sold rather dearer.

Glasgow, March 4.—Cattle at market 1,706; sheep at market, 1,871. Best beef, 8½ to 8¾ per lb; inferior and secondary, 7½ to 7½ per lb. Best mutton, 10½ per lb; inferior and secondary, 7½ to 9½ per lb. An ordinary number of cattle at market to-day; many of good. All kinds in demand, and an advance on last week's prices readily obtained. Short supply of sheep; quality generally good. All kinds in demand, and prices of last week readily obtained.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN CIRCULAR.

Liverpool, March 20, 1880.—A leading grain circular says:—"A fair consumptive demand was generally reported from the British wheat markets during the past week. The diminished offerings of English wheat showed some improvement in condition. English and foreign were both held for fully its par quarter advance. The transactions for cargoes of corn were quite unimportant, though there has been a good business for prompt shipment, chiefly in mixter rates. Pylon, however, are again firmer, an advance obtainable at the commencement of the week being lost. At Liverpool on Tuesday, there has been a moderate inquiry for wheat at about Tuesday's prices. Corn was in moderate demand, and prices unchanged. Mixed corn was 2d. per central higher."

LONDON GROCERY MARKET.

London, March 20.—In Mincing Lane the dullness of the markets has rather increased. The prices of most descriptions of produce have further declined without causing any improvement in the demand. There has been very little inquiry for sugar, everything connected therewith. By the exertion of the villagers, however, it was subdued with the loss of a pile of cordwood only.

BRICK BUTTER FACTORY.

A meeting of the patrons of the butter factory called by Mr. Brill, of Guelph, was held in the Town Hall, Walkerton, on Wednesday, 17th inst. After a good deal of discussion the following arrangements were made:—The factory to commence operations on the 15th May, and probably on the 1st May, if the weather is favorable. The price said for milk is to be 70c. per 100 lbs. for May and June, 60c. for July and August, and 70c. for the remainder of the season. Payments to be made monthly on the 16th of each month, for the milk of the month preceding. Mr. Brill proposed that the farmers take charge of the butter when manufactured till their pay is secured. This not being satisfactory, he agreed to deposit $600 as security, this amount to remain in the bank until the last month's milk is paid for, and drawn only on the order of a committee of five of the patrons.

A BIG BREAK IN LUMBER FREIGHTS.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean, of March 16th, says:—"Something transpired yesterday that will create a sensation among the owners of vessels in the lumber trade, as it is likely to have great effect on the spring rates on Lake Michigan, not only from Muskegon, but from all other ports. It was the acceptance by Mr. Cobb, the owner of the steam barges Annie Lavrie and George Dunbar, of $1 50 per th vessel feet on 1,000 000 feet of dry lumber from Muskegon to Chicago. The shippers are Mussen & Winter.

A NEW OPPOSITION TO THE MONTREAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The following is an extract from a private letter from New York:—The possibility of an amalgamation between the two Canadian telegraph companies seem foreshadowed by the rumor prevalent in New York for some days that the Montreal Company had transferred its business to the American Union. It is true that the rumor was promptly denied, but that some grounds existed for expecting an important change in the relations of these companies seem generally admitted. Attention is drawn to the fact that the telegraph business is being done cheaper in Canada today than anywhere else in the world, and practical telegraphers in New York familiar with the whole subject look upon some change as only a question of time, there being no possibility of profit at present rates. The fact that the Montreal Company is asking Parliament for such amendments to its charter as will enable it to amalgamate, lease, or pool its earnings, is keenly interpreted in financial circles, especially in view of the known intimacy of Sir Hugh Allan with General Eckert, the President of the American Union Company. This intimacy is supposed to be mainly through the fast friendship which exists between the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Gouldsmith, of the Acadia Coal Mining Company, of Nova Scotia, in which Sir Hugh has a joint interest with Baron Feild. The latter gentleman is not only a great friend of Mr. Gouldsmith, but is closely allied with Mr. Jay Gould and Mr. Sidney and other similar schemers. So you will see that so far as New York is concerned Sir Hugh is under influences that are likely to impress him most favorably with the advantages of joining hands with the American Union. This Company being the lessee of the Dominion Line will naturally make very advantageous the project of amalgamating, pooling or otherwise combining the interests of the two Canadian companies. Both of the Canadian companies would make money by this combination, and the Montreal Company on the one hand saving itself from a heavy loss which it certainly will incur by the pay ment of fifty thousand dollars per annum, while the temptation to fix Hugh must be very great, for by yielding to these overtures the Montreal Company would practically be made to pay twelve or fifteen per cent. dividend, and its stock so long depressed would rise by leaps and bounds. The first step in this direction, it is surmised, will be the selection of some Dominion employee for the position of general manager of the Montreal company. You need not be told, however, that this movement would be a most fatal one, not only for the Montreal Telegraph Company itself, but for the Canadian public at large. Such a combination of interests would virtually place within the control of Mr. Jay Gould the entire telegraphic business of Canada, resulting in a termination of the connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company. The latter concern has offices in 8,400 localities in the United States, and has 211,000 miles of wire. The American Union has but over 1,500 offices, and ends from its Canadian connection not over 12,000 miles of wire of its own. It is supposed that it is to prepare for such a contingency as is here shadowed forth that application is now before Parliament for a charter for a new Canadian company, which, it is said, will be built forthwith.

General Notes.

Eddy, of Hull, is said to be shipping 58,000 worth of matches per week to St. Louis, Mo.

The electric light agitation has reduced the price of gas in Great Britain about 12 cents per 1,000 feet.

The ordinary revenue of Prince Edward Island for 1879 was $187,182 58, and the expenditure $229,132 47.

American horse dealers say that they can purchase horses 20 per cent. cheaper in Canada than they can anywhere else.

Amherstburg admitted $7,819 worth of dutiable goods, in February, paying $1,582 duty. Free goods for the same period, 3464 exports, do, $29,781.

The packages of tomatoes put up last year in the United States reached the total of 12,000,000, of which New Jersey contributed 5,892,000 cans.

Manufacturing clothing in Chicago gives employment to 30 000 people and the value of the goods made is $15,000,000. This industry has doubled in four years.

In December last a gentleman living in Natal managed to entice nineteen young ostriches into his kraal. They were of small size, healthy birds, valued at over $90 each.

A monster blast has taken place at the Fort Victoria brakewater works, South Australia. Fifty thousand tons have been blown up. Blocks weighing 500 tons were dislodged.

The exports of corn from the seaboard would indicate that there is considerable cheap food required to meet the wants of the industrial classes in the manufacturing districts in Europe.

Owing to a scarcity of coal tonnage from the Tyne, the imports of Scotch and English coal at Montreal the coming season are likely to be light; higher prices for Lower Provincial coal are therefore expected.

The Montreal Warehousing Company, at their late annual meeting, elected the following gentlemen directors for the ensuing year:—Sir Hugh Allan, Andrew Allan, C. J. Brydges, A. W. Ogilvie, and John S. Hall.

There were 150,881 tons of iron ore imported into the United States during the year 1879. Its cost an average price of $6 97 per ton. The largest quantity imported in any previous year was 146,549 tons in 1856.

A Berlin telegram to the Pall Mall Gazette says that the Imperial Government has given notice of its intention to increase the silver currency in the realm. The amount at present in circulation is ten marks per head of the population. It is to be increased to twelve marks.

In his just published report, the British Consul at Yokohama states that the experiment made during the two previous years of manufacturing black teas for the English market has been attended with such disappointing results to all concerned that the industry is not likely to be persevered in for the future.

"It is a curious fact," says the Scientific American, as reported in an exchange, "that in some lines of manufacture, the Canadians are beating the Yankees in economy of production. For example, the Waterous Manufacturing Company, of Brantford, Ontario, have for some time past been delivering steam engines in Bremen at less prices than the American people can get them down there.

Large as is the number of new buildings erected in Toronto last year, the population has increased faster than the house room. There are 116 less houses vacant now than there were a year ago. If the owners of old houses would ameliorate their interior economy, in accordance with the demands of the time, they would not only pursue their own interests, but put a check on the building of new houses.

Respecting the experiment of carrying Australian beef and butter to Britain, we learn that the voyage of the first vessel occupied two months; the carcases of 70 bullocks and of 500 sheep were carried, as well as 4,000 lbs. of butter; the meat and butter were placed in specially prepared chambers fitted on board, after the "dry air" process, and on arrival they were found in perfectly sound condition. The importers sold mutton at 6d., and the beef at 5d per lb., which means retail prices at 8d and 9d per lb., respectively, at least. The experiment may be called, therefore, tolerably successful.

The Railways.

The rate at which several oars of furniture have been sent from Parkhill to Manitoba, is $280 per car.

Amherstburg has applied £1,800 of the surplus distribution fund to the cancellation of the C. S. R. debentures and coupons.

Illinois has the largest number of miles of railway (7,022) of any state in the Union, and Pennsylvania comes next with 6,077.

Newfoundland, it is stated, will probably devote its share of the fishery award to the construction of a railway from St. John's to Harbor Grace, estimated to cost £300,000.

We learn from the Frankfurter Zeitung that in a competition recently for the supply of 1,800 tons of steel rails for the Roumanian railways, the lowest tender, that of the Hosch Steel Works, in Dortmund, was $68 50 per ton.

Canadian car builders state that the tendency at present is in the direction of increasing the capacity of railroad cars. Most of the old grain cars hold 400 bushels, but the greater portion of those which are now building are made to hold 500 bushels.

The traffic receipts of the Grand Trunk Railway for the week ending March the 13th, compared with the corresponding week of last year, were:—

Year.	1880.	1879.
Passengers	$ 42,300	39,400
Express Freight and Mails	1,900	6,000
Freight and Live Stock	167,806	134,033
Total	190,106	179,792
Increase		10,314

(Mileage open, 1,219).

NOTE.—The Riviere du Loup Line receipts are included in 1879, and not in 1880, adding them $ 4,200

The week's increase would be $ 14,914

The aggregate increase for 11 weeks is $264,656

JUST ISSUED,

IN PAMPHLET FORM,

A Full and Thrilling Narrative of the Great Donnelly Tragedy in Biddulph, one of the most atrocious crimes on record. The work comprises 40 pages of closely and elegantly printed matter, and tells the story in all its ghastly and horrible details in lucid and concise language. The events of the night of the 4th of Feb., when four of the ill-fated family were beaten to death in their own dwelling and their bodies burned, and another member of the family was called to his door and shot to death by assassins, are duly and amply recorded, as well as the feuds and quarrels, extending over many years, which lead to the atrocity, and the subsequent proceedings up to the close of the police examination, when several persons were committed for trial for the crimes.

The reader is taken step by step through the dark maze of feud, conspiracy and murder, and all that is at present publicly known in connection therewith is unravelled and set forth in a clear and comprehensive light, as the scenes of a panorama.

The work is without party bias, and worthy an impartial consideration, reproducing in fresh and vivid colors, and in small compass, what has already appeared in various fragmentary forms, and enveloped in misty speculations. It is now in the form of a cause and records from all the facts as they have been revealed by the different parties concerned being woven into a tale as weird and thrilling as any to be found in the realm of fiction.

The book is illustrated with wood cut of the principal prisoners and the dwellings visited by the murderers.

The whole forms a history which should be in the hands of all who take an intelligent interest in the case.

CONSTABLES APPOINTED.—At the adjourned session Saturday before Judge Elliot, James Paton, Frederick Templar and John Ward were appointed Constables. The latter will be given special charge of Johnny O'Connor, and is supposed to never lose sight of him.

CANADIANS ABROAD.—The following Canadians registered their names in London during this week ending March 6:—R. H. Holland, Montreal; M. Hamilton, Montreal; J. Martin, Montreal; A. Foulds, Quebec; A. L. McLaren, M. D., London; C. B. Grant, London; H. Brown, Woodstock; J. W. Stockwell, Kingston; W. Vassie, St. John; J. W. McTavish, Winnipeg; J. Cowers, Winnipeg.

A GOOD IDEA.—The Winnipeg Free Press says that "Mr. Robert Patterson, of Paris, is organizing a party out of those of our citizens who may desire to visit Ontario just now. The sleeping car which Mr. Patterson brought up on his last trip will be available for this purpose, and those who join the party will occupy that car through to the line of the Great Western without change. The party will leave St. Boniface on the morning of Monday, the 22nd inst."

POLICE COURT PROCEEDINGS.—Before the P. M. Saturday morning, James Quinn was assessed $2 for drunkenness. Elizabeth Eggerson had been punished sufficiently by her confinement in the cells and was discharged. John Wrightman, a street arab, was sent down for one month. He has been down on several previous occasions, and owing to his vicious habits and influence over other boys, should have been sent to the Reformatory. Fred. Sullivan, a little fellow whom Wrightman has led into all sorts of evil, was released on bail.

VICEREGAL VISIT TO THE WEST.—Major de Winton writes in reply to a note from a Montreal M. P., in relation to the proposed exhibition at Montreal:—"I am desired by His Excellency to say that it will afford much pleasure to both himself and the Princess to become patrons of the Dominion Exhibition, to be held at Montreal next September. He would be very much obliged if the opening ceremony could be deferred as late as possible in September, as he wishes to visit Western Ontario during that month, and would like to have as much time as possible."

TROTTING MEETING.—The Directors of the Michigan Grand Central Trotting circuit have decided upon the following programme:—Adrian, May 24 to 28; Detroit, June 1 to 4; Pontiac, June 8 to 11; Flint, June 15 to 18; Ionia, June 22 to 25. Grand Rapids (if it will come in), June 29 to July 2; and Fort Wayne (conditional), July 5 to 8. The premium list was declared as follows:—Adrian and Detroit, $10,000 each, the latter giving a special premium for St. Julian and Hopeful of $2,500; Pontiac, Flint and Grand Rapids will give $8,000 apiece; Fort Wayne, $7,000, and Ionia, $6,000.

THE BERGERS AND SOL SMITH RUSSELL.—A great treat is to be offered our citizens on next Wednesday evening at the Opera House, in the entertainment offered by the favorite Berger Troupe, who bring with them the renowned comic artist Mr. Sol Smith Russell, who is said to be without an equal in this line, and of whom the Kansas City Mail speaks as follows:—"But Sol Smith Russell, the incomparable Sol, comes in among the harmonies of music and changes the feelings of the audience from sympathy with sweet sounds to a charming sense of hilarity at his artistic nonsense and intimate representations of the droll side of human nature. Mr. Russell has studied human nature well. He is a careful student and an artist of rare merit. There is no trembling his deep humor. The spectator cannot do anything but laugh. The whole performance is the highest character of entertainment."

Elderly gentleman to a Frenchman on the train:—"You don't have any ticket?" "No, I travel on my good looks." "Then," after looking him over, "probably you ain't goin' very far."

"Did the rain help you any in your retreat?" asked Johnnieberry somewhat quizzingly. "Well," replied the veteran, while a suspicion of a smile rippled around his mouth, "I must admit they gave us a few points."

Daniel O'Connell once met a conceited literary friend, and exclaimed:—"I saw a capital thing in your last pamphlet." "Did you?" eagerly replied his delighted listener; "what was it?" "A pound of butter."

Mamma (entering)—"Now, I am sure you children are into mischief, you are so quiet." Ethel (in a rapturous whisper)—"Hush, ma! Tommy's been painting a spider's web on grandpa's bald head while he's asleep, to keep the flies off!"

A man from Toronto, having more money than anything else, endured a tour through Europe because he thought he must. In speaking of his trip upon his return he exclaimed:—"The happiest day of it all was when I stepped on my own native terra-cotta."

"Why, Jimmy," said one professional beggar to another, "are you going to knock off Already? It's only two o'clock." "No, you mutton head," responded the other, who was engaged in unbuckling his crutch, "I'm only going to put it on the other knee. You don't suppose a fellow can beg all day on the same leg, do you?"

Jonathan Brown Bright, who lately bequeathed $50,000 to Harvard College, enjoyed card playing, and was wont to say that players of the same ability would at the end of a large number of games come out even. He kept a record of 3,216 games of whist which he had played up to the 19th of July, 1875, and of that number he won 1,606 games and lost exactly the same number.

Tinsley's Magazine is credited with this effusion of the rustic muse:—

My sweetheart has a red brown beard
And bonnie eyes of blue,
Of no two men in he sky
To one wee maid he's true.
For I maud love my lie side.
A lily by a yew.

He took a bullock by the head.
And from the bullock fell;
He threw John Plumber's lump of lead
From Galway's hill to town.
And yet his arm around my waist
I scarce can settle down.

Yet tho' have brighter eyes than mine,
And better colored hair;
Your hands may be more white and fine.
Your tightened waist more spare.
You charm all other men—I hate
I want to charm you bear.

The game of whist furnishes an occasion for the display of men's characters. The unlucky selfish man calls the play on his opponent, and himself takes back the card he was about to throw, and obtains a reputation for playfulness; while the careless man, who never talks, gets a reputation for being a stickler if he plays queen at second hand and has only a trey to back it. The man who talks a great deal after the hand is ended is supposed to be apologizing for the ignorance of those he honors by playing with them. The man who makes a big demonstration in throwing down his card is likely to be weak in character, even though he may play a good game of whist. Some good whist players, like many good musicians, have very little besides the one thing they are smart at.

NEW BOOKS.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, New York.—The principal interest of the number for April will be found in the article by Sir Francis Hincks on "The Relations of Canada with the United States." The author's principal object is to show that the recently enacted Canadian tariff is not an act of retaliation against the United States for their refusal to establish reciprocal free trade between the two countries in products that are natural to both. Canada, he says, is desirous of renewing the reciprocity treaty, and is ready to concede all reasonable demands. Mr. Parnell gives us to understand what his views are on the Irish Land Question, and Professor Smith writes about the failure of the Southern Pacific, a subject which the Rev. Mr. Stocking, of Detroit, touched on in the course of a recent lecture in this city. An article in defence of Mexican, the first great General of the North, does him good service, while Hon. G. S. Boutwell defends the position that, despite the teaching of the so-called Father of the Republic, it is expedient to re-elect General Grant to the Presidency of the United States. On the whole, a good and useful number.

FROM BARNIA TO CHICAGO.—The Northern Transit boats will continue on the Chicago and Barnia route (for the Grand Trunk Trunk Railway) for 1880. Eight fine steamers of the Merchants' Line (Canadian) will ply from Chicago to Barnia, Montreal and vice versa, calling at points on the St. Lawrence, the Welland Canal, Lake Ontario, Whitby, Port Darlington, and Milwaukee, also forming connection with the Northwestern Transportation Company's steamers at Barnia for Duluth, and all the principal ports on Lakes Huron and Superior. The steamers of the company which are to form this line were determined upon at Montreal, and masters appointed as follows:—City of St. Catherines, Capt. J. McMaugh; Prussia, Capt. H. Zealand, Lincoln, Capt. J. Dunsmore; California, Capt. Craugie; Ocean, Capt. A. McNaugh; Argyle, Capt. H. McLaughlin; Dalhousie, Capt. J. H. Scott; Europe, Capt. J. Clifford. The other two steamers—the Celtic, Capt. J. Vaughn, and the Persia, Capt. W. Cavers—will occupy routes below. The line will make connections at Montreal with ocean steamers to and from Europe, and with railroads and steamers for Quebec and Lower Province, and with Montreal, Boston, and southeastern railways for Boston and New England states. It is learned that large quantities of up-bound freight, principally iron and merchandise, have already been contracted for for Chicago.

NEW COTTON FACTORY.—The Hamilton Times, one of the Grit journals who would rather see the country go to ruin than that any policy inaugurated by the Conservatives should receive any credit for assisting the people, tells its readers that a large establishment is about to be erected in that city for the manufacture of colored cotton goods—a cotton factory—and that employment will be furnished to a large number of skilled operatives. But the "peculiar advantages" are not due to the N. P.—Probably not! London is prepared to give capitalists every show for investing their money in such enterprises, and is not averse to crediting the National Policy with their introduction.

MORE LAND FOR EXHIBITION PURPOSES.—Ald. Buckle, Chairman of the Exhibition Committee, has received the following proposal from Mr. G. Hamilton, Crown Attorney:—He will sell the property recently owned by Mr. Thomas Haydon, in the township of Westminster, comprising lot 2, east side of the Wharncliffe Highway, and lot 2, west side of the Wortley Road, containing in all 96 acres, for $20,000; or, 60 acres of the same land on Wortley side for $12,000; or, 36 acres on Wharncliffe for $11,000.

The Poultry Review for March, published by Mr. Jas. Fullerton, of Strathroy, is another good number.

THE MACCABEE MUSS.

On Saturday last the following telegram was received from F. G. Ex. Sir Kt. E. C. Rockwell, of Buffalo, by Mr. W. D. McGloghlon, of this city:—"Large meeting of Buffalo Tent last night. Osborne refused admittance. Unanimous expression endorsing action of Great Camp. Mass meeting here Monday night."

A "K. O. T. M. Present" writes thus:—"Sir,—Noticing an article in Saturday's Advertiser, giving an account of a mass meeting held by Judah's Tent, of the city, in which your correspondent is pleased to say that a resolution was passed sustaining J. A. Osborne, of the late Great Camp, which is a misrepresentation. The facts are these:—At the mass meeting the matter was discussed, and the meeting dissolved without taking any action whatever. If there was any resolution proposed it must have been by a few after the mass meeting had retired, as there was none before."

Mr. Joseph T. Marks, Assistant Record Keeper, of Amos Tent, No. 85, Sarnia, sends the following letter for publication on Saturday last:—

"On Friday evening a mass meeting of the Maccabees of Sarnia was held in their hall on Front street. Over one hundred Sir Knights were present, and a very enthusiastic meeting was held. It was determined that both Amos Tent, No. 85, and Vale Tent, No. 43, should stand by their vote and send delegates to Buffalo. Speeches were made by Mr. Fraser and George A. Procter, who are to represent their respective Tents at the Review. The Sir Knights of Sarnia are united to a man, and believe the East Great Camp acted a little too quick in trying to suspend J. A. Osborne, our Gt. Ex. Sir Kt. Gen. Com. A meeting was also held on the same evening in Fort Huron, Mich., and they have taken the same ground as we have. Huron, Diamond and Lincoln Tents each intend to have a delegate at the Review."

"1. Whereas well-grounded complaints have been made to us, as provided in Article 15 of our Constitution, that the Great Camp has wronged the Society by ordering a Grand Review to be held in the city of Buffalo, New York, on the 23rd day of March, 1880, as per circular issued under date of Buffalo, N. Y., February 25th, 1880, and signed by J. A. Osborne, Great Ex. Sir Kt. G. C., from less than sixty Tents out of over two hundred Tents have voted in favor of such Grand Review, and therefore contrary to the provisions of Article 16 of the Constitution, requiring two-thirds of all the Tents to vote in favor of a Grand Review.

"2. And by ordering the Grand Review within twenty-eight days, contrary to the provisions of Article 15 of the Constitution, which has not been complied with by the Tents thirty days previous to their being required to vote thereon, as provided in Article 16, be it decreed that all votes of the Tents so illegally voting for his new Constitution. And whereas upon the investigation of the aforesaid complaints, we find the said Great Camp has been guilty of trampling under foot in a gross manner the Constitution of the Order, in flagrant violation of the solemn obligation taken by every Sir Knight of our beloved fraternity; therefore, by the powers vested in us under Article 15 of the Constitution, we do adjudge the Great Camp unfaithful to its high trust, and do determine that it be suspended, and the same is hereby suspended as Great Camp, and we do further adjudge that the said Sir Kt. J. A. Osborne has violated not only his obligation of membership, but also his oath of office; we therefore determine that he shall be suspended, and he is hereby suspended from the Order under Article 15 of the Constitution.

"All Tents are required and enjoined to send all official communications to Sir Kt. W. H. Street, M.D., P. G. H. S. K., London, Ont., and all remittances to Sir Kt. W. Weir Fitzgerald, Barrister, P. G. F. K., London, Ont., Canada. And further, all Tents are required to send their vote forward immediately to the P. G. R. K. W. H. Street, M.D., the number of their membership, in order to determine what Tents are eligible for Great Camp, as the election papers were sent out the first of August.

"W. D. McGLOGHLON, P.G.H. Sir Kt.I.G.C.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Saturday afternoon.

Squire Belton has been confined to his residence for the past week through a severe attack of neuralgia.

The grocery of Mr. McCormick Block is commencing to fill up with tenants, which adds to the appearance of the street.

Preparations for summer building are being made, and there is every prospect that a large number of cottages will be erected during the present season. This is as it should be.

Mr. W. J. Smith, druggist, and Mr. T. Fitzsimmons, dry goods merchant, have removed from Lilly's Block to Smith's Block, situated in the city. Horace Greeley's motto again.

The question of annexation can be summed up in one sentence. So long as London East can live under the shade of city advantages, with taxes at thirteen mills on the dollar, it will remain a village, foreign police, water, fire protection, street and all municipal privileges. It is a mistake to believe, however, that annexation would sublite the village with a portion of the city's debt, since an arrangement could very easily be arrived at whereby financial matters would remain about the same as at present.

While Mr. A. Appleton was driving along King street in the city yesterday, his horse became frightened at a dog, and the latter took precedence for when the wheel of the sleigh came in contact with the dog's tail, which resulted in Mr. Appleton being thrown out, and in the buggy being completely wrecked. The horse ran a considerable distance, was stopped. Mr. Appleton had a very narrow escape and was pretty severely shaken up. No serious consequences are to follow.—Mr. Alfred Fleming, Thomas Gowans, Henry Howard, Alwyn Moffat, Harlson Baranm and John Sloane.

Death of James Evans, Esq.

Brief Biographical Sketch of His Busy Life.

It is with feelings of deep regret that we announce in this issue the death of Mr. James Evans, of West Nissouri, one of the best known and highly respected farmers of the County of Middlesex. Some few days ago Mr. Evans suffered slightly from a cold, and latterly was confined to his room from an attack of inflammation of the bowels, which, notwithstanding the best medical attendance that could be obtained, occasioned his death on Saturday afternoon last. Mr. Evans was born in Ireland in 1821, and came to Canada between thirty-five and forty years since. Subsequently he settled on lot Six, in the Fifth Concession of Nissouri, and for thirty years resided on his homestead, and was an eye-witness of the progressive strides made during that period in the township of his adoption, and also the surrounding country. Mr. Evans was one of the best class of farmers—open-hearted and affable, of a genial temperament and kindly disposition—and was very highly esteemed by all who knew him. Very few men in the East Riding of Middlesex were better known than James Evans. He was a member of the Canada Methodist Church, and did much by his means and influence to advance the interests of that denomination in the neighborhood of Evelyn, and Nissouri and Dorchester Townships. He was appointed one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace many years since, but very seldom officiated in a magisterial capacity. In politics he was a strong Reformer, and wielded considerable influence in the counsels of that party. He never sought political preferment, but on four different occasions was singled out as the standard-bearer of the party, and suffered defeat three times out of the four. In 1868 he contested the East Riding unsuccessfully against Mr. Crowell Willson for a seat in the old Parliament of Canada. In 1867 he was again chosen to carry the banner of Reform against Mr. William Taylor for a seat in the first Legislature of Ontario, and succeeded in defeating his opponent by 30 votes. He sat for four years, and in 1871 was opposed by Mr. Richard Tooley, who defeated him by 93 votes. In 1875 he was again chosen as Mr. Tooley's opponent, and once more suffered defeat, this the last time by 245 votes. As a politician, he was above resorting to petty tricks to injure an opponent, and conducted the campaigns with that good nature, fairness and kindly disposition which characterised all his dealings with his fellow-men. He was Reeve of the Township for several years, and in municipal matters his counsel was very generally approved by his constituents. He leaves a wife, five daughters and two sons to mourn the loss of a kind husband and indulgent father, and the township loses by his death one of its most progressive and public-spirited pioneers. The funeral will take place at three o'clock this afternoon.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Look not upon the maple sugar, for it hath a suspicious color.

Hon. John Carling leaves Ottawa for the west on a brief visit this evening.

Yesterday was indeed a Spring day. "Hail! gentle Spring," and so forth.

Mr. M. J. Campbell—Rhoderick—"Dogs gurgs gone—tip saw—patient recovering.

Mary McKever, an old Highland woman, was arrested Saturday night on a charge of vagrancy.

Dr. Lemon, of Thorold, has associated with him as partner F. B. Wilkenson, M.D., late of London.

Scott Illich was bailed to appear before the P. M. this morning to answer a charge of assaulting Stephen Scott. Both are cousins.

Thomas J. McDonough, grocer, will assume this morning before the Police Magistrate for selling liquor in smaller quantities than the law allows.

Miss Janet Wilson, of Blyth, personated "The Fire Fairy" at a recent Skating Carnival in that village, and of course carried off the prizes.

Harry Smith, who was arrested in Windsor on a charge of stealing a trunk from Sarah Curtis, has settled the fraud by paying all the costs incurred.

Mr. Thomas Evans, formerly publisher of the London News, arrived here from Buffalo on Saturday night for the purpose of attending the funeral of his father.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational Church Ladies' Aid Society, Mrs. Adams was elected President, and Mrs. L. J. Cameron, Secretary and Treasurer.

The "H. M. S Parliament Company" open to-night at St. Thomas; on Tuesday at Ingersoll; Wednesday, at Woodstock; Thursday, at Brantford; Friday, at St. Catharines, and Saturday at Hamilton.

William Joy, pending trial at the Assizes for assaulting Sergt. Crawford, was arrested on Saturday night by Detective Murphy, charged with being concerned in disorderly conduct. He will appear before the P. M. this morning.

Mr. W. Knowlton addressed a meeting in Victoria Hall yesterday afternoon, and electrified his hearers by an eloquent appeal in behalf of the temperance cause. Mr. Knowlton has lost none of his old-time force and spirit in the great cause.

A new metallic post office letter box has been erected for the convenience of travellers at the G. W. R. platform. It is a large oblong square, in the lower portion of which letters are deposited, and in the upper portion where the brook trout do not thrive. As a fiveyear-old boy he caught his first speckled trout. Only five six pounds. Of this fish there is now on hand a stock of about five thousand young fry.

An interesting experiment in fish culture is now being tried. Acting on the principle that fish, like animals, degenerate if too close interbreeding, 10,000 young brook trout fry have been procured from Vermont to turn into Caledonia Creek and the state ponds, with a view to improving the breed. If the experiment prove successful, and fry have failed, three experimented with never having spawned or shown any signs of breeding have been placed in their natural waters. The California salmon kept in the ponds are also being closely watched. They rarely spawn, and when spawn has been taken it turned out unhealthy. —Rochester Express.

—Everybody has not yet learned to turn off gas instead of blowing it out. A lady guest in the Tecumseh House, Detroit, did the latter on Friday night in her room, and but for one of the employes at the office, Hamilton, will be transferred to Milwaukee next month, to be cashier of the Company at that point under the new management, to take effect on April 1st.

A person signing himself "E. H. G." Box 401, P. O., Montreal, writes Mr. Wm. Bryce the following note:—"Dear Sir,—Having discovered the correct solution of the "15," or Clipper Puzzle, I intend publishing the same in the public journals unless you will make it worth my while to keep the secret." This is a clear case of insanity, and E. H. G. should be looked after by his friends, if he has any.

William Forth swore out a warrant against Robert Graham for assault and wounding on Saturday night, and P. C. Pope was sent to make the arrest. Graham was drunk at the time and wasn't going to be taken, and after handcuffs had been placed on one wrist Alice Leadbeater sailed in to assist in annihilating the constable. By a simple turn of the wrist, however, she was fitted with the other section of the bracelet, and she was brought to the station. She was then charged with being drunk and disorderly.

—John Herringer, of Nenstadt, was kicked in the stomach by a horse last week. He felt no great pain from the blow, but rather a feeling of weakness. He lay down in bed, went to sleep, and never awoke.

—The farmers in the back townships north of Lake Ontario are rather "down in the mouth," as the greater part of the fall wheat is supposed to be killed with the frost. A large quantity has been sown more than has ever been sown before—and excepting the spring, which is now close at hand, is very favorable, it will be literally killed.

—Fifty years ago a local preacher from England preached the first sermon in the interest of the Primitive Methodist body, in Little York (now Toronto). The work has grown until the Connexion has in Ontario 224 churches, and nearly 100 additional preaching appointments. It is proposed to celebrate the jubilee by raising a special extension fund of $10,000, and the prospects are that it will be done.

Thorndale Monthly Cattle Fair.

The second monthly cattle fair was held at the above village on Wednesday, March 17th, the day being very fine, quite a large number of cattle was offered for sale, and plenty of buyers from London, St. Mary's and other places; and as is always the case, the demand was for first class animals, whether stock or fat cattle. There was quite a number of really fine animals for sale, and were highly creditable to those who raised and fed them, and the prices received ought to encourage and show farmers the importance of keeping nothing but good stock, and feeding and caring for them properly. Among the sales made were 2 cows by Chas. Lee to R. Quick, butcher, London, at $7; from T. Chamberer 1 cow, $27.50; from T. Fitzsimont, 1 fine 2-year-old steer at $47.50. J. Millcheitree, London, bought from F. Chalmers 2 heifers at $50; from J. McCutcheon 1 cow at $43. Weir & Robinson, drovers, St. Mary's, bought from F. Davis 2 steers at $70. J. Cole, drover, Stratford, bought from W. Large 1 cow at $33. C. Chapman, butcher, London, bought from H. Fitzimons 4 extra fine steers at $255; from John Stoneman 1 fine 2-year-old steer at $47.50. S. Wicket, butcher, Thorndale, from R. Hogg, 1 heifer at 3½ per lb. Hendrie, drover, St. Mary's, bought from E. Booth 7 steers at 3½ per lb.; from W. Logan 1 steer at 3½ per lb.; from A. Wilson 3 steers at 3½ per lb.; from J. Wilson 3 1-year-old steers for $107; from J. A. Wilson 2 steers at 3½ per lb.; Wm. Connolly bought from D. Akins 6 steers at $36 each, besides other sales of animals that were made by public auction.

In regard to the place of holding the Fair, the Directors would wish to say that buyers made great complaint as to the way the stock is scattered, and would wish in future that all the animals be collected in one place. As Mr. Harrison has kindly given the use of the mill yard, and as it is the most suitable place in the village, the Directors ask it as a favor that all farmers having stock to sell will bring them to that place. By doing it will not only be more satisfactory to the buyers, but by comparison and competition will tend to make the Fair more attractive. Auction sales as usual next Fair.

A Wife's Alarms.

Comedy With a Serious Side.

Saturday Review:—There is an aspect of a burglar panic which is far from comic. When, after an hour's peaceful sleep, one is disturbed by one's wife, one's troubles begin. We ask what she is doing. "Listening" is her reply. The suggestion that she should lie down and go to sleep is snubbed by an authoritative but alarming "Hush." Alarms assert itself and we again doze, to be immediately awakened by the words, "I am sure I heard a noise." We offer to get up and take a walk through the house to see if any thieves are in it. "Oh, no, for goodness sake don't do that," is the reply. Of course, one gets a refreshing night's rest after this little episode. On another night, at 3 in the morning, one of the dogs is heard to bark. We look around, and finding all quiet, gave it as our opinion that he must have heard the gamekeeper walking round the house, or that it some thieves had come with a dog after the rabbits. We are certainly not frightened away by his barking. His furious noise gradually subsided into occasional melancholy "rags," until, after a dismal moan or two, he becomes silent. At last we drop off to sleep, but in a few minutes are disturbed with, "My dear, there is that dog again." On one occasion there could be no doubt that a noise had really been heard, and we have been allowed to venture forth with pleasry powers. After examining the lower part of the house we had taken a dark lantern, and had sallied forth and made a tour of the outside of the building. After a fruitless search for thieves and vagabonds, we had returned to our room, and had just settled down again with a satisfactory sense of our virtuous and gallant conduct, when we were startled by a violent knocking at the front door and jingling of the bell-bell. On going down stairs—we may observe that not one of the servants heard the deafening noise—we found two officious policemen at the porch, who had come with the valuable information that they had lately seen a man with a dark lantern walk round the house and enter it.

New Fish at the New York State Hatchery.

The hybrids—crosses between the male California salmon and the female brook trout, the female mountain trout and the brook trout, and the female salmon trout and the male brook trout—afford an interesting study. The state fish hatching houses. Of these crosses, which take more after the large parent-fish, the most successful appears to be that between the salmon trout and the brook trout. This squares the tail of the produce, which has the same spots as the salmon trout, together with the vermilion spots of the brook trout. In the cross between the California salmon and the brook trout a singular freak of nature manifested itself, all the progeny, seventy in number, proving females, of which a number were unshapely fish. When these hybrids subsequently became ready to spawn it was found that the spawn could not be passed without the use of a knife. The experiment of impregnating the spawn in this manner with the milt of the brook trout, however, proved successful.

Among the members of the state fish family at the state hatchery is the Mo-Clond River trout, also a native of California, a distinct variety from but similar in many respects to the mountain trout. He is a larger fish, suitable for rivers and large streams, in the lower portions where the brook trout do not thrive. As a five-year-old he weighs from four pounds to five or six pounds. Of this fish there is now on hand a stock of about five thousand young fry.

An interesting experiment in fish culture is now being tried. Acting on the principle that fish, like animals, degenerate if too close interbreeding, 10,000 young brook trout fry have been procured from Vermont to turn into Caledonia Creek and the state ponds, with a view to improving the breed. ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

Hon. George Brown Shot by a Discharged Employe,

Who Desired a Certificate of Good Character.

DESPERATE STRUGGLE WITH THE WOULD-BE ASSASSIN,

During Which Mr. Brown is Shot in the Leg.

WONDERFUL NERVE OF THE VICTIM

The Wound Not of a Serious Character.

PARTICULARS OF THE OCCURRENCE.

The Assailant Intended Late Foreman. His

Per Montreal Line.

Toronto, March 25.—At four o'clock this evening a man named George Bennett, formerly employed as assistant engineer in the Globe newspaper office, but who was discharged for misconduct, entered the room of the Hon. George Brown at the office, and made a deliberate attempt to assassinate him. Without a word of warning, he aimed a pistol at Mr. Brown's head, while the latter was sitting at his desk. At his hearing the intruder, Mr. Brown rose, and he did so received the bullet in his thigh. He at once grappled with the would-be-murderer, wounded as he was, arrested the pistol from him, and threw the man down, immediately falling himself from his injuries. Some of the employees of the establishment, hearing the shot, rushed to Mr. Brown's assistance, and while some assisted him others held Bennett until a policeman arrived and took him to the station. Dr. Thorburn was called in, and Mr. Brown, after the wound had been dressed and the ball probed for and extracted, was removed to his residence, where he has since been somewhat unnerved by the shock, but bearing his injury with heroic firmness. Mr. Brown's presence of mind and wonderful nerve was something remarkable for a man of his age. Without flinching, wounded as he was, he coolly grappled with his assailant, a rather powerful man, and soon had him at his mercy.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

Per Dominion Line.

Toronto, March 26.—The city was thrown into a great state of excitement this afternoon by the report that an attempt had been made to assassinate Hon. George Brown. It appears that a man named Geo. Bennet, who used to work in the Globe office, was recently discharged on account of drunkenness, and since that time he has appeared at the Police Station, having been arrested for wife desertion and seduction of his wife's sister. This man, who is of Southern extraction, called at the office this afternoon at the Globe office, and, being familiar with the place, walked upstairs to the Hon. George Brown's private office. He asked that gentleman for a character, and upon being refused, drew a heavy cane and instantly Georgs Brown requested him to leave, and upon his refusing to do so he left the room for the purpose of summoning assistance. He had barely crossed the threshold of the door, when Bennet turned upon him and raised a revolver. George Brown observed the action, and, with great presence of mind, knocked the man's wrist down, and the bullet that was intended for his heart passed through the fleshy part of the thigh. Mr. Brown sprang upon the man and wrested the pistol from his hold, and at the same time the report of the pistol and his cry of "murder!" attracted a number of the office employes, who secured the would be assassin until a policeman was sent for. Upon the arrival of the officer, George Brown said:—"That is the man who shot me." Bennet was asked what he had to say, and replied, "I have nothing to say." He was then taken to the police station and searched, when fifty cartridges were found upon him. The revolver from which the shot was fired was a No. 3 Smith & Wesson, and had three of six chambers loaded. As soon as it was discovered that Mr. Brown was wounded a carriage was sent for, and Dr. Thornburn was soon in attendance. In removing the pants off the wounded man the ball fell to the ground. When the wound was examined it was found that the ball passed clear through the upper portion of the thigh, between the muscle and the bone, inflicting a painful but by no means serious wound. After the doctor's examination Hon. Geo. Brown proceeded to his residence, where he is now under treatment.

The latest reports state that George Brown is much more tranquil, though still suffering from nervous prostration. He has received letters of congratulation at his escape from the Governor General, and letters of enquiry and congratulation from nearly all parts of the Dominion and from many cities in the United States.

Bennet to-night stated to a detective that he had intended murdering Joe Banks, the head engineer, and it was only when Brown laid his hands on him to turn him out of the office that he fired on him.

LATEST FROM WASHINGTON.

Sitting Bull's Surrender Considered—Relief for Ireland.

Washington, March 25.—Secretary Ramsay says, in regard to the proposed surrender of Sitting Bull's Indians, that the only way the War Department can receive them is as prisoners of war, in which event they would be held until some provision could be made by the Government for their maintenance. General Sherman maintains that the Indians are British subjects, and the United States has nothing to do with them.

The Secretary of the Navy orders the commander of the relief ship Constellation as soon as her cargo is on board, to proceed to Dublin and deliver the cargo to the Herald Relief Committee, for disposition at their discretion.

The Trunk Line Meeting.

New York, March 25.—The Executive Committee of the trunk lines adjourned this afternoon. It is stated that the recognition of the Chicago line of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada was not discussed to-day, and in the matter of through foreign freights from the West, by way of the Atlantic ports, nothing was done. Classification freight rates were revised, and percentages on inland towns fixed.

Edison's Light Endorsed.

Philadelphia, March 24.—Prof. Barker, professor of physics of the University of Pennsylvania, who, with other scientists, has been experimenting at Menlo Park recently with Edison's electric light, during a lecture last night, gave unqualified endorsement of the light, and said it was cheaper than gas at 60 cents per thousand

A Rude Awakening from Love's Illicit Dream.

Oconomowoc, Wis., March 25.—Rasmus Larker was tarred and feathered last night by masked citizens. Larker has been the lover of Miss Ferre. She married Albert Sielicir, it is alleged for his money, and then deserted him and lived with Larker, hence the summary justice.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Special to the Free Press.

Ottawa, March 25.—According to a return brought down yesterday, 3,547,727 pounds of tea have been imported directly to Canada from China and Japan between the 15th of March, 1879, to 31st January. Of this London took 108,879 pounds. The general exhibit shows a large increase over the previous year.

The name of Col. Williams is mentioned in connection with the Senatorship, vacant by the death of Senator Seymour.

Miss Bolton, a young lady living near Brockville, who was wounded by the accidental discharge of a gun, has since died.

The traffic receipts of the Grand Trunk Railway for last week were $80,257, or $447 05 more than during the corresponding period of last year.

It is understood that as a result of the petition from Prescott and vicinity against issuing licenses for salmon fishing, no license will be granted by the Government this year.

Mayor Beaty, of Toronto, waited on His Excellency the Governor General on Wednesday last and requested that he and the Princess would honor the opening of the Toronto Provincial Exhibition with their presence.

Jane McDonnell, of L'Orignal, widow of the late Hon. Alex. Grant, and eldest daughter of the late Captain Allan McDonnell, of the King's "Royal Yorkers," died on Tuesday at the advanced age of 93 years and 7 months.

A private letter from Fort Walsh says that the Canadian Indians are at present in the Milk and Missouri Rivers district, where the buffalo is reported plentiful. The Sioux are still in the Tenshwood Hills, and everything is quiet.

It is expected that there will be a great number of petitions to the House of Commons from all parts against the proposal of legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister. It is probable that in view of the manifest opposition in so many quarters that the Bill, if it be presented within the Mayor Beaty and Ald. Baldwin, of Toronto, have had an interview with the Hon. Messrs. Langevin and Aikens in regard to the improvement on Toronto harbor. The deputation was informed that $10,000 had been placed to the estimates for the deepening of the harbor this season, and that an additional $5 000 would be granted for surveys and plans, with a view to securing better protection in future.

A deputation of lumbermen from the Ottawa section waited Quebec the other day, and interviewed the Executive Council in regard to the tenure of timber licenses. It was asked that some official notice should be placed on record, declaring that the licenses should not be terminable in 1899, but continue as at present. The intention is that the Government has no power to terminate the licenses in 1899, for the reason that the legislative order under which they were originally granted shows a right of renewal. The members of the Council promised to give the matter due consideration.

A dispatch from Montreal of the 25th says:—In wholesale dry goods the feature is firmness in woollen and cotton goods. A fair business is being done in groceries on account of the North-west trade. As high as 8½c. has been paid for Valencia raisins during the week. All kinds of Malaga fruits are scarce. Molasses are in good demand, and holders have advanced their prices since the large sale. A lot of Trinidad was bought in Quebec for days ago at 32c., and a sale of 300 puncheons of Trinidad was effected on the spot on Monday on private terms, but believed to be at about 30c. Barbadoes are held at from 36c. to 37½c., a sale being reported at 37c., while some goods could not be replaced under 39c. and 41c. In coffee and tobacco there is no important change. There are signs of better movements in spices at recent values. Rice is firm at quotations.

Dublin, March 25.—Parnell and Biggar have decided that, contrary to Mr. Justin O'Connor-Power, member for Mayo, there shall be run in County Mayo one of the prisoners recently sentenced at the Castlebar Assizes to imprisonment for assaulting the process-servers.

A SENSIBLE MAN.

London, March 25.—Mr. J. W. Birch, Governor of the Bank of England, presided at a large Conservative meeting in London yesterday. He said it was seldom he took part in politics, but feeling the importance of the occasion, he had come to the conclusion that nothing could be more dangerous to the interests of England than the event of Gladstone again coming into power.

Vienna, March 25.—The Emperor of Russia has presented to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria a war steamer, 40,000 rifles and several Krupp guns.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says:—The new session of the Provincial Assembly of Nobles has opened at Simbirsk. The Marshal of Nobility communicated to the Assembly a circular to the Minister of the Interior, announcing that the right of Governors to refuse to confirm the election of District Marshals of Nobility, on the ground of their being ill disposed towards the Government, has been annulled. The announcement was received with great enthusiasm.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Czar, at the military parade, was very friendly with Lord Dufferin, the British Ambassador, shaking hands with him, but merely saluted the French Ambassador.

The Russian official of the Ministry of Ways and Communications recently arrested, has been sent to Siberia. His lawyer has also been transported.

FRANCE.

PRINCE ORLOFF'S DEPARTURE.

Paris, March 25.—The semi-official Pays says the departure of Prince Orloff, the Russian Ambassador, without taking leave of the President or Premier, is the best proof that he was neither recalled nor has gone on a leave of absence. Prince Orloff was called to St. Petersburg to give explanations of the particular matter of diplomatic etiquette, and did not require to make visits before this temporary absence.

ROUND FOR MANITOBA.

250 Immigrants En Route for the North-West.

Per Montreal Line.

Point Edward, March 25.—Two special Manitoba excursion trains, via G. T. R., passed west to-day. The first contained about 200 passengers and 11 car loads of freight, and the second about 150 passengers, occupying five passenger coaches and ten freight cars. The run from Stratford to Sarnia was made in three hours in each case, which is as good time as is made by regular express trains. The passengers were well pleased with the arrangements throughout, and expressed themselves strongly in favor of the route. Mr. A. H. Taylor, City Passenger Agent, Ottawa, accompanies the party through to Winnipeg. Mr. W. E. Wiley, M. C. R., and Mr. H. G. Kennedy, G. T. R., also accompanied the excursionists to Fort Huron, and assisted in having the baggage, freight, live stock, etc., passed the customs. A small proportion of the passengers were destined for Dakota.

Liverpool, March 25.—The cotton market will be closed from this evening until Tuesday for the Easter holidays.

The Oil Tests at Hamilton.

Strange Conduct of the Inland Revenue Officers—Was the Oil Doctored?

Hamilton, March 25.—The mercantile community, as well as many citizens, are deeply interested in the tests that have been made lately at the oil store of Young & Brooderly by the officers of the Internal Revenue Department. It appears that the firm, one of the most respectable in the city, dealt largely in Silver Star Oil, manufactured by Englehart, of Petrolia. Inspector Cobram, a few days ago, tested the oil in stock, and pronounced the contents of several of the barrels below 105 degrees. Englehart's representative, Mr. Frank, having come to Hamilton, made a test, and on demanding from the Department a second test in his presence, the same officer found the same oil several degrees above the safety limit. He and his brother officer refused to complete the second test, though urged to do so by Young and Frank, who are anxious to have the test repeated and the purity of their oil guaranteed. The Silver Star oil is very extensively used throughout Canada, and Mr. Young says he has sold thousands of barrels of it in Hamilton without any accident having ever happened from its use. The conduct of the officers of the Inland Revenue Department is severely commented upon in business circles here, and for the satisfaction of oil consumers throughout the Dominion, a rigid investigation of the case ought to be made without delay.

EASTER OPPORTUNITIES.

It has been suggested that the Grits might profitably use a portion of the Easter recess in deciding the still open question of the leadership. So far, Mr. Mackenzie has held his own, and in order that no mistake should arise, has deputed Sir R. Carl-wright to act for him during temporary absence, instead of Mr. Blake. Care has thus been taken that the Aurora orator should not get in the thin edge of the wedge, leading to the displacement of the ex Premier from his last foothold. His double, Mr. Blake is not to be. His is disparaging compliments and educating himself in popular appetites in a way that is not a little surprising. If not actually jolly he has become creditably genial, and has developed an aptitude for fun which one would scarcely have supposed resided within the bosom of so stern if not sterile a patriot. The late Mr. Holton used to say that the Reform party had been successful until Senator George Brown took it under his patronage and vexed it with his advice. So to-day the same interest is vexed by the tenacity with which Mr. Mackenzie sticks to the leader ship, after it has become plain enough that the following, the rank and file, small and lean as it is, would prefer Mr. Blake as generalissimo of the remnant of their forces. Nor are matters likely to mend under present guidance? Is seems meet to most that Mr. Mackenzie and his backer-in-Chief, Senator Brown, are far more anxious as to the condition of their own character for consistency than for the country's weal. But the public at large don't care very much whether either of the gentlemen consistent or inconsistent. What they look for chiefly is, such measures as may inaugurate a better condition of affairs than those which have prevailed since 1874. Yet they find that though the people gave unmistakable expression to their views as to what those measures should be, every means, fair and unfair, are being taken to misrepresent what has been done, and the results that have been thus far achieved. Now, before the Reform party can hope to regain general favor it must place itself en rapport with prevailing sentiment. What has been done in the matter of Protection has been done under no ordinary pressure, and is in accordance with the wishes of the large majority unequivocally expressed at the polls. Yet the ex Premier and his subordinates are striving to undo what has been done, endeavoring to make the electors aware that which they so loudly declared to be their opinion in 1878. And herein is a grave mistake. Time should be allowed to develop the truth or unreson of that which has been done. Every sensible man must see that. Yet no sooner was the National Policy introduced than it was declared to be a failure. When great reforms have taken place in England it has been the practice to accept them, and to push on in other directions. But in Canada the recent alterations in the fiscal and commercial policy of the country are at once told their own tales, as they assuredly must do, sooner or later, but the public is asked to declare a failure in advance of detrimental experience. If the ex Premier were not too stubborn for effective leadership he would bow to opinion, leaving his own justification to the future. No matter who the leader may be, such a policy carries with it its own condemnation. Whether Mr. Blake would consent to hold the "Reform" party to such a disadvantageous position may be questioned. At any rate, he should have become aware of the impolicy of it by this time.

It is claimed in regard to Mr. Sandford Fleming and Mr. Marcus Smith, Government Engineers, that they are "irresponsible agents" in the hands of Ministers. No doubt of it. The Minister under whom they act for the time is accountable to the country for the fruits of their work, and ought to shoulder whatever onus attaches to it. But during the rule of Mr. Mackenzie the Chief Engineer seems to have been practically head of the Public Works Department. Mr. Mackenzie made him the scapegoat of his own delinquencies. Everything that went wrong—and scarcely anything went right—was blamed upon the Chief Engineer. "Twas the C. E. who recommended it." He (the Premier) only "acted on the Engineer's suggestion," &c., seeking thereby to shirk censure for the many shortcomings of his office. The fallacy of such a position must be apparent.

The month of March has witnessed many dissolutions of Parliament. In the reign of Henry VIII. there were two March dissolutions, namely, on March 4, 1518, and March 29, 1544; in the reign of Edward VI. one, on March 31, 1553; in the reign of Queen Elizabeth two, on March 23, 1587, and March 29, 1589; in the reign of James I. one, on March 27, 1625; in the reign of Charles I. one, on March 10, 1629; during the Commonwealth one, on March 16, 1660; in the reign of Charles II. one, on March 28, 1681; in the reign of George I. one, on March 10, 1722; in the reign of George II. one, on March 31, 1761; in the reign of George III. two, on March 12, 1768, and March 25, 1784. The present dissolution is the second that has taken place in March during the reign of the present Sovereign, the first being that of March 21, 1857.

The writs for the coming elections in Great Britain and Ireland were to have gone out from the Speaker's office on the 30th to the sheriffs and other returning officers. The elections for boroughs must take place within four days after the receipt of the writ, and in counties within eight days. The writs are returnable in 21 days. The result of the battle will be pretty well known by the middle of next week.

The Constellation, the vessel that is to carry good cheer from America to the hungry people of Ireland, is not a good craft. She was launched at Baltimore on December 7, 1797. In 1812 she was slightly remodelled, and during the war with England she was made famous.

In answer to a deputation, Hon Mr. Langevin stated, on Wednesday, that the Government would insert $10,000 in the estimates for dredging Toronto harbour, and $5,000 for the purpose of obtaining engineering opinions on the subject.

THE APOSTLE OF IRISH LIBERTY.

Mr. Parnell has returned from his American tour, and whether he is or not, he ought to be both a wiser and a sadder man. He claims that his mission has been one of great success, a glorious success, and that he has had the sympathy of the American people with him from the beginning to the end of his tour. Now, the truth of the matter will never be extensively known in Ireland, as nine-tenths of the Irish people will form their opinion upon this subject from his own despatches, and the impartial criticism of the American press will never come before their eyes. We in Canada know that his mission was a grand failure both as respects the enthusiasm he excited and the amount of the funds he raised—whether for political or charitable purposes. In fact, from the very beginning of his career in America his violent speeches and the attempt to arraign the British Government, Parliament and people before the bar of public opinion in a friendly country, convinced his hearers that the Irish nation had made a most unwise selection of a missionary, if Mr. Parnell was really the man of their choice.

If all Home rulers were as moderate and as rational in their views and manner of expressing them as Mr. Justin McCarthy, then the whole people of Great Britain and her dependencies could sympathize with the leaders of the movement, whether they were able to adopt their opinions or not. Mr. McCarthy has a calm, dispassionate and well written article in the Nineteenth Century for this month, in which he lays before the people of Great Britain the common sense of Home Rule, and we are free to admit that the subject has never before been sosklfully, so moderately and so convincingly handled. Could he only induce the people of the three Kingdoms to entertain the same opinion that he does, of the capacity of his countrymen for self-government, their ability to steer clear of sectarian strife, their justice and impartiality in legislating for the general good, and of their power to so far restrain their intense and long continued prejudices of race and creed, as to abstain from persecuting the minority when the power shall be placed in their hands, then the weightiest reasons against Home Rule would be removed and the prospects of the movement greatly brightened. But on what grounds are the people called upon to believe in this moderation? Where are the evidences to be found, that the feeling that have distracted the Island for two centuries, retarded the progress and marred the happiness of the people, and frequently deluged the soil with the blood of her own sons, have been forgotten, their animosities ended, and that the people have learned to trust and love each other? Why, not only is this bitter prejudice as rampant as ever in all parts of Ireland, but it even animates the breasts of the exiles when they carry their household feuds across the seas.

But we might well enquire how many of Mr. McCarthy's friends and fellow-agitators hold the same moderate, loyal and patriotic views on this subject, that he does. He flatters his fellow countrymen by pointing to the Canadian Confederacy, and from the loyalty of the Canadian people and their satisfaction with Home Rule, infers that the Empire has on the whole been rather consolidated than dismembered by the process. Are the Irish agitators prepared to stop at this point and say, so far shall we go and no farther? Who ever heard a Canadian address an American assembly, and court their sympathy by expressing the confident hope, that ere long he would be able to address the same audience as the representative of an independent Canadian nation? And yet these were the terms in which Mr. Parnell spoke to the American people, and claimed that the voice of Ireland should be heard in the council of nations. This bears no similitude to the moderate and rational views expressed by Mr. McCarthy; and if these now before us are characteristic of Home Rulers generally, he had better change, as quickly as may be, the parties who now speak on behalf of the movement, as the Parnells, Biggars, Dillons and others of that ilk are only fit to render unpopular the best of causes.

Mr. McCarthy's views differ but little from those of Mr. Blake and others who advocate the federal union of the Empire. Believing, as he does, in the justice, the fairness, the impartiality, that would characterize the legislation in Ireland, were the Irish Parliament again restored to College Green, we are surprised at his advocacy of the cause he has espoused, and of his sanguine expectation of benefit to result from the change. But has the conduct of the Irish members of the House of Commons of late years been such, as would lead the English people to place confidence in their legislative wisdom? Have their speeches, as lately delivered in different parts of Ireland, the history of such agitations for three-quarters of a century past, and the spirit displayed by these different organisations that have succeeded each other, been of such a kind as would justify Mr. McCarthy in bidding that the Irish people would act once proceed to legislate on domestic affairs in a spirit of equity, wisdom and mutual forbearance? It may be so, but we have no guarantee that it would be so, but, on the contrary, we have from experience much reason to fear that very different scenes would be presented.

The spread of contagious diseases among horses in London is attributed in great measure to the public cattle troughs which have of late years been established from motives of humanity. But the evil which evil is probably to be found in bad sanitary arrangements of the stables. Horses by hundreds are stowed away in dark, damp, ill-ventilated places, where there is no proper drainage nor any provision whatever for preserving their health.

The Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, says the Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Gazette, appears to excite more interest of an antagonistic character in the Maritime Provinces than in the other parts of the Dominion. Every day for some time back, three or more petitions against any interference with the present marriage law have been presented. These have come from the Church of England.

The occurrence in the Jamaica papers of advertisements setting forth the virtues of the produce of cigar factories in the island reminds us of the success which has attended the cultivation of the fragrant weed in Jamaica, which promises to rival Cuba in the excellence of her cigars. Advertisements of Jamaica cigars are also finding their way into the English newspapers.

The Lambton Registrarship.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

SIR,—I beg to contradict the statement of your Toronto correspondent so far as I am concerned. I made no offer of the Registrarship to Hon. A. Mackenzie, nor was I asked to do it; and had I been so requested would have declined the duty with thanks. Respectfully,

M. FLEMING.

Sarnia, March 26, 1880.

..California has few songbirds. There are no Spring warblers, except the robin (which spends its Summers in the high Sierras) and the black bird, which holds out there all Winter, and, with liquid notes, is the first to greet the Spring. In the East a great army of warblers precedes the sun as he moves north from the equator, for there is an uninterrupted stretch of country affording them food in the migration from the Gulf States to Labrador; but with California the deserts beyond Los Angeles and San Diego prove to be almost insurmountable barriers. At all events, the absence of songsters from that State is very notable.

DANGER TO CANADIAN CANALS.

The New York Herald takes occasion to refer to the military strength and resources of Canada, and arrives at the conclusion that upon an emergency this country, aided by England, could get a larger force into the field than the States. The bulk of the United States regular army is so small and at such a distance out in the western territories, that it would be of little use to meet the exigencies of a sudden occasion. It is a popular notion in the States that a conquest of Canada could be made within a short month, but the Herald thinks that that idea is based upon a mistake. It is pointed out that the completion of the Welland Canal next year will give ready access to British gun-boats, which would operate against the defenceless cities of the inland waters. To stop such an operation the American plan would be to seize the canal, but it is deemed doubtful if this could be done in the face of the Canadian forces that would be rapidly concentrated for its protection. This conclusion is regarded as a national danger for the States, and the suggestion comes to construct strong and heavily armed forts on the New York bank of the St. Lawrence, which could completely command the river, and with the aid of torpedoes would make it impossible for any British ship to pass into Lake Ontario. The supposition alluded to seems to be somewhat far fetched. The danger of a rupture between England and the States is exceedingly remote, and after the grave difficulties incident to the capture of the Trent, the claims arising out of the Alabama, and recently concerning the Fisheries were amicably settled, it is almost certain that similar means would be resorted to in order to dispose of any future difficulties that might arise between the two countries. The instincts of Canadians are altogether in the direction of peace. This country, at least, has nothing to gain but much to lose from a warlike policy, and though there is a good minster rolling in the militia, one among a thousand is not the force called into active service. But if the United States Government proceeds to build forts such as those suggested, in order to cover the St. Lawrence route, of course other forts would be constructed on this side of the river, and muzzle to muzzle would be the order of the day. At any rate, the determination expressed to settle the Welland canal at the first outbreak would have a most salutary effect, for what noble work, which has cost Canada so dear, and has been constructed altogether in the interests of peace and international co-operation, should be left entirely at the mercy of a wild animus was very great. Fresh discoveries of the omniform inscriptions of Assyrians were acquainted with the existence of apples on the sea, which they could only have known by the fact of telescope. These it is supposed they possessed. Mr. Layard found a crystalline lens in the ruins of Nineveh. The Assyrian Cyclopedia, inscribed on bricks, was an encyclopedia, deciphered, disclosed that houses and land were sold, leased, and mortgaged, that money was loaned at interest, and that the market gardeners, to use an American phrase, "worked on shares;" that the farmer, when plowing with his oxen, beguiled his labor with short and homely songs, two of which have been found, and to encourage them he was disposed to fall back upon the exhilaration of Bidwhon, that "there was nothing new under the sun."—*N. Fleitman has discovered that by adding one-eighth of 1 per cent. of magnesium to fused nickel or cobalt, these metals, which are said or hot, are capable of being easily forged or rolled into sheets. Cobalt alloyed with magnesium becomes very hard, and, when polished, surpasses nickel in brilliancy and whiteness. Both the salt and the nickel, treated as above, remain unbarnished when exposed to the atmosphere, and when cast in molds have the same properties as cast steel.

A keen competition promises to take place between the competitors in India, for the prize of 50 000 rupees for the best invention, and 10,000 for the second best, of a machine to work and prepare the Rhea fibre, which is found in the Himalayas, and on the following day this electric light from Mulahacen, in Spain, was seen, and the work was accomplished, so that we now possessed a meridian arc of 27 °, the greatest ever measured on the surface of the earth. The attempt to get the various nations of the world to agree on one common meridian has, so far, failed, owing to objections raised by the French and other representatives at the last Geographical Congress at Antwerp, M. De Beaumont, President of the Geographical Society of Geneva, advocated one passing through Behring Straits as the first or initial meridian, the advantages being that it would, on the one hand, traverse the whole length of the Pacific Ocean without touching land, and on the other divide Europe into east and west, thus giving a division which has been tacitly recognized for ages. The Chief Justice said that he fully concurred in M. De Beaumont's suggestion. The explorations of Sir Wyvill Thompson, made during the recent scientific voyage of her Majesty's ship Challenger around the globe, has demonstrated that the average depth of the ocean was about 2,000 fathoms, (12,000 feet) and that depths beyond 4,000 fathoms were very rare. In the deeper abysses below 3,000 fathoms the soundings revealed an extremely reddish clay, apparently the decomposition of sub-marine volcanoes and of decomposed organisms.

An extraordinary snow fall occurred in Cashmere, in Asia, last Winter. In certain places it snowed continuously and uninterruptedly for 10 successive days, the snow on the level plains being from 80 to 40 feet deep, and in some of the mountain passes it was piled up to the height of 150 and 250 feet. The earth was torn from the hillsides and precipitated into the valleys in the Spring by the weight of the descending avalanches. The destruction of wild animals was very great. THERE is some talk of constructing on the Place du Carrousel, at Paris, a vast monument illustrating the history of past republican governments. The four angles of the future monument will be occupied by colossal equestrian statues of four illustrious generals of the First Republic—Kleber, Hoche, Marceau and a fourth who has not yet been chosen.

THE Figaro announces the death at Nimes of an aunt of M. Gambetta, who was formerly the servant of a canon. According to the Figaro this latter was much surprised at his advocacy of the cause he has espoused, and of his sanguine expectation of benefit to result from the change. But has the conduct of the Irish members of the House of Commons of late years been such, as would lead the English people to place confidence in their legislative wisdom? Have their speeches, as lately delivered in different parts of Ireland, the history of such agitations for three-quarters of a century past, and the spirit displayed by these different organisations that have succeeded each other, been of such a kind as would justify Mr. McCarthy in bidding that the Irish people would act once proceed to legislate on domestic affairs in a spirit of equity, wisdom and mutual forbearance? It may be so, but we have no guarantee that it would be so, but, on the contrary, we have from experience much reason to fear that very different scenes would be presented.

The spread of contagious diseases among horses in London is attributed in great measure to the public cattle troughs which have of late years been established from motives of humanity. But the evil which evil is probably to be found in bad sanitary arrangements of the stables. Horses by hundreds are stowed away in dark, damp, ill-ventilated places, where there is no proper drainage nor any provision whatever for preserving their health.

The Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, says the Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Gazette, appears to excite more interest of an antagonistic character in the Maritime Provinces than in the other parts of the Dominion. Every day for some time back, three or more petitions against any interference with the present marriage law have been presented. These have come from the Church of England.

The occurrence in the Jamaica papers of advertisements setting forth the virtues of the produce of cigar factories in the island reminds us of the success which has attended the cultivation of the fragrant weed in Jamaica, which promises to rival Cuba in the excellence of her cigars. Advertisements of Jamaica cigars are also finding their way into the English newspapers.

..California has few songbirds. There are no Spring warblers, except the robin (which spends its Summers in the high Sierras) and the black bird, which holds out there all Winter, and, with liquid notes, is the first to greet the Spring. In the East a great army of warblers precedes the sun as he moves north from the equator, for there is an uninterrupted stretch of country affording them food in the migration from the Gulf States to Labrador; but with California the deserts beyond Los Angeles and San Diego prove to be almost insurmountable barriers. At all events, the absence of songsters from that State is very notable.

SIR A. T. GALT AT MONTREAL.

Extracts from the Banquet Speech.

DOMINION FINANCES.

Sir Charles Tupper has already told you that it is in contemplation that the Dominion shall take charge of her own finances in London. It is not for me to anticipate the statement which the Minister of Finance will make in the House of Commons, but I think we may suppose, and suppose truly, that he will draw attention to this fact—that the credit of this country is so well established in the English market, that we do not longer require outside support, that it rests upon the energy and enterprise of Canada itself, and that while we continue to be grateful for the assistance we have received in past years from the eminent financial firms who have attended to that duty in London, still Canada has grown to the point where it is no longer necessary that it should get its access to the London market through any particular channel, but that it had the right to appear there in the same way that much less important colonies are now doing, asking any assistance they require entirely and solely on the financial merit of the colony itself.

NORTH WEST IMMIGRATION.

With reference to the subject of immigration, it is perhaps the most important that we are likely to have for many years to come. The settlement of the almost boundless plains of the North-West opens up to Canada a future which enables us to look forward at a very early date to that national power and strength which we look-ed forward to when we entered into Confederation. It is beyond doubt that the North-west Territory of Canada contains within itself a larger proportion of the wheat lands of the world than any other country. (Hear, hear.) Canada, with a small population, a population not four millions, has undertaken the laborious task of opening up and bringing under civilization that immense country. It is a duty which has devolved upon the Atlantic Provinces, as I may say; but it is duty which they are performing not so much for themselves as the Empire at large. I cannot think that the inhabitants of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick or even of Ontario, have very much greater direct interest in the settlement of those vast regions at the base of the Rocky Mountains than the farmers in Yorkshire or the tenant-farmers in Tipperary. (Hear, hear.) That settlement can only be carried through at a very considerable expense, but to be successful, that expense must be incurred at a very early date. It is only by a vigorous and bold policy that we can, as we perfectly well know, unless this railway is made through our own territory before the opportune moment pass away, all the emigration which is certain to leave the British Isles will be directed to a foreign country instead of to our North west. It is, I say, impossible for Canada, with her limited population and limited means, to undertake alone the settlement of such a vast region as is comprehended in the North west. We have neither the people nor the money to do it. It would take a period of time far beyond that which the best will aspire before the settlement of that country, if it were left to our own people, could be effected. We must look to fill that great object, as the object of civilization as large and as grand as to appeal to the best feelings and sympathies of our fellow-countrymen—we have to enlist in that object, I say, the sympathies of another land. (Hear, hear.) In two years we shall have direct communication by rail through our own territory, from Fort William on the west of Red River. We shall then be able to carry immigrants coming from Europe, Great Britain or any other part of the world, through our own country without being obliged to hand them over to foreigners, and thus be exposing them to the solicitations of other people. We shall be able to take them to the very centre of the world, and to commence them upon our own lands, greatly to the advantage of ourselves, and greatly also to the advantage of those people themselves.

Dreadful Outrages in Paris.

The Parisian public had not recovered from the recent horrible attempted murder at Batignolles when they were once more aroused by the report of two more crimes of a similar nature, the time perpetrated in the very heart of the capital, and in broad daylight. The first took place in the Rue de Tartit, near the Western Railway Station. Here lives an English gentleman, who occupies an apartment on the third story, over-looking the courtyard. His name is Pearson, he is 66 years of age, and is said to be very rich. About three o'clock on Sunday afternoon a young man called on him with a letter purporting to come from a friend of his, who appear to cling to the owner and trainer Biriga. Another jocky, wearing his colors—Edwards—met with his death by a similar accident not long back, and a lad belonging to his stables poisoned himself a few months ago.

THERE is some talk of constructing on the Place du Carrousel, at Paris, a vast monument illustrating the history of past republican governments. The four angles of the future monument will be occupied by colossal equestrian statues of four illustrious generals of the First Republic—Kleber, Hoche, Marceau and a fourth who has not yet been chosen.

RESEARCHES OF SCIENCE.

Chief Justice Daly delivered his annual address upon the "Geographical Work of the World in 1878 and 1879," before the American Geographical Society, at New York, on Tuesday evening. The lecture was of the usual exhaustive character, embracing a resume of explorations and discoveries by governmental and private agencies during the years in question. An important achievement has been the completion of the measurement of an arc of the meridian by a system of triangles extending from the northernmost of the Shetland Islands, in latitude 61° north, to the borders of the Sahara Desert in Africa, latitude 34° north. This work was successfully completed last September. The great difficulty was to extend the line of triangulation from the coast of Europe to the coast of Africa, which, after many failures, was finally accomplished by means of the electric light. The vapors of the Mediterranean proved impervious to the rays of the electric light, and to produce sufficient intensity it was necessary to construct an electro-magnetic apparatus, propelled by steam engines. After 20 days of repeated efforts and failures, the electric light from Tetica, in Spain, became visible to the eye on the African coast, like a round, reddish disk on the horizon, and on the following day this electric light from Mulahacen, in Spain, was seen, and the work was accomplished, so that we now possessed a meridian arc of 27 °, the greatest ever measured on the surface of the earth. The attempt to get the various nations of the world to agree on one common meridian has, so far, failed, owing to objections raised by the French and other representatives at the last Geographical Congress at Antwerp, M. De Beaumont, President of the Geographical Society of Geneva, advocated one passing through Behring Straits as the first or initial meridian, the advantages being that it would, on the one hand, traverse the whole length of the Pacific Ocean without touching land, and on the other divide Europe into east and west, thus giving a division which has been tacitly recognized for ages. The Chief Justice said that he fully concurred in M. De Beaumont's suggestion. The explorations of Sir Wyvill Thompson, made during the recent scientific voyage of her Majesty's ship Challenger around the globe, has demonstrated that the average depth of the ocean was about 2,000 fathoms, (12,000 feet) and that depths beyond 4,000 fathoms were very rare. In the deeper abysses below 3,000 fathoms the soundings revealed an extremely reddish clay, apparently the decomposition of sub-marine volcanoes and of decomposed organisms.

An extraordinary snow fall occurred in Cashmere, in Asia, last Winter. In certain places it snowed continuously and uninterruptedly for 10 successive days, the snow on the level plains being from 80 to 40 feet deep, and in some of the mountain passes it was piled up to the height of 150 and 250 feet. The earth was torn from the hillsides and precipitated into the valleys in the Spring by the weight of the descending avalanches. The destruction of wild animals was very great. Fresh discoveries of the omniform inscriptions of Assyrians were acquainted with the existence of apples on the sea, which they could only have known by the fact of telescope. These it is supposed they possessed. Mr. Layard found a crystalline lens in the ruins of Nineveh. The Assyrian Cyclopedia, inscribed on bricks, was an encyclopedia, deciphered, disclosed that houses and land were sold, leased, and mortgaged, that money was loaned at interest, and that the market gardeners, to use an American phrase, "worked on shares;" that the farmer, when plowing with his oxen, beguiled his labor with short and homely songs, two of which have been found, and to encourage them he was disposed to fall back upon the exhilaration of Bidwhon, that "there was nothing new under the sun."—*N. Popular Science.

Fleitman has discovered that by adding one-eighth of 1 per cent. of magnesium to fused nickel or cobalt, these metals, which are said or hot, are capable of being easily forged or rolled into sheets. Cobalt alloyed with magnesium becomes very hard, and, when polished, surpasses nickel in brilliancy and whiteness. Both the salt and the nickel, treated as above, remain unbarnished when exposed to the atmosphere, and when cast in molds have the same properties as cast steel.

A keen competition promises to take place between the competitors in India, for the prize of 50 000 rupees for the best invention, and 10,000 for the second best, of a machine to work and prepare the Rhea fibre, which is found in the Himalayas, and on the following day this electric light from Mulahacen, in Spain, was seen, and the work was accomplished, so that we now possessed a meridian arc of 27 °, the greatest ever measured on the surface of the earth. The attempt to get the various nations of the world to agree on one common meridian has, so far, failed, owing to objections raised by the French and other representatives at the last Geographical Congress at Antwerp, M. Clarence E. Davis Indicted for Bigamy.

The Chicago Inter Ocean of Tuesday says:—The much-married party, Clarence Eugene Davis, was indicted yesterday for bigamy. There was quite a crowd around the County Building in anticipation of the event of Davis. The three wives, Mrs. Davis, nee Madigan, of Canada; Mrs. Davis, nee Maggie Vandecar, of Detroit, and Mrs. Davis, nee Clara Cleveland, of Quincy, Ill., were all there in one two-three order. It was developed in the evidence before the jury, that when David lived with the Detroit wife in Leona Co., O., he there reined a young girl, who became a mother, and whose child is now in the city. The man Davis, as the evidence is fairly demonstrating, is a rascal who is only fit for a hemp necktie and a suit of feathers and tar.

There are also published four letters from alleged wives of Davis, received by Chief O'Donnell, of the Chicago Police.

..Professor Dowden on Southey: "His industry was that of a German; his lucidity and perfect expedition were such as we rarely find outside a French memoir. There is no style fitter for continuous narrative than the pedestrian style of Southey. It does not beat upon the ear with hard metallic vibrations. The sentences are not cast in the thousand in one mould of cheap rhetoric, nor made brilliant with one cheap color. Never dithyrambic, he is never cold; he affects neither the trick of stateliness nor that of careless ease; he does not seek out curiosities of refinement, nor careers after delicate affectations. Because his style is rational it is unimitable, and the only way to write like Southey is to write well." But if his style is inimitable how can one write like him? and does one then write like Southey when one writes well?

..Londoners who six years ago looked upon ice water as an unhealthy beverage, and stared when Americans ordered it, now find it indispensable.

SENTIMENTARY.

A man who has red hair,
And has a red haired son,
If in red it sorry gifts must share,
Rise how could it be done.

Leghorns and Tuscans and other old fashioned straws bonnets represent the spring millinery, and in some instances are in shapes that recall the styles of half a century ago.

Many of the tollite worn by young ladies are very simply made. The pretty French waist, with a plaiting puffed in the top and shirred to the the end of the point, is a favorite style.

That fellow Jones is always "wanting to know" something; people, he says, often talk of "the happy mean." Jones wants to know how this can be, as if the mean ever can be, or even deserve to be, happy.

But fashion's laws demand
That you publish writing.

But writing now is 'old style'—
But who, alas! can read it?"

So many trucks, articles and books have been written in order to give advice about what great, good works a woman can do about home that a critic is compelled to say that hundreds of women are toiling in life without homes.

A novelty in hosiery which does not decrease from its becoming popular is a little ox-bloc clock stocking which is worn over another stocking of a contrasting color. The clock is so very open that the stocking is little more than net-work.

The memorial which is being addressed to Queen Victoria in support of the legalization of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, by the mayors and ex-mayors of boroughs, has just been signed by the Lord Mayor of London.

Dr. Tyler says that the first agricultural instrument, a pointed stick four or five feet long, for digging plants, uncarthing animals, or knocking down fruits, was naturally bent, the point being hardened by fire, and used as a hoe; the Indians of North America not having advanced further in this respect than the prehistoric inhabitants of South Sweden.

At the last Elvase ball a French statesman lost his wife in the crowd. He search-ed in vain for two hours, and at length settled himself disconsolately in a corner. At last a dashing cavalry officer came up with the lost wife on his arm, and restored her to her anxious husband. "When a person restores a lost object to its owner he is entitled to a handsome reward," said the statesman. "Mille grâces, monsieur, je suis payé," replied the officer, with a smile.

Lucifer Match Girls.

SERIOUSLY ACCOUNT OF THE BUSINESS BY ONE OF THE GIRLS.

London Telegraph, March 3.

Lucifer match making, according to this young lady's statement, "was a much better trade some one time. But I'm a speaking now," she continued, "of when my mother was a gal. She worked at it, and so did my sister Lou. She died in London Hospital of it." "Of what?" "Of the matches. There was no end to the new-fangled ways of making matches in them times, at least so I've heard my mother say, only brimstone and fosforous, and that's been cried out to love our fellow creatures and to trust in the goodness of our Maker." I want to be a-doing of my work, and not for them as says nobody. "Man or woman is as good as God is, and there is no God greater than humanity." Then I will be your wife," or "that only one other book that teaches us as well as 'Leaves of Grass' to love our fellow man." Is it Tom Paine's "Age of Reason," Or Bob Ingersoll's blasphemies? I know a Book that has one sentence engraven with which all the wisdom and undiguised communism is as a smoking fallow candle to the mid-day sun. It is this, "Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

We are challenged to read the vii. chap. of Songs of Solomon in our pulpits. "And what for ne?" as Mrs. Brown would say. I have read it, often, in the pulpit, and I think persons of real taste and true refinement will agree with me that there is not a more exquisitely beautiful poetical passage in the literature of the world. "Honi soit qui mal y pense." MacCheyne's test of a real Christian is the construction he puts on the Song of Solomon.

I am prepared to prove every statement made in the foregoing by a critical examination of "Leaves of Grass." Let any twelve men, good and true, read the works of Whitman and I will rest my case on their verdict. In my next I will put Peter Bayne in the witness box.

J. ALLISTER MURRAY.

AN INSOLENT COUNTRYMAN.—The Detroit Tribune says:—A young man named Jas. Sibilitis, from Stafford, Renna County, Lower Canada, was swindled out of $16 by card playing last night, about 12 o'clock, in one of the low variety theatre buildings in the vicinity of the market. Sibilitis, who is on his way to Worcester, Mass., near which place he expects to get work at a chisel maker, came into the city yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, and in the evening went to the variety theatre mentioned. When the performance was finished he asked one of the men in the hall to tell him where he could get a bed, and was shown by the stranger up a rear pair of stairs into a room where card playing was going on. He agreed to play a game for the drinks with his guide, and after the cards were dealt was informed by another stranger looking over his shoulder that his hand was good for $25. Sibilitis united with stranger number two in betting on his own success, and advanced $8 as his share of the pot. The result was that he lost the $8, and $8 more subsequently. Failing to recover the money, he acquired the matter to the police, but by the time they had visited the place the operators had vanished. Sibilitis says he has read of similar dodges in the papers, but that he is easily led, and thought it would be mean to refuse a loan of $16 even to a stranger.

The Walt Whitman Controversy.

LETTER FROM REV. J. A. MURRAY.

Because the weaker side of human nature is often betrayed so pitiably, even by the noblest of men, when they suffer the lists as controversialists, I, in common with many, have no exceeding dislike of such conduct. To warn the public, however, against a pernicious philosophy and and an impure system of morals is a matter so important that he who should do so, and from fear of personal sacrifice will not, is reerreant from truth. The conviction constraining me, as a public impugner of Walt Whitman's teaching, to give a few of my reasons for doing so. In doing this I will endeavor, as far as possible, to eschew all local references and shall avoid all personalities aside from Whitman himself, to whom the question at issue must be brought home by direct avitidum. I do not mean by any reference to his private character, with that we have nothing, just now, to do. Some man's lives are worse than their public teachings, some other men's better. I am glad to learn that Whitman's private life falls within the latter category. Out of his public writings, now the property of history, let Whitman, by a fair application of the ordinary canons of criticism, be justified or condemned. Now judging by these criteria I am, after a careful study of Whitman's works, convinced without any doubts that his advocates and devotees have undertaken a contest that would bankrupt the literary and moral reputation of most men.

Before putting Whitman in the witness box, however, and dissecting him by a famous criminal prosecutor, I wish, in a general way, to animadvert on the constitution of his defenders in reference to their treatment of himself and his impugners. For instance, thoroughly honest and upright men, believing much of Whitman's writings to be precious, by reason of their bold harmless and unstarting lowdness, expose his errors by giving extracts, but no sooner is this done than his defenders raise the easy cry of "garbled."

In the pyrmid list controversy, this artifice has been most unjustly applied. I am not Reqiirer No. 1, but I furnished that gentleman with the extracts which he used in his letters, and I beg to assure the public that they were taken almost at random from "Leaves of Grass." The only aim in the selection was to get the cleanest handful from a whole continent of mud.

Then some shilling like a note to Sing, conscientious people, whose moral sense is badly concussed by Whitman's gross indecencies, about the extracts which I take with me. I say here, deliberately, that should any publisher, who had a solitary blush left, think fit to bind up a cheap edition of "Leaves of Grass" for decent folk to buy, it would prove a very small thing—the boards and the title page would be about the extent of it. Fancy a household edition of a grimly bear—his tail—only this and nothing more.

Then, again, the champions of Whitman are continually reminding people of the all sanctifying influence of the Bible, and that incomprehensible Saxons in which their deity dwells in! And how dare ordinary mortals presume to

THE Biddulph Tragedy!

JUST ISSUED,

IN PAMPHLET FORM,

A Full and Thrilling Narrative of the Great Donnelly Tragedy in Biddulph, one of the most atrocious crimes on record. The work comprises 40 pages of closely and elegantly printed matter, and tells the story in all its ghastly and horrible details in lucid and concise language. The events of the night of the 4th of Feb., when four of the ill-fated family were beaten to death in their own dwelling and their bodies burned, and another member of the family was called to his door and shot to death by assassins, are duly and amply recorded, as well as the feuds and quarrels, extending over many years, which lead to the atrocity, and the subsequent proceedings up to the close of the police examination, when several persons were committed for trial for the outrage.

The reader is taken step by step through the dark maze of fend, conspiracy and murder, and all that is at present publicly known in connection therewith is unravelled and set forth in a clear and comprehensive light, as the scenes of a panorama.

The work is without party bias, and strictly an impartial collaboration, reproducing in fresh and vivid colors, and in small compass, what has already appeared in various fragmentary forms, and enveloped in misty speculations. It is now in the form of a CRISP AND SUCCINCT STORY, all the facts as they have been revealed by the different parties concerned being woven into a tale as weird and thrilling as any to be found in the realm of fiction.

The book is illustrated with wood cuts of the principal prisoners and the dwellings visited by the murderers.

The whole forms a history which should be in the hands of all who take an intelligent interest in the case.

MIDDLESEX WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, March 26, 1 a.m.—Indications for lower Lakes, cloudy, with occasional rain or snow.

PERSONAL.—Hon. John Carling, M. P., of London, arrived home yesterday afternoon from his Parliamentary duties at Ottawa, for a brief visit.

DOWN THE RIVER.—Weather permitting, the Frances Navigation Company's steamer Princess Louise will make trips down the river to-day at 10 a.m. and 2 and 7 30 p.m. The Italian Band will be on board.

CANADA PACIFIC CONTRACTS.—The time for receiving tenders for the construction of a second one hundred mile section of the Pacific Railroad west of Winnipeg has been extended from Monday, the 29th inst., to Friday, April 9th.

BREACHES OF THE LIQUOR LAW.—John Macfarlane, Arcadia Gourley, and Thos. J. McDermith were assessed $20 and costs each by the Police Magistrate yesterday for committing breaches of the Liquor Law. The fines were paid.

OTHELLO TO-NIGHT.—Bear in mind the reappearance of Herr Baudmann, with Mrs. Baudmann and a full dramatic company, this (Friday) evening in Shakespeare's great tragedy of "Othello." Seats may be reserved at usual at Murray's.

A HANDSOME TESTIMONIAL.—The St. Thomas Times says:—Mr. J. Wendleton, until recently track superintendent of the Canada Southern Railway, is to be presented with a handsome silver tea service, valued at $250, by the employes of the Road Department of the C. S. R., on his retiring from the position he has so acceptably occupied. The plate comprises five pieces, including a complete tea set, with tray, a water pitcher and goblets, urn, and wine stand; all chased, and three of the pieces are inscribed.

PALM SUNDAY.—Yesterday was Annunciation Day, and at St. Peter's Cathedral, in this city, High Mass was celebrated at the early service. His Lordship Bishop conducted the ceremonies and services suited to the day, assisted by the reverend gentlemen of the staff. The customary ceremony of blessing the oil of confirmation and ordination was carried out. In the evening the "Office of Tenebræ," or Lamentations of Jeremiah, was sung by the priests at the church. Large congregations were in attendance on each occasion. The usual services celebrated on Good Friday will no doubt be largely attended to-day.

SACRED CONCERT.—A large audience was present in the Clarence Street Presbyterian Church last night, on the occasion of a sacred concert in aid of the Sabbath school fund. The programme consisted of a number of excellent selections from standard composers, and gave the highest satisfaction. The organ overtures by Mr. W. Ellis were well played, and the singing by the choir was highly creditable. The soloists, Mesdames Ellis and R. Reid, jr., and Dr. Sippi, were especially pleasing, and elicited the warmest applause for their efforts. Mrs. Reid, an excellent soprano, sang for the first time in London, and was most heartily received. The trios and quartettes were sung by Mesdames Ellis and Reid, Misses Kerlee, Raymond and Cooper; Messrs. Hayes, McIntosh, Anderson, Moffat, Brewster, and Jones, and were an entertaining portion of the programme. Rev. Dr. Proudfoot presided.

ANCIENT PIONEER GONE.—It is our duty this week to record the death of Mr. Alex. Johnston, which sad event took place at his residence in Adelaide, on Thursday, March 18th, 1880, in the 70th year of his age. The deceased was born in the county of Tyrone, Ireland, May 12th, 1810. In 1834 he emigrated to Canada; and in 1836 settled on lot 6, con. 3, N. E. R., Adelaide, where he continued to reside till the time of his death. He was therefore among the very earliest settlers in Adelaide. Mr. Johnston was highly respected in his neighborhood. He had gathered considerable wealth, but, unlike most men, he divided it with his children as they became of age. He was an adherent of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a Liberal-Conservative. His remains were followed to their last resting place by a very large procession of relatives, friends and acquaintances.—Strathroy Dispatch.

Cols. Taylor and Moffat, of this city, were in Guelph the other day, supervising the transfer of the Wellington Field Battery from Major Macdonald to Capt. Nicoll.

Mr. John Higginbottom, of the Grand Trunk, has, we regret to hear, passed good where there is a limited quantity; sometimes the mill was going and at other times standing when I saw it; I think the mill privileges were the best I consider the dam a good one; I have a schedule of the time when the mill was stopped last summer; the interference with the water supply would affect the value of the mill; it is worth over $9,000 in the present condition; with proper repairs to the dam it would reduce the value one half; the machinery is old style, but good, and there is a good smut mill; I examined the stones; they are French burr, the 9 runner being a very superior one; a burr stone, ready for work, is worth $900; I saw a single set of merchant mills and one run of stones; Kenny's mill did good work when McDowell ran it; I think a steam mill will do as good work as a water mill if run properly; I have known 4 persons go past a steam mill to my mill, which is a water mill; where water goes by its and starts it affects a mill; it causes grind so fast, and it would affect the quality of the flour; a good miller would vary the speed can be regulated by regulating the water let in; can't say what the capacity of the mill is; eight bushels an hour could be ground by their wheat stone; the other stone would grind eight bushels of corn an hour.

Cross-examined—If the privilege were sold for the purpose of the present mill I think I would estimate the value at $8,000; then —$4,000 for the dam; $2,000 for the mill, and $3,000 for the privilege; the dam is built of timber and stone; the upper side of the dam is not brush; if there is a good privilege and an owner short of water would put in steam.

Emmanuel Rockey, a miller, of Wingham, sworn—Have been a miller for thirty six years; own a water mill; would not have a steam grist mill where there is a good water power, as it will not pay to run a steam grist mill; if the steam mill is run steady it will do as good work as a water, but people prefer a water mill to a steam one; know the Kenny mill was there in 1846; I tried to buy it from Kenny six or seven years ago; I offered $6,000 cash down and they wanted $9,000; there was no dam there then; I will give $6,000 cash down for it to-day; was at it yesterday; there is a first class dam there now; the water power is the best from London to Chatham; the seat is at Wardsville; I have run a custom mill all my days; the value of he mill would be affected by the interference with the water; in the summer season that mill could run night and day one run of stones; I think the property has been damaged $1,500, and I would give $4,500 for the property damaged as it is.

James Mathers, farmer, sworn—Live in Westminster and have lived there fifty-seven years; go to mill six times a year; done at Kenny's mill; always got good satisfaction; got the work done when we went against the Fast Grand Camp, but they be did a very good business; the business has fallen off; went to Kenny's mill; the water works dam he did a good business; went with a grist and had to go home without it; that's nothing pleased the Fast Grand Camp so much as the fact that their action now received the unanimous endorsation of the Sir Knights present. That the Fast Great Camp was not idle would be seen in a few days, when amendments to the constitution would be submitted to the Order for approval, which would place the Masonic Camp on a better footing in all particulars in the land; that at the earliest practicable moment consistent with the interests of the Order he and his colleagues intended to hand the reigns of power over to the next Tent qualified, as provided by the constitution.

Great Finance Keeper Fitzgerald stated that he would be glad to hand the Great Camp over as soon as proper arrangements could be made; also that he and his colleagues had served the Order gratuitously for three terms, and he thought they were entitled to their confidence still.

POLICE COURT NOTES.—At this court yesterday, the P.M. presiding, John Clark was charged by P. C. Adams with vagrancy. He was sent to jail for one month. Patrick McGuinty was charged by P. C. Rowan with being drunk and disorderly. Bailed until the 27th inst. Geo. H. Aird was charged by Patrick McGuinty with assault. Several witnesses were examined touching the matter, the evidence of the lot being of a very contradictory character throughout. McGuinty was ordered to pay the costs of the case, the evidence showing that he was altogether to blame. Aline Leadbeater was again up on remand, charged with being drunk and disorderly and smashing windows. Robert Graham was up on similar charges. Leadbeater was fined $1 and $3 costs; and Graham $5 and $4.60 costs for assaulting Wm. Forth—in default, two months. On the other charge he was fined $1 and $9 costs, or 21 days in jail. James Quinn was also up on remand for being drunk and disorderly, and also for attempting to break into Jennie Smith's home a few nights ago. Remanded again until the 29th for examination. John Macadams, a wayward married man, was in the dock charged by his wife with drunkenness and vagrancy. Six months in the Central Prison was awarded him. John Anglow, the wealthy Tenton, was up for being drunk. He said his name was Englehart. For being drunk and incapable, a fine of $4 and $4 costs was imposed, and for carrying a loaded revolver, a fine of $20 and $4 costs was ordered, and the weapon impounded.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A young man by the name of Moore died very suddenly at Ridgetown on Saturday evening, 20th inst. He attended the opera and got out about half past eleven. When he went home he complained of a pain in his back, and was asked to take some medicine, which he refused. It is thought by the doctor that he was in bed about half an hour when he died.

KENNEY'S MILL PRIVILEGE.

Continuation of the Arbitration in the Matter.

Views of Farmers and Millers Thereon.

Very Wide Difference of Opinion Exhibited.

Thursday, March 25.

The arbitration in the matter of Kenny vs. the Water Commissioners was resumed this forenoon.

James Ballantyne, a farmer who lives on North street, Westminster, three miles south of Lambeth, and nine miles from Byron, said he had his gristing done at Kenny's mill except when the roads were bad, when he took his wheat to London; he had yearly about 20 bushels of wheat and 40 bushels of chopped stuff ground, and got very good satisfaction; was always able to get his grist except in August last, when there were complaints about the water; have not been at Kenny's since then, because I could not get my grist back; get the last done at New Brighton; would go to Lambeth if I found good work done there.

Sylvester Fortner, a farmer, of Westminster, who lives three miles south of Lambeth, nine from Byron and eight from New Brighton mill, had got his gristing done principally at Kenny's mill for twenty years; my father also did the same before me; there were no tolls to pay, and grist always ready and got good satisfaction; always got my grist away until last fall; I go to the mill about every three months; always found the mill going until I went there last fall, after harvest, at about ten o'clock in the morning; three loads came in after me; I had 12 bags of wheat and 6 bags of chop stuff; the other loads were pretty good loads; I was in the mill and saw several grists piled up therein; the mill was running; did not get my grist home but went again next day and got it; I had a grist of 30 or 40 bushels formerly; but not so much now; 30 bushels of chop stuff would be my custom work now; I have not been to that mill since, because I heard that they were not grinding; Kenny always seemed to be doing a good business—the mill was always going.

Cross-examined—We would go to the Lambeth Steam Mill if it was doing good work; we would go to the nearest mill if the work turned out was as good as others.

Josep Clark, a miller in the township of Carradoc, and who was a practical millwright from 1834 until fifteen or twenty years ago, said he had built at least ten new mills, and had seen the Kenny mill first in 1842, saw it frequently ever since, and saw it last about three weeks ago; know where the dam now is; there is a good dam now; but there was only an imperfect brush dam in 1842, and that washed away every year; I think the dam is in the same place now as then; the privilege is a first class No. 1 one; I have seen the wheel built, and from what I have heard it is the best wheel for a heavy stream and a low head; I should say so from my experience, and I don't think a turbine wheel would be better; this wheel would be no good where there is a limited quantity; sometimes the mill was going and at other times standing when I saw it; I think the mill privileges were the best; I consider the dam a good one; I have a schedule of the time when the mill was stopped last summer; the interference with the water supply would affect the value of the mill; it is worth over $9,000 in the present condition; with proper repairs to the dam it would reduce the value one half; the machinery is old style, but good, and there is a good smut mill; I examined the stones; they are French burr, the 9 runner being a very superior one; a burr stone, ready for work, is worth $900; I saw a single set of merchant mills and one run of stones; Kenny's mill did good work when McDowell ran it; I think a steam mill will do as good work as a water mill if run properly; I have known 4 persons go past a steam mill to my mill, which is a water mill; where water goes by its and starts it affects a mill; it causes grind so fast, and it would affect the quality of the flour; a good miller would vary the speed can be regulated by regulating the water let in; can't say what the capacity of the mill is; eight bushels an hour could be ground by their wheat stone; the other stone would grind eight bushels of corn an hour.

Mitcobee Meeting Last Night.

The Fast Great Camp's Action Sustained.

At an immense mass meeting of the Bees last night, held in their Hive, Edge Block, the delegates to the late Buffalo fizzle made their reports.

Stirring speeches were delivered by Ex. Sir Knights G. Ch. Fraser and Proctor, of Sarnia, Sergeant Crawford, Messrs. Fessenden, Slaight and Cook, of this city, strongly endorsing the actions of the Fast Great Camp in deposing the Buffalo Great Camp.

Some of the delegates stated that they had gone to Buffalo strongly prejudiced against the Fast Great Camp, but they saw enough to convince them that they had simply done their duty to the Order in deposing the Buffalo Camp.

Gt. Sir Kt. G. C. Oronhyatekha stated it was good action of July, and again this year, that pleased the Fast Great Camp so much as the fact that their action now received the unanimous endorsation of the Sir Knights present. That the Fast Great Camp was not idle would be seen in a few days, when amendments to the constitution would be submitted to the Order for approval, which would place the Masonic Camp on a better footing in all particulars in the land; that at the earliest practicable moment consistent with the interests of the Order he and his colleagues intended to hand the reigns of power over to the next Tent qualified, as provided by the constitution.

Great Finance Keeper Fitzgerald stated that he would be glad to hand the Great Camp over as soon as proper arrangements could be made; also that he and his colleagues had served the Order gratuitously for three terms, and he thought they were entitled to their confidence still.

POLICE COURT NOTES.—At this court yesterday, the P.M. presiding, John Clark was charged by P. C. Adams with vagrancy. He was sent to jail for one month. Patrick McGuinty was charged by P. C. Rowan with being drunk and disorderly. Bailed until the 27th inst. Geo. H. Aird was charged by Patrick McGuinty with assault. Several witnesses were examined touching the matter, the evidence of the lot being of a very contradictory character throughout. McGuinty was ordered to pay the costs of the case, the evidence showing that he was altogether to blame. Aline Leadbeater was again up on remand, charged with being drunk and disorderly and smashing windows. Robert Graham was up on similar charges. Leadbeater was fined $1 and $3 costs; and Graham $5 and $4.60 costs for assaulting Wm. Forth—in default, two months. On the other charge he was fined $1 and $9 costs, or 21 days in jail. James Quinn was also up on remand for being drunk and disorderly, and also for attempting to break into Jennie Smith's home a few nights ago. Remanded again until the 29th for examination. John Macadams, a wayward married man, was in the dock charged by his wife with drunkenness and vagrancy. Six months in the Central Prison was awarded him. John Anglow, the wealthy Tenton, was up for being drunk. He said his name was Englehart. For being drunk and incapable, a fine of $4 and $4 costs was imposed, and for carrying a loaded revolver, a fine of $20 and $4 costs was ordered, and the weapon impounded.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A young man by the name of Moore died very suddenly at Ridgetown on Saturday evening, 20th inst. He attended the opera and got out about half past eleven. When he went home he complained of a pain in his back, and was asked to take some medicine, which he refused. It is thought by the doctor that he was in bed about half an hour when he died.

the time, at Kenny's mill since it was built; went now and then at all seasons of the year; always got my grist home in August and September last; did not get my grist home; three times I did not get my grist home; sometimes the mill was not running, and sometimes I would have to leave my grist; can't say when it first happened; it was only four or five bags at a time; I was in the mill and saw grists there; sometimes few and sometimes many; the first and last time I did not get my grist home, and the other time I stayed until they got water and ground the wheat; the boys came to Ramsay's since then.

John Dutton, sworn—I have lived near Byron thirty years; Kenny's mill privilege is a very good one; knew it to be interfered with last summer for the first time; always before that there was plenty of water day and night; first noticed the supply of water being short from the end of June off and on until September; when the Commissioners shut down there is no water opposite my place; Kenny used to do a good business—custom work mainly.

Cross-examined—Was not at the mill during the summer; I don't claim any river privilege for my property.

George Wilkins, sworn—Live in Westminster, and have lived there twenty-one years, south of Kenny's two miles; got my gristing done there thirty years; always got my grist home with me except once in the winter, when the mill was so full; have been there summer and winter, and they always had plenty of water; I was going to the mill last summer, when a neighbor told me that I could not get my grist ground, and I went back to Delaware; I had then a grist of five or six bushels; have since been to Delaware and New Brighton; live three miles from the mill and nine from the latter; I thought there was no use of going down; did not get as good work done at either of those places as at Kenny's; went to the mill once in two months; Kenny always appeared to be doing a pretty good business.

Cross-examined—Mr. Kenny spoke about the water being shut off; did not tell me that they could grind except in the summer; I thought there was not enough water at Kenny's.

The arbitrators took a recess until 2 30 p.m.

John Bogue, farmer, sworn—Live in Westminster, near Lambeth, one half a mile there; have been in the habit of getting my grinding done at Kenny's mill since he has been there; live three or four miles from his place; he gave good satisfaction until the last grist I took; generally got between twenty and thirty bushels at the outside a year; always got my work done until last summer; went to the mill every three months; Kenny seemed to do a considerable business; I was there last in July last—about harvest time; could not take my grist home; there were others there, and he said he could not do mine; left it two weeks and then had to wait; there were five or six grists in the mill when I went there; when I went back he ground my grist; there were then a considerable number of bags; my dam is not so good as usual; there appeared to be two qualities of flour; have not been back since; get my grinding done at the Lambeth steam mill.

Cross-examined—My work at the steam mill was well done; I went to the Lambeth mill for a while, five and a half miles from Kenny's; always got very good satisfaction until last fall; got about seventy bushels a year of wheat, and twenty bushels of chopped stuff ground; always got my grist home until last summer, when I had to wait on account of low water; I had to wait until the water came down; have had to wait from midday till nearly seven o'clock; that occurred a couple of times; the last three grists were very bad, and I left the mill on that account; the dust seemed pasty and watery; it was half fall season and half spring wheat; the same wheat made good flour the year before.

Cross-examined—I was there in October last the last time; Kenny and his son were running the mill.

Hy. Wickerson, sworn—Live in West minster Township, two and a half miles from Byron; I am a farmer; got my gristing done at Kenny's for eleven years, ever since I have been in the country; took one grist to another mill; he did first-rate work for me; never had to wait but a short time until last summer, in July, about the middle, when the water was so low they could not grind; I had ten bushels of wheat; the mill was going when I went there, and stopped for want of water in about one and a half hours after I got there; I had been there at all seasons in other years; I was there at one time in the fall, and at other times; I was at the mill often; the beans have fallen off lately; only one neighbor on the other side of me goes now; I went home without my grist; went the next day and did not get my grist, and had to borrow some flour; went again in four or five days, and got my grist then; there were a number of grists there; one man was there besides me; three or or four grists were there the next time there were grists there; never received, and the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder, committed by some person or persons unknown. Suspicion points strongly to a half-breed who went to his camp one night to try for lodging. He was killy at Byron, at the mill now owned by Jones at Coombs' last ten years principally at Kenny's; got very good work; in 1870 the dam was damaged; sometimes had to wait our turn; last summer took about 20 bushels to Kenny's mill early in July; did not get that grist done; he was trying to grind, but the water was too low; he could not do a large grist; we sent the grist in four or five days afterwards; found two or three grades of flour; there was a little grist in the mill, probably eight or ten bags; I was there six or seven times a year; thought Keeney was doing a good business; never found the mill idle, did not go to the mill since; have gone to New Brighton, five miles off; we have two tolls there; went to Dawson's, 160 bushels a year were generally ground for me; sold the flour.

Cross-examined—I left Kenny's because I could not get flour made to suit me; I would go to the Lambeth mill if I thought I would get as good work done there.

Re-examined—I think the Lambeth mill is a one-horse affair; a little bit of a trumpery affair; 100 bushels of wheat in a week did it up; they have one run of stones, and they are talking about putting in another; it has been running a month and not got grating done since at New Brighton, because I do not think they could do the work satisfactorily; this mill is half a mile from me.

Daniel Forbes, sworn—Live in London township; habit of going to Kenny's mill as long as I can remember, on and off; always got good satisfaction until last summer, and got our grist when we took it, about the 1st of August I took a load; could not get it away for a couple of days; it was about ten bushels of each, and the mill was idle; I waited three or fifteen minutes; I saw a party going away with his flour; the mill was not running; when I went back the mill was not running; it was about noon; the flour was "doughey like" and would not make good bread; go to Saunby's mill generally now; his mill is 4½ miles from Kenny's; my father went back about the 1st of September.

Cross-examined—Am a son of Duncan Forbes, and live with him; the first grist referred to was taken by me for my father; we have business in London every Saturday, and it is handy to do our gristing with him.

Margaret Kenny, sworn—I am the wife of Pvte. Hamilton Kenny, the claimant in this matter; I have lived at Byron since October, 1868; I have known the mills ever since I can recollect anything; it was then called Hall's Mills; my husband bought it in 1868; I don't know how much was paid; my husband commenced to run the mill, doing custom and merchant work; he kept a miller; knew nothing about the business; there was a brush dam; paid no attention to the trade we did; never heard any complaints about water; he commenced to build in 1870, and it was carried away; never knew the mill to be shut down for want of water; remember the building of the present dam; they repaired the mill in 1870 and commenced paying attention to business; my husband got discouraged and wanted to sell; I took hold of the business; he said I must assume the responsibility if the business continued; I bought and sold and paid out and collected; did all but the grinding ever since; my mother went into partnership; she took $1,400 out when she left, and my husband assumed the liabilities; my husband offered to take $2,400 if Mrs. K. would assume the liabilities, or give $1,200 and assume the liabilities; that was in 1870; the indebtedness then was from $2,500 to $2,700; could grind one or two runs between eight and morning; 45 bushels of good wheat would make a ton; put a new dam in 1873; I think the dam cost us about $2,200 in money paid out, and $600 for the loss of our business; never kept any account of the expenditure; I bought wheat of Kains & Pritchard; have not done so much of late years; it has not done so much merchant work of late years on account of my health; the merchant work was let drop off about three years ago; we have done some; my boys are now growing up; the eldest is 22 years of age; he did the teaming, but took no interest in the business until this summer; our custom work was pretty good; we relied on that to keep the family; I have seen in the summer that they would have to stop a couple of hours when both run and the carding mill were going at the same time, but one run could go all the time; heard no complaint of want of water until June last; the mill was not stopped entirely; the mill was not actually stopped on 1st July; can't say how many times it was stopped during the summer, but it was stopped several times; I was prevented getting some merchant work done; had a customer, Hutchinson, in St. Thomas; he took two tons a week; we had twice to send part of a load; Southcott took from 500 to 700 pounds a week, and Gurd about the same; could not keep up our supply to them; sometimes delayed a week in supplying it; Tuesday and Friday were our days for sending flour to St. Thomas, and we were delayed until Wednesday and Saturday; we had no other regular customers; Dodson & Rogers occasionally took flour; our merchant trade could not be supplied; Hutchinson continued with us, but did not take more than a ton a week during the summer; I have seen us four days trying to get out a ton of flour that ought to be got out in one evening; $4,500 was expended in the attempt to build the dam and the repairs to the mill and putting new machinery in, such as new gearing and belts; can't say how much was spent on the dam; I judge from the amount my husband and my sisters had and the debt we owed; have no memorandum; in 1874 we put in a new smut mill, costing $125, besides putting it in; it was bought in Ohio; a bulkhead and breakwater were put in that year, costing $300; put in a carding mill and picker in 1875; they cost about $500; last summer persons came with grists, and had to leave them and come again; that was in July and August; that had an effect upon the custom; it has prevented persons coming to the mill; the custom is not now so good; there has been a great deal of falling off; the custom run was very good; I had not noticed any falling off from 1868 to 1878; my husband has no other means of livelihood than keeping this mill; my husband was brought up on a farm; my husband tried to sell the mill in 1875 or 1876; I think in 1876; he saw a good chance of getting a farm; he offered the mill then for $7,000, and I was very much put out about it; he was anxious to sell; Rookey, so he told me, wanted to buy the mill; I have tried to close a bargain with him since his examination at $4,500; I am not much acquainted with him; I sent for Rookey because I knew about mills; I have no book which shows what business the mill did; nor had we any book showing the cash earnings of the mill; did very little credit business for years; did credit business with Southcott & Gurd; I kept pass books with them, as they did business on a cash principle; can't say what the net profits of the business was; have kept a large family out of it and paid interest on it; paid interest on $8,000 or $9,000 a year; if debt at eight per cent it has been that much in 1874; can't say how much it would cost us to live; always paid cash; I consider the dam a good one; it leaked much at first, but not so much now; the water in the dam would not keep us going more than half an hour; I base this opinion on actual observation.

Our total indebtedness is $9,449 now; it has not decreased since 1875.

Bernard Skaze, sworn—I live in Westminster, one and a half miles from Kenny's mill; it is the nearest mill; have been going there 25 years; had no reason to complain; have got my work done when I went o'clock; get 60 bushels of wheat and 140 of chop stuff done; sometimes could not get the work done when I took grist there; that never happened before; was delayed three or four times last summer; had to go mill come back again; could not tell when I would get it; the dam was not so good as before, but because I could not get my work done satisfactorily.

Cross-examined—I have went to New Brighton since; the last time was in October last; Kenny and his son were running the mill.

Hy. Wickerson, sworn—Live in West minster Township, two and a half miles from Byron; I am a farmer; got my gristing done at Kenny's for eleven years, ever since I have been in the country; took one grist to another mill; he did first-rate work for me; never had to wait but a short time until last summer, in July, about the middle, when the water was so low they could not grind; I had ten bushels of wheat; the mill was going when I went there, and stopped for want of water in about one and a half hours after I got there; I had been there at all seasons in other years; I was there at one time in the fall, and at other times; I was at the mill often; the beans have fallen off lately; only one neighbor on the other side of me goes now; I went home without my grist; went the next day and did not get my grist, and had to borrow some flour; went again in four or five days, and got my grist then; there were a number of grists there; one man was there besides me; three or or four grists were there the next time there were grists there were received, and the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder, committed by some person or persons unknown. British Politics.

Partial Returns Indicate Beaconsfield's Defeat.

Views of Leading Organs on the Situation.

The Liberals Gain 29 Seats Thus Far.

A Retrospective Glance at Elections in Britain

London, April 1.—There will be polling in 76 constituencies to-day and nominations in 48.

The Standard (Conservative organ) says it cannot be denied yesterday's elections possesses interest of significance, but minor defeats of Conservative candidates are likely as not to be succeeded by important victories.

The Telegraph (Liberal) says that no such sweeping change is manifested as that which struck down the great party in 1874. The result cannot be predicted from a few days' polling.

London, April 1.—The Pall Mall Gazette admits the Government is defeated. The Echo says the total votes cast thus far aggregate 343 568 Liberal and 281,370 Tory.

London, April 1.—Up to midnight the Liberals had elected 79, the Conservatives 58 and the Home Rulers 1, showing a net Liberal gain of 16 seats. The Liberals are jubilant, while the Conservatives are greatly discouraged. Westminster elected two Conservatives, Birmingham three Liberals, Hackney two Liberals, and Mr. Graham has been returned for Ripon.

London, April 1.—Lloyd's Newspaper says:—"With respect to the issue in the contest, it may be mentioned that in no single instance since the passing of the Reform Act of 1832 has a Conservative Administration been appealed to except by the people at the polls. In January, 1835, when Sir Robert Peel dissolved the Parliament which had been returned to support Earl Grey, a Liberal majority was returned. In July, 1852, Lord Derby appealed to the country, and the verdict was an adverse one. In April, 1859, when Lord Derby was again in office, a similar incident was followed by a like result. In November, 1868, when Mr. Disraeli was Prime Minister, the majority against him had been reduced—not quite doubled. On the other hand, only twice has a Liberal Prime Minister gone to the country and been defeated—Lord Melbourne in 1841, and Mr. Gladstone in 1874. Lord Palmerston has been the only Premier who twice dissolved Parliament, and each time returned with an increased majority, viz., in 1857 and 1865."

London, April 1.—From visits paid to the Carleton and Reform clubs it is learned that the former expects as the result of the present election a Conservative majority of 20, while the latter claims a liberal majority of 10. Both clubs expect a coalition in the next Parliament, and will approach to the country one year or eighteen months hence.

There is an unprecedented energy displayed at the polls, and the canvassing is extraordinary in every borough. The expenses attending the canvass are enormous. As an instance, the Duke of Devonshire, whose four relatives are candidates, has paid out £90,000 for the election of candidacies.

Gladstone is being strongly opposed by the Conservatives, both in England and Ireland.

Election riots occurred yesterday at Ripon, Sunderland and Mallow, and at the latter place women were maltreated, one having her clothes set on fire by some miscreant.

Glasgow, April 1.—A great election meeting was held here yesterday, during which a gallery in the hall, holding 100 persons, suddenly collapsed and many of its occupants were seriously injured.

Dublin, April 1.—Parnell arrived yesterday at Roscommon, and met with an ovation from the people.

London, April 1.—This city is entitled to four members in the House of Commons, and as it is locally Conservative, that party made no special effort. The minority representation system, however, which gives each voter as many votes as members, permitted the Liberals to elect Ald. Wm. Lawrence as one of the four members. A summary of the whole field throughout the United Kingdom indicates the return thus far of 97 Liberals and 71 Conservatives—a total gain of 25 Liberals and 10 Conservatives, or a net gain of 15 Liberals.

London, April 1.—The net Liberal gain in the elections is now 29 seats.

Beehive, April 1.—The result of the election in Great Britain produced the most profound sensation here.

London, April 1.—Jacob Bright (Liberal), of Manchester, was re-elected; also Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt, of Oxford city.

London, April 2.—About one-third of the entire number of members of the House of Commons have now been elected, and the result is a Conservative majority will be replaced by a Liberal majority.

London, April 2.—Wm. E. Forster, Liberal, re-elected to Parliament at Bradford. Wm. J. Ingram, Liberal, proprietor of the London Illustrated News, re-elected at Boston. Wm. E. Gladstone, Liberal, elected at Leeds. Leeds gains one Liberal. Robert Bourke, Conservative, Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs, re-elected for King's Lynn. Chas. E. Lewis, Conservative, the Orange leader, re-elected at Londonderry City.

London, April 1.—The Standard declares that the result of to-day's voting only served to increase the Government's losses. The Conservative majority has well nigh disappeared. The question no longer is whether the Ministry will be able to hold their own, but whether the Opposition will secure such a majority as will enable them to take office with a reasonable prospect of carrying on business satisfactorily.

GREAT BRITAIN.

OBITUARY—CALLED TO THE HOUSE ABOVE.

London, April 1.—Lord Rivers is dead. T. H. Clifton, nominated for Parliament by the Conservatives for North Lancashire, is dead.

THE TURF IN ENGLAND.

London, April 1.—The Surrey open steeplechase at Croydon April meeting was won by Dunlop's Bounce. James Gordon Bennet's Marcaton second.

GERMANY.

A ROYAL CONFIRMATION.

Berlin, April 1.—The confirmation of the daughters of the late Princess Alice, daughter of Queen Victoria, and wife of the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, took place yesterday in the Royal Chapel at Darmstadt. The young Princesses are Victoria Alberta, aged 17; Elizabeth Louise, 16, and Irene Marie, 14. The ceremony was that of the Lutheran Church, and was very elaborate and impressive. It was performed in the presence of Queen Victoria, Prince and Princess of Wales, and Princess Beatrice, who had come from England, and several members of the Imperial family of Germany and the notables of the Grand Duchy.

RUSSIA.

LIMITING THE RIGHT OF ASYLUM.

London, April 1.—A Berlin dispatch says Russia has issued a circular to the Powers proposing an agreement limiting the right of asylum. Germany answers favorably.

ITALY.

MISSION EXTRAORDINARY TO MEXICO.

Rome, April 1.—The Pope has sent Monsignorni Colognesi on an extraordinary mission to the Mexican Government.

GREECE.

THANKING A U. S. MINISTER FOR FAVORS.

Athens, April 1.—The King warmly thanked Charles Tuckerman, formerly U. S. Minister here, for a paper on the Greek frontier question, prepared for the consideration of the Mixed Commission.

A Stricken Household.

How Russian Royalty is Weighed Down by Sorrow and Sickness.

London, April 1.—Private cipher dispatches received here from St. Petersburg state that the Czarina is very much worse, and that her death may be momentarily expected. The situation at the Winter Palace is depicted as one of extreme sorrow and gloom. The Czar, and his wife been able to bear the fatigues of a journey, would long ago have joined with her upon their contemplated trip to the Tyrol, where they had arranged to spend a portion of the summer, but by now reason about the Imperial apartments in a state of deep dejection. He scarcely notices what is said to him when addressed, and seemed to be absorbed in a half conscious reverie. Until recently hopes were indulged by those outside the palace that the Empress would rally from her illness, which seems to be mental rather than physical, under the influence of the cheerful society with which it has been sought to surround her, but those who were daily in her presence, the physician of the Imperial household, her family and her intimate friends were less hopeful. The Empress is now 55 years of age, having been born in 1824. She was married when only 17 years old, in 1841, and is the mother of six children, five sons and one daughter, the latter being the present Duchess of Edinburgh. The Duchess is now in St. Petersburg, and is her mother's most constant attendant. She scarcely leaves the Empress' bedside, and seems profoundly oppressed by her approaching loss and the general sadness of the social atmosphere within the Winter Palace. The Czar visits his wife's apartments frequently, but remains only a few moments at a time. It is believed in St. Petersburg that the Czar intends, upon the death of the Empress, to arrange for an early abdication of the throne.

Russia and China.

WARLIKE ASSEMBLY OF CHINESE TROOPS

A Large Force Concentrated on Russia's Western Frontier.

St. Petersburg, April 1.—It is rumored that 1,500 Chinese have crossed the eastern Russian frontier at Ussuri, south of the Amoor, and that 30,000 have concentrated on the western frontier.

Dreadful Colliery Explosion.

Twenty Corpses Recovered—130 Still in the Pit.

Mons, Belgium, April 1.—An explosion of fire-damp occurred yesterday in a colliery at Anderlues. The number of lives lost is unknown. Twenty corpses have already been recovered. There were 159 persons in the pit.

SIAM.

THE PROPOSED VISIT OF THE KING TO ENGLAND.

London, April 1.—The envoy of the King of Siam is expected in the middle of May. It had been arranged that the King himself would come and invest Queen Victoria with the Order of the White Elephant, but as that has been postponed in consequence of the indisposition of the ex-Regent, who would, in the King's absence, have had the reins of government.

THE FIRE RECORD.

Detroit, April 1.—The Alexander Hotel at Grosse Isle was completely destroyed by fire to-day. Loss, $40,000; insurance, $20,000.

Providence, R.I., April 1.—The Wanskuck Mill, No. 2, was damaged by fire to-day. Loss, $25,000.

Rikard, Ind., April 1.—One of the most horrible of horrible deaths was the burning of Mrs. Wm. Hallaway and her little one-year-old babe, at Silver Lake, Kosciusko Co. This morning, about 7 o'clock, the house of Wm. Hallaway, a little north of Silver Lake, was discovered to be on fire, and the flames had gained such headway when discovered that assistance was of no account. Mrs. Hallaway, as is supposed, was trying to save the house when she was overcome by the heat, and prostrated. The bones of her little babe were found among the debris directly under the bed room, where the child was still in bed when the fire took place. The bones of the mother were found some distance from those of the baby. Mr. Hallaway had about an hour previous to the fire started for town, a little distance off. He knew nothing of the terrible death of his wife and child until some time after the fire had consumed all. Loss on the building, $1,000; partially insured. As to the origin of the fire, there are different opinions. Some think foul play was the cause, while others think the fire caught from a defective flue.

An Insurance Case Settled.

Trenton, N. J., April 2.—Alvina Waters sued the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company to recover the amount of the policy on her husband's life. The defence was that Waters committed suicide. The jury to-day rendered a verdict of $2,400 for the plaintiff.

A New Cable Company Formed.

New York, April 1.—A company has been formed, with its headquarters in this city, with a capital of four millions, for the construction of a new American cable to Ireland. The proposed tariff will be a fourth of the present rates.

NEWS PARAGRAPHS.

DOMINION WIRELETS.

The Rev. E. H. Stinson, who has recently gone into the Australian trade, is in Ottawa, submitting certain proposals to the Minister of the Interior.

Customs duties collected at Guelph for March, 1880, $6,236 51; March, 1879 $4,436 81; increase, $1,829 70. Exports to United States for March valued at $65,378.35.

Diphtheria continues to carry off victims with alarming rapidity in the country districts of New Brunswick. Nathaniel Inch, of New Jerusalem, Queen's county, lost three children by the disease in a few days.

LATEST CABLE NOTES.

London advices report a rapid rise in American securities.

Negotiations between Turkey and Montenegro are proceeding favorably.

M. De Bort, French Ambassador at Vienna, has tendered his resignation.

An Alexandria, Egypt, special says that the obelisk for New York was successfully embarked yesterday.

During the present and coming month unusually extensive emigration from all parts of Europe to America is expected.

The American bark Goletta, stranded on the Dutch coast on February 28th, and is a total loss. She was from Philadelphia, Capt. Pratt, laden with petroleum.

A relaxation of the ecclesiastical laws will be proposed at the next session of the Prussian Diet. Meantime the French Jesuits are leaving Germany for France, where they will act only as individual teachers.

London, April 1.—Arrived, SS. The Queen and SS. Lena.

The Princess is engaged in painting a picture of the Chaudiere Falls.

THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Severe Snow Storm—Travel Sadly Interrupted.

St. John, N. B., April 1.—The snow storm yesterday and last night had a disastrous effect on travel, trains in all directions being more or less delayed.

Halifax, N.S., April 1.—The weather continues exceedingly stormy. The snow storm of the last few days of March have piled banks of snow on the streets to the depth of three or four feet, and in the country in some places they are ten feet high. Railway trains are delayed in all directions. A Quebec train yesterday got off the track at Debert Bridge, the locomotive going over an embankment. No person was injured.

It is reported H.M. 97th Regiment, now in this garrison, will shortly leave for Malta, to be replaced by a regiment from the Mediterranean.

LATEST FROM TORONTO.

By Special Telegraph per Montreal Line.

Toronto, April 1.—The Credit Valley Railway, I understand, will shortly commence working in this city in real earnest, notwithstanding all the impediments which have been vainly attempted against it. Mr. Laidlaw, President, who is in New York at present, is expected back in a few days.

On enquiring this morning after the health of the Hon. George Brown I find that he is going on splendidly.

Although kept very quiet, the disappearance since this day week of Mr. Hesbeleman, the Secretary of the Board of Trade, has caused no little invidious questioning. It appears his wife and ten children have not the faintest knowledge of his whereabouts, and all manner of outside speculation is rampant, some averring he is on his way to England, while others believe he has gone over to the Big Majority. Knowing Stevenson, my impression is that he is still in the flesh; however, his absence from duty should remind him wherever he may be, that he has friends on the Corn Exchange and in the city who will stand by him if he will only intimate his whereabouts. One extraordinary feature in the case is that Mr. Stevenson is reported to have been inadequately, if not absolutely supplied with funds wherewith to procure the necessaries for the family for some months past, although Mr. Stevenson was in receipt of a good salary as Secretary of the Corn Exchange, and otherwise added pecuniarily to his pocket by contributing to the press as a reporter.

Toronto, April 1.—The duty collected at the Custom House during the past month amounted to $310,633.44. In 1879 it was $98,879.

The total collections at the Inland Revenue Department for March were $61,-034 92.

The inquest on the two boys, Raynor and Price, was opened at St. Andrew's Hall to-night. A number of witnesses, companions of the lads, related the circumstances connected with the drifting out into the lake. Thomas McEvoy, who attempted a rescue, said that after pulling six miles in a light skiff he was compelled to return to shore, as the boat was half filled with water. The inquest was further adjourned till to morrow night.

A male child, aged about two months, was found on Dalhousie street to-night. The little thing had a neglected look, and was removed to the Infants' Home. The police are engaged in ferreting out the heartless mother.

Nothing has yet been heard of the missing Secretary of the Board of Trade, Mr. Stevenson. The safe, of which he had the key, was forced open to-day, and his books and papers examined and found correct.

BURGLARY IN MITCHELL

Williams & Son's General Store Broken Into—$400 in Goods Stolen.

Mitchell, April 1.—This morning J. Williams & Son's general merchant's store was broken into and about four hundred dollars worth of cutlery, dry goods and boots and shoes were stolen. The burglars made an entrance in the back window by cutting out the sash. No clue as yet.

LATEST FROM MONTREAL

Montreal April 1.—The Directors of the Hudon Cotton Factory, Hochelaga, are about building another wing to their already large premises. The necessity of this is evidenced by the fact that they are unable to fill all the orders that are continually pouring in from all parts of the country. The factory is now running a quarter over-time, and turns out on an average daily 80 bales of cotton, measuring 1,000 yards. One thousand operatives are at present employed.

The defeat of Mr. Girouard's Anti-Stock Breakers' Bill has given satisfaction to the commercial community here.

Lieut.-Gov. Robitaille arrived in the city to-day, and was met at the Occidental Depot by the Mayor and other city officials. He was presented with an address of welcome.

The first dividend payable under the bankruptcy of the Mechanics' Bank will be 20 per cent. on liabilities.

Two hundred head of prime cattle were shipped from this city yesterday for Halifax, for the English market.

The manufacture of electro-plated ware is a new branch of industry established here lately, and is making much progress. A large number of hands are employed, and are being constantly increased. Some of the goods have been shipped to Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Europe, with marked success.

LATEST FROM OTTAWA.

Ottawa, April 1.—C. Schriber, Superintendent of Government Railways in Manitoba, has returned to the Capital.

Brisbois, the Gatineau murderer, was removed to the Aylmer jail to-day.

A girl named Bardy, residing in the township of McNab, near Arnprior, attempted suicide by taking poison, but was saved by the prompt administration of a powerful emetic.

Ottawa, April 1.—Sir Francis Hincks in a letter to the Free Press denies the statement made by that journal, to the effect that he had inaugurated a system of borrowing and spending in the country.

The Banking and Commerce Committee met this morning and proceeded to consider Mr. Girouard's Bill regarding Stock Gambling, and it was ordered to stand for further consideration.

The Bill to wind up the Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company was reported.

The Bill to provide for the winding up the Consolidated Bank was referred to a sub-committee.

The Sub-Committee of the Railway Committee met and struck out the pooling clause from the Montreal Company's Bill, that gives them power to increase the number of directors and to amalgamate with the Montreal District system.

The repulsed and therefore desperate lover of Mlle. Paris, a performer in a minor theatre of Paris, swallowed poison while looking at her from a box, and died on the spot. The actress was known to have treated him badly, and when she next appeared on the stage she was greeted with groans and hisses, and a wreath of immortelles was thrown to her, as a tribute to the dead lover. She fled from the indignant audience.

The ingenuity of speculators must have been taxed to its utmost when they resorted to circulating chromos, representing a negro family on a Kansas plantation with a fine home and white servants, among Texas negroes to induce them to emigrate. This sort of thing was done, according to a witness before the Exodus Committee, but had no political motive. It was speculation, but apparently was a very mild success.

MR. BLAKE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

It is difficult to account for the antipathy Mr. Blake seems to have taken up towards British Columbia. It is true his attacks upon this Province and his sneers as to its importance to the Dominion have, on various occasions, brought him to grief, and sometimes resulted in serious humiliations to himself and his party; but unless one were to assume that Mr. Blake is a vindictive man, and this is much the same as to say that Mr. Blake is a small man, these facts will not account for his evident hostility to the Pacific Province. It was shown conclusively that the changes proposed in the judiciary of the Province by the Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice would not add to the expenditure, that these changes would be in the interest of the Province, that they were desired by the people of British Columbia, and yet Mr. Blake opposed the measure, divided the House upon it, and had his motion defeated on a party vote by a majority of over two to one. Now, while this course was not in the interest of the Province as respects the administration of justice, while it was not in accordance with the wishes of the people, his action was equally opposed to the interest of his own party in the future. This is but another proof that Mr. Blake's judgment as a politician is not much in advance of that of his leader, whether this leader be Mr. Brown or Mr. Mackenzie.

The opinion of the best men of the country is widely different from that of Mr. Blake on this subject. Few intelligent Canadians would endorse the views of Mr. Blake as respects the value of British Columbia as a part of our Confederation, and still fewer could be found so insane as to say to the people of that Province, "Pack up your traps and go." If Canada ever does become what we all hope and what we all expect, British Columbia will then be esteemed one of the most important members of the Confederacy. She gives us a western seaboard, without which Canada never would be complete. Without a terminus on the Pacific, what would our great trans-continental railroad be? Either a complete cul de sac, or a road terminating in a foreign country, and this country, through annexation, almost certain to be a hostile one at some period in the future, and therefore liable to be left useless to Canada and England at the period and for the purpose for which it is partly designed. But it may be said, the connection with British Columbia has been the cause of our being saddled with the enormous cost of building this road. True, the immediate cause of building the road originated in the negotiations for a union, but if the great North west is to be opened up for settlement, then this road becomes a necessity. Then without this Province where would it be run to? Run it up against the base of the Rocky Mountains, and let it stand there? Then what shall be said of the Pacific trade of which the terminus of the road will yet become the emporium? Without this much despised Province that dream is ended before its realization begins.

But is there nothing in the Province itself to make its possession an object of desire to the people of this country? Do not its vast mineral resources present the prospect of unlimited riches, when characters shall have acquired sufficient capital to invest in such enterprises? While it possesses the finest gold mines in the world, it is equally rich in almost every kind of metals and ores of metals, such as silver, copper, lead, iron, plumbago and large deposits of coal both bituminous and anthracite, are found in many districts. The fisheries are scarcely less extensive than those belonging to the Dominion on the Atlantic coast, and when the population increases they will become equally valuable. Though the country in many parts is rough and in some mountainous, yet there is still a large area of arable land in which the soil is exceedingly fertile.

Now although the population is not of much account as compared with that of Ontario, yet it must be borne in mind that the country is only young, and also inaccessible unless to those who possess some means. One cannot expect its growth to be very rapid under these circumstances, but all these will be changed for the better when the Canada Pacific makes its way through the mountains and reaches the coast. On the whole Mr. Blake cannot be actuated by a genuine patriotism, when he affects to value so lightly the advantages of the union, and when he takes such special pleasure in insulting the people of that Province. Besides, even if Mr. Blake were perfectly sincere in his expressed contempt for British Columbia, yet it is foolish in the extreme to show such a feeling at this stage of our connection. The road must be built, contracts for a part of it is this Province had already been called for by Mr. Mackenzie and his friend, Mr. Blake, and now these contracts are given out, and therefore the only effect that can follow from the exhibition of an unfriendly spirit towards the people of that Province, will be to irritate their feelings and render them less cordial in their loyalty and attachment to the Union. It is about time the members of the House of Commons and of the Senate should rise to the dignity of their position, understand that they deliberate for a united Canada, and not for any particular section, and that provincial jealousies and sectional interests should be merged forever in the broader view of a confederate Canada, comprising an extent of territory that makes it one of the most extensive countries in the world. The members of a Canadian Parliament should extend their views so as to embrace the whole Dominion, and legislate for general interests, not for sectional ones.

THE MILLING INTERESTS—A NEW PROCESS.

Arrangements are in progress for a great exhibition of the grain and flour interests, to be opened in Cincinnati in the beginning of June, and to continue for about three weeks. It is expected that over fifty thousand millers and manufacturers from the United States, and between fifteen hundred and two thousand Europeans engaged in milling interests will be present. Every State in the Union is to be represented, and it is expected will make an elaborate display both of cereals and flour. Manufacturers and grain-raisers from Austria and Germany, from England, Russia, Egypt and Switzerland will be on hand with evidences of their industry, to compare with those of our Continent. Six 200 horse-power automatic engines will constitute the motive machinery. All kinds of modern milling contrivances, together with the ancients' grinders from the pestle and mortar up, will constitute features of the exhibition. Even an ancient wind grist-mill is promised for the occasion. An official baker with assistants will be present, driving the business while the "show," whose business shall be to make the finest of bread and pastries, and thus test the qualities of the flour there manufactured. The baking of crackers will constitute a large share of this baking department. No doubt much good will be done by this means in introducing many new varieties of wheat, and also of new and much-needed machinery. It will bring together all who are connected with the handling of wheat and flour. The miller will be able to inspect machinery in operation, and showing results, while bakers and flour dealers may examine an array of samples such as probably never before was gathered together. Of late years, and especially during the past year, many valuable inventions have been added to American milling machinery, which have attracted the attention of foreigners. In this connection reference may be made to a new electrical process for bolting, which promises to be of great advantage in purifying—an invention which is described as a tight chamber on account of the dust, and there is great waste, because the air-current carries off with the bran the finer particles of flour. In the new process electricity is designed to take the place of the air blast. The fine over the wire bolting cloth, which has a rapid reciprocal motion, as a number of hard rubber cylinders, slowly revolving. As they tore they rub against strips of sheepskin, which are made to press down upon them, thus generating the electricity. As the middlings are sifted by the reciprocal motion, the lighter bran comes to the top of the moving middling, and is attracted to the rollers. To these it clings, as do pieces of paper to a stick of sealing-wax when it has been quartly rubbed, until a certain quantity is thus attracted, when it drops into receiving troughs, whence, by a simple mechanical arrangement, the bran is brushed out of the sides of the purifier into receptacles. At the same time the bolted flour is passing out of the other side of the machine, while the "tailings" drop out at the end opposite the hopper. This process is the invention of a young student of Yale College, a son of Superintendent Smith of the Atlantic Mills, in New Haven, who, some months ago, while watching the process of bolting flour, noticed that the bolting used in connection with the purifying machines attracted the bran, and caused it to cling to the bolts in large quantities. Thus was suggested the machine whose operation is above described, and which has just been exhibited in presence of a large number of millers, who expressed themselves quite satisfied that it would prove of great value.

It is only in a time of dearth like the present that people in this part of the earth can realize the full significance of the ice trade. For local consumption in this city ice is likely to be dearer than usual, to the extent at least of the railway freightage. A large quantity was housed from the neighborhood of Tarville's mill, and the North Branch, but the bulk of the stock intended for general use has been brought by rail from Berlin and other places. The year has been exceptional with us, and the same experience may not be repeated for a long period. Our friends in England, however, have to depend altogether for their supplies upon importation. They used to get 20,000 tons annually from the States, but now get their main stock from Norway. From that country they have taken 140,000 tons, valued at $650,000 since 1872. The total value of ice stored in America in ordinary years is computed at from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 and of the ice trade of Norway, Sweden and Russia at $4,000,000, which shows that some $10,000,000 are added to a comparatively small body of water merely by freezing. The demand for ice rapidly increases every year, and it is probable that by the end of the century the ice crop of the globe will be worth $90,000,000.

The Birmingham Gazette reports a strange instance of morbid appetite and rejoicing which took place at West Bromwich lately. There was a keen contest in the place for the position of School Trustees. The Liberals had their candidates, the Independents and Church people theirs also. It happened that the Liberals carried a majority and the victory was celebrated by seizing a dog, killing the animal, roasting the carcass and eating it with copious additions of whiskey. Some of the men were taken seriously ill afterwards.

Formerly, we got all our nails from Pittsburg, ready-made. Now, under the N. P., nail factories have been built and are flourishing in Canada. Fifteen new nail making machines are just now being brought from the States for use in a Montreal factory. And as with the nail interest, which is a large one, so with other branches of manufacture.

Bishop Gregg, D.D., has just issued a pamphlet on Canada, in which he holds that this country as a field for English tenant farmers is far ahead of New Zealand. The Bishop is himself an agriculturist of considerable experience.

ABOLISHING THE INSOLVENT ACT.

In the existing temper of the Dominion Parliament it is questionable how far the government may feel it expedient to attempt to obviate the inevitable disadvantages which the repeal of the Insolvent Act will occasion. The influences that have combined to abolish the Act are, for the time, in the ascendant. One chief object seems to have been to take the working of Insolvency out of the hands of the Assignees, and place it in those of the Sheriffs. Anyone can see how the attendant expenditures will be increased, and how an estate that once becomes thrown into the legal crucible will become melted down. A short experience will be sufficient to teach this lesson, after which members of Parliament may find it best to reconsider their determination to deprive the commercial public of an expedient for the realization of insolvent estates equitably, speedily and inexpensively. The demand for a well-poised Insolvent Act has been often urgent, both here and in England, and frequent alterations have been made in it from time to time, as experience suggested. Not only were the Boards of Trade asked for suggestions looking towards a perfect commercial tribunal and distributory power in such cases, but the best legal talent, the advice of the most experienced wholesale and retail men was obtained in order that the provisions might be suited to the occasion. After having built up the law step by step, after many painful trials and long continued experience, Parliament makes up its mind to sweep the whole thing by the board, and that, too, in spite of the strongest remonstrances from those whose interests will be chiefly affected. The leaders on each side of the House opposed the movement, feeling the gravity of the occasion, and knowing the inconveniences and losses that would inevitably ensue. But the Legislature has been seized with a fit of wrong-headedness, was determined to have its own way, and like a vicious mule kicked out right and left, sibly for the consecration of the Legislature. The Senate did excellent service last session by arresting the execution of the injurious policy, but a renewal of the demand calls for it, in increased force, left to its own devices by the Senate, the House will not be likely to persist in its suicidal course. Its members will be responsible for the consequences, and will have to bear the brunt of the storm of indignation which will be evoked by the ruin of many thousands of innocent persons.

INCREASE OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

The monthly return of the Inland Revenue Department for this city for the past month shows the gratifying increase of $8,911.47 over the corresponding period of last year. Each class has contributed a proportion of this increase. But it is gratifying to note that the export of malt to the United States has yielded very nearly double that which it did for the year 1879; the respective amounts of duty collected on that account being $2,752.16 in March, 1879, and $4,741.45 in March, 1880. Seeing that not long since the Grit press was all aflame with the announcement that the Canadian malt trade had been ruined, such a result is a fair commentary of their assumptions, based, as they usually are, upon inadequate or distorted data.

The smallest Protestant commune probably in Europe, and certainly the most primitive, is that of Ballandhem, canton Berne. Ballandhemen, a word literally signifying "a little outlying place," is situated in a remote mountain valley, 4,000 feet above the level of the sea, and its inhabitants, 200 in all, are the descendants of the compatriots of the Waldenses. Every fourteen days a peddler with a van goes the round of the valley and supplies the housewives with all that they want in the shape of crockery, drapery, thread, needles, paper, and needles. Food is provided by their own flocks, herds and poultry. They have a tiny church with a single bell, and it is a standing joke in the place that when a girl is born they ring a peal, but on the birth of a lad they ring only one bell. A correspondent who betheus to a Zurich paper says that they enjoy a far larger measure of happiness than falls to the lot of most men, and have no desire to exchange their Alpine home for the life of cities.

Dr. Schweinfurth, in a lecture which he recently delivered at the Berlin Geographical Society, on the subject of his latest explorations in Central Africa, gave his hearers a thrilling account of the mode in which capital punishment is inflicted upon criminals by the Al Quadjia, a small tributary offshoot of the great and powerful Djom people. The malefactor condemned to die is bound to a post firmly driven into the ground in some open place where no tree afford a shade, and is there slowly roasted to death—not by any artificial means, involving a waste of fuel, but by the natural heat of the sun's rays as they reach our earth in its equatorial regions. To protract his sufferings and ever his too speedy end by sunstroke, the ingenious Al Quadjia cover their erring compatriot's head with fresh green leaves, which effectually shield his brain from Phœbus' darts. No such protection is, however, accorded his body, which gradually dries up, shrinks together, and ultimately becomes carbonized. One chance of salvation is open to the roasting man while as yet he is not completely "done to death." If a camel pass between the sun and his place of torment he is at once cast loose from his post, and becomes the object of popular reverence as a mighty magician in whose behalf the supernatural powers have deigned directly to intervene.

Serious inconveniences that attend the gibbeting of a man where the punishment of death is not regularly in force are being felt in no little degree in Russia now, where capital punishment having been abolished for many years, the machinery of the hangman has got out of gear. Wladislaky, who shot at Count Loris Melikoff, was executed after an extremely rough-and-ready fashion, a common packing case having been kicked from under him at a given signal—an arrangement which kept the wretched man struggling several minutes more than was necessary. The originators of this hanging reminds one of the horrible accident that took place at the execution of the conspirators at the commencement of Nicholas's reign. On this occasion the ropes broke when the signal was given, and the criminals were precipitated into a deep ditch round the glacis of the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, on the edge of which the gibbet was set up. Two of the men were found to have their legs broken, and resigned themselves tamely enough to be replaced under the gibbet. But the third, who was Col. Pestel, the author and soul of the conspiracy, preserved his consciousness, and cried out, as he was being pinioned again, with a voice that was heard above the beating of the drums. "What a miserable country, where they do not even know how to hang a man!"

"Trade shows signs of revival at Ste. Paul. All the factories are working full time, about the busiest of them being the nail factory. The hands, where it is possible, work over hours, and the proprietors, owing to the pressure of work and the demand for nails, have begun building a shop 60x30 ft., in which will be placed fifteen new machines, which are being procured from Pittsburg. This enlargement of the works will necessarily employ a number of extra hands.—Montreal Star.

You're right, it is the hum!

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

Special from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 1.—The Speaker took the chair at 3.

THE REPEAL OF THE INSOLVENCY LAW.

A message was received from the Governor-General requiring the attendance of the Commons in the Senate Chamber, where they accordingly went, and His Excellency gave his assent to the Act repealing the Insolvency Laws.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

Mr. Domville presented the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. Patterson (Essex) introduced a Bill to amend the Maritime Jurisdiction Act of 1877.

Mr. Bisbey introduced a Bill to empower the Police Court of Halifax to sentence juvenile offenders to the Halifax Industrial School.

Sir John Macdonald introduced a Bill for the appointment of a resident representative agent for Canada in the United Kingdom.

THE FISHERY AWARD.

Mr. Bisbey resumed the debate upon the motion of Mr. McDonnell as to the Provincial claims as to the Fishery Award.

Mr. Mackenzie said that this was a Government day, and the resumption of the debate was not in order.

Sir Charles Tupper presented the report of correspondence relating to the Georgian Bay branch.

THE DEFECTS IN THE MILITIA LAW.

Mr. Masson moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act relating to the militia. He said the Bill referred to certain points in connection with the sedentary militia, and it also proposed to remedy certain defects as to the authority of the militia when called out.

Mr. Mackenzie said he hoped that the Bill did not propose to give the militiamen the powers of peace officers.

Mr. Masson said it did.

Mr. Mills said he thought the Bill was in some degree encroaching on the rights of the Local Legislatures, who were responsible for the organization of the militia.

Sir John Macdonald said the Bill would not in any degree produce conflict between the local and federal jurisdictions. The points of difference had better be deferred until a later stage.

Mr. Blake said that the question might as well be discussed now. The second clause in a sub-section of the Bill provided that militia called out should be constables. He thought it would not be desirable that power should be given to militia officers to infringe upon citizens, and to take refuge behind the orders of an officer.

Mr. McDonald said a difficulty had arisen in London on a recent occasion, and as there was doubt as to the powers of the militia when called out for the purpose of paying honors to the Viceregal party, and on other occasions, so far as the military powers were concerned, he thought, therefore, that the Minister of Militia was acting wisely in putting the force upon a satisfactory footing, so far as their position was concerned, on such occasions. It was not right that the militia should be called out on certain occasions without the power of acting as a military force.

Mr. Blake said he hoped the Ministry did not want to give the military power to shoot down the citizens. (Laughter)

Mr. Macdonald said that the hon. gentleman knew that they meant nothing of the kind.

Mr. Masson said that the proposed change was already on the statute book, in effect, the Act of 1868 giving the position of peace officers to the militia.

Mr. Mackenzie said that the difference was that in the present case the militia would be called out by their officers, and in the former by the magistracy.

Sir John Macdonald said it was quite within the power of the Minister of militia under the orders of their command ing officers, as peace officers, on the occasions spoken of in the Bill proposed to deal with.

Mr. Blake said it seemed to lose sight of the fact that the civil power was paramount in such matters.

Mr. Cornell said the Bill would be no encroachment on the rights of the citizens. The Bill was simply to give power to militiamen as constables, a position which would greatly tend to the advantage of the country in cases in which the militia might be called out.

After a few remarks from Mr. Mills the Bill was read a second time.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill.

In Committee, Mr. Kirkpatrick said that he was surprised that the gentlemen opposite should exhibit so great an anxiety on behalf of the "liberty of the subject," seeing that in 1878 they had been foremost in calling out a very large force for the preservation of the peace. He thought the Opposition were sneering in their references to the militia.

Mr. Mackenzie denied that he had any direct responsibility in calling out the troops in 1878. They were called out by the magistracy. He had asked the general officer to take command of the troops on that occasion, as he thought that the presence of an experienced officer would be of great advantage.

Mr. Kirkpatrick said that the late Government was certainly responsible for the assembly of the troops. They had introduced a Bill to cover the expense of the expedition on the occasion referred to.

Mr. Blake denied that the Opposition had sneered at the militia, but he thought it was the duty of the Government to guard all the citizens of the country from the possibility of an abuse of power, and in their remarks on legislation, read or proposed, they should be protected from such charges as that made by the member for Cornwall. He thought that a free people should not give to the Executive too great a power in the control of the military forces. He thought the member for Frontenac and certainly sneered at the magistracy of the country. He had understood him to imply that they were unfit to exercise the power they possessed. It was true they were not all Solons. He thought the country should oppose the establishment of anything like martial law in its midst.

Mr. Kirkpatrick said that he had not said that the calling out of the troops should rest with the magistracy unchecked. What he had argued was that the provisions of the present Bill could safely be left to the Executive Council.

Mr. Casgrain said he thought the Bill did not sufficiently define the legality of the orders which a militiaman might receive from his officer.

Mr. Kirkpatrick thought that a clause of the Militia Act of 1863 should be restored to the Militia Act—the one which gave power to the commanding officer of corps to dismiss any undersized man in his regiment—a power which at present he did not possess.

The Bill was then reported without amendment.

On the question of a third reading, Mr. White read from a letter which the hon. member from Lambton, in 1878, had written to the Mayor of Montreal, in which he had distinctly stated that he would take the direct responsibility of sending troops to the city to maintain order.

Mr. Mackenzie locked back with pleasure to his course on the occasion in question, and thought that the dispatch of the General commanding at Montreal had proved a most advantageous step

BARBARA.

"But that is not all. He would make a settlement giving you the greater part of his estate after his death, supposing he died childless; if you had children, of course your eldest son would inherit the bulk of the estate."

"Don't enter into details, papa. I am quite ready to acknowledge Mr. Parruth's generosity; but as I can not accept his offer, it is not worth while talking any more about it."

"You can not accept it" cried Mr. Trevornock, angrily. "Are you a fool, or a mad woman? Do you understand what you are refusing?"

"Perfectly."

"Great God!" cried the solicitor, bursting with indignation, "was there ever such folly? Here is a penniless girl, a girl dependent on the benevolence of aunts and nuncles who may die to-morrow, a girl who has nothing to look forward to but the work-house, and she coolly refuses one of the richest men in Cornwall—a man who worships the ground she walks on, and is ready to make the most liberal provision for her future! I—I—I am ——" (here Mr. Trevornock descended to unpolite language) "never I heard of such outrageous stupidity!"

"I dare say I am very stupid," Barbara answered, coolly, "and that if I were wise, I should marry a man I do not love, and perjure myself at God's altar."

"Nobody asks you to love him. All you have to do is to marry him, and do your duty by him as a virtuous wife; and I should think that ought to come easy to any well-brought-up young woman."

"It would not come easy to me, and I will not make my life a lie for all the good that wealth could bring me and mine."

"A nice daughter!" ejaculated Mr. Trevornock; "a piece of pampered selfishness! Your mother may work her fingers to the bone—she and your sister may starve or beg in the streets—for all you care."

"I care more than you do, at the worst, father," said Barbara, confronting him with steady eyes. "If they have to starve or beg, I shall starve or beg with them."

"You might make them happy and comfortable for life, you—consummate fool!" cried the outraged parent, choking for want of words forcible enough to express his anger. "Does jet pin or your sister owe me to me any more for money, mind that! Don't let me hear any of your cursed whining about washer-ares or new pianos. If you come plaguing me, I'll pitch you both out of the window!"

"Very well, papa. Henceforward we will try to exist without the few pounds your generosity has bestowed upon us."

"As for your impertinent sneer," cried the solicitor, lashing himself into a fury, "don't let her show her face here. The sight of her makes me sick."

"She shall not trouble you."

"If I hear that you are all in the workhouse, I shan't care a ——"

"Good-by, father," said Barbara, on the threshold.

Mr. Maulford darted from his lurking place to open the outer door for her, and to make a second pursuit of her countenance. There were no tears in the proud eyes. The face was marble white, and calm as marble.

"You look faint," said the articled clerk, lingering with his hand upon the latch; "let me get you a little water."

"No, thank you; I am quite well. Open the door, please, Mr. Maulford."

Mr. Maulford reluctantly obeyed, looking at Barbara with a familiar compassionate tone which made her wince as she had never done more than once.

Half way down the stairs she met Mr. Parruth coming up. He took both her hands; he looked at her inquiringly, with as much anxiety as his rugged face could express.

"You have seen your father," he said.

"He has told me the honor you have done me. I—I am sorry I should have been so unlucky as to win your regard, for can not return it."

"Oh, Barbara, why answer so quickly?"

"Because I am ignorant of myself. If I were to deliberate for a year, I could make no other answer."

"I will not take such a hasty answer. I shall wait till you change your mind."

"That will never happen. Please let go my hands. I have no doubt that you are, as my father tells me, all that is good and generous; but I can never be more to you than I am to day."

"I shall wait," answered Vyvyan Parruth, looking at her with a severe earnestness under the shadow of his projecting iron-gray brows: "the time may come when you will feel the helpless and unfortunate position, and be glad of a strong man's love."

"Good-morning," said Barbara, as he reluctantly released her hands.

CHAPTER XVI.

"THE LOVE WHICH SMARTS ALL THINGS FOND AND FAIR."

It is a hard thing to have those you love against you, and this was what Barbara had to bear after her interview with her father. She was obliged to tell her mother and Flossie the gist of that conversation; and they knew that she had refused the finest estate in Cornwall, and an independent income of six hundred a year. It seemed hard and almost incomprehensible to them that she should have so acted. Flossie and her mother held long conferences together on the subject. They were never tired of expatiating upon Barbara's folly. They loved her and she less because she was so foolish; the mother's heart yearned toward her as of old. But mother and sister were alike outraged by the sacrifice she flung away a life of happiness for the sake of indulging vain regrets for a man who had, by his own confession, proved unworthy of her love. She was sacrificing the real good of existence to an empty dream.

"Six hundred a year!" exclaimed Flossie —"six hundred a year! It seems incredible. Twice the income we have to pay for everything, down to the chimney-sweep; for the fire to be stirred, and the coals to be put on, for nothing, though I believe the soot is worth ever so much to him. Six hundred a year! Just consider the gown, the paraphernalia, the bonnets, she might buy herself with half the money, and the good she might do with the other half!

"She might help me a little with my rent and taxes," said Mrs. Trevornock, plaintively, "though Heaven knows I should never be influenced in such a matter by any consideration of pounds, shillings and pence. But I should be so proud, so happy, to see her well placed in life, to see her riding in her carriage."

"And we could go and stay with her at Penruth Place, and wander about the moors. And you would get so strong, mother, in that fine air."

"Yes, it would be delightful," said Mrs. Trevornock, who had been pinned to Camberwell for the last seven years.

People who have only just enough for bread and cheese can not afford such indulgences as change of air and scene. The August emigration of the middle classes does not affect them; the long vacation brings them no holiday.

"It would be very nice," sighed Mrs. Trevornock. "I have not been to the West since you were born. Your grandmother was kind enough to ask me more than once before she died; but I thought as I had been there with Mr. T., people might make remarks if I went there without him. And after your grandmother's death the old house was let to strangers, and your aunt Sophia bought the place near Exeter."

To be Continued.

..There is a district in Belgium where a chain of villages along the valley of the Geer from a sort of immense street. The soil is clayey, but crossed at intervals with chalk, which gives to straw raised there an exceptional strength, pliability, and brilliancy. This district is the seat of the Belgian straw trade, in which some 40 000 persons are engaged, who earn upward of $800,000. Every spring four or five thousand migrate to work in the principal cities for a few weeks. The chief seat of this industry to-day is Rodenize, a beautiful village, surrounded by the villas of wealthy straw makers.

A MULE STORY.

Mr. J. B. Plumb in his Budget Speech

The following good story was told by Mr. J. B. Plumb in course of his late Budget speech:—"The desperate struggles of honorable gentlemen opposite to prove that the country, which their policy did so much to injure, is utterly ruined, and their heroic and self-sacrificing, but hopeless efforts to obstruct and resist the movement which is bringing about the return of prosperity, reminds me of a story that I will venture to relate, the application of which will be obvious. Some time, about twenty-five years ago, certain enterprising English capitalists and contractors obtained concessions from the Spanish Government for the construction of a system of railways in that romantic and mountainous country. The first line was built, if I remember correctly, from Madrid northward, towards the French frontier, through formidable passes, and a section of forty or fifty miles having been completed, it was determined to run the first train over it with appropriate celebration and ceremonies. Previously, as will be known to everyone conversant with the country, all the travel and traffic had been in the hands of the muleteers, very estimable men of much earnestness and solemnity of character, but, from a life long and most intimate association with the useful animals referred to the other day, sympathetically no doubt, by the late Minister of Finance in his speech against the policy of my honorable friend who has succeeded him in office, the muleteers have imbibed and assimilated to themselves the firmness, the temper and gravity of demeanor for which those animals are celebrated. The muleteers watched with much solicitude the progress of the line, and came to the conclusion that it would destroy their occupation, and that trains must not be permitted to run upon it, which would spoil their passenger traffic and empty their pack-saddles. They met in many an anxious consultation, and their head man, who might be called the Grand Old Muleteer—who had grown gray in the mule trade, and had been buffeted by storm and tempest, until his long visage resembled that of the Knight of the Rueful Countenance, immortalized and portrayed by the pen of Cervantes—harangued them in excited language. "We cannot permit this interior to interfere with us," he shouted; "it is progress in a direction that we do not believe in. Let us all turn out, mules, donkeys and all, range ourselves on the track on the opening day, and prevent the passage of a train." Well, sir, they dressed themselves in their best velvet jackets and silver-buttoned trousers, and crimson sashes and broad sombreros, and invited all their neighbors and friends to accompany them and see the glorious triumph of principle. They selected as the place of operations a difficult pass in the mountains, on a heavy upward grade, with ravines and precipices on each side of the track. The engine, decked with flags and wreaths, drawing a long train of carriages filled with the elite personages in the Government and their friends, came rushing on, when the engineer discovered at some distance ahead, upon the track, an immovable mass, which, on a nearer approach proved to be a concourse of six or seven hundred mule-teers, mounted on their faithful animals, whose more than Roman firmness is sometimes stigmatized as obstinacy. Their tails were turned towards the approaching train, and the heart-felt grief of their drivers have been seen in characteristic position, a leader in the rear of his party, astride of the biggest mule, with the longest ears of the whole, and with feet thrust in the largest stirrups. In vain the signal was rung and the whistle sounded. The mules kept their position and the train came to a momentary pause. The engineer then, upon a brief consultation with his manager, backed down the human system should not come into contact with meat that is intended to be pure and fit for human consumption, rendering a person to be in perfect health, the air exhaled from the lungs is returned to him; besides, there is a danger of communicating the germs of some insidious disease by blowing such air into the mouth of a satisfaction from the amount of carbonic acid eliminated from the lungs in exhaled air.

THE AGE OF VEAL.

Calves should not be slaughtered at the least before they are three weeks old, and they are better to be a month and five weeks. During this period, to produce a good quality of veal, it is necessary that the calf should suck the cow, as the process of digestion in ruminating animals is such that it is when the calf is allowed to gorge itself by drinking out of the pail. Good veal cannot be made by feeding skimmed milk, nor is it desirable to keep calves too long, as in the latter case the meat neither has the flavor of beef nor veal.

VEAL AS FOOD.

Veal is but poor food, to make the best of it, and a poor quality like that we have now indicated is positively not worth buying. In nutritive properties veal falls far short of the flesh of mature animals. The per cent. of water is much larger, and the fatty matters and fibrine much less. There is a great abundance of gelatine from the tendons, ligaments, and serous membranes of the animal, and hence the amount of jelly that can be produced from the feet and other parts of the calf. In fact, veal broth is so much richer in jelly that green or immature fruit does to the ripe. The whole fluids, tissues, bones, sinews, &c., are so imperfectly formed as to require development in order to possess the the greatest amount and the proper ratio of its nutritive elements. Veal to be in any way wholesome and serviceable must be of the best quality—poor fed is worse than nothing.

HOW TO COOK VEAL.

The value of veal perpetually depends upon how it is cooked. Owing to the absence of fats in its composition, those must be supplied in the shape of butter or the fat of other meats to have any relish in veal with any flavor at all it is about as costly meat as you can buy.

ROAST VEAL.

The loin of veal is the best piece for roasting. It should be peppered and salted, and a little butter rubbed on it and basted frequently. Put a little water in the dripping pan, and a little butter should be put in it. The liver, parboiled, and the bone should be cut out, and the place filled with bread, soaked soft in cold water, a little pepper, a sprig or two of eggs, and a tablespoonful of melted butter put in—then sew it up, put it in the oven or pan, with about a pint of water over the top of the meat with some of the dressing. When baked sufficiently take it up, thicken the gravy with a little flour and water well mixed, put in a small piece of butter, wine and catsup, if you like the gravy rich.

FRYING VEAL.

The cutlets of course are the best for this way of cooking. Fry three or four slices of pork until brown; take up, then put in slices of veal about an inch thick, cut from the leg. When brown on both sides take them up; stir half a pint of water into the gravy; then mix two or three teaspoonsful of flour with a little water and stir in it; soak a couple of slices of toasted bread in the gravy; lay them on the bottom of the platter; place the veal upon and pour it; then turn on the gravy, and you have a dish fit for a king.

CALF'S HEAD STEW.

Have the head split by the butcher, so that it can be cut into six or eight pieces. First take out the brains, being careful not to break them, and lay them for two or three hours in cold water. Then take out the tongue whole, cut the head up, and wash it in two or three waters, removing all hairs and any membrane that may be in the nostrils, throat, eyes and ears. Lay the pieces of the head and the tongue in a large pot with two gallons of water, put it on the fire, and, as soon as it boils, skim constantly so long as a thick skum rises; when this ceases, season with two tablespoonful of salt, a large onion stuck with six cloves, a dozen or more allspice, three whole blades of mace, a grated nutmeg, a salt-spoonful of white pepper, a teaspoonful each of dried sage, majoram, and thyme, and as much cayenne pepper as you can take on the blade of a pocket-knife. The herbs and whole spices should be tied loosely in a cloth, so as to be easily taken out. The pot must then be put back on the range to simmer for four hours. The tongue, however, must be taken out in an hour, or as soon as perfectly done, skinned and put aside for use. At the end of four hours, or when all the meat is loosened from the bones, take all the pieces of head from the broth, remove all the bones, cut the meat in pieces two inches square, strain the broth, and put it aside to cool, when all the fat can be removed. Slice the tongue and put it with the rest of the head; take a tablespoonful each of flour and butter, rub them to a cream, put them into three half-pints of broth, with a tablespoonful of chopped parsly; add your meat, and put in on the fire long enough to boil; then dish and dress with two hard-boiled eggs, sliced, and a thinly-sliced lemon. A glass sherry wine added just before dishing is a great improvement. The broth, put in a cold place, will keep for several days, and is admirable stock for any kind of soup.

JELLIED VEAL.

Cut a knuckle of veal into three pieces; place it in boiling water and keep on the simmer until the bones will slip out; chop the meat fine and strain the liquor in which it was boiled; then season it with salt, pepper, allspice, and onions chopped fine, and boil it again until there is not much over a pint. Place the chopped meat in a mould, turn over the liquor, let it stand over night, and serve in thin slices, garnished with sliced hard-boiled eggs and bits of parsley. The juice of a lemon will improve the jelly, and the peel can be grated into the meat for a seasoning, which will be preferred to the allspice by many persons.

JELLIED CALF'S HEAD AND HAM.

Clean the meat when it has been boiled until it will slip from the bones; season with pepper, salt, allspice and the juice of lemon. Chop half as much raw ham, fat and lean; butter a bowl; line it with slices of hard-boiled egg and fill with layers of calf's head and ham alternatively, moistening each layer with a little of the liquor from the calf's head; fill nearly to the top; then pour in all the liquor that will soak in; cover with a paste of flour and water stiff enough to mould, and bake in a hot oven one hour and a half; remove the paste when the dish is cold, and serve in thin slices. It must be made the day before it is used.

VEAL PIES

are made the same as other meat pies, with the invariable adjunct of some rich, fatty substance, such as pork, &c.

As our markets will be glutted with veal, and its consumption more or less extensive in every family, people, on account of the poor quality offered for sale, should be careful and not buy those "milk" calves and carrion veal. No specific rules can be laid down for the guidance of purchasers. Meat, almost instinctively, can be known by its appearance—good meat has a rich clean, inviting appearance, and any person who cannot distinguish them properties has no business to buy meat. The price, too, will go a long way to determine the quality. You can't produce good veal for two or three cents per pound, and it will be invariably found that cheap meat is of a poor quality, and that the higher price you pay the better value you get for your money, especially in buying veal.

WRESTLING WITH A VENGEANCE.

An unfortunate accident occurred at the Powell House, at the hop there last Monday night. Mr. Nelson Smith, the occupant, is a tall, well-built, muscular man, and one who, we understand, has never been thrown yet. Another tall, well-built landlord of the Royal, is also a man of muscle, and two gentlemen met at the dining-room door, and ran their arms around each other in a most brotherly and friendly manner. This position was changed for a side hold, then a back hold, and finally the old and faithful but dangerous grape-vine twist, in which the legs of the wrestlers became mixed. Both parties strained their utmost, and we regret to say Mr. De-Hart's leg snapped in two below the knee, and falling heavily he dislocated his ankle. Mr. Smith felt deeply grieved over the disastrous result of a friendly wrestle.

A SOMNAMBULIST ON THE GRAND TRUNK.

On Conductor Johnson's express, 30th March, between Georgetown and Acton, a girl, about 15 years of age, arose from a seat and walked to the door of the car, and before anybody realized what was going on, had opened the door and was on the platform. The train was stopped as quickly as possible and the girl was discovered in her nightdress walking in an opposite direction, apparently asleep. Her parents, who were on the train, were delighted to find their little somnambulist safe and sound, as they never suspected her to be absent. Our informant, who was on the train at the time, carefully examined the girl, and, beyond a slight bruise on the side of the head, pronounced her all right. The parents admitted to the conductor that their girl was a somnambulist, and frequently had narrow escapes.

COUNTRY NOTES.

Carrion Veal—How the Tender Sucklings are Marketed—Blowing and the Evil Effects—How Calves Should be Fed, and the Proper Age of Veal—Different Modes of Cooking.

This is the time of year when our markets will be stocked with a plentiful supply of veal. It is always the case in the spring of the year, especially when butter is dear. At the present time good roll butter can hardly be had at 22c. and 23c. a pound, and, of course, as soon as a new calves, this object is to make butter right away, and this cannot be done if the cow is kept, and the consequence is it is disposed of as soon as possible—either sold or given away. These are picked up through the country by butchers, and some of them killed by farmers and put on the market. These calves are called and are killed when they are one or two days old and brought to market and sold to the citizens at two and three cents per pound, and recommended as well fed three weeks' old veal. The appearance of this itself is sufficient to cause a certain spasmodic action of the muscles of the stomach to anyone that looks at it, unless he has a very degraved and torpid imagination. The long and short of it is, this class of meat is nothing more than rot, and not fit for human consumption, and should only be used for dog's meat.

WHO ARE TO BLAME.

The buyers equally with the sellers are to blame for the encouragement of this carrion traffic, and if the public would frown down on this class of meat nobody would offer it for sale. But whilst it is eagerly sought after by citizens so long will it be brought to market, and in the case of this class of meat is almost powerless to prevent its sale, for the officers have no good grounds for a seizure and prosecution. The statute cannot, or do not at least, define at what period of a calf's existence it becomes wholesome meat; and we should say the officers of the law are stepping upon dangerous ground when they attempt to confiscate it, as it would be a fine point to determine just where the dividing line between the wholesome and unwholesome comes in. Then no doubt would prevail in such a case if such as dog or cat's meat, and hence legal influence in its sale is hedged around with a number of difficulties that defy technical points. The only way to prevent its sale and consumption is for people to step boldly and say they will be no party to its sale. If people would only buy a first-class article and pay a good price it would stimulate farmers to feed their calves on a proper age, and hence this trashy veal would be driven out of the market.

SUCKLING VEAL.

This is a most reprehensible practice, and should be discountenanced as far as possible by our butchers, not only on the score of public health, but also for their own advantage, in being able to keep the meat in a sweet and fresh and a sound condition. The main objection in blowing is not so much that which is apparent to the eye, as the

—A farmer named Donald McRae, residing about four miles from Amherley was killed on Wednesday evening by the falling of a limb from a tree which he was chopping. He leaves a wife and large family to mourn his loss.

—County Crown Attorney Fenton, of Toronto, has written a letter showing that the coroners are not humiliated by the oath required under Mr. Mowat's Coroners' Act, and if the coroners conscientiously hold inquests before, they can do so now, and the required declaration will not hurt them.

—A boy named Wallace Hennessy, while floating on a cake of ice at the Marsh Creek near St. John, N. B., on Wednesday, fell into the water, and was on the point of drowning when rescued by another boy named Robert Nixon. This is the twelfth boy that has been saved from a probable death by Nixon.

—A case of cruelty to a child is reported from Gagetown, King's County, N. B. Brenton Evans sent his son, thirteen years old, to the post office, and as the lad did not return immediately the father went to meet him. The lad was kicked until unable to cry out and then dragged home. Then his hands were shove his head in the barn and kept there tied three hours despite the pleading of the mother. He was released by his sister, who succeeded in getting the key out of the way. He is suffering severely from the injuries received.

EASTER VESTRY MEETINGS.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH, ST. MARY'S.

The usual Easter Monday Vestry meeting was held in St. James' Church on Monday night last. The following officers were elected as follows: — Wardens — Messrs. Milner, Hart and James Robinson. Sidesmen—Messrs. Ramsey, Sharp, McConachie and Humphrey. Vestry Clerk—Mr. A. Warwick and Treasurer—Mr. Kamlouge. His Honor Judge Hughes was chosen as delegate to the Synod at Montreal, and Mr. Ware delegate to the General Synod, which meets at New York.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, SAND-WICH.

The annual vestry meeting of St. Stephen's church, Sandwich East, was held on Tuesday evening last, when Hiram McKee was elected People's Churchwarden, and Charles Holden was appointed by the Incumbent Churchwarden. Mr. White was elected delegate to the Diocesan Synod.

CHRIST CHURCH, PETROLIA.

The annual Easter Vestry meeting was held in this church on Monday evening last, and was largely attended, the Rev. Wm. Hinde, incumbent, in the chair.

The People's Churchwarden made a financial statement, showing the receipts during the year to be $982 76, and the expenses $954 63. It is contemplated to build a new brick church in this town, one of the finest in the country, having given $1,500 towards this object.

The following elections were made:—Clergyman's Warden, Mr. Chas. Jenkins; People's Warden, Mr. R. D. Noble; Sidesmen, Messrs. T. J. Gordon, J. Robson, Geo. Denham and R. Herring; Lay Delegate to the Synod, Mr. John D. Noble; Auditors, Messrs. J. H. Fairbank and E. J. Desnoches.

The meeting adjourned until the 7th of April, when the plans of the new church are expected to be ready.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, April 9—1 a. m.—Indications for the lower Lakes: clear, followed by increasing cloudiness.

VITAL STATISTICS.—During March there were registered with the City Clerk twenty-two births, twelve marriages and twenty deaths.

BROKEN LEG.—Mr. R. Osborne, of London, while riding on horseback in London Township, on Wednesday, was thrown from the horse and had his leg fractured.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.—During the month of March seven alarms of fire were sounded, irrespective of those during inspection on Good Friday. The fire at Mr. H. B. B. Alley's store was the most serious.

POLICE COURT TRANQUILLITY.—The hum that oft through Justice halls a soul of briskness shed, was quite as mute in Police Court Willis, as though that hum were dead. A single drunk stood up and prayed the pardon of the Duke; his prayer was heard, no fine he paid, but bore a sharp rebuke. Joseph Callan was his name.

KINGSTON CLAIMED BY AN AMERICAN.—The Saginaw Herald says Wm. H. Powell, of Saginaw City, with an intimate knowledge of place, will soon go to Kingston, Ont., to reclaim a big slice of that ancient city, said to have been bequeathed to his grandfather's estate. Better not throw too much good money away on stale claims with terribly mixed titles.

THE HOVEY EXTRADITION CASE.—Owing to Sir Hector Judge Hugh Gamesbeing one of the witnesses in the Cascaden-Edgcome slander suit he was unable to review the evidence given in the last charge against J. Cook Hovey, the alleged Ohio bond forger and defaulter, and the judgments on all the counts were again postponed—this time till Monday next.

DRUNK AND DISORDERLY.—A young man named John Hill was arrested yesterday by P. C. Burke and County Detective Ryan while acting in a disorderly manner on the Market Square. He resisted desperately, and required to be handcuffed. Ald. Brown followed the officers to the Police Station and abused them for making so arrest without a charge.

A FALSE STATEMENT.—Mr. H. Dearsley Wright, one of the Water-works Auditors, says "the paragraph that appeared in your issue of this date is untrue—to the effect that I had given Mr. Martin information after action so." Mr. Rayner as likewise were those on Monday last." The statements which he considerizes as untrue were made by him to several respectable citizens last week. The public may, therefore, choose which statement they will believe. The funeral is H. Dearsley Wright's, not ours.

A FALSE PRETENCE CASE.—The charge made by John Ferris, jr., of Colchester, against Daniel Bullen, of Ingersoll, of obtaining from him on the 15th of January last 29 bags, of the value of $250, by false pretences, was inquired into at the Windsor police court on Wednesday afternoon, and occupied the time of the court till a late hour in the evening. The defence was that the difficulty was a mere matter of account between the defendant and the plaintiff's son, who were commissioned to receive the money by his father, while he was acting at the same time as the defendant's agent and buyer. Bullen was sent for trial.

U. S. EXPORTS FROM LONDON.—The following statement shows the value of declared exports from the United States Consular Agency at London, Canada, to the United States for the quarter ending March 31, 1880:—Apples, $5,628 30; barley, $15,869 89; bran and shorts, $1,170; cattle, $8,925; car wheels (returned), $6,-117 65; cups, $483; flax, $9,369 16; fish (returned), $54; hides and skins, $2,857 48; horses, $90,575 75; household goods, $4,927; iron (scrap), $1,758 59; lumber, $2,370 15; manufactured goods, $300; malt, $52,945 78; oil cake, $75 24; reaper extract (returned), $456 75; sheep and lambs, $13 328 20; tobacco, $427; miscellaneous, $355 92; total value of exports, $185,572 12; corresponding quarter of 1879, $86,774 66; increase, $48,897 46.

INLAND REVENUE RETURNS.—Below is a statement of Inland Revenue collected in the Division of London for the months ended March 31st, 1880, as compared with the corresponding month of last year, showing an increase of $8,911.37:—

Spirits	$ 345	$ 5,630 13
Tobacco	5,332 99	5,017 95
Malt	2,792 16	4,741 45
Other revenue	344 90	1,096 25
	$ 8,565 93	$17,576 25
		8,565 93
Increase for the month		$ 8,911 37

The malt exported for the month was 1,099,276 pounds, or 47,044 bushels, at 96 pounds to the bushel.

APRIL FOOLS.—The custom of practical jokes on the first of April seems not to have died the death which comes of old age. The members of the police force have been highly tickled over an incident yesterday, in which a sedate officer played a rollicking part. In front of a Richmond street clothing store P. C. Calderwood found a neatly wrapped box, and with becoming care he gathered it in his arms and bore it to the Central Station, informing the officer on duty that its contents must be very valuable, inasmuch as they were exceedingly heavy. With gold watches, diamond breast pins, and plated finger rings dazzling before his vision, the parcel was gently unwrapped, when two large cobble stones rolled out and fell upon his corns. He didn't mind the injury to his corns, but felt intensely humiliated by the jokes to which he had fallen so easy a victim, and left the station with a deep regret that there was not a law in existence making first of April jokes a penitentiary offence.

THE EGYPTIAN MASONIC RITE.—The Sovereign Sanctuary of the Cosmos Egyptian Masonic Rite of Memphis closed its two days' session at Battle Creek, Mich., on Tuesday, and were banquetted at the Potter House. The officers chosen for the ensuing term were:—M. W. Grand Master, Darius Wilson, of Boston; Deputy, Wm. Brown, of Battle Creek; Senior Warden, B. F. Dawson, Angola, Ind.; Junior Warden, David Woodward, Clinton, Mich.; Orator, J. M. Brown, Chicago; Prelate, G. S. Fancher, New York; Secretary, John D. Young, Lawrence, Mass.; Treasurer, A. D. Fessell, Quincy, Mich.; Conductor, H. Prevgang, Angola, Ind.; Captain of Guard, J. C. Weed, Jackson, Mich.; Guard of Honor, C. S. Hunsted, Janesville, Wis.; Sentinel, David Shepherd, Battle Creek; Deputy Secretary, Daniel W. Bawyer, Quincy, Mich.; Second Deputy Secretary, Sanford Hunt, Jackson, Mich. A Sanctuary of this branch of Masonry has been planted in this city, and includes on its membership roll many prominent brethren. Mr. W. D. McGloghlon attended the above meeting, and excels in high terms of the working of the rite. The initiation fee is $160.

LOCAL NOTICES.

BEAUTIFUL imported socks and underclothing opened to-day.—Garlick's, 174 Dundas St.

WHERE in the city of Detroit a few weeks ago we called into one of the largest establishment in the West—the pride of the City of the Straits. We were astonished at the magnitude of the concern. Inside it looks more like a palace than a retail clothing store. We refer to the establishment of C. S. Hubley, the great clothier. He occupies six large stores, adjoining, on Woodward avenue.

Mr. G. W. Halford, of Detroit, a noted checker player, defeated Mr. James Labadie, of Chatham, at the Rankin House in that town a few days since, and also defeated several good players in Ingersoll and Hamilton. Why didn't Halford drop off at Guinness and play Dixon?

Another of the interesting socials, and the last of the season, was given in the lecture room of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, King street, last night. The attendance was large, the programme varied and entertaining, and all present were delighted with the manner in which the evening was spent.

John Hill was bailed out yesterday evening by his father, but undertook to "case" the officer on duty before leaving the station, whereupon he was returned to the cells, after a sharp chase by Detectives Murphy and Pope. He will answer two charges this morning, for which he has withdrawn to Hamo.

A young farmer named Herbert Mason, of Lobo, remained in town to "wet his whistle" after attending to the marketing, and wound up in the Central at midnight with a charge of "drunk and disorderly" opposite his name. He altered his space around the coal stove with George Phoney, a fellow inebriate.

JAS. R. Yielding, formerly a clerk in the Great Western Railway office at Brantford, when Mr. Charles McCabe was the General Western Passenger Agent, died March 19, of quick consumption, in the Central Pacific Railroad Company's Hospital at Sacramento, Cal., and was buried on the following day. He leaves a wife and two children, who are living at St. Catharine's.

Several complaints have been made of late against a lack of hitching posts in the various streets of the city. It is stated that corners of houses can be used, and if only kept a memorandum of the ..cations, so that when I came to make out my account to charge with the article I had, and what to charge; perhaps I told him at Port Stanley that if I was not convenient to charge it to Mr. Sanders would give him a receipt in full; Sanders was Collector for the Ontario Savings and Loan Company, and solicited for various people; I had some business with the Loan Company; it was in July or August, 1876; I made application for a loan, which was completed in November, 1876; Sanders was valuator; afterwards there was a claim of $49.95 made by the company, received the account on the 19th November, or a few days after; I do not think it was for solicitor's fees, and some other items; I did not pay it at once, but went to their loan agent, Mr. Sanders, because I was not satisfied to pay solicitor's fees; I was young in the business of mortgages, and thought a mortgage was taken by a society in full satisfaction; Sanders recommended me to write for an explanation; wrote the society, and got an answer; saying that borrowers invariably paid solicitor's fees, and that part of this was for balance due on original mortgage; I saw Sanders after that; he asked me, in remitting money to the company, to do so through him, because they owed him some $18.00; he was valuator for them; I did not pay the money then; Sanders came to me after that with a reminder from the company to pay it; I told him I would pay him as soon as I could conveniently do so; I afterwards paid it to Mr. Sanders on the 1st or 2nd of March, 1876; I made an endorsement at the time, as I do of all money transactions.

Mr. Macdougall asked witness to produce the memorandum book.

Mr. Macmahon objected to any book with any entry concerning the payment of money to Abner Sanders being produced, as they could not be evidence against defendant, who could not be bound by any entries plaintiff might make.

The Court ruled that witness might use books to refresh his memory, but for no other purpose.

Witness continued—I made the memorandum as I always do when away from my cash-book; the words are, "First March, 1879. Out. Sav. and Invest. Soc. per A. S., $49.95."

To the Court—It is a printed date at top of the page.

Witness continued—I can tell by same means how I got the money, on 27th February I sold a note to pay the liability in London; the note I sold was against Angus Murray for $87.50; I sold it to Thomas Hattan, of Dunwich; I collected the rest of the money that day and made an entry in the cash-book when the circumstances were still fresh in my memory.

[The cash book was here produced, to which Mr. Macmahon objected, on the ground that if a book were allowed to refresh the memory of the witness, he could not be allowed to fortify his statement by referring to a book entry, which was only a copy, witness having admitted that the entry might not have been made for thirty-six hours after].

Mr. Bethune contended it could be possible to have two original entries, and it seemed to him this was such a case. As in the memorandum it was not said the money was paid to anyone, the word "paid" not being used, while in the cash book that was shown by the position of the entry on either the Dr. or Cr. side, and as it was soon after the transaction, it should be allowed.

The Court ruled the book could be used to refresh witness' memory.

The book was therefore opened and the witness read the entry.—"Bill receivable a.m. $37.50;" further receipts, $19.;" I paid the money in Mills' Hotel, at Iona, in the bar room; I remember the time of day, it was early, after breakfast; there were others in the bar; my impression is the defendant was present as well as Mr. Stoliker and others; Sanders was sitting at the table which stood between the bar stove and the door of his bedroom; he had a tan-business; he was sitting at the table when I came in; it was there I paid him the money; I said, "This money gives me a receipt;" I remember it was in bills, for he returned half a dollar, which I appropriated there and then; I got this receipt; the body was written by myself; Sanders asked me to write it; I went to the end of the bar where pen and ink are usually kept; Sanders had pen and ink at his table; after I had wrote the receipt I stood talking and then went and handed it to Mr. Sanders; I was holding a conversation with two or three at the bar; next time I saw the receipt was in four or five minutes; I got it from Mr. Sanders; I came over, and he gave it to me; I don't remember seeing him sign it; he was busy with his Division Court books at the time; I had seen him writing before that; I have seen his writing since; I swear I believe it to be in Sanders' handwriting; my attention was again drawn to the matter in May or April by receiving a reminder from London that the money had not been paid dated 28th April; I have not the letter; I destroyed it in the way I am able to fix the date of it, I was in London, and had an opportunity of seeing my reply to it, which commences, "In reply to yours of 28th April;" I had rendered the medical account before that; as soon as I received the letter I wrote to the Society, and got a reply, but have not got it now, as it was not necessary, and I destroyed it after receiving this reply as soon as convenient; I saw Edgcombe and told him the circumstance of receiving the letter, and that the money had been paid; Edgcombe did not deny it at all, but seemed to ask for time, as there was no money on hand; he said nothing about the receipt; I saw him next in summer and asked him to place to my credit the $18 on the company's books; he said he would attend to it; he did not ask me if I had a receipt; he did not ask time to investigate about this speciality; the main reason was no money on hand; when I saw him again I received $20 from him on account; he next said the estate would be cramped, to give an old receipt was not then referred to; he did not dispute this claim of $49.50 till the middle of 1876; I did not in the meantime pay the money, but afterwards did; in the latter part of 1876 he seemed to speak of the medical account; he did not offer any objection to the $49.50 then; he wanted vouchers for every claim against the estate; I offered to have the whole affair looked into by swearing falsely for them; the trial was before Mr. McKenzie, at Union; I was not a witness, but know parties who were there.

Wm. Watson, sworn—Live in Ekfrid; am in the milling business; have been for years ago; remember dispute between defendant and Wm. H. Edgcombe; latter made a claim against former; I paid defendant if he could; it was said to me.

This closed the evidence for the defence.

In rebuttal, the first witness sworn was Dr. Cascaden, who said—Am the plaintiff in this action; have been a resident of Iona 17 years; have been engaged in the practice of medicine during the whole of that time; have been acquainted with defendant 15 or 16 years; he is now residing in Port Stanley four or five years next May or June since; during first four years he resided at Iona; we were on friendly terms, with one exception; our intercourse was agreeable, except once; that was some time during 1867 or 1868, since which our intercourse may say, was one of uninterrupted unpleasantness; he was remarkable for very fluctuating, and all present were delighted the time of his death, excepting one year; when he was absent in Europe; left Iona in October, 1868, and returned in August, 1867; have various ways of remembering it; saw the accounts put in yesterday.

Witness was shown accounts, which he explained, the last of which was rendered to defendant, dated 28th April, 1875, for $88 50.

Witness proceeded—That is the account is which the charges are that were referred to yesterday; before that $45 was paid I became aware that Mr. Edgcombe was or was appointed that he was to be an executor; whether it was from gen-eral notice or information special notice of executors I put in my account; cannot swear; he offered no objection to it and the slightest; he said there was no money on hand; cannot give the time I first saw him; saw him frequently; he then lived at Iona; he did not dispute the account then, but did later in the year; it was between October and the close of the year when he disputed it; he said that in the meantime he had found receipts down to 1869, and especially for some charges for some operations which were made; on account of the operations not being completed, I made no charge until I should perform a final operation which I advised Sanders to undergo, and which he refused to do; I only kept a memorandum of the operations, so that when I came to make out my account to charge with the article I had, and what to charge; perhaps I told him at Port Stanley that if I was not convenient to charge it to Mr. Sanders would give him a receipt in full; Sanders was Collector for the Ontario Savings and Loan Company, and solicited for various people; I had some business with the Loan Company; it was in July or August, 1876; I made application for a loan, which was completed in November, 1876; Sanders was valuator; afterwards there was a claim of $49.95 made by the company, received the account on the 19th November, or a few days after; I do not think it was for solicitor's fees, and some other items; I did not pay it at once, but went to their loan agent, Mr. Sanders, because I was not satisfied to pay solicitor's fees; I was young in the business of mortgages, and thought a mortgage was taken by a society in full satisfaction; Sanders recommended me to write for an explanation; wrote the society, and got an answer; saying that borrowers invariably paid solicitor's fees, and that part of this was for balance due on original mortgage; I saw Sanders after that; he asked me, in remitting money to the company, to do so through him, because they owed him some $18.00; he was valuator for them; I did not pay the money then; Sanders came to me after that with a reminder from the company to pay it; I told him I would pay him as soon as I could conveniently do so; I afterwards paid it to Mr. Sanders on the 1st or 2nd of March, 1876; I made an endorsement at the time, as I do of all money transactions.

THE SLANDER SUIT.

Continuation of the Cascaden-Edgcombe Trial.

Great Interest Taken in it by the People of Elgin.

The Plaintiff's Account of the Transaction.

A DEEPLY PERPLEXED JURY

Returns a Verdict Which Puzzles Everybody.

But in Effect Says the Defendant Was Justified in Stating What He Did.

By Our Own Reporter.

The Cascaden-Edgcombe slander suit was resumed before Chief Justice Wilson at the Elgin Assizes held at St. Thomas yesterday morning, and occupied the attention of the Court the entire day. The court room was again filled to excess, and during the afternoon the throng became most dense. While the respective counsel were delivering their addresses to the jury the room was perfectly jammed, and stand ing room was at a premium. Through a misconception the name of J. M. Glenn was erroneously given as counsel for the defendant. It should have been Mr. C. O. Ermatinger. Further evidence was offered in rebuttal, of which a synopsis is appended:—

Hubbard Ellison testified—He was present at Golding's store when Dr. Cascaden's name was brought up; it was after the Reform Convention at Wallacetown; Golding, Dr. Newton and W. H. Edgcombe were present, as also John Edgcombe; the conversation was in regard to the Reform Convention nomination of Cascaden; defendant was present; I was not long there; I was very busy; I spoke about it to Edgcombe; he was a friend of Abner Sanders, and I was a friend of Mr. Sanders also.

The witness was examined at great length and in a vigorous manner by Mr. Macmahon, who brought out many new points of interest, but the pressure on our columns prevents us giving more of it than is contained above.

At 4 o'clock the Court took a recess for an hour.

The counsel then addressed the jury at considerable length, after which His Lordship summed up, going over the evidence very carefully.

The jury retired at 6.30 p. m. to consult on their verdict.

St. Thomas, Ont., April 1, 10 p.m.—About eight o'clock the jury came out of their room and asked if they brought in a verdict against Dr. Cascaden with regard to the justification of defendant, whether they would have to say that plaintiff uttered the receipt knowing it to be forged.

His Lordship said that according to the argument they would have to do so.

At 9.50 His Lordship was still on the Bench awaiting the return of the jury.

The scene in Court was one of anxious suspense, a large crowd awaiting the result. The plaintiff was noticeable by his absence.

At 10.35 the jury again came out, saying that they had decided that the receipt was forged.

His Lordship said that the verdict was insufficient. In sending them back His Lordship said they should decide the following questions, though he would not compel them to:—

First—Did defendant charge plaintiff with forging the receipt, or did he charge him with passing it off?

Second—Did the plaintiff utter a forged receipt as genuine, knowing it to be forged?

Third—If defendant did charge the plaintiff with being a forger or with uttering a forged receipt, did he do it from malice or a sense of public duty?

His Lordship continued—The defendant had admitted that he said plaintiff had tried to pass a forged receipt upon him. It was important to decide the latter question.

The Foreman of the Jury said they had decided that defendant said it through a sense of public duty.

A juror named Andrew McConnell objected and wanted to know if they could say it was simply through a sense of duty.

His Lordship said it was either one thing or the other. His Lordship said the second question was most important.

The jury then retired, the Judge still remaining on the Bench.

At 11.15 the jury came in again, this time with a verdict that defendant had charged plaintiff with being a forger, but only with passing off the forged receipt; and, that defendant did not make use of it during the trial for the purpose of venting his spite on plaintiff, but made the charge in performance of a public duty.

His Lordship said that if defendant made the charge in the discharge of his duty it exonerated the defendant. On that count he then asked the jury if they agreed that plaintiff endeavored to get the money on this forged receipt? For his part he thought there was no doubt about this.

The jury retired, and almost immediately returned with a further verdict, that the plaintiff had endeavored to obtain the money, $49.50, by means of the forged receipt, but were unable to agree that he knew it was forged and intended to defraud.

His Lordship said, then, the effect of this finding may be equivalent to no verdict, on the pleas of justification.

The jury then left the room, of which the following is a summary, he discharged the jury:—That Edgcombe did not charge Cascaden with forgery, but with passing a forged receipt; second, that the receipt was a forgery; third, that Cascaden attempted to get $49.50 on it; fourth, that Edgcombe acted from a sense of duty.

The lawyers received the verdict with much amusement. In fact, they said it was leaving the charge at Cascaden's door without a direct verdict that he knew it was a forgery. By his own deposition there were but two or three men in the room when the receipt was signed—Cascaden, Sanders and Stoliker. Sanders could not forge his own name. Stoliker swore he did not sign Sanders' name to it, and he was not accused of it, and therefore Cascaden must have done it. Thus Cascaden's own deposition, together with the "goes' far to establish what the suit was intended to refute.

Attempts are being made to have the Cascaden-Campbell trial put off. This will be resisted by the defence.

Mr. Bathiene went to Toronto to night. Cascaden's absence from Court was the subject of comment, as all others interested in suits were in waiting.

The unanimous verdict of the large crowd, the plaintiff's lawyers excepted, was, that the jury might as well have gone the whole hog, and made Cascaden guilty of knowing the receipt to have been forged.

The Campbell-Edgcombe party are much elated.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

County Constables Hodge and Templar arrested two boys living in the city named William and John Mason, on a charge of stealing a stove from Spencer's refinery. It is alleged that they just took the stove, and fearing detection brought it back and secreted it in the yard. They are known, however, to have borrowed a wheelbarrow, and trundled the stove down to McClary's foundry and other places, but being unable to dispose of it, they took it away again. They have been remanded by Squire Peters for a week.

SKATING NOTES.—The St. Mary's Lacrosse Club has reorganized for the season, and chosen the following officers:—President, Mr. W. J. Gillis; Vice do., Mr. G. F. Brickenden; Sec.-Treas., Mr. H. B. BEACONSFIELD AND THE COLONIES

The English Prime Minister has a special aptitude for the multum in parvo style. He has contrived in a not very long sentence to find exercise for the tongues and pens of the Liberal leaders to an extent that might make a respectable volume. Being undoubtedly favorable to the Dominion of Canada, it is not at all unlikely that he, with that keen insight and tact which he possesses above all living politicians, designed to draw out and commit to a policy favorable to the preservation of the Empire in its integrity, men whom he suspected of holding views opposed to such a doctrine. He knows well, that many of those who formerly held and professed the advisability of cutting the colonies adrift have never made a public recantation of their heresies, and, therefore, it was only reasonable to believe that these opinions are still cherished by the party as of yore.

If this was one of his objects in penning his pithy platform, he has been eminently successful in his finessing, and if he had no such object in view, then the result has been equally efficacious in drawing out a declaration from the Whig leaders, which will have a powerful effect in restraining them from adopting a policy of dismemberment should they or their followers feel inclined to do so. Those sections of the press most influential among them still hold the doctrine, that the welfare and prosperity of the Mother Country would be promoted by the separation of England from her colonial dependencies cannot be denied, and none can tell how far this leaven has spread, unless favorable circumstances should enable them to speak and act with safety. If this open repudiation of such a doctrine be sincere so much the better; its propagation will be all the more cordial and vigorous; but if only the result of circumstances then it is all the more important, that such a declaration of a colonial policy should have been placed on record. The avowal of Hartington, of Gladstone, of Forster and others, of a policy that points directly to a united Empire, whether the bond of union be weak or strong, will at least be a check upon the efforts of the cotton lords of Lancashire, whose sole idea of national greatness is the number of spindles they can keep in motion.

Had public opinion not frowned upon the advances made to the Home Rule party, by the Liberal candidate in the Liverpool election, it is difficult to say how far the foes of ofline and power would have carried the party in the election now pending. It was not principle, but policy, that staid their hand, and cut short all negotiation with the disunionists in Ireland. Had not the sturdy independence of the English electors shown itself in a manner not to be mistaken, we might to-day see Gladstone and Parnell hunting in couples, and hear the ex-Premier in his Midlothian orations speak of the injustice done to Ireland by governing her through an alien Sovereign, and legislating for her through an alien Parliament, in just the same style as he expressed his sympathy with her in having had an alien church establishment thrust upon the vitals of her existence. But, notwithstanding all, Lord Beaconsfield has had a long innings. He has held office for more than six years, and has left a record of which the Conservative party may always be proud. Certain things have been settled which the Liberals in vain sought to undo. For example, a limit has been set, for a time at least, to the ambition of Russia in the direction of Constantinople. Affairs in India have been consolidated and made safe, and matters in South Africa put in train for a strong British Confederation there. The policy has been in striking contrast to the hesitating, timorous action which previously existed, and which had reduced England to small consideration as a power among the nations. But it is not surprising that the news comes of the presence of high gloo in the Russian capital at the probable return of the Liberals to power. The Czar can well reckon upon their playing his game in Asia as well as in Europe, a course which Lord Beaconsfield specially avoided by combining great tact with a startling exhibition of latent force. What there has been in such action to call forth the displeasure of the English people is not very apparent. Upon the return of Lord Beaconsfield from Berlin, scarcely eighteen months since, he was the subject of special favor at the hands of the people. No man since Wellington has been so honored, and the Queen took the man she delighted to honor into special and public recognition. All these, and a long line of other important services, seem to have been forgotten in the excitement of party strife, amid the tumults of a general election. National interests of the gravest kind are thus which overthrew the Government of Sir John Macdonald, at a time when he had a majority of thirty members in Parliament. There was the surprise of the 17th of September, 1878, when the people of Canada united to turn out Mr. Mackenzie, who had had a majority of upwards of sixty votes in the Commons. Then there was the surprise of 5th June, 1879, when the electors of Ontario went back to their Grit idols, and confirmed Mr. Mowat by a majority of some thirty in the Ontario Legislature. In these days of rapid communication of thought the public mind appears to sway to and fro in a manner not a little remarkable. But, after all, Lord Beaconsfield has had a long innings. He has held office for more than six years, and has left a record of which the Conservative party may always be proud. Certain things have been settled which the Liberals in vain sought to undo. BEACONSFIELD BEATEN.

The news from England points to the defeat of the Beaconsfield Administration as a result of the general elections, which will be fully tarrulated next week. This is an undoubted surprise. But, then, we are accustomed to surprises in Canada. There was the "midnight attack" of 1878 which overthrew the Government of Sir John Macdonald, at a time when he had a majority of thirty members in Parliament. There was the surprise of the 17th of September, 1878, when the people of Canada united to turn out Mr. Mackenzie, who had had a majority of upwards of sixty votes in the Commons. He has held office for more than six years, and has left a record of which the Conservative party may always be proud. Certain things have been settled which the Liberals in vain sought to undo. For example, a limit has been set, for a time at least, to the ambition of Russia in the direction of Constantinople. Affairs in India have been consolidated and made safe, and matters in South Africa put in train for a strong British Confederation there. The policy has been in striking contrast to the hesitating, timorous action which previously existed, and which had reduced England to small consideration as a power among the nations. But it is not surprising that the news comes of the presence of high gloo in the Russian capital at the probable return of the Liberals to power. The Czar can well reckon upon their playing his game in Asia as well as in Europe, a course which Lord Beaconsfield specially avoided by combining great tact with a startling exhibition of latent force. What there has been in such action to call forth the displeasure of the English people is not very apparent. Upon the return of Lord Beaconsfield from Berlin, scarcely eighteen months since, he was the subject of special favor at the hands of the people. No man since Wellington has been so honored, and the Queen took the man she delighted to honor into special and public recognition. All these, and a long line of other important services, seem to have been forgotten in the excitement of party strife, amid the tumults of a general election. National interests of the gravest kind are thus

Had public opinion not frowned upon the advances made to the Home Rule party, by the Liberal candidate in the Liverpool election, it is difficult to say how far the foes of ofline and power would have carried the party in the election now pending. It was not principle, but policy, that staid their hand, and cut short all negotiation with the disunionists in Ireland. Had not the sturdy independence of the English electors shown itself in a manner not to be mistaken, we might to-day see Gladstone and Parnell hunting in couples, and hear the ex-Premier in his Midlothian orations speak of the injustice done to Ireland by governing her through an alien Sovereign, and legislating for her through an alien Parliament, in just the same style as he expressed his sympathy with her in having had an alien church establishment thrust upon the vitals of her existence. But, notwithstanding all, Lord Beaconsfield has had a long

The recent discovery of Edison's, whereby waste gold may be recovered from the refuse—a secret which has hitherto baffled miners everywhere—will, it is thought, have an important bearing upon the development of the Marmora District. The gold ores of that region are generally considered to be of a rather refractory character, and the difficulty of separating the gold from the dross has been a great bar to their progress. Should Edison's discovery prove to possess the value ascribed to it, an immense impetus will be given to gold mining wherever it is now carried on, and particularly, it is said, the district north of Belleville.

Whitby Chronicle:—Hon. T. N. Gibbs has been appointed Senator in place of the Hon. Mr. Seymour, deceased. Mr. Gibbs will prove a useful member of the Senate, and well deserves this mark of recognition of his services at the hands of Sir John Macdonald.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

Special from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 2.—After routine.

REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. Langevin presented the 5th report of the Committee on Railways.

Mr. Kirkpatrick presented the second report of the Committee on Public Accounts.

DIVIDING THE SPOILS.

Mr. Wallace (Norfolk) introduced a Bill to provide for the equitable distribution of the estates of defaulting debtors.

On motion to go into Committee of Supply,

PERSONAL.

Mr. Rykert made a personal explanation of what took place the other day. In the Hansard he had been charged with political immorality, and he thought that it was desirable that the antidote should go out with the poison. The facts were, that at a meeting at Wallaceburg in 1874 he had been charged by Mr. McKellar with having changed his course in connection with the Canada Southern Railway in consideration of the reception of $4,000. He had at the time denied this, and in order to emphasize his denial he had obtained letters from certain persons quite cognizant of the circumstances surrounding the case. One came from Mr. Jemmins Irving, late member for Hamilton, who had allowed that the charge was untrue. Another letter was from Mr. Price, of the Canada Southern Railway, also denying that the charge was true. He had also been charged with receiving money from the Toronto Street Railway, but on evidence before a committee of the Local Legislature it was fully proved by the testimony of the President of the road that he was only paid for services before the City Council. He had been charged with receiving money in connection with the incorporation of the town of Tilsonburg, but this was proved false. What money he had received was for professional services quite apart from his Parliamentary duties. In the course of the investigation, however, it came out that Mr. Wells, the Speaker, and Hon. E. B. Wood had both received money for Parliamentary services, and resolutions stating that such conduct should be avoided in the future were voted down by the Government party, and nothing relating to any matter which would reflect on the practice of the reception of such fees was inserted in the report of the Committee.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex) proceeded to justify his remarks, and was indulging in certain violent remarks.

Sir John Macdonald said that the gentleman speaking was only by courtesy allowed to. It was not in order for a personal explanation to be debated. The attack made upon the member for London, the other evening, was most unjustifiable, and the Speaker would have been within the bounds of duty in stopping it.

Mr. Mackenzie said the speaker (Ross) was not out of order.

Mr. Bonithee said that he considered the member from Lincoln had been guilty of a most unjustifiable and a determined effort had been made to hound him from public life because of his calls against the Reform party; but he thought he had been well vindicated by his triumphant return to Parliament over one of the most powerful men in the county of Lincoln.

SUPPLY.

The House then went into Committee of Supply.

The following items were carried:—Miscellaneous Justice, including North-west Territories, $15,000; travelling expenses of stipendiary magistrates in North-west Territories, $4,500; circuit allowances, British Columbia, $10,000; do. Manitoba, $1,500; precis writer of the Supreme Court of Canada and Exchequer Court, $2,000, and Reimbursements, printing binding, Judges' travelling expenses, salaries, etc., $6,500. Dominion Police, $13,000.

Mr. Macdonald (Pictou) explained the increase of $1,000 on this item over last year's estimates by saying that a dividend of 6 per cent. is to be paid and 10 per cent. laid aside yearly as a reserve fund. The new French cable represents $4,000,000. Much of this stock was practically issued for services, rights, profits to promoters, &c. Being so loaded down it is impossible for those companies to make a reduction in their tariff except by reorganizing and wiping out 75 per cent. of the Penitentiary grounds, the cattery and grown having been charged at an exorbitant rate. On inquiry, he said he was a practical kind of cattery. He then gave orders that the superior article should be used in the market, and the kind that suited the general community be purchased for the cows were disposed of.

Mr. Blake said there was a number of increases which should be explained.

Sir S. L. Tilley said that the increases were very small.

After some discussion, Mr. Mackenzie said a memorandum recently issued seemed to indicate, together with the action of the Government a year ago, that the rights of the Speaker had been usurped by the Government—a course altogether without precedent in any British Parliament. He thought that it should be well if

INTERNATIONAL PARK.

Report of the New York Survey Commissioners.

An Albany dispatch says:—The report of the State Survey Commissioners on the preservation of the scenery of Niagara Falls was transmitted to the Legislature yesterday. The examination of the region of the Falls was made by the director of the survey, Jas. T. Gardiner, with whom was associated Frederick Law Olmsted. The plan suggested by these gentlemen, and approved by the Commissioners and the Canadian authorities is simply to restore the banks of the river on either side, so that an observer standing either above or below the Falls shall see nothing but water, sky, earth and vegetation. He will see the Falls as Father Hennepin saw them more than two centuries and a half ago, and first made known to the world the existence of this stupendous work of nature. The Commissioners also recommended that the State acquire the title to the debris slopes under the cliff from the American Falls to the railroad Suspension Bridge for the purpose of preserving and restoring the woods that originally clothed the slopes. No man is worthless for building, it can doubtless be obtained for little or nothing. And further, that the right be secured to plant and maintain a narrow ballot trees, with a walk at least a mile in length along the edge of the cliff below Suspension Bridge. This planted belt need not be over twenty-five or thirty feet broad. The plan necessary for the changes on the Canada side is the same in general outlines.

Comfort for Fat Folk.

Says the London Lancet:—No doubt it is unpleasant to be excessively obese; but the morbid dread of fat which has in recent years become fashionable has no foundations in physiological fact. Fat answers two purposes—it acts as a non-conducting envelope for the body, and protects it from too rapid loss of heat, and it serves as a store of food. In the course of exhausting diseases it not unfrequently happens that the life of a patient may be prolonged until the reserve of fat is exhausted, and then he dies of inanition. Fats supply the material of the heating process, on which vital activity mainly depends. In great excess externally it is inconvenient, but the layings on of fat is no certain measure of the internal development of adipose tissue; much less does a tendency to grow fat imply, or even suggest, a tendency to what is known as "fatty degeneration." It is time to speak out on this point, as the most absurd notions seem to prevail. Again, it is not true that special forms of food determine fat. That is an old and exploded notion. Some organisms will make fat, let them be fed on the leanest and sweetest and least saccharine descriptions of food, while others will not be "fattened" let them feed on the most "fattening" of diets. The matter is one in regard to which it is supremely desirable and politic to be natural, adapting the food taken to the requirements of health rather than substance. Simple food, sufficient exercise and regular habits, with moderation in the use of stimulants, compose the maxim of a safe and healthy way of life.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Ottawa, April 3.—A return was brought down to the House to day containing reports made by Government engineers and letters relating to the construction of a dry dock at Kingston, and as to the necessity of the same consequent upon the enlargement of the Welland Canal. It comprises the report of Mr. Wise, C. E., strongly favoring the scheme, as at present there is no dock capable of accommodating the vessels of increased size consequent upon the enlargement, save at Montreal, Kingston, as being at the foot of lake navigation, is on the report deemed a suitable place for such a dock. A number of petitions accompany the report.

The total number of insolvencies in the Province, in the years 1878 and 1879 were as follows:—Ontario, in 1878, 732, in 1879, 723; Quebec, in 1878, 518, in 1879, 685; N. B., in 1878, 56, in 1879, 64; N. S., in 1878, 130, in 1879, 160; P. E. I., in 1878, 20, in 1879, 21; Manitoba, in 1878, 7, in 1879, 8; B. C., in 1878, 3; in 1879, 11; total, in 1878, 1,496; in 1879, 1,759.

The total liabilities in 1878 were $24,436,859, and in 1879, $20,875,665.

A return brought down shows all the pamphlets and papers issued by the department, by any of the department, on immigration or other matters relating to the subject of colonization. The return also contained copies of all such pamphlets. A return brought shows that in the North-west 247,315 acres of public lands have been sold to 982 purchasers; 83,490 acres were sold to 125 purchasers. Only five persons bought more than 960 acres each.

Hon. Mr. Abbott will introduce a Bill similar in effect to that of Mr. Wallace, relating to the distribution of estates of insolvent debtors.

Judge Gilmour will give evidence before the Boundary Committee at its meeting.

The sub-Committee met this morning, and a Bill giving the Credit Valley running powers over the Northern Road was finally agreed upon. The Railway Committee afterwards met, and took up this Bill, which was passed, with some amendments.

The Committee on Printing met this morning, and examined Messrs. Roger, of MacLean & Roger, and Mayor Mackintosh. The evidence of the former was to the effect that they had tendered, and had afterwards consulted Mr. Mackintosh as to the withdrawal of the latter's tender. He had several conversations with Mr. Mackintosh. The first took place in his own office. It was an understood thing when Mr. Mackintosh was nothing settled about Mr. Mackintosh being a partner; this was to be arranged after the matter was settled by the Committee. After the settlement I saw Mr. Mackintosh in his office, and it was arranged that he was to receive $12,000 for his influence. The maximum rapidity of fire with this gun is about 80 rounds per minute; but where accurate shooting is required the rate would be from 30 to 35 rounds per minute. Experiments made with this weapon in England, France, and America show that its projectile is capable of penetrating the steel plating of torpedo vessels of the Lightning class at a range exceeding 2,700 yards when striking fair, or about 2,000 yards if striking within an angle of 30°. The steel shot will penetrate a steel plate an inch thick at rather more than 900 yards. The French experiments showed that steel plate a quarter of an inch thick were penetrated by the percussion shell at a distance of 3,000 yards. Some valuable experiments as to the accuracy of fire with this naval gun have been made in Holland, and the results were deemed to be thoroughly conclusive as to the efficiency of the gun in encountering torpedo-boats, however swiftly the latter might make their approach.

The Hotchkiss revolving cannon, in its general form, consists of five barrels, made of wrought-iron, fluid-compressed steel. These barrels are grouped round a common axis, and are made to revolve in front of a solid, immovable breech-block. This breech block has an opening in the upper part to introduce the cartridges, and an opening underneath for the exit of the empty cartridge cases, which are thrown out by means of a mechanical contrivance. The cartridges are fired singly as they present themselves by the rotation of the barrels to the blow of the firing pin, and while resting for an instant motionless in front of the solid portion of the breech. The turning of a crank causes the automatic loading, firing, and extraction of the empty cartridge cases. The metallic case in the cartridge prevents the escape of powder gas at the breech. The mechanism is remarkably simple and strong. There is only one spring in the entire machine—namely, that which propels the firing pin into the cartridge. The barrels are fixed on the polygroove system, and the arrangement by which the barrels are at rest just before the cartridge is fired permits the gunner to take accurate aim, while at the same time he continues to turn the crank. An extraordinary force of the weapon has been devised for flanking the ditches of modern fortifications, and has been used in France with remarkable results. This gun is specially constructed to fire canister shot as well as explosive projectiles. Each of the five barrels composing the gun has a different pitch for its rifling. The result is that the cone of dispersion in which the bullets distribute themselves varies, and a dense hail of missiles sweeps along the works, no spot being missed. In one minute, out of 400 dummy soldiers, all but three were hit, the ditch being swept by more than 1,800 bullets, flying at every possible angle. To military men, therefore, as well as to the naval service, the revolving cannon may be reckoned to possess more than ordinary interest. In the United States considerable attention has been given to the Hotchkiss gun in its form as a field-piece, and a formidable weapon of small calibre has already been adopted in the service.

Fluid for Preserving Organic Substances.

A fluid for the preparation of animal and vegetable tissues, which surpasses anything before known in its power of preserving the color, form, and elasticity of specimens treated with it, has been invented by M. Wickersheimer, of the University of Berlin. The fluid may be injected into the veins of the body to be preserved by it, or the entire object may be immersed in it. In either case the elasticity of the tissues and the flexibility of the joints are preserved. At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences Professor Barbook described a number of preparations which showed beautifully the combined movements of the chest, larynx, and other parts engaged in the mechanism of breathing. Several snakes which had been treated with the fluid more than a year previously permitted of undulatory and spiral movements. Lungs thus prepared may even after years be inflated by means of bellows. Such old lungs were seen to swell to ten times their size in the collapsed state, the lobes became distinct, and the color gradually changed into red, and the whole organ appeared as if taken from a fresh body. Sections of delicate tissues, morbid formations which have been removed by an operation, will appear after months as if in a fresh state, and may thus be preserved for future study. All sorts of vegetable organisms may also be preserved in this fluid. A colony of exquisite fresh-water algæ, which had been in the fluid for a year appeared to be growing in the water. The Prussian Government has purchased this valuable discovery, and the Minister of Instruction has published it in his official organ for the benefit of the scientific world. The formula for the preparation of the fluid is as follows:—In 3,000 grammes of boiling water dissolve alum, 100 grammes; common salt, 25 grammes; saltpetre, 12 grammes; carbonate of potash, 60 grammes; arsenicous acid, 10 grammes. After cooling and filtering, add to every ten litres of the solution 4 litres of glycerine and 1 litre of methylic alcohol. The method of application differs according to the nature of the objects to be preserved. Anatomical preparations that are to be preserved dry are immersed in the fluid from six to twelve days, according to their size, then taken out and dried in the open air. Hollow organs, such as the lungs, &c., must be filled with the preserving fluid, then laid in a vessel containing the same liquid, and afterward distended with air and dried. Smaller animals, such as crabs, beetles, lizards, frogs, &c., if the natural colors are to be preserved unchanged are not to be dried, but put immediately into the preparation. The same fluid may be used for the purpose of preserving human bodies during transportation, or even for more permanent embalming.—English Mechanic.

WELLAND CANAL.

NOTICE TO MACHINIST-CONTRACTORS.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned Secretary of Railways and Canals, and endorsed "Tender for Lock Gates, Welland Canal," will be received at his office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western Mails on TUESDAY, the 20th DAY OF JUNE next, for the construction of gates, and the necessary machinery connected with them, for the new locks on the Welland Canal.

Plans, specifications and general conditions can be seen at the office on and after THURSDAY, THE 20TH DAY OF MAY next, where forms of tender can also be obtained.

Parties tendering are expected to provide the special tools necessary for, and to have practical knowledge of, works of the class, and are required to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and the sureties of parties—except there are attached the seminal signatures, the nature of the occupation and residence of each member of the same, and, further, no assorted bank cheque for a sum equal to $200, for the gates of each lock, must accompany each tender, which cheque shall be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work at the rates and on the terms stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque thus sent in will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

For the due fulfilment of the contract the party or parties whose tender is proposed to accept will be notified that their tender is accepted, subject to a deposit of fifty per cent. of the bulk sum of the contract—of which the sum sent in with the tender will be considered a part—to be deposited to the credit of the Receiver General within seven days after the date of the notice.

Ninety per cent. only of the progress estimates will be paid until the completion of the work.

The Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

F. BRAUN,
Secretary.

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.
TO THE
Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:

This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America. Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small jobbers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods, figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

IN CHANCERY
Murray vs. Murray.

PURSUANT TO THE DECREE in the above cause, bearing date the seventh day of October, 1879, there will be sold, with the approbation of James Shanly, Esquire, Master of the Court of Chancery, at the City of London, by Mr. Alexander Tytler, Auctioneer, at the auction rooms, on Richmond Street, in the City of London, opposite the City Hall, on Friday, the Sixteenth day of April next, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, the following lands and premises, that is to say:—

Lot number Twenty, on the north side of York Street, in the said City of London, containing by admeasurement one acre and one perch, more or less, and being the property of the late Mary Wilson, and has a frontage on York Street of one hundred and ten feet.

This property is situated nearly opposite to the Tecumseh House, and is very well suited for manufacturing purposes or private residences. There are two small frame dwelling houses on said property.

The said lot will be put up in one parcel, subject to a reserved bidding; and if not sold as such will be put up in two parcels, with an equal frontage on York Street, with a right-of-way in lane of ten feet in width, running from York Street through the centre of said lot to the rear thereof, for the joint use and benefit of the purchasers of said parcels, their heirs and assigns, for all purposes and at all times; the parcels being subject to a reserved bidding.

The purchasers will pay to the plaintiff's solicitors on the day of sale, ten per cent. of the purchase money for each parcel, and will pay the balance into Court, to the credit of this cause, within thirty days thereafter, without interest; and after which interest at six per cent. will be charged, and the purchaser or purchasers will be required to sign an agreement for the completion of the purchase.

The purchaser or purchasers will be required to pay the taxes for the current year.

The purchaser or purchasers will prepare the conveyance at his or their own expense, and will submit same for examination.

The other conditions are the standing conditions of the Court of Chancery.

For further particulars application can be made to John Hoskin, Esquire, Toronto; Messrs. Gregory, Kew & Dale, Solicitors, London; or to the Vendor's Solicitors.

Dated March 24, 1880.

BARBARA.

"And I have never seen the house where my father was born," said Flossie. "That seems hard. But was there when she was a little thing in bits shoes. She has a hazy recollection of a garden full of roses and a land of fairness, where she sat upon people's laps, and ate clouted cream and apple pastry all day long."

"Yes, it was a dear old house. I doubt if Penruth Place is as pretty."

For both Place was incessantly present to the minds of Mrs. Trevernock and her daughter as the writer were on. It was what is called an old fashioned writer—a writer in which grim Death sharpened his sickle and mowed down tender infancy and feeble age; while sturdy youth and middle age slapped its chest and bectored about the fine seasonable weather and the glorious frost which—with the small disadvantages of throwing the bulk of the population out of work—made the Serpentine a playground for the idle. Coals went up to starvation price, and the little household in South Lane felt the pinch of poverty more keenly than they had done for the last few years.

Was it possible that six hundred a year, that rejected offer of Wyvyan Penruth's, which made the petty trials and straits of poverty so hard for Mrs. Trevernock this winter? She saw herself with her means lessened to the extent of those stray seven signs which Flossie had contrived to extort from her father. He had said he would give them nothing, and he was the kind of man to keep his word. There was a tax paper on the mantel-piece inviting immediate attention; and Mrs. Trevernock knew not whence the money to meet that demand could come. She had contrived to keep out of debt, but to pay her way from day to day had been her utmost achievement.

The balance between comfort and destitution was so nicely adjusted that a feather would turn the scale.

Barbara knew this, and there were times when the thought that she might have made the rest of her mother's life serene and free from care shot like an arrow through her heart.

"Darling," she cried once, throwing her arms round her mother's neck, "how good we have been to me! how you have worked and striven to make me happy! and then I had it in my power to help you, I refused. It was selfish; it was horrible. I hate myself for my ingratitude; and yet—"

"My pet, I would never ask you to do anything that was not for your own happiness. And if you felt that you could not live with Mr. Penruth, you were right in saying no. Can you think I would wish you to sacrifice yourself for my sake? Should like to see you prosperous and well placed in life, and poor Flossie's future more secure; but at my age it can matter very little what may happen to me. I have lived my life. It has not been a fortunate life, but I have been blest in my two dear daughters."

"No, mother, don't say that. I have not been a good daughter; I am made up of selfishness; I have thought only of myself. Ah! if you knew how I loved him!"

Mrs. Trevernock bared like tears.

"My love, I could not have ensured your crying a disgraced man. That would have broken my heart."

"Don't speak of him, mother; it hurts me too much."

Very soon after this, the first confidence between Barbara and her mother since Mr. Penruth's offer, Mrs. Trevernock fell ill, she had been slightly out of health all the winter, but had insisted on leading her usual active life, sweeping and dusting and scrubbing in holes and corners in her endeavor to maintain that perfection of brightness and cleanliness which distinguished the little house in South Lane from all other houses. But now she broke down altogether, and for the first time within Flossie's memory that expensive luxury, a doctor, appeared at 20 South Lane. He came daily in a brougham filled with a man in livery, and the two girls felt that the smartness of his equipage would make an appreciable difference in his bill. Hitherto their only medical adviser had been the chemist round the corner by Addington Square—a valuable man, who had a good old-established pharmacopœia at his finger's ends, and never left one any harm, even if he sometimes failed in doing good. The proprietor of the tilbury did not disguise the fact that Mrs. Trevernock's illness was seriously ill. She had neglected herself too long; she was weak and low to an alarming degree, and required the most careful nursing.

The two girls listened to him with white, scared faces, hanging upon his words pitiously, as if he were the source of good and evil.

"You may be sure we shall be careful, for we love her so dearly," faltered Barbara. "Only tell us exactly what to do."

"There is not much to tell," said Mr. Parker—doctor par excellence—"quiet, freedom from worry, and a generous diet. That is all I can suggest at present. A little later, when we have brought the dear lady round, a change to mild Sea Ventnor or Bournemouth, for instance—would be eminently desirable—indeed, I may say absolutely necessary."

"She must have it," sighed Barbara, her heart beating tumultuously. "And about the diet—"

"Must be light and nourishing," replied the doctor. "Clear soup, white fish, the breast of a boiled chicken, sweet bread thinly dressed, asparagus, or, if you can't get that, a little sea-kale. The diet should be varied and delicate; and as for wine—"

"Wine!" echoed Barbara, hopelessly.

Barbara gripped her sister's hand with fingers cold as death.

"What wine would be best?" she asked the doctor.

"Two or three glasses of old port would not be too much in the course of the day; in mind the wine is thoroughly good and sound—not a heavily brandied port on any account."

"What is a brandied port?" wondered Flossie, stricken with a sense of utter helplessness.

Their adviser encouraged them with a hopeful word or two, and bade them a cheery good-day. He went off so blithely in his tilbury that Flossie hated him as she had rarely hated mortal.

"What are we to do?" she asked her sister, with pitiful appeal.

"We must save our mother. Oh, my dearest, my fondest, I have never loved you half so well as you ought to be loved!" cried Barbara, in a voice half suffocated by sobs.

"She must not see that you have been crying."

"No, she must not see," choking down her tears. "I must go to her at once. She must not know what the doctor says. Worry and care must be kept away from her—somehow."

"We've had two summonses about that last tax," said Flossie. "If it isn't paid within—"

"My father must pay it; he must and shall give us money. I shall write to Aunt Sophia this afternoon. She has always been good to us in the long run, I suppose."

"Yes; she lectures exceedingly, but she does help us. Soup, fish, chicken, asparagus, port, and the tilbury man to be paid afterward," said Flossie. "We shall want a fortune."

"Will you go to Gray's Inn at once, Flossie, while I dress mamma and write to Aunt Sophia?"

"I would rather walk over burning plough-shares; but I'll go. And if Mr. T. talks about the window, he shall have a bit of my mind. To be married to such a dear woman as my darling mother, and to treat her so! He must have a heart of stone. What are you going to get for ma's dinner? The generous diet ought to begin at once, oughtn't it?"

"Leave that to me, Flossie. You go off to Gray's Inn, and tell your father that his wife will die unless she has comforts which we can not buy without his help."

To be Continued.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A COLUMN OF AMUSEMENT FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

KING OF THE TIMES.

At every sutter, when the sun
A group of ye men their knees
Upon the pavement when complain
Long-suff'ring mothers, of the stain
And wear on youthful pantaloons;
When mornings, evenings, even noons
In invite words the youngsters talk—
As "Vent your rumblings," "Take yer knock,"
And "Krickets take," and "Does you take"—
When chalk marked circles decorate
The pavement target—then 'tis plain
That marbles time has come again.

When paper-cuttings strew the floor,
And paste bedecks the parlor door,
And paste is all the pantry ofer,
And down the jacket's front is more;
When rags are called for, far and near,
And Bridget's dish-cloths disappear
When boyish thoughts are turned on high,
And boyish eyes are toward the sky;
When wind is keen, on ev'ry hand,
A blessed boon, we understand—
It surely would not take a sage
To tell us—kites are all the rage.

A CHINESE MAGAZINE!

Here is a bit of news for you, all the way from China, and about a wonderful thing that has just happened there.

John Chinaman has started a new magazine in his own language! And, more marvelous still, John Chinaman's new magazine is just for the boys and girls only—not at all for grown ups—and it is full of pictures and stories such as boys and girls love!

Before the starting of this new periodical there was not printed in all Southern or Eastern Asia one single "Juvenile" magazine or paper—not even a story book, nor yet a primer with pictures and story lessons.

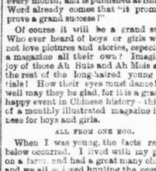
Now, however, strange to say, John Chinaman has waked up with a start, and has made up his mind that his boys and girls ought to have something to read besides their moldy old classics. Perhaps some stray copy of a foreign picture magazine or paper—not even a story book, nor yet a primer with pictures and story lessons, has found its way into his home. If so, it not only convinced him of the needs of his youngsters, but also actually nerved him to try to get up something like it himself. Anyway, it is extraordinary that, after long centuries in which he seemed to have stopped trying to make things better, he should turn about and avail himself of one of the latest "modern improvements."

The new magazine has sixteen pages every month, and is published at Shanghai. Word already comes that "it promises to prove a grand success!"

Of course it will be a grand success! Who ever heard of boys or girls who did not love pictures and stories, especially in a magazine all their own? Imagine the joy of those Ah Suits and Ah Mois and all the rest of the long-haired young Celestials! How their eyes must dance! And well may they be glad, for it is a grand and happy event in Chinese history—the birth of a monthly illustrated magazine in Chinese for boys and girls.

And best of all, ONE TOO.

When I was young, the facts recorded below occurred. I lived with my parents on a farm, and had a great many chickens, and we all enjoyed hunting the eggs. On bringing the eggs to the house one day, my mother gave me to understand that she could do as I pleased with it. So, after some thought, I concluded to take it to the barn and put it under a hen that was setting, which I immediately did. On visiting three weeks, I was rewarded by becoming the owner of a small young chicken. This I raised carefully, and in time sold it and also its cage which I had saved. With the money thus raised I bought a duck and a turkey; these I raised with care also, watching their growth from day to day. On the following Thanksgiving I sold the duck, and on Christmas the turkey.



With the money thus earned I purchased a small pig, which I put in with pash. In one year I sold this at the weight of 400 pounds, and for thirty dollars, paying father $10 for work and feed, making thereby a clear profit of twenty dollars. With this I bought a three year old sow of father. In the fall I sold it for a fair price, and after paying father for pasture and food, I bought a young colt, and had some money saved. At last I sold the horse and bought myself a pony, and had $100 saved. And now, dear readers, to those who doubt I can but say, try it yourself. It is a fact that from an egg, in time, I secured a pony and $100.

"FIFTEEN."

Jacob Mapes inserts the following epistle, dated from New York City. It explains itself, and he only wishes he could say as the game explained itself, for of all the——ly writers I ever saw, and he brinks of it as one of "them as plays at it." His box, he desires to say, was "confidenced summary," on he being defeated in all heads. Far from mourning over his loss he thinks it all for the best, as a longer acquaintance with it would have induced him to wish he calls a "state of comma." Evidently it was time he came to his right story.

FERD AND NELLIE.

DEAR FRIEND MAPES,—I have never (no, never,) written to yez or any other friends on the Island before,—this You may all consider it a piece of presumption on my part to call yez friends of mine, never having either seen or heard of me before, but I contracted such an affection for yez all while I resided in London; and have watched with such interest for news since I left it, that now, for the firstime, I intrude myself upon your notice. I should not have done so now if it had not been for Mr. Mapes' inquiry of, "Have you yet seen the Star of Bethlehem? Have I seen it? Well, I think so! One day I walked from the post office to 34th street, and out of curiosity counted the peddlers who were selling the game. You may think I am romancing, but I tell you I counted exactly 74 men, 7 small boys, and one woman, all engaged in the trade. Mind you, that was only through one thoroughfare. Everyone seemed mad with the epidemic of trying to solve "Fifteen." —men, women and children; and it still rages! On the ferry boats and on the street cars you will see even grave, substantial merchants draw the "Fatal Box" from their coat-tail pockets, and in a few minutes will be so absorbed over the fifteen blocks that they, in many cases, go several blocks beyond their destinations. Professional men neglect their clients, tradesmen their trades, for it. I heard to-day of a photographer who occasionally forgets his sitters, and while he ponders, they rage. The news is whispered that it has even spread to Vassar College, and that the young ladies have neglected their back hair and have totally scalished "mags" in consequence. Where is it to end? I had hoped Canada would be enough, and little thought it would get to the peaceful little island. Oh, Jacob Mapes, I am sorry for you! How many things will be neglected! How Mrs. Peterkin will scold when she finds herself short of wood for the stove, and you in some corner with that wrinkled box! If she ever does catch you, dear Mapes, give her the box; but pray goodness keep it out of Miss Nellie's reach, and do not spoil her pretty eyes by letting her try to solve it. And now, with kindest regards to you all, and especially to Miss Nellie,

From yours very truly, PIP.

OUR BUDGET—NO. 19.

CHANGED FINALS.

In each of the following examples change the last letter of the word first described, and thus form the second:

Petersville School Trustees.

Resignation of the Treasurership by Mr. Spence.

The regular meeting of the above Board of Trustees was held in the schoolhouse last night. There were present Messrs. Read (Chairman), Nicholls, Nixon, Spence and Wattam.

The minutes of last regular meeting were then taken up.

The teachers' reports were read and adopted, showing an average attendance in the Senior Division of 52 pupils, a decrease of 43; in the 3rd Division of 42; in the 4th Division of 41; making a total daily average of 171.

A communication was read from Mr. J. Dearness, Public School Inspector, enclosing a report of the examinations held at several divisions of the school. The reports were ordered to be read and adopted, filed, equipped, in good working order and making satisfactory progress.

On motion the communication was received and ordered to be filed.

Sundry accounts, amounting to $2.91, were ordered to be paid.

Moved by Mr. Spence, seconded by Mr. Wattam, that half the rent for the use of the Council by St. George's Sabbath school be remitted. Carried.

Mr. Spence having resigned his position as Treasurer of the Board, it was on motion of Mr. Wattam, seconded by Mr. Nicholls, accepted. Carried.

Mr. Nixon moved, and Mr. Nicholls seconded, that in future all moneys be paid by no order on the Village Treasurer, it being the unanimous opinion of the Board, that one Treasurer is sufficient for all purposes. Carried.

Adjourned to meet on the first Friday in May.

Revival Services.

COMMENCED.

For the past four weeks revival services have been in progress in the Union Chapel, on the 16th Range, London Township. Several have professed to have found the Saviour, and others appear to be anxious. Meetings are still being held, undeterring to serve Christ for years previous gave testimony to having their faith strengthened. The officiating Ministers are Revds. Laycock and Ling, (M.E.) They evinced much solicitude and anxiety, in their stirring appeals to the people and have undergone no small amount of self-denial in being present many times when their health and the distance to be travelled would naturally keep them home.

The meetings have been specially characterized by good order, large attendance, and the absence of anything in the form of excitement.

May the good which we hope and believe has been accomplished be "much more abundant."

London Township, March 26, 1880.

REAL ESTATE SALES.

Mr. Donald McAlpine has sold his farm, south half lot 24, 3rd con., Ekfrid, 86 acres, to Mr. Alex. Eadie, for $4,600.

Mr. A. D. McDonald has sold his farm on the Lake Shore, 2 miles county, known as the "Brush Farm," to Mr. Wm. Crawford, for the sum of $5,800.

Duncan McAlpine has sold 50 acres of lot 23, con. 14, Metcalfe, to Alex. McAlpine, for $2,500.

Duncan Paul has sold lot 22, in the 14th con., Metcalfe—100 acres—to Duncan McAlpine for $3 800. Mr. Paul is one of the first settlers in Metcalfe.

Mr. Robert Miller has sold his farm of 100 acres, lot 19, 2nd con., S. E. R., Warwick, to Mr Levi Smith, of Brooke, for the sum of $2 800. Mr Miller is removing to Kansas, where he will again engage in farming.

Angus Campbell, Esq., has purchased from Malcolm Black the S. E. corner of lot 13 in the 1st con. Ekfrid, at the price of 60 an acre—28 acres—situate near the village. Mr. C. intends at some future time to reside there permanently.

WESLEY MEETING AT WYOMING.—The Easter Vestry meeting of St. John's Church, Wyoming, was held on Tuesday evening, the Rev. W. Hinde, Incumbent, in the chair. Mr. F. Ward was appointed the Rector's Churchwarden, and Mr. John Armstrong, People's Warden, Sidesmen, Messrs. W. H. Brown and H. H. Hunt. Auditors, Messrs. J. B. Dale and W. H. Brown. Lay Delegates to the Synod, Messrs. J. B. Dale and F. Ward. The finances of the church were found to be in a most satisfactory condition, there being a balance in hand after meeting all engagements. The stipend of the clergyman was also increased $100.

The Exhibition Grounds,

Minutes of the Finance Committee Meeting.

The Offers Made to the Committee Last Night.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

The Finance Committee met in the Chamberlain's office—Present, Ald. Pritchard (Chairman), Gowan, Hiscox, Sharman, Scarrow, Skinner, Glass and His Worship the Mayor. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted.

The following accounts were passed:—Hospital, $631.34; Relief, $63.40; Board of Health, $174 14; scrubbing City Hall, $5; incidental expenses, $260.10; Police Station, $11.75; Registry Office, $8 75; pay sheet of the city officials for the past quarter, $2,804 17; T. E. O'Callaghan, Relief grocories, $27; H. Winder, pounds, $20.50; Stevens, Turner & Barns, water gates, $34.60; J. Fairgrieves, for wood, $651.52.

On the communication of Mr. R. Simmers, asking the price of a broken front at the foot of Dundas street, no action was taken.

A communication was read from Mr. A. Gibbs, of Port Hope, asking what encouragement could be offered for the establishment of a nut and bolt factory.

Ald. Cowan said he had been struggling along in Port Hope, but having failed was desirous of coming westward. There was no doubt but that the National Policy had given a stimulus to manufacturers, and it was owing to the competition by Americans that he had not been able to succeed.

The Chairman believed if Mr. Gibbs was going to give employment to 25 or 75 men, encouragement should be offered.

The Mayor said Mr. White, of this city, had machinery for the manufacture of bolts, and should be encouraged first.

Ald. Glass favored encouragement.

Ald. Scarrow said this was not like a cotton or woollen manufactory.

Ald. Skinner felt that the city needed all the manufactories possible.

On motion of Ald. Glass, seconded by Ald. Skinner, the City Clerk was instructed to communicate with Mr. Gibbs concerning the matter, and invite him to appear before the Council.

A communication was read from the City Clerk, of Fredericksburg, N. B., asking co-operation on a petition asking that the law on the assessment of Government officials be made clear. Payment of taxes had been refused.

On motion, the request was complied with, and the City Solicitor instructed to draft a petition to the Dominion authorities.

On motion it was resolved to instruct the City Solicitor to defend in Doctor Widmark's claim of $200 against the city already referred to.

On motion Mr. R. Clark was granted permission to rent his premises in the City Hall, subject to the arrangements of the City Solicitor.

On a communication from Dr. Haggarty respecting emigration to Manitoba no action was taken.

A question arose in the matter of Mrs. Coleman, asking for a reduction of taxes, as to the opinion of the Committee in the premises. It was generally agreed, however, that the Committee had equal power with the Assessor.

Ald. Glass moved, seconded by Ald. Sharman, that the surplus from the sale of the Exhibition Grounds be placed in a fund to be known as the Sewerage Fund; and that no general system of sewerage be proceeded with, until the citizens have pronounced on the sale of the grounds.

Ald. Scarrow moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Skinner, that the surplus be devoted towards the liquidation of the city debt.

The Mayor said the surplus would go into the Chamberlain's hands notwithstanding any fund that might be mentioned by the Committee.

Ald. Scarrow, Skinner and the Mayor voted for the amendment, and Ald. Gowan, Glass and Sharman for the motion.

The Chairman refused to vote, and both resolutions fell to the ground.

Ald. Glass moved that the proceeds of sales of a horse by the Fire Department to the Water Commissioners be handed over to the Chamberlain.

No seconder.

The Exhibition Grounds question was then taken up.

The Chairman asked if Mr. Tracy had received any instructions from individual members of the Council relative to estimates having in view frame buildings. The buildings should be composed of brick.

The estimates were then submitted, as follows:

Main building, stone foundation, brick walls, 20,000 square feet...	$ 4,000
Machinery Hall, " " " ...	4,000
Carriage Hall, 12,000 " " ...	2,400
Stables, boarded and battened, plank floor, roof shingled, 409 stalls.....	6 000
Cattle, hogs and sheep, to set apart one.....	4,000
Poultry house.....	800
Reporters' office.....	800
Caretaker's cottage.....	600
Horse and cattle ring, barn and judges' stand.....	1,200
Fencing, say one mile, 5,280 feet, at 30 cents.....	1,584
Walks, pumps, gates.....	500
Building for fodder.....	300
W. C., &c.....	600
Material capable of being used.....	$48,184 6,000
	$42,184

On motion, it was resolved to submit the estimates to the Council.

Tenders for grounds were then opened as follows:—

Charles Hutchinson—Part of the Kensington survey, 35 acres, for $20,000. A portion would probably be placed from the W. R. west of the Cove Bridge. Houses to the value of $3,000 were on the property.

John Peters—Part of lot 17, 1st concession, township of London, in village of Petersville, 80 acres, for $12,000; also part lots 7, 8, 9, 10, on Oxford street, 2nd concession, London Township, 40 acres, for $4,000.

William Glass, C. P. Smith, and W. B. Meredith—Part of lot No. 2, west side of the Wharncliffe Road, London Township, containing 50 acres, for $20,000. It has the advantages of being near the city, on a commanding site, unfailing supply of water, &c.

John Scanlon—Forty-two acres of lot 10, Governor's Road, at $600 per acre. Several other offers could not be made out.

W. Jamieson—Part of lot No. 2, broken front, in Westminster, 80 acres, at $100 per acres. A road would be required.

Mr. J. Kent—That S. Kent, of Wingham, had authorized him to sell forty or fifty acres of the race-course, at $200 per acre.

E. W. Scatchard—First lot east of L. Ardill's, in London Township, near Adelaide street, consisting of 50 acres, for $3 000.

A. J. Jarvis—Thirty-eight acres on the Pipe Line, a short distance from the Cove Bridge, $8,000.

Samuel Boles—Thirty acres of south part of east half of lot 11, concession B, Gore of London, $175 per acre.

J. Stanley Offering E. Winnett's property, part of lot 13, 3rd concession of London Township, near Adelaide street, fifty acres, $10,000. Immediately outside the city.

S. H. Graydon—Twenty and one-half acres of old Park Farm, London East, $6,200. Eleven acres adjoining could be purchased at a similar rate. Bounded by the G. W. R. and Hamilton Road.

Alex. Hyndman—Thirty or forty acres, part of lot 23, Westminster township, alongside Fort Stanley Railway, at $150 per acre; two miles from City Hall.

W. Cronyn—The Montserrat Farm, 80 acres, immediately north of city limits, $15,000; also 30 acres, lot B, fronting on the Hamilton Road, for $6,000.

George Oliver—Lot 11, between second and third concession line, London township, 74 acres, $11,000, or 60 acres for $175 per acre, and less in proportion.

Charles Hutchinson—Fifty acres, fronting on Wortley Road, for $15,000, or 45 acres, fronting on the Wharncliffe Road, $11,000; the whole for $20,000.

Ald. Scarrow moved, seconded by Ald. Skinner, that the East Middlesex Agricultural Association be conferred with, and a choice of three or four lots by a conjoint meeting of the Association and Committee be submitted to the ratepayers on the voting for sale of the Exhibition Grounds.

Ald. Glass moved that the tenders of Messrs. V. Cronyn, S. Kent and S. H. Graydon be submitted to the Council.

Ald. Cowan seconded.

The Mayor was in favor of the Hutchinson property in Kensington, but had no doubt that of the twenty-one members in the Council each would have a different opinion. He moved that the selection of a site be postponed until the Committee obtained further information.

Ald. Skinner seconded.

Ald. Scarrow's motion prevailed, after which the Committee adjourned at 11 o'clock.

HOSPITAL COMMITTEE.

A meeting of the Hospital and Relief Committee was held in the City Clerk's office last night, Ald. Hiscox presiding, and present, Ald. Meredith, Browne, Wyatt and Buckle.

After routine, accounts for wood amounting to $292 were passed.

The relief distribution during the past month was as follows:—

	Cash.	Wood.	Groceries.
No. 1 Ward.	$ 8 50	14½	$6 50
" 2 "	13 40	9½	4 60
" 3 "	2 50	13	1 00
" 4 "	—	9½	1 50
" 5 "	2 00	19	3 00
" 6 "	23 85	15	11 00
" 7 "	8 50	6½	—
Total.....	$63 25	80	$27 00

A petition for relief to an invalid in No. 6 Ward was granted, and a request from Mrs. O'Bryne, for a grant to assist her in returning to Ireland, was laid over.

There being no farther business, the Committee adjourned.

INGERSOLL.

April 2.—The "Owl Club" is again to the fore, and intend giving one of their entertainments in the Town Hall here on or about the 14th inst. Some new talent and a quantity of stage scenery promises to make the coming entertainment superior to those in the past.

No. 4 Company, Oxford Rifles, will parade at the Armory at ten o'clock on Sunday morning next, to attend divine service at the King Street Methodist Church.

The spring exhibition of stallions, cattle, grain, potatoes, &c., will be held on the Exhibition Grounds, in this town, on Thursday next, the 8th inst.

At the auction sale of farm stock held at the farm of Thos. Seldon a short time ago, the average price paid for horned cattle was $85 per head—a good evidence of what Oxford can do.

Rev. Mr. Hansford of Toronto, will give another lecture in the Town Hall here, on the 13th instant, taking for his subject "Martin Luther."

Five thousand five hundred dollars was recently paid for ninety acres of land by Mr. Thick to David Trimmer, of Avon.

Rev. Mr. Haxford of Toronto, will give another lecture in the Town Hall here, on the 15th instant, taking for his subject "Martin Luther."

Five thousand five hundred dollars was recently paid for ninety acres of land by Mr. Thick to David Trimmer, of Avon.

Erskine Church will be open for divine service on Sunday next.

The Rev. W. F. Griffin, of Barrie, will occupy the pulpit of the Baptist Church here Sunday next.

Miss Cornelia Oliver was charged at the Police Court this week with selling "short weight" butter. Miss Corney enriched our town treasury to the amount of $5 50.

John McLaughlin was fined $5 50 for assaulting Geo. Kempshead.

For the same offence James Sherlock was fined $5.

The Town Council meet on Monday next.

A local correspondent complains rather bitterly of the use our rural cemetery is receiving these days. He says, "It is a common resort for idle and lone characters, who steal the flowers and deface the tombstones." Unfortunately there is only too much truth in what he says.

Mr. Wm. McMurray, of the McMurray House, a widower of several years' standing, has taken unto himself a wife—a widow. And now "Mack" is being congratulated as the happiest and the luckiest man in town.

Those telephones that have recently been put up here are commencing to create a little discord. Impudent and inquisitive people sometimes get at them.

WINDSOR.

April 2.—P. Conway has been appointed janitor of the new public building.

Young whitefish by the million are being put into the river daily from the fish hatchery at Petite Cote.

John McCrae sold under mortgage by public auction yesterday, the steamers Baltimore & Gaudaty. Capt. Ives was the purchaser at $700.

Jesse Foster, of Detroit, entered into a contract yesterday to erect a brick hotel at the corner of Pitt and Goyeau streets, for the sum of $12,000. The work to be completed by the 10th of September next. The contract price is $10,000.

The Windsor gun club had a pigeon shoot yesterday afternoon, at which James Skinner killed 9 out of 10 birds. Dr. Donaldson 4 out of 6. F. Howson 3 out of 6, James Fraser 2 out of 4, N. Latest Notes by Telegraph and Mail.

General Notes.

Thomas & Walker, produce merchants, shipped the other day three thousand dozen of eggs to New York, and one thousand two hundred dozen to Winnipeg.

The Inland Revenue receipts for March, 1880, were $91,394 77, and for the corresponding month of 1879, $78,704 36—an increase of $12,690 41 for the last month.

Montreal, April 2.—The Custom receipts at this port for March last were $553,923.10, and for the corresponding month of 1879, $208,848 95, showing an increase on last month of $285,064 25.

Dried apples are in good supply here now, about 2 carloads having arrived this week. They are selling at 8c to 8½c per lb. in bris to the city trade; round lots would, of course, be sold at a concession on these prices.

In some of the neighboring towns people are being prosecuted for selling butter of short weight. One woman was lately fined $5 50. Would it not be well if Inspector Hughes, who looks so well after the vest, would occasionally pounce upon the butter?

Mr. A. N. Diamond has shipped from Napanee twenty-two car-loads of barley for Albany and Boston, the first consignment of a contract for 50,000 bushels, which will be forwarded as rapidly as cars are supplied. This large quantity will require 100 cars for its transportation.

It is said that 1 per cent. of Lake Superior copper territory is developed, and that it can easily supply the world with copper. The following are the products of the reporting mines for February:—Calumet and Hecla, 1 451 tons 1,670 pounds; Osceola, 150 tons 1,900 pounds; Atlantic, 125 tons 1,460 pounds.

The total visible cotton supply of both continents is 2,447,259 bales. These figures indicate an increase of the cotton in sight of 63,249 bales, as compared with the same date of 1879, a decrease of 270,007 bales as compared with the corresponding date of 1878, and a decrease of 489,460

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

the alternative one. The policy of his hon. friend, in giving away the land to actual settlers, was not the policy of the Government, because when the late Government laid out the land running from Red River to Selkirk and north of Lake Manitoba, they, by three separate Orders-in-Council, reserved all the lands running along the railway for purposes assisting emigrants altogether. The policy of the late Government and that of the present Government had in view the relief of the country at large from any undue burden of taxation in the construction of the railway and carrying across the continent. The system adopted by the present Government, however, was complained of as too liberal, and it was held it was too lavish with the lands. He was not able to understand the hon. mover of the resolution, whether he was in favor of pre emption or not. The hon. gentleman had called attention to the report of a commission in the United States, referring to the abolition of pre-emptions. He (Sir John) was not aware that the American Government had adopted that plan. He rather believed that they had not, from a telegram received from the Land Department at Washington, but that the system was as much in force as ever. Yet the hon. gentleman would have us adopt a system unfavorable to the immigrant and less favorable than the system in force in the United States army. We were giving to every immigrant—every head of a family of 18 years of age and upwards—who chose to go and settle in the North-west, 160 acres of land, and if he settles and stays for three years—not five years—he got his deed for that 160 acres, and then had the right to purchase another 160 acres adjoining at the prices mentioned in the regulations. He thought this was the greatest inducement in the world. The settler got his 160 acres and the right to purchase another 160 acres—a new farm alongside of him. He thought the answer was conclusively in favor of Canada. (Cheers.) Then came the great "bugbear," the speculator, which is going to take up all the lands. The system was the same in the United States. The land speculator had to pay cash, and that was a check to his imagination; but in Canada he was given the opportunity of paying, because the sale of land would be more speedy and rapid, so as to recoup to the finance Minister for the Treasury for building the road. It was very important this should be done, as Parliament had pledged itself in 1874, and in 1878 it had pledged that the land should be utilized for building the railway, and to use the language of the Act of 1874, the railway was to be built as rapidly as it could be done, so long as it did not unduly increase the burdens of the people.

Hon. Mr. Blake—The Act says without increasing the existing rate of taxation.

Sir John Macdonald said that the hon. gentleman was right, and read the recital of the Bill. The rate of taxation was raised in 1874, but not for railway construction. It was before the railway policy was commenced or before Parliament had announced any such policy. For the purpose of meeting a number of existing obligations to which the faith of the Dominion was pledged, it was decided the railway should go on as rapidly as it could without increasing the burden of the country by taxation. The hon. gentleman said that the rate of increase of population in 1860 was only 18 per cent. of the Dominion, whereas it was 22 per cent. in the United States. There were reasons for that interference. Firstly, a larger railway construction was going on, and bringing in a large population; large grants had been made to railways, which had the result of making those roads as agents to bring in settlers to their lands, and the hon. member must admit that was one of the greatest causes. While we had only an increase of 18 per cent. and they 22 per cent., they had a protective system also and we had not. Now we had gathered light, and he contended that in the next decade our 18 per cent. would be equal to the American 22 per cent. In order to obtain an idea of the receipts from the sales of lands, he had caused an approximate estimate to be made, because all these estimates must be approximations by the light of the United States experience. He would not tax the House to consider one or two positions, because if they were admitted the rest was merely a matter of calculation. It was believed from the best information that we could get, that 20,000 people went into the North-west last year.

Mr. Blake—Not more than one-tenth that number.

Sir John Macdonald said he could inform the hon. gentleman from the returns of the Minister of Agriculture, that 10,000 are known to have gone in, and from the best information obtained it was learnt that as many more went in that could not be counted not under the department; but if it was allowed that 8,000 more went in, that made the 20,000. Tenements reports stated that 50,000 would go on that section of the country this year. In the United States, whenever railways were to be constructed across the country, a large influx of people could always be counted on, because there was always an increasing rush towards those lands which are opened up by railways. The Government was told that 50,000 would come in, but if the number was put at 25,000, that he was told by everyone, and he had spoken to a great number who had come from the North-west, and who should have the best opportunity of judging, that the estimate was absurdly small.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie—Was it the same person who spoke to Lord Dufferin?

Sir John Macdonald thought it was very likely. He would ask the member for Lambton whether or not he believed that so many would go in.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie replied in the negative, and said he would not believe 20,000 went in last year.

Sir John Macdonald said the hon. gentleman was the first he had heard say so. He had heard that 25,000 was an estimate altogether too small. The number included the navy as well as the army—in fact the whole population moving in. In ordinary cases the family numbered five—the head and four others. In the Western States the average is not so large, as young men go in without families, and so the average becomes three and not five. In the future such an estimate could not be counted on, as the number in families would be larger than now when many had sent in their sons as pioneers. An estimate had been made of four to the family. This was a larger average than had hitherto occurred in Canada or in the Western States. The estimate was that of the 24,000 that went in, 3,000 would be heads of families, comprising homesteads and pre-emption claims. Every man took up his pre-emption claim, he got his lot free, and looked forward to having an additional one from the pre-emption, and that was one of the great advantages of our system over the American, in which every one had to pay cash for his pre-emption claim. It was also estimated that one-fourth of the adults, or 1,500, would become purchasers of the railway lands—men from all parts of the world, and, despite the endeavours of the gentlemen opposite, from the United States. There was a larger move about to take place from Pennsylvania to the North-west. He had said many would buy railway lands. Another fourth would be laborers' men with families, but who would not take up land. Some said that a mechanic would take up his lot and work it in such a way as to earn a little to it, but in making his calculation he had tried to keep well within the bound, so as to make a calculation far under than over the probable. He calculated that 25,000 people would go into the North-west, that 5,000 heads of families would take up free homesteads, that 1,500 would purchase railway lands, and that 1,500 would not purchase at any. That was a moderate calculation. If the estimate was correct, then the rest would simply become a matter of figures. Of the railway lands they calculate that the average purchase would be 320 acres of each land to a family. The average price of the whole lands extending from the five dollar section, within five miles of the railway, to 60 to 100 miles away, sold to the 1,500 purchasers, would be $3 an acre, this being under the average. The result would be that at $1, $2.50, $4 and $5, or the average of $3, lands would be sold in 1880 to the value of $1,440,000, of which one-tenth would be received. From the fees $60,000 would be received, making $204,000 in cash. Then it was calculated that as 25,000 people would go in this year, to each year might be added an increase of 5,000, so that 30,000 might be expected to go next year. This was a small percentage of the results of railway enterprise in the United States, merely as indication. In 1890, at this estimate, 75,000 settlers might be expected to go into the North-west. This was a moderate estimate and the revenue in 1890 would probably amount to $38,293,000, with ample interest. There would also be the statements to come in 1890, so that in lands sold in 1890 will be one-tenth paid for nine years afterwards. For each year there would be an instalment of one-tenth paid. The actual value in 1890 of the pre-emption up to that date unpaid would be $16,440,000. The actual value of railway lands sold up to that date would be $16,377,000, making in all $32,713,000. If to that total unpaid the $60,000 to be paid in 1890 was added, a grand total of $71,895,000 was reached. Deduct from that the cost of surveys for the ten years, $2,000,000, and the land offices, $400,000, and it was reduced by $2,400,000. Two million millions dollars would be had extant in money or good securities. The whole estimated cost of the railway, including surveys and construction through the difficult as well as the prairie country, does not exceed, by the most excessive computation, $75,000,000. For the work from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, probably less would build it. Some said the engineer was very extravagant, so his estimates might be relied on. If the road was built for $75,000,000 and in the first ten years only $45 000 should be were sold, where would be the burden on the people? As the natural progress of the natural sales would more than be sufficient to meet all the possible cost of the railway. There would also be a large population who would not have to clear the soil of the forest, as in Ontario and Quebec, consuming definable goods, and contributors to the revenue. In consequence we should derive a large revenue from the country independent of the lands. Every man took up his pre emption claim, he got his lot free, and looked forward to having an additional one from the pre emption, and that was one of the great advantages of our system over the American, in which every one had to pay cash for his pre-emption claim. It was also estimated that one-fourth of the adults, or 1,500, would become purchasers of the railway lands—men from all parts of the world, and, despite the endeavours of the gentlemen opposite, from the United States. In consequence we should derive a large revenue from the country independent of the lands. Every man took up his pre emption claim, the country being overridden by taxation and being oppressed. There was none at all. Under the sale one of the Government the country would be settled, the proceeds of the land sales would meet all engagements as the work would proceed, including claims for interest, and in the case of the railway the expenditure could easily be defrayed without adding further to the taxation of the country.

After recess.

Sir John Macdonald concluded his remarks.

Mr. Anglin contended that the sale of the lands in the North-west would not bring anything like an amount sufficient to pay even interest on the cost of this great project, and quoted figures to establish his contention.

Mr. Plumb said the terms offered by the Dominion compared favorably with those offered by the United States, holding that the former were superior to the latter, and in this connection cited from the report of the tenant farmers who visited the North-west to prove that the system adopted by this Government was satisfactory to settlers. In respect to all the railways which ran through the west of the United States they were built in advance of colonization. He quoted the prices obtained for sales of land granted by various American railway companies, the prices ranging from $4.29 to $6.30 per acre, thus proving that the colonization of the Hon. the Premier was not at all exaggerated. He entered into an elaborate argument, his data from reports from a report of Dr. Pare, to show that the industrial population was increasing so rapidly in England that in another decade the most difficult problem for English statesmen to move would be the means of providing this immense population with food, as the exports of Great Britain would not be sufficient to meet the cost of the importation of raw material for her manufactories, and the cereals and provisions required to feed the wants of the laboring classes over and above the food furnished by the agricultural interests of Great Britain herself. It was not at all possible that she could double and treble her export trade, as would be necessary to meet her necessities. He proceeded to draw a vivid picture of a continent rising from the sea close to the west coast of Ireland, offering all the necessary elements for the best system of society, and pointed out eloquently the facility with which it would be peopled by an industrial people, with all the appliances of wealth, and he covered with cities, farms, railways and everything that denoted progress. The North-west of the Dominion was this continent, and England would soon be obliged to look to it as offering the means for a solution of her difficulties. There was room enough for any number of people who choose to go and take up land in that country, and every facility was afforded them to take up land. He dwelt on the persistent attempts of the hon. gentlemen opposite to retard the colonization of the North-west, and concluded by stating that the Conservatives were not to be caught by any cock vote such as this, but would be united on this question.

After a few remarks by Mr. Trow,

Mr. White spoke to the question, and moved an amendment to the effect that the Governmental policy was best for the interests of the country.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie said he rose to rebuke the spirit of intolerance prevailing among ministerial supporters. Every Government supporter charged the Opposition with want of patriotism. He had yet to learn that all the political virtues and honesty of the country were centred in the Government side. The Opposition understood their duty, and would perform it regardless of the vituperation of members of the Government.

Messrs. McLennan, Huntington and Smith (Selkirk) followed, after which a division was taken with the following result:—Yeas, 136; nays, 40.

The House adjourned at 1.30 a.m.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Special to our own Correspondent.

Ottawa, April 5.—The galleries of the House of Commons were tolerably empty to night in consequence of the performance of "Parliament" at the Opera House. There will be a ministerial caucus to-morrow.

It is said the bank business before the House will take two forms. One bill will renew the old charters and another will provide for the issue of the new ones.

The Printing Committee met this morning. Mr. Mackintosh corrected his evidence, as given before the Court in Toronto, so as to make clear the verbal errors.

TORONTO NOTES.

Special to the Free Press.

Toronto, April 5.—A rather amusing incident occurred on Front street this morning. A gentleman was exhibiting himself at a window sumptuously arrayed in his robe de nuit, while in his fist he held a razor who was dressed in the usual garb of a man. The fortune, in the very impromptu and light costume, was the night watchman of an empty house; the latter was a regular tiptoe, in other words a burglar, and having effected an entrance into the empty domicile, although it was difficult to comprehend what he really could gain in his nefarious enterprise, the guard had determined that his man should not escape, and the result was that the appearance of the two at the window soon attracted a crowd, who were boisterously affected with the pantomimic display in one of the leading public thoroughfares of this Queen City.

The Police Magistrate this morning made very strong comments regarding the watch robbery at the hospital, and a warrant has been issued for the arrest of Brown, the attendant upon the sick while a convalescent patient.

Stevenson, the missing Secretary, is said to be in New York.

A large body of Jesuits expelled from France will shortly arrive in Canada, and will be employed as missionaries in the Mid-west and the more recently settled districts in northern Ontario and Quebec. A short time ago Father Becks, General of the Society of Jesus, came from Paris where he resides, to the Hierarchy of Montreal, saying that the members of the Society would be expelled from French soil, and asking if an asylum and employment could be found for many of them in Canada.

The Royal Opera House was crowded to night. Lord Colonel Ingersoll lectured. A rumor having got abroad that there would be a disturbance, a strong body of police was on hand, but no breach of the peace took place. A number of members of the Y. M. C. A. came down from the hall, and taking up a position at the door distributed tracts to their people in the lower part of the house on "The Gods." He spoke for two hours and a quarter, and was cheered several times during the evening. The audience was a highly respectable one, composed chiefly of young men. A special train was run from Hamilton and other northern towns and villages. He lectures again to-morrow night.

North-Western Enterprise.

Ottawa, April 5.—The Odanah Land Syndicate, several of whom are in the city, has purchased the plant for the publication of a weekly newspaper at Odanah, the point at which the Canada Pacific Railway will cross the Little Saskatchewan River in the North-west Territory.

SHIPPING.

New York, April 5.—Arrived, Graf Bismarck, from Bremen.

New York, April 5.—Arrived, Viking, from Antwerp.

New York, April 5.—SS. Moraster, from Antwerp, March 3rd, is over-due over two weeks. She carries a crew of 35 and a cargo valued at $130,000.

Preparations are making at Castle Garden to receive this year the largest number of emigrants ever landed here.

Arrived, Germanic, from Liverpool; Mosel, from Bremen; Barcelona, from Glasgow; Haarwerth, from Cardiff.

London, April 5.—The British ship Isabell Mott, from New York, March 10, for Antwerp, was abandoned at sea on the 22nd ult., in a sinking condition. The crew was landed at Falmouth by a Norwegian bark.

St. Pierre Miquelon, April 5.—The British steamer Frinville, for Boston, has been sunk in a collision with icebergs. The crew landed here.

Halifax, N. S., April 5.—The steamer Hibernian, with the weekly mail from Liverpool via Moville, arrived at six p. m., with 45 cabin, 38 intermediate, and 267 steerage passengers.

Halifax, April 5.—The Brooklyn sailed for Liverpool laden with cattle.

FRANCE.

PRINCE NAPOLEON'S POSITION.

Paris, April 5.—The Estafette and Odre publish a letter from Prince Jerome Napoleon on the decrees against unauthorized religious confraternities. The Prince declares he cannot, without being false to his origin, show himself the enemy of religion or of revolution. He continues:—"The decrees do not constitute persecution, they are only a return to the indispensable rule of public law. The friction of conservative union has lasted too long. There is nothing in common between the Legitimists and ourselves. It is time for each one to resume his colors, traditions and principles, and that all ambiguity should cease."

London, April 5.—A Paris dispatch says the letter of Prince Napoleon implies his utter disavowal to sanction Bonapartists represented by Paul De Cassagnac.

TURKEY.

AN IMPORTANT ARRANGEMENT.

Constantinople, April 5.—The Sultan has approved of the Cabinet's proposal to accept the arrangement proffered by Montenegro, whereby Gussinje and Plava are to remain in the possession of Turkey, Montenegro receiving compensation in the territory to the north-east of Lake Scutari. An important step has thus been taken towards solving a question which threatened to disturb the peace of Europe.

IRELAND.

THE OUTRAGE.

London April 5.—The Duchess of Marlborough, writing to the Lord Mayor of London, acknowledging the receipt of £20,000, says the distress is on the increase. She believes the various funds will suffice to cope with it.

The Liberal Victory Complete Without the Home Rulers.

How India's Affairs are to be Managed.

Policy of the Future Government Outlined.

London, April 5.—The Times says it is manifest that the Opposition has now secured a clear working majority, even if the Home Rulers are entirely left out of account.

THE QUEEN.

The Queen, it is reported, is to return between the 16th and 22nd of April. The Colonial Secretary left on Saturday for Baden-Baden to act as Minister in attendance on the Queen. From this view it is feared by some that he will communicate the Cabinet decision to resign immediately.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

London, April 5.—The Times says the cause of Lord Northbrook, formerly Governor General of India, suggests itself as Lord Lytton's successor as Viceroy of India. Lord Lytton has been so identified with the present Government that his prolonged tenure office is as little possible as desirable. Lord Northbrook does not wish to return to his old post. Regarding the instructions the new Viceroy will take out with him, peace will be made with the least possible disturbance of our normal relations with Afghanistan. If, as likely, there must be some annexation of territory, what is done will be with the sole view to the safety of India. We shall hear no more of the projected cession of Herat to Persia and of the entangling alliance which must have attended it.

Correspondents' names are invariably required; not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. Anonymous communications will be rejected.

LONDON ONTARIO.

SOME PREVAILING MISTAKES.

The news from several of the European capitals is to the effect that much joy is felt upon the downfall of Lord Beaconsfield. It is evident that it is understood that some important change is about to take place in the foreign policy of England, which may be more favorable to the pretensions of Russia, for example, than that which has of late prevailed. This supposition arises, however, from an entire misconception of the workings of British institutions, and of the small effect that the change of administrators, even the substitution of one party for another as the source of governing influence, has upon the foreign policy. An excellent illustration of this occurs in the recently published Memoirs of the First Napoleon, by Madame de Remusat. Writing after the success of Napoleon at Naples, she says:—"When the Emperor returned to Paris at the end of January, 1806, Pitt had just died in England, at the age of 47. In the formation of the new ministry upon the death of Pitt and the happy events for him, but he was not long in perceiving that the English policy had not changed, and that the British Government did not cease to work to raise against him the continental powers. It is clear that Napoleon fell into the same mistake that some do to-day, in not distinguishing between the success of a party and the change of a salient policy. Indeed, Lord Hartington, the leader of the Liberal party in England, speaking at Accrington a few days since, opened the electoral campaign in north-east Lancashire with some distinct utterances on this very point. The Liberal party comprises, in addition to the Home Rulers, a set of irreconcilables who would attack the most beneficial acts of any Government if they did not act under their banners. The difficulty that now exists is, how to reconcile national duty with party expectation, —at least, that kind of expectation which the demands of the Ulstra have given rise to. Lord Hartington opened the way for a new departure on the cessation of torce-to. He began by shaking himself loose from the embraces of those objectionable people, and though censuring the acts of the Beaconsfield administration upon many points of foreign policy, distinctly disclaimed the intention of setting aside should he gain power, any of the engagements which the nation has accepted. Indeed, the spirit of the British policy as he has defined it is scarcely to be distinguished from that which the statesmen of the Conservative party avowedly take as their guide, and is in marked contrast with some loud utterances on the Liberal side. Again, with respect to Home Rule, his language was consistently firm and clear. Not only did he has been whether the leader of the Liberal party and those who are intimately associated with him are strong and determined enough to resist the pressure that may be brought to bear upon them. But that doubt has been removed from the largeness of the support which the Liberals have attracted to themselves. In round numbers Lord Hartington will meet the Commons in May next with a majority verging upon one hundred. There will be no occasion, then, to pander to the Home Rulers on the one hand, or to the Ultras on the other. He will find ready to help him in any emergency the still strong Conservative element, which will unite in upholding the policy by which English interests have been maintained in Asia as well as in Europe, and prevent any disintegration of the Empire. Lord Hartington is as strongly opposed to Home Rule as is Lord Beaconsfield, while the stand he has taken with respect to the exterior policy of the country is apt to reproduce the experience of Napoleon, when Mr. Fox had succeeded to Mr. Pitt in 1806, who "was not long in perceiving that the English policy had not changed." The rejoicings at St. Petersburg and elsewhere may thus be found to be premature, while depression at other capitals will cease when it is more clearly perceived that there is a large class of Liberal statesmen who are in their natures Conservative, and that the change that has taken place has been more that of men than in controlling principles.

..Dungarvan, in Waterford, Ireland, is the smallest borough returning a representative to the British Parliament, the electoral roll numbering only 317 votes. The Duke of Devonshire, who own the larger part of the town, used to nominate the member, but the present Duke does not interfere, and Mr. O'Donnell, a Parnellite, is, and will probably be re-elected.

..Some hitherto unpublished documents connected with Oliver Cromwell's movements in Ireland will soon appear.

THE [illegible]

A lively discussion took place in the House of Commons regarding the tax to be imposed on the [illegible] foreign-grown tobacco. If the [illegible] trade in this commodity prevails to any great extent, the government are [illegible] right in putting a stop to it. If the cultivation of tobacco in this country can be made a source of profit to the Canadian farmer, and the latter desire to cultivate the article, then the Canadian grower is as well entitled to protection on this article as on any other. The opinion prevails that under the system of taxing the leaf grown in this country a vast amount escaped the excise officers, and the proposed change, it is supposed, will put an end to this illicit trade. How the proposal to charge a license fee may affect the object of at once raising a revenue and encouraging the cultivation of the plant has yet to be put to the test. If the Home fee be the only attempt to impose a duty on the leaf, then there is no doubt this plan will put an end to the illegal traffic of which the excise officers complain, but a restriction of the kind proposed seems rather unlikely to promote the more general cultivation of the plant. It appears that there is a large quantity of tobacco grown in Western Ontario, and also in Quebec, and some of the members of Parliament hold, that the cultivation, if protected, might be made a source of profit to the farmer, and of a considerable revenue to the country.

The change contemplated will, at all events, afford protection to the Canadian agriculturist. By the imposition of differential duties on the article manufactured from American grown leaf in favor of the Canadian leaf, the law will discriminate against the American raw material, and by so much encourage the cultivation of the plant in Canada. By taking the duty off the Canadian leaf altogether, and imposing it on the manufactured article, the illicit traffic in the raw material grown in this country becomes impossible, while the differential duty on the American leaf will afford adequate protection sought by the growers. The Bill proposes to levy 14 cents duty on each pound of tobacco manufactured from Canadian-grown leaf, while 20 cents a pound will be levied on that made from American, so 30 cents a pound will be the duty on each pound of cigars made from Canadian leaf, while a duty of 40 cents will be imposed on the pound of cigars made from imported American leaf. This will afford sufficient protection, it is believed, to enable the Canadian manufacturer to compete with the Americans at least in certain brands.

If these can bear additional duties imposed on them without diminishing the consumption, they will have the Canadian market pretty much to themselves, while the removal of the duty from the growers will sufficiently encourage them.

In the discussion, some of the members held tobacco to be a luxury, while some looked upon it as both a luxury and a necessary. With the latter we have but little sympathy. If the duty on the foreign article were raised to a figure that would mean prohibition, and the excise and Houses fees made so heavy that it would place the article out of the reach of the majority of the people, it might be easily proved the wisest legislation ever introduced. It is a question, and a grave question too, whether alcoholic stimulants have a more pernicious effect upon the mental and physical powers of the people of this continent than has the use of tobacco. The latter, especially when consumed by the young. Few more boys are found to indulge in the use of stimulants of the kind alluded to, and a taste for such beverages only shows itself in mature years, while every third urchin one meets, though little more than the height of a man's beat, will be found with his mouth discolored and his face besmeared with tobacco juice, a high-smelling pipe or bad cigar in his teeth, while the smell and appearance of the little wretch is really sickening. It is hard to tell whether the mental or physical development of the unfortunate youth is more essentially checked by such habits, and if he does reach manhood he is likely in the future to be found, as regards his physique, puny and sickly, and as regards intellect a mental driveller. Could the children only be kept from this destructive habit until they attain to manhood and understand the price they are to pay for their indulgence, there would be less cause to complain; but long before they can be convinced of the evil they are doing themselves, the habit has been so deeply rooted that not more than a small per centage have sufficient strength, of will to break off the habit, even though it was slowly killing them.

We shall not complain, therefore, if the Government tax tobacco and its growth and manufacture to such a degree as will take it out of the reach of children at least, and by this means it will set free one-half of all the tobacco slaves in the country. If the unfortunate boys could be preserved from the early use of tobacco, we would see more smiling aspects, bright eyes, ruddy cheeks and athletic frames than we do now. The physical degeneracy of the native-born American, as compared with their British sires, is, in the opinion of many of his own adored Typhoon, entirely owing to the constant and inordinate use of tobacco, and in a few generations the Canadian will follow in his wake.

Shorthorn stock is again rising in favor, just when there is a dearth of that breed of cattle in Ontario. Prof. Brown, of the Agricultural College, writes that he is in daily receipt of an average of two letters and one person, asking for such animals. Among the enquirers are many of our own breeders. The writer says:—"The demand is simply extraordinary, and I have no doubt several are asking high figures by reason of the demand. An average bull, ageing from 19 to 20 months, is well worth from $190 to $260. The average farmer should study these figures:—

Service	$ 5 00
Dam's keep for nine months	20 00
Keep of dam and calf for six months	15 00
Keep of calf for ten months	36 00
Loss, proportionate, by death	7 00
Actual cost of 16 months' old bull	$119 00
Profit	60 00
	$180 00

It is certainly most gratifying to know that our farmers are now rousing up to the conviction that beef-making is the business of the day. They may be assured it is hardly possible to overdo it.

Pipps still "speaks 'ard" of the Conservatives and the National Policy, and why he does so he is obliging enough to admit. It is because he was not made a Cabinet Minister. Pipps says he promised to defend the manufactures of Toronto from the Don to the Humber, on the assumption that he would be privileged to shape the Government policy, and now he is a disappointed man. He cannot redeem his promise, and the world looks coldly upon him.

The question of brain food was revived at a meeting of the American Fish Culture Association the other day. Professor Atwater, of Wesleyan University, who presented some statistics showing the nutritive qualities of fish and their value as food, said that "the old belief that the flesh of fish contained phosphorus, and therefore was to be chosen for 'brain food,' was not founded on fact; that search had been made to substantiate this old fable, but had thus far proved a failure." This view has been announced heretofore by other scientific authorities.

"OUT IN THE COLD."

A dispatch from Washington to the Boston Traveller gives the names of several Representatives who are opposed to the Bill to create a Commission on the subject of Reciprocity with Canada on the ground that the Canadians should be "left out in the cold until such time as they are ready for annexation." Exactly. They left us out until we began to feel a chill, and if the Grits had had their way no doubt by this time Canadians would be pretty cold indeed. But the Conservatives had little taste for such a tireless, helpless attitude. They warmed up to the true state of the case, and took measures for self-preservation, determined that Canada should neither be frozen out nor snuffed out. "Leaving her out in the cold" is consequently found by the Americans to be a vast mistake. She not only wouldn't stay out, but has made it so "warm" for the good people on the south of her that they are now making strong efforts to promote a return of reciprocity on the basis of the last treaty. As remarked in the despatch quoted in the FREE PRESS of yesterday:—

"The injurious effects of the new Canadian tariff on the various branches of our manufacturing interests, as well as the coneral, petroleum, coal and iron interests are attracting the serious attention of many Protectionists who have hitherto been rigidly opposed to the renewal of a commercial treaty with Canada."

The fact is our neighbors have been brought to a better sense of the advantageous position of Canada by the operation of the Tilley tariff. Its effect is to leave them "out in the cold" while its genial beams warm into renewed life and health every class of Canadian industry.

Edward Lawker, the inventor of German "National Liberalism," has formally withdrawn from the political party which he created a few years ago. His reasons for so doing must be sought in the disintegrated condition of the party itself, the loss of influence in the Reichstag through the dissensions among its leading members that have accrued within the last few years, the successive failures to obtain the fulfilment of its bargains with the Government. Bismarck found Dr. Lasker's secession from the party of which he was "Since Bennigsen," observed one Liberal, "the vine leaves in Lasker's soup, our Prussian Ceto has lost his appetite for broth of his own brewing." As a matter of fact Herr Bennigsen's secession from the National Liberal party has proved intolerable to the virtuous tap-room Tribune, who also has quarrelled himself with having yielded too frequently and completely to the Bismarckian pressure.

A few weeks ago a respectable old peasant farmer in Roumelia, smitten by the charms of a young gypsy girl belonging to a tribe that has sprung in the neighborhood of his farm, induced the maiden to listen to his addresses, and finally obtained her consent to become his wife. He received several warnings from sundry of her gypsy lovers, couched in threatening terms, but was so infatuated that he disregarded these and married her. On his wedding night a number of the wives of her gypsy friends broke into his house, seized him in his bridal bed, bound him to a plank, and then sawed him in two, having previously strangled his young wife before his eyes. On the same night the tribe struck its tents and decamped, nor have the authorities as yet succeeded in laying hands upon the perpetrators of the crime.

Most persons are aware that, by introducing a flame of gas into an open tube, whether of metal or of glass, the tube will sound; in fact, singing flames might easily be produced. The sound, of course, differs according to the size of the tube, the nature of the flame, &c. Sometimes it is like a roar, at others like a low moan; sometimes high, sometimes low; in fact, a great variety of combinations can be produced. But there are also silent speaking tubes; that is to say, tubes which, under the influence of flame, do not utter a sound; but, if a door be opened, a draft is created, then the glass vibrates, and a barking dog is produced should the street door be opened. Thus may the house be guarded by a mechanical watch-dog.

The functions of Sir A. T. Galt, as Canadian High Commissioner, are defined in the following letter of Sir John A. Macdonald as follows:—It shall be the duty of the High Commissioner, 1st. To act as representative and resident agent of the Dominion in the United Kingdom, and in that capacity to execute such duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the Governor-in-Council; 2nd. To take the charge, supervision, and control of the Immigration offices and agencies, in the United Kingdom under the Minister of Agriculture; 3rd. To carry out such instructions as may from time to time receive from the Governor-in-Council respecting the commercial, financial and general interests of the Dominion in the United Kingdom and elsewhere.

St. Catharines Journal:—The London, Sarnia and other western journals are now engaged in an agitation respecting the injustice done to the general public by granting shooting monopolies to a few individuals on the St. Clair Flats. The complaint now is that the Government has granted permission to individuals seeking the privilege of shooting, but on such terms as to practically exclude all but those who have long purses and take stock to the extent of $500. The London Free Press, in favoring the action of the unfair working of the leasing system, suggests that the Indian Department should limit the number of licenses at a fixed rate, whereby all parties may have an equal chance in the grounds.' This idea seems to us the best that could be the means of affording considerable revenue to the government.

THE QUEEN'S LATE DRAWING ROOM.

Lady Londsdale Carries Off the Honors—Scant Dresses the Fashion

From the London World.

Three debutantes attracted attention for their beauty, and carried off the palm; these were the Hon. Theodora Keppel, Lady Mary Liddell, and Miss Constance de la Rue, Mrs. Saltina's pretty spirituelle face and charming figure were much admired. For the rest, the Duchess of Montrose, Lady Lonsdale, Lady Walter Campbell, who was apparently clothed in an enormous bouquet, Mrs. Arthur Clarke, and Miss Baddeley, had it all to themselves; and yet not so, for Maria Marchioness of Aylesbury, looking the very quintessence of an English dowager in the utmost of life, yethill of nerve and sparkle, attracted much observation.

With his marvellous instinct for the beautiful and fitting ornament of state is Ex Lord Beaconsfield accorded to Lady Lonsdale alone the honor of leaving the crowd of pompiers surrounding him, and moving across the room to greet her as she emerged from the presence of royalty.

Her ladyship looked superb; her diamonds were magnificent, and on one side of her corsage was fastened a black pearl of fabulous size, set round with brilliants. From her sleeves (by courtesy), or rather shoulder-straps, hung strings of pearls, which had a curious effect. Her dress, by the way, cost a hundred guineas at Madame Mercier's; on the white satin skirt in front, as well as on the train, were exquisitely painted groups of flowers.

From the London Truth.

Lady Londsdale was universally acknowledged as the beauty of both drawing rooms. Ladies were not less desoblige at this second drawing room than at the first. One, in pressing forward, positively lost the whole of the upper part of her dress, and had to be shrouded in shawls. Lord Beaconsfield, who seemed in high spirits, appeared this time in a diplomatic uniform.

..A Limerick jury awarded $5,000 damages to a young woman for a breach of promise case. Among the witnesses for plaintiff was a Roman Catholic priest, who, it was proved, had been asked to give a sweetheart document, known in Ireland as "a certificate of freedom," to enable the defendant to marry his present wife. Judge Dowse said that he had never before heard of a certificate of freedom except in the case of a slave.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

Specially Reported for the Free Press.

ROUTINE.

Ottawa, April 5.—Mr. Richey introduced a Bill to prevent and punish wrongs to children.

Mr. Stephenson presented the seventh report of the Joint Committee on Printing.

PRIVILEGE.

Mr. Trow raised a personal matter. He said he had been honorably acquitted by the Minister of Agriculture of the charge of having received any money on account of his pamphlets in the Northwest; nevertheless the Montreal Gazette had repeated the statement. He repeated his denial.

Dr. Orton said he had been represented in the Mail as stating that the Trust and Loan Company had in certain cases charged exorbitant rates of interests. He had not referred to the Company at all. He had referred to the Hansard, and found that he had not mentioned the name of the Trust and Loan Company, but had referred to another.

Sir John Macdonald said that his honorable friend had not mentioned the Company in question, or he should have corrected him. He (Sir John) had been connected with the Company for thirty years, and he was aware that it never charged anything more than moderate rates.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

In reply to Mr. Skinner, Hon. Mr. Masson said the term "Established Church," in a paragraph, was part of a transcript of the Queen's Regulations; but as there was no Established Church in Canada the clause would be amended.

In reply to Mr. Robertson (Shelburne), Hon Mr. Langevin said that the Government had assisted the distressed fishermen at Gaisboro to the extent of $1,000; that if proper representations were made, similar relief would be extended to others so situated on the southern coast of Nova Scotia; that the Government had received information as to the extent of the distress, and would lay it before the House.

In reply to Mr. Royal, Hon. James Macdonald (Pictou) said the Government had taken steps to prevent any conflict of Magistrates' jurisdiction in the North-west.

In reply to Mr. Royal, who asked whether it was the intention of the Government, in view of what has just taken place in the course at Winnipeg, in the case of the Hudson's Bay Company vs. Ayotte, and in order to prevent the recurrence of similar troubles, to protect settlers who are in a position to prove by sworn testimony that their occupancy prior to the 15th of July, 1870, of certain lands which were subsequently included in the townships,

Sir John Macdonald said that the Government was not cognizant of the case, but when they were they would take measures accordingly.

In reply to Mr. Patterson (Essex), Hon. Mr. Pope (Compton) said the question of the removal of the restrictions on the importation of American cattle, especially for stock breeding purposes, was under consideration. The first duty of the Government was, of course, to protect the interests of the farmers, and to secure for them the English markets, which they would lose if the restrictions were removed.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. Charlton moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

That, in the opinion of this House, the proper policy with reference to the disposition of the public lands of Canada should be, so far as practicable, to sell such lands to actual settlers only on reasonable conditions of settlement, and in lots or quantities limited to the area which can be reasonably occupied by a settler; and that the sale of public lands to speculators free from conditions of settlement is impolitic, and calculated to injuriously affect the settlement of the country by keeping large quantities of land locked up for years, and so obliging the settler thereon ultimately to pay a price much larger than that which is paid into the Public Treasury for the land.

"That as, under the existing regulations respecting the disposal of public lands for the purposes of the Canadian Pacific Railway, large quantities of fertile lands are being offered for sale and sold to speculators at one dollar per acre for one-tenth cash down and the balance in nine equal annual instalments with interest at 6 per centum per annum, which enable the speculators to obtain control of lands for the building of the road should receive not only in effect loaning to the speculator on the part of the Government nine-tenths of the capital required for speculative investments, but giving rise as experience shows, to great expense in the keeping of accounts and to indefinite delays in the realization of the stipulated price; that so long as the system of selling public lands to speculators without conditions of settlement or restrictions as to quantity is continued, the price which such lands are sold should be paid in full in cash at the time of sale."

He (Charlton) said he had in design in moving for the Committee was to forward the interests of the country, not only now but in the future. The future of the North-west would be very great, and it was of the first importance that the country should be settled as early as possible, and at present the land regulations were not well calculated to provide the settlement in very many respects. We must offer inducements to settlers at least as good as those offered in the United States. The inducements now offered by Canada were not equal to those offered by those neighbors. Our public domain was held at higher prices than theirs. One hundred million acres were set apart for railway purposes, embracing, he contended, a fertile belt 200 miles in width. The prices varied from $2 to $1 per acre. The regulations had been altered, but were still far from satisfactory to immigrants. In each township eight sections out of 36 were set apart for homesteads, eight for pre-emption and sixteen for railway purposes. The homestead was limited to 160 acres, and each pre-emption to the same amount. These sections were not contended, situated in such a manner that they were placed in an isolated condition. The Conservative Government of Indiana, Ohio, Minnesota and Illinois had been established in the wilderness by hardy pioneers, and the same element was prepared to open up the North-west, but must have more favorable terms than were offered at present. We should set ourselves of the experience of the United States. That country, which first commenced the system of selling lands in public credit, soon abandoned that system and threw open the public lands for cash settlement. The amount of land given to the Pacific Railway, 100,000,000 acres, was greater than that given by the United States to any railway. The largest amount they gave to any company was to the Northern Pacific, forty-seven million acres, and this grant was absolutely reckoned to a certain belt which did not give them over fifteen million acres arable land. Moreover, according to the terms of our charters, according to the terms of the certain parts of the country, thus in some cases extending its belt three times the width originally contemplated. The present policy was arranged in such a manner as to throw the lands into the hands of speculators. It allowed a man to buy lands, paying 10 per cent. cash and balance in nine years, in equal instalments each year. It permitted the speculator to obtain fertile lands in section A at 50 cents per acre; in section B, 40 cents, and in sections C and D at 30 cents per acre. Already land companies were formed to obtain control of these lands. A Bill was before the House to incorporate the Northern Colonization Company, giving it power to buy land and hold the same for a period not exceeding twenty-five years, or sell the whole or part at such terms as may be agreed upon,

Lines

Suggested by the scene in the House of Commons at Ottawa, occasioned by the death of Hon. Mr. Holton.

One from their ranks has gone; the messenger
Had done his work, nor gave one moment's time
For fond embrace of lov'd ones dear to him;
Not e'en the vague good-bye that memory
Might hoard, for comfort in the bye and bye.
As the shade of the dark messenger rests here,
They cannot work to-night. With tear-dimm'd eyes
And bated breath the great assembly mourns,
Commingled and specious views the "vacant chair."
While the noughts of sterling worth and goodness were Fluent utterance in praise well merited.
And said of him no man had ever so worn
The gore while lower of a statesman's art;
No sought, on glittering marble carved,
Could tell the meaning world as much as this,
Engraved by Deeds of men on this fair earth.
This modest tribute lives. In Heaven above
Becomes a nobler clime a stainless page.

Halifax, March 15th, 1880.

BARBARA.

The week that followed was full of anxiety. There were no signs of rallying in the invalid, though all that loving care could do to restore health was faithfully done. The money, discreetly administered by Barbara, held out to the end of the week, and then came a welcome five-pound note from Aunt Sophia, who had been away from home when Barbara's appeal was sent, and had thus seemed slow to answer.

This remittance Barbara felt marked the limit of her resources. After this, there was nothing she could hope for till quarter-day. A dreary vista of weeks stretched before her, and depression seized her as she looked forward to them, wondering how the want of each day were to be supplied. And looking beyond this present necessity, she saw a dreary future. Her mother's health had so completely broken down within the last few months that it was hardly to be hoped she could ever be again what she had been, ever again be able to take life lightly, and face poverty with a happy laugh and an indomitable courage. No; those days when they had enjoyed themselves on the brink of a precipice, the very going hand in hand made it easy to get safely done with. The dread spectre of sickness and death would henceforth be always leering somewhere near, and happiness would be impossible. For the first time in her life Barbara realized the helplessness of three women whose means, chief only to several aids, were hardly enough to suffice for daily necessities, and left no margin for sickness or special need of any kind. For the first time, too, she felt what it was to be friendless, or to have only friends who, needs all as poor as, or even poorer than, herself. She knew too well that in those families with whom Mrs. Adams-Brown and her daughters were wont to exchange occasional tea-drinkings, although the outward aspect of things seemed to wear a like prosperous, there was but a hair's-breadth between that prosperity and destitution. They were genteel families, living on fixed incomes, but with one servant, upon incomes that, husbanded and managed ever so skilfully, left hardly the balance of a shilling at the end of the year; but more often a resultum of debt, to be paid—Heaven knows how—in a year that would bring no increase of means.

"I never knew that poverty was hard before!" sighed Barbara, looking hopelessly round the pretty little room, with its dark and white pictures, and gayly bound books, and stray bits of old china. "We have contrived to be happy on so little." It was the dreariest of February afternoons; a drizzling rain had been coming down all day long, with the patter sleety of small flakes. The sky was dun color; the leafless trees, even the evergreens, looked sunless. All the associations of the year were with June. Barbara stood looking out of the window-sill at heart, as—footsore to the spirit somehow, as if there was a desolation in that hopeless prospect.

"It is like my life," she said to herself—"blank and gray, with not one star shining through it."

Presently the white gate fell back with creaking hinges, and a tall figure came stalking up the gravel-path.

How well Barbara knew the tall gaunt form, the rough overcoat, and shabby hat! No one but a pauper or a millionaire would have dared to wear such a hat or such a coat.

Her first impulse was to run out of the room and tell the servant to say that no one was at home. Then came the thought of the sick mother, the long sleep of weakness up stairs. He might be useful, perhaps, the rich man. He would send hot house grapes and wine, and if wine, very likely, if he knew of Mrs. Trevornock's illness.

"God help me!" thought Bab, despairingly. "Poverty is teaching me to be odiously mean."

She met the parlor window, and Amelia ushered in Mr. Penruth, with as much style as can be expected of a maid-of all-work at nine pounds a year.

"I am sorry to hear of your mother's illness," he said, as he took Barbara's cold hand in his, looking at her closely, as much as to say, "I wonder if you have changed your mind since you sent that letter."

"Yes, she is very ill, sighed Bab. "My father and I are full of anxiety."

She sat down by the dull, neglected fire, and waited for her visitor to talk. She had nothing to say to him. It was no point upon which they could sympathise; no love or liking which they had in common. "You have good medical advice, I hope."

"We have the best doctor in the neighborhood."

"And does he consider the case serious?"

Very serious," answered Barbara, trying to keep back her tears.

"Is there anything I can do?" asked Mr. Penruth. "I shall esteem it a privilege if I can be of any use."

"You are very good. No there is nothing," began Barbara. And then, remembering pride, and her duty, "Yes, there is one thing. Once, when I was ill, you were kind enough to send me some of your flowers. If you would send my father a few grapes, I think she would like them. They are difficult to get here."

I will send you some of the best Covent Garden can produce every day. And flowers and perhaps you would like some flowers for the sick-room?"

A thousand thanks."

You can rely on my discretion.

Have you seen your father lately?" said Mr. Penruth.

No; I confess my fear. He does not care to see us, and we only go to him when we are obliged."

He is a curious man," said Mr. Penruth slowly, as if it were gradually dawning on him that Mr. Trevornock was not to be in his domestic relations.

Very curious."

You must have had a hard life in such a father."

I never felt the hardness till my mother began to sink under her burden. She and my sister and I have been very happy together. The sting of poverty never touched us."

But now that your mother is ill, you to find out the hardship of poverty. I will you not exchange poverty for and comfort? I know that I have to offer you a settlement that would you to provide comfortably for your and sister for the rest of their lives."

Barbara shuddered.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS WERE READ

From J. McDonald, asking for the use of the City Hall for the purpose of a walking match. Not granted.

From A. Hudson, asking for correction on assessment. Finance and Assessment.

From A. Harvey, asking payment for watering the streets during 1877. Finance Committee.

From Mrs. Hickey, asking remission of taxes. Finance and Assessment.

From Geo. White, asking that he be placed in a similar position to Mr. Gibbs, of Port Hope, with reference to a house in starting a bolt and nut factory. Finance and Assessment.

From T. Higginbotham and 20 others, asking that a plank sidewalk be laid down on Osborne street in front of their residences. Board of Works.

From Z. Wasin, tendering his resignation as Chief Engineer of the Fire Brigade, and asking that his successor be appointed from among the members of the Brigade. Fire, Water and Gas.

From John Evans and others, asking that a sidewalk be laid down on the south side of Gray street, in front of their residence, in No. 5 Ward. Board of Works.

FINANCE.

Ald. Pritchard presented the report of the Finance Committee, recommending payment of a number of accounts amounting in all to $5,075 58; also recommending the favorable consideration of the Fredericton, N. B., Council be endorsed by the Council, and that a petition be drawn up by the City Solicitor asking that it be made compulsory for Government officials to send their children to school. The resolution of the Committee was carried, recommending a conference with the East Middlesex Agricultural Society, and the selection made by the Committee to be submitted to the ratepayers.

On motion the report was committed, the Mayor in the chair.

Ald. Murray moved that the clause relating to Mr. Gibbs be struck out. If Mr. Gibbs had to come to London he might as his own canoe he might come.

Ald. Buckle thought it would be only to encourage all proposed manufacturers.

The clause passed.

Ald. Pritchard moved, seconded by Ald. Skinner, that the estimates be referred back to the Engineer with instructions to reduce the expenditure and estimates for permanent buildings.]

Ald. Buckle moved that the clause be adopted.

Ald. Cowan seconded.

Ald. Pritchard said that, in moving his amendment, he did so from a feeling that if any change of Exhibition Grounds was to be made that permanent buildings should be erected. Mr. Tracy had been interviewed by members and urged to prepare estimates for cheap buildings. The Toronto buildings were frame, but it should be remembered that they were built in sixty days. There would be sufficient time for the preparation of estimates for permanent buildings.

Ald. Buckle said that the estimates submitted by Ald. Pritchard had been drawn up by no unknown person, and one totally incompetent for the task.

Ald. Pritchard—"Quite as reliable as the man who offered $1,000 to build the grounds."

Ald. Buckle believed that the buildings could be built for the Engineer's figures, and a handsome balance left to decrease the taxation of the city.

Ald. Murray favored Ald. Pritchard's motion.

Ald. Jones said the matter was premature, and the Council would not be committed by Ald. Pritchard's resolution.

Ald. Scarrow believed in the correctness of the City Engineer's estimates. Practical utility should be aimed at rather than show.

Ald. Skinner, in contrasting the Toronto buildings with those required for London, drew laughter, which was only equalled by the extreme amusement with which he discovered that she, instead of being willowy of figure, just eighteen, with warm golden hair, an opalescent complexion, and blue eyes like liquid lakes, was six feet one if she was an inch, fifty two if she was a day, weighing three and-twenty stone if she did not know, and with no warm pallow or any other hair of her own."

LUCAN.

Mr. Irvine, Q. C., of Hamilton, has been taking measurements, plans, diagrams &c of all and sundry, the houses, roads, &c., in connection with the Biddulph case. Mr. Peters, P. L. S., of London, a carefully made all the measurements between the scenes of the tragedy.

The Barbour and Barbour arbitration at the Craig and Lucan, where the alternate sessions are held, still works its weary way.

The result of the Lucan Vestry, viz.:—Jno. Fox and W. E. Stanley wardens, B. Stanley and R. Fox delegates. St. James Vestry, viz.:—J. W. Evans and Wm. Carter wardens, Dr. Sutton and Jas. Evans delegates. Parkhill Vestry, J. P. Owens clerk, T. L. Rogers and C. H. Armitage wardens, Messrs. Cunningham and Aitkin delegates.

Mr. Robt. Boyd, a respectable Biddulph farmer, aged 65 years, dropped dead suddenly last Tuesday.

D. Lynch, a lunatic, escaped from a house in Crediton and made his way to the woods. He took a scythe with him. He may make it interesting yet for his pursuers.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION.—The following is the result of the regular quarterly examination of the pupils of S. S. No. 6, London Township, taught by G. S. Weir:—5th Class—1st, Annie McDougall; 2nd, Wm. Burnett; 3rd, Geo. Cheney. 4th Class—1st, Thos. McDougall; 2nd, George Dann; 3rd, Thos. Goulding. 3rd Class—1st, Alfred Wood; 2nd, Maggie Sinclair; 3rd, Lizzie Sinclair. 2nd Class—1st, Thos. CANADIAN ITEMS.

—The adjourned sitting of the Supreme Court takes place on Friday, and the regular session opens on the 4th of May.

—Hon. T. N. Gibbs' appointment to the Senate has again given rise to speculations as to who shall be the next Lieutenant-Governor.

—Messrs. Watson & McArthur, of Montreal, are making arrangements to commence the manufacture of wall paper on a large scale there.

—Mr. French, proprietor of the Royal Opera House, Toronto, is convinced that there is a suspicion of foul play connected with the disappearance of Mr. M. Koro, the lessee. The police will be asked to investigate.

—Four of the first twenty of the Canadian team have refused to go to Wimbledon. Their places will be filled by men in waiting. The National Rifle Association has shipped a number of Henri-Martini rifles for the use of the Canadian team. The date of sailing has not yet been fixed.

—Charles J. Shaw was arrested in Toronto, yesterday, on a charge of swindling. It is alleged that he is in the habit of inserting advertisements in papers offering to secure situations, and when applications are made he writes to each applicant telling him he is accepted, but as a guarantee that he will take the position he must advance $5. This, of course, ends the correspondence.

—In Thorold yesterday morning, as two men were returning from a wake, they observed flames issuing from the roof of the Sligo House, on Front street. The men burst in the door and awoke the children just in time to save their lives. The parents were away from home at the time. There was nothing saved. Mr. Carr does not know whether his policy of insurance had expired or not. The fire is supposed to have originated from the chimney.

—While a farmer named Langevin, of St. Barnaby, was crossing to St. Hyacinthe on Saturday with a load of produce, the ice broke and the man, horse and sleigh went through. A man named Duffern ran to the rescue and was drowned, while Langevin was saved. Still another drowning case is reported at St. Pie, where a man named Blatchry went through the ice. Those with the drowning of the man, Valliquette, while taking out the remains of the man added refer to the occasion.

—A curious case came before the Toronto Police Magistrate yesterday morning, in which a Swede named Christian Anderson was accused of attempting to commit suicide. Anderson spoke very broken English, but as nearly as could be made out, he said that while travelling in Canada a row took place in the cars near Belleville, between some French and Irish. In the fracas he was badly beaten, and the threat held out that he would be hanged by them upon his arrival at Toronto. This so unnerved him that he attempted to cut his throat. Dr. Richardson, the jail surgeon, reports the man to be insane, and he was remanded for a week to allow of an investigation.

—The Forsyth and Baldwin iron mines, in the county of Gaspe, have been leased to Mr. Pew, of New York, for about $100,000. The Baldwin mining property comprises 240 acres, and the Forsyth 70 acres, with forty buildings upon a portion of it. The purchases are subject to the contract entered into between Mr. Thompson and Chorolegee & Co., of Niles, Ohio, for 15,000 ton annually for five years, upon which a royalty of $1 a ton is paid. It is the intention of Mr. Pew to begin operations at the mines at once. Smelting furnaces are being got into operation. Twenty thousand tons of ore have been sold to a Cleveland firm at $9.25 per ton, and will be taken off the Baldwin mine and shipped by water via Ringston and the lakes.

AFFAIRS IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, March 24.—Since I last wrote you there has been little to record of note in this city.

The railway to Harbor Grace has assumed a form, so that we can discern the progress of the work. Yesterday the committee of the Upper and Lower Houses of Assembly will go through the whole subject under consideration. How it will be built, but I cannot think it will ever pay. Conception Bay needs from it has perhaps 500 vessels large and small sizes. It is not thought their fish over the railway will benefit them. A worthy legal gentleman said a few days ago as a joke, "That the people of Harbor Grace could come over here, do their shopping, and return home at night." True, but as for anything else, I cannot see what further good a railway to the Bay would do.

The Supply Bill is now passing through the House, and will soon be passed, as there has been no much work done in two days, as formerly it has taken four weeks. The 15 per cent. remains upon the same goods as last year.

The Fishery Inspector has been communicated with in England, to investigate the fishery, gather information for the Government, and give all possible aid to the better working of this, the only staple industry of Newfoundland. As far as I can gather from the opinion is adverse to the officer, a Mr. Pryer, recommended by the eminent Frank Buckland. He sets some $480 a year, and had taken place. He favored the adoption of the report.

Ald. Browne wanted the people to express an opinion on the subject.

In closing the debate, Ald. Pritchard said there was sufficient time to secure estimates for permanent buildings, and then a choice could be made between the two. In the point of insurance, it would pay to have permanent buildings.

The amendment of Ald. Pritchard was carried on the following division:—

Yeas—Hiscox, Cowan, Rooks, Milroy, Glass, Browne, Wilson, Boyd, Scarrow, Buckle, Wyatt, Sharman, and Peel.

Nays—Ald. Pritchard, Muirhead, Thompson, Murray, and Skinner.

Ald. Cowan moved in amendment to the last clause that a by-law installing the following lamps be passed and submitted at the next meeting:—Montserat farm; Hutchinson property, in Kensington; Graydon's property; S. Kent's property, and Salter's Grove. From these sites the citizens could make a choice. He believed that all possible information should be supplied to the ratepayers. Many conditions were involved in the change.

Ald. Scarrow said that inasmuch as other parties than the ratepayers of London were concerned in the property a change, it was necessary that an amicable arrangement should be arrived at. He therefore moved the adoption of the report.

Ald. Jones believed if the present site was purchased that the Exhibition Grounds would never be sold. He believed the Middlesex Agricultural Association would be content with any site near them. He favored the Kensington site.

Ald. Wilson looked upon the present site as the best yet offered.

Ald. Glass pointed out that the Kensington site was too high in price, while the others were quite as suitable. He could not vote for the sale of the Exhibition Grounds until some definite plan for the disposal of the surplus had been resolved upon.

Ald. Pritchard could not see any reason why the Council should dictate to the ratepayers what sites they were to vote upon. He moved that the matter be deferred until the East Middlesex Agricultural Association has been consulted.

Ald. Muirhead seconded.

Ald. Milroy suggested that the Council inspect the several sites and make a choice of any four or five. These should then be submitted to the ratepayers.

Ald. Browne favored Ald. Milroy's suggestion.

The Economist says:—"The rate of discount for bank bills, sixty days to three months, is 2½ to 2⅝; for trade bills, sixty days to three months, 3. On the Stock Exchange dealings have been very limited. Gloom prevailed over the result of the elections, because, for a time, the Stock Exchange has been Conservative. We may be sure this will not last long. The markets closed with some appearance of firmness, except for water stocks. American bonds revived sharply on easier money in New York. Nearly all American railways have been in favor, the chief security being in Atlantics upon the final success of reconstruction, but the Union Pacific Railway are 5 lower. Canadian railways received a decided impetus, and Grand Trunk securities of all classes advanced materially."

The Sugar Question.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—In your issue of Saturday, under the heading "The Sugar Question," your reporter has evidently misapprehended my remarks. I had no idea of contrasting the Tilley Tariff and that of the old Government. After a few general remarks about the sugar question, I spoke of the cost of raw sugar at the place of production being 30 to 35 per cent. higher to-day than it was under the old tariff; so much for the Mackenzie-Cartwright regime; I should be paying more for our sugar to-day than we did a year ago. This is borne out by reports from West India markets. Raw sugar was quoted last year at $3.50 to $3.60, whereas to-day it is quoted at $4.50 to $4.87. The question I would discuss is, I suppose, is, "Does the consumer pay more for sugar under the new tariff than under the old." This is easily answered. Any wholesale or retail merchant knows that 5-day he is selling raw sugar at an advance of 9 to 10 per cent. on last year's prices, and you have only to deduct this from the cost of the article to-day in the West Indies, and the consumer will see that he is a gainer by about 20 per cent. The same applies to refined sugars. We have a much better article made in our own country, and though the price is from 10 to 15 per cent. higher than it was last year, yet when the extra cost of the material is taken into consideration, the consumer is really a gainer by at least 15 per cent. Now the N. P. has nothing whatever to do with the cost of raw sugar, and if any one will look squarely at all the facts of the case, he will find that the extra 10 per cent. put on the American refined sugar is 20 loss to the consumer, while it is a very material advantage to our country, protecting as it does our refineries. The remarks about not having a choice of the threat held out to hang the facts, for although we are debarred from the American markets by the extra 10 per cent. on their sugars, yet we have the English market open to us, and large quantities of sugar are still imported from there by our wholesale merchants.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

RUPTURES

SPRINGLESS TRUSSES AND SUPPORTERS.

PROF. G. W. HUTCHINSON,

of Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y., will again visit as follows:—

LOCKPORT, Daily House, April 6 and 8.
LONDON—Revere House, April 7, 8 and 9.
CLEVELAND—Royal Hotel, April 13 and 14.

Remember, scheme? A worthy legal gentleman said a few days ago as a joke, "That the people of Harbor Grace could come over here, do their shopping, and return home at night." True, but as for anything else, I cannot see what further good a railway to the Bay would do.

The Supply Bill is now passing through the House, and will soon be passed, as there has been no much work done in two days, as formerly it has taken four weeks. The 15 per cent. remains upon the same goods as last year.

The Fishery Inspector has been communicated with in England, to investigate the fishery, gather information for the Government, and give all possible aid to the better working of this, the only staple industry of Newfoundland. As far as I can gather from the opinion is adverse to the officer, a Mr. Pryer, recommended by the eminent Frank Buckland. He sets some $480 a year, and had taken place. He favored the adoption of the report.

Ald. Browne wanted the people to express an opinion on the subject.

In closing the debate, Ald. Pritchard said there was sufficient time to secure estimates for permanent buildings, and then a choice could be made between the two. In the point of insurance, it would pay to have permanent buildings.

The amendment of Ald. Pritchard was carried on the following division:—

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, April 6—1 a.m.—Probabilities—For the Lower Lakes, partly cloudy, stationary or lower temperature.

PASSED.—The many friends of Mr. John Barnett, jun., and Mr. Daniel Young, students of Mr. J. D. O'Neil, veterinary surgeon, of this city, will be glad to learn that they have passed the final examination of the Ontario Veterinary College in Toronto.

ILLNESS OF MRS. DALTON.—Many of our citizens will regret to hear that Mrs. J. T. Dalton (nee Miss Sallie Holman) is dangerously ill at Ottawa. She had been ailing all last week and was unable to play on Saturday night, and on Sunday night her physicians were very much alarmed at the symptoms.

FOR WINNIPEG.—The Great Western Railway will run a special through passenger train for Winnipeg and the Northwest this (Tuesday) evening, leaving Paris at five o'clock. The fact that it will be in charge of Mr. Patterson, their Paris town agent, is a sufficient guarantee that the comfort and well-being of the passengers will be properly attended to while en route. This is the sixth party sent over the G. W. R. since the 1st of March.

COUNTY MAGISTRATE'S COURT.—Before Squire Peters, yesterday, G. Page, of West Nissouri, was assessed $5 and $12 costs for assaulting Hutchins Reedy, at a church choir practice, one day last week. C. Quick, of Westminster, was fined $20 and costs for breach of the liquor law. James Faulkner was acquitted on a similar charge, but on being acquitted was re-summoned on another allegation. He will appear in due course.

INVERAL SESSIONS.—Before His Honor Judge Elliot yesterday John Cawfield, of Enfield, was charged by Laughlin Lutch, of the same township, with the larceny of three hens, three pieces of stove piping, one wheelbarrow and one rock cake. The prosecutor missed the articles some days ago and having procured a search warrant they were found on the premises of the prisoner. He was arrested and on being brought before Squires Campbell and Elliot was committed for trial. He pleaded guilty and will come up for sentence on Saturday.

POLICE COURT POINTS.—Before His Worship the Police Magistrate yesterday an old man named John Peel was committed to jail for twenty-one days in default of a fine of $2 for drunkenness. Some boys were charged with annoying residents in the vicinity of the Chapter House. Henry Donnelly was committed to jail for twenty-one days in default of a fine imposed in Don Jail. William Coyne was bailed out by his father Henry Stewart was fined $2, costs enlarged. William Cavanaugh was fined $1, or in default to be imprisoned for twenty-one days.

A LARGE BUSINESS.—Nearly 500 excursionists, including a party of 60 from Hall, Jax, went west over the Michigan Central Railway on Friday night. The Michigan Central is just now doing the heaviest emigrant business in its history. Most of the travellers, says the Detroit Post, come from Canada, and intend to settle in the far North-west. Most of them are experienced farmers, and their settlement in the Dakota and Western territories will prove of immense value to that section of the country. It is believed that the influx of emigrants will continue in the same ratio for at least three months longer.

GET HIS FOOT.—A young man named Robert Eggbutt met with an accident at Mr. James Cowan's hardware store, on Saturday afternoon, which will lay him up for some time. He was in the act of coming down a flight of stairs, and as he reached within a few steps of the bottom jumped, alighting against a scythe that was standing in the corner. The force of the sudden fall cut through his boot and terribly lacerated his foot. He was at once placed in a vehicle and conveyed homewards, but had not gone far before he fainted from loss of blood. The wound is a very severe one, and it is feared look-jaw may result.

TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY.—Messrs. Manville & Brown sold at their rooms on Saturday afternoon the following property, belonging to the estate of the late Robert Parkinson:—Farm, containing 90 acres, lot No. 7, township of London, for $65 per acre, to Mr. A. Parkinson. Farm, 50 acres, lot No. 18, in the township of London, to Mr. James Biggs, at $60 per acre. Park lots Nos. 34 and 36 in concession B, township of London, to Mr. A. Parkinson, for $425. Park lot No. 20, 3rd concession London, for $410, to Joseph Hitchcliffe. Dwelling house and two lots in London East, to A. Parkinson, for $400. Lot No. 4, north side of Piccadilly street, to Mr. James Slater, for $960. Lot No. 4, south side of York street, for $87 per foot, to Jas. Slater, Esq. Lot No. 3, on the south side of York street, at $39 per foot, to James Slater, Esq.

LOCAL NOTICES.

REAL ESTATE SALE.—The fine property, containing thirty acres, with fine brick house, orchard and small privilege, opposite the Ladies' College, will be offered for sale to the highest bidder at Scanlon's auction rooms, 195 Dundas street, this (Tuesday), the 6th inst. It is seldom such fine property is put on the market.

Why will any of our readers visit Detroit we advise them, by all means, to call at Mabley's, on Woodward avenue, where you will see the largest clothing store in the West. While their prize some of the goods, and you will be astonished at their good quality and cheapness. You will be welcome though you do not wish to buy, and will be shown through the establishment by any one of the many clerks.

SARSAPARILLA.—The facility with which spurious medicines have been palmed off upon the public is apt to impair confidence in genuine articles. We can, however, assure our readers, that in Wm. Johnston & Co's excellent preparation of Sarsaparilla, they will suffer no disappointment. It is the preparation of a practical chemist, and we are bold to say unrivaled in its soothing and efficacious influence on the blood. Such an article, at this season of a year, when the blood needs purifying, is indispensable.—Detroit Tribune, 1879.

"EVANGELINE."—"The Photograph Party" in the shivering harlequin, the name of which heads this notice, appears at the Opera House in this city this (Tuesday) evening. The Rochester Herald says of them:—"The Photograph Party" is a comic opera troupe, who give us a new burlesque with new jokes and a fresh supply of merriment. The artists in the party have all excellent voices. In addition to this, they are all excellent actors and actresses. The following persons are in the cast:—Angie Schott, Harrison Millard, J. E. Henshaw, James Vincent, Louise Holbrook, Miss Alice Henderson, Miss Charlotte Hutchings, May Ten Broeck. Vincent does the lone fisherman, and makes the most of it. He well deserved the applause bestowed upon him. Charlotte Hutchings has one of the most clear, musical, ringing voices we have heard this season. The dancing note reflects great credit upon Boyle and Gilson. The piece is well mounted, is full of new jokes, new songs, new dances and new nonsense. It is made up of gatherings generalities, and contains a sufficient account of variety to please all tastes.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Board of Education monthly meeting this evening.

Hon. John Carling, M. P., left for Ottawa yesterday to attend his Parliamentary duties.

The Water Commissioners meet this afternoon at three o'clock instead of to-morrow evening.

Mr. L. McLean, of Tilsonburg, has been appointed a Police Magistrate for the County of Oxford.

Mr. Nathaniel Currie, jun., son of the Reeve of Glencoe, has gone to Minnesota to engage in farming.

Mr. John Kelly, son of Mr. Patrick Kelly, of Westminster, is able to be about again after a lengthy illness.

The Forest City Quoiters hold their annual meeting at Bawthorn's Hotel this evening, when new officers will be chosen.

The Hamilton Times is probably somewhat erratic in stating that the Asylum in that city opened at "one o'clock in the morning."

The infant son of Mr. W. J. Ward, of Arkona, recently turned over a bowl of hot lard from a table upon his face, and was badly scalded.

Mr. J. W. Fox, of Wheatley, County of Essex, has purchased a 40-horse power engine from Mr. Geo. White, of this city, for his grist mill.

Mr. George G. McCormick, of this city, leaves to-day for New York, en route to Great Britain, where he will sojourn for about three months.

The Lilliputian Opera Company passed through London yesterday afternoon on their way to Petrolea. The little people were the observed of all observers while on the streets, and at the G. W. R platform.

Mr. W. H. Firth, the G. W. R. Passenger Agent, of Detroit, celebrated his 37th birthday on Saturday, and was overwhelmed with gifts, including a diamond ring, two boxes of cigars, a volume of Pentecost's Sermons, a black and tan dog, and soforth.

Between fifty and sixty men were employed by Street Commissioner Owen, yesterday, cleaning the business portions of Richmond and Dundas streets. An excellent job was made, and it is to be hoped the refuse will be carted away before the middle of summer.

The London and Sun Mutual Life Insurance Companies have spreaded the Wright (Sandwich) insurance case, in which the Ontario Court of Appeal gave judgment in plaintiff's favor. The principal is $10,000, costs already incurred $6,000, and accumulated interest $3,000.

Mr. W. K. Muir, of Detroit, a gentleman well-known to many Londoners, has just returned from a trip to Florida, and is quite enthusiastic over his experience, and thinks nothing in the way of a pleasure trip exceeds a visit there between December and March.

His Worship Mayor Campbell leaves tonight on a trip to Winnipeg and takes $6 000 worth of manufactured goods with him, all of which would have been supplied from St. Paul had it not been the National Policy. Mr. Campbell will be absent ten or twelve days.

Mary Ann Minnis, a girl eighteen years of age, visited Detroit on Saturday in search of her younger sister, fifteen years of age, who left the home in Lambton in company with a sailor named Donald Paterson, with whom she intended to live as his wife. She was not found.

The "A B C Railway and Steamboat Travellers' Guide" is a monthly publication, of which we have received the first number. The proprietor says he will endeavor to make this the most perfect guide published in Canada, and, judging from the initial number, he is endeavoring to keep faith with the public.

Marvin Knowlton was arrested at the instance of Mr. S. Hunter, yesterday afternoon, for being drunk and dangerous. He was remanded to jail until the 12th inst. No one in London has more encouragement than Mr. Knowlton to continue in the right path. His sense of gratitude may be judged from the manner in which he conducts himself.

CHAPTER HOUSE.

Adjourned Vestry Meeting and the Annual Appointments.

The adjourned Vestry meeting in connection with the Chapter House was held last night. Very Rev. Dean Boomer presiding.

The Churchwardens submitted a most satisfactory financial statement, showing the receipts during the year to have been $1,536.85. The liabilities, of which $175 have been paid off during the year, now amount to $666 21, and there is a balance on hand of $200 towards their further reduction. They regretted having this week received $63 from Mrs. Boomer, on behalf of the Ladies' Aid Association.

Judge Davis moved, seconded by Rev. Canon Innes, that a vote of thanks be tendered to the retiring Churchwardens. Carried.

Mr. Danks was then elected People's Warden, on motion of Col. Shanly, seconded by Mr. L. Moss, and the Very Rev. Dean Boomer appointed Mr. Cox as his Warden.

The following gentlemen were then appointed Sidesmen:—Mr. George Cox, jr., Mr. W. H. Rooks, Mr. W. Tambin, Mr. Cousins, Mr. Shuckbotham, W. H. Burwell and Mr. Church.

A vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Boomer and the ladies who so zealously labored for towards the liquidation of debt on the Chapter House.

The meeting then adjourned.

Huron College.

The following resolution was passed unanimously at the Port Dover vestry meeting, in reference to the services of Mr. Turnbull, one of the students of the above Divinity College, on Monday, the 29th March last, the Rev. W. B. Ewart in the chair:—Moved by Dr. Walker, seconded by Mr. L. Skey, and resolved unanimously, that this vestry desires to express its appreciation of the services of Mr. Turnbull, who has assisted the Rector for the past four months in ministering to the spiritual wants of this parish, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mr. Turnbull. (True copy.) A. BAYNESLY, Warden.

ONTARIO VETERINARIES.—The following students of the Ontario Veterinary College have been awarded diplomas:—R. Brenton, Belleville; A. Bell, Sharpton; W. Burt, Simcoe; J. Burnett, London; G. Dunphy, Salford; G. Gontier, Islington; P. Z. Cole, Hamilton, Alabama, U. S.; J. B. Frost, Pennsylvania, U. S; F. L. Groff Ohio, U. S.; H. G Hawley, Brantford; Thomas Meredith, Jamestown, N. Y.; J. Loughman, Montreal; B. B. Page, Illinois, U. S.; P. Stevenson, Aurora; R. Riddle, Cobourg; D. E. McFadden, Allanford; U. Springer, Waterloo; C. P. Smith, St. Mary's; J. Taylor, St. Catharines, J. F. Whitehead, Dolcaire; B Way, Belleville; L. J. Severcold, Ohio, U. S.; P. Shallicl, Ohio, U. S.; E. P. Westell, Arkona; D. Young, London. Primary—G Bell, Westbrook. G. Howell, Carlow; J. Donnelly, Palmerston. M C. P. Smith, of St. Mary's, took the first prize in chemistry, physiology and materia medica, and the gold medal for the best families' case, is for those who heard it to judge; it was certainly a beautiful melody. After this, Bamenyi appeared in his third number, the 21st and 24th Caprices of Paganini, with marvellous brilliancy, eliciting a furore of applause. He responded, after repeatedly bowing acknowledgment, with the ever welcome "Carnival di Venice," which created a fresh outburst of enthusiasm, when he played "The Hymn of Liberty." By this time the audience were aroused to the highest pitch of admiration, by the delicious harmonies produced, and greeted each successive number with an increasing measure of applause. As a fourth encore Remenyi played "God Save the Queen," which concluded one of the most delightful concerts ever given in this city. None can resist the charm of these matchless performances, so perfect are the most difficult intricacies, so alluring and sympathetic the wonderful strains evoked from his instrument. The man seems thoroughly merged in his theme, and displays none of the self consciousness and affectations which often mar very superior work in other performers. We trust that the large house and warm reception accorded Remenyi last night will encourage him to pay us another visit, when we are sure the welcome will be not less cordial.

MECALLIC CASKETS.—As another evidence of the beneficial results of the National Policy we may be permitted to state that a Company with a capital of $25 000 has been formed at Ridgetown, in the county of Kent, for the purpose of manufacturing metallic caskets by a patent process. The caskets will have glass tops, sides and ends, and the galvanized iron work will be done by Messrs. McBride & Co., of this city. The retail price of these caskets will be $40. The Company comprises the following Directors:—Messrs. C. E. Saxon, Chas. Baker, Jas. Grant, Z. Watson, Wm. McMasters, Jos. Askins, and John Elliott, and the officers chosen are:—Mr. C. E. Saxon, President; Mr. W. Mills, Secretary, and Mr. J. Elliott, the Treasurer. The Company will employ from fifty to sixty hands. We trust the energetic Directors will reap a rich harvest from their enterprise.

HELLMUTH LADIES' COLLEGE.—On Sunday last the new pedal organ, the gift of the Bishop of Huron, was used for the first time in St. Anne's Chapel, and added greatly to the beauty and interest of the service. The organ has a compass of 27 pedals and 10 stops, and is remarkably sweet in tone.

HOVEY TO BE EXTRADITED.

Judge Hughes Gives Judgment in His Case.

The Prisoner Held Guilty of Forgery and all the Other Charges.

At the Court House, St. Thomas, His Honor Judge Hughes, in Chambers, gave judgment in the Hovey extradition. The trials, it will be remembered, have occupied several weeks, repeated adjournments having taken place. The evidence was fully published from time to time, and was to the effect that L. Cooke Hovey while City Clerk of Urbana, Ohio, forged bonds to the amount of $50,000, and altered the city records and documents, authorizing the issue of $15,000 worth of bonds, to suit the fraudulent issue he placed upon the market. The evidence was chiefly the depositions of the residents of the locality concerned, and was in support of an indictment for forgery and the uttering of forged paper. The falsification of the municipal records stood alone on the evidence taken at St. Thomas. His Honor, in giving judgment, reviewed the case, and stated that he considered it his duty to hold the indictment of the Grand Jury of Champaign County, Ohio, as an authority sufficient to warrant the extradition of Hovey on the charge of forgery and uttering forged documents, as the crime specified come clearly under the terms of the treaty for the extradition of fugitives from justice. He declined to go into the technicalities and minutiæ of the evidence and crime, as he held that a proper court would look into them in Ohio. He considered that the Grand Jury had impartially heard the evidence and decided upon its merits, while he further considered that the finding of the said jury was strongly upheld by the corroborative evidence adduced by the prosecution. He refused to admit that because the bonds issued and forged by the prisoner were not valid on their face, that the crime of affixing the names of other persons than himself, with the intention to mislead and defraud, was any the less a forgery, and he held that such conduct would, in the Province of Ontario, be punishable as forgery by imprisonment in the penitentiary. He felt it incumbent upon him, under these circumstances, to report the prisoner as liable to extradition on the charges of forging and uttering, and would commit him to prison awaiting the action of the Governor-General. On the charge of falsifying the records, he considered the evidence sufficient to warrant a committal, and he would report to the Governor-General that the prisoner should be extradited for that offence. He then proceeded to make out three warrants for the prisoner—1st, for forgery; 2nd, for uttering forged bonds; 3rd, for falsifying the documents authorizing him to issue $15,000 worth of bonds in order to mislead enquiries, and cause a further fraudulent issue.

Upon these warrants the prisoner was re-committed to jail. His counsel, Mr. A. J. B. Macdonald, gave notice of an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench.

ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION.

The Personnel of the Board—Three Western Men Chosen.

The arrangements for the appointment of an Agricultural Commission by the Government of Ontario are now nearly completed, and the following information will doubtless be interesting to the public:—The Commission will probably be composed of the following persons:—Hon. B. C. Wood, Provincial Treasurer and Commissioner of Agriculture; Thomas Hollinghurst, M.P.P., Stanley; J. J. Aylesworth, Vice-President of the Agriculture and Arts Association; Wm Brown, Professor of Agriculture at the Agricultural College, Guelph; John Watson, Ayr; Thomas Stock, Waterdown; Andrew Wilson, Maitland; John Dryden, M.P.P., Brooklin; Wm. Saunders, President of the Entomological Society, London; Eli H. Hilborn, Master of the Do minion Grange, Uxbridge; J. P. Wiser, M.P.P., Prescott; John McMillan, Hullett, County Huron; Wm. Whitelaw, Guelph; Richard M. Gibson, Ilderton, County Middlesex; Francis Malcolm, Innerkip, County Oxford; Edward Bryne, Burgess, A. H. Dymond, Toronto. The Hon. Mr. Wood will be the Chairman of the Commission, and the duties of communication between the Commissioners and the Government, and of course exercise a controlling influence in all matters of importance. Mr. Dymond will discharge the more directly executive duties of the Commission, manage the correspondence, and record and keep the information collected, and conduct such portions of the enquiry as may from time to time demand his attention. The gentlemen will give their services gratuitously in the direct actual expenses only being paid.

The Remenyi Concert.

The great violinist, Remenyi, appeared for the first time in London at Victoria Hall, last night, before an audience composed of five or six hundred of our leading citizens; and to say that the concert was a success is but to convey a faint idea of the impression created. Each number performed by this noble artist was received with unbounded enthusiasm, the applause being of the most liberal and hearty character. Remenyi brought with him a great fame; his coming had been heralded with glowing accounts of his triumphs in both the Old World and the New, but few of the audience had been prepared for such a splendid treat as was afforded. Owing to the illness of one of the company, Mr. De Celle, he was unable to sing, but though Mr. De Celle was to be regretted, as the circumstance detracted from the variety of the programme, the omission was more than made up by the extra numbers contributed by Remenyi instead. The concert opened with a piano solo by Mr. Healy, who gave the music of Beethoven in a highly finished manner. Mrs. Emma Thurston next appeared in the aria "Non ti Sgomi" (Verdi), which was heartily encored, when she gave "Thine is my Heart." The appearance of the prima donna was greeted with rounds of applause. He pathetic rendering of the "Pastoris Fidelis" was, and, being enthusiastically encored, played Schubert's beautiful "Serenade," with exquisite delicacy of touch. Mr. Healy then gave another piano solo in place of one of the numbers set down for Mr. Deville, which was received with applause. Remenyi next solo was a selection of Hungarian melodies of his own arrangement, which created immense enthusiasm. He responded with a brilliant arrangement of "Auld Robin Gray" and "The Campbells are Coming," with inspiring effect. The performance elicited thunders of approbation, when Remenyi gave as a third encore one of his own masterly compositions, the "Value Noble." Mrs. Thurston next sung a favorite ballad, and, being encored, gave the audience a surprise in a new setting of "Home, Sweet Home," a recent composition, it is understood, of Remenyi himself, and sung for the first time last night. Whether the new air is likely to supplant the old familiar one, is for those who heard it to judge; it was certainly a beautiful melody. After this, Remenyi appeared in his third number, the 21st and 24th Caprices of Paganini, with marvellous brilliancy, eliciting a furore of applause. He responded, after repeatedly bowing acknowledgment, with the ever welcome "Carnival di Venice," which created a fresh outburst of enthusiasm, when he played "The Hymn of Liberty." By this time the audience were aroused to the highest pitch of admiration, by the delicious harmonies produced, and greeted each successive number with an increasing measure of applause. As a fourth encore Remenyi played "God Save the Queen," which concluded one of the most delightful concerts ever given in this city. None can resist the charm of these matchless performances, so perfect are the most difficult intricacies, so alluring and sympathetic the wonderful strains evoked from his instrument. The man seems thoroughly merged in his theme, and displays none of the self consciousness and affectations which often mar very superior work in other performers. We trust that the large house and warm reception accorded Remenyi last night will encourage him to pay us another visit, when we are sure the welcome will be not less cordial.

PACIFIC, $1,200.—To earn it up, six long years of bedridden sickness, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all of this expense was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters, taken by my wife. She has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it, for their benefit.—N. E. Farmer.

THE ASSIZES.

Opening To-day—The Biddulph Cases.

The Grand and Petit Jurors and Docket.

The semi-yearly Court of Assize in and for the city of London and county of Middlesex will open at the Court House, here, this afternoon, and the session promises to be one of the most important held in London for many years. It is expected that the trial of the members of the Biddulph Vigilance Committee, alleged to have murdered five of the Donnelly family in February last, will come before this Court. It has not as yet been divulged whether a change of venue will be asked for by the Crown authorities. The statement in an evening contemporary that the Crown officers have "now finally resolved to apply for a change of venue, and that Toronto has been selected," is purely speculative, so one of the Crown officers informed the writer last night. If a change of venue does take place, it is more likely the trial will come off at Brantford. But so far, nothing definite in regard to the matter has been resolved upon, and the intentions of the Crown authorities will not be made public unless a certain exigency arises to warrant action of the kind being taken. It is known, however, that if application is made by the Crown, the Counsel for the prisoners will strenuously oppose it, and adduce strong reasons to Chief Justice Wilson in support of their contention. It remains to be seen what course will be taken in the premises.

The Grand Jury list is as follows:—Wm. Elliot, Westminster; Thomas Brenton, do.; Joseph Cowbelick, Biddulph; Jas. Campbell, Westminster; Trafford Campbell, East Williams; John Dagg, Biddulph; Samuel D. Edwards, Caradoc; Thomas Faulds, do.; Joseph Frank, North Dorchester; Erskin Gibson, Delaware; Henry George, North Dorchester; Malcolm Galbraith, Ekfrid; Philip Littlejohn, do.; Francis Lewis, London Township; Joseph Marshall, do; Donald McKenzie, do.; Archibald McPherson, city; Thomas McDonough, do.; J. R. Miskimmick, do.; Thomas Milton, London East; Robert Phillips, Metcalf; Hosea Purdy, Moss; Wilmot Swaisland, Glenoe; Joseph Wilson, Strathroy.

The criminal calendar is as follows:—

The Queen vs. James Carroll, John Kennedy, Thomas Ryder, John Purtell, Martin McLoughlin and James Ryder—murder.

The Queen vs. Alfred Welsh—larceny.

The petit jury list comprises the following persons:—John Arnaud, Adelaide; Geo. Bishop, jun.; J. W. Busbridge, Westminster; R. A. Barton, do.; David Bogue, Westminster; Jesse Brock, do.; Henry Bates, West Williams; John Dearness, Biddulph; John Drake, Caradoc; David Daniels, Parkhill; John Farthing, Caradoc; James Faulds, Dorchester; Peter Grant, Alfred Craig; Jas. Gentleman, Ekfrid; Joseph Howe, Caradoc; John L. Hill, do.; William Harris, Delaware; S. W. Hows, North Dorchester; John Irwin, Lobo; Donald Johnson, do.; Francis Lewis, Township of London; Robert Lord, do.; Benj. Lawrance, do.; Malcolm Mc Donough, Lobo; Alex. McAlpine, do.; Wm. McLeod, Lucan; Andrew B. Horden, Township of London; Josiah Pedlar, McGillivray; Absalom Peters, do.; W. J. Reid, city; Wm. Richards, do.; John W. Roots, do.; Richard Smithrim, Metcalfe; Alex. London East School Trustees.

Regular Meeting Last Night—Head Master Eckert's Report—Accounts, Etc.

The regular monthly meeting of the London East School Trustees was held last night in the Town Hall, Mr. J. B. Laidlaw presiding, and present Messrs. McLeod, Allen, Ardell, Morrison and Lewis.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From J. G. Bluff, Treasurer of the village, explaining the reason for the delay in the payment of the teachers' salaries. Filed.

From Miss A. M. Oliphant, asking leave to resign. On motion of Mr. McLeod, a factory substitute was provided a satisfactory.

THE CLERKSHIP.

Mr. J. Ardell moved, seconded by Mr. J. Morrison, that Mr. Wm. Lewis be appointed Secretary. The resolution was carried unanimously.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were presented, found correct, and ordered to be paid:—Samuel Stewart, stove-pipe and labor, $2 98; F. A. O'Dell, two cords of pine wood, $7; James Busby, two brooms and one pail, 55c; Robert Ferguson, repairing locks, 75c; Morrison, screening coal, 50c; C. Lathorn, repairing pump at Anderson school, $2; H. A. Taylor & Co., Revised School Law, $11.25; A. Isaac, acting as Returning Officer and making Separate School list, $8.

HEAD MASTER'S REPORT.

The London East schools were reported open 21 days in the month of March; 793 names were registered, with an average of 674, as follows:—

	Mr.	Miss.	Average.
Mr. W. D. Eckert's room	80	64	68
Miss M. Hague's room	80	64	58
" H. B. Mackay's room	81	64	58
Mrs. E. E. Oliphant's room	86	70	59
Miss A. M. Oliphant's room	86	70	59
" J. Anderson's room	100	80	76
" E. Booth's room	67	61	57
" F. Gascon's room	74	60	50
" M. Eckert's room	74	60	50
" W. Egan's room	74	60	50

The following people paid non-resident fees for the month, viz.:—Lily Carneross, Rattie B. Woods, Carrie Carter, Grace Connor, J. Stuart, Fred. Stuart, Frank O'Neil, Frank Webb, Sarah Campbell, Wm. Winslow, C. H. and H. Stanfield, H. Newton, E. C. Matthews, C. Fassett, jr., and H. Page and W. Phillips. A number of our rooms are and have been nearly empty from the prevalence of measles in the village, which accounts for the low attendance for the month.

On motion of Mr. Ardell, seconded by Mr. Morrison, A. C. Decow was appointed to act as the substitute for Miss Oliphant during the latter's absence.

After the transaction of other business of minor importance the Board adjourned.

LONDON SHIPMENTS TO MANITOBA.—This morning, shortly after one o'clock, No. 27 freight train on the Great Western Railway left London en route to St. Boniface, with twenty-two cars, laden with general merchandise and emigrants' effects, the whole being under the supervision of Mr. Robert Patterson, the G. W. R. Manitoba emigrants agent, of Paris. The cars were from the following stations:—Brucefield 1, Wingham 2, Harrisburg (W. G. and B. Branch) 3, Centralia 4, Park's 5, and London 6. The latter comprised at least three cars of manufactured goods from London firms. Mr. John Campbell shipped to Mr. Alexander Calder, Winnipeg, 34 ex cars, 12 bush-boards, 18 waggon, 34 ex carts, 12 bush-boards, 18 waggon, 34 ex carts, 12 bush-boards, 18 waggon, 34 ex carts

THE BRITISH NEWS BUDGET.

Net Gain by the Liberals of 109 Seats.

THE OIL STILL EXPLOSION.

London, April 13.—An explosion, by which eleven persons were killed, occurred yesterday afternoon at Silvertown, near the North Woolrich at Oil Mills. The roof of the still was forced off and carried 140 yards. The still contained 2,000 gallons of oil. The damage will amount to several thousand pounds.

OBITUARY.

London, April 13.—Dr. Wm. Sharpey, an eminent medical professor and author, is dead; aged 78.

THE MISSING SHIP.

London, April 13.—The missing training ship Atalanta is a sister vessel of the Eurydice, which foundered off the Isle of Wight in '78 with 325 officers and seamen.

LIBERAL LEADERS.

It is reported that a formal consultation of Liberal leaders will be held in London on Thursday.

MORE LIBERAL GAINS.

London, April 13.—Wm. H. Gladstone, son of Wm. E. Gladstone, and G. W. Hastings have been elected to Parliament for Worcestershire East—a Liberal gain of two. J. O'Connor Power was re-elected, and Parnell elected for the County of Mayo—a Home Rule gain of one.

PROBABLE APPOINTMENTS.

London, April 13.—Lord Lytton's title will be Earl of Lytton and Viscount Knebworth.

Lord Morley is mentioned for the Viceroyalty of India, and Grant Duff for the Governorship of Madras.

It is reported that a baronetcy will be conferred on Beaconsfield, with the reversion to his brother.

THE MISSING ATALANTA.

The entire Channel squadron has been ordered to cruise to the Azores, thence to Bantry Bay, in search of the training ship Atalanta.

SPORTING.

London, April 13.—The race for the Newmarket biennial stake was won by Lord Falmouth's chestnut colt Apollo.

RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.

London, April 13.—The statement that the Ministry will resign immediately after the return of the Queen to England is confirmed by the fact that preparations were made to-day by members of the Ministry to vacate the official residences.

London, April 13—The net Liberal gain is now 109 seats.

The Daily News says:—"The announcement that a meeting of Liberal leaders will be held on Thursday is unfounded.

TROUBLE IN THE HOME RULE CAMP.

London, March 13.—Alexander Sullivan, elected for Louth county, declares his intention of resigning the seat because Callan headed the poll, defeating Kirk. All are Home Rulers. Sullivan charges that money was furnished by Lowther, Chief Secretary for Ireland, who was defeated at Cork city, to secure Callan's election. Sullivan will probably stand for Meath if Parnell sits for Mayo.

GONE OVER TO HER MAJESTY.

The Earl of Wemyss and March, father of Lord Elcho, died to-day, aged 84. Lord Elcho, who by death of his father is transferred to the House of Lords, leaves a vacancy in the Commons for Haddingtonshire, from which he was returned by the Conservatives. A new election will be held, and the Liberals now expect to win the seat.

The Times is informed that the report of the death of the Earl of Wemyss is unfounded.

SPECIAL CABLE NEWS.

London, Eng., April 13.—Monsignor Capel, the father at the Brompton Oratory, although in some financial difficulties, does not go to America as has been stated, but will remain here and fight his way out of shallow water.

The accounts from Madagascar are far from satisfactory; some English men-of-war go there immediately.

The various harbors in the East Indies are ordered to be placed in a position of security against any hostile intruder.

Dr. Branchi has arrived at Magdala with some costly presents for the Abyssinian king from the king of Italy.

Gladstone's essays published in the French language are only appreciated by a certain clique in Paris.

Constantinople, April 13.—The Sultan is determined to abstain from refreshment, internally as well as externally. The pay of all army, navy and civil officials is to be reduced forthwith.

Singapore, April 9.—Very serious accounts are received of the attitude the Mihadr is taking, not only against his neighbor in China but also Europeans. The Russian squadron was expected to arrive at their naval station in the north of Japan.

London, April 13.—The Scotland Yard detectives are keeping a watchful eye upon the Nihilists' personal movements here, and immediately report any individuals of the fraternity leaving the country to their detective confreres in St. Petersburg.

GERMANY.

A WELL-DEFINED RUMOR.

London, April 13.—A Berlin correspondent says much attention has been paid lately to the enormous increase of emigrants from Germany to England and America.

The National Zeitung states that from the 4th to the 11th of April 5,800 left Bremen. The emigrants come from all parts of Germany, and include many skilled workmen. This marked increase of emigration is evidently connected with the new army Bill, and outside very serious loss upon the country.

BISMARCK OPPOSES DISARMAMENT.

Berlin, April 13.—It is now understood that Prince Bismarck doubts the feasibility of the international disarmament project. The Prince fully indorses the suggestion to place all Europe on a peace basis, but looks forward to the strengthening of the Franco-Russian alliance in the success of the Liberal party in England, and for this reason does not favor any movement on the part of Germany leading to disarmament.

FUTURE REVEALED.

Berlin, April 13.—In the Reichstag yesterday the Bill repealing the duties on flag and other vegetable fibers, except cotton, passed the second reading.

THE COASTING TRADE.

The Bill prohibiting foreign vessels from engaging in the coasting trade of Germany, except where the privilege is accorded by treaty or Imperial ordinance, was read a first time.

FRANCE.

MURDER BY WHOLESALE.

Paris, April 13.—It has just been discovered that near Limoges a man killed his father's mistress and her four children.

BILLIARDS EXTRAORDINARY.

Paris, April 13.—The Bisson-Vignaux billiard match was continued this evening. Vignaux replaced his balls where they were yesterday, after his run of 651 points, and made 800 carooms more in one hour, scoring 1,451 points in all without releasing his cue. The match will continue tomorrow. Bisson did not have a chance to play to-night.

London, 13.—Special dispatches from Paris give prominence to the fact that Gambetta had an interview of two hours' duration with President Grevy on Monday.

SWEDEN.

DEFEAT OF THE ARMY BILL—RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.

Stockholm, April 12.—The Chamber of the Swedish Parliament rejected the Army Bill. The Ministry have resigned. The King charged Count Aryll with the duty of forming another Cabinet.

BRITISH GRAIN TRADE.

London, April 13.—The Mark Lane Express, in its review of the corn trade the past week, says:—Six weeks of thoroughly seasonable weather has made a wonderful change in the aspect of the country. Wheat is somewhat backward in some districts, but therefore less likely to suffer from any return of cold weather. Showers have somewhat delayed the completion of the spring sowing. The supplies of English wheat are again small, both in London and the provinces. Prices declined a shilling, millers' requirements being light and the weather favorable for a future crop. There has been a marked decline in foreign wheat in London, caused by the speculative combination in America dictate prices to Western Europe. Red Winter, which a fortnight ago was worth 57s per qr, sold with difficulty at 54s per qr decline. Russian sorts have not declined quite so decidedly, but the tendency in all cases has been adverse to sellers. At the same time the decline stimulated the demand, and millers, in some cases, bought comparatively freely. The proximate cause of the collapse of the ring was not so much abstention from buying on this side as favorable crop reports in both England and America.

The official estimate of the stock of grain in London is larger than anticipated, namely, 278,000 quarters, against 209,000 quarters at the corresponding time last year. Compared with the stock in granary at the beginning of the year there is a decline of 218,000 quarters.

Maize, in consequence of large arrivals, receded 3s to 4s from the recent highest point. Mixed American at-ship is now 26s. Arrivals at ports of call will be moderate. Trade is very quiet. Wheat is to 1d lower, with only a moderate demand at the decline. It is noticeable, however, that the continent has taken a considerable proportion of late. Barley Malzes sold steadily, but weaker, at the close. Wheat for shipment was freely offered, but buyers containing indisposed to operate, it declines fully 1s 6d. Maize was 6d lower.

The rates of English wheat last week were 24,644 quarters, at 46s 2d per quarter, against 52,930 quarters, at 41s per quarter, the previous year.

The imports into the United Kingdom during the week ending April 3 were 1,040,160 cwts. of wheat and 144,062 cwts. of flour.

RUSSIA.

THE TROUBLE WITH CHINA.

St. Petersburg, April 13.—The Golos publishes a letter from Prof. Marten, which undoubtedly has a semi-official character. He says Russia will only restore Kuldja if approached in a friendly spirit. The present trouble is the result of the predominance of the anti-European party at the Court of Pekin. If war excites the Europeans in China will be in danger of massacre. All foreign representatives at Pekin recognize the danger, and are supporting the Russian claims.

St Petersburg, April 13—A Paris correspondent recounts an interview with Tseng Kee Tsee, the Chinese Ambassador to France, who said it was the desire of China to avoid a war with Russia at any price.

The Agence Russe received similar information, and does not doubt that Tseng Kee Tsee will be listened to at the Russian Court with the deference due his rank and good intentions.

Moscow, April 13.—The Gazette says the reasons upon which China refuses to ratify the Kuldja treaty are that the mountain passes would remain in possession of Russia, and 9,000,000 roubles might be later expended by China in military preparations.

BURMAH

DENIAL OF THE REPORTED MASSACRE.

Rhyetmyo, March 13.—The Burmese Ambassador declares that there is not a particle of truth in the reported massacre in Mandalay. Leave of absence to British officers here have been stopped, and it is generally thought that an important step is impending.

THE FIRE RECORD.

Exeter, Ont., April 13.—By fire this morning, about half-past six o'clock, A. Cottle's rake factory, stable and a small dwelling house, situated about half a mile south of this place, was burned to the ground. The fire originated from a stove upstairs. Insured for $400 in the Ontario Mutual, of London. Quite a lot of the stock was saved.

Selkirk, Ont., April 13.—About eleven o'clock this forenoon a fire broke out in a barn belonging to Adam Dile, near this village, and as a high wind prevailed it, with its contents, was reduced to ashes. Whilst the fire was in progress a burning ember was carried into the barn-yard of Elias Hoover, setting fire to his straw stack, which soon spread to the barn, which was also consumed. The contents, with the exception of some hay, were removed in safety. The cause of the fire is supposed to have been children playing with matches. The first barn is fully covered by insurance, the other partly so.

Lakefield, Ont., April 14.—The dwelling and contents belonging to Richard Darling, of Douro, was destroyed by fire this afternoon. Loss, about $800; insured in the Grange Insurance Company for $300. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a spark from the stove.

Kincardine, April 13.—About two o'clock this afternoon a fire broke out on Harbor street, in the carding mill owned by James Henry, but by great exertions of the fire brigade the building was saved. Loss, $900. No insurance.

Moncton, N. B., April 13.—A great fire has been raging here all night. The damage to the business portion of the city is great. The flames are now under control.

SHIPPING.

London, April 13—Arrived, Maine, London, April 13.—The Spanish steamer Vizcaino, from New Orleans March 23rd for Anthwerp, has been lost in the ice off Newfoundland. The crew were landed at the Island of St. Pierre, Miquelon.

New York, April 13.—Arrived, Gallia, from Liverpool.

Halifax, N. S., April 13.—The steamer Circassian, from Baltimore, arrived today and leaves for Liverpool on Saturday. The Sardinian has sailed for Baltimore. The steamer Buenos Ayres, of the Allan line, from Glasgow, arrived to-day, and reports a rough passage.

New York, April 13.—Arrived, Ethiopia, from Glasgow.

Queenstown, April 13.—The Samaria has arrived.

A Bloodless but Satisfactory Duel.

Philadelphia, April 13.—The rumored duel proves to be true. The affair took place on Saturday morning, on the Maryland State line, between Dr. S. William White, Lecturer at the Medical College of the University of Pennsylvania, and Robt. Adams, a wealthy young man. The cause of the affair was a conversation concerning a lady, which took place at the armory of the First City Troops three weeks ago. The duel was with pistols, and was fought at 28 paces. Adams fired first and missed, when White fired in the air, and both expressed themselves satisfied.

Yellow Jack Again.

New Orleans, La., April 13.—The President of the Board of Health contradicts the report of several deaths from yellow fever here last month.

Crooked Preachers.

Philadelphia, April 13.—Rev. William Orvis was expelled to-day from the Philadelphia Association of Congregational Ministers because of his connection with the Philadelphia University of Medicine, a bogus college, where a reporter recently purchased a certificate to practice medicine. The Dean, President, and Secretary of the concern were Methodist ministers.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

Its Constitutionality Confirmed by the Supreme Court.

Ottawa, April 13.—Judgment was given on the Canada Temperance Act in the Supreme Court to-day. The attendance was large, the Princess and suite, a number of members of Parliament, and prominent temperance advocates being present.

Chief Justice Ritchie held that the B. N. A. Act gave the Dominion Government power to enact laws tending to the peace, order, and good government of the country, and legislation cannot be ultra vires where the Act aimed at the regulation of trade and commerce. He held that the Federal Government had the power of prohibitory legislation, for, to his mind, a power to regulate was a power to prohibit. He therefore thought the appeal should be allowed by confirming the constitutionality of the Act.

Justice Fournier concurred in this and Justice Henry dissented. He submitted that the Act was ultra vires and not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. It was quite evident from the preamble that Parliament did not intend the Act as a regulation of trade and commerce, but aimed at the suppression of the liquor traffic, a question which is within the jurisdiction of the local Legislatures. Were the Act declared constitutional, consequences might arise for it would then be within the province of the local authorities to assume the licensing power now exerted by the Local Legislatures.

Justice Gwyn held that the whole question arose out of a misconception of the B. N. A. Act. It was only necessary if the Act enumerated any subject assigned to the Provincial Legislature. If it did not wise are within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Government. The Act was constitutional and the appeal should be allowed.

The appeal was allowed with costs.

JUSTLY PUNISHED.

A Cowardly Wife-beater Horse-whipped by Determined Women.

Allanburg, Ont., April 13.—Our usually quiet village was thoroughly aroused last evening by about a dozen women turning out to horse-whip a man named Smith, who has been in the habit of abusing and beating his wife, who is partially insane. The women waited to see if her relations or the law would punish him for his brutal treatment to his wife before they took this unusual way of giving him what he fully deserved. His cries brought Mr. James Tipper, hotel-keeper, who pleaded for them to desist, as they had punished him quite enough, Smith promising never to do so any more.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Special from our own Correspondent.

Ottawa, April 13.—The Government caucus this morning took into consideration the railway policy. The greatest harmony prevailed.

An effort will be made to conclude the session by the 1st of May.

The Senate Committee on Privileges have held, with closed doors, a session upon various matters.

The charges made by Mr. Miller against the official reporters were considered, but the subject has not yet been satisfactorily decided.

Mr. Sandford Fleming has published a pamphlet, justifying his conduct in connection with the charges made against himself.

A return brought down to-day shows the vessels that have carried cargoes to the Fort William terminus of the Pacific Railway, their tonnage, draft and the quantity of cargo. In all, thirty-one trips have been made to the terminus, some vessels going two or three times. The largest vessel was the Fauvel, a foreign vessel, which registered 1,900 tons, drawing ten feet nine inches of water. The heaviest cargoes were 200,000 feet of lumber, 1,000 bundels oats and 454 kegs of spikes, carried on respective vessels.

A return was brought down with copies of all papers relating to the claim of Mr. Wassell for the use by the Government of his bridge patent, whereby he proposed to utilize the old rails now in the country.

A return was brought down to-day showing all tenders received for sections 88 and 34 of the Welland Canal, and extensions of time for depositing security, together with all copies of contracts and correspondence and Orders-in-Council connected therewith.

Much amusement was caused this evening by Mr. Bunster producing a large bag of stone, which, he said, was a specimen of that used in the construction of certain work in British Columbia. Its contents were critically examined by the ministers.

H. R. H. the Princess Louise was present in the Supreme Court this morning during the judgment on the Temperance Act.

It is said that Mr. Fleming will be removed from his present position into one in which his knowledge of surveys on the Pacific Railway will be utilized by the Government in a consultive capacity.

THE CROWN AND COUNTY.

The application for a change of venue in the case of the Donnelly murder has been refused, as we anticipated and have contended for. The only pleas which those acting for the Crown had to put forward in favor of so unusual a course were contained in the affidavits of the Crown Attorney, Mr. Charles Hutchinson, and that of the Chief of the London police, Mr. Williams. It need scarcely be urged that these may be considered as professional opinions, which, however much they may be respected as such, cannot be held to be free from a certain bias. In opposition to their statements Judge Wilson had laid before him the affidavits of the Foreman of the Grand Jury, Mr. D. Mackenzie; of the Warden of the county, Mr. Morgan; of the ex-Warden and Reeve of Westminster, Mr. James Armstrong; of Mr. John McDougall, formerly representative of North Middlesex in the Legislature; of Dr. Hanson, and others. These were to the effect that the people of Middlesex and London not only were capable of judging of the facts, but were anxious —eager that justice should be meted out. And would it not be most monstrous to suppose otherwise? To say that out of a population of 90,000, extending over a wide district of country, twelve honest men could not be found competent to try an issue between certain prisoners and the Crown, based upon simple evidence, is strange indeed. But the Prosecuting Attorney was instructed so to contend, and by his contention to affix an indelible stigma upon the good name of our citizens. It may be measurably true that within the limits of a small portion of Biddulph some sympathy does exist in favor of the prisoners, who up to the present time have been known as law-abiding men. That is but natural. The incidents of neighborhood, of long life sequaintanceship would account for that; and account for it naturally, without implying in any way the unfounded accusation that a desire exists to thwart the demands of justice, or that an intention is present to aid the guilty in eluding that retribution which the enormity of their crimes so loudly calls for. But whatever the feeling in a restricted locality may be, it has but little to do with the issue that the Crown raised up against the whole county and city, which is, by implication, that they favor the murderous outrages that have been pursued, and are prepared in advance of the trial and of the evidence to be submitted to bring in a verdict of "not guilty." It is well that such a slander has been repelled, and repelled in such a way that Judge Wilson, though upon coming here with his opinion, not to say, his judgment, affected prejudicially against this community, has felt himself constrained to admit an opposite conclusion. No doubt his views, like that of most other men at a distance, had been prejudicially affected by the allegations which the Toronto press, backed up by a certain section (shame to say) among ourselves had made. These had no hesitation in refusing the good name of this community by depicting them as men incapable of doing justice in an important case, charging them with a readiness, if not with a determination, of shielding the guilty and defeating justice. The thanks of the community is due to those gentleman we have named in standing forward and testifying to the uprightness and moral worth of our people, which had been so outrageously aspersed. The strong, simple, but manly, statements they made have found an echo wherever they have been read. Mr. Justice Wilson has paid a well-deserved tribute to them by accepting what they have said as his guide in opposition to the urging of the Crown, and the indecent clamors of certain newspapers for a change of venue. There has been little, it might be more truthfully said nothing, adduced to show that a fair and efficient trial would not take place here, and the attempt to conjure up a scare, to attract the unfavorable opinion of the whole of Canada and the United States to this city and county respecting the matter at issue has signally failed, as of right it should.

Cleveland Leader:—A Buffalo firm is having two vessels of unrivaled dimensions constructed at Milan, Ohio. One of them, a barge, is to be of 3,000 tons, and the other a propeller of 3,500 tons burden. These ships are to be used in the Chicago grain trade. They will be the largest on the lakes. Their construction shows the yearly increasing tendency to build larger vessels. It is found that the large crafts are more profitable than small ones, and it looks as if the day was not far distant when such vessels drawing eighteen feet of water and carrying 5,000 tons of freight will monopolize the greater share of the through trade of the lakes.

The British Parliamentary elections now nearly concluded, have been conducted with vile displays of rowdyism in not a few places. The free fight with which Labouchere's contest opened soon, in fact, to have been a keynote to the season. Some candidates have been pelted with stones in the streets, and others have had chairs flung at them on the platform; while Parnell and Lord John Manners can sympathize in the common martyrdom of being pestered with eggs, a canard that the nobleman had also tar in his.

* Ex Lieut.-Governor Letellier de St. Just is reported by La Concorde, of Three Rivers, to be engaged in preparing a requisition for presentation to the Governor-General, by him to be forwarded to the Imperial authorities, asking for redress for his dismissal by the Dominion Government from the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Province of Quebec. It is understood that the petition will be ready for transmission by the end of next week.

The latest from Edison at Menlo Park is this:—He has a number of men laying the wires for the 700 lamps, and he hopes to have all arrangements completed for illuminating Menlo Park in a few months. The great difficulty is the manufacture and the placing of the dynamo machines. The capacity of his factory is not sufficient for the rapid construction of such large machinery, and he has, therefore, to work slowly.

Boston Journal of Commerce:—It is expected that the Grand Trunk Road will before very long be able to resume the large traffic in cattle which it had before the Canadian Government prohibited the transportation of Western cattle across its borders. The prohibition has recently been removed, and shippers will experience the advantage of increased competition by the railroads for the cattle traffic to this port."

It is understood, from private information received in Ottawa, that there is a probability of Lord Dufferin entering the new British Cabinet as Colonial Secretary. The appointment would be very popular in Canada should the late Governor-General accept an office so closely identified with Canadian interests.

REPORT OF CANADIAN CANALS.

The Chief Engineer's Report of the Canadian Canals from Lake Erie to Montreal is a portly volume of 600 pages. It gives a history of some of these great works as well as an account of the recent enlargements and other improvements that have been undertaken by the Canadian Government, and now fast approaching completion. This report furnishes all information that can be desired, whether as respects the nature of the work, the difficulties to be encountered, the dimensions of the canals, the depth of the water, the number and size of the locks, or the difference in elevation between the two extreme points which these locks are intended to overcome. In addition to all this there are several maps and plans showing the course of some of these canals, with sections of locks, bridges &c. An enormous sum of money has been expended on these water-ways—enormous when it is considered how young the country, how small the population, and how little the accumulated capital in the hands of the people who may now be said to have accomplished these vast works.

Let us consider that the distance between Lake Erie and Montreal is about 375 miles, and that on this line of navigation there is now 70½ miles of canal, on which are 53 locks, of which the ordinary length is 270 feet the width 45 feet, and the uniform depth of water on the sills, 14 feet. The difference in elevation between Lake Erie and Montreal is 550 feet, 533 of which has been overcome by these locks, and the balance absorbed in the gradual decline. The artificial part of these long and "magnificent water stretches" is spread over nearly the whole length and obtains different names at those points where they are required. The three principal sections are the Welland, Cornwall, and Lachine canals; while the less important are those of Burlington Bay, the Williamsburg canals, and the deepening of some portions of Lake St. Francis and Lake St. Louis. The present heavy expenditure has been undertaken to allow vessels of a large size to proceed from the upper lakes right through to the head of ocean navigation, and by securing a depth of 14 feet of water all through the course, this object will be obtained. It is calculated that vessels of 1,000 tons will now be able to navigate the St. Lawrence and the lakes, and by a slight modification in the build of the vessels which the Chief Engineer informs us is now being introduced, the carrying capacity of these vessels may be increased 50 per cent., and therefore vessels of 1,500 tons burthen may soon be seen navigating these canals, and carrying the produce of the western States and of our own North-west to the Atlantic ports. When all the projected improvements have been completed, vessels large enough to cross the ocean may sail from the western extremity of Lake Superior to Montreal, or Liverpool for that matter, without the transhipment of a bushel of grain, or any other part of the cargo.

The period of fifty five years has rolled along since the commencement of the construction of the Welland Canal in 1825, principally through the indomitable energy and perseverance of the Hon. Hamilton Merrit. It was then only a one-horse affair, though it was so far finished that vessels were passed through it in 1829. By a great from the Government it was somewhat improved, and in 1833 the way was opened from Lake Erie to Ontario. In 1861 the Government assumed the control of the canal, and undertook to improve it in many respects. The locks were extended from 100 to 129 feet in length, and from 22 feet to 24 feet in width, with nine feet depth of water. The report tells us that the improvements begun in 1842 fully doubled the original capacity of the canal, and those now in progress will when completed, increase that capacity threefold. All these improvements could not be effected without a heavy outlay, and the sums expended on three principal sections—the Welland, the Cornwall, and the Lachine—were as follows :—

Paid to contractors and incidentals on the Welland up to December 31st, 1879	$10,283,320
Paid on the Lachine, for do	4,699,948
Paid on the Cornwall, for do	412,916
Total paid on these three works up to December last	$15,345,484

This is a heavy sum, but in course of time the country will receive a full return for this outlay, and it will facilitate inter-provincial trade to an extent that no one has any conception of to-day, and it will, besides, give Canada a large share of the carrying trade of the Western States.

A Madrid letter, dated the 6th instant, says :—"The Spanish Government to-day issued the official invitation for a conference of the country will receive a full return for this outlay, and it will facilitate inter-provincial trade to an extent that no one has any conception of to-day, and it will, besides, give Canada a large share of the carrying trade of the Western States.

A Madrid letter, dated the 6th instant, says :—"The Spanish Government to-day issued the official invitation for a conference to be held at Madrid, to consider the question of foreign protection over the subjects of the Sultan of Morocco. England, which suggested the plan of the conference last winter, will side with Spain and Morocco to demand a strict application of the restrictive rules of the treaties of 1856, 1860 and 1865 to the protectorate. But the representatives of France and Italy, backed by Russia and Portugal, will endeavor to extend these rules, because their Ministers in Tangiers have protected a large number of Jews who command great commercial and local influence in Morocco, and thus escape the authority and taxation of the Sultan. The whole body of Jews will actively support France and Italy by petitions already prepared for the conference. In Morocco very little real progress has been made, and that Empire is in a fearful condition. Taxes are collected through the intervention of an armed force, and those Governors of Provinces or departments are considered best who make the most presents to the Emperor. The Government is a simple despotism, and human life is held cheaply in the hands of the ruling Monarch. Especially is the recollection of the Jews, of whom there are 350,000, most deplorable. Miserableness being completely abandoned to sloth and indolence, the Jews exercise nearly all the arts of industry and control most of the commercial traffic. But for them the condition of Morocco would be more unfortunate than it is. Yet they are regarded by the Mohammedans as unclean dogs, entitled to no respect, and unworthy to live. A few of them, it is said—the more wealthy and influential, in fact—enjoy the protection of foreign representatives, notwithstanding international laws in this regard."

A number of New York sugar refiners have joined in the publication of a circular denouncing the adulteration of genuine sugar with glucose. They say that the practice is carried on openly, and that the mixed product is extensively sold under the name of "new process sugar." Glucose is the name applied to a class of sugars similar in chemical composition to those made from the sugar cane, but differing in some of their properties. They are chiefly made from starch, which is boiled for a long time with diluted sulphuric acid in leaden or wooden pans. It is very much inferior in sweetening power to cane sugar. The refiners say that it is extensively mixed with the genuine sugar, and sold at a price far beyond its real value; and unless a law can be passed requiring full notice of its character to be given to purchasers, they will be compelled in self defence to go into the business, and furnish a mixed instead of a pure article for popular consumption. This is the class of sugar Canadians were consuming until the N. P. enabled our own manufacturers to import raw cane sugar directly, and supply an article of superior sweetening power at the same price.

One of the iron shipbuilding firms on the Delaware River has received orders to build nine iron steamers, to be used by the London Navigation Company on South American rivers. These boats are to be of good size and first-class finish and fittings.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Session — Fourth Parliament.

Special from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 13.—The Speaker took the chair at 3 o'clock.

RAILWAY AFFAIRS.

Sir Charles Tupper moved the second reading of the Bill to confirm the purchase by the Dominion of a portion of the G.T.R. and the agreement made with the G. T. R. with respect thereto. Carried.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill, which was reported without amendments and read a third time.

MANITOBA LAND CLAIMS.

On motion of Sir John Macdonald, the Bill to provide for the final settlement of claims to lands in Manitoba by occupancy under the Act 38 Vic. was read a second time, and was passed through Committee and read a third time.

THE MILITIA.

The House then went into Committee of Supply. The item for militia, $680,200, was considered.

Mr. Strange said that last year he had called attention to the deplorable condition of the force. Since 1878 no brigade camps had been formed, and he argued that if the militia was to be maintained upon anything like a proper footing a proper sum should be expended on it. At present the regiments were mere skeletons, and if called on they could not take the field. He eulogized the action of the late Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Masson) as regarded the force, especially in connection with the supply of gunpowder. He thought that in time the entire supplies for the militia could be produced in Canada. He advocated the reduction of the permanent force, unless the grant for its maintenance was increased. Twenty thousand men, well maintained, would answer all purposes for the present. He thought the District staff was too great, and that the office of Brigade Major might be abolished and merged in that of the Deputy Adjutant Generals. The drill allowances might also be reduced, and in other matters economy might be practised, and a great saving of $119,000 be effected. He advocated the raising of the pay for drill from $175,000 to $250,000. He was not in favor of the headquarter staff.

Hon. Mr. Masson said that he regretted that the hon. member had said anything disparaging to the force, as he (Mr. Masson) was of opinion that it was in a better condition than ever before. The corps of which the hon. member was an officer was a case in point. He said that it was easy to talk of reducing the force, but not so easy to act. It would be very improper to make individuous distinction between the city and rural corps. The latter were in truth the backbone of the force. How could the staff at brigade quarters be well reduced when the services were required. After paying a compliment to the headquarter staff the hon. member said that as regarded drill allowance the Government could not increase the vote this year, but in view of the prospects of prosperity next year it was hoped it would be able to do so.

Mr. Bunster said that British Columbia had not received its due in militia matters.

Hon. Mr. Masson said that British Columbia had not met the requirements of the Government in the matter. The land for a shed had to be given and one-half the cost. If Nanaimo, to which the hon. member had referred, had done this, there there would possibly have been accommodation provided for the local company.

Mr. Domville said that there could be no immediate reduction in expenses, especially on the item of clothing. He had had to pay the cost of eighty pairs of boots for his own troop. He was of opinion that the rural corps were of the utmost value.

Mr. Boultbee advocated economy in the matter of the brigade staffs.

Mr. William said that the reductions suggested by the member for North York would not serve any good purpose. In view of the large amount of time in charge of the brigade staffs, he thought that should not be reduced. He defended the rural battalions.

Mr. Kirkpatrick deprecated any reduction in the force, and said that the bodies of the regiments should be maintained intact, but that the number should be properly drilled. He was not in favor of headquarter drill. He regretted that the recommendations of the Lieutenant-General commanding the forces when completed, increase that capacity threefold. All these improvements could not be effected without a heavy outlay, and the sums expended on three principal sections—the Welland, the Cornwall, and the Lachine—were as follows :—

Paid to contractors and incidentals on the Welland up to December 31st, 1879	$10,283,320
Paid on the Lachine, for do	4,699,948
Paid on the Cornwall, for do	412,916
Total paid on these three works up to December last	$15,345,484

This is a heavy sum, but in course of time the country will receive a full return for this outlay, and it will facilitate inter-provincial trade to an extent that no one has any conception of to-day, and it will, besides, give Canada a large share of the carrying trade of the Western States.

A Madrid letter, dated the 6th instant, says :—"The Spanish Government to-day issued the official invitation for a conference to be held at Madrid, to consider the question of foreign protection over the subjects of the Sultan of Morocco. England, which suggested the plan of the conference last winter, will side with Spain and Morocco to demand a strict application of the restrictive rules of the treaties of 1856, 1860 and 1865 to the protectorate. But the representatives of France and Italy, backed by Russia and Portugal, will endeavor to extend these rules, because their Ministers in Tangiers have protected a large number of Jews who command great commercial and local influence in Morocco, and thus escape the authority and taxation of the Sultan. The whole body of Jews will actively support France and Italy by petitions already prepared for the conference. In Morocco very little real progress has been made, and that Empire is in a fearful condition. Taxes are collected through the intervention of an armed force, and those Governors of Provinces or departments are considered best who make the most presents to the Emperor. The Government is a simple despotism, and human life is held cheaply in the hands of the ruling Monarch. Especially is the recollection of the Jews, of whom there are 350,000, most deplorable. Miserableness being completely abandoned to sloth and indolence, the Jews exercise nearly all the arts of industry and control most of the commercial traffic. But for them the condition of Morocco would be more unfortunate than it is. Yet they are regarded by the Mohammedans as unclean dogs, entitled to no respect, and unworthy to live. A few of them, it is said—the more wealthy and influential, in fact—enjoy the protection of foreign representatives, notwithstanding international laws in this regard."

A number of New York sugar refiners have joined in the publication of a circular denouncing the adulteration of genuine sugar with glucose. They say that the practice is carried on openly, and that the mixed product is extensively sold under the name of "new process sugar." Glucose is the name applied to a class of sugars similar in chemical composition to those made from the sugar cane, but differing in some of their properties. They are chiefly made from starch, which is boiled for a long time with diluted sulphuric acid in leaden or wooden pans. It is very much inferior in sweetening power to cane sugar. The refiners say that it is extensively mixed with the genuine sugar, and sold at a price far beyond its real value; and unless a law can be passed requiring full notice of its character to be given to purchasers, they will be compelled in self defence to go into the business, and furnish a mixed instead of a pure article for popular consumption. This is the class of sugar Canadians were consuming until the N. P. enabled our own manufacturers to import raw cane sugar directly, and supply an article of superior sweetening power at the same price.

One of the iron shipbuilding firms on the Delaware River has received orders to build nine iron steamers, to be used by the London Navigation Company on South American rivers. These boats are to be of good size and first-class finish and fittings, their admeasure, and in an emergency their training and practical experience would be of infinite value to the country.

The item was then passed, and also items—$14,000 for military schools and drill instruction in college; $115,000 for schools of gunnery, and $5,000 for guard at Rideau Hall.

The House then resumed and rose for recess.

After recess,

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS.

The House again went into Committee of Supply, and considered the vote of $1,894,857 for public works and buildings.

The several matters under the following heads were passed:—Public buildings, Ottawa, $10,400; telegraphs, Lower St. Lawrence, $200,000; public buildings, Ontario, $71,542; Grosse Isle quarantine station new hospital, $18,000; Quebec and Levis fortifications, including Dufferin improvements, $40,000; Durham Terrace extension, Quebec, $5,000; Leaning Cliff under the Citadel, Quebec, $35,000; Quebec Marine Hospital, $2,000; Quebec Custom House, $10,000; Quebec Artillery barracks and cartridge factory, $2,000; Three Rivers, fitting up old barracks for public offices, $2,500; Sherbrooke Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue offices, $12,000; Montreal Inland Revenue offices, additions, $2,000; St. John's Post Office, Custom House, &c., $8,000; St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, $20,000. Public Buildings—New Brunswick, $151,500; Nova Scotia, $3,500; Prince Edward Island, $4,000; Manitoba, $9,600; North-west Territory, $15,000; British Columbia, $22,000; harbours and rivers, Ontario, $59,850; do. Quebec, $45,500; do., New Brunswick, $21,000; do., Nova Scotia, $21,770; do., P. E. I., $2,900; do., Manitoba, $1,000; do., British Columbia, $8,000, and other items.

The House then resumed and the Committee having reported, the House adjourned at 12.40.

UNITED STATES ITEMS.

At a hunter's drive on the St. Joe River, in Spokan county, Washington Territory, recently, the Indians killed two hundred and eighty-three deer.

A toll gate near Greensburg, Ind., is guarded night and day by ten armed men, at an expense of $175 a week, while the receipts are only $10. The residents have repeatedly destroyed it, and the company have resolved to defend it at any cost.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, the novelist, has gone to Niagara Falls, to have her foot on Canadian soil when her new novel, "Louisiana," is published in London, so as to get the benefit of the British copyright. Her wife will stay only so long as this object requires.

Mr. James W. Hale, of Springfield, Mass., who died in 1869, directed that the income (similar between the city and rural corps. The latter were in truth the backbone of the force. How could the staff at brigade quarters be well reduced when the services were required. After paying a compliment to the headquarter staff the hon. member said that as regarded drill allowance the Government could not increase the vote this year, but in view of the prospects of prosperity next year it was hoped it would be able to do so.

Mr. Bunster said that British Columbia had not received its due in militia matters.

Hon. Mr. Masson said that British Columbia had not met the requirements of the Government in the matter. The land for a shed had to be given and one-half the cost. If Nanaimo, to which the hon. member had referred, had done this, there there would possibly have been accommodation provided for the local company.

Mr. Domville said that there could be no immediate reduction in expenses, especially on the item of clothing. He had had to pay the cost of eighty pairs of boots for his own troop. He was of opinion that the rural corps were of the utmost value.

Mr. Boultbee advocated economy in the matter of the brigade staffs.

Mr. William said that the reductions suggested by the member for North York would not serve any good purpose. In view of the large amount of time in charge of the brigade staffs, he thought that should not be reduced. He defended the rural battalions.

Mr. Kirkpatrick deprecated any reduction in the force, and said that the bodies of the regiments should be maintained intact, but that the number should be properly drilled. He was not in favor of headquarter drill. He regretted that the recommendations of the Lieutenant-General commanding the forces when completed, increase that capacity threefold. All these improvements could not be effected without a heavy outlay, and the sums expended on three principal sections—the Welland, the Cornwall, and the Lachine—were as follows :—

Paid to contractors and incidentals on the Welland up to December 31st, 1879	$10,283,320
Paid on the Lachine, for do	4,699,948
Paid on the Cornwall, for do	412,916

The trotting and pacing record for 1879, just issued from the Spirit office, has the summaries of 2,246 events, in which 3,628 horses took part. The amount of money trotted or paced for in purses, stakes and matches, estimating the premium in the races where the sum is left blank at $1,000, a low figure, reaches over $760,000, although tracks were by no means as liberal in 1879 as they did fair to be during the coming season.

Arrangements are being made for a novel match between Jefferson, N. J., on the 22nd inst. It is a match for one-legged men only. The entrance fee is $10, and no man is allowed to compete unless he walks on a peg or an artificial leg. The first prize will be an artificial leg costing $1,000. The man taking second place is to receive 25 per cent., the third, 15 per cent., and the fourth, 10 per cent. of the gate money, after expenses are deducted. Several entries have been made, and New York, Philadelphia, and other large cities will be represented.

At the meeting of representatives of the Michigan Grand Central Trotting Circuit, at Detroit on Monday evening, the programmes and divisions of purses for the entire circuit were agreed upon. The Adrian meeting comes first, June 1 to 4, with purses aggregating $10,000. The programme for the Detroit meeting, June 8 to 11, is similar to that of Adrian, with the addition of a $6,000 purse for the St. Julien Hospital event, and $2,000 for a butchers' and drovers' race, making $15,500 in all. Pontiac, June 15 to 18, and Ionia, June 29 to 30, will have the same race programme as Adrian, except that the purses are only four-fifths as large, making the total for each of these two $8,000. The Grand Rapids meeting, June 29 to July 2, will have only nine races, and the total of purses is only $8,200. Fort Wayne, July 5 to 8, will have the same arrangement of races as Adrian, Pontiac and Ionia, but the purses are scaled down so that the total will be $7,900.

The New York dog show commences in two weeks. It is said there are 1,400 entries. The importation of dogs has been very large during the past year. One Philadelphia fancier has imported 100 animals for his breeding kennel, one of them being Roderick, brother to Count Windom, a dog for which $6,000 was bid and refused. A Brooklyn gentleman named Lehman has a pair of mastiffs, standing thirty-two inches high at the shoulders, and ex-Judge Troy of Brooklyn, has imported the pair of Danish boarhounds that took first prize at Berlin in June last. Mr. S. L. M. Barlow has imported two of the new Lounberg dogs, and a Philadelphia lady has paid $3,000 for another pair, which she will exhibit. A New York breeder who has imported the prize-pointer Croxteste, winner of the Derby field trials and of the Hanover bench show, expects to have a sharp brush for the prize in the pointer class with Faust, owned by the St Louis Club, for which the club paid $1,740. The St. Louis Kennel Club, which owns the finest collection of pointers in the world, will send fifteen.

On the last night of the sitting of the last Parliament in England, there arose a tall, erect figure, slight and sinewy, but exactly beat with the weight of eighty-two years, who, announcing that he was "on the brink of the grave," warned the house while he lived not to dare, as Lord Beaconsfield had done in his manifesto, insult Ireland. This tall old man, with flowing white hair and beard and fiery eyes, was the O'Gorman Mahon, who, as he said, represented Clare fifty years ago in that House, and Ennis after, and had been a fire-eater and redoubtable Captain in far away countries on sea and land. Lord Beaconsfield had trodden on the tail of the coat of the martial patriarch, and the spirit of the famous duellist broke out in every sentence. At the close the heroic slightly touched on the ridiculous when, like Silas Wegg, he "broke into poetry."

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.

TO THE

Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:

This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America.

Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods. figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers make a profit of about 4½ per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

The Farmer's Wooing.

From the Boston Transcript.

...daisies nodded to the grass, the buttercups ...ere sleeping,
...t across the river sang the farmers at ...heir reaping;
...the hills, so blue and far, the maple leaves ...are showing
...soft white beauty in the breeze that from ...he sea was blowing.
...mid came through the lane, with song ...singing laughter,
...ttercups shone shy for her, the daisies ...gled after.

...ung young farmer saw her came beside the ...he parting river,
...saw a lily from its depths with golden heart ...quiver.
...an art more fair than lilies are" said he with ...hand upbuilded,
...d threw a poppy, as the stream toward the ...shaken rippled.
...and the flowers in her hair, the red and ...white together,
...ond grew black before the sun, and rainy ...was the weather.

...e came across the river then, the farmer from ...his mowing,
...gained not the water's depth, he cared not ...for its flowing.
...love" said he, "if gleaming sun and cloudless ...ks o'erlean us
...the river's barring width may roll unpeaned, ...untried between us.
...ot when lord thunder fills the air, and clouds ...and rain come over,
...ll come the ocean to your side, I am no fair ...day lover."

...And so one day the village bells sang out across the river,
Their music set the buttercups and daisies all a quiver.
While some one drew a lily from the stream so blithely flowing,
And plucked a blood-red poppy that amid the wheat was growing.
The maiden set them in her hair, the red and white together,
With many a smile, a tear or two, and glances at the weather.

They passed beneath the chapel's shade, the farmer and the maiden,
Where arches crossed above their heads, with snowy blossoms laden.
And in that place of holy calm the binding words were spoken;
He in his heart bore out the truth, she on her head the token.
The years went by, and some were bright and some were clouded over,
But ever stood he at her side, he was no fair day lover.

BARBARA.

Priscilla stood like a statue, her face a black. Curiously, interest, kindly feeling, there was none in that stony countenance. Mark looked curious and eager. He expected a blaze of beauty.

The young wife descended from the carriage with hesitating steps, leaning on her husband's shoulder. Mark recoiled in amusement at sight of a pale face in which there was little beauty save the glory of large dark eyes shadowed by long lashes, and the exquisite delicacy of the white-rose complexion.

Barbara gave her hand to Miss Penruth, who took it with as much coolness as was compatible with taking it at all. Mark lamped the thin little hand hastily.

"Welcome to Penruth Place," he said, as he offered the bride his arm. "Shall I take you indoors while Vyvyan raises to the lugage? You are looking very tired."

"She has been ill," said Vyvyan. "Paris didn't agree with her, and Switzerland didn't agree with her. The first place was no better, the second too quiet. I hope Cornwall will suit her better."

"It is very grand," said Barbara, looking ar away toward the big brown tors, and ickering a little after her drive through ...he moorland air, 'and very beautiful; ...ut, oh, how lonely!"

"You didn't expect to find it like the Camberwell Road, I hope," said her husband.

"No," she said, sudden tears welling up in her eyes. "I'm afraid I shall never like any place as well as I liked the Camberwell Road."

"That's a queer idea of rustic beauty or town splendor," grumbled Vyvyan. "Take her indoors, Mark. She's tired after her journey. And you can show her our rooms, Priscilla. I hope you've smartened them up a bit."

"You sent me no orders."

"I didn't think it necessary. Your own instinct ought to have been enough."

"I could not presume to anticipate Mrs. Penruth's taste," answered Priscilla, stiffly.

Barbara looked at her hopelessly, seeing that here was an enemy where she might have expected a friend. Well, it could make little difference. In a fate so joyless one bitter drop could hardly count.

"I thought you'd have made a few improvements," said Vyvyan. "However, perhaps it's better you'd let 'em alone. Barbara can please herself."

"You are very kind," answered his wife, "if an sure I shall not want to alter anything."

"Don't be too sure of that. You've no idea how old-fashioned we are," said Mark. "There's hardly been a stick altered since he Commonwealth."

They were in the hall by this time—the large dusky old hall, with its trophies of war and chase, its dark oak walls and lofty chimney-piece. To Barbara the place looked gloomily splendid. It had a historical air that thrilled her. She felt almost as deep an awe as she had felt when Captain Leland took her to the Tower of London, and she had stood among the shadows that had darkened so many doomed lives in the days of old.

The evening dusk made the shifting gloom of the staircase and corridor a little gloomier than usual, as Barbara followed Miss Penruth up the shallow boarwaxed steps to the gallery out of which the numerous bed-chambers opened. The room into which the young wife was ushered was long and low, a room with two long low windows, deeply recessed and heavily mullioned—delicious old windows, round whose stone-work wreathed myrtle and rose, and on whose cushioned seats it would be delightful to lie and dream away life on a drowsy summer afternoon. Without, the lovely evening sky was fading from rose to gray. Within, all was gloom: a low ceiling, supported by massive timbers; ponderous oak furniture made to last for centuries; an antique bed, with curtains of the same faded neutral tint; a tapestried wall, whereon some forest scene was depicted in sombre greens and melancholy grays, the figures of huntsmen and hounds dimly visible against an indefinite background; the antique four-post bedstead with tall twisted columns and a richly carved cornice—all things which had been splendid and costly in their day, but which time had faded to grayness and gloom.

Priscilla stalked before her sister-in-law, with the air of a jailor conducting his prisoner to the condemned cell. She had not even tried to smile. She looked at Barbara with a gaze that did not even affect kindness.

"Thank God, I am no hypocrite!" she said to herself, rejoicing, like the Pharisee of old, in her own virtues.

"This has always been Vyvyan's room," she said, standing stiff and straight beside the door. "But of course you can make any changes you like. If you prefer my room, at the south end of the house, it is quite at your disposal."

"On no account. Could you suppose I should wish to incommodate you?" protested Barbara. "I hope we are going to be good friends, Miss Penruth."

"That will depend upon you," answered Priscilla. "I am not lonely in my friendships. I have lived very much alone, and I have built high."

Barbara stared at her in blank wonder, not in the least understanding the drift of this last observation.

"He builds too low who builds below the stars," quoted Miss Penruth, solemnly, from one of the few poets whom she considered worthy of a Christian gentlewoman's notice. "I have built the habitation of my hopes above this sordid, sinful world, and worldly friendships can have but a weak hold upon me."

"Oh," faltered Barbara, feeling that this was something worse than she had anticipated; and then Miss Penruth walked out of the room, and shut the door behind her.

Barbara loitered feebly to the broad window-seat, and flung herself down by the open lattice, through which the cool evening air came laden with the breath of innumerable roses. She had been very ill, dangerously ill; for many days and nights an inhabitant of that dim border land between life and death. After her wedding day, when all was over, the knot tied, the vow vowed, the life long sacrifice consummated, her fortitude had suddenly given way, the cord so long stretched to its utmost tension snapped in a moment, and before the first ten days of her honey moon were over she was lying in the strange room at Morrice's Hotel in a high fever, her body prostrate in that unfamiliar room, her mind back in the Camberwell garden in the days of her girlhood.

In those long nights of delirium every secret of that broken heart was revealed to the husband, who sat by his wife's pillow, watching and listening, half in sorrow, half in anger. He heard her tender talk of her first lover—heard her live over again those halcyon days of perfect love and perfect faith—heard her cry of despair as those wild eyes, staring at the dull blankness of the papered wall, saw the Reaper glide out of the harbor over a summer sea.

"O cruel sea, to take him from me!" she cried. "George, my love, my dearest, how shall I bear my life till you come back?"

Yes, in those wild ravings of a distracted brain the husband heard how his rival had been loved—how deeply, how innocently, with what treasures of young hope and affection. He listened, and his soul was wrung with jealousy, yet he knew that he had hardly the right to be angry. Had she not told him honestly of that first love? and he had professed himself content to take her, knowing that she had loved another, knowing that she did not love him.

If you can't run fast enough to be one of the winners at the last you can at least run wisely enough to keep out of people's way.

A correspondent of a semi-religious paper asks whether the fruit that Adam ate was really an apple. Yes, it was a crab apple, because it went back on him.

"Then you liked little Bowes"—
"And you liked Jane Baby!"
"But you like me now, Rose,"
"As I liked little Bowes"?
"And I them to surpass"—
Hush!—You mustn't wake Baby!"
"Did you like little Bess?"—
"If you liked Jane Baby!"

If you could only persuade yourself to be glad that things are no worse, instead of grumbling that they are so bad as they are, you would materially increase the possibilities of happiness.

A Toronto Alderman, of the typical ample dimensions, wandered around for a while on the 1st day of April with a placard across his back inscribed:—"Widened at the expense of the Corporation."

A college man who used to lead in affairs of hazing, and who was considered "immense," is now selling pork and paper mantels in a country store, and gets angry when a washerwoman tries to beat him down on the price of a bar of soap.

A Massachusetts child, whose specialty is the quotation of Scripture texts, was told by her mother to go into the next room and stay there till sent for. Quick as thought the child responded:—"Sal. I fus into Egypt and be thou there, till I bring the word adim."

There is a small triumph for Mr. Darwin:—"Why, my dear," said a lady to her friend, "where did you get that beautiful monkey?" "Oh!" was the reply, "my husband travels a great deal, you know, and he gave me the monkey that I might not forget him in his absence."

A poet wrote a stirring ode on a victim of persecution, who was burned at the stake about the time of the Reformation, in which occurred the line, "See the pale martyr in his sheet of fire!" of which the poet was especially proud; but the printer accidentally got it, "See the pale martyr with his shirt on fire!"

Mr. F. W. Stachmer, who is connected with the establishment of Professor Ward, of Rochester, the ornithologist, says that while human bodies long buried may change into the waxy substance called adipocere, they never become petrified, and that consequently all the newspaper stories about petrified human bodies are false.

After a telegraph pole had fallen on a Savannah negro's head, he threw up his hands and shouted:—"Don't hit me again wid yer club, Mr. Policeman. I'll vamos me that stole der chickens. It was Deacon Henry." Then he looked, saw what hit him, and walked off, saying. "Golly, I'se in look dis mornin' I 'spected dat de policeman had me s'mash dat time."

When is it that some men who pray and lead prayer-meetings and are famous for their hearts burn with indignation at a story of social crime, who would set off their right hands rather than cheat a fellow in trade, and who will return five cents overcharge, will go into politics and indulge in all sort of dodging, trickery, misstatings and injustice in order to win an office or serve a party?

A little child has brought to the surface a new theological puzzle. When told the story of the Prodigal Son and how he was so reduced that he was compelled to eat husks, she looked into the face of the teacher with a bewildered sort of gaze and then said:—"Why did he eat the husks, good sir?" "Because," was the reply, "he had nothing else to eat." "Nothing else!" responded the child; "I think I could have found something." "And what could you have done if you had been there, my child?" queried the teacher. "Why," answered the bright-eyed little one without hesitation, "I should have killed a pig and had a good dinner."

Last November an old merchant, on sending his nephew to study law at Paris, presented him with an old copy of the code, with the remark, "I will come there on you in March, and if you have been diligent I will make you a handsome present." At the appointed time the old gentleman was on hand. "Well, my boy," said he, "have you worked hard?" "Oh, yes," answered the nephew confidently. "For that case you have already got your reward." "I don't know what you mean, sir." "Read me the code, my boy." He opens the volume, and between the first two leaves finds a five-hundred franc note, which he had intended for his nephew, but which he forthwith put into his own pocket.

ALAS! SHE REFUSED HIM.

In the dim summer night they were leaning alone
From the balcony over the walk;
He, careless enough, one had guessed by the tone
Of his voice and his murmurous talk;
And she—well, her laugh flowed as sweet to the breeze
As the voice of the faint violin
That rose, with a ripple of ivory keys,
Through the open warbled within.

In the odorous locust bough, trailed o'er the eaves,
The nightingale paused in its tune,
And the turtle kurpiid hid away in the leaves
That were turned from the smile of the moon;
And the man sat alone, with his fingers clenched tight
O'er a heart that had fallen in its boat,
While the passers by saw but a spatter of light
Where he dropped his cigar in the street.

HOPE'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London, Eng."

Miss Emily Scott, the manager of a species of Shepherdess's Fold, at Hastings, England, who was arrested recently for starving her maid-servant, aged 14, when remanded, ten days after, said that she had had the girl two years, and had fed her on "porridge, mixed with cod liver oil." The master of the workhouse, where the girl was sent after Miss Scott's arrest, testified that she weighed only thirty-five pounds when taken there, and in eight days increased eight pounds in weight. She was not yet fit to give evidence. Then Miss Scott, who had given bail in $250, drove home in a cab, followed by a mob, which gathered around and threatened the house, until dispersed by the police.

North-western Intelligence

From Our Own Correspondent

BARRIE

Several wrecks are reported on Lake Huron this (Monday) morning owing to the gale on Saturday. We have not yet ascertained particulars.

The 1,000 shares new allotment of the Huron and Lambton Loan and Savings Company have all been taken up by the shareholders at 5 per cent. premium.

The harbor is crowded with vessels of every description, all preparing for sailing to ports on the upper lakes.

Five tramps, three male and two female, who for some time past have been making headquarters in a barn belonging to M. Fleming, Esq., banker, situated on a vacant lot, have been sent to jail and Central Prison for three and six months. They had been occupying the barn for several months before being discovered.

Mr. McVicar, the well-known editor of the Canadian, is again in his office, being fully recovered from being thrown from his buggy.

A Port Huron correspondent contends that the Guelph Lumber Company have struck $200,000 in Sarnia. We are informed that such is not the case.

One of our dry goods houses has succumbed to the pressure of the times, and gone into Insolvency Court. Likewise a fruit merchant, who did an apparently flourishing business.

The new Catholic Chapel is crowded every Sabbath, many of the congregation coming from Port Huron. Large as the building is a larger will be required before long. Father Bayard is deservedly popular.

If the G. W. R. and G. T. R. would give excursion tickets to this place on Saturday, good to return on Monday, many would spend Sunday here.

On Sunday quite a fleet of vessels passed down, all deeply laden with grain from Chicago.

A large reward is offered for the apprehension of some ruffian who wantonly and unoffending cow in a shocking manner. Cows are allowed to run at large here, and as many of them wear bells, it is thought the outrage was perpetrated by some one who was driven to desperation owing to his morning slumbers being disturbed.

Mr. W. T. Todd, who for some time has been with Mr. W. J. Keays, official assignee, has accepted a position in the traffic department of the Chicago and North Western Railway, at Port Huron.

The Council voted down, by a large majority, the $600 for the Irish Relief Fund.

At the last Division Court, Judge Robinson presiding, three hundred and fifteen cases were disposed of in the highest style of art. Two hundred and twenty of them were undefended.

The Railway Committee, Sarnia and Petrolia Railroad, had an interview with Mr. Hickson, Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. The result was highly gratifying, and the terms proposed satisfactory. This highly important railway is now a fixed fact.

Mr. Brown, of the Bolthamber House, has gone to Manitoba to spy out the land.

The roof of the Town Hall is looking badly, and the only consolation is that no foreign workmen did it. "I told you so."

The Bridge question is still being agitated, and the Council is progressing. The handsome bonus when things are put in shape.

A rumor is in circulation that the Government are prepared to dredge the bay, and it is said always that the property owners will surrender their rights in the margin of water frontage, to a certain extent. All the owners are willing, with one or two exceptions, and no doubt they will see the propriety of giving way. This is by far the most important matter, as far as the prosperity of the place is concerned, that has transpired for some time, and we hope the project will be pushed with horns of iron until completed.

The "Ambassador" filed an appearance here, after an absence of four months.

The sound of the caulker's hammer is heard in the land.

Large quantities of square timber are being hauled to the River St. Clair for shipment to England. It was supposed that the supply was exhausted, but it seems to be otherwise.

It is said that Hughson & Co., extensive lumber dealers here, have bought out the Guelph Lumber Company.

The merchants here will soon be enquiring when the first excursion will come in from the interior to gaze at the mighty sea, for which this place is so famous, and to get a view of that never-failing stream, the St. Clair.

Over two hundred tons of ice have been laid up in store.

Sarnia presents a bright, cheerful appearance, and Front street has a fine array of shop fronts as is to be seen in any town in the Dominion. The place is as neat as the clean sweep of Front street.

The people here demand free access to the river St. Clair, same as enjoyed by the people of Detroit and Windsor, and think the corporation should take the matter in hand. At present there is no avenue to the river with ferry boats in connection, save through private property. Hence vehicles of all kinds passing to and fro are compelled to go a certain distance for this kind is always objectionable. A public highway to the Hi. Clair is demanded.

The Alexander House has been thoroughly refitted, painted and papered from top to bottom.

PETROLIA

The biggest strike for some time was made here on Friday evening on the Pitcher property. It is yielding 100 brls per day, and keeping it up to that. This strike has visibly affected the oil market, and prices are weakening; $1.05 to $1.10 per brl. is the outside limit as low as $1.

Two of our young men are opening a large furniture shop.

McKay Bros. are fitting up a fine shop on Main street.

A masquerade ball is on the tapis under the auspices of our leading citizens. Programme to go to the Petrolia Brass Band.

A party of young men leave here on Wednesday for the North-west, fully equipped for farming on a large scale.

Mr. Bowlby, Clerk left for the Promised Land (Manitoba, to-day.

Petrolia is one of the quietest towns in Ontario, and the office of Police Magistrate is almost a sinecure.

Mr. Ingleheart controls over sixty wells. There are over one thousand wells in operation here at present, yielding from one to one hundred barrels per day each.

The Great Western RR. Company are elevating the station premises, and painting their buildings.

Petrolea has now over 4,000 inhabitants, and still they come.

Kerr Bros. foreclosed their chattel mortgage on the Fletcher Wells, and removed the machinery.

Our hotels are doing a rushing business. The Anderson House, under Joe Hagyard; the Coney House, under renowned Tip Corey, and the American, under C. Farrar, are the principal hopses.

POINT EDWARD.

The Village Fathers show a surplus of about six hundred dollars, and all demands paid in full. Happy spot.

An immense traffic is expected this summer both by rail and lake.

A daily line of steamers to Chicago is on the tapis.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Robert Riley, First Editor over of the Grand Trunk ferry International, which occurred at his home on Wednesday at Point Edward. Mr. Riley was universally respected. He was an employe of the company for over twenty-five years, and had been on the ferry service at Point Edward for twenty years. The concourse at his funeral was unusually large.

The Point continues to grow slowly but surely, and several new buildings are being constructed.

Large numbers of emigrants for Manitoba arrive here daily. They are promptly forwarded to their destination. Major Wiley, the courteous agent, gives special attention to this business.

AILSA CRAIG.

The G. T. R. Co. expect an enormous cattle traffic from this place this season, and it is likely their anticipations will be fulfilled. The shipping facilities have been greatly increased, and Thibideau, the energetic agent, is reported to give unsurpassed accommodation to shippers from this point.

Maple sugar festivals are now in order.

The deliveries of grain are rather light, farmers being busy seeding.

The fall wheat in this section has escaped injury. A great quantity has been sown.

LUCAN.

One of our largest grain buyers here candidly admits that the National Policy will benefit all those farmers having wheat on hand. He contends that there is barely enough of wheat on hand to supply home consumption, and that what there is will be required by local millers. They (the millers) will give a preference to Canadian wheat, in order to avoid the duty. The millers here also contend that the tariff protects them in their shipments to the Lower Provinces.

FORREST.

This place continues to grow rapidly. It now contains over 2000 inhabitants, and will soon claim to be a town. Twenty years ago there were only some five houses and some twenty inhabitants.

Forest will rank about third in the matter of grain shipments for the last twelve months on the whole line of the Grand Trunk Railway. As a grain centre it is unsurpassed.

PORT STANLEY.

The Messrs. Mosgate are erecting a grain elevator here with a capacity of 125,000 bushels. It will be used for storage for grain from the Chicago & North-western Railway, and will no doubt divert considerable grain from Detroit. It will also be used to elevate cargoes of grain from Chicago en route to the east over the G. T. R. It will be ready for work on opening of navigation. This place and Point Edward will eventually become great grain distributing depots.

The northern transportation propellers Granite State and Champlain were the first to come through from Chicago this season. Both had cargoes.

A grand leap-year hop comes off here on Wednesday. Over two hundred invitations have been issued. The ball is under the patronage of Major Wiley, G. T. R. Agent, and other prominent citizens.

Port Granite is now connected with Port Huron by telephone.

A tax of two mills on the dollar has been imposed for sidewalks, roads, &c. Much needed.

PARKHILL.

Some irresponsible correspondent has made a statement in reference to a prominent citizen of this place, to the effect that he had mortgaged a certain lot for three times more than it was worth in order to influence an arbitration now pending on said lot, which is required for market purposes. We need hardly add that there is not the slightest shadow of truth in the statement. The owner never executed a mortgage in his life, having no necessity for anything of that kind.

THEDFORD.

Large stocks of wheat are being held here for a rise. Mr. Robt. Rae is the principal holder.

Cattle buyers have been scouring the country for live stock, and considerable purchases have been made at good prices.

The village continues to grow steadily. Several buildings are now being erected and others will be commenced shortly. This place goes in for brick, stone and concrete instead of wood. Hence insurance rates are lower than elsewhere.

PORT DOVER.

A cruel swindle was perpetrated upon the unsuspecting inhabitants of this romantic village last week, but as no one can be forgotten. A man calling himself Meredith made his appearance at the Fork, and gave out that he was from Gourlay, Winans & Co.'s sawmills, and surrounding the noble Fort. As the price offered was remunerative, the whole population was soon busily engaged collecting the precious stuff, and large piles were collected and stored in the several houses and hotels, greatly to the discomfort of the inmates. McGuffin and his associates lived on the fat of the land, the best of everything being provided for him. He was a perfect whale in the matter of eatables and drinkables. After about six weeks he announced his intention of going to Sarnia to draw money to pay for the immense pile of roots collected. He promised to return on the first train. It is needless to state that he has never been heard from since, and sawdust is now at a painful discount. Nor is it prudent to this day to enquire too particularly after that commodity at Port Franks.

THE FARMING CUP.

Richard Martin, wife and two children, started from Ailes Craig for Saginaw last week. Mrs. Martin was quite tipsy when he left, and took a bottle with him on the train. Leaving his wife in the coach, he started forward, as she supposed, to the smoking car. Richard, however, stopped on one of the platforms to take another drink. Whilst elevating the bottle the train gave a slight swing, and away went Martin's bottle and all. The bottle was found broken on the track, and the man in the ditch, by the track men, who picked him up, and carried him on their lorry to Parkhill, where he revived sufficiently to follow his family on the next train. No one noticed him falling from the express, but the track men say that where he fell the train must have been going at the rate of forty miles an hour.

E. M Bigg, the High School master, appears once more with his troupe next Thursday in aid of the Parkhill fire brigade. The last was so good that it will bear repeating. As a balloonist Mr. Bigg is a success. Rev. Mr. Johnson is the new church, now takes charge of Thedford, as well as Ailes Craig and Parkhill.

De Hart, of the Royal, who broke his leg a few days ago wrestling, is out again on crutches.

The Oddfellows fall into line on 25th inst., and form a grand procession to the M. E. Church, where a discourse will be delivered by Rev. Mr. Griffin. In the evening, the usual entertainment.

EAST WILLIAMS.

It has been proposed to call a mass meeting of the ratepayers to discuss the advisability of adopting a general scheme whereby, at least, $1000 a year will be expended on one or more of the leading roads in the muddy township is raised to a level with its sister municipalities. We are pleased to see Adelaide Arnold has the matter in hand, and friend Morgan deserves credit for his enterprise.

AILSA CRAIG.

Rev. Mr. Higgins, who has been pastor of the Baptist church here for the last two years, starts off this week for the Ottawa district. Last Sabbath he preached his farewell sermon to a very large audience. Mr. Higgins is greatly missed in Ailes Craig and North Middlesex, and he has made himself a general favorite. His place will be taken by Rev. Mr. Dadson, of Denfield, who will preach next Sabbath at Ailes Craig in the morning, and Brooke in the evening. This, we understand, is to be the summer arrangement for this section.

Rev. H. Christopherson, M. M., of Mitchell, formerly of Ailes Craig, whose life a few weeks ago was despaired of, is now reported on the mend. He has had, as a last resource, a most critical operation performed on him, viz., a board of surgeons opened his side in the region of the heart and drew off from the cavity and the lungs three pints of liquid. Mr. C. has been ordered a rest of eighteen months, his place to be supplied by the surrounding ministers. Next Sabbath Rev. Mr. Ridley, of Ailes Craig, takes his appointment.

Mr. Ernest Hart, writing in the Sanitary Record on "The Hygiene of Food," makes a vigorous assault on the breakfast table of the present day, and especially upon our country breakfasts. He believes tea to be a drink utterly unfitted for an early morning meal, and one which has only come into general use because it is the easiest sort of hot infusion which bad cooks, careless housewives and thoughtless mothers can prepare. So far as the alkaloid of tea has a physiological effect in the small quantity in which we get it at breakfast, it is a nerve stimulant, a property which does not indicate it as a breakfast drink, and which is not what is looked for in the morning. Breakfast should be digestible, warm, abundant, tempting, nourishing. Bread and butter and good hot Kocks make a very good breakfast indeed for working people.

M. Saccardo of Padua, has made public the results of his experiments on modifying the color of flowers. By mingling iron filings with the soil in which hortensias are planted, these flowers assume a blue color. As regards flowers already out, by dipping pinks in a solution of aniline or eosine, the pistils and the petals will flowers are white; into violet, if red; into green, if yellow. Camellias and chrysanthemums undergo the same modification. If a bath of the latter be dipped into a solution of cosine and afterward planted, the plant will live for several days and produce flowers of the colors already mentioned.

Thus does the Maine liquor law work: A woman stepped into an apothecary's store in Portland and bought one gill of brandy. Then she went to the Municipal Court and got a warrant for the arrest of the apothecary, who was fined $80 and costs.

London, April 10.—The Economist of this week says:—The rate of discount for bank bills, 60 days to three months, is 2½ per cent., and for trade calls, 60 days to three months, 2½ to 3 per cent. On the Stock Exchange there has been much improved demand for almost all securities. There is a growing tendency to regard the Liberal success at the Parliamentary elections as favorable to business, and it appears probable that we are on the eve of another outburst of speculation. Mexican, South American, and Japanese securities were the only exception to a general improvement, and in the American railways Union Pacific shares advanced 3½; St. Louis Tunnel 1½, and Pennsylvania Central 1, and Central Road of New Jersey shares declined 4, and Erie, New York Central, and Reading 1 each. Among mortgages Atlantic, Mississippi, and Ohio advance 6, St. Louis Bridge 2 and 3, and Atlantic and Great Western have been generally in request. The London water companies improved from 2 to 3 per share on opening. The Metropolitan taxpayers will insist on the purchase of the works, their objection to the Bill brought forward by Right Hon. R. Asshton Cross being only one of detail. The high price it agreed to pay for the works.

JAY GOULD IN CANADA.

A New York correspondent of the Montreal Gazette says:—In addition to the possibility of Jay Gould and his party obtaining possession of the Canadian telegraphs, there seems to be an extreme probability that he will secure control of the Great Western Railway of Canada, running across the Canadian peninsula from Detroit to the Niagara River, and comprising over 80 miles of rails. Negotiations for the past week have been carried on by cable between Jay Gould in New York, representing the Wabash combination, and the controlling authorities of the Great Western Company in London. Although the matter has only been referred to incidentally as a rumor, there is no manner of doubt as to the fact that negotiations are progressing. The reason Gould desires possession of this road is that it will give another step towards the eastern seaboard for the Wabash system of railways, which is now perfect from Omaha to Toledo. The control of the Great Western Railway of Canada would give him equal advantages with Mr. Vanderbilt, whose virtual ownership of the Canada Southern and Lake Shore roads gives him advantages new which Mr. Gould finds it difficult to compete against. Once at Niagara, Gould could have a choice of routes down the lake via Montreal, or to New York by the Erie, if need be; and, in short, whatever is the course now partially built from Lewiston, N. Y., via the Rome & Watertown to Oswego, connecting at Oswego with Tilden's new revamped New York & Midland line.

PIGEON CATCHING—A PECULIAR INDUSTRY FOR THOSE MICHIGAN IS BLESSED.

Shelby, Mich., April 1.—Probably few persons are aware of the interest taken by a large class of people at this season of the year in the business of catching pigeons for market. The writer arrived here this morning, and finds about seventy-five persons here and in the vicinity, for the purpose of catching these birds. People are here from Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Michigan. Old, middle-aged, and young, some of whom have been engaged in the business in its season for the last forty years. The pigeons, in good season, are reported at from $20 to $100 per day.

About this time each year pigeons arrive from the south in this part of Michigan in very large numbers, where they commence building their nests and raise their brood. They subsist principally on beech nuts. It is said large numbers of these birds collect in such large numbers that the noise of their wings makes a noise like the rumbling of cars. This season is reported to this state nearly every year since 1840.

In anticipation of their arrival, which usually is very sudden after they commence building their nests, people from the various states assemble here with nets and birds to use as decoys. Being thus well equipped with all the paraphernalia necessary, the ground is looked over and places selected for locating their nets.

HEAVY FALL IN PRICES.

Philadelphia, April 7.—There is a decided downward tendency in the price of iron. The Glendon Company have ordered dealers making a reduction of $10 per ton, bringing the rates from $40 to $30. Some assign over production as the cause. Early fall, while others claim that it is due to a determination on the part of American producers to check importations of English iron. Since last fall iron has been going up with great rapidity, rising almost daily. Within two years, charts of the market show, and, in the case of the Glendon iron, which rules generally about $1 a ton higher than the average of the product of the Schuylkill and Lehigh regions, to $42. Scrap and other classes have alike shared in the rise in value, and those dealers who have been holding stock now see their mistake. The market first changed for the better on the predictions last July, when prices, which had fallen to $14 and $16, began to advance. Wasn it was found that American iron-ores were $10 and more in advance of foreign, as every ton, manufacturers were reduced to the expedient of filling their orders with large alloy of inferior metal or waiting for the change which everybody saw must come. Some iron merchants, however, are of the opinion that the present low rates will not continue.

THE SUGAR CROP OF NOVA SCOTIA.

It will be seen by advertisement that the Central Board of Agriculture has imported half a ton of new and fresh seed of the Imperial Sugar Beet of Germany, for the use of Agricultural Societies. Messrs. E. and T. Smith, of Windsor, lately sent a quantity of last Fall's crop of roots, raised on their farm, to the laboratory of Dalhousie College, where they were worked up by the Agricultural Class. Thirty lbs. of the root yielded 3 lbs. 2½ oz. of the most concentrated syrup (not counting waste), which, for want of proper appliances, is not yet crystallized. This is equal to a yield of 10 per cent. of sugar on the gross weight of roots, which is more than is usually obtained in the factories.—Halifax Herald.

CANADIAN CREDIT IN ENGLAND.

Herapath's Journal, in discussing the prospects of Canada, says:—The credit of the Canadian Government stands very high in the London market. Thus Canadian 4 per cents. only yield at present prices an interest of a trifle over 4½ per cent. per annum. The correspondling return obtained from a purchase of United States 4 per cent. bonds would be about 3¾ per cent. per annum, so that the rate of capitalization of Canadian Government securities is within ¾ per cent. of the corresponding rate of capitalization on the bonds of the United States. This simple fact establishes in one word the strength and stability of the credit of the Government of Canada.

CANADIAN COAL UNDER THE S. P.

The Spring Hill Mining Company is still actively shipping large quantities of coal to all points on the Intercolonial and Grand Trunk Railways. Messrs. Anderson, McKenzie & Co. have delivered sixteen carloads during the present week, and so well is this splendid coal liked, that large orders are being received daily for future delivery. Owing to the press of business with through freight, the railway authorities have with difficulty been able to furnish sufficient cars to fill orders as forwarded.

General Notes

How universal the custom of insuring buildings has become is shown by the fact that of the losses by fire in this city last month the amount covered by insurance was less than $500.

Messrs. John Moody & Son, of Ridgetown, have purchased the Port Dover woollen and flouring mills, which have been idle during the past few years. The firm intend running the establishment at its full capacity.

The Price Current reports the number of hogs packed in Canada during the past winter at 157,932 hogs, against 135,775 for the previous winter. The summer packing was reported at 87,447 hogs, against 8 579 during the summer of 1878.

The exports of hog product from the seaboard for the week ending last Saturday amounted to 27,470 (bbls., against 26,187, 519 lbs for the preceding week, and 21,662, 154 lbs for the corresponding time last year. The gain over last year was mainly on lard.

An inquirer wants to know what is a "quarter" of wheat. The British quarter is a measure of capacity, not weight. Its capacity is eight bushels. When orders are filled from ships outside of the Atlantic for a given number of quarters, the quantity is 8 bu of 60 lbs for each quarter, or 480 lbs.

An American grain elevator has been taken to London and put to work. The Telegraph says:—"So strange a structure moored in the river causes much excitement among the water population, and the tower of corrugated zinc was supposed by some to be tin packing-cases going from Woolwich to bring home Cetewayo, while others took it for a new floating parish church."

The New York Tribune prints letters from the Philadelphia reporting to certain striking changes in the prices of coal and iron. Coal has risen one hundred per cent. within six months, and likely to rule high six months longer. Operators say they had to sell for less than first cost last year. The price of iron has fallen off from $5 to $3 per ton, restoring to the market health and vigor.

The forthcoming report of the Illinois Railroad and Warehouse Commission shows that at Chicago there are nineteen warehouses of class A, with a total capacity of storage capacity of 15,600,000 bushels. But on the purchase of the stores, their warehouses is only about 13,000,000 bushels. The increase in storage capacity during 1879 was 2,000,000 bushels.

The New York Times says it is probable that Gould and Vanderbilt are working together in harmony for the completion of Gould's idea of a grand railroad monopoly from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Gould slogan already hold over one-third of the capital stock of the Central. The consummation of any such scheme would of course be very injurious to the interests of the people, and it is to be hoped it will fail. Meantime the negotiations make it certain that the agitation for legislative action to regulate railroad rates began none too soon.

The New York Central syndicate has closed out the last of the 350,000 shares of stock purchased by Mr. Vanderbilt, last fall, and will soon divide the profits. It was bought at 1.20, and has sold at an average of 1.30. Jay Gould secured 50,000 of the shares disposed of yesterday, and is said to be looking up outside lots—with a view to becoming president of the Central. Mr. Vanderbilt has a proposition from him to purchase an additional block of 100,000 shares under consideration, and will give him an answer in thirty days.

The United Kingdom imported of wheat and flour reduced to wheat during the six months from Sept. 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, in round numbers, 77,500,000 cwt., of which the United States furnished 46,000, 000 bu, or about 62½ per cent. The London correspondent of the Financial Chronicle estimates that 350,000 quarters per week of imported wheat will be required for the remainder of the season. This would make 73,000,000 bu, and if this country should supply the same proportion of it that it did for the first half of the year, it would take from us 45,500,000 bu.

New York gas monopolists have concluded that Edison's inventions are not likely ever to interfere with their business, and have combined to increase the price of gas from 50 to 100 per cent., from $1.50 to $2.25 per 1,000 feet, or the old rate. An ostensible reason for this increase is that the price of labor and materials has advanced. The reason is that fear of competition in the supply of light has ceased. As long as the Municipal Gaslight Company was threatening to undersell its competitors in the supply of ordinary gas, and Edison's electric light threatened to supersede all gas, the gas companies could

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, April 14.—1 a. m.—Indications—For the Lower Lakes, increasing cloudiness, followed by rain or snow areas.

OUT OF TOWN.—His Honor Judge Davis is at present on circuit, holding Division Courts in Lambton, and will be out of the city for a few days.

PERSONAL.—Mr. John Wright, exchange broker, of this city, sails for England by the Glasgow line on the 15th inst., and will be absent about two months.

LAND SALE.—Messrs. Manville & Brown sold on the premises, yesterday, lot No. 17, in the 4th concession of London, containing 17 acres, for $1,800, to Mr. Wm. J. Hale.

POLICE COURT.—There was a decline in the market yesterday, and but one drunk was offered up to appease the greedy maw of dim-sighted Justice. Chas. Wright was his name, and he promised to be abstemious for evermore.

SENIOR.—On Monday morning the employes of the London Machine Screw Company struck for an advance in wages of 35 cents per day. It is probable that the advance demanded will be granted, and the strikers return to work in a day or two.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.—A pleasant entertainment took place in the above church Monday p.m. as the closing social of this conference year. After an excellent programme had been gone through with, an address was presented to Rev. Mr. Dimmick, the pastor, hoping that he would be retained to the congregation by the Conference.

HON. GEO. BROWN.—Yesterday's Globe says:—The impression that has got abroad that Mr. Brown has had a severe relapse is erroneous. No doubt the wound has proved more serious than was at first looked for, but the case is progressing as favorably as can be expected, and his medical advisers anticipate an early recovery.

VICTORIA HALL.—The sacred cantata of "Daniel" was sung by the choir in connection with St. Andrew's Church at this hall last night. A large audience was present, and the singing being full and effective, was highly appreciated. Several changes have been made in the singers since it was first sung in St. Andrew's Church, and in some respects it has improved. The stage assisted materially in making the singing more effective. Mr. E. Pinsmer presided at the organ.

IN OUR CITY.—Mr. R. W. Howes, who has been associated with Seavary, Foster & Bowman, of Boston, for many years, and favorably known to the citizens of London, has recently connected himself with the old and reliable firm of Belding Bros. & Co., of New York, and is spending a few days here in the interest of the branch manufacturing house of Belding, Paul & Co., of Montreal. Mr. Howes was the first man to introduce American sewing silks in Canada. His friends here will be pleased to hear of his success.

THE CHIEF ENGINEERSHIP.—The members of the Fire Department at a late meeting passed a motion regretting the step proposed to be taken by Chief Engineer Waitie in resigning command of the Brigade. They also decreed it their duty to request the Council to appoint Mr. John A. Rowe, the First Branchman of the Department, to the position about to be vacated. If Mr. Rowe is the man best fitted for the office, he should receive the appointment. If he is not, and many citizens question his ability to command the Department as it ought to be, then the appointment should be given to a man who possesses the necessary qualifications and also the confidence of the people.

MUSICAL AND LITERARY ENTERTAINMENT.—The Literary Society in connection with the B. C. church, London East, held their usual monthly open meeting Monday night, their efforts to amuse and instruct on that present being heartily appreciated. After the transaction of routine business, the Vice-President, Charles Crandell, was introduced an excellent programme, which comprised, in part, readings by Messrs. Hooper and Tease, solos by Misses Dinnel and Saunders, and a concertina solo by Mr. Lovejoy. The Society, which has a good membership, meets weekly, when varied interesting questions are made the subject of debate, any of the members who wish taking part therein. At a previous meeting it was decided that dancing had a greater tendency to immorality than novel reading. Messrs. C. Saunders and S. Bartlett leading the debate on the respectiveides.

Fast Time on the C. S. R.

The Canada Southern Railway was recently the scene of another remarkably rapid run. On Tuesday last the New York express, drawn by engine 32, Isaac Dayton engineer, left St. Thomas one hour and fifty minutes late, and this necessitated some fast running to make connections. The run from St. Thomas to Buffalo was made in two hours and forty minutes, including six stops, the train having reached the latter city forty minutes late, and these stops would average five minutes each. The actual running time for the entire distance—181 miles—was 180 minutes. The distance from St. Thomas to Fort Erie (118 miles) was passed over in 2 hours and 16 minutes, inclusive of five stops, and a portion of the journey, from Welland to Fort Erie (18 miles), was accomplished in 18 minutes.

The engine utilized upon this occasion—No. 29—has been recently fitted with an improvement, introduced by Mr. W. A. Short, master mechanic, which must prove a great boon to the train men. The new arrangement is a spark and cinder arrester, and appears to fulfil its object so perfectly that it is to be adopted upon both the Canada Southern and New York Central railways. It is placed within the smoke stack, and consists of a series of coiled springs so arranged that the sparks and cinders are broken so fine before striking the outer air as to be extinguished or rendered devoid of harm.

LOCAL NOTICES.

BEAUTIFUL imported socks and underclothing opened to-day—Garlick's.

THE BEST BIT.—If ever a firm deserved credit for push and enterprise the firm of Burns & Bapty carries the palm. You often hear, see and read of people getting out books with plates of the fashions. A few old cuts are displayed to make a show, and two or three dozen of them are sent around so that the public may look at and admire the vast enterprise (?). But mark the contrast. You find this firm publishing cuts that are new and fresh day by day, and placing them before a reading public through the medium that reaches thousands upon thousands, showing the style and cut at a glance. By this method you can see exactly how your boys will look in this or that cut of garment, and the prices are such that they cannot be beat at home or abroad—unless Burns & Bapty do the work. There is no "staff" in this notice. It is all—nearly all—hard-pan fact.

You will save money by buying your underclothing and socks at Garlick's, 174 Dundas St.

..The Baroness Burdett-Coutts gave a supper on the night of March 29 to about 120 costermongers and their wives at Bandbery street, St. Pancrafds, in connection with a costermongers' benefit and loan club of which she is patroness. The Baroness, who presided, addressed her guests. The costermonger, she said, was a necessity of modern times, and, taking as a whole, he was a respectable and respected member of the community.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The Fire, Water and Gas Committee meet this evening for business.

The robins continue to wear a red rag around their throats these mornings. They are seattle.

From to-day the Great Western Railway engines will be supplied with water from the city works.

About a hundred sprinkling carts could have been used to advantage on some of the unwatered streets yesterday.

William Henderson and John McFadden were "roosters" at the Central Station last night on the charge of drunkenness.

The Rev. Mr. Kinmouth, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., has been called to the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Brantford.

The ladies' mass meeting in the Victoria Hall this afternoon should be largely attended. Mrs. Harvey, of Toronto, will speak on Christian work.

Robert Johnston was charged by Charles Brown with assaulting him in the neighborhood of the G. W. R. Station. He will appear to answer the charge on the 14th.

Thirteen cars of general freight passed through here early yesterday morning for St. Boniface, Manitoba. It was principally from Toronto and eastern points.

Mr. Richard Gibson, of Ilderton, the well-known cattle breeder, purposes leaving for England on Monday next, intending to sail in the Gallia on the following Wednesday.

Mr. Fred. Tepper, bookkeeper for Mr. Wm. Wyatt, tinsmith, purposes leaving for Winnipeg this evening. He has heaps of friends in London who will be glad to hear of Fred's success.

Milkmen in other cities have reduced the price of milk to four cents per quart, and if the London dealers don't make a move shortly in the same direction there'll be "twigs on the green."

Dr. Edwards, of London, and Dr. Hyde, of Stratford, are candidates for the representation of the Elgin District of the Provincial Medical Council. The election takes place on the first of May.

The Roscommon (Mich.) Pioneer says that Mr. John L. Smyth (son of Mr. J. B. Smyth, of this city), was elected Treasurer of Higgins township, Roscommon county, by a majority of 295 over his opponent.

Mr. Wm. Taylor, formerly of London, who has been assisting the Collector of Customs at St. Thomas during the winter months, has left for Port Burwell, to resume his duties as collector at that port.

Mr. Wm. J. Howard, formerly the FREE PRESS correspondent at St. Thomas, and who has been studying medicine at Ann Arbor, Mich., for some time past, was married a week since to Miss Maud Kelsey, of that city.

It has been decided by all the proprietors of stove foundries in Hamilton to advance the wages of moulders 10 per cent, commencing on next Saturday, thus putting the men on the same footing they were on in 1875.

The Globe and Mail managers having failed in coercing Chief Justice Wilson into changing the venue of the Biddulph murder trial to Toronto, wired their representatives here to come home immediately. And they left, thoroughly disgusted.

"The London Truer says that the Liberal victories in England fill Canadian Liberals with delight. If only the Liberals to be found in the Grit ranks are to be filled, it wouldn't take a very large cargo of delight to fill them all to overflowing."—Guelph Herald.

The Chapter House entertainment to be given this evening at Dufferin Ottleys promises to be of a really pleasant nature. Some of the characters in the play are to be represented in a life-like way, while the musical portion of the programme is in good hands.

A colored man named Benjamin Lives was arrested yesterday afternoon by Detective Pusic for stealing a pair of pants from George Norris. Remanded for examination until the 14th. William Lackey will also appear to-day at the Police Court for assaulting Thomas Dearing.

During the present Assizes the members of the press have had occasion to appreciate the unremitting kindness of His Lordship Chief Justice Wilson and the efficient short-hand reporter, Mr. Tyson. In every instance where assistance could be afforded, it was cheerfully given.

A correspondent sends us the following, which he evidently considers pretty good:

Upon a soldier's new spatterdash
An April snow-flake chanced to fall;
It slept upon its narrow bed
A moment—that was all.
How like your pluck and April snow,
Thought I, do pleasures come and go.

The Detroit Tribune feels like calling Hon. Frank Hurd, of Toledo, the individual who wants Congress to pass a law prohibiting American cars from passing through Canada, an "ath." We'll do it for the Trib. Now, Frank, bring on your libel And so also in criminal cases, as some of the authorities which was referred to in the argument Suit if you're caught on this side of the river it will go hard with you.

The Tiger man is vexed, because his opinion was not deemed of sufficient importance to be worth quoting in the matter of the change of venue. Never mind, Mollie, as you grow older you may prefer the opinions of more importances in other people's eyes than you are in your own at the present time.

The Tiger sneers at Mr. James Dunbar, who it alleges has been given the position of Assistant Appraiser in the Customs Department. Probably in the matter of "French silks, ostrich feathers," and sich, Mr. Dunbar is as well qualified to judge of their value as either Mr. Reid, or our very dear friend Mr. Miller. The public think so.

Isn't it strange that a young lady will nestle her head on the shoulder of a young man who is burning cheap smoking tobacco rolled up in a piece of white paper and disguised as a cigarette, but later in life will shrink from him and shun up her nose simply because he happens to be consuming the same material in a highly colored clay pipe. And yet the smell is precisely the same in both cases. It is a great injustice to the time-honored clay pipe to make this discrimination rroceedings at the Adjourned Meetings.

ST. JAMES CHURCH, LONDON SOUTH.

The adjourned Easter vestry meeting in connection with the above church was held last Monday night. The meeting was opened with devotional exercises by the pastor, Rev. Evans Davis.

The auditors, Messrs. W. Moore and J. Overell, presented their report, which was very satisfactory, and for which they received a unanimous vote of thanks from the vestry. The income of the church during the year was shown to be over $2 000, and the balance in hand was $68.

On motion of Mr. John Beale, seconded by Mr. R. W. Hungerford, it was unanimously resolved to request His Lordship the Bishop of Huron to appoint the Parish of St. James a Synodical Rectory, in compliance with Canon XII., which states that "every parish which contributes not less than $800 per annum towards the stipend of its clergyman, and provides him with a suitable residence, or its equivalent, shall be classed as a Rectory, and its clergyman entitled to be styled Rector."

A communication from St. Luke's Church, London East, was received and tyled.

After a discussion on routine matters, the meeting was closed by the benediction.

FIRES IN THE WEST.

Five Buildings Destroyed in Wardsville —A Bake Factory Burned in Exeter.

A fire took place in Wardsville on Monday night, which destroyed five buildings. The whole is about $6,000, partly insured.

Between six and seven o'clock yesterday morning A. Cook's cake factory, stable and a small dwelling house, situated about half a mile south of Exeter, were burned to the ground. The fire originated from a stove upstairs. Insured for $400 in the Ontario Mutual, of this city. Quite a lot of goods were saved.

THE SPRING ASSIZES.

Application for Change of Venue Refused.

The Chief Justice's Judgment.

Trial Postponed Until a Future Day.

Tuesday, April 13.

The court resumed this afternoon shortly before two o'clock. The court-room was filled with people, and considerable interest and speculation was manifested as to the purport of the decision to be delivered by His Lordship on the application for a change of venue.

At two o'clock the prisoners were brought up from jail to the court room, amidst the flutter of excitement which usually characterises the movements of prisoners charged with heinous crimes. They were under the care of six constables, handcuffed separately, and locked particularly neat and cleanly.

Mr. Irving, Q. C., the Crown prosecutor, arose and said—My Lord, the prisoners Carroll and others are now in court.

His Lordship Chief Justice Wilson said, Mr. Irving, Q. C., on behalf of the Crown, moved, before issue joined on the bills found by the Grand Jury against the said parties for murder, to change the place of trial under the 32 and 33 Vic., cap. 29, sec. 11, D, because "it is expedient to the ends of justice that the trial of those parties, charged with felony, should be held in some county other than that in which the offence is supposed to have been committed, or would otherwise be tried." The motion was founded upon the affidavits of Mr. Hutchinson, the Crown Attorney for the Co. of Middlesex, and W. T. T. Williams, Chief Constable of the city of London. The latter affidavit is confined to expressions of feeling in different forms, made in the township of Biddulph, from which he infers a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in this county. Mr. Hutchinson states as follows:—(The learned Judge read a portion of the Crown Attorney's affidavit.) Affidavits have been filed by Macmahon, Q. C., and Meredith, Q. C., in answer, namely:—

1. By Donald Mackenzie, of the township of London, the foreman of the Grand Jury which found the bills against the prisoners, who has resided there for the past twenty years.

2. By Josiah Blackburn, managing director of the FREE PRESS Printing Company, and editor of the FREE PRESS, who has been proprietor in part for the past 25 years.

3. Dr. Hanson, who has practiced his profession for 26 years in the townships of London and Westminster.

4. John McDougall, of Lobo, who has resided in this county for the past 18 years.

5. John Morgan, of Adelaide, who has resided in the county for the past 40 years.

6. Daniel Regan, who has resided in the city of London for 24 years past.

7. James Armstrong, of Westminster, who has resided there for the past 40 years.

8. Hugh Mackenzie, Q.C.

All of which show in substance that a fair and impartial trial can be had in the county; and several of the affidavits state that the deponents have heard many persons express their detestation of the murder of the Donnelly family. Besides these affidavits, James Carroll, John Kennedy, Martin McLoughlin, Thomas Ryder and Patrick Farrell state what relations they have in this county, and that they cannot affect the fairness of any trial in which these deponents are concerned. It is shown also by affidavit that there are fifteen townships, several villages and the city of London which constitute the county of Middlesex, and while the population of the county is about 90,000 the population of Biddulph is rather less than 2,500; that the number of jurors selected to serve is sufficiently large to permit an impartial jury being summoned, and that the county covers an area of forty by thirty miles.

It is embarrassing at all times to deal with conflicting statements. I shall, therefore, consider in the first place what are the legal rights of the respective parties. The Crown has the right to try in any Court which it may select every cause in which it is concerned, whether as prosecutor or as defending it, or as plaintiff or defendant; and even in cases in which it is no party, the Attorney-General may suggest that the Crown is interested on one side or the other, and by so doing the young contrived the Court in which the cause shall be tried. When the Court has been selected by the Crown, it must proceed by motion, and leave of the Court, to have the trial held in any other than the ordinary place where the venue is laid and is triable, as in ejectment, in case of the Attorney-General vs. Churchill, 6 M. & W., 171. Attorney-Gen. vs. Crossman, L. R. 1 Ex. 381 386 and so also in criminal cases, as some of the authorities which was referred to in the argument Suit if you're caught on this side of the river it will go hard with you. Regina vs. Hepburn, jun., 841, the defendant's counsel moved for leave to enter a suggestion for removing the trial from Middlesex to London. The latter affidavit is confined to expressions of feeling in different forms, made in the township of Biddulph, from which he infers a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in this county. Mr. Hutchinson states as follows:—(The learned Judge read a portion of the Crown Attorney's affidavit.) Affidavits have been filed by Macmahon, Q. C., and Meredith, Q. C., in answer, namely:—

SHAKESPEARE'S BIRTHPLACE.

New York, May 3.—A special from London to the Herald says:—"Stratford-on-Avon is to have a dramatic fete in honor of the 316th anniversary of the birthday of Shakespeare. Barry Sullivan has undertaken to give a three weeks' season in the Memorial Theatre, assisted by a company of well-meaning ladies and gentlemen."

POPULAR PASTIMES.

Parliament excites but little interest while the new members are being sworn in. The populace amuses itself by following and cheering Mr. Gladstone whenever they see him, as they formerly followed and cheered Lord Beaconsfield. Occasionally the performance is diversified by hooting at a few stray Zulus who are sometimes seen in the streets.

DISCOMFITED PARNELLITES.

Mr. Gladstone's appointments receive no special consideration. The appointment of Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Dilke has, however, completely upset the plans of the Parnellites, who counted upon a purely Whig Cabinet, and consequently expected aid from the malcontent Radicals.

"WET."

It is said that Robt. Lowe, having heard somebody remark "that history does not record such promotion as that of Montague Corry to be Baron," replied, "That is not so strange! Lord Beaconsfield had a good precedent. Did not Caligula make his horse a pro-consul?"

THE "HANDS-OFF" POLICY.

Mr. Gladstone has neither tailed nor post-carded during the week. His "hands off" policy has called too much of a disturbance. Austrian rentes have fallen during the week, and it is learned that Count Karolyi will really leave London sine die. In fact, Gladstone has made

AUSTRIA JUSTLY INDIGNANT.

The Croat newspaper Sclavis publishes an article in Croatesan, French and Italian, setting forth the great hopes excited among the Southern Slavs. The article says:—"It is time that the Croatians should also deliver their country from the tyranny of Austria, and if the Balkan federation becomes a reality, they will sing, along with the name of the Czar, the glory of Gladstone."

A certain degree of uneasiness is felt at Vienna, owing to a meeting of the heads of the Italia Irredenta party at Venice, which is the headquarters of the Italian as well as the Albanian agitators.

A BALKAN FEDERATION.

Anthony J. Mundella, Vice-President of the Council, in an interview which is published, declares that the Liberal leaders decline to bring about a Balkan Federation.

A correspondent of the Vienna Allgemeni Zeitung interviewed Lord Derby this after noon. The latter is evidently anxious to neutralize Gladstone's lack of caution. He said:—I have not been initiated into the policy of the Government, but I presume all treaties will be carried out. Austria stands on a legal footing in Bosnia, and since as she tends no further with ward England has no reason for interference. I, of course, desire that we may stand on the best of footing with Austria. England has but little interest in the Balkan States which is affected by Austria or Russia. England's interest lies rather in the neighborhood of Constantinople. England has but little inclination toward an Anglo-German alliance, as an intimate alliance with Germany would disturb her friendship with France, which has been consolidated during the course of twenty-five years. The high value which England sets on Bismarck personally as a statesman would not persuade her to trust him turning away the stream of English policy.

TURKEY CANNOT BE SAVED,

and the sooner her end comes the better for the world. Cyprus, however, must remain under English protection. If Turkey will not hand over duties in Asia Minor England will leave her to herself. The whole affair of Afghanistan is a great mistake. The State must be neutral, and form a bulwark against Russia. No alliance with Persia is possible, because of the false and treacherous character of that monarchy." In conclusion, Lord Derby said that Mr. Gladstone said before him, "The formation of the Cabinet must not serve as a criterion of what we are to expect from the policy of England." It is believed this statement will tend to allay the excitement in Vienna.

BRADLAUGH'S AFFIRMATION.

London, May 1.—The difficulty about Chas. Bradlaugh, the Liberal and atheist, returned to the House for Northampton, taking the oath of allegiance, has not been settled. He is willing to make affirmation, but the Speaker of the House have not agreed whether that will be admissible, and it may be necessary to appoint a committee to consider the question, which is within the inclusive control of the House.

PRINCE LEOPOLD'S VISIT TO CANADA.

London, May 2.—Prince Leopold leaves on May 15th, accompanied by Hon. Alex. Yorke and Dr. Rhyl. He will first visit his sister at Ottawa, and then follow a route including St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Washington, New York and Newport. He will spend four months in America.

THE ADVANCED LIBERALS AND THE CABINET.

New York, May 2.—The Tribune's cables say Sir Charles Dilke politely, but peremptorily, declined the Under-Secretaryship offered him by Mr. Gladstone. He refused absolutely to accept a subordinate post outside a Cabinet containing no representative of the Radical wing of the party, and assured Gladstone that he and Chamberlain were acting in concert. After numerous consultations the Whigs saw the necessity of yielding, and Gladstone informed Dilke that he accepted his terms and would make Chamberlain President of the Board of Trade, promoted Dilke took the Under-Secretaryship for Foreign Affairs. Dilke instantly agreed, and Chamberlain was thereupon summoned, and accepted. Two days of dead lock was was thus terminated.

THE "PALL MALL GAZETTE."

Frederick Greenwood, the retiring editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, will be succeeded by Henry Yates Thompson, a well known and accomplished political economist, and the proprietor's son-in-law.

B. A. A. BANQUET.

London, May 2.—The usual banquet given by the Council of the Royal Academy of Art took place on Saturday night. The Prince of Wales, replying to the toast, "The Royal Family," alluded to the work of the Duke of Edinburgh in Ireland. He said his brother had had an opportunity of taking supplies from the Constabulary—that gallant ship sent over by our American cousins, who are so noble and generous. Mr. Gladstone replied to the toast "To Her Majesty's Ministers." The President of the Academy, Sir Frederick Leighton, in proposing the toast "Science and Literature," took occasion to welcome Bret Harte, who responded in a humorous speech, and was much cheered.

London, May 2.—A Cabinet Council was summoned to day.

APPOINTMENTS.

Lord Wolverston has been appointed Paymaster-General, and Osborne Morgan, Judge Advocate General.

GREENWOOD AND THE "GAZETTE."

Mr. Greenwood, retiring editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, says:—"We do not purpose to allow our independent paper to be extinguished. Its spirit resides in us, and will soon reappear in a new shape. Hoping to redeem our paper from a threatened assignment, I formally offered a large sum for the copyright, which was refused."

The proprietor of the Pall Mall Gazette denies that his paper henceforward will be a Ministerial journal.

SWORN IN.

More than two-thirds of the members-elect of the House of Commons are now sworn in.

The Post warmly eulogizes Greenwood, and regrets his departure from the Pall Mall Gazette.

FRANCE.

PRINCE JEROME AND HIS WIFE.

Paris, May 1.—Prince Jerome Napoleon has informed two of his most intimate counsellors that the Princess Clotilda, his wife, sister of the King of Italy, has at length consented to return to him, and will shortly arrive here.

TWENTY PERSONS KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION.

Paris, May 2.—In an explosion yesterday at Paulin in Honoreal Fire Works 52e manufactory building was demolished. The surrounding houses were shaken to their foundations. It is believed that twenty persons were killed or dangerously wounded. A fresh explosion was feared, owing to the large quantity of gun powder stored on the premises.

ITALY.

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS.

Rome, May 1.—The Italian Ministerial situation remains unchanged. The King has not yet accepted the resignation of Cairoli. He is consulting with the leaders of all sections.

DISSOLUTION OF THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Rome, May 2.—The King has signed the decree dissolving the Chamber of Deputies. The elections will be held May 16th. The new Chamber meets May 24th.

RUSSIA.

DENIAL.

St. Petersburg, May 2.—The Official Messenger denies the statement that General Mollhoff has been negotiating with the Poles.

GERMANY.

BISMARCK'S BAD HEALTH.

London, May 2.—A Berlin despatch says owing to Prince Bismarck's nervous system being much over-strained, the physicians of his family urge his temporary retirement from State affairs, and it is expected that he will take a long leave of absence.

Death of a Successful Impostor.

New York, May 2.—A man died at the hospital here on March 12th, who claimed to be the powerful Legitimist, Baron de Chesnoy, and that he was driven from France in 1866 by Louis Napoleon's jealousy and malice. He brought considerable money to this country, entered the best society and lived luxuriously. Finally the money was all spent, and the baron, under the name of Doctor Hector Carlos, taught for a living. Being greatly reduced in means he borrowed $20,000 to $40,000 in various sums from credulous and sympathetic ladies. It is said he was once engaged to the grand daughter of ex President Tyler, but the match was broken off because he was bankrupt. After the baron's death a lady appeared who claimed the alleged baron was her husband, Charles Haase, hair-dresser, of Treves, in Prussia. She stated he had deserted her and went to England, and under pretence of being a French gentleman of high family, married an English lady, when, after obtaining all her property, he abandoned her. Mrs. Haase supports her story by voluminous affidavits and exhibits. The so-called baron was noted for suave and dignified bearing, and was once popular in society here.

The Hanlan-Courtney Race.

Auburn, May 1.—Courtney starts for Washington May 10th. He does not think it necessary to use his new rig to beat Hanlan.

New York, May 2.—The Tribune's Washington special says:—Hanlan states that he has no idea what Courtney's new mechanical appliance is, and doesn't care for it anyhow, as he intends to win. Hanlan objects to Riley as a third contestant, on the ground that he wants to row with Courtney alone. Riley and Courtney being friends, they might work together to make it unpleasant for him. As the matter stands Riley will not row, unless one of the contestants fails to appear.

New York, May 2.—Courtney's "secret rig," by means of which he hopes to win the race with Hanlan, is said to be a peculiar pair of oars made for him by a firm in this city.

New York, May 1.—The Herald says the impression is fast gaining ground that something will happen to prevent the contest between Hanlan and Courtney.

...The ingenious person whose dislike for gambling led him to put a stop to it in a singular way at Monte Carlo has not yet been discovered. His other object, that of robbing the strong box of the dealer's bank in the confusion that followed the explosion, was frustrated by the coolness of the functionary in charge. He is too well used, no doubt, to seeing and hearing unlucky gamesters shoot themselves to be much moved by a mere detonation even when it is produced by a joyful of dynamite. Hence, although all the windows in the saloon were blown out, the looking-glasses smashed, and half the furniture in the place broken and upset, the banker calmly held on to his money, and when the author of this frightful commotion went for the strong box he encountered only the mouth of a revolver and a derisive smile. Such is the fate of persons who organize themselves into a society for the suppression of vice without studying before critical action the idiosyncracies and accomplishments of the criminals. The individual in question may, however, improve. He certainly evinced uncommon sagacity in the promptness with which he accepted the situation. The gambling-room was crowded at the time of the explosion, and the man finding the treasure of the establishment so well guarded made off with great celerity. Some of his confederates had meanwhile robbed the only person playing who had won any considerable sum, so that, as the whole party succeeded in making their escape, the plot had a measure of success after all. The next time this Italian inventor puts his pretty device in operation he will probably place his dynamite immediately under the chair of the dealer. The explosion in that event may be trusted to upset the equanimity of the ice blooded banker of Monte Carlo, and, so far as it is given us to judge, assuredly nothing less than such a procedure could do so.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Special from our own Correspondent.

Ottawa, May 2.—The Boundary Committee will have a special session to-morrow. Their report will be, it is thought, against the Ontario contention and the award of the arbitrators. When the document is printed it will contain a mass of most interesting historical matter not hitherto made public.

A number of members of the House leave for their respective constituencies to-morrow and next day, in view of the anticipated prorogation on Monday.

Mr. Marshall Wood is preparing a wall painting for the Senate Chamber to take the place of the picture of Her Majesty, recently removed to the Commons.

The Committee of the two Houses on Printing meets to-morrow.

The probability is that the House will take some action, before it rises, in the direction of obtaining an equitable arrangement in connection with the Scott Act, but whether it will pass its amendments before the end of the session is exceedingly problematical.

SUICIDE AT WOODSTOCK.

George Wood's Attempts to Murder His Family.

He Cuts His Throat while in Custody —Thos. Naggs' Mistake.

Woodstock, Ont., May 1.—Several days ago a farmer living in the country a short distance south of here, named George Wood, was brought up before the Police Magistrate here for attempting to murder his family. He told his wife in the morning that he had been thinking about it all night, and then procuring a hatchet made the attempt on their lives, but was overcome by his wife and daughter. The Police Magistrate sentenced him to jail, and this morning he snatched an old knife dropped accidentally by a vagrant in custody, and cut his throat, dying in about two minutes. He was insane.

Thomas Naggs, from the country, blew out the gas in his bed-room at the Commercial Hotel last night. A boarder hearing a noise in his room about four this morning, became alarmed, and on breaking open the door Naggs was found nearly dead. He is expected to recover.

HON. GEO. BROWN.

His Condition Becoming Still More Alarming.

For Dominion Line.

Toronto, May 2.—Hon. Geo. Brown's condition to-day is the subject of grave alarm to his friends. He has been in a high state of delirium all day, and can take hardly any nourishment. Delirium at this stage, with such an enfeebled constitution, is considered very alarming.

Rev T. W. Handford's Resignation.

Trouble in Getting the Bond Street Pulpit Filled Yesterday.

Toronto, May 2.—Handford's congregation met to night, and after a long debate it was decided to hold the question of accepting his resignation of pastor over for the present and until after the report of the Special Committee, which commences its meeting on Monday night.

A very large congregation assembled at Bond street church this morning, but the Rev. Mr. Handford did not put in an appearance. This conduct has greatly exasperated his followers.

For Dominion Line.

Toronto, May 2.—A meeting of the deacons of the Bond street Congregational church was held on Saturday night, at which it was announced that Mr. Handford declined to fill the pulpit on Sunday. Two deacons, Messrs. Beckett and Thompson, were appointed to make arrangements to have the pulpit filled. Before the meeting adjourned they reported that they had seen two gentlemen, who had agreed to preach to the congregation on Sunday. One of the two gentlemen referred to was Mr. Briggs and Dr. Dewart. both Methodists, declined to fill the pulpit. There was no service in the church this morning. In the evening a prayer meeting was held. The Committee appointed to investigate the charges will visit Mr. Handford at his residence to-morrow.

LATEST FROM TORONTO

Toronto, May 1.—After the police left their beat at 4 o'clock this morning, some party at present unknown broke a pane of glass in the window of Foster's hardware store, King street east, and crawling through, stole about $100 worth of knives, forks, spoons, revolvers, and other articles.

It is scarcely likely that Mr. Handford can continue pastor of Bond Street Church. The ladies of the congregation continue enthusiastic of him, but the men insist on his leaving, or at least having the charge of immoral conduct sifted thoroughly.

Robt. Hay, jr., son of Robt. Hay, of the large furniture store on King street, died this morning, at the age of 30, in the General Hospital.

Toronto, May 2.—Mr. E. G. Cathbertson, book-keeper at Messrs. Gage & Co., booksellers, died suddenly at his home, Alexander street, this morning of heart disease.

During the past month there were 180 interments in the four city burying grounds.

The morning newspapers will publish a statement of DeCourcier, the convicted murderer of his brother, that all the circumstances in connection with his brother and himself would have been fully brought out at the trial, and that if they had, they would have fully shown that the provocation which caused the murder of Edward was greater than appeared by the evidence. He was surprised at the verdict, and fully expected that the jury would give more weight to the evidence of the strong provocation he claims he had received at the hands of his brother.

A Bishop's Opinion of Long Cassocks.

Quebec, May 2.—In all the R. C. Churches to-day, at high mass, a lengthy pastoral was read from the Archbishop of Quebec against all excursion and pleasure parties, evening walks, drives, &c., on Sundays or fete days, under pain of very grievous sin. The pastoral, in regretting the long duration of conversion or company-keeping among young people, speaks of the impure thoughts and immorality which result from the lengthy walks or sittings which often occur on Sunday. The pastoral has created considerable excitement here.

Great Western Railway.

Reported Lease to the Wabash Line.

Detroit, May 2.—To-morrow's Free Press will contain the following:—A special despatch from Washington gives the following important intelligence. It was known that negotiations were in progress, and Mr. Joy's visit to England had much to do with the matter. The following is the despatch received Saturday night:

According to a telegram received to-day by Representative Newberry, the Wabash Road has secured a lease of the Great Western Railway of Canada.

Commenting on this important fact, Congressman Newberry has written to your correspondent that he has no doubt this lease will inevitably result in a connection of the great Wabash system with the Great Western at Detroit by means of the Baltor Extension to Detroit, and that the Lake Ontario & Western, and New York & Oswego Midland, from Lewiston to New York city, will make the competing link in the chain running from San Francisco to New York city, through a line independent of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, Thomas L. Scott and John W. Garrett.

Congressman Newberry thinks that though Mr. Hurd may not have been privy to the design, yet one object of the introduction of the "Hurd Bill was probably to defeat the lease of the Great Western to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific.

THE CANADIAN MINISTER IN ENGLAND.

One would have thought that an office so likely to result in benefit to this country as that of a quasi Minister, or diplomatic agent, at the seat of the Imperial Government would have evoked but little discussion. Granted that a judicious selection be made of a Canadian Commissioner to represent our interests in Britain, it takes a man of an imagination quite as vivid as that of the Hon. Edward Blake to see dangers to our civil liberties, and a proud, irresponsible oligarchy overriding our Canadian Parliament and imposing its will upon the counsels of the nation, whether the nation be willing or unwilling, approve or disapprove. Bugbears of this kind are only fit to excite laughter and ridicule, and the man whose mind can, in good faith, conjure up political spectres of this kind is altogether out of his element in a Canadian Legislature. It is really singular that a gentleman possessed of the mental powers ascribed to Mr. Blake, should have delivered himself of such a tissue of absurdities and permitted his imagination to play such fantastic tricks with his better judgment, as we find in this remarkable speech of his on the subject of the Galt appointment. He has allowed his fancy to conjure up standing armies in Canada, naval reserves, and breathing fortifications all along and around our borders and coasts, and these raised, equipped and supported by the Ministry of the day and their London agent, without the representatives of the people being consulted or even knowing anything of the matter. He professes still a desire to see this country furnish its contingent to the debating power of St. Stephens, and then, and not till then, would he consent to send our Canadian heroes to win fresh laurels even at the cannon's mouth, and fight in blood to the knees on behalf of a federated empire. This view of a very plain, prosaic, business question might delight the hearts of a juvenile debating club, but it must have occasioned a strange feeling when addressed to the "potent, grave, and reverend seigniors" who grace our legislative halls at Ottawa.

Mr. Mackenzie was in one of his bitterest moods, and, considering his recent failures, and the trying ordeal through which he has recently passed, one can easily account for his cynical disposition and snarling style. It is now the fashion with Opposition speakers to indulge in disparaging remarks respecting the judgment and ability of Sir A. T. Galt, but this amounts to but little in the eyes of Canadians, as he stands head and shoulders above any man in their ranks, the new leader not excepted. Mr. Mackenzie in his pursuit of a power in which he knows not how to use, should always be careful to avoid a course injurious to the interests of his adopted country. If the new Government, just inaugurated in England, can be led to entertain opinions favorable to this country, and we can see no reason why they should not, then it is in the highest degree injudicious for an ex-Premier of the Dominion to deliberately undertake to stir up a feeling of personal hostility in the minds of the British Cabinet Ministers against the Canadian Agent, and there to watch over and endeavor to promote the interests of this country. There was nothing in Sir A. T. Galt's speech, delivered at Montreal, that ought to militate against the success of his mission to England, and no opinion was expressed by him that Mr. Gladstone has not heard and that he will not hear stated and reiterated even by many of his own party. Every question touched upon is ripe and ready for public discussion, and one and all of them that relate to English politics and trade, will find able and willing advocates among English economists and statesmen, while the number will increase every year. It is absurd, therefore, to assume, that this free expression of his own opinions on public and controverted subjects, should prejudice Sir Alexander Galt in the estimation of British statesmen, or this country on his return. Mackenzie takes a pleasure in the thought, that the Imperial Government will treat the Canadian resident Agent as a kind of subordinate departmental clerk, why the pleasure is a cheap one, and it may perhaps tend to neutralize the acidity of his disposition for an hour or two, and so afford relief and respite to the House and his friends for a brief period.

Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Leonard Tilley contented themselves with showing the importance they attached to such an office as regards emigration, commerce, finance and other questions that will be constantly cropping up, and which will be more promptly and successfully dealt with by a Canadian representative on the spot, than is possible in any other way. The circumstances in which this country stands at present, make such an appointment peculiarly necessary, and these circumstances are not likely to change for some years. The relations between this country and England are not likely to decrease in importance nor become less numerous as time rolls along, and with the reverse, and the increasing importance and intimacy of these relations, the necessity of such an officer at the seat of Government of the Empire becomes the more pressing. As respects the selection made, it is quite enough to say that, had the choice been left to the people themselves, the selection of Sir A. T. Galt would have been most certain; and what is more—had the choice fallen into the hands of the present Opposition, Sir Alexander Galt would have been the man. The office is one which the interests of this country require and the present incumbent is just the man for the place.

Spence Fettis, the noted forger, who committed suicide in Concord prison last Friday, was one of the most remarkable criminals this continent has produced. He was educated at Columbia College, and graduated with high honor. At one time in his career he wrote leading editorial articles for the New York Times, and was generally regarded as an able writer and thinker. It has been stated by those competent to judge that Fettis' incarceration was worth $1,000,000 to Wall street men, as since that time no schemes of such magnitude as he was wont to carry out have been perpetrated upon the business community. His wife died about two years ago, and since that he has been more or less deranged. He was sent to prison in 1874 on a ten-year sentence for forgery on Matthew Bolles & Co., Boston, for $5,000.

Some of the Oneida Communists lately suppressed in New York State have immigrated to Canada, and settled down near Niagara Falls. While popular sentiment in this country is decidedly adverse to such associations, there is no law prohibiting them. The women have discarded the Oneida uniform, and dress as other females, and the neighbors thus far have found no cause to complain of the deportment of the colony.

Montreal Gazette:—The resolution of gratitude and entire confidence must be extremely gratifying to Mr. Mackenzie just at this juncture. It reminds one strongly of the benevolence of the chivalrous highwayman, who, after stripping his victims, always dismissed them with a profound bow and a sixpence to pay the tolls.

LIQUID FUEL.

An interesting experiment was lately made on the Long Island Railway in running a locomotive without the aid of coal or wood as a steam generator. Similar attempts have been made in this country by using petroleum as fuel, but so far with only moderate success. In the present case a lignite-carbon retort was substituted for the ordinary grate. This had four separate compartments—two for water and two for oil. In the centre of the well of the tender a tank containing eight barrels of naphtha was placed and this was connected with the retort by four ordinary gas pipes. The principle upon which the apparatus works is as follows:—The retort has four separate compartments, and oil is let into two while water flows slowly into the other two. The quantity let in is small at first until the retort is brought to a sufficient heat to decompose the oil and change the water into superheated steam. When this is accomplished the expanding vapors or gases are forced through small jets, which are close to one another, and combine. This combination produces an almost pure hydrogen gas, the flame of which is of intense heat. Once the gas and dry steam begin to generate in the compartments all smoke or smell ceases and nothing but a pure blue or white flame is discernible. When the fire was first started the temperature of the water was eighty degrees, and inside of forty minutes the gauge registered twenty-five pounds of steam. The engine was then attached to a car and a run of six miles made. Once the train was started, only half the power of two of the compartments was necessary to make steam, so that there was a reserve in case of necessity of the other two compartments and half of the ones in use. Upon measuring the oil tank after the run it was found that three gallons had been consumed, showing the cost to be nine cents for six miles, the crude naphtha costing three cents per gallon. Those interested in the test expressed themselves fully satisfied with the result.

THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS.

The citizens would be very foolish to allow a matter purposely left in a confused state to prevent them from voting for the sale of the Grounds.—Advertiser, 1st.

That is one of the best reasons why the citizens will vote against the sale. If the matter is "left in a confused state" from the want of business capacity to make it plain, of itself would be a sufficient argument to kill the by-law. To say that it has been "purposely left in a confused state," is to exhibit the Board of Aldermen in the attitude of men who desire to panic the public and who are not "purposely left"! Is it to blind the eyes of the citizens to some ulterior object which the Board intend to spring upon the people only after they have been given power to deal absolutely with the matter? The public must be amazed at the apparent willingness of our contemporary to lead itself such glaring duplicity.

Ottawa correspondence Montreal Star:—"The member for West Durham has not unjustly been charged with a disregard for the feelings of others. He cuts people with indifference when a kindly nod, a word, or a friendly recognition would go very far towards securing their friendship. Whether this arises from a constitutional defect or not is hard to say. No man, no matter how capable he may be to understake the management of affairs, can ever hope to achieve a high measure of success who makes those about him uncomfort able in his presence and who neglects those amenities of life which the highest intellects cannot disregard with impunity. It may safely be asserted that Sir John A. Macdonald owes by far the greater portion of his influence over the party he leads to his personal charm of manner—his bonhomie, as the French say. Now this is something which Mr. Blake neglects persistently. Very many persons who occupy positions socially and every other way, except politically, are anxious to show their appreciation of Mr. Blake by that personal attention, but his cold, repulsive manner, like a sister absorption seems to keep him from consolidating a personal following. He moves about like a self-satisfied iceberg, giving everybody a chill, if not a severe cold, that he comes across. The consequence is that he misses more opportunities of acquiring popularity than any man that ever appeared in the political arena of Canada."

Detroit Tribune:—To say that the Hurd Bill is necessary as a safeguard against smuggling is to advance a false reason for a bad law. Take the question of whisky. The statement of the Committee that "smugglers have frequently availed themselves of the time-seal cars in which American produce is transported through Canada), and that many of the worst frauds upon the revenue are perpetrated in that way," has no foundation in fact so far as the official records here show. In 1870 there were fifty-eight cases of this smuggling reported to the United States District Attorney in Detroit. Two of these were by passengers who smuggled each ten bottles of champagne. The third was the case of a porter on a sleeping car. In the same year a conspiracy was discovered (embracing a freight conductor and some parties in Boston and Chicago) to smuggle goods by the freight trains of one of the Canada roads. But since 1871 there has been no charge made in the eastern district of Michigan of smuggling, or of attempting to smuggle, by the freight trains of any of the Canada roads. Nor is there any reason to believe that any such attempt has been made during the past nine years. And what is undoubtedly true of the western ends of these lines is probably also true of the eastern ends. The whole question of smuggling is a problem. There is nothing in it, and the fact that so shallow a pretence is urged for the passage of a bad law seems to prove how feeble are the supports of fact and argument that justify it.

A Washington dispatch, dated May 1st, says:—"The denial that cruisers are soon to be sent to the Canadian fishing grounds needs correction, since two ships are now fitting for that service, and will be held in readiness awaiting further developments. There is nothing of a hostile nature in such a move. Before the Treaty of Washington was ratified it was customary to keep a vessel on the fishing grounds during the season and they were withdrawn, not because the treaty called for it, but for the reason that it was supposed all rights granted by the treaty would be promptly accorded to our fishermen. The action of the men at Fortune Bay and the unexpected action of the English authorities in regard to the matter are regarded as excellent reasons for again sending our cruisers into Newfoundland waters."

Does Russia really suffer more from the plague and from famine than she owns did, or does this only seem to be the fact because the telegraph gives so frequent details of this nature? We are told that the plague has burst out afresh in the Volga district, and it also prevails in the Saratoff country. Famine, moreover, is reported to be ravaging the banks of the Don. All the granaries are said to be empty, and the people are destitute of money. Deaths from starvation are said to be in many quarters a constant occurrence. What with her political grief, the plague and famine, the misery of Russia could scarcely, to appearance, be exceeded. It is little wonder that people seek to flee from a country that many now hold to be accursed.

Referring to the late speech by Mr. Blake, the Victoria Warder says:—"Last week we characterized the speech referred to as lacking in patriotism, nor do we feel inclined to alter exception in that respect. The Post lands Mr. Blake to the seventh heaven and speaks of him as a friend of Confederation, when it is very well known that all his utterances have been quite in a contrary direction. If he had his own way—which, happily for the country he has not—he would disrupt the Confederation of the Provinces and let each one look out for itself. The mention of British Columbia seems to have the same effect upon him as the sight of a red rag is said to have on a bull."

AN EDITOR PANTING SHOT AT THE ENGLISH LIBERALS AND AMERICAN PEOPLE.

London May 1.—The Pall Mall Gazette's leader, which may be regarded as editor Greenwood's valedictory, is a bitter protest against the political immorality which seeks to blot apprehensions regarding the new Government's foreign policy by assurances that it will not differ materially from that of its predecessor.

In an article headed "A First Snub," the Pall Mall Gazette says:—"It is somewhat significant that the advent of the Liberal party to power should have been seized upon by the American people as the occasion on which they might offer with impunity a slight to England. It was under Gladstone's first administration that Russia committed a gross breach of international faith, by denouncing the treaty of 1856. The President of the United States has now been solicited by Congress to commit another, and even more cynical. It is true that the recommendations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives need not of necessity be acted upon by the Executive, as when it is remembered that one Chamber is governed by the Democratic party and the other by the Republican majority and further, that the Presidential election is at hand, and there can be little doubt that either President Hayes or his successor will be ordered to withdraw from engagements imposed on his Government by the Bulwer Clayton convention, in the revival of the Monroe doctrine in its most extravagant sense is too good a cry to be discarded by the managers of either party, merely because to our colonies inquires that she should assert their rights in this matter. France, Spain Holland, and the American powers are on scarcely accept the proclamation of Yankee sovereignty over the whole Western Hemisphere. Brazil and Chili are not likely to submit to it. Powerful as is the North American Union, it is not so strong as to be able to defy the public opinion of the world, which would assuredly, in such a question as this, be on the side of the nation which took its stand on justice. Even the most zealous advocate of peace at any price must be anxious to uphold the healing nature of treaties voluntarily concluded between friendly States, and therefore it must be hoped that Gladstone, Lord Granville and Bright will not be frightened by Yankee bluster into any cession of British rights, so wisely stipulated for by Lord Palmerston thirty years ago. They will be less able to do so if public opinion keeps a close watch on this affair, and having understood whose interests are involved in the execution of the Bulwer-Clayton Treaty, determine that this convention shall not be set aside for the mere sake of making things pleasant with the United States."

A LONDON CAUSE CELEBRE.

Henry Irving, the Actor, Expected to Appear in a New Role in the London Divorce Courts.

London, April 17.—A divorce case will shortly come up in the English courts which is quite certain to arouse a considerable interest. It is perhaps not very generally known that Mr. Henry Irving, the celebrated tragedian, was married some fifteen or sixteen years ago to Miss Florence O'Callaghan, an Irish lady of a good old family. At the time of his marriage Mr. Irving was in a comparatively humble position. He had made no reputation as an actor, and was regarded by the family and relatives of his bride as but little better than a strolling player. They strongly objected to the match, not because they disliked Mr. Irving personally, but because he was an actor. The young lady was romantic and high spirited. The opposition which she met with from her friends and relations only seemed to make her more resolute, and she became the wife of the actor, who has since won his way to the highest rank in his profession. For a time all went well, but when the romance of the affair was over the young lady concluded that she had made a mistake. Perhaps Mr. Irving came to the same conclusion, for it is said that the lady possessed a fiery temper and a very jealous disposition. While Petruchio tamed his Kate by smashing the chairs and china, Mr. Irving does not seem to have followed that example, but for a while, no doubt, expected to attain matrimonial felicity by less violent means.

AN ILL-MATCHED PAIR.

It would appear that no two persons could have been more unsuited to each other than were this pair. She was a dashing and very attractive lady, fond of society and attention. He was moody, reserved, absorbed in thought, and even in private life a very Hamlet. She has been known to say that she could get nothing out of her husband unless he was acting. He seemed to care more for his books and his studies than for his wife, and her imperious temper could not long submit to such neglect without remonstrance. Disagreements finally culminated in separation by mutual consent. Mrs. Irving returned to her friends in Ireland, and she soon found some relief from her conjugal disappointments in the gayety of fashionable society. During all these years they have not lived entirely apart from each other, for reconciliations have taken place from time to time, only to be followed by further estrangement. It is said that for years Mrs. Irving has endeavored to find some cause of complaint against her husband, with the view of obtaining a divorce. In Chicago she might have had one long ago on account of incompatibility of temper, but here the laws are more strict, and graver charges, of infidelity (or cruelty, must be preferred. However, she thinks she can now make out a case, and her father, it is said, will find the money. If it be true that she is jealous of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Mr. Irving's great patroness and friend, it is almost a matter for jears and laughter, for the Baroness is a lady of unsullied reputation and immense wealth, and although she has of late taken the liveliest interest in Mr. Irving's career at the Lyceum Theatre (in his wonderful revival of the Shakespearian drama), and has been his main stay during his successful struggle for fame and popularity, the idea that she has given any cause for disagreement between husband and wife by her devotion to one whom she is proud to acknowledge as her friend should be scouted at once. It is true that last summer Mr. Irving accompanied the Baroness Burdett-Coutts and her friends on a cruise of her yacht in the Mediterranean. Mr. Irving was at that time much in need of recreation on account of his arduous professional labors during the season, and it may be said that the Baroness, by so doing, deserved the thanks of the public, for Mr. Irving has never played so well as since returning from that trip.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Bank of England, it is reported, has at length lighted on a thoroughly effectual safeguard against forgery.

THE number of exiles to be transported to Siberia in June and July this year is said to be about 20,000.

A RUSSIAN paper gravely assures its readers that the Earl of Beaconsfield is about to retire to a monastery for the rest of his days.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has fixed on Tuesday, May 4 (in the Rogation days), as the day of Intercession for Foreign Missions by the Church of England.

London Truth:—"One of the finest salmon ever caught in the Avon was killed last week between Ringwood and Christchurch. It weighed over 35 pounds."

THE Queen has been graciously pleased to give to Mrs. Hepworth Dixon a grant of £100 a year from Her Majesty's Civil List, in consideration of her late husband's service to literature.

IT is stated that the inhabitants of London at the present time "consume annually 2,000,000 quarters of wheat, 400,000 oxen, 1,500,000 sheep, 130,000 calves, 250,000 pigs, 8,000,000 head of poultry and game, and 40,000,000 pounds of fish."

Athenæum:—In the literary world, where division of labor is more rigidly exacted than in any other, and where ambidexterity in the most unexpected of all gifts, the poet is wise who, like Mr. Tennyson, turns only to write prose, or, like Milton, takes care to secure the reader that his prose is "written with his left hand."

THE late rigorous winter in Paris did much damage to the Jardin des Plantes. The menagerie there has lost, within the past few months, a hippopotamus which cost 30,000 francs; a bear which cost 9,000 francs, two lions which cost 8,000 francs, five gazelles, a panther, and two swans, not to mention many kangaroos, antelopes, and deer.

IN a conversation held between Cardinal Manning and the Pope of Rome, His Eminence is reported to have informed Leo XIII. that the results of the elections in England would probably be beneficial to the Catholics in Ireland, but that in England, inasmuch as the Papists are protected by existing laws, they are not likely to influence them in any way.

IT is no wonder that difficulty is experienced in filling M. Farini's place as President of the Italian Chamber of Deputies. The President must be a man of consider. able means, for there is no salary attached to the post; he is obliged to reside constantly in Rome, where living is very dear, and he cannot work at his profession or business during the time that he is in office.

THE agricultural condition of Poland seems to be very satisfactory, the yield of wheat being twenty per cent. above that of the Russian Empire, while there are 37 head of horned cattle for every 100 inhabitants, as against 83 in Russia, and 86 head of sheep, as against 70; the only point of inferiority being in regard to horses, which are more numerous and better in Russia.

London Truth:—Lord Harrington is now one of our best speakers; but with some of the greatest orators (notably Fox), he has acquired his proficiency at the expense of his hearers. His delivery was at first halting, and it took him many years to acquire that art of "thinking on your legs," which the late Bishop Wilberforce pronounced to be almost the beginning and end of oratory. How he becomes year by year more fluent."

THE following are the principal collections made by Professor Nordenskjold and his staff during their recent expedition:—A rich collection of invertebrate animals made in dredging by Dr. Stuxberg, the zoologist; a collection of flowering plants, lichens and algae, made by Messrs. Kjellman and Almqvist; bones of the Rhytina Stelleri, from Behring Island; fossil plants from Japan and Borneo, and a fine collection of various articles in use among the Chukches and Esquimaux.

..What is good salad? A London editor insists that it should not be too miscellaneous. "In simplicity lies perfection. The endive and beetroot, fresh bean and potato, radish and mustard and cress, asparagus and celery, cabbage hearts and parsley, and all the other ingredients that in this salad or in that find a place are, no doubt, well enough in their way, but the greatest men of modern times have agreed in saying that, given three vegetables and a master mind a perfect salad may be the result. But for the making there requires to be present a miser to dole out the vinegar, a spendthrift to sluice on the oil, a sage to apportion the salt, and a madcap to stir. The household that can produce these four, and has at command a firm, stout hearted lettuce, a delicate spring onion and a handful of cress, need ask help from none and envy none, for in the consumption of the salad thus ambrosially revealing all earth's cares may be for the while forgot, and the consumer snap his fingers at the broughs, whether they go right or wrong."

ANTI-MOTH

Carbolized Paper

ABSOLUTE PROTECTION AGAINST MOTHS.

The superior powers of Carbolic Acid, not only as an antiseptic and disinfectant but as an insect destroyer, have been demonstrated by an experience of over twenty years.

The pure Carbolic Acid is not only fragrant but healthful. The Carbolized Paper is perfectly clean—the very best disinfectant known—and will keep furs and woollens free from moths.

A few sheets of this paper placed among clothing, furs or feathers positively protects them against the ravages of moths.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 3.—1 a. m.—Indications—For the Lower Lakes, cloudy.

CABLE RATES.—The Atlantic Cable Co. have reduced their rate to 50 cents per word, which took effect on Saturday last.

INTERIM SESSIONS.—Before His Honor Judge Davis on Saturday John Smith was arraigned on a charge of assaulting Hannah Curtis with intent to ravish. He pleaded "not guilty," and on electing to be tried by a jury was committed to the Sessions.

EXPORTS TO MANITOBA.—Mr. John Campbell loaded a car Saturday, which he intends shipping to Mr. Alex Calder, of Winnipeg. The load consists of 24 ox carts with wheels, and twenty-two without; fifteen bookboards, and four democrats. Verily, this is the "hum."

ILL.—It will be learned with general regret that Ald. Jones is lying seriously ill at his residence on Wellington street south. During Saturday the attending physician refused to admit visitors, and ordered that his patient should be kept very quiet. The seat of disease seems to be in the head.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS.—In consideration of services rendered in the administration of the late Peer estate, Mr. George Watson was, the other day, made the recipient at his residence in Westminster of a handsome easy chair and address by the heirs of said estate, for which he reserved sincere thanks.

CLOSING UP.—At a meeting of the Petersville Library Society Friday night, it was resolved to close for the season by giving an open entertainment on Friday evening next. During the winter the Society has done much to make the winter evenings profitable, and many young men have received good lessons in public speaking.

FOR MANITOBA.—A through special excursion train to Winnipeg will leave Paris on Tuesday, the 4th of May next, in charge of Mr. Patterson. The route chosen is by the old and reliable Detroit & Milwaukee road, being 100 miles shorter than via Chicago. All persons having a wish to visit the great Northwest will bear this in mind.

LAND TITLES DEPARTMENT.—During the past month the brigade turned out thirteen times, but were required to work but seven times. The most serious fire were those which destroyed Haynes' planing mill, Yeats' machine shop and Forestell's copper coop, respectively. On Saturday night Mr. Waddle severed his connection with the brigade, after many years of hard and faithful service.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS.—The following is a statement of the customs receipts at the port of London for the month of April, 1880, and the corresponding month of 1879:

April 1880.....	$39 133 20
" 1879.....	17,834 45
Increase.....	$11,298 85

SUDDEN DEATH.—A Mrs. Brozo, who has figured rather prominently in Police Court reports for some time past, died rather suddenly on Saturday afternoon last from an apoplectic fit, brought on by over indulgence in liquor, it is believed. The unfortunate woman was for half an hour in the spasm before death ensued. A medical gentleman was promptly on hand, but saw no reason for authorizing an inquest. She leaves four or five children behind her.

ILDERTON CRICKET CLUB.—The Ilderton Cricket Club met at the Lorne House on Wednesday evening, the 28th ult., for the purpose of auditing the past year's books, arranging for the coming season's play, and elect officers. The books were examined and found satisfactory, after which the following gentlemen were elected officers:—President, Mr. T. Black sell; Captain, Mr. H. Gibson; Sec.-Treas., Mr. J. J. Dinsmore; Committee, Messrs. E. Ironsides, J. Robson and S. Levitt. The club promises to be a good one, as some of the members are old English cricketers.

WESTMINSTER HORSE SHOW.—The annual show of stallions under the auspices of the Westminster Agricultural Society was held at Lambeth Friday. The following is the prize list:—Blood stallions, 1, A. McArdur. Carriage stallions, 1, H. Hunt; 2 Edmund Anderson. Draught stallions, 1, Robert Weir; 2, E.L. Poole. General purpose, 1, John Nixon; 2, Walter Armstrong. Roadsters 1, Wm. L. Odell; 2, Jas. Dawson. Durham cattle, aged bull, 1, Frank Shore; 2, John Nixon; 3, J. J. Dinsley. Two-year-old bull, 1, John Shearer; 2, Jas Mills. One-year old, 1, J. T. Davis; 2, T. Shore; 3, Jas Shearer. Grade cattle, 1, James Blakie. The judges for horses were Messrs. B. Burch, James Griffith, and T. W. Patrick. Messrs. Murray, Hamilton, Thornecroft and Hunt judged the cattle.

AN ASSESSMENT REGISTER.—Mr. W. B. Longworth was assessed this spring for part of lot 11, south side of King street, and rated at $1,000. He has sent the following notice to the City Clerk:—"London, April 29th, 1880.—Sir, Take notice that I intend to resist the within assessment for the following reasons:—I have no lot held either legal or equitable title in or to any such plot or parcel of ground within or without the municipal limits of this or any other city in the Province of Ontario; nor am I in possession, either legally, physically or constructively of this or any other lot, not even a sepulchre or any place to set my one cent. You had better discharge your assessor." To answer to the regret (printed) "Please give the number of your lot and address in full," Mr. Longworth says:—"Not having any lot I cannot give the number. You might furnish better paper, and in case you are assessed for the property of another, each person's name and address must not be given in such appeal—at least, hardly ever."

LOCAL NOTICES.

REAL ESTATE SALE.—That splendid property on the north side of Dundas street, between Wellington and Waterloo streets, with a frontage of 67 feet by 188 in depth, on which is a large two story brick house, now in the occupancy of Dr. Going, will be offered for sale this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the rooms of Messrs. Hanville & Brown. This offers one of the best chances of securing a residence in a prominent and healthy locality which has been presented for some time. At a small outlay of capital it can be made conspicuous, attractive, and as comfortable as any family could desire. Water, gas and hot air are all within reach if wanted. For a professional man no better situation could be selected. Don't lose the chance of a cheap investment and a comfortable home.

TO DAY we show all the new shades in summer silk handkerchiefs at GARLICK'S, 174 Dundas street.

We are commissioned by Mabley, the Detroit clothier, to invite our readers, when in Detroit, to call at his store on Woodward Avenue, adjoining the Russell House. Obliging clerks will show you through the immense establishment—the largest of the kind in the West. You will not have seen the sights of the city until you have visited Mabley's.

GARKLICK.—You can get those dark cambric shirts at GARLICK'S. They are the newest.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

A billiard room will shortly be in running order at the Grieg House.

The City Council meets to-night, and so does the Petersville municipal fathers.

The Rev. John Gemley, Rector of Simcoe, has left London with his family for that town.

The residence of Dr. Going, Dundas street, will be sold by Mr. Manville at three o'clock this afternoon.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Wellington Street Methodist Church, hold their anniversary social this evening.

"Lord Dundreary" at the Mechanics' Hall this evening. See Sothern, the "Sonny, own and great" in this character.

A window in Mr. George Wyatt's boot and shoe store, on the market, was broken in on Friday night, and a pair of shoes, valued at $6, stolen.

It is the opinion of prominent lawyers that a greater number of licenses could have been granted in the city without contravening the statute.

Christopher Pinch and John McDonald, were arrested last night on a charge of disorderly conduct. They will appear before the P. M. this morning.

A young man named John Love was arrested on Saturday night on a charge of stealing a box of crayons, preferred by N. T. Wilson, of Dundas street.

William Wright, an unfortunate ex-County Constable, was run in last night with a full cargo of old rye aboard, and was put in the dry dock for a week.

The Dominion Telegraph Company have reduced their rate on cablegrams over their line and direct cable to 50 cents per word to all points in Great Britain and Ireland.

The live stock traffic on the G. W. R. is assuming its former proportions. Another special train of thirty cars passed through for the eastern markets Saturday morning.

The Bounding Rocks, a youthful base ball nine of this city, claim a forfeited game from the King street school nine, owing to their non-appearance on Saturday last.

The new hotel recently erected by Mr. Jeremiah McDonald, of Kensington, a short distance over the bridge, was opened on Saturday last, and a big time was the result.

Mr. George Jackson, the well-known plow maker, intends shipping another carload of plows to Mr. A. Calder, of Winnipeg, by Mr. Patterson's special freight train to-morrow.

Mr. J. B Schram, of the Inland Revenue Department, Hamilton, is on a visit to friends in London. Mr. James Powell, of this city.

John Smith, of Petersville, was fined $1 and costs by Squire Peters on Saturday, for using abusive language to E. Delargy, of the same place. In default, twenty-one days in jail.

Three hundred and sixty emigrants from New York passed over the G. W. R. on the Steamboat Express Saturday morning, and 600 more followed per Air Line at night. Quite a number were for Manitoba.

Isn't it about time the contractors on asphalt sidewalk set about repairing the walks on both sides of Richmond street between Dundas and York? The Board of Works should see to the matter without delay.

A colored woman named Rose Miller was before Squire Peters on Saturday afternoon, charged with stealing underclothing from Mary Harris, in London Township, on the 24th ult. She was committed for trial.

The "Canadian Methodist Magazine" for May contains a biographical notice by the Rev. Dr. Carroll of the Rev. G. R. Sanderson, D.D., of this city, and is embellished by an excellent likeness of that well-known divine.

Mr. Peter McCann opened his new saloon at the corner of the Market Lane and Square on Saturday last. It has been very neatly fitted up, and there is every reason to believe Mr. McCann has struck a "big bonanza" by the change. A room in rear of the bar has been fitted up for the accommodation of guests, which they will not be slow to appreciate.

REAL ESTATE PURCHASES.

James Johnson, jun., of Stanley, has sold his farm on the 5th con. to John Tee-race for the sum of $9,200. The farm contains 99 acres.

Mr. Purdy, of the Hensal Hotel, disposed of his property to W. Hodgin, of Dyersdale, who took possession last Monday.

Mr. Thomas Somerville has sold his farm of 240 acres to Messrs. J. & Wm. Wrighton for $12,500. The farm is an extra good one, situated on the Stake road in East Oxford, in a high state of cultivation and excellent buildings.

Additional Licenses in Elgin.

The Elgin Board of License Commissioners met on Saturday for the purpose of signing the licenses granted for the ensuing year, when the additional additional licenses were granted:—

St. Thomas.—James O'Shea, subject to inspection.

Aldborough.—F. J. Lindeman.

Port Stanley.—Margaret Taylor, J. G. Mann, (the latter being the same as granted to J. McGeoch, who has levanted.)

Aylmer.—Aaron Cottington and T. T. Kennedy, both subject to inspection.

A MESSRAILE QUESTION.—Alderman Soar now is reported to have said at the meeting of the Printing Committee of the Board of Aldermen Friday night, that the printing of the city had not been properly divided in the past, and that he had heard "many citizens" object to this as being unfair. The reflection, if such it can be called, coming from where it does, is intended to rest upon the City Clerk, but when Alderman Scarrow made the statement he should have enquired a little further, and he would have ascertained the reason for the Advertiser's accounts being smaller than the others. Seeing that he has not done so, it may be as well to inform him and "many citizens" that in the latter part of 1877 the paper he represents lost the confidence of the Council, and also its proper share of the printing by publishing an article which the members of the Board, with the exception of Ald. Murray, deemed highly derogatory to their standing in the community. The latter portion of the resolution was, in these words:—"And the editor of the Advertiser will forfeit the confidence of this Council as a public journalist, and as an honorable man; and that we cease to have any communication with him in a business capacity or otherwise, as a corporation." This was carried by a standing vote of the Board, with the one exception mentioned above. So that the "entirely unfair" conduct which Mr. Scarrow is desirous of placing upon the shoulders of the city officials properly belongs to the members of the Council of 1877—a fact which Mr. Alderman Scarrow was perfectly aware of when he uttered the remarks he is reported to have made.

OFFICERS OF THE ROYAL ARCANUM.—The Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum, which finished its annual session at Detroit on Saturday afternoon, elected the following officers for the year:—Regent, A. E. Keyes, Ohio; Vice-Regent, W. S. Tennant, Michigan; Orator, Thomas W. Davis, Pennsylvania; Chaplain, Thos. F. Shepard, Michigan; Secretary, W. O. Bolgen, Massachusetts; Treasurer, E. S. Skinner, New York; Guide, A. C. Trippe, Maryland; Warden, John G. Sprague, Illinois; Sentry, B. H. Richardson, Georgia; Trustees—John B. Everett, Tennessee; Sumner Albee, Massachusetts; J. J. Wright, Virginia. Finance Committee—D. C. Babcock, Wisconsin; E. H. Libby, Massachusetts; J. H. Wright, Pennsylvania.

MASONIC.—A Lodge of Instruction will be held in the Masonic Hall, Strathroy, to-morrow, (Tuesday) May 4th, 1880, by R. W. Bro. R. B. Hungerford, D. D. G. M. of London District. The Committee appointed by the Lodges in Strathroy have made every arrangement in which they hope that the meeting will be conducive of much good. Two sessions will be held, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. After the close of the evening session a banquet will be held at Bro. Joseph Bishop's hotel. A cordial invitation is extended to the brethren of the District and visiting brethren.

VIOLATIONS OF THE MEDICAL ACT.—Detective Smith, of this city, visited Beamsville on the 29th ult., and had Dr. Delienbaugh, of Buffalo, fined $25 for practising in Canada without the necessary certificate. Cyrus Kilborn, J.P., was the presiding Magistrate. At Drumbo, a few days since, Messrs. G. S. Harrison and A. J. Simpson were fined on the complaint of Detective Smith before Squires Brown and Burgess for a violation of the Pharmacy Act, in keeping a drug store without being registered as a druggist.

POLICE COURT—SATURDAY.

L. LAWRENCE, P.M., Presiding.

VAGRANCY.

John McDonald came under this head, although he was a young, able-bodied man who should have known better than allow himself to be placed in such a position. Having been in jail for some days, he was discharged.

Timothy Drummond, whose hair had been whitened by the sun of eighty-nine summers, came up after a rest in the jail of several days and was turned out into the storm. It is sad to think that at so ripe an age the old man should be surrounded by the bars of a prison, rather than the comforts of a home to make pleasant his closing years.

DRUNK AND DISORDERLY.

Under this caption Abraham Slater, a good natured old knight of the needle, was remanded to jail for a week in order to sober up.

THE POWER OF KINDNESS.

When Martin Gurtstone arose and shook his tawny head, everybody knew that it meant—"Well, if I am a trasp, I don't care; I'm as good as any of you, and it don't cost anything." He had coarse, scowling features, and a determination around his eyes that spoke right out—"Do your worst; I'd rather die than give in." There was nothing serious against him, and he was allowed to go. Not long ago Martin had an exact counterpart in the county jail: a ball-dog, growling, unwilling fellow who had been sent down for larceny. Hejad known the solitude of the "dark hole in Detroit, and had looked upon gay New York from the parapets of Blackwell's Island. No jailer had ever seen him do anything willingly, and mutiny was always uppermost in his mind. His first day in the jail at the foot of Dundas street witnessed an encounter with his keeper and a sentence of two days in the dark vault cellular and water. But he came out just as surly as he went in, and during the succeeding two or three weeks he remained in his usual grumbling, treacherous mood. One day two ladies and a bright-eyed, happy little girl came to visit the jail, and was being shown through the various wards by the obliging turnkey. They had halted in the lower flat, and were about to ascend the narrow stairway to the female ward, when the turnkey turned to the prisoner, who was leaning up against the white-washed wall, and said:—

"John, carry the little girl up the stairway."

John knitted his brows and straightened himself up ready to utter a contemptuous refusal, when the little girl ran over to him, and, looking up into his face with a smile, said:—

"If you'll take me upstairs I'll div'on a ties when we dit to the top, sir."

The brawny, stubborn prisoner looked down into the eyes that were turned inquiringly upward to him. His features relaxed, he studied for a moment and then reaching down he tenderly raised the little one in his arms and carried her to the top of the stairway. He no doubt once had a little sister, or perchance he was reminded of his own chattering child, now forever separated from him. At any rate when he stood her down he pressed her tenderly to his heart, and when she kissed him as she would a father he turned away and wiped a tear from his eyes with his rough, bony knuckles. His obduracy was completely broken, and from that day forward he was a model prisoner, willing and good natured.

The Ticket Brokerage and Box Office Business.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—"A. B. Murray & Co." no doubt fancy they have settled the "Box Office" nuisance satisfactorily—at least to themselves. But to the public, the matter still appears in this light: that, as in past years, a system of brokerage prevails with regard to the sale of reserved seats. A couple of years ago, Mr. Murray marked seats off before exhibiting the plan. Now, however, a clerk in the hat store adjoining saves him the trouble. In the past intending purchasers of seats were forced to wait until the plan was opened at the office and waits his turn, he finds the good seats all taken up by the broker next door. Mr. Murray could remedy the difficulty by informing the broker-clerk that he may have tickets for his own use, but that citizens in attendance must have choice before those for whom he is officiating as agent." I presume I am the veritable gentleman to whom A. B. Murray & Co. refer. The only person who appeared to be excited (and I refer to Messrs. W. Robinson and J. B. Strathy) was one of the brokers Mr. L. Dampier referred to in the letter. Without being spoken to, and on my objecting to the hat store clerk broker marking off twelve seats for others while citizens were in waiting, this Mr. Dampier flourished a short cane and reared about like a Comanche Indian. His gentlemanly conduct was the talk of the pass. It is a fact, and I am not sure that A. B. Murray & Co. were not aware of it, that a young man of a sportive turn was confined to distances of a mile and less, only prevented from buying up the entire reserved seat plan by the magnet in an evening paper. He had a cheque for $900 in his possession with the same object in view, no doubt, as the other broker-clerks. That's the natural outcome of this brokerage business. Besides, in no other city or town on the continent is a box office opened at 7.30 a.m., except by A. B. Murray & Co. in London. Hoping that the publication of this matter may have the effect of preventing the brokerage system from entering into future ticket purchases, I remain, quite cool and collected,

Yours,
F. B. LAWS.

London, May 1, 1880.

CHANCERY SITTINGS.

His Lordship Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot Presiding.

Saturday, May 1.

Merchants' Bank vs. Graham.

This was a suit to recover alleged profits made by the boats Laura and William Horne, of St. Catharines, the plaintiffs being joint owners. It was set up in defence that instead of profits there had been a loss, and that the boats were the property of the bank would be going beyond its charter in seeking them.

The Vice-Chancellor gave a decree in favor of the defendant.

Bethune, Q.C., and G. C., for Bank; Miller & Miller, St. Catharines, for defendant.

A. M. Ross vs. J. Wolfe.

Action to compel the defendant to carry out a verbal agreement in regard to the sale of his interest in a refinery, which the plaintiff contended he had backed out of without reason or cause. Defence was that Wolfe had never offered his share for sale, and that if he did it was done in a bantering way and without meaning. Quite a number of witnesses were examined to show that defendant had bona fide offered to sell his share, and they were not of the opinion that the defendant was in a bantering mood when he made the offer.

The Vice-Chancellor decreed for the plaintiffs with costs.

Meredith, Q.C., and Purdom for piff; Fraser and Fraser for defs.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Saturday morning.

A pleasant entertainment and social was given in the Bible Christian Church last night, Rev. G. H. Copeland presiding. In addition to the opening address, an interesting programme was provided by Misses Daroh, Dinner, Hicke, Bartlett, Coles and Saunders; Messrs. G. Scott, L. Hooper, S. Bartlett and G. Gardiner. The musical portion was especially entertaining, and reflected credit on those who took part.

There were registered with Mr. A. Isaac, Village Clerk, during the month of April, 12 births, 7 deaths, and 2 marriages.

Temple Bar is to be replaced by a handsome memorial, to be erected in the middle of the roadway, and adorned with the statues of Her Majesty and the Prince of Wales. The monument is to serve as a refuge in the roadway for foot passengers, and the two niches hewn out to receive the statues will be surrounded by magnificent bronze lamps. Old Temple Bar will be re-erected in Epping Forest. The stones have been numbered, so that it may present exactly the same appearance as when serving as a barrier to the encroachments of the royal power by defending the city entrance against the sovereign, and marking the limit beyond which no royal edict could take effect unless sanctioned by the Mayor.

THE translation of European works into Chinese is now being systematically undertaken by the professors and pupils in the College for the Study of Foreign Languages at Peking.

It is proposed the only colts thought by the British office to have any chance of winning the Derby are Bend Or, Robert the Devil and Beaudesert. The first-named is handicapped in his 2 year old form, and has naturally been made prime favorite for the greatest of the 3 year old events. In regard to his present condition, it is reported to be fully equal, though this far his fast work has been confined to distances of a mile and less, with occasional long gallops at a steady pace, all of which will be needed to fit him for the Derby distance. Beaudesert has for a stor Isonomy, who was accounted the best handicap horse in England last year, and the pair have on several occasions gone a mile and a-half at a strong pace. Robert the Devil is reported in nice shape, his fast and legs being particularly admired.

The great seventy-two hour go-as-you-please contest for a gold medal and a series of prizes offered by Mr. Daniel O'Leary, closed at Buffalo on Saturday night. Peter J. Faichot, of Buffalo, was the winner of the medal, of the $600 prize, and of $75 additional—$25 for beating the best previous record of 385 miles, and $50 for going over 400 miles. He made 406 miles 5 laps. Chris. Faber, of Newark, N. J., carried off the second prize of $300, with $75 addition, for the same reason as those given above, and $50 more for making the best sixth day's record. His record was 405 miles four laps. James Fitzgerald, of Long Island, won the third prize of $200 and an additional $25 for beating the best previous record. He accomplished 396 miles. Charles Henry, of Boston, Mass., won the fourth prize of $100 by a record of 389 miles two laps. Peter Napoleon Campana, the frisky youth from New York city, carried away the $50 prize by a run of 340 miles, and a generous private contribution on the part of Mr. O'Leary swelled the amount to a large octett. Thomas Binett, an estimay of Buffalo, won the sixth prize. He made 319 miles seven laps. Nine other competitors withdrew before the close of the race. The sudden termination of the contest was the result of a compromise between the pedestrians, after a most bitter and persistent contest between Faber and Panchot, in which the latter held his position of pluck and throughout in the lead, it was found that Faber could by no possibility catch up with him, and so at ten o'clock the men quit, both losers having run ahead of the record by one hundred miles, and Fitzgerald having been it by a mile, and therefore no chance of altering the relative positions The race was not only notable for the extraordinary time made, but for the intensity and fairness with which it was conducted. All of the men were terribly used up by the contest, and the victory was a hard ground and a brilliant one. The crowd at the close was hardly within a precedent in Buffalo, and many hundreds were turned away from the door without being able to gain admission to the Rink. The number of tickets sold during the race was over 20 000, and there were over 800 complimentary tickets given away.

SCENES IN IRISH HOVELS.

Men, Women, Children and Cows Huddled Together in Distress.

James Redpath, in New York Tribune.

We halted a mile and a half from Westport, at the hamlet called Grey, in the township of Drimcraigh. There are eight or nine cabins in it—not contiguous, but all built near the road, and not far from each other. They do not face the road, but are built "end to," as the sailors say. The first cabin lay below the level of the road. I think I have used the phrase "long, low cottage" before, but perhaps the words did not correctly convey my meaning. So I shall be more explicit. The thatch of this house reached only to my shoulder—about four feet six inches, say, not more—from the end of the hovel near the street to the door. The door was not four feet high. This was the only door to the house. Of course, you must stoop to get through it. The dark and smoke-stained room that you thus enter is about thirteen feet by eleven feet. The end of the room to the left of the door is a stable with a cow in it; the floor is of slippery mud; a wooden cradle rudely made is near the fire; there is an infant in it—covered with rags and an old great coat. Four rude wooden chairs and a couple of home made stools; a wooden dresser opposite the door with a few plates and dishes in it, and an iron pot on the floor complete the scant furniture of the dwelling. There is no window except one two feet by one; the room is dark; all the Irish cabins are dark. In all weather the door is left open to let in light and fresh air. Near the fire place there is the usual niche in the wall called the colligh; it holds a bed and the men of the house occupy it." "It is the most comfortable." A small pitch dark inner room, nothing but two rough beds with straw on them to lie on, and a few old potato bags to cover the children. There was a peat fire in this cabin, and this hovel was one of the best in the hamlet.

There were other hovels smaller in size. In one of them a sick man lay on a bed of rags near the fire-place. There was a little peat fire on the hearth. Around it crouched three children. A peasant woman with an unwrinkled face—she was forty-five or thereabout—held an infant clad in rags in her arms. I had never seen a woman of that age in a cabin with a smooth face and a pleasant expression before. "She was born deaf and dumb, sor!" said the man, "and she hasn't had the hardship of the others." Two of the children sat around a pot. It had a mess of porridge in it—Indian meal with a little salt to season it. One old woman (she was about sixty years old) would not look up at us. She sat squatted on her haunches and hid her face with her soiled and wrinkled hands. "I don't mind it for the rest of us, but for the cold woman." She was his mother-in-law.

Agricultural Operations for May.

From the Farmer's Advocate.

The winter wheat west of Toronto has a very promising appearance; the plant is in good condition, and should escape any misfortune in the way of insects, frosts or rust overtakes it, we shall have one of the finest crops ever harvested in Western Ontario. The reports east of Toronto are not quite as favorable. From the Western States the accounts are most encouraging; from present appearances, although there are reports from some of the States that insects are already committing depredations. Insects will most probably be unusually destructive this year, as the winter has been so mild. Late spring frosts may check their operations to some extent.

The spring seeding has been progressing finely, and the ground has been in good tilth. The clover has been very badly injured, which will necessitate the sowing of more than the usual quantity of corn and millet, and should cause a more extensive growth of root crops. A liberal use of salt, plaster and other artificial manures might prove profitable this year.

The fruit trees show a good set of buds, and many are increasing their plantations. Small fruits especially having been very remunerative the past season; and the profit that applies have sold at in England has given a stimulus to their cultivation. Drying establishments are to be erected in Canada this season. The great Northwest must be supplied from the east, as the winds and frosts of that section are such that they will never be able to raise fine fruit. They may supply us with wheat, but we in Ontario will be able to pay for what we want of it in fruit, manufactured goods, etc.

We hope some of our subscribers have perused the hints we have previously given, namely, to take extra care of their sheep, and to purchase more if proper care can not be taken of them. The enormous price which wool will now command—50 to 60c. per pound for unwashed and $1 to $1 20 per pound for fine quality—is never before been heard of. The sheep rot in England has swept away so many thousands that our mutton must command a higher price. Perhaps some of you may find it profitable to purchase a few sheep from those who do not take the Advocate. Keep all you can. Do not hoard your sheep or wool. Sell your wool when the market is fairly established, and your sheep that are too old, when you have them well fattened.

A Remarkable Race.

From the London Globe, April 16.

It is said that Major Biddulph, stationed on the Cashmere boundary, has prepared a report upon the customs, the languages and the folklore of the singular communities among whom he has been residing for a long time. From Major Biddulph's peculiar advantages and opportunities may be expected. says the Calcutta Pioneer, a complete account of people who are a survival of the old Aryans from whom all civilized mankind of the present day is probably descended. Surgeon Major Bellew, mentioned in his journal a curious race which on the contrary, and, unlike them, have not embraced the creed of their Mohammadan neighbors. The Kaloshas spoken of in the Globe are for the most part, Aryan; not descended from Sanskrit, and, indeed, of earlier origin than that classical language. On the northern slopes of the mountains Farsee words prevail; in the southern and eastern Pushtoo, and the country between, some Latin, some those of modern Greece. They make (and freely consume) grape wine, something like a crude Burgundy. Those who are not Mussulmans believe in one God, but employ the intercession of minor powers, represented by images. They also occasionally canonize great men whom they have lost by death. They are usually monogamous, opposed to divorce and strict defenders of the chastity of their unmarried girls. These latter have blue, gray or hazel eyes; black hair is the exception among them, and, when young, they are of such remarkable comeliness as to be in great demand in the slave markets of adjacent countries. Authentic information concerning these interesting races cannot but be anxiously awaited by all who realize the nature of the questions involved.

Trial of the Gardner Gun.

From the New Haven Journal, April 22.

Yesterday morning in Hartford an exhibition of the improved Gardner gun was given at Pratt & Whitney's, before Col. J. G. Benton, commandant of the United States Arsenal at Springfield, and Capt. J. E. Greer, of the United States Ordnance Department. Six of these new guns have been recently sold to the United States Government, and in order to show them in practical work the exhibition was made. Seven hundred cartridges were fired with great rapidity and ease, and the effectiveness of the new system was clearly demonstrated. A new and ingenious device is that by which the barrels are prevented from becoming too hot. The brass casting over the barrels is so arranged that water covers them, and by this means the steel can never reach a temperature of over 212°. Another gun was also tried. This, instead of having two barrels, has four, and thus the rapidity of firing is just doubled. This gun is in an incomplete state, and is to be made for the English Government.

THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

The Reported Lease by the Wabash Line Denied.

New York, May 4.—The Tribune says the Directors of the Wabash Company declared yesterday that no thought of securing any Ontario, Great Western or other roads this side of Buffalo had entered their minds.

THE PETROLEUM TRADE.

France About to be Supplied from Russia.

Paris, May 4.—The debate in the Chamber of Deputies on the duties on petroleum brought out the fact that American petroleum is threatened with a formidable competitor, in the shape of a French Company formed to work the oil wells in the Valley of Kertan, Russia, where the supply is unlimited. It is stated that at Bakora a well yields 30,000 barrels of petroleum a day.

GREAT BRITAIN.

LABOR TROUBLES.

London, May 4.—Upwards of 7,800 iron workers are on strike in the North of England, against the 5 per cent. reduction awarded by the arbitrators. A mass meeting to deliberate on further action by the strikers will be held to-day.

The Burnley masters, to support the Blackburn masters in their notice to the spinners and card-room hands of a reduction, have decided to suspend the rule requiring notice before a discharge of hands. The Blackburn operatives are very determined, and it is feared that if they strike another lock-out will ensue, involving a majority of the Lancashire manufacturers.

WEAVERS FOR THE U. S.

London, May 4.—An emigration agent at Accrington, Lancashire, received an application from the United States for 20 female weavers or heads of families. The first batch will sail for Boston on the 15th inst.

PARNELL TO SIT FOR CORK.

London, May 4.—Parnell announces his intention to sit in Parliament for Cork.

London, May 4.—In the event of the law not allowing Bradlaugh to make an affirmation instead of taking the oath required of members of the House, a Bill will be immediately introduced to legalize such an affirmation.

BURGLARS IN CAPT. POTTER.

Dublin, May 4.—Capt. Potter, of the Constabulary, was to-day presented with the freedom of the city of Dublin. Lord Mayor Gray, who presided at the ceremony, stated that the distress in Ireland was as great as ever, and he feared that during the next three months it would prove most severe. Capt. Potter signed the "Burgess Roll" amid cheers. He returned thanks to the citizens. The crowd cheered the officers as they were leaving the City Hall.

GERMANY.

HAMBURG'S WOMEN.

Berlin, May 4.—Not only is Prussia trying to deprive Hamburg of its rights as a free port, but Bismarck has already introduced restrictions concerning the importation of cattle, which will give much annoyance and be a considerable drawback to the trade of the city with the rest of Germany. It is also proposed to connect Berlin directly with Altona by a new railway. Most of the Schleswig-Holstein trade passes through Altona and Hamburg, so that this proposition is made simply to avoid the free city. These proceedings excite the utmost indignation in Hamburg, and public meetings are being called to protest.

THE ANTI-SOCIALIST LAWS.

Berlin, May 4.—In the debate on the third reading of the anti-Socialist Bill today, the Reichstag rejected the amendment proposed by Lasker, to suspend the law should confidence in force one year only, and adopted the Bill by 191 to 94, prolonging its operation until September 30th, 1884, and providing that the law empowering local authorities to refuse the right of residence to persons already expelled by them should not apply to members of the Reichstag or other legislatures who remain at the seats of their respective legislatures during the session. During the debate Liebknecht was called to order for insulting a deputy, and Hasselman for saying that the German workmen were being fooled to act the same as Russian anarchist.

RUSSIA.

AS WITH CHINA.

Berlin, May 4.—A well-informed St. Petersburg correspondent writes that war between Russia and China is nearly certain.

THE GOOD INTENTIONS OF THE CZAR.

London, May 4.—The programme of the Czar for a liberal course toward Jews and the people of Poland has met with determined opposition in St. Petersburg, and the hostility has raised such a clamor against the measure that its execution has been postponed. The Czar is still intent upon carrying out these reforms, and has ordered an investigation of the real condition of the people concerned.

CHERRY DR. GOUGH.

London, May 4.—One Dr. Gough, claiming to be a Commissioner deputized by the United States Government to investigate the ravages of diphtheria in Russia, has succeeded in rendering himself conspicuous in St. Petersburg. He claims to be in possession of a specialty which is an infallible remedy, and for this he is severely criticised both by the medical and Government authorities, some going so far as to denounce him as a charlatan. Gough retorts that their course is the result of professional jealousy.

FRANCE.

ROBBED AND MURDERED ON A TRAIN.

Paris, May 4.—A railway contractor was robbed and murdered on Friday night by a fellow passenger in a compartment of a first class carriage on the Marseilles & Lyons express train. The murderer was arrested.

MONTENEGRO.

TROUBLE WITH TURKEY.

Cettinge, May 4.—The Prince of Montenegro declares that he has no intention of fighting with the bands which have taken possession of the evacuated territory, and if war be necessary, it will be declared against the Turkish Government, which is the real author of the resistance to the execution of the convention.

JAPAN.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

Yokohama, April 16.—At an explosion at the Taksima coal mine, near Nagasaki, about 50 men were killed and more were injured.

Maniac Mothers.

A Virginia Woman Destroys Herself and Five Children by Fire.

A Proud New Yorker Drowns Her Two Babies and Tries to Make Away with Herself

Elmira, N. Y., May 4.—At Penn Yan this morning, Mr Geo. Woodruff, during the temporary absence of her husband from home, about o'clock, took her two sleeping children from the bed, one aged 4 the other one year old, and going to a cistern drowned both. The husband, upon returning, found all three in the cistern. He mother was standing with the infant in her arms dead, the other child was in the water, which was about up to the woman's waist. All efforts to resuscitate the children were useless. Before finding them Woodruff discovered a note addressed to him lying on the table, as follows:—"Dear George,—In will find the children in the cistern, as before you see me I shall be in eternity. I cannot live another day in such agony." She had previously informed her husband that she had several times made up her mind to kill the children and herself as it could not bring her self to it. The Advertiser special states that the predisposition of Mrs. Woodruff's insanity was the inability of the family to pay their debts. The unfortunate woman is highly regarded and their imprisonment and her proud spirit probably so preyed on her mind as a result her insane. When the wife was discovered the most desperate efforts to take her own life. The Coroner's jury rendered the somewhat remarkable verdict that the mother was guilty of wilful murder in drowning the children. She is insane now, and there is little doubt she was so when the deed was committed.

Cincinnati, O., May 4.—A fire occurred in Cheltenham, Va., yesterday, in which Mrs. Marsh Jones and her five children were burned to death. It is believed that the father set fire to the dwelling for the purpose of destroying herself and children. He had been suffering from a severe nervous disease, and had gotten up an idea that she was being pursued by evil spirits. The fire was discovered in time to get it out, but the woman refused to leave one enter, declaring she would rather die than be saved.

A Razor a Wife.

Pollonville, N.D., May 4.—Yesterday Mason Miller and Jas. Bibb, both favored suitors for the hand of Miss Loyd, obtained a marriage license at the same time at the Court House, each with the intention of first presenting it to Miss Loyd. The race to your her residence, a mile distant, ensued. Miller arrived first, and Bibb followed soon after, and fell fainting in the doorway from his exertion. Miss Loyd said the man who won the race was the best runner, but the man who fainted was the most sweet lover, and married Bibb.

Repayment of Customs Charges.

New York, May 4.—The Dominion Government has decided to repay to John G. Dale, Agent of the Inman Line, a duty of $1,300 exacted from some impounded upon a shaft off one of their steamers which had been brought in tow of a tug, in place of one damaged. The exaction of this duty caused severe comment by the American press.

A Fight Between Two Girls, Ending in Murder.

Little Rock, Ark., May 4.—In Howard county, last wee, Sarah Stokes, aged 18, quarrelled with Linda Stephen, aged 20, concerning certain gossip in circulation. The two grapple, when Miss Stokes stabbed Miss Stephen in the neck, killing her instantly; she claims in self defence.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Hon. Mr. Blake moved in amendment that the vote be not now concurred in, but the amount be reduced excessive.

Sir L. Tilley said it was admitted that this arrangement was calculated to save money. This amount was but placing the High Commissioner on the same footing as a Lieut-Governor.

The amendment was lost on a division. The House divided on the amendment. Yeas, 48; nays 114.

The items having been passed, the House went into Committee of Ways and Means and passed the usual formal resolutions.

The Supply Bill was then introduced, and read a first time.

BANKING LAWS.

On motion for the second reading of the Bill to amend the banking laws, Mr. Blake replied to Sir R. Cartwright.

Sir L. Tilley said that the Bill had been amended in certain particulars, and in some points differed from the form in which it was presented to the House and discussed.

Mr. Domville objected to so entirely new system of banking being so suddenly put before the country. He thought there should be greater delay as so important a matter, and that the clause relating to reserves was not effective. He apprehended that the banks would run on the reserve of Dominion notes. He objected to the making of a statement by the banks, which was only one of benefit to stock brokers and jobbers. He thought that the Government should take the whole issue into its own hands, and so ensure the people against loss. Some security should be given to the people against the mere paper issue of banks.

Mr. Guthrie said he thought that the Bill would lessen surplus rather than strengthen them. The Bill proposes to weaken the whole course of trade procedure.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill, and after some discussion rose and asked leave to sit again.

The House adjourned at 1.30.

OTTAWA NOTES.

The Petroleum Fire Tests

Special to the Free Press.

Ottawa, May 4.—The Petroleum Bill passed its second and third reading to-day, just as it was printed, without amendment. It will most likely pass the Senate to-morrow without opposition. The New York Commissioners who were opposing the difference in the fire test in the interest of American refiners leave to-morrow. Mr. Oddy expected to have obtained a lower fire test, but is satisfied with the Bill, to give Canada an chance to make good still, but if they do not make better oil this year than they have been doing, he says he will insist on the fire test of American oil being reduced to 110 degrees next session, and there are a great number of members who agree with him.

The Boundary Commission met this morning, and will conclude the framing of their report to-morrow.

The Debate Committee met this morning and drafted a report which recommended the commission of the debates to a staff, consisting of G. B. Hadley, of the Mail, as chief reporter, and five others. The printing of the Hansard is to be awarded to Messrs. McLean, Roger & Co., at 40c. per page.

A return brought down to-day shows that last summer, goods paying a duty of some... were imported at Fort Erie, where in the neighborhood of $6,000 were entered at Fort York. They were contained in the ship Ocean Nymph, entered for the Hudson's Bay Co.

The Fisheries has been enlivened by one or two "scratch" divisions, forced on it, after the manner of the Opposition, at the fag end of the sessions. Otherwise the proceedings have been dull. Before the prorogation it is expected there will be several points on various matters discussed.

It is expected that the Senate will not concur in the amendment passed to the Scott Act, and will consequently kill the whole Bill.

HON. GEORGE BROWN.

Relatives Summoned to the Bedside of the Dying Senator.

Per Montreal Line.

MIDNIGHT REPORT.

Toronto, May 4.—Hon. Mr. Brown has rallied a little, and to-night was much easier and comfortable than at any time during the day. He is still weak, with occasional lapses into unconsciousness. About four o'clock this afternoon his low condition led the medical attendants to fear that the worst was approaching. His relatives were summoned to the dying man's bedside for the first time since his case has assumed its present critical aspect. An idea of the suffering borne by the patient can be imagined when it is stated that since the shooting his weight has been reduced from 200 to 92 pounds.

Per Dominion Line.

Toronto, May 4.—Hon. George Brown is much weaker to-day. The fact is, he is rapidly sinking, and his death may be expected very soon.

It is stated that the Crown has in its possession a diary of Bennette, who shot Brown, in which it is stated that he intended to commit the act. This will be fatal for the prisoner.

LATEST FROM TORONTO.

Toronto, Ont., May 4.—Col. F. W. Cumberland, Managing Director of the Northern and Hamilton and North Western Railroads, left for England to-day on railway business.

Mr. James E Smith, the suspended Collector of Customs at this port, has returned to Toronto after a somewhat lengthened sojourn in Uncle Sam's territory.

The city pavement question will be discussed at a public meeting on Tuesday evening next.

The shipping office of Messrs. Thomsen Smith & Co., lumber merchants, was entered by thieves at an early hour this morning. The safe was tried but resisted their efforts, and the thieves satisfied themselves with carrying off some old office clothing.

Two Children Burned to Death

Uxbridge, Ont., May 4.—This morning two little children, a son and daughter of Mr. Wm. Fallon, farmer, residing about three miles from here, were burned to death in their father's house. It appears from the eldest daughter, a girl of about eight years of age, that one of the children lighted a piece of birch bark and threw it into a wood box, which immediately ignited. They were so frightened that the two shut themselves up in an adjoining room. The girl, after ineffectual efforts to get them out, caught up the youngest child and ran to tell her parents, who were some distance from the house, but who found on reaching the scene of the conflagration that all their efforts to save the two children were in vain.

The Toronto Clerical Scandal.

Toronto, May 4.—The committee appointed to hear the complaints against Rev. Mr. Hackford, were in session to-night. Deacon Thompson was under examination during the entire sitting, and it is said that his evidence so far does not implicate Mr. Hackford in the more serious charges or complaints. Deacon Beckett will be the next complainant heard. The Committee expect that the work will be sufficiently advanced by to-morrow evening to make arrangements for filling the pulpit next.

HORNER & SOMERVILLE

For Manitoba.

Another of Mr. Patterson's Pioneer Parties.

Names and Late Residences of the Travellers—Very Little "Alfe Blood" Going into "the Veins of Dakota.

Mr. Robert Patterson started from Paris with his fifth party for Manitoba yesterday afternoon, but from obvious causes the number of passengers was below that of preceding ex... The season is no doubt too far advanced to admit of the selection of a farm till the necessary preparations to begin the summer's work with any prospect of success. The majority of those whose names are given below, appeared to be men of... very means, with sufficient reserve capital, in the shape of muscle and brain, to warrant the undertaking of a new life on the prairies of the great North-west. When spoken to, they expressed no dissatisfaction with Ontario, but gave this cause for their leaving as a desire to do... by what their forefathers had done before them. That is, say, they preferred to begin on a farm of their own, rather than adopt the rental system here, or work until sufficient money had been acquired to buy an improved homestead. This is rational, and supported by the popularity of immigration to Manitoba, can be believed much more nearly than those stories which attribute their departure to political causes. This "drawing of the life blood of Ontario to fill the veins of Dakota," sounds poetical enough, but lacks the foundation of truth; and is the wont of disloyal howls on the part of any journal whose profession to have the interests or welfare of Canada at heart. The agent at Woodstock said he had sold three tickets for Dakota, but your reporter failed, after a diligent search, to find the individuals, and it is more than probable that they took the previous train to London. The special train left Paris shortly after five o'clock, and by the time London was reached, had on board the following persons:—A. Thompson, Brantford; J. H. Kitchen, wife and two children, Prattsville; J. Vardels, wife and four children, do; W. A. Cameron, Oshawa; O. B. Thompson, Wentworth; A. P. Cameron, Oshawa; D. Taylor, Acton; D. McKenzie, Bruce, H. Macdougal and mother, Toronto; Mrs. Ins, wife of W. Rose, of the Winnipeg Free Press; A. Harris, of Harris & Son, Bradford.

At this city their number was augmented by Mr. Thomas Greenway's party, from Centralia, which had previously arrived. This addition was made up as follows:—

Exeter—John Bissett, his and child, James Greenwood, wife & five children.

FOR DAKOTA.

Andrew Wiley, Stanley township, Varnick P. O.; Robert Smith, Mitchell, and two others whose names could not be ascertained.

All were in good spirits. The route this time will be different from any preceding trip, it being the intention to take the boat at Grand Haven and cross over to Milwaukee. This involves a sail of six or seven hours on Lake Michigan, which will be a pleasant relief to the monotony of travelling by rail.

Electric Light Experiments.

The Gibraltar Chronicle of the 5th inst. says:—"On Saturday night at 9.30 o'clock, to the great astonishment of those who were not prepared for it, but who happened to be looking towards the bay, a brilliant light was seen to burst forth suddenly, shooting up a prolonged ray across the water, and is to the Rock, which it lighted up in a most vivid manner. This was soon followed by a second similar light at some little distance from the first, and it soon became evident that they were electric lights, and proceeded from her Majesty's ships Minotaur and Agincourt. The practice that followed with these lights, and which was continued for nearly an hour, was interesting in the extreme, for there was not a hole or cranny on the western face of the Rock from the water to the signal station that was not searched out and illuminated as if by magic; nor was there a vessel or a boat in the bay that did not undergo the same minute examination. Owing to the concentration of the light at the instrument necessary to permit of its rays being reflected to a distance, the sphere of its action is unavoidably limited, and hence it becomes necessary to search the water or the shore gradually and methodically, in such a manner as to insure no spot being left unlighted. Thus the drill in itself is intricate and requires considerable practice. There is one point which cannot fail to strike even the unpractised, which is, that during such time as a vessel displays the electric light she is, while illuminating the batteries of her opponents, an excellent mark for their guns."

Parliament.

...with regard to ... existing Insolvent Law had very much the appearance of a crazo. A species of stampede set in among the members, and it was not in the power of the leaders on either side of the House to arrest it. The combined influence of Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Mackenzie was insufficient to arrest the rush. The members would not listen even to delay, and stamped upon the Act as if they had a rattlesnake or copperhead among them. True, the Senate interposed, and thus prevented the commercial public from being overtaken with a cyclone coming from a clear sky. A year, at any rate, was permitted to elapse before the mischief was finally accomplished. During that time those chiefly interested were able to make their arrangements, for no one thought that either the Commons would retrace its steps or that the Senate would feel itself under any obligation to oppose for a second time the wishes of the Commons so unequivocally expressed. The fact that the commercial public committed was, in not sufficiently exerting influence to bear on the members between the May of last year and the opening of Parliament in 1880. No marked expression of opinion having taken place, the Commons and the Senate have good ground for saying that the evidence is that the commercial men are satisfied to carry on affairs in the absence of an insolvent law. Latterly, however, some of those who should have moved in the matter a year ago, went to Ottawa to represent the injury done already—to express their apprehension that a still greater amount will follow. But they found the Beds of the Government tied. They found that it was impossible to reverse the abrogation which had taken place, or to pass a Bill like that of Mr. Wallace or Mr. Abbott to set in the breach. What is left, therefore, is to realize the fact that we have gone back to a semi-barbarous age, when one individual creditor, getting his hands upon an estate in advance of the other creditors, could evict and ruin to his heart's content, leaving persons whose claims were equally just minus, fitted a state of things is so contrary to justice that one is amazed that a Canadian House of Commons could be found which for two successive sessions set itself to work to destroy one of the most equitable procedures underlying commercial life. Having got things in such a condition the days of preferential judgments will return, and the game will be for one creditor to take all possible advantage of the other creditors, at the same leaving the debtor, who may be moral, a victim to circumstances, without any recourse or standing place for recovery. The evils which this state of things will work is too apparent to be blinked. They will soon make themselves painfully felt, and before February, 1881, it may be expected that a strong counter movement will set in. The action of the Commons in abrogating the Insolvent Law contrary to the wishes of the recognized exponents of the commercial public, is one of the most high-handed proceedings that has ever taken place in parliamentary history.

PLUMB'S REPLY TO MR. ...KENZIE.

...ort report of Mr. Plumb's ... on the Pacific Railway, in ... Immigration, has been published in the Ottawa Herald. Though it comes by far too many days after delivery, and just at the close of the Parliamentary session, still it contains matter which makes its interest permanent rather than evanescent. Much of that which transpires in Parliament is of a passing nature, merely. But the construction of the Canada Pacific, and the filling up of that immense and fertile territory known as the North-west being among the most notable operations of the time, all matters bearing upon these enterprises will have an extended value. Mr. Plumb showed very clearly and forcibly that the terms and facilities offered to settlers, in the great Canadian West are in favorable comparison to those which are obtainable elsewhere. Mr. Mackenzie, for example, seemed at one time to entertain the opinion that in Texas advantages are to be found far in excess of those existing among ourselves. Mr. Plumb took great pains to hunt up all the facts in connection with the question, and in the course of the speech referred to was able to demonstrate that Mr. Mackenzie's assumptions were wrong in fact as well as injurious to this country. It would be a good thing if Mr. Plumb's speech were to be widely circulated, because though it is too extended for use in the ordinary newspaper, it contains facts with which all who take an interest in the subject should be acquainted with.

Not content with his electric light and ore-milling system, Thomas A. Edison has recently begun to study over an electric motor. This is an outgrowth of the ore-milling plan. A railroad track nearly a mile long has been laid, beginning back of the Menlo Park laboratory, running westward and southward, and thence describing almost a semi-circle. It is a narrow-gauge road, each track being continuous, and the rails being joined in with side bracings instead of frogs. Mr. Edison is unwilling to talk about his new scheme, save the fact that he is about to build an electric motor. In his new plan of propelling a motor over a track by means of electricity instead of steam, Mr. Edison will charge the rails with a powerful current generated by dynamo machines run by water power or steam. The rails will form an open circuit, as does the wire that enters a telegraph station. The latter is closed by being connected with the ground and the electricity passes through freely. In the former the circuit is closed as soon as the wheels of the engine as placed upon them. Then the electricity passes from the wheels up into a dynamo machine set in the bodyof the engine. As soon as the machine is charged with electricity the armature revolves rapidly in the field of force, by a simple system of cogwheels this motion is to be transferred to the driving wheels. To stop the engine, it will simply be necessary, the inventor says, to cut off the current.

Philadelphia proposes to put some of its convicts at work cleaning the streets, and expects to make a saving of from $150,000 per year. The work Boston does at present is light, and 900 inmates of the House of Correction, with 90 extra guards, are employed. A good hint for ourselves. That kind of work for the prisoners here that they complain of the lack of exercise. A little

After recess the House went into Committee on the Bill, and having resumed on motion of third reading.

Mr. Ross moved that the said be read a third time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. ... supported the amendment. He was ... opposing a Bill which, as ... stated, should have been made a Government measure. The Scott Act should, he thought, have a fair trial before its provisions were interfered with.

After a few words from Mr. McCuaig, who regretted the failure of the Dunk's Act in his own county, and from Mr. Angwin, the House divided on the amendment of the member for West Middlesex—Yeas, 54; Nays, 85.

The Doctrine of Evolution.

FIFTY NOTABLE THINGS IT IS NOW AN ESTABLISHED FACT.

From the London Standard, April 9.

Last night Prof. Huxley gave a discourse on "The Coming of Age of the Origin of Species," at the Royal Institution, in the most crowded audience. The Professor referred at the outset to the appearance of Mr. Darwin's book in October, 1859, and to the unpaid position of which he held in hisband. The doctrine of evolution, on which the work was founded, had been known to Catastrophic Geology was at the highest point of its influence, but he did not suppose there was any one now who viewed the Catastrophic doctrine except as a fossil. (Laughter.) Outside coolness, it was generally admitted that the key to the past was to be found in the present. He believed there was nothing which had so fixed the doctrine of evolution in the minds of scientific men as the classification of this fact. Mr. Darwin's work was of the natural supplement to Sir Charles Lyell's "Principles of Geology." The kernel of Mr. Darwin's book lay in the assertion that the animal species and the organic species were not fixed, but were peopled by descended, each within its own area, sprang from a common root and a common parent, but they had all been modified in the course of that descent, and, further, when he said that all the existing forms of life were the lineal descendants of those which had lived before the Silurian epoch. It that proposition was true, the book was the most considerable contribution which had been given to the world since the time of Harvey; and if it was false, the rest of the book was of no consequence. The necessary corollary to that proposition was that all forms of life had been connected together, and that was the point which had been most fiercely attacked in the discussion to which Mr. Darwin's book had given rise. The Professor then proceeded to deal at length with this part of his subject. The absence of any material distinction between man and the higher animals was a point which it took some three or four years to get settled, but it was admitted now on all hands. The connection between the birds and the other branches of the animal kingdom was another point which had been cleared up by subsequent discoveries, notably of the archeopteryx. Again, the apparent gap between vegetable life had been disposed of. Investigations which had been made since 1859 had rendered it utterly impossible it was to attempt to draw any distinction between the lowest animals and the lower plants. Another influence which had powerfully contributed to change the state of mind in which these matters were considered was the enormous development of the means of individual investigation. We had now attained a position in these matters of which our predecessors had no conception, and it was now possible to make a complete and accurate examination of the ovary of any organism, and even to reduce it to the thousandth part of an inch. But he had always felt that the real evidence in favor of evolution was to be found in the paleontologist. Mr. Darwin had accounted to some of his critics for the deficiencies which he felt in the imperfection of the geological records; but by a singular fate these imperfections had, since 1859, been supplied by researches all over the world, especially those in the neighborhood of Athens, and by discoveries of the American geologists in the Western Territories. The fact was that the doctrine of evolution was no longer a matter of speculation, it was an absolute fact. The fact was there was no other supposition which could connect the facts revealed by recent discoveries except that which was called evolution. He might be told that these various objects might have been developed spontaneously and created spontaneously. He had nothing to say to any one who advanced that theory any more than he should have anything to say to the savage who said that the sun set in the west at night and was recreated before its rising the next day. (A laugh.) Thus in the year 1880 the doctrine of evolution was no longer a matter of speculation. It was simply the only way of coherently and rationally explaining the facts of paleontology.

The Gladstones.

London Letter to the New York Times

Mrs. Gladstone does not confine her attentions to the domestic government of Hawarden Castle. Her influence will be enormous when Mr. Gladstone sits once more on the Treasury benches, and two of her sons are in Parliament. She is a clever, pleasing, earnest woman, but she dresses badly. Her bonnets are of the dowdiest. The provincial ladies quite rescue her bonnets Gladstone himself is not a "buck." He wears trousers that are "baggy" at the knees. His coats never fit him. His gloves are always too long at the fingers. But when he sees down to the House of Commons prepared to make an important speech, he is always well brushed, his hair oiled, and he wears a flower in his buttonhole. Mrs. Gladstone always "revises" his before he leaves home on important occasions. Old members of the Commons straighten their backs and get rec "cache... when... show in with...

GREAT LONDON
Seven-fold Confederation
OF EQUINE PANTOMIMIC, EDUCATED ANIMAL and OLYMPIAN WORLD'S WONDER
WILL EXHIBIT AT LONDON,
Corner of Wellington street and Dufferin avenue,
On Friday, May 7th, 1880.

It is far the best and cheapest exhibition on earth, actually combining seven complete and unsurpassable 20 cents shows in one stupendous aggregation, to all of which one 20 cent ticket admits. Children under 10 years, 25 cents. Five hundred luxurious reserved seats, 50 cents extra.

It presents for the first time to the Canadian public, and nowhere save to be seen, the GREAT ELECTRIC LIGHT, itself an unparalleled and glorious exhibition. Well may the astonished world exclaim that Edison can obtain it. Its planetary, constellated configuration of artificial sunrise, and heaven-born splendor, exceeds the full power of 240,000 gas lights. It is exhibited both afternoon and evening.

ASSOCIATION OF ONTARIO,
LONDON, - CANADA.

The Shareholders are hereby notified that the directors have this day declared a Dividend on the PREFERENCE STOCK at the rate of

EIGHT PER CENT,

and on the ORDINARY at the rate of

SEVEN PER CENT.

per annum, for the broken period extending to 31st March last, payable on the 30th inst.

A higher dividend on the Ordinary might have been justified, but the Board have thought it judicious, at the commencement of the Company's career, to priced cautiously in the distribution of the dividends. While they entertain no doubt that he holders of Ordinary stock will look upon the present one as satisfactory, in view of the short time during which the Company has been in operation the Directors, judging from the present excellent prospects of the Company, think themselves justified in intimating but on the next occasion they expect to be warranted in fixing upon a more liberal dividend. They do not, of course, bind themselves to the increase, as by must them be entirely guied by the result of the operations.

The dividend on stock, on which at least twenty per cent. has been paid up, will be Payable in cash; and when less than twenty per cent., it will be applied in paying cash stock.

The Company is now in full operation, and in a position to employ most profitably further amounts which shareholders who have not paid up in full may from time to time, find it convenient to apply in payment of their stock.

BARBARA.

"The old how well he lays toward you," said Aunt Jooly, "and how he turns his back upon the fair woman. You never had a better friend. And now for your wish."

There was some mysterious manipulation of the cards, another cut, and a prolonged scrutiny.

"I believe you'll get your wish, and before long," said the fortune-teller. "There's a journey before you—not a long one."

"Not!" cried Molly, breathless; for the oracle had been enticingly to that wish of hers hitherto.

"There's a journey. You turn your back upon the house, you see that means you're to leave home. Yes, I believe you'll have your wish, and it won't be long first."

Molly clasped her hands under the table. They were dancing with suppressed agitation. Such a vulgar oracle, and she such a sensible woman! Yet she could not help believing in any omen that promised the fulfillment of her desire. The cards were put back into the deep pocket, a mysterious receptacle, which Aunt Jooly wore buried among her numerous petticoats, and which would have defied the most accomplished sweil-mobsman. The two women drew nearer the cheerful fire. It was a frosty night, and the northeast wind was shrieking round the cottage, and the tall poplar by the gate was creaking and groaning as if he meant to snap asunder presently and smash somebody.

"If I shall ye be to-night, my dear?" said Aunt Jooly. "You're nary word to throw at a dog, and you was captivaty with my boys first now. Has anything gone astray?"

"Everything's astray," answered Mary Peters, gloomily. "Do you think it's pleasant to live the lones one life I lead, with the work house to look forward to if Mark were to die before his brother?"

"That ain't likely, my dear."

"I hope not; but who can tell? Life seems all at once and sevens sometimes. It's enough to enough for the rector's wife—an estate worth six hundred a year settled on her for life, whether she behaves well or ill. That's what her pretty face has done for her. But what has mine done for me? And yet I was counted a beauty in my time. What have I got to look forward to? Wrinkles and gray hairs, old age and poverty. Let's talk of something else, Aunt Jooly. It don't do for me to brood on my troubles. You know plenty of strange stories, don't you? You used to make my flesh creep sometimes, when I was living on my head of a winter evening in the fire light. Do you remember that story about Ruth Tregarvan, who was hanged for poisoning her husband thirty years ago?"

"She was a fool, my dear," said the crone, shaking her head.—"Ruth was a fool. She used arsenic. Any doctor can tell arsenic when he sees it. Lord, my dear, there's things as grow in the hedges that the doctors know nowt of; but it's lucky for folks that it's only an old woman like me that has found out the secret o' they things."

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE FIRST LINK IN A CHAIN.

"She were an ignorant young woman, my dear," pursued Aunt Jooly, when Mrs. Peters had insisted for her that gentle stimulant which was required to settle the tea and to make the cold comfortable. "I'm afraid what I'd know she never wud ha' given Sam Tregarvan arsenic; he were too cityin', he was, my lin, and I never say I felt for Ruth, though she were a wicked, hard-hearted, young woman. He drank like a fish, and when he was drunk he beat her; and though she'd been a good-looking, smart young woman when he marr'd her, she got to look like a scarecrow, because she wouldn't be at pined sexpence for all the clothes on her back a reg'lar drab, that's what she came to be, my dear. Nobody cud ha' thought there was such wickedness in her; she were daftlike. Yet she were cityin', my dear. Ops day when Sam came home from work she gave him a cold pasty (Lord! much like the taste of this here, she says; there's plenty of arsenic in it; p'raps the most warn't good.' P'raps tot the parsley,' she says. So he grumbles, and wints a bit pickment; but he goes on eatin', as they always does, poor doomed things. And in the night he has pains and cramps, and don't get no sleep next mornin'. Next day he makes use of some gruel as she made for him, and he grumbles again about the taste it; but she scolds him for bein' that fanciful, and so he clunks it up; and then he d' get that bad, and he d' go on gettin' worser, tell he d' die, and just when the death rattle's in his throat, Ruth d' tear up street distracted like, and call Doctor. She tells Doctor that her man ha' been eatin' sour apples, and that they'd laid hard on his stomach; and that he'd had the spasms that bad, she thought he'd twisted something inside him, like Farmer Scott's horse that died at the beginning of the summer. But the neighbors had bin in and out, hearin' Sam's groans, and they was able to tell the doctor different. Sam had told Ruth's arse to tell him. 'This looks like poison,' says Dr. Dilcott; 'have yon any rotabane about?' No, says Ruth, not that as she knawed of; but Sam was always close and fond of hidin' things in corners, and she had once heard him a talk of gettin' some stuff to kill the rats. There was lots of 'em about the place, she d' say, and they ran in and out as tame as fellows.' 'Then you've been mixing some of the stuff with your flour,' says the doctor. 'Lord forbid!' says she, 'I took some flour from the top shelf of the cupboard.' So Dr Dilcott gets up on a cheer and searches the cupboard, and there were wittles in a corner was some white powder, screwed up in a bit of paper. 'What's this, Mrs. Tregarvan?' he says, splendid says she. 'No, it isn't,' says he. 'It's arsenic—deadly poison.' Then she dropped down on the floor, and went off with a screech into strong hysterics. Two of the neighbors was by all the time, and they could hardly 'ould her. She went out of one fit into another, and her screeches were awful. 'Be quiet, can't 'ee!' says Dr. Dilcott, brutal like. 'Your screeching won't bring him to life; if it end, you wouldn't screech. You don't want un back again.' Then he whispered to a lad that stood lookin' in at the door, and ten minutes after the lad comes back with a constable, and he takes Ruth Tregarvan to jail. And at the inquest it comes out that Sam had never been knawed to buy any stuff for the rats, but that Ruth had bought the arsenic six months before at Launceston. It was all brought home to her at inquest, and she was hanged. And I say again, she was a fool; for instead of buyin' arsenic, she might ha' gathered a handful of innocent flowers in the hedges that would have taken Sam off as quiet as an infant."

"What flowers, Aunt Jooly?" asked Molly.

She was sitting on a low stool in a corner by the fender, half in shadow, the room dimly lighted by a single candle and the glow of a fire that was dying down to ashes. She lifted her bright dark eyes to the crone's withered face, which made a diabolical shadow on the ceiling, and waited with a look of eager interest for the witch's reply, and yet this story of Ruth Tregarvan was as familiar as the legends dear to childhood. She had heard the ghastly tale many a time in the long winter evenings. She had felt a morbid interest in all the loathesome details of a vulgar village murder; but she had never till to night troubled herself about those simpler instruments of death at which the herbalist hinted—the innocent-seeming leaves and blossoms, roots and berries, of the woodland and the hedge-row.

"No, my dear, I'm not agoing to tell you that," said the wise woman, with a solemn shake of her head. "Nobody's any the wiser for knowin' such things as that."

"Nor say the worse, either, unless they're as wicked as Ruth Tregarvan," answered Molly, with a scornful laugh. "You don't suppose I'm going to poison Mark or the boys, do you?"

"Lord love you, my dear, who ever thought of such a thing! But folks have no call to know such things that can do them no good. I've searched and larned the virtues and weeds that I grow in the fields, so that I might use 'em for people's good. I don't want to larn anybody the harm there is in 'em. There's not a herb but I have the power to cause folks or to hurt 'em, but I never used my knowledge against so much as a kitten."

By means have been taken by the manufacturers to push the sale of their "Myrtle Navy" tobacco except giving from time to time a simple statement of the facts connected with it in the public press. The large and rapidly increasing demand for it has been the result of the experience of smokers which these statements suggested. Their advice to business men is to advertise largely if they have the right article to back up the advertisement with.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Regular Monthly Meeting Last Night.

The School Management Committee's Report.

Improvements Suggested for the Various Schools.

The Issue of the Collegiate Institute—Open Committee Meetings—Revising Teachers' Salaries, &c., &c.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education was held in the Council Chamber last night, Col Moffat presiding, and present Messrs. Smith, Gomez, McPhail, Hayly, Wilson, T. J. Reid, Clarke, E. B. Reed, Denton, Lee, Wright, Bardin, Powell, Hudson, Thornton, Frap, Inspector Boyle and Head Master Checkley.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

A communication was received from the Globe lighting Rod Co., offering to fit a system of circuit conductors upon the city school buildings. Referred to Improvement Committee, to report.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were read and referred to committee:—From A Pardom, boiler, forwork and repairing, $258 98; Chs. H. Bain, seeds, $2 94; Geo. Leslie & Son, tree, &c., $28 75; Jos. Trimble, lab., $1 50; Wm. Reddon, do., $19 50; Joseph Pollet, do., $93; Henry Wallace, do $38 75; Jas. Shanly, do., $10; F. J. Dean, do., $15 50; Henry Martin, sundries, $2 80; Bowman & Co., coal, $296; Wm Anthistle, drawing earth, $336; James Hevey, lumber, &c., $1 82; A. J. Cameron, wood, $20 68; Improvement Committee disbursements, $19 50.

Accounts from Miss Mary Ferguson, $17 5, and Miss Moore, $4 80, teaching, were ordered to be paid.

MONTHLY REPORTS.

Inspector Boyle presented the usual monthly report of attendance at the public schools, which showed the number registered during the month to have been 2,837 boys, 1907; girls, 1,330. Average daily attendance, 1,758—boys, 949; girls, 809.

This was the lowest number registered for many years, which was explained by the prevalence of measles among the pupils. The report concluded with a suggestion to procure a supply of maps and other school requisites before the Department ceases to allow the 33⅓ per cent. on such purchases; and also the consolidating of the library.

Headmaster Checkley reported that the attendance at the Collegiate Institute for the past month was—Boys 129, girls 138, average 222. The progress of the various classes continues to be satisfactory.

Both reports were received and filed.

SCHOOL MANAGEMENT.

Mr. Bayly, from this Committee, reported as follows:—

1. That they have investigated the charges preferred by Mr. Thos. Nugent against two of the teachers, and find the same notentirelustified as charged. Galow.

2. The Committee find that Mr. D. E. M. Stewart has acted most improperly in the matter, and has fallen short of his proper censure; but in consideration of his youth and previous good character and ability as a teacher, they recommend that he be reprimanded by the Chairman, and warned to act differently in the future.

3. The Committee recommend that all children whose tuition fees have not been paid by the 15th of May be dismissed from the schools, and that in future all children whose tuition fees are not paid within one week from the time they become due be dismissed.

4 The Committee recommend that in future Mr. St. John Hytternarch, the music master, be required to attend to the duties of that department during the regular hours on each school day, and that he receive a salary of $600 per annum.

5. The Committee consider that home studies are necessary within reasonable and proper limits, and if any irregularity exists in the apportionment of home studies in the various schools, that the Inspector be requested to correct the same, and to establish uniformity, as far as possible, in the schools of equal grades.

6. The Committee recommend that from the present until the midsummer vacation, Mr. Carson and Miss Coyne be permitted to teach Euclid and Algebra, care being taken, however, that the efficiency of their classes in their ordinary studies be not impaired thereby.

7. With reference to the question of a grant being made by the Board to assist in the payment of a teacher at the Protestant Orphans' Home, this Committee report "progress."

The report was considered clause by clause.

The first, second and third clauses passed, after explanations by the Chairman of the Committee.

On the fourth clause being read, Messrs. T. J. Reid, Christie, Wilson and others objected to the clause on the score of economy.

Mr. Christie moved in amendment to the clause, seconded by Mr. T. J. Reid, that the matter remain as at present for the balance of the year.

Messrs. Hudson, Powell and Wilson understood that Mr. St John Hytternarch had offered to devote his whole time for $800 per annum.

M. E. B. Reed stated that no definite offer had been made.

After further discussion, the amendment was carried, and the remaining clauses passed.

IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. Wilson, from this Committee, reported:—

1. That they have called for tenders for plumbing, &c., necessary to introduce water into the Central, Interpediate, Waterloo North, Talbot street and Waterloo South schools, and recommend the acceptance of the tender of McLennan & Fyfer, for the sum of $160.

2. That the Janitor of the Collegiate Institute, Mr. Jury, receive an increase to his salary of $60 per annum.

The report was considered seriatim.

Mr. Wright condemned the Committee for the wholesale manner in which the trees had been cut down.

Mr. Denton said the trees cut down were poplars, which were destroying the others.

Messrs. Wilson and Christie considered the Committee had only done what ought to have been done long ago.

After further discussion both clauses passed.

THE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

Mr. T. J. Reid spoke at some length on the standing of the Collegiate Institute, as compared with similar institutions elsewhere. He considered some steps should be taken to infuse new life into the Institute, to create a rivalry among the pupils, that the schools may be rated in future in a better position than in the past. He thought the Board were comparatively ignorant as to the work accomplished. In concluding, he moved the following resolution:—"That the head master be instructed to furnish this Board with a detailed statement of the intermediate examinations, giving the names of pupils who are successful, and those rejected, with the number of marks obtained in each subject."

Mr. E. B. Reed suggested referring the resolution to the School Management Committee to report.

Mr. Bayly considered it would be better to allow the resolution to lie over as a notice of motion.

Head Master Checkley said that in order to keep up the standard of the school it would be necessary to increase the number of teachers. He referred at some length to the work being done in the school.

The resolution was, on motion, referred to the Improvement Committee.

PRESS REPORTERS AND COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

On motion it was agreed that the reporters of the press be notified in future of the date of holding Committee meetings.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS.

Mr. E. B. Reed introduced the question of making an increase in the salaries of several of the teachers. He stated that three teachers had applied for an increase, and held that the Board should take some action.

After Inspector Boyle had spoken on the question, in which he held that he had no power to revise the salaries of teachers,

Mr. Bayly stated that he had not heard of any complaints. If any teacher considered himself or herself unfairly dealt with, the matter could be brought before the Board, and referred to Committee, where it would receive attention.

Mr. Hudson moved that the request of Misses Carter, Buckle and Christie (the teachers referred to for an increase of salary), be referred to the School Management Committee.

The resolution was carried.

TEACHERS' CERTIFICATES.

Mr. T. J. Reid asked how often may an Inspector renew a teacher's certificate.

Inspector Boyle stated that he was pleased that the question had been asked, as reports had been circulated that he had renewed certificates at his own pleasure. He doubted how he renewed a certificate without the sanction of the Board.

The matter then dropped.

PRIZES.

Head Master Checkley asked for information in respect to the grant for prizes for the Collegiate Institute.

After remarks by the Chairman and Mr. Bayly, the matter was referred to the School Management Committee to report.

The Board then adjourned.

North-western Intelligence.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SARNIA.

There are only thirteen prisoners confined at present in the county jail, being the lowest number ever known. This is attributed to an abundance of labor under the National Policy, and to the general revival of business. It speaks volumes for a large county like Lambton, situated as it is on the borders of the neighboring Republic.

There is no volunteer company in this place at present. Sarnia once had the finest company in the battalion under Captain A. C. Clark, but it has been disbanded, and the members are dispersed.

A gentleman from Hanwel has been in town, with a view of starting a manufacturing establishment here that will give employment to one hundred hands. The name of the article to be manufactured is kept a secret.

T. J. Jones surrendered himself to-day to answer a charge of embezzlement preferred by Mr. J. G. McRae. The prosecutor did not appear, and Mr. Jones was consequently discharged. It would seem that there had been an unsettled sewing machine account between the parties, which in the course of time became somewhat complicated, and led to unpleasantness.

Ship repairing has been one of the industries of the place for some timepast, and gives employment to a large number of men.

The well known side wheel steamer, W. J. Spicer, so long employed in the ferry service between Point Edward and Fort Gratiot has been converted into a lumber barge. She carries 800,000 feet.

Mr. D. B. Charlton is shipping the oak timber got out by him this winter. The rapid rise in value will not him a handsome profit.

Large quantities of hides are beingshipped from here. There is great need of a large tannery, the facilities for getting bark, &c., being unsurpassed.

Certain peotish, fault-finding persons are taking exception to the statement made recently that a certain Sarnian stood seven feet three in his boots, and arectically remarking from their own petty ig'ag to make him out less. We never measured the man in question, and just gave the statement as we got it. The member for Lambton invariably summs his rural audiences by telling them of a Scotchman who swore that a certain horse was seven feet high. Before he signed his evidence judge pointed out the discrepancy, and told him he had better change it to 6ed. "Did I say feet?" asked the Scotchman. "Yes," replied the judge. "Well, than," said he, "I'll alter it to 7ed." He said seven feet three, and we will stick to it.

Sarnia is determined to have the finest curling rink in the country. Already about 100 subscribers. It is under the charge of Mr. Dolman, who is bringing it to a high state of perfection.

The renowned trotter, Kate Marshall, owned by Mr. Harkness, and so well known in London, Lucan and elsewhere, has been sold for a large sum to an American, and has left Canada for good. She was a great favorite in racing circles.

The Presbyterian Musical Association, assisted by the celebrated Tandy Brothers, of Kingston, gave a concert in the Temperance Hall last week, which has seldom been surpassed in Sarnia. Some 700 persons attended, who were highly delighted with the performance. The P. M. C. numbers now some forty members, and has by constant practice arrived at a high degree of excellence.

There is considerable excitement here over the high-handed proceedings of a certain County Constable. It is stated by reliable authority that he entered a house down an unoffending farmer who was visiting the town, and who had given no just cause of complaint, and smashed in the door with the sidewalk. After knocking him down it is said he placed his knee on his neck, handcuffed him and put him in the lock up. The citizens are indignant and demand an investigation.

Front street presents a brilliant array of shop fronts. Many of them would do credit to any city. Sarnia is noted for the soundness of the credit of the shops of them have acquired handsome fortunes, and I notice in nearly every instance that the most successful are those who are not afraid to use printers' ink.

The Fair Fame has a large circulation here, and Lord Edward, as a matter of course, is a favorite. It has also a good circulation in Port Huron.

The depot of the band of the 27th Battalion has not been definitely settled yet. Sarnia and Petrolia both wish to have it. It has been there for the past two or three eight years, under the charge of Captain Gattis. New instruments will soon be required.

And now there is a demand for the heretofore despised poplar wood. It makes splendid fuel, and is held incommand value to the swamps of Lambton.

The town is anxious to take in the Indian Reserve to the south of this place. And the Indian Reserve don't want to be taken in. The matter was up before the Council last night.

The fishing here is splendid, likewise the breeze. The docks are lined with boys of all sizes, like flies "round a cow out of the wet." Now is the time for the people of the interior to enjoy this place, and not to wait until the dog days. There is no hotter place in America than Front street on a July afternoon; besides, there is no fishing worth while then. Just now is the best time for that sport. The hotels are all ready for the reception of visitors.

A fire broke out about two o'clock this morning in a stable on a back street. The building was soon a mass of flame, and past recovery by the time the fire department arrived. A large crowd collected, attracted by the brilliant flames, but they soon dispersed, as the fire only lasted about half an hour.

It is said that Mr. Brown, the landlord of the Bellehamber House, has taken up a large tract of land in Manitoba.

The bay is covered with wild duck. They approach the shore with the greatest impunity, knowing that it is now May and that they are safe.

There is a great demand for carriage horses from the other side. All offering bring good prices.

The dredging of the bay is the topic of conversation now. The Government offer to dredge it if the owners of water lots will surrender certain rights. Some contend that there is sufficient harbor accommodation at present.

Mr. Walker, formerly of the Bank of Commerce, has gone into the provision business between this place and Manitoba. He is making large shipments to the Northwest.

The show of stallions, on Wednesday last, was unusually fine.

Lake freights are ruling low.

Lumber has advanced rapidly here.

The vessel sunk in the collision last week remains in the same position. Preparations to raise her are being made.

Yesterday a boy about 13 years of age, named Hamilton, fell into a pool of water on Cameron street, at the east end of the town, and was drowned. The unfortunate lad was subject to epileptic fits, and it is supposed he was under the influence of one of these when he fell in. No inquest was held. He will be buried to-day.

PORT EDWARD.

The fishing here is splendid. A salmon trout weighing 5½ pounds is reported to have been taken by Bloom.

The cattle trade, under the new order in council, reopened here last week and there is now a lively traffic. Some fifty car loads have already passed through. Mr. Redd, the Inspector, has his hands full. The company have greatly improved and enlarged the cattle yards, and are ready for a large business.

Foreigners henceforward will have fewer opportunities to become acquainted with Russian literature, the Government having forbidden the exportation of Russian books without official permission, which is to be granted only after a careful perusal of the works.

Free Press Correspondence.

Letter from the North west.

Birtle, N. W. T., April 16.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—By the arrival of the first mail on Tuesday, the 13th inst., I was favored with several copies of your valuable sheet, which are over wardly welcomed by all here. By return I will send you an account of the settlement of Birtle, which may not come amiss at this season, though, judging of the delay of the mails coming from the west, this may not reach you till the summer flowers are blooming, and then, no doubt, it will be strange to read of snow in abundance in this great North-west. Oh, dear! yes; in some places it is nearly five feet deep, but on the average level only about eighteen inches. We have had two or three blizzards the last week. On the 7th inst. the thermometer registered 24° below zero, and on the 14th 8° below! The only consolation we take in this extremely long winter is the statement of the "oldest inhabitant" that this is an exceptional one, and in consequence of the great amount of snow there will be less rain, and therefore, we are all sincerely hoping fewer mosquitoes, which are considered by those who have experienced both more annoying than cold weather. If we had a risk, as we hope to have before long, it would be some satisfaction buying a season ticket, for the skating season lasts from the latter end of October till well up to the present moment. Not being a weather prophet I am unable to say how much longer. This would also make a capital field for snow shooing. Today, as I write, the snow is sinking fast under the burning rays of the sun, and though it does last a long time, when it does go, we are told it goes in a very desirable manner, sinking quietly under the ground and causing none of the disagreeable slush which we read prevailed in Ontario all winter.

During the last week or two there has been a great influx of arrivals, mostly from Rugersoll, Braemar and Shakespeare, and the majority belonging to that class of people with which the country is already liberally provided. I refer to young men. However, they haven't quite the monopoly of the trail, for several married men and ladies have arrived here, the latter not looking the least travel-worn from their long journey. Everybody was in great haste to reach his destination before the snow left and the roads won't be broken up, but now all that are here are yet quite unable to see their land. However, even now, they all appear to like the country much better than any they passed coming up from Winnipeg, and indeed after a long trip over the mountainous prairies, it is a relief to see something in the way of long ranges of rolling hills and sunny, home-like valleys. A great number of the arrivals are yet suffering from snowblindness, caused by the very dazzling effect of the sunshine on the snow. It is a painful affliction, but not dangerous, and at the same time injurious to the eyes, if not protected by goggles or veils.

Several of our cattle were working a day or two last week in making a boom to stay the logs cut at the mountains in the vicinity of Mr. Cumming's mess. Mr. C. was here himself last week completing his arrangements, but has now returned to Winnipeg to see his wife safely on the road, and expects to be back here in a short time. I believe there is no lack of erection the work necessary, but I cannot say for sure before long. There is no regular store here yet, but there will be in a short time. It will be a great boon to the settlers here when we do have five or six stores as we expect, and competition produce. Mr. Thos. Hayes, the agent of provisions at Shoal Lake and Ellice are very high. Hay is very scarce and not to be had for love or money. Horses are also obliged to go twenty-two miles for it and pay at the rate of $16 per ton.

The Literary and Debating Society, established in December last, is still flourishing. The meetings are held every Wednesday evening, when a portable, as well as entertaining, time is spent. Mr. Rose, our Methodist minister, was at our last concert, gave a lecture here in the Oddfellows' Hall last week, which has seldom been surpassed in Sarnia. Some 700 persons attended, who were highly delighted with the performance. The P. M. C. numbers now some forty members, and has by constant practice arrived at a high degree of excellence.

There is considerable excitement here over the high-handed proceedings of a certain County Constable. It is stated by reliable authority that he entered a house down an unoffending farmer who was visiting the town, and who had given no just cause of complaint, and smashed in the door with the sidewalk. After knocking him down it is said he placed his knee on his neck, handcuffed him and put him in the lock up. The citizens are indignant and demand an investigation.

Front street presents a brilliant array of shop fronts. Many of them would do credit to any city. Sarnia is noted for the soundness of the credit of the shops of them have acquired handsome fortunes, and I notice in nearly every instance that the most successful are those who are not afraid to use printers' ink.

The Fair Fame has a large circulation here, and Lord Edward, as a matter of course, is a favorite. It has also a good circulation in Port Huron.

The depot of the band of the 27th Battalion has not been definitely settled yet. Sarnia and Petrolia both wish to have it. It has been there for the past two or three eight years, under the charge of Captain Gattis. New instruments will soon be required.

And now there is a demand for the heretofore despised poplar wood. It makes splendid fuel, and is held incommand value to the swamps of Lambton.

The town is anxious to take in the Indian Reserve to the south of this place. And the Indian Reserve don't want to be taken in. The matter was up before the Council last night.

The fishing here is splendid, likewise the breeze. The docks are lined with boys of all sizes, like flies "round a cow out of the wet." Now is the time for the people of the interior to enjoy this place, and not to wait until the dog days. There is no hotter place in America than Front street on a July afternoon; besides, there is no fishing worth while then. Just now is the best time for that sport. The hotels are all ready for the reception of visitors.

A fire broke out about two o'clock this morning in a stable on a back street. The building was soon a mass of flame, and past recovery by the time the fire department arrived. A large crowd collected, attracted by the brilliant flames, but they soon dispersed, as the fire only lasted about half an hour.

It is said that Mr. Brown, the landlord of the Bellehamber House, has taken up a large tract of land in Manitoba.

The bay is covered with wild duck. They approach the shore with the greatest impunity, knowing that it is now May and that they are safe.

There is a great demand for carriage horses from the other side. All offering bring good prices.

The dredging of the bay is the topic of conversation now. The Government offer to dredge it if the owners of water lots will surrender certain rights. Some contend that there is sufficient harbor accommodation at present.

Mr. Walker, formerly of the Bank of Commerce, has gone into the provision business between this place and Manitoba. He is making large shipments to the Northwest.

The show of stallions, on Wednesday last, was unusually fine.

Lake freights are ruling low.

Lumber has advanced rapidly here.

The vessel sunk in the collision last week remains in the same position. Preparations to raise her are being made.

Yesterday a boy about 13 years of age, named Hamilton, fell into a pool of water on Cameron street, at the east end of the town, and was drowned. The unfortunate lad was subject to epileptic fits, and it is supposed he was under the influence of one of these when he fell in. No inquest was held. He will be buried to-day.

PORT EDWARD.

The fishing here is splendid. A salmon trout weighing 5½ pounds is reported to have been taken by Bloom.

The cattle trade, under the new order in council, reopened here last week and there is now a lively traffic. Some fifty car loads have already passed through. Mr. Redd, the Inspector, has his hands full. The company have greatly improved and enlarged the cattle yards, and are ready for a large business.

Foreigners henceforward will have fewer opportunities to become acquainted with Russian literature, the Government having forbidden the exportation of Russian books without official permission, which is to be granted only after a careful perusal of the works.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE BRITISH GRAIN TRADE.

London, May 4.—The Mark Lane Express says:—The temperature during the past week has been exceedingly low and vegetation received a sudden check which is somewhat threatening to fruit. Country advices as a rule continue satisfactory in regard to the growing corn crops, though wheat is reported as losing color on some heavy lands, and as thin and by no means promising in a few districts. The delivery of English wheat has again been limited, and business was confined to the best lots, which have gone quietly into consumption at previous prices. Secondary qualities are but little inquired for, and again receded a shilling per quarter. In foreign wheat operations buyers have been paralyzed by the weight of present and prospective supplies. Business consequently moved with very narrow limits, and although trade was only quoted at six pence to a shilling lower on Monday last, sales were been pressed. It is singular, considering the light stocks held by millers, that the decline of prices consequent on the collapse of the American ring should not have been followed by a materially increased demand. The first rush to mill is now over. A pause has occurred, during which it would be well for both sides to consider the situation. It is impossible to say whether the low prices here reached, but it is certain that a few weeks of unfavorable weather would give a spur to speculation for which the low prices now current offer tempting opportunities.

Maize, in consequence of large shipments from America, declined in five weeks from 29/- 6 to 23s 6 per qr.

Arrivals at ports of call have been very limited. Wheat during the beginning of the week declined until 49s 6d was accepted on Thursday for red winter. Since that there has been a great demand for the United Kingdom and the continent. The closing quotations show little or no alteration on the week. Maize sold steadily at about 24s per qr., the decline being at length arrested. Wheat for shipment was sparingly offered, but buyers continued reserved.

The sales of English wheat last week aggregated 38,755 qrs at 45s 6d against 58,937 qrs at 40s 9d for the same period last year.

The imports into the United Kingdom for the week ending April24 were 114,127 cwt of wheat and 168,866 cwt of flour.

CANADIAN ITEMS.

—The A.O.U.W. are building a magnificent hall on the corner of Meiscl and Talbot streets, in St. Thomas, which will cost about $10,000.

—During the last year St. Thomas has increased as follows:—

	1879.	1879.	Increase.
Total assessment..	$2,326,625	$2,501,625	$171,000
" population..	8,021	8,500	479
" ratepayers..	1,749	1,850	101

—The Howard spring mow at Ridgetown was a failure this year. There were but three cattle on the grounds, and very few horses. J. G. McGregor sid a brood mare for $65, and two two-year-old colts for $76. These were the only sales reported.

—A group photograph taken lately in Drayton shows five persons of one family and of five generations:—Mrs. Thos. Hayes, aged 95; his son George, aged 78; George's son Thomas, aged 56; Thomas' daughter, aged 20; and a grandson of Thomas, aged 12.

—H. Chapman, of Holland Landing, cut ten cords and a half of wood from one acre of a few days ago. While chopping another ledged thesame kind he discovered a sprout of wood fourteen feet in height growing within the hollow trunk. The little one appeared to be thriving well, considering the limited sphere for expanding.

—A moulder named Cowwottle fell into a boiler of molten iron at McDougall's foundry, Montreal, Friday. His brother rushed to assist him and both were fatally burned. Mrs. Tourville, standing at her door, saw her husband's remains carried by to the hospital, and hastily handing her child to a neighbor, exclaimed, "Take my child! I am going to see my husband!" she fell dead from fright.

—Among the emigrants passing through on the Air Line last week were thirty Finnish families, numbering 200 persons. They are bound for Minnesota. Many of the women were dressed in bright red homespun cloths, with fantastic jackets and hats. Some of the mothers had their infants in cradles made of skin and strapped on their backs. The men and several of the older children wore suits of skin with the hair on the inside and the smooth outside, elaborately embroidered in many colors.

—In the Montreal Police Court the other day a boy of 12 years was arraigned on the charge of indecently assaulting a young miss of about thirteen summers. The evidence went to show that the prisoner kissed the plaintiff on the street, and subsequently attempted to throw her to the ground. For the defence, Clara Martin, a child of about the same age, acknowledged that the crowd generally kissed each other while standing at doors and corners of streets. In fact, she kissed a little herself, and felt sure there was no harm in it. She also considered the $20,000 shares of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad stock, or 5,000 more than one-third of the capital of the company, in the past six months, forming an aggregate in round numbers of $42,500,000. This he is reported to have invested in 4 per cent. Government bonds, and by other purchases to have made his total holding at least $50,000,000, the interest on which amounts to $2,000 000 annually.

Detroit Tribune:—The statement telegraphed from Washington to the effect that Congressman Newberry had received information that Mr. Joy had effected a lease of the Great Western Railway for the Wabash was the subject of much discussion yesterday. No intimation of the kind had been received in Detroit by gentlemen who were most intimate with Mr. Joy and associated with him in his present schemes It is known that the Great Western Directors sailed for America a week ago, and therefore have not lately been in London. Those most familiar with the matter here are therefore disposed to regard the statement telegraphed from Washington as premature.

A special from Washington says concerning the Butler connection:—Congressman Newberry has information that gives great encouragement that the $200,000 bonus very soon for the Butler extension, the Wabash Railroad, with the help of Toledo, will pay Detroit in making its connection with the Great Western, and will build a road from Toledo to a connection with the Great Western back of Windsor, crossing the river at or near the Canada Southern crossing and going up the Canada side. The Wabash people claim that this will be cheaper than to build the Butler extension, that there will be no expense for depot facilities, and that the entire Wabash line can then be utilized.

General Notes

American hogs may now enter Canada upon condition that they be slaughtered upon arrival.

Destructive fires in New Jersey have destroyed 25,000 acres of strawberries. The Oswego Palladium remarks that "our growers will no doubt obtain good prices for their berries on this account, much of our crop being shipped to New York."

Ottawa paper:—As an evidence of the revival in the lumber trade, a gentleman, well informed in the business, says a sale of culls was recently effected at prices almost double those of the previous year. Culls that brought only $9.50 last year, are now commanding $17 50. It is said to be the intention of the mill owners to raise the wages of their men to an average of about $1 25 perday.

Labor Troubles in Quebec.

Fight Between Rival Ship Laborers.

THE MILITIA CALLED OUT.

Quebec, May 13.—The militia have been called out, and the Corporation will now have to pay a pound to the military authorities for every penny they refused to pay to their police. Yesterday an order was received by Col. Strange from Ottawa, forbidding B Battery to leave the Citadel without an express order from headquarters in Ottawa. The reason of this is, as pointed out in a former despatch, that Quebec would not increase her police force so long as B Battery could be called out at no expense to the city. This is now at an end, and the police force will be immediately increased in strength.

A ROW ON THE PLAINS.

The reason for calling out the militia is in consequence of a row that took place yesterday afternoon on the Plains of Abraham. It appears that the French union men were returning from Cap Sante in a barge, and when opposite Cap Blanc, which is a French Canadian settlement on the plain street, five of them persuaded the captain of the tow boat to let them ashore there so that they might reach their homes by a short cut up the steps to the Plains of Abraham and then home. This was observed by some of the parent society gang, and pursuit was at once given, and the French Canadians were fired at on the Plains. They immediately scattered, but one was struck by a bullet and fell, and while prostrate was kicked by two of the gang till his features were almost obliterated. He managed to stagger up and run off, but being again pursued, was further beaten, till he reached the Ladies' Protestant Home, where he attempted to take refuge. The pursuers came up with him once more, and took him out on to the St. Louis road, where he was observed and taken to St. Bridget's Home, where he now lies in a dying condition. In the meanwhile the French of Cape Blanc heard the firing and a party of about twenty armed with rifles hurried up the steps, but being prevented by their adversaries the latter made off and returned to their own cove by way of the cove steps, being, being fired on by their pursuers, it is believed without effect.

UNDER ARMS.

On the foregoing facts becoming known to the authorities, five magistrates immediately signed a requisition calling out the militia, which was accordingly done, and the 9th and 9th Battalions are now under arms in the Citadel, while the Dragoons are dismissed till to-morrow.

THE SUPREME COURT.

A Case Involving the Question of Squatters' Rights in the North-west.

Ottawa, May 13.—The Supreme Court met this morning, and took up the case of Farmer vs. Livingstone. Mr. Bethune, Q. C., appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Bompas, Q. C., for the respondent. The case is an important one, involving as it does the question of squatter's rights in the North West. The action is one ejectment commenced by a farmer against Livingstone on the 19th February, 1879, to recover possession of the south-west quarter, of lot 30, in the sixth township, fourth range, Manitoba. The plaintiff claims the title by virtue of a patent from the Crown, dated 13th December, 1878. Livingstone has been a squatter on the property since 1875. Chief Justice Wood held that under the statute of 1872, having regard to what he calls squatter's rights, the defendant had acquired an indefeasible title, which held good even against the Crown, and that the patent which the Crown afterwards gave to the farmer was null, and should be set aside as having been issued in error.

CATTLE TRANSPORTATION.

The Grand Trunk and the Canadian Trade.

Ottawa, May 13.—By like Government regulations regarding the transportation of American cattle on Canadian railways, the Grand Trunk railway is compelled to provide a large number of cattle cars entirely in transporting American cattle, and no Canadian animals are allowed to be carried in those cars even when they are not otherwise in use. The withdrawal of these cars from use by Canadian cattle owners has led to some drovers finding it difficult to secure cattle cars when needed.

A Boy Wantonly Shot by a Servant girl.

St. John, N. B., May 12.—A boy named Adams, of Woodstock, a beggar, called at the house of Mr. W. A. Moore yesterday, when Mrs. Moore tried to frighten him away with a pistol. A servant girl named Crilley took the pistol from Mrs. Moore and fired three shots at the lad, one striking him on the right side. It is said the girl is from her home in Houlton, Maine, to avoid being arrested.

SAD ACCIDENT.

Allanburgh, Ont., May 13.—Yesterday evening as Mr. Jacob Upper was hauling manure from Messrs. Peterson & Co.'s distillery, his team stopped, and the son of Mr. James S. Upper, a boy about 4 years of age, climbed on the hind wheel of the waggon, and Mr. Upper, not perceiving him, started up and the wheel passed over the little fellow's back. He was picked up by his father and carried home, where he expired in about twenty minutes.

A FIENDISH CRIME.

Three Young Girls Outraged by a Drunken Father.

Mason City, Ia., May 13.—The most fiendish and revolting crime ever perpetrated in this section of Iowa has just come to light. Last Sunday night, in Lafayette township, the father of three girls aged 9, 15 and 18 years came to Mason City with the ostensible purpose of purchasing supplies for his family. while absent he became intoxicated, and going home his infernal propensities so overcame his reason that he ravished all three of his daughters. Their screams were heard by neighbors living at a distance of two miles over the prairie. A party was at once formed to ascertain the cause thereof, and proceeded to the scene, where the wildest excitement prevailed. Men were already there from another locality, armed with shot-guns and revolvers, and seeking to find the fiend guilty of such a brutal outrage, but at last accounts he had not been captured. The whole country is aroused and hundreds of men are in pursuit.

An Infernal Machine.

An Unsuccessful Attempt to Assassinate the Spanish Consul-General at New York.

New York, May 13.—A dastardly attempt was made to-day by some party or parties, at present unknown, to kill the Spanish Consul General, Hypolito D'Uriarte, by means of an infernal machine. It appears that when his letters were brought into his office this morning, among them was a package about eight inches long and three in width. After examining his letters at his desk the Consul took this package, which was done up in a brown paper box, to the table to open it. He had test his penknife to do so, and immediately he took the cover off the box there was a loud explosion, and some balls of fire shot out of the box, burning the carpet and Consul's coat, and scorching his hands, but otherwise doing no further damage. Examination of the box showed that its purpose was to kill the person who opened it. Inside of it was a quantity of gunpowder, a large percussion cap, and what is supposed to be nitro-glycerine. The top of the box was so fastened that when taken off friction would be caused, and probably sparks of fire created sufficient to set off the contents of the box. The package was addressed "Chevalier Hypolito D'Uriarte, Consul-General's Office, 29 Broadway." It was postmarked Philadelphia. Private detectives have been set to work on the case. The Consul-General has no idea as to who sent him the deadly package, but surmises it was a Cuban plot to destroy the life of a Spanish official.

Expected Drop in Tea.

A Big glut in the market—Probable Fall in Prices.

New York, May 13.—A very heavy glut is likely to occur in the Japan tea market in consequence of the immense import of about ten millions pounds during the present year over that of last year. The crop of Japan has been increased every year in consequence of the demand made for them in the United States during 1876. The exports from Japan to the United States were 29,897,280 pounds last year. These exports were increased to 35,302,675 pounds, and to day advices have been received that there will be no market for the same 84,555,097 pounds, being an increase of over 36 per cent. above last year's exports. This increased exports, with stock on hand, is likely to make the quantity of Japanese teas on hand for the present year in this city about 45,000,000 pounds, which is far more than will be required for consumption, and has already weakened the market with the prospect of lower prices. The result will be that the consumer will stand a chance of getting a good tea this year at a far lower price than has been known for some time past.

Hanlan-Courtney.

A Second Race in Prospect—Work on the River.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 12.—Mr. David Ward, of Toronto, Hanlan's backer, arrived here to-day, and registered at Willard's Hotel. Preparations are being made to raise a purse of $600 for the winner and $250 for the second, for the purpose of keeping the rowers, Courtney, Hanlan and another, over here for three days after the great contest, to get up a second race, in which all will participate. If the amounts named above are not satisfactory, more will probably be raised. Both Hanlan and Courtney were on the river to-day, and took their usual practice pulls. The interest in the race is daily increasing, and a number of people are already commencing to arrive. It is understood here that two car loads of Canadian people will come down to see the contest. Courtney's new boat did not arrive to-day as expected.

THE CALIFORNIA LAND LEAGUE.

Seven Persons Killed in the Recent Encounter Between Settlers and Officers.

San Francisco, May 12.—United States Marshal Poole has returned to the city from Hanford. Some further details regarding yesterday's tragedy are learned from the gentlemen above received. Hart has died from his wounds, making the seventh. When Poole and party met the Leaguers to advance with Chalk and was at once surrounded. He stated his business, and commenced reading his authority, when he was stopped by pistols presented at his head and his surrender demanded. His party retreated. A portion of the settlers then advanced on Hart and Crowe, one of the horses knocking Poole down, when the firing began. It is not yet known who began the firing, but Crowe seems to have done all the killing of settlers, Hart falling wounded. Crowe escaped in the melee, but was overtaken and shot down over a mile distant. Frank Wilk was spared on condition that he would quickly leave without delay. He was escorted to Kingsbury by an armed guard. Poole says he does not know what he shall next do in the matter. He will lay the matter before the authorities, but he does not think they are in a position to help him. There is not any money to meet the expenses of the Marshal's debt, and Congress recently passed an act forbidding employment of United States troops to enforce any civil process. At least two hundred men would be necessary to meet the force which the settlers are in a position to bring against a party that might attempt to dispossess them. The railroad company will not run trains to Hanford until they receive assurance that their property will be protected. The most vigorous legal means will now be taken to settle the disturbances in Tulare County, and all on railroad lands will be called upon to buy ground of the company or vacate. It is believed the settlers will continue their demonstrations and remain firm in their determination.

A BUSY DAY IN OIL.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 13.—This has been the busiest day ever known in the oil market in Pittsburgh, and more oil has changed hands than on any day since the Pittsburg exchange was opened. The sales at the Brathwaite amounted to 400,000 barrels. About 300 000 barrels were sold at 78½, 50,000 at 78¾ and 50 000 at 77½.

The fires in the Bradford region have made the market stronger and produced a better feeling. A number of heavy contracts have been made within the past two weeks in anticipation of a rise in oil. The oil region fires produced considerable excitement on the street again to-day among the curbstone brokers.

STRANGE BIRTH.

A Case Interesting to Doctors.

Baltimore, May 13.—Four weeks ago Mrs. Ballard, wife of a coach maker, gave birth to a female child of unusual size. The fact was established that a second child was present. On Tuesday an operation of the cesarean section was performed and a large boy taken from among the viscera. Both children are living and the mother is doing well. The case will attract great attention throughout the medical world.

LATEST FROM GREAT BRITAIN.

The Importation of American Cattle.

Renewal of Irish Coercion Bill.

The Afghan War Exposes—Extensive Strike.

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN CATTLE.

A discussion has arisen concerning the necessity and expediency of the existing orders restricting the importation of cattle, especially from the United States. The rarity of cases of infectious or contagious diseases discovered in cattle imported from there in 1879 is pointed out. A recent article in the Pall Mall Gazette referred sympathetically to the argument of Evarts and the United States Minister that most of such cases might well be the result of the hardships of the Atlantic passage, and possibly avoidable by an improvement of the transport facilities.

THE IRISH COERCION ACT.

The daily News says the Cabinet Council on Friday, will have, it is believed, a very serious question to decide; for the Chief Secretary for Ireland, having returned from Dublin, is said to be disposed to recommend a renewal of coercive legislation with regard to Ireland. We trust that no reason will be found for such a step, but if sufficient cause is shown to recommend a renewal of the Coercion Act, and if the peace of Ireland must depend on the continuance of such legislation for the present, the Liberals will be obliged to assent to the proposal.

COST OF THE AFGHAN WAR.

London, May 13.—The Times says the proposed Indian loan may be taken as a liquidation of the depleted state of the Indian treasury. The cost of the Afghan war is now confessed to be upward of £1,200,000,000, and will probably be more.

COLLEGIANS IN TROUBLE.

Eighty under-graduates of University and College of Oxford have been rusticated. Some of their number locked in the University Proctor and some fellows of the College. The authorities called on the under-graduates to give the names of the culprits, which they refused to do, when the whole body were rusticated.

THE BLACKBURN STRIKE.

Blackburn, May 13.—Forty-three thousand eight hundred looms have stopped here; 1,900 operatives are working at unchanged wages, 1,200 at five per cent. advance, and 200 at two and one-half per cent. advance. Most of the spinning and sizing machinery has been stopped, and 25 000 operatives are idle. An official of the Masters' Association visited the various mills to-day and ascertained that a very large number of hands are anxious to resume at the present wages.

LABOR TROUBLES.

London, May 13.—About 12,000 weavers at Blackburn struck yesterday. The remainder will probably quit work to-day. The bitterness which characterized the last strike is not present in this one. An early disintegration of the strike is expected.

BRADLAUGH'S CASE.

The special committee to whom was referred the case of Bradlaugh, will report adversely on his claim to affirm instead of taking the oath. The ultimate effect will probably be that the rule of procedure with regard to industing members will be modified.

FAILURE.

London, May 13.—George Clarke & Co., tea merchants, have failed. Liabilities $450,000.

EMIGRATION EXTRAORDINARY.

London, May 13.—Emigration continues very heavy. According to advices, the steamship companies' volume of emigration for May promises to exceed that of April, during which month 29 000 passengers left Liverpool, of whom 25,000 went to the United States. The Cunard Steamship Company will this week send out nearly 4,000 passengers. Several lines found it necessary to put on extra steamers. The demand for accommodation at Queenstown greatly exceeds the supply. Companies which sold tickets in advance are compelled to pay detention money to emigrants awaiting their turns.

THE ATALANTA.

Supposed Relics Of the Lost Training Ship.

FOUND IN MID-ATLANTIC.

London, May 13.—The fate of the training ship At lanta is still uncertain. Capt. Stephens of the bark Swansea Castle, which arrived at Falmouth to day, reports that a month ago in lat. 37 deg. north, long 40 deg. west he passed a white life buoy of the sailing ship Atalanta, one spun rope of war, also several pieces of planking, and a cask which appeared to be partly filled. These articles when seen were, he says, in a position which would be indicated by a direct line between Bermuda and the Azores. This is exactly the course the Atalanta should have taken when the latest accounts from her were received.

Ecumenical Council.

English Approval of the Action of American Methodists.

London, May 13.—The English Methodists are delighted over the action of the General Conference, now in session in Cincinnati, in favoring an Ecumenical Council of the Church to be held in London next year, and will give their two hundred brethern from America a most cordial welcome.

Hartington's Inheritance.

Dangers and Perplexities of the Indian Question.

London, May 13.—At the banquet of the Devonshire Girth in London this evening, Lord Hartington said the position that they had inherited was full of embarrassments and not free from dangers and complications. He was almost aghast at the number, the complexity, and the intricacy of the problem confronting him regarding Indian matters. He said he hoped that the country would not grudge the Government a little time to master the details of the situation.

Lord Dufferin's Health.

London, May 13.—Lord Dufferin, since his residence in St. Petersburg, has been in anything but robust health. However, to day a letter has been received here by a connexion of his household, which it would appear that he is gaining stamina.

...It has been discovered in Rome, that Fra Giovanni died on his death by poison. So many conspicuous persons were hinted after his sudden death that his body was exhumed, and medical investigation showed a large amount of arsenic in his stomach. A brother Franciscan has been arrested as the murderer, and it is believed his guilt will be established. His only motive is supposed to have been jealousy.

Gladstone's Insult to Austria.

How the Apology was Received at Vienna.

THE INCIDENT AT EDINBURGH.

London, May 13.—The fact that Mr. Gladstone's letter was diplomatically demanded by Austria is proved by despatches from Vienna this morning. It will be seen by that the letter was penned after a communication made by Count Karolyi, and that it is regarded in the Austrian capital as a full recognition of the complete triumph of Baron Haymerle's policy. Austria is justly exultant, while Mr. Gladstone has lowered the influence of English statesmen, discredited his own Ministry, and irretrievably damaged himself. It is fortunate for him that the parliamentary recess may give time for the unpleasant incident to be somewhat forgotten before the Houses meets again. It may be interesting to relate how Mr. Gladstone was led to apply the expression "Hands off" to Austria. The correspondent of a Vienna paper happened to be in Edinburgh, and seeing a crowd around Mr. Gladstone's carriage at the h

THE DAILY FREE PRESS.

A LARGE MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Dispatches, is issued every morning, except Sunday, in a convenient form, and delivered over the counter, accompanied by the Illustrated press sheets, to any address in an western section of the Province, at the following rates, which are invariably in advance, as well as the several points:

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 9 o'clock a. m. the same day, is given in the columns. A NEW FEATURE IN DIPLOMACY.

Mr. Gladstone is desirous of filling a large segment of the public eye of Great Britain, and he has succeeded in gratifying his wishes to the full. His latest appointment for the eye of the Emperor of Austria, is the most unique of its kind that has ever, up to this hour, emanated from the political world, whether it is worse than a crime, than Mr. Gladstone has already proved himself a criminal in two distinct counts. To have made such remarks regarding the head of any government in the second greater land on the habitable blunder which no man, who had ever borne on his shoulder the responsibilities of office, or who looked forward to incurring such responsibilities at any future time, would have fallen into, were he qualified by constitution and official training to fill such a position as he now occupies. But the blunder having been perpetrated, it is plain that its method of treatment is a still greater one. All must admit the offensive nature of his remarks respecting the Emperor of Austria, remarks not more insulting than uncalled for, and to be made the amende while still in the same position as that in which he stood when they were uttered, then no one could with justice, have formulated such an indictment against him, as the folly of such an utterance could have affected no one but himself. But, unfortunately, he delayed his apology until by making it he compromised the dignity of the British Empire as he is now the representative of the majesty of the English people in all diplomatic circles in Christendom. To apologize for a rash word, whether prompted by passion, interest, or lack of information, may be regarded as something commendable when the matter is between two gentlemen, but when the affair is between the representatives of two mighty nations, the course takes one by surprise as altogether new and unprecedented.

The hero of Midlothian makes a rather poor debut as a conqueror, fresh from "the fields of his fame" and his triumphs over Beaconsfield. He has at his back a greater majority than generally supports a Ministry even in the first blush of his power, and yet they have placed themselves in a more unenviable position already, than any English Ministry has ever been placed in or within the memory of man. The Premier has had to offer an apology, the Postmaster General, Mr. Fawcett, has offered an apology, and Sir Charles Dilke has had a quasi denial made for him, which he either dares not or will not make for himself. Mr. Gladstone is no young man who might plead the ardor or inexperience of youth in extenuation of rash and unwise utterances. He has been in public life for nearly half a century, he has been accustomed to thinking on his legs for nearly "two generations of articulate speaking men" and therefore, it is not much to his credit to have to drag an English Cabinet through the mud by offering an apology to the Emperor of Austria for offensive remarks which no English statesman should have made. He has provoked a good deal of criticism by this apologetic letter; more a great deal than was bestowed upon the scandalous escapade and one cannot be surprised at it. Mr. Fawcett's affair is more of a domestic kind, but still it is bad enough to attribute an action so dishonorable in itself to his predecessors in office, when he should have known that were they guilty, as he describes them, they were still again have held up their head on English ground or again have taken their place among public men.

The Dilke escapade is perhaps more serious than either of the other two. The denial made in his name, informal as it was, has not been endorsed by himself. On this subject we offered some comments lately and them pointed out that such language of unexplained or left uncontradicted, might lead to a serious misunderstanding, and how we find that the same views have been expressed by some continental journals speaking, it is supposed, on behalf of their government. The arrogant tone of Sir Charles D the talks in connection with the language of his chief so completely foreign to that of the usual diplomatic vein, could not fail to produce a sensation of a novel character in the different Courts of Europe, and made the experienced diplomats of all nations open their eyes and wonder at the innovation introduced into their science, which has always been distinguished for the festidium and for the strict propriety of the with which the most serious business is conducted. The French paper defence of its correspondent that the nature of the interview ago could not have been truly reported, and taking this in Sir Charles D Dilke's absence ally assume that faithfully re- journals en- Government when the House gets to business, and that such a motion would receive more support than that of the regular opposition, and from those facts one may easily see, how widespread is the chagrin and regret at this want of judgment displayed by these three members of the Administration.

COLONIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

How to borrow well is understood to a nicety by our Australian and New Zealand cousins, as the following extract from an English financial journal will show:—"Queensland will no doubt get the loan she is now applying for in the London money-market. But it is quite time those responsible for the government, both of New Zealand and Queensland, made up their minds at what points to borrowing they will stop. We supported New Zealand's last application for a loan, and we have no wish to be in the way of Queensland getting what she is now asking for. We do not regard it as a fair test of the resources of either colony to compare the proportion of debt to population with the same thing in other countries; for the population in new countries is wholly taxpaying, and not made up of a multitude of non-productive members. Even, however, though this be borne in mind, the burdens of both colonies must be admitted to be very heavy. The Melbourne Argus publishes an article in which it points out that the debt per head of the population in New Zealand is as much as £62 13s. 8d., and of Queensland £42 8s. 11d.; whereas the debt per head of the United Kingdom is only £23 4s., and of France £25 8s. The figures are startling. We hope they will teach the colonies named the necessity for prudence and self-restraint."

MOVING ON.

When Mr. Hamilton Merritt was urging the construction of the Welland canal as a means of developing Canada, there were plenty of objectors to say he would ruin the country. When aid was given to the Grand Trunk, by means of which Canadian trade commerce and agriculture have been all benefited, there were those ready to cry out that the country was being ruined. When the Intercolonial was designed, by which alone has Confederation become a fact, it was proclaimed that a hole would be knocked in the bottom of the Canadian exchequer. So to-day, the Canada Pacific Railway is held up as a big bear of the same kind. The fact is that this country has either to go on or go under. Though entertaining a high estimate of Mr. Blake, the large majority of the people would prefer that Canada should go on.

TWO OPPOSITE METHODS.

An attempt is being made to raise an outcry against the Government on account of certain lands in the North-west having been reserved as "railway lands." It is said that what is enacted is something like free trade in lands up there, under which the squatter and the claim jumper would have the best chance. It is evident that if the railway is to be built it must be assisted by the sale of lands or from the taxation of the people of Ontario and the other provinces. The plan of the present government is to make the sale of alternate sections necessary adjuncts to the construction of the railway. Such a proposition seems reasonable enough—except to the Opposition. They would give away the lands and tax the older provinces. It is evident that they are in the wrong.

The Rumsche Zeitung reminds its readers of a comical incident that took place toward the end of Czar Nicholas's reign, when Saley, a tenor singer endowed with uncommon personal attractions, having completed his engagement at Moscow Opera House, was about to take his departure for St. Petersburg. A large number of his female admirers, for the most part patronesses of the first water, drove to the railway station to see him of, laden with wreaths and bouquets of costly exotics, and surrounded him on the platform as he was about to get into the train, imploring him in passionate accents to bestow upon them some trifle by which they might recall him to their memories when he should be far away. Saley was at first smitten with painful perplexity by the prayers of his fair worshippers; but presently a ludicrous notion suggested itself to him, and he proposed, in jest rather than in earnest, that he should administer to each lady a smart farewell pinch "to remember him by." To his amazement this absurd proposition was hailed with joyful acclamation, and, as he proceeded to put it into execution, the enthusiastic recipients of his souvenirs eagerly importuned him to pinch hard, "so as to leave a nice blue mark that would last a long while and above all, where they could see it!"

Speaking of the much talked of Printing Contract, the Belleville Intelligencer says:—The obstructive tactics of Mr. Blake lead to the belief that he was determined to prevent Boyle getting the contract, in order that his Grit friends, McLean, Roger & Co., who had expended large sums in obtaining the contract, as already made known, should enjoy their purchase at least until the next session of Parliament, whilst the utterances of Mr. Trow, one of his followers, tend strongly to confirm this idea. But this object has been defeated by the cancellation of the contract, to secure which the Government, be it said to their credit, lent their aid by postponing all Government orders, in order to allow of the report being adopted in the Commons. It is clear, therefore that whilst the Opposition were doing their best to get the present dishonestly obtained contract continued, the Government were working in the other direction and so in the interest of public morality.

The cable announces the death of Sir John Goss, who was born December 27, 1800, at Fareham, Hampshire, where his father was organist. He became in 1824 a chorister of the Chapel Royal, St. James, was a pupil of Thomas Attwood, organist of St. Paul's, and succeeded him in that post in 1836, after having been organist at St. Luke's, Chelsea. He succeeded William Knyvett as composer to Her Majesty's Chapels royal in 1856, and was the author of the "Te Deum," and the anthem "The Lord is my strength," performed at the thanksgiving service in St. Paul's Cathedral February 27, 1872, in commemoration of the Prince of Wales from dangerous sickness. This procured him the honor of knighthood. Sir John resigned the post of organist of St. Paul's in 1872. Many of his anthems, glees and orchestral compositions for state occasions have enjoyed considerable popularity.

The German War manœuvres this autumn will include the massing of some twenty thousand cavalry behind the Rhineland frontier, with intent to experimental practically on the rapidity with which the frontier line can be covered and held in force by this arm, pending the arrival of infantry, to repel invasion. The test will be exhaustive, including the marching, feeding, and disposition of the troops as if under the stimulus of an actual emergency.

Edmund Yates says: "I regret to learn that a field officer in a distinguished regiment, now in North Africa, not long ago had the alternative given him of sending in his papers or standing a court martial, and thought it expedient to adopt the former course. In judicious confusion as to the ownership of a Government horse lost to his country the further service of this officer."

The London Economist says: "Mr. Gladstone, the most cautious as well as the most favoured of English financiers, has deliberately stated that there is a risk, a distant but perceptible risk, that the United Kingdom may be compelled to give its guarantee for the service of India—that is to take upon itself a new liability of $750,000,000."

The Grit press give assurance that Mr. Blake does not intend to be intimidated. This is excellent news, and is a warning to the Globe to keep "hands off."

THE NEW YORK DOG SHOW.

A Great Collection of First-Class Dogs, from all Parts of the world.

Hunting Dogs, Fighting Dogs, Watch Dogs, Sheep Dogs, Trick Dogs and Pet Dogs.

From the Sun, May 12.

An incessant baying, barking, and yelping announced the opening of the first annual New York Bench Show, under the auspices of the Westminster Kennel Club, in Madison Square Garden, yesterday, with a collection of the finest dogs ever brought together in this country. The attendance through the day and evening was fair, but probably not so large as it would have been had the weather been cooler, and the fact generally known that the exhibition is all on the main floor, which precludes any dangerous pressure on the walls or supports of the Garden.

The dogs are ranged in six sections, with comfortable boxes for the large animals and fancy cages for the small ones. The boxes are elevated two feet above the floor, and the passageways between the sections afford every facility for an easy inspection of the dogs. The first section was arranged for mastiffs, St. Bernards, Newfoundlands, Ulms, greyhounds, and deerhounds; section two for English and native pointers and setters; section three for English and native setters and champion black-and-tans; section four for red Irish setters and black-and-tan champions; section five for setters, water spaniels, climbers, cookers, fox hounds, beagles, dashhounds, fox terriers, and setting and spotting six for foxhounds, bull terriers, Skye terriers, pugs, Scotch terriers, black-and-tan terriers, Dandy Dinmonts, Yorkshire terriers, toy terriers, Japanese spaniels, Italian greyhounds, Chinese dogs, fancy terriers, and miscellaneous and foreign dogs.

There are liberal contributions of hunting dogs from all parts of the United States, Canada, and Europe. Several of the Lord Sefton strain of pointers, now considered the best in England, were in the collection.

A small, but choice collection of deerhounds attracted attention from their long, wiry bodies, narrow heads and black pointed noses, deep chests, powerful loins, rather rough coats, long tail, muscular quarters and legs, small, thin ears, and full, dark eyes.

Nearly all the dogs of the different varieties from the immense mastiffs and massive St. Bernards, Newfoundlands and boarhounds; down to the diminutive black-and-tans and fancy pets, possessed the points necessary for competition in blood classes. In several classes the dogs were so evenly matched that the judges examined the points critically before deciding on their merits. Some to whom beauty and symmetry seems the main thing in a dog, were rather surprised at several of the decisions. But dogs, like men, require more than beauty to make them valuable.

One rather remarkable feature of the show is the great increase in the number of fox terriers, a dog almost unknown in this country a few years ago. At present they are the favorite dog in England, and about the most expensive. They are full of gay and lively in appearance. The best are white, and weigh about sixteen pounds. Their coat is hard, smooth and closely set. The ears are rather small, skull flat and moderately narrow, jaw strong and muscular, nose tapering, eyes dark coloured, deep set and full of fire. They stand like a small, well-made hunter.

Among the dogs which drew constant knots of visitors were Sir William Venner's bundle bulldog Donald, the winner of eighty prizes; his white bull terrier Tarquin, 7 years, and Tarquin's son, Superior, 2 years. Tarquin and Superior are the loving marks made by Superior a few days ago, when they came together in the West-minster Hotel. Tarquin has been awarded 100 first prizes and 18 special cups. This is more than any other animal in the world ever received.

It would be well for spectators to give bull terriers a wide berth. One snapped his chain yesterday. A foolish man shook his cane at Tarquin in the afternoon, and the dog sprang for him. If the chain had broken the man would probably have taken a still more intense interest in the valuable dog.

There is a fine collection of collies or shepherd dogs. A Scotch gentleman who was watching them closely while they were being judged, said:

"I came especially to see these dogs. They are the most intelligent animals in the world. In my native country a man will buy a flock of hundreds of sheep thirty miles away from home, leave them in charge of his dog, go off about his business, and the dog will drive the sheep to their new home and look after them. Once a collie was so long in bringing home her flock that her master became alarmed, and started in search. He found the sheep at his farm fence, with the collie in the rear holding a new born puppy in her mouth. As soon as she saw her master she went back and brought home her litter one by one. The last one was dead. The collie had sacrificed her own flesh and blood to save her master's sheep."

The exhibition of ladies' pet dogs is large and very interesting. They include pugs, Skye terriers, toy terriers, black-and-tans, Dandy Dinmonts, Japanese spaniels, Italian greyhounds, Chinese dogs, fancy terriers, and miscellaneous and foreign dogs.

HOW TO SHINE IN EUROPEAN SOCIETY.

San Francisco Chronicle.

I am speaking now concerning the experience of a number of delightful Saturday nights at Lady B.'s. Once a gentleman, on ascertaining that I was an American, became for a time much interested in me. Because I was an American he seemed to take it for granted that I had been under fire, and that my body was a lead mine of bullets. Because I was there alive he also assumed that I must have killed some other man who had tried to kill me.

"You have seen some rough times in California," said he.

"Yes, I had."

"Good many fights?"

"Yes, some."

"Ever see a man killed in a fight?"

"Yes, one."

"Hah! Well, now my dear fellah, hope you won't consider me inquisitive, but really I've a mind to kill the man beneath him, the details of these personal encounters, you know, and I hope you'll pardon me now for asking you, were you the man who ever kill a man?"

I told him I was, I said "No." He dropped me almost immediately. I fell far down in his estimation. I was to him no longer an object of interest. What he wanted was a red-handed American murderer. He had thought me one. He had prospected me, and found no corpse on the ledge. I was a mere bank of peaceful, bloodless, barren clay. I panned out neither crime, murder, nor blood. I could feel, too, what he thought of me. His face said: "This man has not improved his early opportunities. He has lived in California half a life-time and never killed a man or got killed himself." I managed after awhile to regain a little of my lost standing in this gentleman's estimation. I told him that I was once, in California, on a jury which tried Texas Jack for murder, and I voted for his acquittal. But this was a mere rashlight compared to the lustre resulting from killing the man myself. Young man, before going to Europe and there encountering "society," be sure that you have killed your man. Kill something; kill a tramp or an editor if you can do no better; carry then your knife and pistol to London; keep them prominently hung up in your chambers; lay them on the table at club dinners; talk pistol; feel absently and hurriedly at times about your hip as if to know amid the rockets' red glare, bombs bursting in air, your Smith & Wesson is still there, eh? Say. My friend Ranchero Arizona Squeeze, whose maiden name in America is Jones, did it, and gained a valuable reputation for a desperado smitten with occasional spasms of remorse for the seven men whom he vaguely hinted he had shot through the head.

Prince Bismarck has just presented to the Imperial Parliament a very instructive paper on emigration from Germany during the year 1879. It appears that no fewer than 33,327 subjects of the empire, nearly two-thirds being males, took ship last year for foreign ports at Bremen, Hamburg, Stettin or Antwerp, by far the greater number going to the United States and British North America. This emigration total is the largest since 1874, when the figure was 43,-112; 1872 and 1873, immediately after the war, showing the very formidable results of 124,450 and 103,638 respectively. These figures, it must be remembered, only gauge the flow of German emigration through a few leading channels, and by no means represent the entire loss in subjects annually sustained by the empire.

THE BACKWOODS VIOLIN.

An amusing scene took place on the train from the West on which Remenyi was a passenger, recently, and was witnessed by the writer hereof. Not far west of Iowa City a great, gawn, awkward young fellow lumbered into the smoking car bearing in his arms an ancient and badly damaged violin case. He seated himself just opposite a weather-beaten individual fully as unique as himself, but evidently some 40 years older. The ancient person surveyed the youth with lively curiosity and then asked what he had "thar."

"A fiddle," replied the youth with the red nose and watery eyes.

Forthwith the old man besought him to play a few tunes. The youth declined, however on the theory that it was "agin the rule to fiddle on the keers." Just at this moment Conductor Ackley came through the car, and the old fellow appealed to him to know if the young man could not be permitted to do a little fiddling. There was a twinkle in Ackley's eye as he remembered that he had Remenyi in the rear car, and he at once replied with great cordiality, "Yes, sir; the young man can play all he wants to."

With this encouragement, the young man at once brought forth from the case a wheezy old violin with an American eagle painted in red upon its back. He began to tune up, and Conductor Ackley passed on through the train until he came Remenyi in the palace car. He told the great musician that that there was a remarkable violinist in the smoking car—in fact he had never heard such playing in his life—and advised Remenyi to go forward and hear him. Forthwith Remenyi and one or two of his party rushed forward to the smoking car, where they encountered a remarkable scene. The passengers had gathered around the young man with the fiddle, and shouts of laughter greeted the musician as he scraped through the first bars of the "Arkansaw Traveller," with variations.

The young man accepted this as a mark of encouragement and sawed away with renewed energy. Remenyi, who was entirely unknown to the passengers, took a seat just across the aisle and joined heartily in the general laughter.

When the young man had finished the "Arkansaw Traveller," the old man just behind him took the violin, saying: "I hain't played any for 40 years. married me a wife and she wouldn't have it, but I reckon I kin scrape a mite yet." A fresh rally of laughter broke forth as the old man "took the fiddle" and began scraping on "Jump Jim Crow."

It was an agonizing piece of melody and kept the audience in a fever of laughter. When the old man finished, Remenyi asked for the violin and it was handed over to him. The train had stopped at a small station, and the rumble of the car wheels was stilled into quiet. Remenyi drew the bow and the grins still on the faces of the passengers began to melt away with marvellous rapidity. Immediately there fell upon their astonished ears the opening notes of a beautiful fantasia, whose sweet witchery would charm the dullest.

The wheezy old violin seemed to rejoice under the hand of its first master, and gave forth such music as it never did before and never will again. The gaping, astonished crowd listened till Remenyi stopped and then broke in with rapturous applause and brought him to continue. But no—he held up the bow in gleeful derision, and exclaimed vehemently, "Can't play with hain't—only three years on it—no, no, no!" He handed back the violin to the youth, who thrust it into the case and left the car at once, vowing that he would never play another tune. (Iowa City Republican.

Ulysses S. Grant was born April 27, 1822. John Sherman was born May 10, 1823. George F. Edmunds was born February 1, 1828. Thomas F. Bayard was born October 29, 1828; Rseco Conkling was born October 30 1829; James G. Blaine was born January 31, 1830.

James Campbell, a former resident of Pittsburg, Pa., superintendent of a railway in Peru, has been captured by Chilians, cruelly treated and shot, because he refused to tell where he had concealed some of the railroad's property. Our government will take immediate measures to secure reparation for this treatment of an American citizen.

A couple in the backwoods of Michigan desired to marry, but they were 40 miles from a minister or a magistrate. There was not, in fact, a human being within twenty miles. So they wrote out the words of a marriage ceremony as they could remember, including affirmative responses, signed their names to the document, and pronounced themselves husband and wife.

Mrs John M. Paul, otherwise known as "Miss Belle Cook," of California, who was to ride the twenty mile race on horseback next September at Minneapolis, Minn., with a prominent female rider of Minnesota, was attacked by a rubber a few days ago at her home. The robber wounded her with two pistol shots and then struck her on the head with a pistol, leaving her for dead.

Watrous was inclined to break his engagement to marry Miss Swayne, at Galveston, but she insisted that he should keep his promise. He said that he was willing to take his chance on the toss up of a cent—head to marry, and tail not to marry. Miss Swayne consented. The cent was thrown, and Watrous won. The girl, however, refused to abide by that decision, and has begun a lawsuit for damages.

A boy in Augusta, Me., recently found a nest containing twelve young rats. These he placed in a basket and presented them to the family cat, which is the mother of two small kittens. The cat devoured ten of the rats at once. Then, taking the two others in her mouth, she carried them to the basket and tenderly placed them beside her own young, and there they remain, living in harmony and drawing sustenance from their natural enemy. The cat evinces as much solicitude for their safety and comfort as she does for her own offspring.

A Thrilling Adventure.

Near the Umatilla river in Oregon, recently, a Mr Green was digging a well, and Mr. Scott, his brother in-law, while breaking a young horse, approached the well, when the animal made a plunge at him. Scott dodged and the horse, tumbled into the well, striking Green and crushing him to the earth. The only thing that prevented him from being instantly killed was a box suspended by a rope. This sustained sufficient weight to allow him to breathe. Scott, realizing that the frantic efforts of the horse would kill the man beneath him, seized an axe and jumped down upon the animal, when a life and death struggle ensued. He at length managed to deal the horse a fatal blow. Every time the horse struggled in the throes of death it pressed down upon Green. Scott climbed out and ran a mile and a half for help. Returning as quickly as possible, men set to work cutting the horse to pieces and hoisting it out of the well. Mrs. Green was present and cheered her husband by telling him that he would soon be released. The poor man was suffering intense agony, and said he could not live a minute longer. He bade his wife farewell in shocking sobs. With frantic efforts the animal was torn limb from limb until the last piece was cleared away, and the unconscious man was found buried to his chin in dirt and gravel, saturated with blood, and was lifted to the surface. He was carried to his home where restoratives were applied, and in a short time he spoke. Although no bones were broken he was badly crushed and bruised, and may be confined to his bed for weeks.

Fiery Splendor in Mexico.

From the Globe-Democrat.

City of Mexico, May 5.—The Volcano of Colima, now in active eruption, is a grand and magnificent sight. The first symptoms of activity were manifested on Sunday. There were low rumblings and subterranean mutterings, and the mountain shook and trembled. The eruption at night is full of splendor and grandeur. Last night lurid flames shot up from the crater of the volcano, illuminating the darkness for miles around. Incandescent stones are also thrown up, together with showers of ashes, which darken the atmosphere in daytime. The fire, smoke, ashes, and stones are accompanied with dreadful subterranean thunderings and frightful and unearthly noises under the volcano, together with quakings of the earth. Inhabitants of villages and towns in the vicinity of the mountain are in a state of panic and wild terror. They are, indeed, in danger in case of a flow of lava.

Everything in Nature indulges in amusement. The lightning plays, the wind whistles, the thunder rolls, the snow flies, the waves leap, and the fields smile. Even the buds shoot and the rivers run.

RHEUMATISM—DYSPEPSIA.

The Meriban Mineral Water Cure

OF STRATFORD, ONT.

Medic. Drew P. O. April 30, 1880.

It affords me great pleasure to recommend to all who are unfortunately afflicted with rheumatism or Dyspepsia, those terrible scourges of our race, the Meriban Mineral Water Cure of Stratford, Ont.

For nine years I have been a victim to Rheumatism, and have suffered all the tortures of Dyspepsia. My sufferings were beyond description, being at times absolutely helpless.

I had employed every means thereby which I could hope for relief, but continued getting worse. I was at last induced, by the advice of a friend, to try the healing powers of these waters, and consequently pinned myself under the care of the proprietress of the Stratford Institute. Mrs. J. Cartwright, and from the first day I began to get better, and continued to improve until I was entirely restored. I was at the Institute three days, and am now as well as I ever was in my life.

I cannot recommend this Institute too highly to the suffering humanity, so grateful am I.

How it cures so rapidly, without the use of the rubbish of medicine, is a wonder to me. It seems as if by some magic art I have been healed.

Language cannot express my gratitude for so marvellous a recovery, and I cheerfully recommend all who are afflicted with these or any other diseases whatever, to give the above mentioned Institute a trial and be healed, for I believe that none need despair since I have been healed so short a time.

WHAT IS MORE BECOMING

Hats? There is but one, in fact, there can be but one answer to this question—Nothing. BELTZ is master of his profession, and full well knows he what to put on those who honor him with their custom. BELTZ HATS are things of beauty—they give joy to the wearer. They add grace to the person whose brow they shadow. Poets speak daily in their praise. Gladstone may feel proud of his laurels won on the English election field; but BELTZ should feel prouder of those won on the field of science and art.

You will find him at 144 Dundas street, opposite the entrance to the market.

BARBARA.

"Then I have been cruelly treated—cruelly! Fate has been too hard. I wrote to you on my sick-bed—yes, that cruel letter of yours made me ill—and I gave the answer to my sister to post; and I waited and hoped for your reply. I thought you would relent, and all would be as it had been before that wretched summer night. And then, when no letter came, I thought you very, very cruel, and I tried to harden my heart against you.

"And succeeded so well that in less than a year you were a rich man's wife," said Leland, with a touch of bitterness.

"I married because my marriage would be advantageous to my mother, and it mattered little what I did with my life. You did not want me."

"Did not want you? I was breaking my heart for you."

"You should never have tried to cancel our engagement. That promise was sacred. How could you write me such a letter?"

"I was beside myself when I wrote—mad with overwork and bitter disappointment. I thought myself a broken man—ruined, disgraced—and I considered it my duty to set you free from any association with a man upon whom his fellow men looked coldly."

"Do you think the evidence of all the world would have made me doubt you? Well, you chose that it should so, and Fate made your choice irrevocable. Let us talk no more about it. You have only to think of getting well. But how are you to get back to Launceston in this dreadful weather. Your coat is wet, laying her hand lightly on his sleeve—"yes, dreadfully wet. You walked here through those hailstorms?"

"Yes, I walked. It was my own choice. I might have hired a fly at Launceston."

"You must not walk back. You must get your coat dried, and then you must have my carriage to take you back."

"Would not that set people talking?"

"No doubt it would. But I must endure that."

"No, Barbara, I can go back to the house between the showers, and it is not far to the coach. There is one that passes at two. I made inquiries before I left Launceston. Give yourself no trouble about me. Go back to your husband."

"No, I must go back to him. He is ill, I have no right to be away from him." [illegible] not detain you any longer. It is [illegible] to have seen you, and to know [illegible] are not unhappy. Yet are [illegible] not for the worse. You look [illegible] graver, but no less beautiful than [illegible] days. Good-bye, Barbara."

"You must not go away in that wet coat [illegible] some kind of refreshment," [illegible]ears, going to the door.

He opened it, and called Gilmore, who [illegible] quickly enough to beckon a certain [illegible]ertness in the household.

"Get this gentleman's coat dried by the [illegible]ches fire, and bring him some wine," [illegible] said.

Major Leland took off the old frieze coat [illegible]nd his muffler, and appeared in his [illegible] garb. He had looked a [illegible]tleman and soldier, even in his bogarman's disguise. Gilmore carried off the coat, and re-appeared quickly with the inevitable twin decanters of port and sherry on the big silver tray. Then she laid a cloth at one end of the table, and brought a round of corned beef and a newly cut loaf, with the necessary adjuncts, thus being considered in hospitable Cornwall a [illegible]d light refreshment.

The major had no appetite for beef or cheese, but to please Barbara he drank a glass of old fashioned brown sherry, of a fine grassy flavor, and ate a crust of home baked bread.

"Strange that I should eat your husband's bread and salt," he said.

"Why should it be strange?" asked Barbara, looking at him with frank, honest eyes, full of such tenderness as a woman may feel for a hero. "Can we not be friends? We have never quarrelled or ceased to esteem each other. Fate has parted us, and we must bow to God's will. We must be friends at a distance, perhaps, for my husband is a man who lives almost alone; but we can be friends to the end of life. I hope—Major Leland."

How difficult it was for her lips to shape this formal name, remembering their parting on board the Reverse, when she had been clasped to his heart, with all the force of passionate grief, and had felt that true heart beating against her own! The memory of that fond farewell brought the blood to cheek and brow, and then left her pale as with sudden pain.

"I must go," she said abruptly. "My husband may have awakened, and will think me unkind for having left him. Good-bye—God bless you! You will go back to Somersetshire at once, will you not, and recover your health?"

"I shall go home, no doubt, sooner or later; but the old home is not so dear to me now my mother is gone. This mixture of sea and moorland will set me up, I think, better than Somersetshire. I shall stay at Launceston, or perhaps Rockport, for a few days."

Rockport was a fishing village and harbor, in a hollow of the cliffs, within a few miles of Pixen, nearer even than Camelot.

"Would you not be better cared for at home with your sisters?"

"I need no special care. I only want rest and Hygeian air. Good-bye, Barbara. You may call me Major Leland if you like. I suppose it is only right that the mistress of the house should do so. But I shall call you Barbara to my dying day."

"I don't think it makes much difference," answered Barbara, naively.

"No, Fate is to big to be influenced by such details. I see you are anxious to go back to your husband."

"I am. Good-bye."

"Good-bye. Am I forbidden to come and see you again?"

"You are the best judge of that. You had better not come again while my husband is ill; for if you are to visit here, I must introduce you to him. He is not fond of strangers."

"That does not promise a hearty welcome. Well, perhaps it would be wiser for me not to come. And yet to go back to Falconhurst having once seen your face! That seems hard."

"Good bye," she said, holding out her hand to him. "You must see it is better for you not to come. My husband is all goodness to me; but he is rough and stern in his manner. He might unintentionally affront you."

"Or intentionally. Well, doubtless you are right, Barbara. Once my Barbara, my very own. And I let you go—fool! fool! fool!"

He held her hand, and drew a little nearer to her—near enough to lay his left hand on her head calm forehead, looking into the sweet face, as if he were trying to read the secrets which were masked by that calm outlook.

"What a lovely piece of marble you are! how self possessed!" he muttered. "And you know nothing of the battle I am fighting. Well, it is natural. You belong to the calmer higher regions, where all perfect things dwell apart. I to that lower struggling mass of humanity which sins and suffers."

He led her to the door; and so they parted, with a show of outward calmness to the last—yes, even to the last instant of parting. But five minutes later Barbara was on her knees beside the sofa in her dressing-room, sobbing out the agony of her wounded heart.

Her letter, the letter breathing faithfulness, unselfish devotion, recklessness of all that life could bring, save himself and his love—that letter on which hung the fate of two lives—had been flung to the winds, and he had been left to think her cold and base, heartless and mercenary. What must he have thought of her when he read of her marriage with a rich man?

"Oh, Flossie, is it your fault that my life has been spoiled?" she thought, remembering that it was to sisterly hands she had confided the letter.

To be Continued.

It is commonly supposed that the royal family of England have the surname of Guelph, but this is a vulgar error. Guelph was a Christian name conferred in honor of his grandfather, on a Duke of Bavaria. Most knows to fame as the father of "Henry the Lion." From this great warrior the royal family trace their lineage through Queen Charlotte, wife of George III., who was his direct descendant. The family has been prolific in warriors. MODERN MIRACLES.

Boston Traveller.

Superstition dies hard. We find it rife in every class of society, among the educated as among the ignorant, among liberal thinkers as among the priest-ridden. Only a year or more ago all the world heard how a band of learned German professors had been entertained by an American juggler, and how to explain the phenomena then observed it was necessary to believe in a "fourth dimension of space"—only Prof. Zollner knows what that is—and to found a new system of "transcendental physics." Within a few months a Boston lecturer has rehearsed the history of the rise of the neuropathological epidemic in Germany, offering no explanation save that of the action of mind on matter or the influence of a superhuman force; and, lastly, describing some experiments made before him by a Boston psychic, in which the usual slate-writing phenomena were reproduced with variations. Whatever may be said of Mr. Cook's discussions, no one can accuse him of dishonesty of purpose. Why, then, did he pass over without mention the arguments against Slade's and Hansen's manifestations by such men as Virchow and Wundt? Has any popular lecturer the right to present to a mixed audience either the affirmative or negative side of the theory, which may work infinite harm, without also presenting the other? May not such names as Huxley and Helmholtz and Virchow and Tyndal, and Du Bois-Reymond and Wundt, be considered of equal, if not greater, weight than Crookes and Zöllner and Varley and Fichte and Ulrici? It is not our purpose to enter upon the discussion of the merits of psychic phenomena, but simply to indicate how the most intelligent may be deceived, for certainly one or the other of the above-named body of men are in the wrong. The power we possess of twisting the imagination to suit our beliefs is almost incalculable. Once make up your mind in a darkened room that a heap of clothing is a person and you will shortly see it move. Stand on a street corner and tell a crowd that you see a planet shining in open day and shortly they also will see and describe it. Almost ten years ago reports of miracles and apparitions in a French province went forth over the civilized world and produced great momentary excitement. Recently in County Mayo, Ireland, these phenomena were repeated. Witnesses saw miraculous lights, and mid them, images of various saints and the Virgin, a cross, and a lamb, all standing, unsupported on the gable end of a chapel. Visitors are flocking to the spot from all parts of Ireland, and even from England and Scotland, pig I had shot, and at the same time one of repeated, some to worship and others to be cured of bodily infirmities. The church sanctions all this through her archbishops, Cavanagh, and Tuam, and it may be that ere long a Papal bull may enjoin upon the faithful the necessity of belief in the miracles, as was the case with those at Lourdes. It seems pitiable and ludicrous that any large body of men and women at the present day should be found to place faith in such hallucinations, but are they any more credulous than the German professors or the American lecturer, when they ascribe to supernatural beings the tying of knots in sealed cords, or writing between folded slates? Fourth dimensional logic will never explain these phenomena. It is serious enough for liberally educated people to countenance such matters, but when the church follows with her marvels, the two supplement one another so that unbelievers are ground into silence between the upper and nether millstones. They regulate these things better in the common sense little village of Mirigiano. The children here who saw the Virgin were soundly spanked and put to bed, while the priests who profited by the visions were sent to jail as arrant swindlers.

GENOA BY MOONLIGHT.

From a private letter written by a well known citizen of Detroit to a friend we are permitted to extract the following rhapsodical description of Genoa by moonlight:

The moon was full and shone upon the sea—a bay under sheltering hills, upon whose slopes rose, terrace upon terrace, a city, old, so old, but ah! how beautiful in the moonlight. Into it I walked, through a street, as narrow I could span it with two steps, between houses so lofty that the narrow strip of sky was almost lost, dwindling to a ribbon of blue with here and there a star looking brighter than with us at home. Houses whose lofty stories mounted one hundred feet before they combed over into the graceful cornices. A street that led up, up, like a stair, with pavement slippery with damp, the polish of many feet and age, till, in a while I turned suddenly into a wider street brilliant with gas light and bordered with marble palaces whose carved fronts stretches along the way, on either side for miles. Great facades with lofty portals of sculptured marbles opening into vestibules of columns, church-like in size and height—and opening into grand courts, still richer in colonnades and magnificent with royal stairways all white, all marble, all cold, all still, as if the life that ebbed and flowed in those courts had gone, as if the pride that had reared these piles had vanished, as if the riches that had spent itself in these palaces had been buried, as if these dwellings where inhabited now only by the ghosts of their former owners which might walk by night, but at daybreak would stiffen into the statues standing here and there so cold and white. It seems as if these great houses—fit emblems of the age, strength, riches, pride and arrogance of the cities' dukes, princes, doges—were then sentient of a sadness (impressive to me) as they looked out upon that sea, waiting for it to bring back again the glories it had long ago brought from it. Orient, but which they mournfully fe might never come back again.

The scene changes and I am in a grand temple, whose arched nave is bounded by lofty ranges of coloured marble, whose arch is dazzling with mosaics and gold, whose dome rises like a sky, in which hang frescoed saints, whose pavement is many hued frescoed stones, and then I see a face—a aspect, and face (quiet, wistful liquid eyes, hair like night), and I am fascinated by it. I build fancy upon fancy out of that face; it haunts me. I chance to look aside, and when I seek that face again 'tis gone! My live Madonna of the city by the sea.

And I dwell in a princely house two days. My chamber has mosaic floors, and its arched ceilings is rich with frescoes by old masters. I go up and down grand old marble stairways, I read in the room which was the salon of some princely family, whose portraits yet look down from the walls. I dine in a lofty hall in which may have dined kings and ambassadors.

And this is Genoa—and the land is Italy.

ENGLISH BALLAD MUSIC.

Some legacy of instinct and affection the old ballad writers and singers of Great Britain must have left their people. It is now a hereditary gift, and once one of the most promising and at the same time one of the most pernicious impulses of modern music. The faculty of simple melody, which the composers of the present day certainly possesses, is hopeful because it speaks a tuneful language which is understood by many peoples, but the love of the people for anything which is a "pretty song" is almost hopelessly bad. Given a perpetual "Nancy Lee," nothing better is required by the people, and the very best ballad-writers of the day—Sullivan, Cowen, Marzials, Miss Philp, and Lady Arthur Hill—all recognized and deplore this fact.

I can not pretend to advance any solution of the enigma which this theme presents, but only state a few facts, with such vagrant observations as any outsider may make who passed two winters and springs in England.

When a very successful entertainment is projected at St. James' Hall, it takes the form of a ballad concert—a ballad concert, be it known, in which two hours and a half are devoted to songs, one-half of which have been heard, I may venture to surmise, ten to twenty times by the audience. Nor is this all; many of the ballads will be of the most wretchedly mediocre description, songs by the greatest singers of the day as an advertisement for some publishing house. Among those no longer needing such an emphasis of renown, nothing that Mr. Sims Reeves can sing "draws" like "My pretty Jane," nothing is so "captivating" from a debutante as "She wore a wreath of roses," or "The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington," while Mr. Santley's singing of "Simon the Cellarer" gathers hearers from the high ways and by way of the musical world. Nothing interests the public like old association with ballad music, and perhaps this is partly because a simple melody has the power to revive an old, buried, or half-forgotten sensation of emotion; listening to greater strains, we lose the fragrant touches of the past in awakening to new interpretations, new thoughts, or ideas of the music filling our ears. But in a song that has only words and melody; only a refrain, with a chorus like that of the "North Country Maid," we can afford to indulge in retrospect or imaginings:

'Oh! the oak, and the ash, and the bonny ivy tree,
They flourish at home in my own country."

SPORT IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

More Zebras, Giraffes, Lions and Bears That One Can Fire a Gun at.

London Times.

Mr. F. Falkner Carter, in charge of the elephants attached to the Royal Engineer Expedition into Africa, [illegible] following exciting account [illegible] which he had with lions at [illegible] central Africa, at which place he and his caravan of 180 men had arrived:

Our only food consists of Indian corn pounded between two stones, with a good share of sand, and only salt with it. It is well to have even this, but still men accustomed all their lives to good animal food cannot live on such poor fare, and so I go out every second or third day with my gun and kill a zebra, eland, water-buck, &c. One of any of these enables us to live in clover for a single day. A recent expedition of this kind, however, nearly cost me my life. I felt that I must go in search of food, as there was not at the time a morsel in our camp, and so forth I sallied. My first shot was at a giraffe, into which I put two bullets and then followed him over hill and dale until noon, when heat, thirst and want of food obliged me to give up the chase. After smoking a pipe and taking a rest, I was off again, got a shot at a zebra, but missed him. The zebra, I should mention, is the best meat in Africa. Rather disheartened, and grieving for the poor hollow-eyed fellows I should meet on my return, for whom I had nothing in the shape of food, I turned towards camp, and just at 3.30 p.m. a fine lone dashed past me. I sent a bullet through him at once, but on he went. I knew, however, we should find him dead a few hundred yards ahead by the quantity of blood in the long grass, so I followed, but just then sighted three zebras, so dropped piggie's trail and went off to try and stalk the zebras. In about ten minutes after I heard a fearful row, and my two gun bearers said it was a rinoceros. I laid hold of my No. 10 bore, handing my "express" to my bearer, telling him and the man carrying the smooth bore to keep close to me. I glided silently through the grass, over six feet high, until close to the spot. Then I knew that if it were a rinoceros that he was lying down, as I could not see a sign of him, so decided it must be two wild boars fighting. Something I put into and injuring the river wall. John Hardy, a young fellow living in Dawson street, Flamsteads, having seen the police-head, probably, conceived the idea of washing till the rat-catchers came to ply their calling. A few days later Harding cleared the defendant digging with a quicker rate, and forthwith proceeded to give information to Mr. Ginger, the assistant surveyor for Plumstead parish. Thither men met the defendant coming from Tripcock Petes carrying a sack, and seizure rats in a cage. He acknowledged the truth of all Harding said, but stated he was not aware this was an indictable penalty offence. Mr. Selgay ordered him to pay 10 shillings damages, with 4 shillings costs, or to undergo seven days' imprisonment. The Plumstead District Board of Works took the same view of the case, and fined the defendant £5 to Harding, on which one of the members (Mr. Rimber, solicitor) pointed out that a reward of £5 and a penalty of 10 shillings would very soon induce young fellows out of work to act in collusion, one digging for rats and getting paid 14 shillings and the other taking the reward of £5 and dividing it between them. Upon this view of the case being presented to the board it was finally resolved to reduce the reward from £5 to £1 guinea.

ADVENTURES OF A MINER.

Apropos of hunting and fishing, did you ever hear of a wildcat taking possession of a log hut in the wilderness? Such a case really occurred this winter in this vicinity, at the herd house of Overhill & Gone. A Mr. Barns had been left in charge, and for several nights, after he had retired, was disturbed by a scrambling noise in the chimney, followed by the sight of two glaring, fiery eyeballs in the opposite bed, and when he (Barns) moved or made a noise, below, fierce growl of some wild animal. This kind of thing occurring for several nights in succession, so discomposed Barns that he finally vamoosed the ranche, and for some time the intruder had things his own way. With plenty of fat beef and venison thereto, he must have come to the conclusion that he had struck comfortable quarters. John Garrison, a miner, hearing of the circumstance, made his way to the hardware, determined to interview the beast that had taken possession. When he arrived at the ranch, about 4 o'clock p. m., he was somewhat surprised to find the animal in bed and disposed to fight for the establishment, but at sight of the gun the miner carried, he flew up the chimney and into the bush. Garrison hung around until dark, then went to bed, placing his gun where he could reach it, and quietly waited for Mr. Cat. About 10 o'clock he heard a scrambling in the monstrous chimney, followed by the sound of stealthy footsteps across the floor, and the sight of the flaming eyes peering out at him from the spare bed. Garrison carefully raised his rifle, took as good aim as he could in the gloom and darkness of the shining orbs and fired. The report of the rifle was followed by a short scream of agony, then the sound of struggling in the opposite bunk. The intrepid hunter struck a light, and there, sure enough, was his cat, fully five feet in length, lying in the bed, its life-blood slowly oozing through a bullet hole in its breast, and bedabbling with its crimson stream the blankets on which it had sought repose.—[Salt Lake Herald.

SARNIA.

The following deputation from the Canadian Reform Association left Sarnia per Grand Trunk R. R. to attend the funeral of the Hon. George Brown:—Geo. Leys, Esq., Mayor of Sarnia, Alderman John Davis, Daniel Mackenzie, ex-Mayor, D. Gray, sr., Alex. Leys, J. P., J. F. Lister, Joshua Adams, Thos. Honston, J.P., Joseph Lowell, Thos. Symington, Chas. Mackenzie, D. W. Bole of Brigden, and Geo. Eyvel, of the Sarnia Observer. The Rev. J. Thompson, Presbyterian minister, also attended. At Forest P. Graham, M.P.P., for East Lambton, joined the deputation.

Another drive through the suburbs convinces me that the statement that no new edifice has been started here during the last two years will require qualification. The Congregationalists are erecting a splendid church on the corner of Wellington and Victoria Streets. Robson builder. The new Model School is a handsome edifice. Numerous private residences are being built, and gardens laid out. Mr. John Davis has laid out some six acres with fruit and ornamental trees which delight the eye of the passer by. In fact improvements are noticeable on all sides, and the town is growing rapidly. It is a pity the authorities did not set out trees around the grammar school. It looks exceedingly bare without them. It is not too late yet. This grammar school was the last building erected by the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie previous to his entering public life, and is an exceedingly handsome and substantial building.

The Dormer is undergoing repairs at Port Huron. She will soon resume her regular trips between Sarnia and Black River. It is rumored that McFatt & Rannels will put on an additional ferry boat this summer.

Great preparations are being made to celebrate the 24th May. The programme is unusually attractive.

The richest farmer in these parts is one who supplies the hotels and steamers with milk. He keeps twenty cows and they bring him in over ($75) seventy five dollars a year cash. He can afford to buy a farm every few years. Information should be the greatest cattle raising country in Canada. It is admirably adapted for grazing purposes.

Alderman Baxter, of Toronto, paid the town a flying visit yesterday. He is taking a trip on the lakes on the Owego Bella.

Great indignation is expressed at the publication of anonymous posters containing scandalous and unfounded imputations against leading citizens. No one feels safe against the attacks of the scandal mongers, and society is now about to take effective measures to stop such disgraceful and unmanly proceedings.

Mr. Jas. Longhead returned to-day from Cape Breton, where he has been prospecting for oil for a Boston company. He reports favorably, and expects soon to strike the precious fluid. If Mr. McGarvey succeeds in his search on the Government lands in Manitoba, the Dominion will have oil wells at both extremities, and in the centre.

For the benefit of visitors we would state that the best fishing is to be had at the coal docks below the Great Western Elevator.

The water works company are rapidly extending their pipes in all directions; they have now reached a point nearly a mile from the river.

It is not generally known that Sarnia has a monopoly of the rag trade in the western peninsula. One firm here employs thirteen buyers. They are all shipped to this place and assorted before being sent to the paper mills.

Word was brought into Sarnia this evening that Mr. Ramsberry had struck a flowing well of oil on his farm on the town line of Sarnia township, about seven miles from Sarnia town. This is the furthest point west that oil has ever been found. The well is yielding twelve barrels of oil per day. These results strike Lewis a depressing effect on the market. Oil men dread a superabundance of the article. The remedy is a foreign market.

Large numbers of emigrants arrive here daily to take the boats for the Great North-West. The steamers do not appear to have any authorized agent here and there is no one to give them any information or to tell them at what time the boats will leave. Hence they line the docks waiting anxiously for the expected steamer. At night they fill the company's waiting rooms and half themselves to free beds. They are afraid to go for a meal in case the vessel arrives, then should unexpectedly arrive and they should miss their passage. Some 50 were thus belated on Friday last and they complained bitterly of the neglect.

The Mechanics' Institute will hold its annual meeting on the 14th inst.

The best fishing at the Point is at the new dock, near the ferry landing. The best pickerel fishing is at the long dock, on the other side of the river.

ROSANUNT.

A practical experience has convinced the farmers of this township, that there is more money in cattle raising than anything else, and a great number are abandoning the raising of grain and devoting their attention to cattle. A Rosanunt farmer informed us recently that he could turn out without much trouble, twelve fat cattle yearly, which would bring him an average of fifty dollars each. He contends that this would render him, comparatively speaking, independent. The small farmers were deeply interested in railroad and steamboat freights, and that a reduction of 10 to 15 dollars a head in their transit from Thedford to Liverpool would just put that much in his pocket. He hoped the matter already agitated in the Free Press would be kept going until the present monopoly was broken down.

Farmers are beginning to feel that their interests are overlooked in the Parliamentary Halls, and are inclined to hold their representatives responsible for the neglect. There has been a neglect of the weightier matters of the law.

POINT EDWARD.

Vessels are now arriving from various points with cargoes of grain, flour, &c., and the company's elevator is at work once more. The traffic at this place promises to be immense. It increases every year. Several capitalists have visited the Point lately prospecting. The place needs a first class hotel for the accommodation of travelers and visitors. The absence of such an institution is a great draw back.

A MONSTER VAMPIRE FROM ASIA.

In a store on summit street may be seen an animal the like of which but few people in Toledo have seen. It is a monster South American vampire, the much dreaded "blood sucker" of that country. This rare creature, perhaps the only living specimen of the kind in this country, is about one and a half feet long, has a pair of piercing black eyes which shine like diamonds, a double row of sharp teeth, similar to those of the weasel, and its powerful wings when stretched its full length, measure two and a half feet from point to point.

The vampire hangs suspended from a bar in the centre of its cage by a pair of formidable claws, and when in repose resembles a closed umbrella. Its body is covered with a comfortable coat of brown fur, while its beautifully proportioned head, which has a remarkable similarity to that of a black-and-tan terrier dog, is surmounted by a pair of large shell-shaped ears. This strange creature is almost totally blind during the day, but at night its little eyes twinkle with astonishing brilliancy. The vampire is kept in a temperature of about 70 degrees, in order to conform as nearly as possible with the climate of his native home.—[Toledo Commercial.

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.
TO THE
Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:
This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America. Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made sale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can regularly save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 13—1 a. m.—Indications—For the Lower Lakes, cooler, followed by warmer, clear or hazy, and possibly occasional rains.

THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS.

Petitions against the sale of the grounds will be at the following places:—

City Hotel, Balkwill's Hotel, Regan's Hotel, Revere House, A. Mellon's, Toomsen House, Grieg House, Longan & Co., J. H. Marsh, T. Thompson, Western Hotel, Jas. Smith's Albion, Mackin's Hotel, Lewis' Hotel, Free Press Office, R. Boyd, and the City Weigh Scales.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Mr. C. E. Dornville, Mechanical Superintendent of the G. W. R., was in the city yesterday.

What is wanted now is a reversible overcoat—that is, a heavy ulster on one side and a linen duster on the other.

The sum of $121 has been received by Rev. Father Tiernan from Rev. M. McCauley, Wyoming, for the Irish Relief Fund.

The persons accused of the Biddulph murders will be removed to Toronto gaol under a strong guard at six o'clock on Monday morning next.

Fred. Kirkland, Lecturer on Chemistry in Trinity Medical College, Toronto, left this city yesterday on the Afternoon Express of the G. W. R.

An eighteen months old child of Wm. Stubbs, Sarnia Township fell into an old well the other day and was drowned before it could be recovered.

Rev. T. J. Reid, of this city, is announced to preach Educational Sermons in the Elizabeth St. Methodist Church, North Chatham, on Sunday next.

Rev. Father O'Mahoney, of this city, will lecture in St. Mary's Church, Simcoe, on Tuesday evening next. Subject—"Popular Objections to Catholicity."

Mr. F. Cattermole, son of Dr. Cattermole, returned home from Trinity Medical College, Toronto, yesterday afternoon. He will remain here for two months.

Mr. O. Wyckoff, of Ridgway, North Carolina, formerly of this city, had his residence destroyed by fire on Saturday last. Most of the furniture was saved.

The London East Council meet this evening, and the Park and Finance Committee of the City Council will do the same, provided there be a quorum of the members.

At the monthly meeting of St. George's Society, held last night, six life members and two ordinary ones were elected. The Society decided to forego the usual Sunday service this year.

A meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Association was held at Mr. Brydges on Tuesday last. It was decided to obtain, if possible, sufficient signatures to secure a rink upon the Scott Act.

The Princess Louise did not make a trip yesterday on account of low water. The splash boards at the dam were put on however, and the steamer will in all probability make a trial trip on Saturday.

Mr. S. Shepard, of Port Stanley, has obtained the contract from the G. W. R. Co. for the transit of coal from Cleveland. A larger quantity than usual will be brought via this route the present season.

Winter does not linger in the lap of spring as much as he did. Spring's husband chased the old man down the front steps with a double barrel shot gun and the lingering business is over for a time at least.

Everything in nature indulges in amusement. The lightning plays, the wind whistles, the thunder rolls, the snow flies, the waves leap and the fields smile. Even the buds shoot and the rivers and streams run.

A convention of baseball players is to be held at the Royal Hotel, Guelph, on Friday, the 21st inst. The object of the meeting is to organize a Canadian Baseball Association and adopting rules to govern the Canadian baseball championship.

The Mutual Baseball Club of Watford has just been reorganized for the coming season with the following officers:—President, J. McGibbon; Vice-President, G. Strangway; Secretary, S. Senior; Treasurer, A. Mavity; Captain, J. Mavity.

The Trustees of the Bible Christian Church, London South, have purchased a corner lot, facing the Wortley Road, and purpose erecting thereon, it is understood, a handsome church edifice, if they can dispose of their present building.

Advance sheets have been issued announcing that "Foreparch" is coming to Canada with his "segregation," and will visit London early in the summer. American circus proprietors don't like Mr. P. T. B. It takes the cream off their speculation.

Mr. Moore, representing Messrs. Winnett & McGaw, Queen's Hotel, Toronto, will take possession of the Tecumseh House on the first of June. Messrs. Conklin and Moore will both remain in London during the summer, Mr. Moore devoting his entire attention to the hotel at Springbank.

Mr. G. R. Sanderson, jr., law student in the office of W. W. Fitzgerald, passed successfully his intermediate examination, yesterday, before the Law Society in Toronto. This young gentleman is the youngest son of the Rev. Dr. Sanderson, of this city, and gives promise of future distinction in his profession.

The Winnipeg Times of the 8th says:—"Mr. John Campbell, Mayor of London, shipped sixty-five vehicles of different kinds to Winnipeg on the 1st of May, and may be expected to arrive here early next week. George Jackson, of London, Ont., is preparing to make a large shipment of pleasure to the Prairie Province.

Mr. E. A. McDowell's comedy and opera company passed through here on Wednesday en their way to Winnipeg, Manitoba. The company include Mr. McDowell and wife, Miss Maggie Stoddart, Amelia Herbert, Ethel Douglas, Chas. B. Hawkins, Fred Bond, Charles Arnold, A. H. Stewart, Prof. Monti and Alfred Jackson.

A nearly fatal accident occurred at the G. W. R. Station at Watford, on Wednesday afternoon. As the mixed train going eastward was about to start, Thomas Norris, the baggageman, was pulling a trunk into the car, when the train started and the trunk struck Norris on the head, throwing him under the car. Norris was dragged from under the train by a passenger. He escaped with a badly jammed and cut hand. The passenger left on the train, but was considerably hurt at the bridge.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

How a Kincardine Farmer "Loaned" a Sharper $27.

The Rogus' Cheque Game Successfully Played.

Mr. Dorrington Boyle, a respectable farmer from the Township of Huron, arrived here from a visit to the East yesterday morning, somewhat fatigued from the effects of two days and nights riding on the cars. He sat down in the general waiting room, and soon thereafter fell asleep. He slept for probably an hour, and was awakened by an elderly-looking man who made considerable noise, in seating himself in the next pew. The stranger accosted Boyle with the remark, "You appear to be somewhat sleepy," to which the latter replied he was, and that any person who had been travelling on the cars for two nights would naturally be fatigued. The stranger said he was going to take a walk up town, and invited Boyle to accompany him. Previous to going the stranger said they would have lots of time to go up town before the train started. Of course the latter expression demanded the question "which way are you going?" and the stranger replied "north." Boyle gleefully responded with "that's the way I'm going." "Where do you get off?" came next, and stranger said he couldn't exactly remember the name of the station, but it was sixteen miles from here. "Brecon," was suggested by Mr. Boyle, and stranger coyly remarked "that's it." This strengthened the tie of friendship, so to speak, and the stranger in their progress up Clarence street, said he was going to relieve some freight upon which charges were claimed. He had no change, but had a cheque for $100, which, if Mr. Boyle would advance him $27 he would permit him to hold until the business of paying the freight charges was completed. Mr. Boyle willingly consented to accommodate the new-found friend, and handed over the amount named, (within $3 of his total). They were in front of Old Fellows Hall by this time, and the stranger said he would go upstairs and pay the amount, and return in a few minutes. Mr. Boyle set down to wait for an hour or more for his quondam friend's return but he came not, and the Hiram farmer went upstairs and enquired if his friend had been in any of the offices transacting the business mentioned. He was informed that no man of that description had been up, and it all at once dawned upon Mr. Boyle that he had been the victim of a confidence game. The stranger, no doubt, left the Hall by the stairs at the rear, and landing on Clarence Street, eluded Boyle very easily. The police were informed of the affair, and the detectives are looking up the sharper and Mr. Boyle's $27. The many lessons similar to this recorded in the newspapers week after week do not appear to have been taken deep to heart. Mr. Boyle, who says he "took the man to be honest, and would have given him more if he had asked for it."

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.

Mr. Wm. Trebilcock, of London, Chosen President.

Forest, May 13.—The members of the Primitive Methodist London District assembled in the village of Forest on Tuesday morning, to hold their annual Ministerial Association. During the day very able and interesting essays and sketches of sermons were read by several of the brethren for the benefit of the meeting, and were followed by lengthy discussions. In the evening an orange and cream festival was held in the church. The Rev. T. G. Scott, of Dover, presided over the meeting in a very pleasing manner, and called upon the Rev. J. Dyke, of Chatham; D. Ills, of Carlisle; W. Heuridge, of London; G. Wood, of Stratford, who gave excellent addresses on church work. Excellent vocal and instrumental music was given by the choir; but special mention must be given of three sisters with their violins, who seemed to charm the ears of all, and were several times encored. The meeting came to a close at a late hour, and all went home pleased with the entertainment.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The District meeting was held in the above Church, on Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, a large representation of ministerial and lay delegates were present. The devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. Geo. Wood, of Stratford, G. D., after which Wm. Trebilcock, Esq., of London, was elected President, and Rev. R. Thompson, of Wyoming, Secretary. The district was found to be in a healthy condition. During the years several new Churches have been built, and others are in operation. In the evening able sermons were preached by Rev. J. Wood and Rev. R. Paul, of Mitchell.

College of Physicians and Surgeons.

List of Successful Candidates at the Matriculation Examinations.

The following candidates passed the Matriculation examination, before the examiners of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, at the last examination:—

Wilson, J. D; Bowman, Anne F; Gush, Norman B; Anglin, W. G; Dooney, Henry C; Caul, J. A; Cowan, John F; Ferguson, John; Sangster, Alexander; Webster, E. Harvey; Wood, Edward G; Kilgour, Peter T; Cochrane, Chas. E; Lauder, T. H; Crosby, Archibald W; Tracy, Albert F; Hislop, Robert; Lake, Andrew D; McMichael, James; Jaques, William Thomas A; Elliott, Arthur Wellington G; Lundy, Fred G; Wright, Walter Henry; Kennedy, William; Holmes, Edward S; McGillivray, Mrs. F. B; Fahey, Thomas H; Johnston, James F; Porter, Thomas; McGhie, George S; Robinson, T. H; Moore, Thomas A; Bascom Horace Hoople, E. M; Barber, Robert A; Davis T. B

POLICE COURT DOINGS.—Yesterday morning Matilda Grafton, the irrepressible, was sent down for twenty one days, for indulging in one of her periodical "sprees." A Belong an unfortunate fellow, whose constitution has been sadly shaken by continued drinking, was allowed to go. Christopher Turner, who had been arrested on a charge of vagrancy, was handed over to Chief of Police Fewings of St. Thomas, to answer on several charges of larceny. Thomas Ellis, a fish pedlar, and John McCahoun the coal oil man, were charged by by-law. They agreed to conform to the law, having violated it through ignorance. Several other cases were adjourned.

C. C. E. Y. M. A.—Mrs. C. G. Moore is now arranging to give a concert in aid of the cause of England Young Men's Association, and it is understood that the best professional and amateur talent in the city will be brought into requisition. Among those who have promised to take part are Dr. Sippi, Mr. G. B. Sippi, Mrs. Paul, Miss F. Thompson, and Mr. Cameron. The concert will be given about the close of the month. The programme will be duly advertised. Mrs. Moore's efforts in behalf of this deserving association are praiseworthy, and under her direction a very superior entertainment may be looked for.

PRESENTATION.—Mr. George W. Cotterell, who has for the past eight years been bookkeeper in B. A. Mitchell's dry goods establishment here, having decided upon leaving London with the view of entering into business on his own account, was Tuesday night waited upon by his employer and fellow employes, and presented with a highly complimentary address, which was read by Mr. B. A. Mitchell. Mr. Cotterell made a feeling reply, and was subsequently asked to accept a handsome gold locket and vest chain, a meerschaum pipe as tokens of the esteem in which all held him. Mr. Cotterell's many friends wish him every success in his new home.

STREET WATERING.—Complaints are seldom if ever heard of the manner in which the streets are being watered. Queen's Avenue has had none for two days at the time of writing, and Richmond street was only sprinkled on one side yesterday, the dust going from the other before every shower. This was remedied late in the afternoon, but Rabsold have been done in the forenoon. The people require that the sundress should be executed to the letter, and not at the discretion of the sprinklers.

COUNCIL COMMITTEES

The True Inwardness of Three Meetings.

Board of Works, Fire, Water and Gas and Printing.

BOARD OF WORKS.

A meeting of the Board of Works was held in the City Clerk's office last night, Ald. Thompson presiding, and Ald. Glass, Tayler, Boyd, Muirhead and his Worship the Mayor present. After routine, the pay-sheets for the month were presented and passed.

A communication was read from Mrs. Fitzgibbons, asking that her petition to repair her cellar, on the corner of York and Rideut streets, injured through the overflowing of a water tank, receive favorable consideration.

The matter was left to the City Engineer, to report the estimated cost of making the necessary repairs.

The City Engineer read the specifications adopted by the Board of Public Works of Detroit, with regard to the laying down of the cedar block pavement already described.

His Worship the Mayor proposed that a certain amount of the cost be borne by the city and the balance by those directly benefited.

On motion of Ald. Glass, seconded by Ald. Muirhead, the Chairman was instructed to interview the ralepayers along Dundas street, between Talbot and Richmond streets, with a view to ascertaining their willingness to sign a petition praying for the laying down of the pavement.

A petition was presented from John Elliott and about seventy ratepayers, praying that a sewer be laid down on Wellington street from Bathurst street to the river.

The petition of Samuel Peters and others asking that a sewer be laid down on Talbot street, from Albert to Dundas s reet, was also taken up and on motion it was referred to the Engineer to report to the Council that both of the requests be granted.

A subsequent motion was also carried recommending that petitions from the ratepayers living on other streets be granted, in accordance with the rule of the Council granting $40.000 for that purpose. The necessary by-law was asked to be prepared by the city solicitor.

The Engineer was instructed to examine a drain emptying into No. 6 Ward from No. 7 and report some means of remedying the evil.

The Board then adjourned.

FIRE WATER AND GAS.

This Committee met in the Chamberlain's office last night, Ald. Wilson presiding and present Aldermen Meredith, Cowan and Wyatt.

After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, communications were read from Mrs. Murray, of Ridout street, and Mr. C. W. Andrus, of Waterloo street, asking permission to make additional drains to their premises, which, on motion, was granted.

Petitions to water the following streets were received and agreed to:—Richmond street, from Kent to Litchfield; Talbot street, from York to Horton, and Dundas to Albert; Carling street, from Richmond to Ridout; Queen's avenue, from Richmond to Colborne; Clarence street, from King to Dufferin, and from York to King.

The petition of Mrs. Parker, for permission to erect a frame dwelling on Queen's Avenue, which was recommended to the Council to be not granted, and referred back to Committee, was, on motion, again refused.

A communication from T. S. Minton, clerk of the Petersville Council, respecting the erecting of Gas lamps on the Kingston and Blackfriar's bridges, was received and tyled, and the Committee adjourned.

THE PRINTING COMMITTEE

also met in the Chamberlain's office. Present—Aldermen Meredith (chairman), Wyatt, Wilson, Scarrow, Milroy and Cowan.

The chairman read an anonymous postal-card which he had received, questioning the propriety of admitting reporters to a public meeting at which tenders from the offices which they represented were to be opened.

It was held that the Committee had no power to exclude reporters, as the matter was governed by a resolution of the Council. Subsequently Mr. Brierley, of the firm of Southam & Brierley, entered the room, and after some discussion, was permitted to remain.

Tenders were received for the city advertising from the FREE PRESS Printing Company, John Cameron & Co., M. D Dawson and Messrs. Goss & Wyatt.

Ald. Cowan moved, seconded by Ald. Milroy, that that the joint tender of prices for advertising from the FREE PRESS Printing Co., John Cameron & Co. and M. D Dawson be accepted, advertisements to be inserted in one paper only of four months each in the year, unless the Chairman orders otherwise, the contract to commence on June 1st, and to continue for one year.

Tenders for city book and job printing were received from Messrs. Vivian, Southam and Brierly, the FREE PRESS, Advertiser and Herald.

Ald. Wilson moved that the joint tender of the daily newspapers be accepted. He pointed out at considerable length the extravagance in connection with the printing of the Council proceedings, and showed that the city got its advertising done at a less rate than was charged to commercial men, and held that the acceptance of the joint tender would be in the interest of the city.

Ald. Cowan moved, seconded by Ald. Wyatt that the tender of Messrs. Southam and Brierley be accepted, being the lowest.

The mover and seconder, the Chairman and Aldermen Scarrow, and Milroy considered the tender of the daily newspapers a step in a measure dictating to the committee.

The resolution of Ald. Cowan was carried, Ald. Wilson dissenting.

Tenders for bookbinding and stationery were received from Messrs. J. J. Anderson and E. A. Taylor & Co., but action was deferred until Monday next, and the committee adjourned.

THE BIDDULPH TRAGEDY.

Latest Developments in the Change of Venue Matter.

Since the announcement in yesterday's issue, that the prisoners in the Donnelly murder case would be taken to Toronto on Monday, Mr. Macmahon has asked for a postponement, in order to allow sufficient time for the preparation of additional affidavits on the part of the defence. In view of this, it is quite probable that their departure will be delayed until the latter part of the week. In the meantime the new arguments by the Crown will be met by affidavits, the nature of which cannot be known until the case comes up at Toronto.

Egg Shipments by Railway.

Commissioner Albert Fink has just issued the following circular regarding the classification of eggs in carloads:—The east-bound classification adopted March 25, to take effect April 1, reads as follows: —Eggs in barrels or boxes, minimum weight 20,000 pounds, fourth class." It is claimed that the reason is at hand when eggs must be carried in refrigerator cars, and the New York Central, the Michigan Central and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern represent that the peculiar construction of the refrigerators running over their roads will not allow the minimum weight of 20,000 pounds to be loaded in them, which will prevent them participating in the traffic, and they therefore ask the vote be taken before the next meeting of the Joint Executive Committee. Please record your vote upon the following proposition, for the present classification as above quoted:—Eggs in barrels or boxes, minimum weight 17,000 pounds, fourth class. If more than minimum weight is loaded actual weight to be charged."

The Window Glass Manufacturers to Suspend Operations.

Pittsburgh, May 13.—The National Association of Window Glass Manufacturers has had some few days' vacations to arrange some differences existing between the factories and the prices list was the result only a defaulter.

PATTERSON'S FIFTH PARTY.

Arrival of the Crowd at Winnipeg—A New Departure.

From the Free Press of the 8th.

Patterson's May party arrived at St. Boniface last night after a safe and speedy run. The special train left Paris at five o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, and on leaving London was composed of two baggage cars, six day coaches and a Wagner sleeping coach. The train made a very fast run to Detroit, and instead of running by the Michigan Central, as usual, this particular party was run over the Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee road to Grand Haven. The first one hundred miles were made very quickly, but on reaching Muir Station a bridge over the Maple River was found to be on fire, and on being extinguished was found to be unsafe until the Bridge Inspector with a gang of men had repaired the damage. This delayed the train for five hours. Grand River was reached at eleven. Here the party went on board the fine steamer Chicago, the finest on Lake Michigan and the lake being smooth and the weather delightful the party enjoyed the sail immensely, as they were allowed first class privileges and the opportunity of washing and cleaning up after the dirty ride of the night before. The steamer arrived at Milwaukee after a run of seven hours, and the party at once transferred to a similar train (including sleeper) to the one they left at Grand Haven, and proceeded by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad to St. Paul, where they arrived at two p.m., the time made on this road not being as fast as expected. At St. Paul, the St. Paul & Pacific Railway Company asked three carloads of the passengers to transfer, and to make matters pleasant gave them an extra coach, so that all would have ample room. The train left St. Paul at four p.m., and made the run to St. Vincent in twenty-three hours, the only thing worthy of note being the burning in two of an attic on one of the baggage cars. It was fortunately discovered in time, and left off at Edna, a station near Crookston, and a man left in charge, and will be forwarded by next day's passenger train. The run was made from Crookston to St. Vincent, ninety miles, in three hours. Immediately on arriving at St. Vincent the train was taken over to Emerson, where it arrived shortly after three, having made the run (including all delays) in 69 hours.

At Emerson Governor's people got off, and after taking off the two cars they coupled, the train was held for the regular mixed train which was due, and when combined in one and the run made through to St. Boniface in good time.

The party consisted of 230 excellent settlers and their families, and the majority have their destinations already determined upon. Only seven of those who started got off in the United States.

The passengers speak in the highest praise of the provision made for their comfort on the trip, and the most of them thought the boat ride across Lake Michigan a most enjoyable feature. Thirty cars of effects and merchandise in Mr. Patterson's party are expected to be here on Monday. Mr. Patterson's next party will leave Paris on June 1st.

LATEST FROM PETROLIA.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

As the papers published supply regular weekly reports of the oil trade, I shall not trouble you with anything in the ordinary course of business in connexion therewith. But it may interest some of the readers of your most excellent paper to learn that there appears to be a partial revival of the "good old days" when flowing wells were not uncommon.

A Mr. Rainsbury, the owner of Lot 1, Con. 1, Sarnia, near town line of Enniskillen, a few days ago struck a flowing well producing, so some allege, 100 barrels per day. The writer thinks 40 is nearer the mark. At any rate, the well is a good one, and no doubt more will be put down in the neighborhood. Although complaints about dull times are heard here, it is a noticeable fact that the oil business dull as it is, is evidently at least as profitable as any other branch of trade, in proof of which we have from time to time parties returning to reengage in the business after years of devotion to other pursuits. Notably, at present, Mr. Edwin Fletcher, late of Alvinston, may be mentioned. He is engaged fitting up a well and rigs for his wells on one of the flats, and will shortly have everything in apple pie order. He is having erected a large boiler, enclosed in brick. Petrolia always welcomes the return of men of push and energy, and Mr. Fletcher is one of that stamp.

The Council meddle still exists, neither party being willing to concede a point. Mr. McGarvey, leader of "H. M. L. Opposition," left to-day for the far North-west to explore the territory in search of petroleum. He was accompanied by Mr. Highman and two others. The party take with them two teams, boiler, engine and machinery, complete.

PEDESTRIANISM.

ROWELL'S PROPOSITION.

London, May 13.—Rowell, the pedestrian, writes to the Sporting Life, in reply to an offer from America to match Hart and Dobler against any Englishman: "I am ready to compete with Hart, Dobler or any man in the world for $500 or $1,000 a side, but the match must be open, nobody barred, and the winner to take the entire stakes and half the gate money. An interview with Hart, Dobler, and myself, in New York, cannot be arranged at present, as Brown's backers are unable to leave England, and while I was in America Brown's backers offer to stake £500 a side that he could do the same amount and make a £500 sweepstakes with Hart. Pegram, Dobler, or anybody in the world at Agricultural hall, London, three months after signing the articles."

Convention of Railway Master Mechanics.

Cleveland, May 13.—The second day of the Convention of Railway Master Mechanics was chiefly devoted to technical discussions of mechanical topics. Jacob Johnson, of the Walnut Road, read an able paper to prove the superiority of straight top locomotives. Under an amendment to the constitution S. A. Hodgman, Jacob Johnsons and James Boone were appointed to serve one, two and three years respectively as a committee to report at convention topics for consideration by the committees during the interim and to be reported on and discussed at the next annual meetings. The topics adopted to be discussed at the next convention are boiler construction and improvements of shop tools and machinery for manufacturing and repairing locomotives, the best means for attaining the highest economy in the use of bituminous coal, the best form of construction of locomotives for the fast passenger service. In the afternoon the members visited the Standard Oil Works and the Otis Iron & Steel Works. The convention will adjourn to-morrow.

A MONKEY PULLS A TOOTH.

Galt (Ont.) Reformer.

We invite the attention of Mr. Darwin to the following very singular anecdote regarding the monkey "Dot," belonging to James Wardlaw, of this town, as so peculiar an illustration of the ingenuity of the monkey has rarely, if ever, been recorded. The monkey was brought to Galt from Deccan, India, in the fall of 1878 by Mr. Wardlaw who had been residing in Hyderabad for several years. It fairly eclipsed itself on Sunday before last. The little creature had been suffering from toothache for several days, and evidently suffered severely. On Sunday the pain was more than ordinarily severe, and the monkey, like the human type, resolved at last to undergo a dental operation. But the dentist, strange to say, was itself. Dot found a string, fastened it around the aching tooth, seized the end of the string with its fore feet, gave a sudden elbow which jerked the tooth out and sent it flying half way across the room. This having been accomplished, the monkey was at its ease, and resumed its natural cheerfulness and amiability.

Icebergs at Sea.

New York, May 12.—The steamship City of London, reports that May 6, in latitude 45 degrees, longitude 46 degrees north, the steamer was detained six hours in a field of ice; on the 7th about latitude 44 degrees, longitude 48 degrees, the steamer passed an iceberg 300 feet high and 700 feet long, and saw smaller ones during the day.

ODDS AND ENDS.

BRITISH AGRICULTURE.

Seven Defective Wheat Crops in Nine Years.

Ruinous Competition with American Productions.

Drain of Capital and Laborers to Canada and the United States

London, May 14.—James Caird, an eminent agricultural authority, says nothing like the present depression in the agricultural interest has been seen since the repeal of the Corn Laws. In nine years there have been seven defective wheat harvests. In England where the bulk of the wheat crop is grown, there has been lost in those years a fourth more than the whole year's crops—a loss to the wheat growers of more than £30,000,000, with no compensation in higher prices. The introduction of foreign meat and cereals is of immense benefit to the consuming classes. American statesmen believe that they are rapidly gaining control of this trade and can maintain it even at lower prices. It must be met by the production here of articles which will not bear long storage or carriage, such as milk, fresh butter, early meat, vegetables, hay, straw, potatoes and sugar beet. All interests in land, whether of owner, occupier or laborer, must be disenthralled. control of the dead land must be removed, and the sale and transfer of land simplified. Encumbered estates will then be broken up into small properties. The drain of agricultural labor and capital to the U. S. and Canada will alter the existing condition of agricultural property in England. Our agriculture must adapt itself to the change, freely accepting the good it brings and skillfully using advantages which a greater proximity to the best market must always command.

Prince Leopold's Departure from Liverpool for Canada.

London, May 14.—Prince Leopold sailed for Canada to-day. He arrived at Liverpool from Scotland at five o'clock. Sir Alexander Galt, at the invitation of the Prince, accompanied him to Liverpool. The Mayor's carriage was waiting to convey him to the landing stage. The Prince embarked immediately on board the tender and steamed to the Sardinian, on which the royal standard was hoisted. The tide prevented her departure till eight o'clock. The weather is fine, and the prospect pleasant for the voyage.

GREAT BRITAIN

London, May 14.—The Daily News says the Cabinet Council on Friday will have, it is believed, a very serious question to decide. Mr. Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland, having returned from Dublin, is said to be disposed to recommend coercive legislation in regard to Ireland. "We trust," the News says, "no reason will be found for such a step, but if sufficient cause is shown to recommend a renewal of the Coercion Act, and if the peace of Ireland must depend on the continuance of such legislation for the present, the Liberals will be obliged to assent to the proposal."

HEADLIGHT'S CASE.

It is thought the refusal of the Special Parliamentary Committee to allow Mr. Bradlaugh to affirm, will lead to a further modification of the swearing in procedure. It is understood that Mr. Bradlaugh will take the oath under protest. He, however, refuses to say anything on the subject until the House of Commons reassembles.

AN INDIAN LOAN.

It is announced that in consequence of the war in Afghanistan and the increased expense of the Indian administration the Indian Government will next month effect a loan of 15 lacs of rupees, a sum equivalent to £11,800,000 or $56,000,000. A large portion of the money is to be expended in the improvement of public works. The Times says the proposed Indian loan may be taken as an indication of the depleted state of the Indian treasury. The cost of the Afghan war is now confessed to be upwards of £18,000,000, and will probably be more.

COERCIVE LEGISLATION.

London, May 14.—The Standard says "We believe the supposition that Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland, is disposed to recommend the renewal of the Peace Preservation Act in Ireland is entirely unfounded. As far as we are enabled to judge the Government intend to allow the Coercion Act quietly to drop.

FAILURE.

London, May 15.—William Lang, Jr., & Co., lead manufacturers, of Glasgow, have failed. Liabilities $200,000.

LABOR TROUBLES.

The employers in Accrington district determined if the Blackburn strike continued to stop their mills three days in each week.

FOREIGN FLASHES.

The German army, when completed, will exceed 2,000,000 men.

Japan has rejected China's proposal to enter an alliance against Russia.

At Paris the widow of Count de Noe Cham, the celebrated caricaturist, who has been despondent since her husband's death, threw herself from a window and lies in a precarious condition.

RIOTING IN FRANCE.

The Soldiers Charge the Mob.

Paris, May 14.—Serious rioting, in connection with the strike, occurred to-day at Renhait, during which the soldiery charged the mob. Further serious disturbances are apprehended.

CANADIAN NEWS SUMMARY.

—Settlers are flocking into the country around Bruce Mines.

—An agitation against narrow tires is arising in several cities and towns.

—It is proposed to raise another $60,000 on Victoria, B. C., city debentures.

—The laying of the mains in connection with the Seaforth water-works is being proceeded with.

—The name of Kennoway post-office has been changed. It will hereafter be known as Greig post office.

—The Local Government has increased the grant to all Cape Breton in holding an Inland Exhibition from $1,200 to $1,500.

—On Saturday, Richard Moore, Erasmus, sold six head of cattle to Mr. Lemon, Toronto, at 5½ cents. The total weight was 7,660 lbs.

—The fall wheat and the show for fruit all over Oxford county is exceedingly good, and a smile comes over the farmer's face when you speak about the crops, which is a good sign.

—A genuine salmon, which was caught by a fisherman in Lake Ontario at Wellington, was sold in Belleville a few days ago. Its flesh was nearly as red as that of the sea salmon.

—Mr. C. Lemon, of Toronto, took away from the Model Farm on Monday six head of cattle, averaging 1,570 lbs., which he purchased for $6 per 100 lbs. One was a thoroughbred Durham, the other a thoroughbred Galloway, and the rest grades. They are to be shipped to England. These cattle were fed on the experiment whether animals two and a half years old could be turned out as heavy in the same time as those three or three and a quarter years old, and it is stated the experiment has to a certain extent been satisfactory.

Mr. W. Fenner, of Colchester, Essex, England, shipped yesterday to Montreal 276 head of fine steers, for Bristol.

HANLAN—COURTNEY.

Prospects of the Coming Race.

Washington, D. C., May 13.—Hanlan to night was in excellent spirits. "Tell my friends in Canada," he said to your correspondent, "that I rowed five miles to day and feel splendid. He weighed his new paper boat and wooden shell to-day, and found the latter to be 7 lb. lighter than the former. To-night Edmonson slept at the Anacostan boat-house, a bunk being arranged for him. He will sleep there every night until the race comes off. Courtney's new boat arrived to night, and he will practice in it to morrow. He, as well as Riley, took a row this morning. Referee Blaikie is expected to night, and will be here until the race, beginning to arrange the details to morrow. Secretary of the Navy Thompson has granted the use of the Government Speedwell for the use of the referee, Mr. Blaikie. Invited guests and representatives of the press will, it is understood, be on board of her. The race is now the talk of the city.

LATER.—Mr. Blaikie arrived at 10 45 to-night.

DRAWBACKS OF THE COURSE.

Washington, D. C., May 13.—Signs of preparation for the great Hanlan-Courtney boat race are beginning to thicken. The men are in hard training for the race, and the city is getting ready for the crowd expected. The work of erecting a grand stand began to day at a point about half a mile from the start. Owing to a double bend in the river neither start, turn nor finish can be seen from this point, nor is there any point close to the river on either shore whence a view of the whole course can be had. Spectators will be obliged to content themselves with a sight of the beginning and the finish, and this, the most important part of the course, is not of easy access, and is marred by the sharp bend in the river within the first half mile. Both oarsmen, however, express themselves satisfied with the course, and the local authorities promise to accommodate the spectators as well as circumstances will permit. It is generally conceded that the Lachine course would be desired to-day, and Hanlan, Courtney, and Riley were all out twice, taking long pulls. All are in excellent condition, and are beginning to attract considerable crowds of spectators to witness their daily practice spins.

ENGLAND'S EX-CHAMPION.

William Elliott, of Pegswood, will be unable, a cablegram says, to participate in the contest for the Beale prize, as he is still confined to bed.

TWO FATAL GUN ACCIDENTS.

Rev. L. M. Hunt, of South Haven, Shot Dead.

A Hamilton Boy Killed Almost Instantly

Kalamazoo, May 14.—Rev. L. M. Hunt, pastor of the Congregational Church at South Haven, was accidentally killed near Galesburg this morning. He was loading a gun when it was by some means discharged, killing Mr. Hunt instantly. His wife is at South Haven. Mr. Hunt was a much esteemed minister, who has done a good deal of hard and earnest church work in this neighborhood and in the State Hamilton, May 14.—Yesterday afternoon, between 4 and 5 o'clock, Edward Lenz, aged 13 years, whose parents reside on Tisdale street, and John Henshaw, aged about 16 years, took the barrel of a double barrelled shotgun which the former owned, and proceeded to a vacant lot to have some fun. They fired a piece of paper to the end of a stick, lighted it, and Lenz knocked the powder off. The barrel flew up and hit him in the face, killing him almost instantly.

POISONED HIS MOTHER'S COWS

Sixteen of Mrs. Doyle's Cows Dead in Her Yard.

New York, May 14.—Sixteen of the cows of Mrs. Rosanna Doyle, of Park street, near Kingsland avenue, Brooklyn, were poisoned yesterday, and one after another died until fifteen carcases were lying about her yard this morning. She had her son, James Doyle, and his companion arrested on suspicion of poisoning the cows. The lad owned one of the milk-carts, and her son James, who attended to it, had his name on the wagon. They had a quarrel about the grounds from the sale of milk, and she took his name from the wagon and had her own painted on. He was so vexed at this that he said he would poison all her cows. On Tuesday, it is said, he went to a paint shop and purchased some London polish, which he mixed in the cut feed, and gave it to the cows.

St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway.

St. Paul, May 14.—The stockholders of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway to-day elected the following directors:—Geo Stephen, Montreal; Donald A. Smith, Montreal; C. H. Northcott, England; R. B. Angus, R. W. Kittson, and J. J. Hill, St. Paul. The old officers were re-elected. The earnings of the road for five months since the reorganization have been $2,365,287, and the operating expenses, $1,073,978. About a hundred and fifty miles of new road have been built.

A Fast Train.

Bergenpoint, N.J., May 14.—An express train on the New Jersey Central to-day made the distance from Jersey city to Philadelphia, 89½ miles, in the unprecedented time of 90 minutes.

The Quebec Labor Troubles

The Situation Still Anxious.

Quebec, May 14.—The militia are still in the citadel, and are likely to remain there some little time, as there is no prospect of another row until the arrival of another of the Dominion line of steamships, and that is not likely to occur till Saturday next. It should be clearly understood that there need not be the slightest apprehension on the part of travellers to come to the city. All the trouble that may occur will be between the rival Jac Jics, and the scene of action must necessarily be in or around the coves, where there is absolutely no pleasure traffic whatever. Municipal bodies are endeavoring to make capital out of the troubles here, and are ably assisted by the sensational placards issued from the offices of the evening papers which are devoid of truth, and got up apparently with the sole idea of selling extras. There is not the remotest danger to travelers. The municipal authorities are rather more cowardly than usual. Their own detectives gave in the names of about a dozen men, whom they offered to arrest without assistance, on a charge of carrying arms contrary to the Blake Act, but the authorities were afraid to sign the warrants. Public feeling is gradually working up, and it would not be surprising if the citizens met and took the authority out of the hands of the Police Board, who are at present nominal rulers of the city, the actual rulers being about a hundred ship laborers.

THIRTEEN ARRESTS MADE.

Quebec, May 14.—The police force was ordered at midnight to parade at 2 o'clock this morning, and at 3 were handed warrants for the arrests of 16 defendants living in Champlain street, charged with being concerned in late labor assault cases. The force descended into the coves by way of the plains, and without the slightest difficulty aroused out of their beds and arrested 13 of the rioters.

—A span of horses belonging to Captain A. B. Hayward, of Wallaceburg, while in a pasture field fenced with barbed wire, ran against it cutting their necks very badly. It is a doubtful whether they will recover.

MICHAEL DONNELLY'S DEATH.

Trial of William Lewis at Simcoe Yesterday.

How he Came to do the Stabbing.

Lewis Convicted of Manslaughter.

His Sentence not yet Decided Upon

Simcoe, Ont., May 14.—The trial of Wm. Lewis, indicted for the murder of Michael Donnelly, whose family are of Biddulph fame, was commenced here to day before Justice Cameron. John Crerar, of Hamilton, conducted the case for the Crown, and Chas. J. Fullerton Simcoe, for the defence. It will be remembered that the circumstances as elicited at the coroner's inquest were as follows:—At Blaglit's hotel, in Waterford, on the evening of the 9thof December last, Donnelly was engaged in an altercation with a stranger named Greenwood. Lewis interfered, and Donnelly at once wanted to fight him, and after a little scuffling he was stabbed by Lewis in the groin with an ordinary pocket knife, from the effects of which he died in about 15 minutes.

Chas. Slaght, bar tender at the hotel, James Brown, James Muir, James Marr, Francis Perry, Chas. A. Smith, Robert Brooks, George Lea, Joseph Richards, Allan Henderson, William Yallaran, and Freeman Slaght, proprietor of the hotel, each gave evidence. The first named testified that the deceased was a quarrelsome bully, and started the row, but the others testified that though ready to fight, Mike Donnelly was a disorderly character, or particularly offensive in his deportment. James Marr thought Lewis struck the first blow, and swore that the latter told Donnelly not to "shoot off his mouth" so much, and not go "hop on to" Greenwood without a cause. The conversation was about fighting Hogs, and Dennelly said he had a pup that could "lick" anything there about. The evidence generally went to show the fault was on both sides, and that Lewis, and well as his victim, was too hasty in getting into the row.

Freeman Slaght swore that about a week previous to the killing he heard a conversation between Lewis and Greenwood. The former said to Greenwood, "If Donnelly ever slaps you on the face again I'll knock him, and if you cannot fix him I will." It seems as if in pursuance of this promise, Lewis interfered in the quarrel.

The respective lawyers and the Judge then addressed the jury, after which they retired and returned in a short time with a verdict of manslaughter.

Sentence has not yet been pronounced.

POISONED PORK.

A Roast Literally Swarming with Trichinæ.

A Young Lady in Danger of Her Life from Eating a Poorly Cooked Portion.

Delaware, May. 14.—A case of trichinæ, with all its accompanying horrors, is at present occupying the attention of the physicians and scientific men of the country. The subject, a young lady aged sixteen, by the name of Lent, living about three miles from the city, was taken violently ill some three weeks ago, and soon after eating some pork which had been given to the family by their neighbors. Her parents were not alarmed until her eyelids began to swell, when they sent for Dr. McCann of Delaware. Upon his arrival he found the patient suffering with intense fever, extreme restlessness, headache and delirium, together with soreness and stiffness in the muscles. The doctor, from the symptoms and history of the case, pronounced the patient to be suffering with trichinia. He ordered a piece of the pork to be procured, which he took with him to the city where Professor Nelson subjected it to a microscopic examination, and found it to be literally swarming with trichinia. The place the young lady ate was taken from a tract that had been prepared for the farm hands, who came in an hour sooner than expected, the meat being taken from the oven before it was thoroughly done.

The young lady has been under the doctor's hands ever since, and the end is not yet. Some say she will die, while others think that she will recover. A Colored Preacher's Pranks

Rev. Chas. Davis' Doings in Gostham and His Flight from Town.

Some time ago a vacancy occurred in Chatham in connection with the mission of the Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, a sect of colored people extending here from the States. The presiding elder of the Canada district, Rev. J. C. Smith, appointed Mr. Chas. Davis to the vacant place. For a time all went well until Davis made the unfortunate mistake of supposing that another man's wife was his, and this led to a serious complication. In short he was guilty of immoral conduct, and the matter was reported to the presiding elder, and sufficient evidence was furnished him to justify his expulsion of Davis. The latter, however, on hearing of his approaching ejectment, took his departure between two line days. Since that time he has been visiting other localities, travelling on his check and a certificate of character purporting to be signed by the presiding Elder and Bishop Lamar, of North Carolina. Rev. Mr. Smith declares that the document is a forgery, he never having given any certificate to Davis. He further states that Davis is a very bad man and should not be countenanced by people of the church anywhere.

HON. GEORGE BROWN'S MURDERER

End of the Suit Brought by His Wife.

Toronto, May 14.—In the Bennett case this morning it was found that the prisoner had not been brought up owing to his having been committed for trial by the Coroner's jury on the charge of wilful murder of Hon. Geo Brown. His Worship was discharging the case against prisoner on the charge of neglecting to support his wife when Mr. H M Easton, on behalf of Mrs. Bennett, stated that he would prefer the case being withdrawn, so as not to leave any imputation that Mrs. Bennett had failed to prove her marriage. The case was accordingly withdrawn.

LATEST FROM TORONTO

Toronto, May 14.—While a man named W. S. Wilkie, of Louisville, Ky., was exhibiting a fire escape at the Walker House to-night, the rope broke and he fell from the second story to the ground. The medical man who is attending him thinks he cannot recover.

THIRTEEN ARRESTS MADE.

Mr. T. J. Wilkie, who has resigned the position of Secretary of the Y.M.C.A here, to take a similar position at Brooklyn, N. Y., was entertained at a farewell social to-night. As a souvenir of his stay here, he was presented with a gold watch and a Bagster Bible, and Mrs. Wilkie was presented with a handsome epergne. The entertainment wound up with resolutions of regret and tears.

CANADIAN DEBT.

There are two ways of looking upon a national debt. One man may view it as a financier and a statesman, the other as an interested politician or an alarmist. A professional demagogue can always make a good hit or two on the subject of an increasing debt, by pointing the prophetic finger after the manner of Mr. Blake and Sir Richard J. Cartwright, to the gloomy, struggling and hopeless days immediately before us. It is an easy matter for an orator like Mr. Blake, to paint, in funereal gloom, the prospects of a young country, if he be permitted to deal with one side of the question only, and to lay his vivid imagination under contribution to furnish a fair share of the facts presented. To point to indebtedness per capita taken absolutely, is only misleading in reference to any country, so far as accepting this as a measure of the future prosperity of the country in question. There are many circumstances that must be taken into account if we wish to have sufficient data on which to base reliable calculations. The principal fallacy in all Mr. Blake's conclusions, and in those who have followed him as an authority is this—he has overlooked nearly all the facts which ought to enter as indispensable factors into the considération of such a question. The debt of the Dominion of Canada amounts to a certain figure, the debts of the different Provinces foot up a large sum in addition, the municipal indebtedness is another important item if the exact figures could only be obtained, and dividing the aggregate by the assumed four millions of inhabitants gives the rate per caput, and thus, Mr. Blake thinks that he possesses a fair standard by which to judge of the relative taxation of Canada and the United States, or Canada and Great Britain, and the prospects of this country under it.

One of the points on which this fallacy obtains is the different positions or conditions of the country as respects the population of the state, relatively to the extent of territory, and the quality of the soil. The population of England has, in all likelihood, reached its maximum, so that the rate per capita cannot decrease much through natural growth, and, therefore, if the rate of individual taxation be lightened, it must be mainly by paying off the national debt. The United States have still room for expansion as respects population; and as the most desirable of their wild lands have been taken up, the rapidity of increase from external sources must become every year less, while the ratio of growth in several of the British Provinces will be proportionately augmented. Now, in the Dominion of Canada, the prospects are widely different. The best of our lands are yet untouched; their quality is unequalled on this continent for agricultural purposes; in respect to quantity, they may be held unlimited, and when these facts are properly known throughout England and Europe, they will not lie long unoccupied. There is ample room and ample means of support for a population in Canada double of that which the United States now possesses, and for the next twenty years we may expect to see the stupendous increase in population at a rate equal to anything this continent has ever witnessed. Every circumstance points to such an issue, and those who can see nothing before us but a cloudy sky and national bankruptcy looming up in the immediate future, are either interested witnesses or short-sighted politicians.

The debt of Canada is as near as can be ascertained $40 per head; the United States $60; England $116; France $127; Queensland $212, and New Zealand $312. New England and France cannot decrease this debt by adding materially to their population, as they are in reality more likely to decrease in numbers in the future. The United States will no longer be able to compete successfully with Canada for the surplus population of the Old World, after the advantages, which this country presents to the immigrant become properly known. There will be no more very expensive public works to be undertaken, after the completion of our canals and the Pacific Railroad, for quite a length of time, and with the growth of the country such as we have a right to expect, our debt, large as it is, will become light indeed, when distributed over a nationality as extensive and as rapidly increasing in wealth and population.

Scarcely any, we think, will demur to the assumption, that with the increase of population will come a decrease in the rate per capita of taxation, providing that the debt is stationary, or nearly so. Now, we make no attempt, worthy of notice, to challenge the calculations of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, and the Toronto Globe, respecting the wealth in resources of the Dominion, being sufficient to build our great railway across the continent, without adding permanently to the burthens of the people. Then it is equally certain that the population of our resources, our wealth will rapidly increase under the conditions in which the Dominion is now placed, and therefore, while the taxes of the Canadian are the lightest of all the list we have quoted, our prospects point more certainly and more speedily to their reduction, than those of any other country among all we have named. There is very little cause, therefore, for ominous predictions and head-shakings, regarding the future of Canada.

TEMPERANCE IN TEMPERANCE.

The Chatham Tribune thinks that "what we now want is a National Prohibition." Against intoxicating liquor, our contempory means. But if parliament once takes the dietary of the people into their charge we may live to see an edict put forth against pork and beans. Moses was obnoxious to the porker, and Paul protested against the use of blood. Yet we have several pork-raising into a national institution, and beef "rare," full of so-called gravy, and health is formed of blood, is a dish which is peculiarly popular. The Vegetarian can produce a hundred cogent reasons of physiological kind against the use of flesh as food. He can point to scrofula, scurvy, as other illustrations of blood poisoning as decidedly traceable to the flesh-eating habit. Yet those who rail against bitter beer, who deem lager to be our abomination, a libation to Hades, might not like to be deprived of their rasher of bacon, or juicy steak cut from sirloins. The true means of moving the public mind in favor of the goodly cause of temperance is by pointing out the folly of the opposite course. But if Parliament is to say what we shall or shall not put in our bodies, it may be called upon to say, some day, that we shall put on our bodies. It is not very long since that the length of a man's shoes was regulated by statute. So, too, were his doublet and walking stick. One class of the people were forbidden to wear clothes prescribed for another class, and within our own recollection personal habits, helped the people around like a slave-pen. Indeed, in these days of advancement, when Woman's Rights are advocated even by politicians of the Blake stamp, it is no stretch of imagination to suppose a parliamentary committee regulating the length and color of bonnet strings; making it penal for ladies possessing excellent figures to wear the jersey costume, or to declare the use of false teeth as a flagrant wrong, flung in the face of society. In fact, there is no end to the ramifications that such interference may assume. Seeing that the cutting of a man's hair and beard have been prescribed by law; that clothes and shoes have been also so regulated; that a man's religion as well as his morals, were lovingly cared for by the State in days not very long since, it would not be matter for wonder if national prohibition—or in other words, legislative interference, should take many directions in relation to individual habits. The Free Press has ever applauded and aided legitimate efforts to promote temperance in all things, but it cannot approve that class of legislation which seeks to pullock a man's mouth even though it may be opened in foolishness.

George T. Angell, the president of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, writes from Boston to an exchange as follows

I was told yesterday that the demand for glucose is now so large in this city that dealers can not promptly fill orders. As a director of the American Social Science Association, I have for several years given much time and some money to investigating poisonous and adulterated foods and other articles. Prof. C. R. Fletcher, of this city Massachusetts State assayer, also lecturer on chemistry at Boston university, writes me that he has recently analyzed various specimens of glucose and glucose syrup, and found quantities of free sulphuric acid in every instance. I have also a recent letter from a Chicago chemist that the same is found there. The manufacture of this article is enormously increasing in various parts of our country. I am told by a dealer in Boston that he supplies bakers, confectioners, and brewers, and that people are coming for it to be applied to new uses almost every day. This article sells from 2 to 4½ cents a pound. The highest grade of syrup, I think, brings 6½. I enclose also sucked (?) evidence of adulteration of sugars, etc., taken in Chicago last fall from most unimpeachable sources, and which has never to my knowledge been denied, and would add that the great manufacturing chemist of Detroit told me last fall, at the close of an address I gave before the Prismatic club, of that place, that he could not buy a pound of sugar in Detroit which he could use to coat his pills.

At the late annual meeting of the Western Gas Association, at Indianapolis, President King, in his address said he is furnishing gas to two Illinois State institutions for laundry purposes at a less cost than coal. The demand for this gas engine is so great that it cannot be supplied. He considers that the electric light has about spent its force, as gas has become a great public necessity. It should be furnished at a low cost, and the day is passed when gas stocks can be quoted as fancy. After twenty five years' experience he is satisfied that real improvement is a matter of slow growth.

The Methodist ecumenical council will meet at City Road Chapel, London, in August, 1881. The executive committee will be charged with arranging the details. But it has been determined to have 400 delegates, 200 from the United States, which form the western section, and 200 from the eastern section, comprising Great Britain and other states. Bishop Simpson was elected as chairman of the western section and Bishop McTyeire, of the M. E. church south, vice-chairman; Bishop Peck named C. B. Fisk, of St. Louis, and Dr. A. C. George, of West Virginia, as delegates.

Among the food exports of America, which have attained so remarkable a growth during the past half dozen years, oysters hold an honourable place. In 1876 a few barrels of them were sent to England as an experiment; the following year, upward of forty thousand barrels; the year after, upward of fifty thousand; in 1878, nearly eighty thousand; in 1879, ninety thousand; while the present year will probably show an export of a hundred thousand barrels, worth half a million dollars.

Thousands of tons of Limberger cheese are produced every season in the States of New York and Wisconsin, at a cost of less than half that of the imported article. It finds its market and is consumed mostly by our German-American population. It is more profitable to the farmer and maker than any other kind of cheese, because from a given quantity of milk, more weight is obtained and better prices are realized.

Mr. John Walter Cross, George Eliot's husband, is a gentleman well known in New York, which he left only nine years ago to take up his residence in London, where he is engaged in the banking business. Mr. William Wood, lately President of the Board of Education, who is his uncle-gives the age of Mr. Cross as forty last March. Mrs. Lewes was born in Warwickshire about 1820, and is therefore, twenty years the senior of her husband.

The Methodist Conference at Cincinnati have elected Inor Bishops in accordance with the resolution adopted on Wednesday. The newly-elected dignitaries are: The Rev. E. O. Haven, at present Chancellor of the Syracuse University and at one time President of the Northwestern University at Evanston; the Rev. H. W. Warren, of Middleton, Conn.; the Rev. Cyrus D. Foss, now President of the Western University at Middleton, Conn.; and the Rev. John H. Hurst.

It is reported that Mrs. O'Reilly, relict of the late Mr. James O'Reilly Q. C., is to be appointed matron of the Ontario Reformatory.

CELEBRITIES AT HOME

Sir Coutts and Lady Lindsay at Crompton Place.

London World, March 31.

A generation or two ago, persons of birth and culture contented themselves with buying pictures, mostly doubtful specimens of the old masters, collected on the Continent; but it did not occur to those noble patrons of dead and gone art to step into the arena of art-work and wield the pencil and musi-pen themselves. They were mere spectators. They liked art in a kind of way, but were neither in it nor of it. It is far otherwise with Sir Coutts and Lady Lindsay of Balcarres, who are artists themselves. A Scottish baronet, co-heir at Guernsam, and then officer in the Italian Legion, Sir Coutts Lindsay has throughout his life contrived, despite the exigencies of soldiering and fashion, to keep steadily at work with his pencil; and has, moreover, enjoyed the advantage of studying under such masters as Ary Scheffer, and of filling his mind with the glory of Italian art, in no spirit of dilettante enjoyment, but with all the technical appreciation of a genuine student. The result of this steady work has been that he has fairly shed the cloak of the amateur, and stands before the world as an artist of no mediocre profession.

By extreme good fortune he is the husband of one of the most accomplished women in Europe—a daughter of the late Henry Fitzroy and Hannah Mayor de Rothschild. The house at Cromwell place presided over by this charming hostess is one of those delightful interiors in which it is possible to forget for a few hours that the English world is made up of electioneering and field-sports. It is not that social problems are never discussed, or that host and hostess take no interest in the latest aspect of the political kaleidoscope; but the subjects are talked of as subjects, without personal prejudice or party rancor. The tone of the house is artistic. One swims, as it were, in a warmer, kindlier atmosphere of culture than pervades the average English drawing room. After the English country house, with its everlasting political and ecclesiastical chatter it is to pennies endowed with other tastes than those of a justice of the peace, preserver of game and breeder of short-horns, especially agreeable and repeopled. In compensation for the talk of vicarage and quarter sessions, there are the ideas on the arts—poetic, graphic and musical. Mr. Browning may be heard on Mr. Swinburne's last poem, and Mr. Arthur Sullivan on the comparative merits of London and Leipsic musical training. Lady Lindsay herself is a genuine worker at painting, music and verses, and has achieved success in all three. Her song, "Love at the Gate," and her clever execution on the violin are due not less to natural gifts and the teaching of Arthur Sullivan, Dr. Steiner and Mme. Normann-Neruda than to the perseverance of their pupil. Lady Lindsay is a true lover of art for its own sake, and loving it all the more dearly for the devotion it demands.

On entering the house in Cromwell place, so well known to artistic folk, the early morning visitor leaves on his left hand the magnificent oaken staircase, once the property of Rubens, and passing across a dining-room rich in carved wood, finds himself in what may be described as a morning-room with a dash of library and atelier. Standing before several water-color drawings of flowers in various stages of completion, is Lady Lindsay, robed in soft black stuff with a ruby here and there, busily engaged in her work. Drawing in water-colors is a specialty of passion with Lady Lindsay which has only lately found expression in flower painting. Until quite recently her chief work was in copying pictures of the older Italian masters and making portraits of her friends. Just opposite the artist hangs a striking picture of her friend and instructress on the violin, Mme. Norman Neruda, surrounded by numerous copies of pictures of world-wide fame. Throughout there is evident a decided partiality for the Madonnas and Holy Families which the Italian masters painted in response to the demand for such subjects. Many of the copies are of pictures painted by artists whose fame has hardly extended beyond their own country—may their own city. Carpaccio, for instance, is only to be seen in his glory at Venice, and those who appreciate that exquisitely interesting but out-of-the-way place are, as a rule, compelled to take their homage upon trust. Lady Lindsay has devoted infinite care and skill to making copies, reduced to the scale of the vast originals, of Carpaccio's most striking works. Painting, however, does not monopolize entirely Lady Lindsay's interesting working-room. There is a grand piano-forte with a violin lying upon it; and within a species of intrenched work formed by the piano-forte, sundry easels and a carved cabinet, is a vast collection of mezzo-books and engravings, bits of tapestry, and old embroidered work of the richest and rarest kind—in fact, a museum of art-work of every kind flung together in aesthetic disarray. Each item, too, has its story. The cabinet with the delicately carved figures almost hidden by a great piece of gold tissue, was picked up by accident in a sunny Tuscan village; the marvellous tissue was among a quantity of tapestry acquired after a protracted negotiation with a Venetian dealer.

Sir Coutts Lindsay since his retirement from the Grenadier Guards and his subsequent period of service in the Italian Legion has passed his life in an atmosphere saturated with art. At Rome he became an intimate friend of the late Mr. Gibson, the sculptor of the "Tinted Venus," and absolutely at the head of his profession in that spot where artists love to congregate. To be an aspirant for artistic fame no friendship in Rome could have been so valuable as that of Mr. Gibson, who besides his professional renown was the social centre of the most cultivated inhabitants of the Italian capital. After a period of serious study in Rome, Sir Coutts made that the starting point of his career as a painter

BARBARA.

Gilmore wondered and held her tongue, being faithful to her mistress; but the widow Morris told Priscilla how Mrs. Penrith had stood by the window of the servants' hall in close and earnest conversation with a tall sunburnt stranger; how they had clasped hands, lingering as if loath to part; and how the stranger had laid his hand upon Mrs Penrith's brow, and looked at her as a brother—or a lover—might have done.

Mrs. Morris had not been able to hear their conversation, seeing that the wind was howling boisterously all the time, and the lattice was shut.

"Not that I should have thought it any shame to listen," said the widow, with a virtuous air; "for when I have attached myself to a lady, I would go through fire and water to serve her. And I thought it my duty to acquaint you with what I happened to see. I did not go out of my way to watch them, you see, miss; but I was crossing the yard, after I'd taken a cup home to the dogs, and I happened to see Mrs. Penrith and the gentleman standing in front of the window, so wrapped up in each other that I believe a regiment of soldiers might have gone by without either of them taking notice."

Priscilla shuddered. She had always expected to have to shudder sooner or later about her sister in law, so the shuddering hardly came upon her as a surprise.

"Did they know each other, Morris," she gasped presently.

"No, miss; things didn't go quite so far as that. I think if it had come to kissing, I must have gone away. But there are looks that mean as much as kisses—looks which no prudent young woman would expose herself to."

"What is to be expected from a girl so brought up?" her mother and father living apart; no religious bias on either side; a careless, irreverent way of looking at serious subjects. My poor brother is lying on his sick-bed, and his wife takes that opportunity for a clandestine interview with a former lover; for I suppose, Morris, after what you saw, there can be no doubt the man was a lover."

"He was too affectionate for a relation, miss; and I think I've heard you say that Mrs Penrith has no near relations."

"None that she has ever associated with."

"This gentleman is tall and dark; he looks like a foreigner, or a man who has lived abroad—in India, perhaps"

"I believe I know who he is," sighed Priscilla. "It is very bad, Morris. I don't think anything could be worse. If he had approached the house openly, I should have considered his visit a piece of audacious insolence; but to come in this underhand manner—"

Here Barbara entered the sitting room, where Miss Penruth was sipping her tea before a comfortable fire, attended by the widow, while Vyvyan slumbered in the adjoining bed chamber. The wife had dried her tears and calmed herself, and sat been sitting by her husband's bed.

"You have had a visitor, I hear," said Priscilla.

"Yes."

"Some ancient pensioner on your mother's bounty?"

"My mother had no pensioners. She was not rich enough to help other people, except in very small ways. Whatever she could do she did with all her heart."

"But I understood that this person had some claim on your benevolence—that he brought a letter from your former view."

"That was—a lie," faltered Barbara, with a feeble smile. "My visitor was an old friend of my mother's—Major Leland. I think you must have heard of him. He distinguished himself lately in India."

"Yes, I think I have heard of him."

"I should like to have introduced him to Vyvyan, if he had come at a happier time."

"I doubt if the introduction would have been particularly gratifying to my brother in law, as he has not that admiration for the bloodthirsty character of a soldier which is common to sentimental school girls and the Conservative papers," answered Priscilla, acrimoniously.

She was intensely disappointed at Barbara's frankness, as it would have better suited her temper to convict her sister in law of profound dissimulation.

Later that evening, when the housekeepers were sitting over their comfortable supper in the kitchen, with closed doors, and a general determination to let their masters and mistresses shift for themselves, Mr Morris walked up and down the hall, with velvet footfall, waiting for some one. "She some one was Mark, who came in from the back premises presently.

He looked round him cautiously in the dim light before committing himself, and then went up to the respectable Morris and gave hear a hearty kiss.

"O, sir, little woman, how goes it?" he asked.

"Tell me about the boys first. You went over to see them?

"Yes; it's a precious long way, and it was a precious cold journey, to say nothing of being blinded with hail half the time."

"You might have gone inside the coach, Mark."

"Catch me putting myself in a packing-case smelling of mouldy straw, and crammed with old women and babies! No, Molly; I like a mouthful of fresh air, and smoke my cigar in peace and quiet."

"And how are the boys?"

"Well and hearty; not learning much, I fancy, for they seem to like their school. The school-mistress seems a decent kind of person, and all the pupils look well fed. I think our young barrister could be better off."

"I'm very glad to hear it. Thank you kindly, Mark. I shall feel over so much easier in my mind now."

"Mon Medea cared for her children, she had to add way of showing it; no doubt Lady Macbeth was as affectionate a mother as she was an exemplary wife."

"Why Vyvyan?" asked Mark.

"Why much the same; but there's not always sense with him. He'll be all right by and by."

"I hope so, poor old chap," said Mark, honest heartiness.

"I had often vaguely contemplated his master's death as the necessary prelude to the millennium when he was to reign at last; but when it came to the actual object of such an event, that sediment of coldness at the bottom of his soul came nearly to the top.

"I said, 'Molly,' he continued, 'that is she was helping him off with his coat, and was looking blessed many regarding of fire to go on, and what is to come of it when it's all over? Will you be any better acknowledged as my wife by my brother and sister because you have lowered yourself to act as their servant?'

"You leave it all to me," said Molly, with chastened lips. "I have got round your sister already, and I shall get round your brother before I've done with him."

"But you've been in the house six months, and see how little good has come of it! You're no nearer your end than you were first March."

Molly looked at him intently, but said nothing.

"And look what a false position it is for me. People would think me a hound if they knew it."

"Nobody will think you a hound when you are master of this house, and when that fine young lady yonder is out of it."

"Yes; but that's talking of what may never come to pass. When all is said and done, Vyvyan has been a good brother to me; and now—now that business is going easier at the quarries, I feel a happier man than I used to be, and I can afford to wish him a long life."

"So can I, when he has acknowledged me as his sister-in-law, and given my children their rights," answered Molly.

"Do you think you'll ever bring him to that?"

"I do."

REMEDY FOR HARD TIMES.—Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way; especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but you get your trust in the greatest of all simple, pure remedies, Hop Bitters, that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

Mamma seeks to console her crying child, and asks Johnnie what has hurt him. Johnnie bawls more lustily than ever, and tells mamma that ye-terday he fell down and hurt himself. "Yesterday!" says the fond parent. "Then why do you cry to-day?" "Oh! because you were not at home yesterday."

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

A new method of saluting ladies on the street has lately been adopted by the noblest swell gentlemen of tender years. It is done in one time and four motions. The hat, by a right-hand grasp, is lifted from the head, brought forward on a line with the nose and then suddenly lowered to the pit of the stomach, then, as suddenly, the hat is returned to its place, following the same angular route. The head, at the same time, must be bobbed forward about three inches, and immediately sprung back to its natural position. The beauty and perfection of this salutation depends upon the rapidity of the execution of its movements. It is known as "the Darwin jerk," because hand-organ monkeys put on and take off their little caps with the same celerity of motion.

Henry Ward Beecher in his lecture on "The New Profession," at New York, Thursday evening, said the common school must be so advanced that no other school can flourish in the neighborhood of it. It must be so good that the most wealthy and select people cannot afford to keep their children out of it. The power of the Commonwealth ought to be greater than the power of any set or class. The more intelligent we can make the public the better it is for mankind. It is a stance to have schools that are pest-holes, without light or ventilation. Whatever is best in architecture belongs to the children. Shall we give money to scoundrel politicians and then say there is no money to build schoolhouses? Our schoolhouses should be the most resplendent buildings in the neighborhood. It is a shame for the rich men of the neighborhood to be living in palaces, and the children educated in cotton mills and barns.

About the recent marriage of the Princess Frederica, of Hanover, there was not a little romance. "Here," said a London correspondent, "is a Princess marrying a private secretary; a descendant of the Hanoverian kings marrying an undistinguished baron, doing it against the will of her brother, making her friends the Cambridges furious, and calling forth the sneers of an imperial family in Germany. She is encouraged by the Queen of England, who applied to the Emperor for her dowry, and braves the wrath of her family to satisfy the will of her relatives. The Princess Frederica has loved the Baron Rasmingen for years. She sought long ago for permission to make him her husband. For his sake she has refused more than one advantageous match. It is said that when Prince Leopold began to show something more to her than a mere friendly attachment she determined to appeal to him as the favorite son of the Queen. She told him her story and asked his aid. Like a true knight, he devoted himself to her cause. He urged his mother until she caught her son's enthusiasm; he arranged matters which without him would have been difficult; he turned her critics into her partisans; and so it came about that a sister of a crowned king is able with even something like pomp to marry for love."

CROW CROW.

Three drummers were drumming out into the West,
Each blew of the sample that paid him best,
And they blew from one end to the other of town.

For jaws must wag,
When prices are weak,
And jaws must be sup-
Plemented by cheek,
Yet they at the "bar" stood groaning.

Three drummers stood swearing from hour to hour—
They made not a sale in the whole wide town;
They swore at their luck, and they raved at the times;
Their names were Robinson, Jones and Brown.

For jaws must wag,
When prices are weak,
And jaws must be sup-
Plemented by cheek,
Yet they at the "bar" stood groaning.

Three corpses hung limp from their sample-bag straps,
Their sample-bag straps, and their prices down;
Three bones are wailing their trades' mishaps
And the loss of Robinson, Jones and Brown,
For jaws can't wag,
And useless is cheek
When drummers in thousands
Go through in a week,
Yet stand at the rum-bar groaning.

THE JOURNEY OF THE EX-EMPRESS EUGENIE.

At this time when events follow each other so quickly, there seems to be some danger that facts, which will one day play an important part in history, may be passed over at the present time. The fact that the ex-Empress Eugenie has sailed from South Africa, brings her again before the world in which she once played so brilliant a part. The ex-Empress travels under the incognito of Countess de Pierrefonds, accompanied by the Marquis de Banneville, the Count de Clary and Lady Wood; also a small suite, among whom is Uhlman, the confidential servant of the late Prince Imperial.

This calls to mind that the Prince Imperial sailed for Natal on the 26th of February, 1879. He had breakfast with the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House, and had been very warmly commended by the Queen. The Prince then embarked at Portsmouth.

Upon his arrival at Capetown, in the absence of Sir Bartle Frere, he was entertained by Lady Frere at the Government House, but lost no time in going to Natal. There he became the guest at Pietermaritzburg of Sir Garnet Wolseley and Lieutenant-Governor Sir Henry Bulwer, until he reached the headquarters of General Lord Chelmsford at Durban, on April 9th. There are but scanty notices of what he did and experienced in the months of April and May. His letters to the Empress were filled with animated descriptions of the country and his enjoyments of camp life. During several weeks he was suffering from an attack of fever caused by the climate, in the latter part of May, being on the general staff, he was attached to the cavalry corps of Colonel Redvers Buller, on on the northern frontier of Zululand.

On the 16th May the Prince Imperial made a reconnaissance under the command of Colonel Buller. Lord William Beresford, since gazetted as "Ulundi Beresford," was also with them. Eighty of Baker's horse and sixty Basutos made up the force. A large number of Zulus were met at Conference Hill. After galloping about for some point to point, the Prince espied some Zulus on a distant Kopje, and rode after them. Off went Lieut. Haw and the Basutos after the impatient Prince, and on came Baker's horse in the wake of the Basutos. Soon, however, had quickly disappeared. The wind blew cold, most bitterly so, and for those who had no blankets there was no sleep that night. The Prince was amongst the forlorne and cowerless ones. On the 21st of May the Prince, whilst riding out with several officers from camp, was surrounded by the Zulus upon whom he had ridden forward to lead. Some of the friendly Zulus were killed. The Prince put his horse at a kranz (a rocky descent), and had a narrow escape. It was thought, however, that the country was quiet, and small parties of mounted men made daily expeditions from the camp. On such an expedition, and owing to the small number of his escort, the Prince Imperial fell. Much has been said and written of the gracious and gentle side of this Prince's character. Yet he also possessed in a great degree the dash and color of a thorough Frenchman. His political position was always a dignified one. He refused to issue any manifesto which would have brought a civil war on France. He had declared, however, on the day on which he attained his majority, "that if the French people should for the eighth time by universal suffrage decide in favor of a Napoleon for their ruler, he was ready to accept the trust of imperial power."

The memorial already constructed to the Prince Imperial in Zululand by Corporal Scully and the English soldiers is on the spot where he was killed; the stones composing the monument, which in form resembles one of the ordinary flat gravestones in an English churchyard, were shaped in squares by the men in garrison at Fort Newdigate. The headstone and those composing the large cross and the letter "N" are white. The others are of a darker color. It is here that the Empress will kneel to pray for her son, over them stones the waving grasses of South Africa will soon grow. Tropical vines and flowers will also find a place there. The sad tragedies caused by war are marked here and there by the crosses placed at a soldier's last resting place, or some memorial stone placed by some comrade; and the simple memorial to the last of the Bonapartes takes no precedence.

METTERNICH AND NAPOLEON.

Their Famous Interview.

From a French correspondent N. Y. Sun.

Metternich had studied Napoleon as a naturalist studies a new species; he understood the necessities of that strange character, which could not [illegible] action: if Napoleon was not master of it, he would not remain the master of France. Left on one side to the great dramatic scene, which is, so to speak, the culmination of the Metternichian policy. Napoleon has made his great Russian campaign, he has dragged half a million of men of all nations as far as Moscow; he has lost them in the snow deserts of the north. He has not been discouraged; he has made new levies in 1813, and he has fought the allied armies of Russia and Prussia at Lutzen and at Bautzen. His military prestige is still intact. What will Austria do? She has been biding her time; she has watched the momentous issue. Now the time is come when she must throw her sword in the balance of events. Russia, England, Prussia entreat her to join in the great alliance against the arch-enemy of peace, the modern Attila, the new scourge of God. Metternich is ready; he is determined to force Napoleon to peace or to side with the allies against him. Napoleon receives him near Dresden, at the Villa Marcolini. The history of this interview is perhaps the most extraordinary page of history which has been written in our time. M. Thiers had had the good fortune to be allowed to read this chapter of the "Memoirs of Metternich" before he published his "History of the Empire;" he tells faithfully some of the incidents of the interview at Dresden; but his is only a second-hand account, and nothing can equal the effectiveness of Metternich's own story.

Napoleon began to walk with Metternich in the drawing-room of the mansion; he turned to pick up his hat himself. I have heard it said that Metternich always showed himself particularly proud of having forced the great Napoleon to pick up his hat. The interview lasted a long time yet; Napoleon had become angry, because he saw that he could gain nothing. He spoke of the Archduchess, and said, "I'll marry an Archduchess, I wanted to unite the present and the past, the Gothic prejudices and the intuitions of my age; I want no more of them; I feel now the extent of it. It may cost me my throne, but I will bury the world under its ruins." When Metternich left him he said to Napoleon, "You are lost, sire, I had the presentiment of it when I arrived; now that I go, I have the certainty of it."

Such scenes cannot be invented, and I do not doubt that the account given by Monsieur Thiers is exact; but the profundity of it."

Such scenes cannot be invented, and I do not doubt that the account given by Monsieur Thiers is exact; but the profundity of it."

At that time Metternich was conscious of all his advantages. Napoleon was beside himself; he was pushed on by his evil genius; he was, so to speak, not free. Metternich had seen, on his way, the look of uneasiness and of terror on the face of the French Generals. The Prince of Neuchatel (Berthier) had whispered in his ear, in Napoleon's antechamber: "This war is done by Europe wants peace, especially France." Napoleon's outburst of anger, when he was getting the lion in a "shifting den," where his face would not be very far from the lion's jaws, was then proved to him. To inject in the lion's mouth was the spongy round bone, as big as a cricket ball, which separates the hip joint from the loins. The lion had had part of a launch of horse for dinner, and in accuracy himself with the bone for the forlorne and cowerless ones. On the 31st of May the Prince, whilst riding out with several officers from camp, was surrounded by the Zulus upon whom he had ridden forward to lead. Some of the friendly Zulus were killed. ENGLISH CATTLE MARKETS.

For week ending Thursday, 29th April, 1880.

London.—Best beef, 9½ to 10 per lb; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 8½ per lb; best mutton, 10½ to 10½ per lb; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 9½ per lb. Although not active, the cattle trade here to day was steady; supplies, however, were not up to the average. Business was not active, but prices remained about the same as last week. The sheep pens were not over well filled. Trade was steady at prices better than last week.

Liverpool.—Beef, 6½ to 9½ per lb; mutton, 8½ to 11½ per lb. The supply of cattle here to day was less; of sheep, larger than on last Monday. The trade ruled rather slow for all descriptions of stock at about the prices of last week.

Glasgow.—Best beef, 8½ per lb; inferior and secondary, 6½ to 8½ per lb; best mutton, 11½ to 1s per lb; inferior and secondary, 9½ to 10½ per lb. There was no ordinary number of cattle at Market this day, many of which were of good quality. Demand dullish and no alteration from last week's quotations. Fair supply of sheep and generally of good quality. All kinds in demand, and last week's prices readily obtained.—Reported by John Bell & Sons, Glasgow.

LONDON AGRICULTURAL SEED TRADE.

London, March 28.—The end of the season being now close at hand, the attendance of buyers on the market to-day was most meagre. As regards American clover seed, the gravitated feeling exhibits less depression; nevertheless, current prices are still at a lower level, whilst the quality of the seed is finer than ever before has been the case. Other varieties of farm seeds are also surprisingly cheap. Holders of trefoil are accepting reduced terms. The trade for incerne improves. Of sanfoin and timothy, stocks are at a low ebb. Spring tares point downwards. Hemp seed rules at 31s per qr. Canary is neglected. There is a better sale for mangold seed. Scarlet runners are dearer; white runners being remarkably cheap, consequently meet with more attention.—John Shaw & Sons' circular.

MAILS RENDERED.

Pittsburg, Pa., May 14.—The meeting of the Western Nail Association was largely attended. The rate is now $3 25 per keg instead of $4. A proposition was also adopted to close all the mills in the Association for three weeks, beginning on Monday next. This action on the part of the Association was partly brought about by the fact lately developed that stocks are larger than was generally estimated.

GLASS MANUFACTURERS.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 13.—A special and largely represented meeting of the National Association of Window Glass Manufacturers was held to-day. After some little discussion, it was decided to suspend operations for three months, dating from the first of June next. A resolution was also presented to reduce the price list, but it was met with a unanimous and instantaneous defeat.

THE RICE MARKET.

Messrs. Talmage's Sons & Co., of Charleston, S.C., write as follows: "The rice market has ruled steady, with a good demand. Prices have receded about ¼; numbers are revised. The stock in New Orleans is now almost exhausted, and the trade will have to look to this market almost exclusively for their supplies. With stock here not larger than last year at the same date, the outlook is encouraging to holders, and a general feeling exists that prices are at bottom. Fair to fancy rice prices range at 6¼ to 7¾."

ONTARIO INSOLVENCIES.

McLean, Cannington, June 10; C. W. Brown, Lindsay, June 9; H. W. Judd, Toronto, June 14.

WELLAND CANAL AND THE LAKE ERIE LEVEL.

The St. Catharines Journal understands that during the coming season it is proposed to take Erie direct, and that it will be necessary to draw the water supply from the Grand River via the Feeder. The upper level will require to be raised a foot and a half by this season of 1880. Last year it was announced that the Lake Erie level was an accomplished fact, but experience has proved that the claim was made too hastily. It is to be hoped that the work yet to be done will not be allowed to drag along in the future as it has in the past. The Page estimated that three to four years more would be required in which to complete all the work on the enlarged canal, including the aqueduct and Lake Erie level. Right years have elapsed and still Lake Erie level is in the distant future.

UTICA CHEESE MARKET.

Utica, May 10.—There was a large attendance at the board to day, and a corresponding offering, but buyers were not at all sharp and transactions were very slow. Prices were off more than had been anticipated, and it seemed difficult to get the market started. The make is falling off for the competition on certain factories it is doubtful if the bulk would have gone at 9c. The principle sales were at 8¾c. Tuesday for the competition on certain factories it is doubtful if the bulk would have gone at 9c. The principle sales were at 8¾c. Tuesday for the competition on certain factories it is doubtful if the bulk would have gone at 9c. The principle sales were at 8¾c. Tuesday coming. Some factories will cream their cheese from to-day, others not till a week later. Transactions of the day were 3,490 boxes at 11c. to 12½c.; 160 boxes on 9c.; and 1,113 boxes sold forward on commission.

Annoyances of Railroad Conductors.

From the Albany Argus.

People frequently find fault at receiving curt replies from conductors, and, in fact, all other railway officers, but if they were to take the place of one for a week they would no longer wonder. There is no greater display of imbecility in any insane asylum than on most railroad trains. What wonder, then, that the conductor occasionally loses patience and answers rather curtly? Only the other day an old lady on her way to Montreal, with a dozen bandboxes and bundles, would frantically gather them up every time the train stopped at a side station, and rush for the conductor and ask if that was Montreal or if she had to change cars, and every time was told, "No, no, no; you've got 200 miles to go yet; keep your seat." A conductor who leaves the city in the morning and returns in the evening, got off at a small station not far out, the other evening on his return trip. He was approached by a grim-visaged individual, who addressed him in a tone that he was very much provoked. "Say, did you know you left me this morning?" "No, I did not: and where were you?" "I was in the depot here." "Well, my dear Sir, you must recollect that the depot never goes out. I never load my passengers on with a stretcher. If you want to ride with me you must climb on a train." The angry man was completely nonplussed, and remarking, "Well, that's so," he turned and walked away apparently satisfied.

Matthew Arnold:—"I have said that religious emotion has the power to light up morality; the emotion of Marcus Aurelius does not quite light up his morality, but it suffuses it; it has not the power to melt the clouds of effort and austerity quite away, but it shines through them and glorifies them; it is a spirit not so much of gladness and elation as of gentleness and sweetness, a delicate and tender sentiment, which is less than joy and more than resignation."

WHAT IS MORE BECOMING than one of BELTZ'S latest style of Hats? Ladies is but one, in fact there can be but one answer to this—Nothing. BELTZ is master of his profession, and full well knows to what to produce when he issues a new style. BELTZ'S HATS are things of beauty—they give joy to the wearer. They add grace to the person whose face they shade. Posts speak daily in their praise. Gildstone may feel proud of his laurels, won on the English election field; but BELTZ should feel prouder of those won on the field of science and art.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment.

The Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States will be held in Chicago, commencing on Monday, August 16, and will continue for about one week. On Tuesday one of the most imposing processions of the order ever witnessed in the United States and probably in the world — will be formed. Every State in the Union it is believed will be represented. The Imperial Commanderies, represented by 30 000 finely drilled Knights, will take part in this parade. Arrangements have been made whereby representatives are expected to be present from Canada, England and other European countries, the Sandwich Islands, Mexico, and, in fact, from almost every civilized and half civilized country in the world where this organization has a commandery. As a civic display it will be worth a trip to Chicago from any part of the country to see. An estimate has been made that the line of march will be five hundred and two third miles long. The men on foot will march 24 front, two files deep, with only twenty five feet between the ranks, to shorten the procession. This line will include a counter-march in one place, in order that each man can see the whole procession. Not less than 130 brass bands, the most perfect in America numbering from twenty to seventy pieces each, will furnish the music for this great demonstration.

"I am persuaded," says M. Coquelin, "that no one can be a great actor who does not hold himself completely in hand, and who cannot express at will emotions which he does not feel, and which, according to his real nature, he never could feel. This it is which makes our calling an art, and a creative art. The same faculty which enables the dramatic poet to call up from his brain a Tartufe or a Macbeth, although he, the poet, may be the most virtuous of men, enables the actor in his turn to assimilate such a character to himself, to work its secret springs at will, and yet never to lose his own individuality, but to stand as much apart from the feigned personage as a painter does from his canvas."

Mr. Edison should invent a new kind of theatre chair which could be raised or lowered according to the height of a person or a bonnet, so that the tops of heads or bonnets in a row of seats would be on a level. Thus a bonnet would have no advantage over eyes and a little man would have as many privileges as the tall man in front of him.

1880 SPRING SEASON. 1880.
TO THE
Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:
This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America.
Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods, figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large risks and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 14—1 a. m.—Indications —For the Lake region warmer, winds with in, creasing cloudiness.

A GOOD ACCOUNT.—"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total, $1,200, all of which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit." JOHN WARNE, Butler, N. Y.

POLICE COURT.—At this court before the P. M., Clara Peters was charged with disorderly conduct in being found in a lumber yard during Thursday night. She was remanded until Tuesday next for examination, as was also her companion, Alfred Welsh was upon remand for ill-treating a horse belonging to Mr. Robt. Huston of London East a few days since. On his agreeing to pay the costs, the matter was allowed to be withdrawn. On the other charges he will go to jail for forty-two days unless the fines are paid at once.

A GRATEFUL GIVER (?)—At despatch from Hamilton says:—"A London gentleman had a roll of bills amounting to $250 at the G. W. railway station yesterday. It was found by Constable Farr, who returned it, the unconscientious amount of twenty cents being tendered him for his honesty." The probability is that no London gentleman ever risked carrying $250 on his person when in the city or vicinity of Hamilton; and that if he did make an offer of 20 cents, it was a Sam Slick one, while it is hardly to be supposed to lose his wallet in London any resident of Her Majesty's Dominion would offer over the loser if it took a day to do it, and then refuse compensation for his trouble. Thats the difference between the people of the two places.

THE BETTING ON THE DERBY.—As very many of our readers are interested in the London betting on the Derby Stakes, the following quotations of the betting on the race which is to be run on the 26th inst., as given in late English papers, will be read with interest:—3 to 1 against Bend Or, 6 to 1 against Muncaster, 6 to 1 against Silvio, 7 to 1 against Dreyfus, 20 to 1 against The Abbot, 20 to 1 against Draycott, 30 to 1 against Jupiter, 40 to 1 against Miller, 40 to 1 against Valentine, 40 to 1 against Mask, 50 to 1 against Zealot, 50 to 1 against Fire King, 50 to 1 against Merry go Round, 50 to 1 against Spectator, 50 to 1 against Marc Anthony, 50 to 1 against Mariner, 50 to 1 against Forward, 66 to 1 against Chirper, 66 to 1 against Grand Admiral, 66 to 1 against Sapsbury, 66 to 1 against Clarendale, 66 to 1 against Dora, 66 to 1 against Sirdar, 66 to 1 against Scamard, 66 to 1 against Boughton, 66 to 1 against Byzantine. A meeting of the subscribers is called at the Albion Restaurant for Tuesday evening next to make the necessary arrangements for the drawing on the following evening.

THE NEW LEASES.—A correspondent, writing in a contemporary, has the following to say about the new leases of the Tecumseh House, mention of which was made through those columns a few days ago:—"Messrs McGaw & Winnett, with the addition of Mr. H. E. Moore, who has for the last six or seven years been steward of the Queen's, Toronto, have effected a long lease of the Tecumseh House, London, and will take possession on the 1st June. It is intended to place the house in first-class condition in every respect, introducing passenger elevators, recognizing the interior to give the public parlors a more homelike and cozy appearance, and to break up somewhat the monotony of the exterior by iron cornices and other architectural devices. The Queen's is to remain under the special charge of Mr. McGaw, Mr. Winnett takes the management of the Queen's Royal, of Niagara, and Mr. Moore will be manager of the Tecumseh. Mr. Moore has not only had a splendid training in the Queen's, but is personally a man of fine abilities, and perfectly adapted for the position on account of his energy in management and suavity of demeanor. It is the intention to make the Tecumseh House, London, as well and favorably known abroad as the Toronto Queen's."

REAL ESTATE TRANSFER.—We understand Messrs. Thos. Beattie & Co., have purchased from Messrs Wright & Durand their two stores Nos. 190 and 192 Dundas street east of Richmond street, situated between Mr. Wm. Saunders' drug store and Mr. Bradford's confectionery. The price paid was $14,500 cash. The intention is to erect one handsome store for the purpose of carrying on their extensive dry goods business. The frontage is 32 by 200 feet deep, affording ample space for one of the largest and best stores in Canada. This will be quite a move for Messrs. Beattie & Co., but we believe a very good one, as this block is destined ere long to be the leading position in the city.

Mr. Leonard Brooks, of Kensington, was attacked by a cow on Walker street, Kensington, the other night. His clothing was somewhat torn, and he sustained a few bruises. Mr. Stinchcombe owned the animal.

The Great Western Railway have laid out and fenced in with an attractive fence, a garden or small park at the junction of William and Ringstreets, Chatham, on the south side of the railroad. It is to be ornamented by a beautiful fountain in the centre.

Mr. James Elsun, of Peterseille, bought a fat heifer on the 11th concession of London township, and was bringing her home in his buy relating to cabs, omnibuses, &c., and also livery stables were submitted and passed. The first deines the charges to be paid cartters thus:—For one load by one horse or other animal, within the city limits 25 cents; for load drawn by two horses, 50 cents. The licenses were placed at $2 for one horse rig; $6 for two horse rig; and $15 for a "livery."

In future the Hounses for carts, cabs, omnibuses and livery stables will be collected by the License Inspector, instead of being paid, as in the past, to the City Clerk and Chamberlain.

The Chief Constable reported that he had received the fees for keeping the record and making the return of criminal statistics to the Dominion Government for the year ending Sept. 30th, 1879, amounting to $73 50; and that the same had been paid to the City Treasurer less $25 retained by him for his per-remance of the work from April 1st to Sept. 1st 1879, as directed by the Board in that year, the said amount being at the rate of $5 per month for such service.

The question of the reduction of the Sergeant Major's salary was considered, and the Sergeant Major permitted to address the Board.

It was ordered that inasmuch as some years ago Sergeant Basherville's salary was increased in consideration of extra expenses which he was put to in connection with his duties, those expenses now being repaid in this way, it is resolved that without any reflection on this very worthy officer of the police force, his salary be reduced to the rate of $40 in accordance with the original agreement.

The following accounts were passed:—A. B. Powell & Co., police clothing, $402.98; G. B. Sutherland, gloves, etc., $4.50; E. A. Taylor & Co., stationery, $4.10.

The Commissioners inspected the force at the City Hall, and Visiting in the shape Mayor, as their head, expressed himself highly pleased with the manner in which they had been doing their duty, and hoped they would continue to prove themselves as efficient in the discharge of their duties during the past year or two. The men were also very highly complimented on their appearance.

MASTER AND SERVANT

REMANDED TO JAIL FOR A DAY.

Two young men named Bernard Allen and Oliver Davis, were up on remand at the Police Court yesterday, at the instance of Messrs. J. Cameron & Co., of the Advertiser, charged with leaving their employment in contravention of the articles of indenture entered into by each. Mr. T. T. Macbeth appeared for the complainants, and, on the case being called, intimated that Mr. E. Meredith who had been consulted by the defendants, did not intend to appear in their behalf, as in his opinion they had acted illegally.

P. M.—Then you decline to furnish security for the due performance of your contract?

Allen—We do. It is this way: We belong to the Union, and we have no other alternative left us but to refuse, unless the complainants take the men now on strike back into their employment.

P. M.—That is a question with which I have nothing to do. It appears that you were receiving $3.50 per week in your third year, and that the extra piece work done by you contributed to raise your wages to $5 and $6. I would strongly advise you to return to your work, complete your time and become perfect in your profession. It will result beneficially to you in the end.

The P. M., to accused—Can you give bail for the proper performance of your duties in future?

Allen—No; we can't get bail, and we don't intend to ask our fathers or guardians to enter into bonds, further than the indentures, for us. The indentures do not demand that we should set by the piece, and in that respect the proprietors have broken the agreement.

Mr. Macbeth—We will require security from their parents or guardians in addition to their own.

Allen—If the indenture is sufficiently valid to send us back, it ought to be sufficient to keep us at work.

Mr. Macbeth—If they refuse to comply with the agreement entered into, your only course, your Honor, is to send them to jail for the term of three months.

P. M.—Upon giving $100 bail each, in the shape of a bond, that they will carry out the articles of the indenture and return to work immediately, I will allow them to go. If not, they will be remanded to jail until Saturday morning, when I will proceed to pass sentence upon them. I can't say that anything Allen has said is in his favor. They will be retired bail for their appearance.

THE POLICE FORCE.

Meeting of the Commissioners—The Curfew and Cab By-law—Economy, etc.,

The third meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners was held in the Mayor's office yesterday afternoon. The Mayor presided and Messrs. Leonard and Sanford. His Honor Judge Elliot and His Worship Police Magistrate.

The by laws regulating the licensing of carts and other vehicles for hire, amending the by-law relating to cabs, omnibuses, &c., and also livery stables were submitted and passed. The first deines the charges to be paid cartters thus:—For one load by one horse or other animal, within the city limits 25 cents; for load drawn by two horses, 50 cents. Free Press Correspondence.

The Fair Grounds Question.

To the Editor Free Press.

DEAR SIR.—I see in your report of Monday's election, that the citizens of London have decided to sell the exhibition grounds, and I am quite surprised that the county people have not been consulted, and that no protest has been made by the East Middlesex Agricultural Society, except the letter of our worthy President. In that he states that although a committee was appointed by the City Council to confer with the county no meeting of the kind has been held. Is the county right of the grounds to be entirely ignored? Perhaps it is not known generally by the citizens of London that when application was first made to the Ordnance Department for these grounds for Exhibition purposes, that a verbal agreement was entered into between the City and County that the lands should be held jointly, and the title was to be vested in the City of London, County of Middlesex and East-Middlesex Agricultural Society solely for Exhibition purposes. Possession of the land was obtained on these conditions, and the necessary buildings erected to hold the first Provincial Exhibition, which if I remember right was about 1854.

But the title was not made out until, I think, about the years 1868 or 1869 and then the city took the title in their own name wholly and gave the County and East Middlesex Agricultural Society a lease good only for exhibition purposes. Now, I do not wish to accuse the City Fathers of sharp practice in this matter, but believe that those in power at the time the verbal agreement was made had gone out of power, and perhaps new men came in who knew nothing of this agreement; but, Mr. Editor, it is not too late yet to right a wrong that has been done, and if new grounds are purchased I think the title of these new grounds should be in such a permanent manner that the county would not be at the mercy of the city, to be sold out again in a few years. The East Middlesex Agricultural Society have $6,000, which I believe they will be perfectly willing to appropriate to new grounds or buildings, providing the title was made satisfactory, or towards fitting up the present grounds if they are not sold. If they are sold, it seems to me no more than fair that the county should have a voice in the selection of new grounds. The vote of the citizens on Monday last was sound on that. I feel quite confident that if grounds were selected either west or south it would be a great measure destroy the Western Fair.

The immense crowds of people who attend our Western Fair would find great inconvenience in crossing the river; and ground selected eastward would be much easier of access than any other way. I hope the city and county will work unbiased in this matter. Both are deeply interested in the welfare and success of the Western Fair. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for this favor,

I am, yours truly,
AN OLD WESTERN FAIR DIRECTOR.

Grand Church Opening at Wallaceburg.

Special Correspondence of the Free Press.

The consecration of the new Catholic Church at Wallaceburg will take place on Trinity Sunday, May 23rd instant. His Lordship, Bishop Walsh, of London, will deliver a sermon at 11 in the morning and Rev. Father Mahoney, also, of London, will lecture at 7 in the evening.

A large attendance of clergy and prominent residents of Kent and adjacent counties are expected to assist at the Wallaceburg church dedication, and the various hotels have made ample preparations for the occasion. The steamer Hiawatha, of the Sarnia and Wallaceburg line, is engaged to convey visitors free, to attend at the consecration services. The Hiawatha will leave Sarnia at 7 a. m., calling at Gorunna, Moretown, Courtright, Bombay and Port Lambton, and make her return trip in the afternoon.

The dimensions of the New Church are—Main Body, 90ft. by 50ft., and transept 70 by 30; and that the same had been paid to the City Treasurer less $25 retained by him for his per-remance of the work from April 1st to Sept. 1st 1879, as directed by the Board in that year, the said amount being at the rate of $5 per month for such service.

READINGS AND RECITATIONS.—Mr. Alfred J. Knight, who made so favorable an impression when here a few months ago, gave his second entertainment at Victoria Hall, last night, before an appreciative audience The Shakespearean impersonations were unusually good, while his humorous recitations elicited great merriment. Mr. Knight succeeded in pleasing his audience thoroughly.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE—ENTRANCE EXAMINATION.—The midsummer examination for the admission of pupils to the Collegiate Institute will be held at the Central School in this city, on Tuesday and Wednesday the 29th and 30th days of June, at the hour of 9 o'clock a. m. each day. Intending candidates must have their application made at least five weeks before the date mentioned above.

The manufacturers of the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco invite the very closest scrutiny of its quality. The expert whose trained senses teach him to recognize the exact quality of tobacco, and the smoker who by his experience, in smoking it, will both agree to the same conclusion that it is of the very highest quality anywhere to be found. It is made of the very finest Virginia leaf and is manufactured with the greatest possible care.

DROWNED.

A Little Girl Falls into a Mill Race in Dundas, and Another at New Dundee.

A melancholy accident occurred in Dundas yesterday afternoon, whereby an interesting little girl, daughter of Mr. J. Crossley, of that town, met with her death in Messrs. Slaston & Stanley's mill race. After a search the body was recovered. The mother was almost distracted with grief when the corpse was brought home.

New Dundee, May 14.—The youngest daughter of J. G. Wing was drowned this morning in a mill race. She was aged one year and four months.

A New Haven Drug clerk orders a sh[illegible] whisky urn, and went to the store to buy himself. It was alcohol and he was burned to death.

HANLAN-COURTNEY.

Preparations for the Great Contest.

Sporting Men Betting Heavily on Hanlan.

Good Prospects for it Coming Off.

Courtney, the Champion "Sculler," Getting Down to Business—Hanlan Not so Confident—Betting Strongly in His Favor.

Washington, May 18.—The time for the boat race to-morrow has been changed from 3.30 to 4.30 p.m.

New York, May 18.—Neither man took any work yesterday, and the rest took the lameness out of the calf of Courtney's leg, and he looked first-rate this noon after his seven miles' "breather" on the water. No word of complaint of any sort has come from Hanlan. Ward had him out this afternoon trying a few spurts, while Courtney was here and there all over the course stopping the start, land, turn and straightaway. He pulled pretty pulling in his new paper boat, in which he will probably row, is 6 inches longer, 1 lb. heavier and a trifle wider than Hanlan's. Some fault is found with the course laid out for the race. It is, unfortunate, that a crook in it comes just as the racemen get under full headway. Until to-day a portion of the course near the turn has been obstructed by fishermen's nets, but the Washington managers of the race have succeeded in removing them by using considerable money, and the contestants were able to go over the full course this evening for the first time. The current is almost wholly caused by the tide and is said to be very slow, but it will be against the oarsmen on the return stretch, so that the second half of the race will be made much slower than the first. The first and last mile will be in channels. Hanlan's backers say the time will be better than 24 minutes.

A betting has been provided for the referee time-keepers and judges, and they will probably be accompanied by the President and members of the Cabinet.

Nothing has been discovered upon which to base suspicion that the race will not be rowed on its merits. The general belief is that Courtney will make this the great effort of his life. Failure of either of the men will not deprive the spectators of seeing the race, for Riley will stand ready to take the place of the one who fails, and he will give his opponent a very hard pull. If Hanlan and Courtney should row, Riley will receive $500. So many enterprising persons are erecting seats for the spectators that 15,000 eight-seats can probably be provided for in time to-morrow, the day of the race.

THE SITUATION IN NEW YORK.

New York, May 18.—The sale of pools here to-night indicates that Courtney is becoming unpopular with betting men. Saturday night's sales ran at 120 to 100 on Hanlan, Monday night's number of pools sold at twenty-five to thirteen dollars in Hanlan's favor, and one or fifty to twenty-seven. Hanlan was eagerly bought, but Courtney was not in demand even at these long figures. The rowing men seldom err in again to-day caused all the caramen considerable distress. Courtney said this morning that he suffered a good deal from heat, but when he came in and saw that Riley was as badly off as himself he did not feel so ill himself. Some one has an illness from which Courtney was reported to be suffering on Saturday night is attributed to his lack of nerve, and has done a good deal to impair confidence in him this evening. However, he seems on finely.

LATER DESPATCH FROM THE SCENE.

Washington, May 18.—The city is filling up with strangers. They are pouring in this afternoon by the dozen. Two or three days before the inauguration of a new President. The special attraction which is drawing here, however, unusual crowds of visitors at this season of the year, when it is not in Washington as an average 4th of July is in New York, is the impending heat race between Hanlan and Courtney. It is, in truth, the universal town talk even in the lobbies of Congress, and in the two Houses. Along the banks of the river from the aqueduct bridge at Georgetown, which is just a block or two above the starting point (2 on to the long bridge, 2½ miles, which marks the turning point, there will hardly be less than 100,000 spectators, including thousands on the two bridges. Hanlan is the general favorite. Nobody doubts that Hanlan will be on hand and on time, but there are some doubts still entertained of Courtney. Said remarks as these may be heard at almost every street corner:—"Will Courtney come to the scratch"—"They say his legs are sore"—"That he is troubled with boils"—"That his hands are blistered"—"That he complains of his head." The truth, however, is, that Hanlan and Courtney are in dead earnest to win that $6,000, if possible, and there appears to be nothing outside of this prize that will pay either of them for selling the race. It is due to Courtney, however, to say that he is in tip-top condition, and is fast gaining the confidence of all who come in contact with him, or who are witnesses of the splendid, sweeping pull of his two oars—not so quick, but steadier and stronger than that of Hanlan. Courtney, apparently, is the better man in strength and wind, but Hanlan is the lighter weight. Hanlan is the favorite, and he has never disappointed any gathering or brought around the failure of a race. That is a strong point in his favor. Every train to-day swells the multitude. A good shower is wanted to lay the dust, and it is probable it may fall ere long.

An immense excursion train from the west arrived at half past 9 o'clock, filling the hotels to their utmost capacity. Every available place in the city is secured for the accomodation of visitors. Among the prominent men here from Toronto are Messrs Brooke, Bennett, Gulkin, Mills, Kerr, Webb, Walker, Cameron, McDonnell, Duggan, Hamilton, Blakeley, Pinegar, Perkins, Matthews, Burns, Green, Grey, Gregg and Sheriff. The Montreal excursion has arrived. The train was composed of thirteen cars.

This morning a bet was made at the National Hotel by Gregg, of Toronto, with a prominent Washington gentleman of $400 even on Hanlan. Betting is very lively. Courtney has expressed his firm belief that he will win the race unless rowed in very rough water. The time set for the start is 27 minutes past three, but they will not start before five.

Washington, May 18.—All the preliminary arrangements for the great race to-morrow have been perfected. There is every indication that the contest will positively come off, and the race proves the grandest aquatic event ever witnessed in this country. Every train arriving is a note to each man this evening notifying them that they must be at the starting line at 4.30 p.m. ready for the word. Response was received from each that he would be there. The boat has been conveyed to the city. Both Hanlan and Courtney have been affected by it. The former did not appear upon the river to-day, but remained in the hotel and most of the time in his room. Courtney took a spin of eight miles this morning, and on returning declared that he never felt better for the race. On reaching the hotel, however, he complained of a headache, and retired to his room, remaining there the rest of the day. Rumors this evening said he was seriously ill, but his friends declare he will be all right in the morning, and positively start in the race. Every train to-day has added to the throngs already here, and it is estimated that 50,000 strangers will be in the city to-morrow.

Betting to-night opened 100 to 50 on Hanlan, and gradually fell from 100 to 86, and closed at 100 to 45. Sporting men are slow at invariably backing Hanlan, and are apparently prepared to wager almost any amount at the latter odds. At Willard's Hall, which was thronged, $15,000 was wagered; betting only ceased when no more takers could be had at the odds offered by Hanlan men. It is estimated that $75,000 was invested this evening at the various pool-rooms.

Another Pennsylvania Town Burned Down.

Conemaugh, Pa., May 18.—At three this afternoon a fire broke out in Robbins Bros. of store house. The town is without water supply or fire apparatus. The fire burned rapidly, and by five o'clock every dwelling and place of business in the town, except the Court House, Baker's Hotel, Man's insurance office and Journal printing office, were in ashes. About forty buildings were destroyed. Loss, $200,000. No lives are reported lost.

The Murder of John Ammens—A Mysterious Affair.

Gossoon, Ont., May 17.—The jury empanelled on the inquest upon the shooting of John Ammens met at 7 o'clock this evening. After the hearing of several witnesses the evidence of some being strongly against the prisoner, the inquest was adjourned until to-morrow evening. Deceased was the son of a farmer living near here, and was a peaceable and quiet young man. Prisoner is married to one of the daughters of the deceased. No reason can be given for the shooting.

The Grand Trunk intend placing a fast express train to run from Montreal to Chicago in 25 hours.

The Ottawa cabmen's strike continues. They are hurting themselves more than any one else. The Board of Police Commissioners do not feel inclined to make the further concessions asked for.

In Toronto owing to the disappearance of Private Detective Cunningham the cases in which he prosecuted for practising medicine without a license will be dropped. The first, against Amelia E. Taft, was discharged.

A trial was ordered Monday in the case of Campbell vs. Prince, warden of the central prison, for assault, the judges holding that the verdict was obtained by the misdirection of the jury by Judge Mackenzie.

In Hamilton William Elrington, a printer, for keeping a rambling house, and David Henry, James Henry, William McAndrew and John McAndrew, for frequenting the same, were up before the Police Magistrate.

Thomas Reid, a married man working with Messrs. James H. Pearce & Co., wholesale druggists, Toronto, has disappeared. He left his house at noon on Friday and went to work; at six o'clock he locked the shop up, and since then he has not been seen.

Mr. M. D. Williams, of Bowmanville, and Mr. Shilborn, of Darlington, shipped 100 head of cattle. They are a prime lot and were fed in the townships of Darlington and Clark. This trade with England is rapidly growing in that section of the country.

In Ottawa there was one burglary and two attempts at burglary since Saturday night. Five boys are under arrest for entering a grocery store yesterday, and a young man named John King for attempting to burglarize Henton & Livings' hardware store. The latter formerly served a term in the Kingston penitentiary for burglary and arson committed at Brockville.

The village of Lucknow can boast of a citizen who probably the oldest person in this section of Canada. Mrs. Ann Splan, who resides with her daughter in that village, has attained the extraordinary age of 106 years. She is of Danish origin, as was also her husband. The latter died at Goderich, about 28 years ago. Mrs. Splan has lived long enough to be pretty well acquainted with this world's affairs.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

TIMES ARE CHANGED.

Times may not be much changed in England, but the powers that be are very decidedly changed, and our sensible cousins across the lines say the change as redolent of pleasant times to come. President Hayes and Mr. Secretary Evarts are determined to have another shot at the Fortune Bay affair, and make another honest effort to bleed John Bull to the tune of that cool hundred thousand dollars, which the American fishermen lost by that Sunday evening's catch being interfered with, through the over-fastidious morals of the Britishers. The late Government would not look at the claim, but the present Premier may see its matter through different goggles, and if Mr. Evarts will only introduce enough of blustier, he will have a good chance of succeeding. The American Secretary understands well enough with whom he has to deal, and there is not the least doubt of his ability to handle the question adroitly, and make the most of it. It would be almost worth the money to have the pleasure of reading the rhetorical flourish of lofty and noble sentiments, with which the English Premier, should he as usual yield to all the demands, will endeavor to cover up his own feebleness and want of firmness of purpose. What beautiful thoughts eloquently expressed the world will be treated to, about people of the same blood and lineage, speaking the same language, heirs in common to the same glories as recorded in the historic page, the proud possessors of the same liberties guaranteed by the same constitutional principles, and actuated by the same exalted ambition to promote the progress of the human race in intelligence, morality, love of peace and peaceful pursuits. Who would permit a paltry consideration of a d. to weigh with them so far, as to array these brothers in blood and kindred in sentiment against each other in deadly conflict, and in the language of the Roman poet—to sharpen the sword against each other that ought rather to be turned against the bag and baggage on the banks of the Bosphorus! While Jonathan pockets the money, and brings one side of this face into harmony with these humane and exalted sentiments, on the other the leer of contempt for the verdancy of the party he had over-reached, might form an interesting study for a philosopher of the Lavater school.

The President's message laid before the House by the Speaker requests immediate attention to the correspondence between the two Governments, respecting what he is pleased to call the outrage on American citizens at Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, and with this message is transmitted a report from Mr. Secretary Evarts, which proposes a remedy for those imaginary grievances. The President refers to the want of accord between the two Governments in their interpretation of the articles in the Treaty of Washington relating to the fisheries. It is all right for the President to assume the possession of rights under the Treaty which, from the very nature of things, could never have had an existence, and while the American Government and Congress choose to hold the affair as still sub judice, they would be foolish to admit the inadmissibility of their claims. But the late Government of Great Britain refused absolutely to entertain these claims, and to receive the interpretation put on the clauses referred to, and now the President recommends the House to take the matter into their own hands, constitute themselves the judges of the spirit and the letter of the Treaty, determine the amount of damages they have sustained, and award to themselves the kind and extent of compensation they ought to receive for these losses. The President concurs in the policy laid down by Secretary Evarts, and recommends its adoption by Congress as a ready way of obtaining that indemnity to which he thinks his fellow-citizens entitled.

Mr. Secretary Evarts proposes as an indemnity, that duties should be levied on fish and fish oil coming from Canada, at the same rate as that which obtained previous to the Treaty of Washington, and that these duties should be continued until the two Governments shall have been brought into accord in reference to the interpretation and execution of the Treaty. The same astute party recommends the audit of the fishermen's claims against Great Britain for the injuries and losses they have sustained by the violation of the provisions of the Treaty, and a statement of all the grievances, real or imaginary, on which a money value can be placed. Should the Committee to which these documents have been referred report approvingly of these recommendations, and Congress adopt their scheme, another claim as large and quite as well founded as that of the Alabama affair, will soon be manufactured from the material furnished. However, should the United States think proper to violate one of the most important provisions of the Treaty, there need be no appeal to force in the matter, as the rest of the Treaty, at least so far as relates to Canada, may be treated as a nullity. The people of the United States will suffer more from an abrupt termination to our present relations than would Canada, as putting an end to the fishery clauses would throw the trade mainly into the hands of the Canadian fishermen, who would then extend their trade, and supply the American markets as well as their own; and if the people who buy the fish choose to put a duty on their own food supply, it is their own business, not ours. But we do not anticipate any such action on the part of the American Congress. They understand the advantages they enjoy under the provisions of this treaty as well as we do, and though they may talk big with the hope of making it another Alabama case, yet they will recollect Dallis Nicol Jarvis's advice, and not stretch out their arm any further than they can draw it back with ease. Their only real hope lies in being able to frighten Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues, but these are so committed to a vigorous policy that the prospect is not so bright as it would be under ordinary circumstances.

WAR ON THE DOGS.

In a few days the dog catchers will be on their rounds, laying the snare for vagrant animals. For this duty they will be provided with nets, in which, when once caught, there will be no escape. The prisoners will be taken to a pound, yet to be located, where they will remain for an allotted time, at the end of which, if not redeemed by their owners, they will be put to the sacrifice. So long as attention is confined to ownerless and worthless dogs, the work in hand will be appreciated by the community in proportion as it is effective and vigorous. But the men employed at this service will need to use much caution in their operations, to avoid unpleasant familiarities, if not scandalizing contre temps. It will be well to bear in mind that the canine race of to-day is very different from what it was a few years ago, when ninety per cent. of it was made up of "stranger curs" of no particular lineage. Of late the breed has risen in public esteem, and even attained to high commercial and social consideration. At a fair estimate about one half the dogs of the city are owned by indulgent and affectionate masters, or mistresses, whose matrimonial rest and garden rose are alike relinquished without a pang to the noisy chorus and frisky gambols of their pets. A nest of rackable, well-bred puppies having the good-will and interest of a kind master, as well as the free run of his latinos and onion beds, and the privilege of the refrigerator, is not to be molested with impunity or carried off in a Balch and Swinburne, of Albany, because they had not found and wired a piece of bone which he claimed was essential to their well-being and comfort, and which through the head. The experts were made to destroy each other in a very effective manner. The verdict was inevitable. The trial has not tended to enhance the value of round expert testimony.

Mr. Holman Hunt lately read before the Society of Arts, in London, a paper which is likely to have an important influence on the art of painting. The subject of his discourse was artists' materials. The purpose was to show the vital importance to art of a thorough chemical knowledge in the selection of his materials, and how properly to use them. Mr. Hunt explained that the old masters were chemists as well as painters. They understood the chemical qualities of their materials, and how best to prepare their canvases and their colors. To this fact is due the remarkable permanency or preservation of their colors. The earlier works of the Van Eycks were universally lost, for no animal of the reputed intelligence of the dog will long support a badge of mere tolerance, if he suspects it is a mark also of degradation. Nor would it serve as a protection if carried in the vest pocket. To be an efficacious talisman, the tag must be exhibited to the world. And if that is lost, the last state of the poor animal is worse than the first; for the City Council refuses to renew it, so we are informed, and so the dog is bereft of the only means of safety. Truly, the men with nets will have to be guarded in what they do—for some owners of gallant dogs are not averse to law, even to administer it with their own hands.

The Director of Agriculture in France, in his report to the commission appointed to examine into the ravages committed on the vines by the phylloxera vastatrix, gives some very alarming information as to that insect's destructive powers. Out of 6,000,000 acres of vineyard one sixth has been totally laid waste and another sixth nearly so. The rate of the destruction increases with the area ravaged, and Mr. Tesserand predicts that, unless some agency is found to destroy the pest in ten years the production of wine in France will absolutely disappear. The Government has offered a large sum of money for the discovery of some remedy, but so far none has been forthcoming. It is thought that the virulence of the plague is enhanced by the weakness from age of the vines, and a faint hope is entertained that the introduction of fresh stock from America may avail to check the devastation. In some low-lying districts great relief has been obtained by flooding the vines, but it is possible to apply this remedy only in a very few places.

The London Times of Monday, in discussing the subject of the Alabama claims surplus, concludes its remarks as follows:—It is not befitting the dignity of a great nation to put quietly into its own pocket the money of which it was constituted a trustee for division among private individuals. A course at once magnanimous and satisfactory to the original, and as well to the present, owners of this money, would be for Congress and the President to expend their windfall of £2,000,000 in some enterprise which might result in the gratification of both nations alike. There is, for instance, Niagara to be redeemed from sordid associations. There are hundreds of grandiose projects which no Bourse might be willing to father, but by which the two great Anglo-Saxon nations might be benefited and made glad. Let the United States Government only let it be understood that it holds $10,000,000 in trust for some costly international luxury, and it will not be long before projects in abundance will be competing for the opportunity.

A matrimonial scandal is agitating the French Courts of Divorce and Parisian society. A. M. Santerre had reason to suspect his wife's fidelity, and, with the aid of the police laid siege to the Cafe d'Orsay, in which he believed she was at supper with the late Prince of Orange. The Prince's companion, whoever she was, made her escape by disguising herself in the clothes of one of the scullions of the cafe, and M. Santerre endeavored to prove that the disguised lady was his wife. He found it difficult to do so, however, as Mme. Santerre's counsel proved in court that the lady was too stout to get into the scullion's trousers which had somehow been secured. Her counsel made a strong point in his client's favor by having her photographed in the singular position of trying to put on the too scanty garments.

A novel method of heating railway carriages has been tried with success on the Paris and Marseilles railway. It consists in the use of acetate of soda. It appears that when dissolving it absorbs a large quantity of heat, which is given out as the salt crystallizes in the cooling solution. A "warmer" filled with the solution and heated to 212 degrees Fahrenheit, takes from twelve to fifteen hours to cool, and then only requires to be placed in a stove and reboiled a large quantity of heat which it will give out again as it cools.

THE BILLINGS MURDER CASE—VALUE OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

The second trial of Jesse Billings, the Saratoga Co., N. Y., lumber merchant, for the murder of his wife, ended on Saturday in a verdict of acquittal. At the first trial the jury disagreed. The case has excited widespread interest in social and scientific circles, and the most eminent counsel was engaged on it. Mrs. Billings and her daughter were sitting together in their parlor in the evening twilight, looking out of the window. Suddenly a shot was heard, and Mrs. Billings fell back, pierced through the brain by a rifle bullet. Her daughter ran screaming to the back of the house, when, on looking out, a man was seen to pass quickly behind a long pile of lumber, the top of his hat only being visible. Suspicion at once pointed to Billings as the probable murderer. On the former trial Billings showed by competent witnesses that he was not near his own residence when his wife was shot. But a Ballard carbine supposed to belong to Billings was found in a well near the scene of the murder, and this gun contained an empty cartridge shell. The prosecution endeavored to show that the fatal shot was fired by Billings from this gun. But there was a break in the testimony. Mr. Beach took advantage of this break and destroyed the force of the testimony altogether. The bullet which the Ballard carbine carries weighs 220 grains. The flattened bullet found in the head of Mrs. Billings weighed but 165 grains. Experts fired bullets through heads of subjects for dissection with a loss of lead, but the bullets passed entirely through, and rolled away or lodged in a screen beyond. The bullet which killed Mrs. Billings was partially embedded in the skull. Mr. Beach showed by his experts that a bullet fired from a Ballard carbine at so short a range that the discharge left unburned powder on the window would have passed entirely through Mrs. Billings' head, as demonstrated by the experts for the prosecution. Moreover, a bullet fitting a Ballard carbine could not be passed through the hole in the window pane where Mrs. Billings sat. The experts for the defence showed by experiment that a bullet made a hole larger than itself. These facts were ingeniously marshalled by Mr. Beach. He even threw doubt upon the indulgent and affectionate masters, or mistresses, whose matrimonial rest and garden rose are alike relinquished without a pang to the noisy chorus and frisky gambols of their pets. A nest of rackable, well-bred puppies having the good-will and interest of a kind master, as well as the free run of his latinos and onion beds, and the privilege of the refrigerator, is not to be molested with impunity or carried off in a bag without a struggle. Nor will the noble mastiff, or equally well-thought-of pug, be ruthlessly torn from the favorite doorstep without raising warm issue and unceremonious debate. It is all very well to say that the dog should have a collar and a number. That may do for the commonality or those who may be lucky enough to get the first show. The number is too apt to be regarded as a mark of the character and standing of the wearer in canine society ever to become very popular. "No. 1," it is likely to have an important influence on the art of painting. The subject of his discourses was artists' materials. The purpose was to show the vital importance to art of a thorough chemical knowledge in the selection of his materials, and how properly to use them. Mr. Hunt explained that the old masters were chemists as well as painters. They understood the chemical qualities of their materials, and how best to prepare their canvases and their colors. To this fact is due the remarkable permanency or preservation of their colors. The earlier works of the Van Eycks were universally lost, for no animal of the reputed intelligence of the dog will long support a badge of mere tolerance, if he suspects it is a mark also of degradation. Nor would it serve as a protection if carried in the vest pocket. To be an efficacious talisman, the tag must be exhibited to the world. And if that is lost, the last state of the poor animal is worse than the first; for the City Council refuses to renew it, so we are informed, and so the dog is bereft of the only means of safety. Truly, the men with nets will have to be guarded in what they do—for some owners of gallant dogs are not averse to law, even to administer it with their own hands.

A gentleman recently arrived from California, where he has been looking about among the mining towns, speaks of several places where the snow now lies to a depth of over one hundred feet. These places are generally at the heads of large canyons. At the head of Fall creek, Nevada county, pines and firs over one hundred feet in height are so buried in the snow that only a few feet of their tops are to be seen. Where a dark forest lies in the summer, there is now only to be seen a white expanse of snow, with here and there what appear to be clumps of bushes, but which are really the tops of the tallest pines.

In regard to the moons of Mars, the interesting fact appears that neither in rate of motion nor in distance from the planet is there agreement between the two. The phenomena familiar to an inhabitant of Mars must be very remarkable; the outer satellite remains above the horizon for two and a half days and nights, and the inner rises in the west and sets in the east twice in the course of the night. The lunar method of determining longitude must be singularly easy with such a rapidly moving satellite—it being, in fact, equivalent to the addition of a minute hand to the celestial clock, which in our case has to be read by the hour hand alone.

AN UNTRUTHFUL PICTURE.

The Globe draws an harrowing picture of a woman standing, with a baby in her arms, at the mouth of an "obscene alley" waiting for her husband, who has been employed in throwing mud out a street drain. Other pictures of the same kind follow, and the statement comes that under a system of free competition somebody must go to the wall. True enough. The writer then asks, "But what if the competition be not free?" and then comes a tirade against the National Policy, in the usual strain. If hapless women standing at the entrances of "obscene alleys" waiting for belated husbands were peculiar to Canada there might be some force in the illustration. But, as we all know, free trade Britain is full of such unhappy sights. The squalor of many parts of London, Edinburgh, Glasgow and other large cities is proverbial. It does not depend upon a question of sugar duties, or the presence of a system intended to foster native industry, so far as it is possible to do so. To charge the National Policy with being the author of squalor and want is absurd, seeing that it was present far more under the unhappy auspices of the Grit Government than it is to-day. There always was, and always will be, a certain percentage of the population who will gravitate to the bottom, let the financial or fiscal system be what it may. This condition often arises from accident. Sometimes from physical or mental disability. Often from ignorance, and not seldom from sheer idleness, and other bad habits. If individual cases were to be enquired into, how many of them would be found attributable to taxation now or that which prevailed in a slightly modified form, before? It is well known that the subsistentials of life are far cheaper here than in England, and that so far as clothing is concerned it is possible to dress in excellent durable Canadian-made goods which are entirely untaxed. To depict a woman with a babe, standing at an entrance of "an obscene alley" as the work of the National Policy is to suggest that which is not true. Experience has shown that the cheap labour and cheaper capital of England tends to obliterate many kinds of employment in Canada, and it has been to equalize those conditions, as well as to provide a necessary revenue, that the new policy was established by the unquestionable voice of the people.

The London Lancet calls attention to the danger incurred in the case of young girls by prolonged stooping over work and crossing of the legs. Dr. Matherbe, with the view of obviating these evils, has invented a plan which consists of fixing to the edge of an ordinary table a sort of cushion, on which the work can be easily fastened or spread out, as on the knee. A framework of the simplest description admits of the raising or lowering this cushion, so that the work may be done sitting or standing, but in either case the vertebral column is maintained perfectly straight, while the facility of change of position greatly lessens fatigue. To test the invention, Dr. Malherbe introduced it at the Communal School of Nantes, and with good effect on two pupils, who had a tendency to malformation.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Mark Lane Express Weekly Review.

London, May 18.—The Mark Lane Express in its review of the British grain trade for the past week says:—

The aspect of agricultural affairs is but little advanced since last week. Night frosts in many districts have checked the development of wheat, which is generally backward and frequently thin. Unless genial weather sets in speedily the chances of ultimate mischief to the crops will be considerably increased. Seeding advices are somewhat better. Although both in Mark Lane and in the Provinces the demand for English wheat was somewhat inactive, last week's prices were well maintained and even occasionally exceeded. The imports of foreign grain have been sufficient to meet ordinary requirements without swelling stocks. This circumstance and the unusual shortness in continental reserves have increased the confidence of buyers. If the price of wheat had not already fallen compara tively low, doubtless the trade would require all the support which extraneous influence could afford to avert a further decline being caused by the liberation of ring stocks in America and the increased imports consequent on the re-opening of Northern Russian ports. Of late, however, a strong undercurrent of steadiness is observable, and the opinion is gaining ground that wheat at the present range of prices can be safely bought for speculation or consumption. Holders have strongly resisted any further reduction, being encouraged by the slightly unfavorable crop prospects to active strength and influence. There undoubtedly has been no Continental demand under which the country is being rapidly cleared of cargoes at advanced prices. Red winter sold at 35s 6d for the Continent about the middle of last week. The turning point also appears to have been reached in the spot market, where the price of red winter has improved about a shilling per quarter. Maize on spot has been very firmly held, and a slight advance has occurred both in London and Liverpool, while a shilling advance has been paid for cargoes off the coast. Sales of English wheat last week were 70,796 quarters at 44s 8d per quarter, against 57,309 quarters at 40s 8d per quarter, for the corresponding week of last year. The imports into the United Kingdom during the week ending May 8th, were 1,014,-966 cwt. of wheat, and 155,440 cwt. of flour.

Church Livings in the Market.

Yesterday, at the auction mart, Messrs. Debenham, Tewson & Co. offered for sale the advowsons and perpetual right of presentation to two valuable church livings, one situated in the county of Essex and the other in Suffolk, both being at present held by one clergyman—the Rev. Frederick Eiwes, seventy four years of age—who is both rector and vicar of the parish of Gestinghorpe, in Essex, and also rector of Wissett, in Suffolk. The particulars stated that the net income of the Essex rectory and vicarage was £888. The rectory was stated to be a comfortable residence, approached by a carriage drive, with stable, coach house and other outbuildings, together with a good garden and grass paddock and glebe land, comprising an area of 131 acres. It was added that there was also an excellent farmhouse with numerous buildings, and a smaller house and buildings. The population of the parish was stated to be 771 persons. The net annual value of the Suffolk rectory was said to be £927. There were a rectory-house, with gardens attached and a coach house and stables, together with fifteen acres of glebe land, and the population of the parish was stated to be 185 persons.

The advowson of the Essex rectory was first offered, the auctioneer observing that it must be worth at least £10,000, and that as the population of the parish was small the duties could not be heavy. The advowson was withdrawn at £9,000. The Suffolk rectory was next offered, when £600 was the first bid. The highest sum offered was £940, at which price the advowson was withdrawn.—London Times, April 23.

Sponge Underclothing.

A Berlin inventor has patented a new kind of cloth, which consists principally or entirely of sponge. The sponges are first thoroughly beaten with a heavy hammer, in order to crush all the mineral and vegetable impurities so that they can be easily washed out. They are then dried and pared, like a potato, with a sharp knife, the parings being sewed together. The fabric thus obtained is free from all the danger which sometimes arises from the absorption of poisonous dyes into the system; it absorbs without checking the perspiration, so as to diminish the danger of taking cold; it is a bad conductor, and, therefore, helps to maintain a uniform surface temperature; it can be more readily cleansed than the ordinary woollen garments, and its flexibility diminishes the liability of chafing.

GERMANY continues to fortify herself on her eastern frontier. Not content with strategic railways and entrenched camps, she is building forts around the largest fortresses. For instance, in the present year around Konigsberg, in Prussia proper, ten forts will be completed, and an eleventh at Neuendorf will be begun.

THE Persians are actively competing with the Indian Government for the opium supply to China. Seven thousand chests have been embarked from the Gulf ports during the last season. Already most of the principal appointments in connexion with the Bulgarian army are in the hands of Russians, while as many as 700 non-commissioned officers of Russian nationality are engaged in drilling the troops.

Athenæum:—"The Poet Cowper's theological eccentricities were, without doubt, the result of disease acting upon a specially sensitive and plus conscience. It is needless to speculate upon the cause of that disease; its nature seems clear enough. It was simple melancholia, the most frequent of all intellectual disorders, a sort of mental indigestion, bearing the same relation to violent mania that dyspepsia bears to the acute diseases of the digestive system."

Saturday Review:—"Mr. Parnell's hand is unwoodily against every man. His Parliamentary function is to say 'No' to every motion that is not moved by himself or his friends. In his view, this is the only function that the home rulers can discharge with proper respect to themselves. They have not come to Westminster to help English members to do English business. They are there to convince English members that the only way of doing English business is to allow Irish members into a share of their own, and leave them to do Irish business there."

CHAPTER XXX.

SOONER OR LATER.

The cold and fever passed away, cured by rest, warmth, and dermicoct diet, only Mr. Didcott's saline draughts and daily scrutiny of the patient's tongue. Vyvyan was able to get about again, and Mrs. Morris was released from her night watching. But the master of Place was not the man he had been before his illness. Everybody in the household saw the change in him, and each commented upon it after his or her fashion.

It was not forgotten in that household how Vyvyan's father had fallen down dead in the mile strip one winter evening, after plaiting the last at an eighth dinner, and riding fifteen miles through rain and wind —a stalwart, healthy looking man in the prime of life. In this case there had been no warning; hale and vigorous to-day, and mastered for his coffin to-morrow; but in his son's face the old servants fancied they saw a prophetic look, the forecast of doom.

The master's horses stood idle in their stalls, or were exercised, when arrived at a stage of dangerous ferocity, by a groom; but Vyvyan went no more upon his accustomed round of inspection. Enoch and Barnard went over the naked hills, but he was not by to see. He sat by the fire in his study, idly skimming yesterday's papers, and waiting for his sentence to be fulfilled. He had made up his mind that he was simply to die, and life had lost all zest for him. He felt only the agony of regret at parting with the land he had loved so well and cared for so sedulously—the farms and the manors, whose catalogues was graven on his heart. The keenest sting of death was in the surrender of these—of these and of the wife who had never loved him.

He had suffered from an occasional return of the heart attack, sometimes in a stronger, sometimes in a weaker form; but let it come when it would, after a short interval or a long one, the character of the seizure was always the same—the same death-like faintness, the same dull ache of the lowering heart. The nature of the malady was unmistakable.

"My father had no such warning," Vyvyan said to himself; "I ought to consider myself favored. Yet I think if I were going to be blown from the muzzle of a gun, I would rather stand with my back to it, and let the shot come unawares, than enjoy the privilege of looking into the pan—a month for a week or two before my flesh and bones were scattered into space."

It was not only that these attacks were painful and exhausting when they came. The effect upon his spirits and his nerves was worse than the bodily peril. The physical ailment passed away, and left him, to all appearance, no worse than than before it came; but the mental shock was slow in passing. Vyvyan lived in horrid dread of an attack, and at every reviver seizure he told himself, "This is the end." Insensibility brought no sense of relief. It was like being dragged out of a river by the hair of the head, only to be flung in again a little later. Better to have been drowned, sad to have made an end of it, since the end must come sooner or later.

Sooner or later, that was the tune to which his life was set in these dark autumnal days. The old clock in the hall ticked "sooner or later." The same words sounded in the falling of the ashes on the hearth, in the sighing of the wind among the trees. Sooner or later!

"I had better make my will," he said to himself one morning. "It must be done, sooner or later. I've been an orderly man all my life, and I don't want to die with my affairs in confusion."

He sent for Jeremiah Cann, the Cameliot solicitor, who attended to much of his local business, and the two were closeted together for a long morning. It was just the old, not ungenerous. It gave to Leland to Mark, in the event of the testator dying without children. It gave the quarries to Priscilla, who was well off without them. It gave annuities to some old servants, legacies to others, large sums to costly charities, memorials of more or less value to a few old friends. To his wife the squire bequeathed his mother's jewels—which were disposed comfortably in the Launceston bank, and had not been seen by mortal eyes for the last twenty years—in token of his affection; and he renounced for his heirs, executors, and assigns all power of appointment over the reversionary interest in the Hallworthy estate.

He knew that Major Leland had been at Place, and he was still in the neighborhood, and might be seen from time to time riding a thickset brown over the moor, and riding like a man who held his life at a pin's fee. Priscilla had taken care to acquaint her brother with his cousin's visit; but she had not interfered upon the meeting between Barbara and her former lover. I was enough that Vyvyan should know they had met.

"And will meet again, no doubt," he told himself. "Why should I be angry or wretched because he is near? Can I part them forever?—for a year even? I shall be in my grave, and they will be happy together, before the world is a year older. I know that she will behave with womanly dignity and respect to my name. She will not marry a rudos hastily. She will not expose herself to scandal before marriage. She will do her duty to me dead, as she has done her duty to me living."

When he had made his will he tried to resign himself, or at the least to accustom himself to the idea that Mark would soon be master of the land, and sitting in his place. Mark had been a favorite with him. He spent his evenings in the gloomy old house, sitting by the hearth, with his famous liver-and-white spaniel, which was supposed to be a most perfect thing in spaniels, lying at his feet. He made feeble efforts to read the county papers, after devouring the local journals; but the drama of London life, political and social, was to him a far off and unsubstantial thing, that might have been a tragedy enacted in the planet Neptune. Mark's mind was essentially local. He could not push his ideas across the boundary line of his daily life, the figures which had made the sum of his existence from boyhood—his own and his neighbors' forms, his own and his neighbors' dogs. If he tried to picture to himself a foreign race course, he fancied the horses of a different kind from those that ran at home—half zebra, or with a touch of the camel. The merchants of Europe was to his mind a nebulous world. His only idea of strange lands was that they were inhabited by natives of a civilized, and could offer no form of life worth living.

The long autumn evenings at Place hung heavy upon the whole family. Vyvyan sat brooding by the fire; Barbara sitting near him, ready to talk if he pleased, silent when he was silent. Priscilla travelled slowly along the endless path of a Penelope's web in the shape of a wool-work border for a set of window-curtains, in which every water-lily was the labor of a week. Mark lounged exceedingly for some one who would play cribbage with him, or for a family circle sociable enough for all fours, or for a billiard table; and having none of these amusements, pulled the spaniel's ears, and yawned behind his limp local paper.

And all this time George Loland was sitting alone in the comfortable parlor at the Waterloo Inn, Romport, where the last of the honest land-sparked, and where he had the home to himself. He staid, though he knew that it was idle and foolish in him to stay there. He cherished no evil designs, he nursed no wicked hope; but life, blighted and maimed though it was, tasted sweeter to him while he was near Barbara.

Rapid Growth of Insects.

In twenty-four hours, as Redi tells us, the larva of the flesh-fly (Musca carnaria) becomes from a hundred and forty to two hundred times heavier. Lyonnet, drawing his conclusions partly from direct experience, and partly from calculation, says that the willow caterpillar (Cossus ligniperda), when ready to assume the chrysalis form, weighs no less than seventy-two thousand times more than when it issues from the egg. On reaching the image or perfect stage, insects in general cease from growing, and are often smaller than the larvæ. But the larva of an insect before changing into the chrysalis has laid up all the materials necessary for growth; an abundant fatty tissue surrounds the organs, of which no trace remains in the perfect state. It has all been used in the rearrangement of the various parts; and when the crisis is passed, the worthless remains are cast out. In some butterflies this matter is colored red; and when issuing from the cocoon, the spot it leaves on walls, stones or branches are so numerous as to make the observer fancy that there has been a shower of blood.—Chambers's Journal.

Innocent ignorance, says the critic, may, perhaps, be overlooked so long as it does not take the form of priggish presumption.

ENTIRELY REASONABLE.

I'll winter night fair Isabel;
I'll spring upon my knees an't tell
No girl is hard summer than she,
And that the autumn marry me.

An editor who thinks that he knows all about farming, says in speaking about strawberries that the best way to raise them is with a spoon.

Jones says it isn't the color of her hair that catches him in choosing a helpmate. The color of her money is what interests him vastly more.

It is no longer considered the thing at a theatrical performance to come back between drinks. Such acts are confined to theatres, whether the performance is of a three-drink or a five-drink play.

Sir James Paget says that science studies nature in her mechanism, art in her beauty. The latter is the opinion of Macaulay's saying that Hallam gave us history as a map, while Sir Walter Scott gave it as a landscape.

A western newspaper announces that "a young lady with a taste for publicity can in about six weeks decorate a room so fully that a visitor is bothered to know whether it is a parlor, a home or a farm-house."

"A drunken virago of five foot one is morally and sentimentally a more unpleasant object," says a critic, "than a drunken male being of six foot two; but she strikes less awe into the timorous beholder."

The London Spectator says that keepers of public houses have greater political influence than butchers and bakers, because the public house is a social centre where spirits and beer are taken on the premises.

At an English outdoor gathering a lady wore an entirely yellow dress, with suggestions of poppy red about it. The Princess of Wales carried a parasol with festoons between each rib, the festoons being covered with solapripied folds.

A clerk in a Dundas Street store recently asked for a half day's absence, because he wanted to attend a funeral in the country. When he returned the next morning with red hands and a freckled face his employer said:—"Where are the fish?"

"Now," said the examining physician to the unhappy pilot, "you must pick out all the reds you see." The pilot commenced by grasping the learned Professor's nose, which was worsted. "Now will do," said the Professor; "your certificate is ready."

"Is this my train?" asked a traveller at the Kansas Pacific depot before he was a passenger. "I don't know, but I guess not," was the reply. "If see it's got the name of the railroad company on the fifth, and I expect it belongs to them. Have you lost a train anywhere?"

That was a thoroughly characteristic and sincere reply which a surprised saloon-keeper is reported as making the other day to a religious worker who visited him in the place of business and asked him whether he expected to go to Heaven. "To be sure," he replied; "arm time; blime-by. Yeshua'll be there."

"Drinkwater is dead at last," remarked Jonesbury as he entered the house the other evening. "Oh, don't talk of him," said Mrs. J.; "but then his widow is left comfortable. He's well off, isn't he?" "He is now," remarked Jonesbury with an emphasis on the "now" that Mrs. Jonesbury didn't more than half like.

Canadian tradesmen who claim genius for advertising would listen to a Berlin grocer, who thus informs the public through the Borsen Courier: "My wife is now for the third time. This time a boy and girl. I entreat my friends and patrons to suppress all congratulations, but will worth its price, similarly, sausage and cheese."

All the good things of this world are no further good to us than as they are of use; and whatever we may heap up to give to others we enjoy only so much as we can use and no more. The German proverb of the day—"If I rest I rust" is applicable to the labor of the hand and the mind. Indolence is impotence, rest is rust.

No preaching is so effective as that of conduct. There is an intrinsic excellence in truth, by whomsoever uttered, that commends it to the hearer, but the best evidence of truth is its fruit in conduct. Actions speak louder than words and much more apt to be believed. The one truth which a man lives is of more value than a thousand which he proclaims in words.

The German papers tell this story in connection with Baron Rothschild's death: —A meeste B, weeping and sobbing aloud. Says A, "Why do you weep?" "Because," says B, as he blows his nose and breathes, "he was to his mind a nebulous world. His only idea of strange lands was that they were inhabited by natives of a civilized, and could offer no form of life worth living.

The Sixth Anniversary

Of the Women's Christian Association.

Public Meeting Last Night—Annual Reports—V. C. Baker's Address, &c.

The annual meeting of the Women's Christian Association was as numerously attended at Victoria Hall last night as in previous years, which means that the seating room was crowded. It was to be noticed that in numbers the ladies predominated, although the number of gentlemen was quite sufficient to give the alleged stronger sex an honest representation. The proceedings were of a most interesting character throughout; and although the temperature rendered sitting rather uncomfortable, the exercises were listened to attentively. Very Rev. Dean Boomer presided, and after devotional exercises by Rev. R. W. Wallace,

The choir sang "In God is Our Trust" with marked harmony.

The Chairman said the present gathering was in celebration of the sixth anniversary of the Women's Christian Association. An organization which, from small beginnings, had had a strong claim upon every citizen. The very spirit of Christianity was a disinterested benevolence, and he looked with little satisfaction on a religion which did not extend beyond self. In its efforts of benevolence, the Society had been most successful, so far as its means permitted, and he trusted that its objects would continue to receive the support which it deserved. There was a broad field for work. He wished to correct the impression that the report was of a mere formal character, and asked an attentive hearing for

The Secretary, Mrs. A. L. Nowcomb, who then read the following report:—

In turning over the pages of another year's history of our Association work, we find great cause for gratitude that so much good has been accomplished, and that with Divine direction we have been enabled to labor so successfully for the happiness of others. Six years have passed since we banded together as an Association. With the increase of years our cares have increased, and to-day we are here, not as idle dreamers, but as workers in the great harvest field.

THE WOMEN'S REFUGE AND INFANTS' HOME under our charge has prospered. Year by year we find it gaining in public favor, and the old feeling that its encouragement is fast dying away. The number of adults admitted during the year has been twenty-seven, which, however, mention fails to make a total of thirty-three who have received a helping hand. Of these twelve have been furnished with good situations. Nine have been restored to their friends, including one, who, having faithfully served her time, was with the utmost joy bade returned to England. Another is in Detroit earning a livelihood for herself and child; one was discharged for misconduct; one left dissatisfied; another is in the City Hospital, one silently took her departure and seven remain. As in the case of the institution we do not wholly lose sight of them, and from reports which have come to us, we believe others are endeavoring to do what is right. The Service Committee having engaged in the noble mission of proclaiming to those women the Gospel, testify that their labors have not been in vain. Two conversions have taken place and several others are enquiring the way of the "new life." The clergymen have willingly responded to the call in conducting religious service once a fortnight, and only two failures are recorded for the whole year. Mrs. Whitehead has now undertaken the charge of a Bible class on Sunday. In most instances we find the inmates kind and willing to do whatever is required of them, so with Fleming we are led to believe,

That there is no human being
With so wholly dark a life,
But that some heavenly thing the picture
May find some sunny spot.

During the past year we have received into the Refuge forty-four infants, and with the fifteen previously admitted make fifty-nine who have been under our care. Twelve of these were transients, nine went with their mothers, two were adopted into good homes, three were transferred to the Protestant Home, twenty have died, the whole number of those who were on hand fed, and clothed by the managers and nurses, and doctors in the Institution, the time and strength of the visiting physicians have necessarily been given gratuitously, as at the last meeting of the Association, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—"That in consideration of the unwearied and self-sacrificing kindness of Drs. Niven, Edwards, McArthur, Logie and Jones, shown to us by their attendance at our "Women's Refuge and Infants' Home," during the past year, and not wishing to impose upon their generous good will and precious time, be it resolved that we solicit the services of Drs. Lancaster and Campbell for the ensuing year, who, we are sure, will be very willing to take their share of the trouble and care attendant upon the exercise of this commendable charity." The Matronage of the Refuge has undergone several changes. Mrs. Barnes, who held the position for a long time, was requested to resign. Miss Fuller was next appointed, who gave entire satisfaction, and from her quiet manner soon won the love and confidence of the inmates. She, however, resigned her position in March last. Mrs. Flood then undertook the charge for one month. Miss McBride, of Toronto, was next chosen. She came in the latter part of January, but remended, and we think she is well fitted for the position. In the person of Miss Kenfrew, who has been in charge of the laundry. The total cost for maintenance of the Refuge, including salaries of matron and nurse, has been $1,190. As we have now decided to admit none from a distance, but confine this charity to those in the city and suburbs, the expense will be greatly decreased.

We have twice to record the first visit of Mr. Langmuir, Inspector, on the 2nd of January, who expressed himself well pleased with the institution, and recommended that a small Government grant be given. We would also mention that power has been given the Association by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario by the hands of Mr. McGiggilon for the Refuge; and just at the close of last year we received a similar grant from Mr. Wm. Davis for our room in Victoria Hall.

CONCLUSION.

We cannot close this report without returning grateful acknowledgment to all our friends who have continued to aid us by their sympathy, kind deeds and an open purse. To the city press we tender our thanks for many marks of attention.

And now as we enter upon another year we trust our hearts will be quickened to new endeavors, and that we may feel more fully the solemnity and responsibility of the work to which we have set our hands.

The whole is respectfully submitted.

A. L. NEWCOMB, Secretary.

The report was received with loud applause.

Mr. W. C. Furness sang "The Watcher" in fine voice, and was heartily applauded.

Mr. J. H. Flock submitted the Treasurer's report on behalf of Mrs. Pepin, showing the receipts to have been $1,345.97 and the disbursements $8,544.22, leaving a small balance. There were, however, accounts unpaid to the amount of $127.50. The mortgage on the Refuge amounted to $1648.75.

Mrs. B. B. Keefer then sang "My Bud in Heaven," a sweet little song, which was warmly received.

After an intermission of five minutes, taken up principally in a vigorous use of fans,

The second portion of the programme was opened with a quartette by Messrs. Sercaton, Hayes, Bapty and Colesin which was rendered themselves most creditably.

Mrs. Furness followed with a solo, "Morning Land," which she sang in her usual pleasing manner.

Hon. Vice-Chancellor Blake was warmly received. He hoped that at the next meeting there would be more than the usual reports, but more their adoption. He was glad to notice that the word "Association" had been brought prominently before the hearers, since it implied a great deal. It was the outcome of our common Father, of St. Thomas, who said no less than five carloads in one day.

The crops look well about here.

WINDSOR.

The admission examinations for entrance to the High School, commence 29th and 30th June, at Chatham.

The semi-annual meeting of the North Huron Teachers' Association will be held the 20th and 21st, in the school house.

Mr. James Hay, son of D. D. Hay, intends starting on a trip to the Old Country next week.

The grading on the P. D. & L. R. R., between here and Palmerston, was to be resumed last week.

Quite a number of trees have been planted in town, and yet there is room for more.

The Ancient Order of Foresters of this place will hold a demonstration on the first day of July.

GODERICH.

The annual meeting of the South Riding of Huron Conservative Association will be held at Exeter, the Wednesday, 19th, at 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of reorganization and election of officers.

What Goderich is worth. Real property, as per assessment roll, $1,040,655; personal do. $70,078; taxable income, $26 640; aggregate value of all property, $1,148,670; population, 4,328 persons.

Mr. McLean, of this place, is busily engaged in shipping cattle. One day last week he shipped over 80 head.

Mr. Robert Hanley, an old and respected resident of this town, died lately.

WINDSOR.

May 18—Joseph Haley and Charles Haley, colored, were accused by James Jackson, colored, in the police court yesterday of stealing his horse. The evidence showed that Jackson had sold the horse to the two boys, to be paid for in installments. They paid $1 and then returned the horse, which Jackson objected to. The boys were discharged, there being no ground for action.

Charles Cliff, editor of the Essex Review, was in the police court this morning to prefer charges against one Dr. Otter. An article appeared in a recent issue of the Review reflecting against Cliff, and he went to the office in order to obtain some satisfaction. He had a cool reception which angered him so that he used some very abusive language toward Mr. Cliff, who had Otter arrested. Squire Bartlet fined him, with costs, $6 35, which was paid.

John Lane, of Sandwich East, has a pernicious habit of selling liquor without a license. He has been brought before the police court repeatedly, but as no license fee could be collected he has served several terms in jail. On Sunday night two countrymen went into his place, drank liquor freely and departed. They returned later, broke into the saloon and stole some whiskey and the contents of the till. Lane wanted to prefer a complaint against the parties, but as he is an old offender against the excise laws it is doubtful whether he obtains any satisfaction.

STRATFORD.

There were 14 prisoners confined in the jail on the 15th of May:—Larceny, 3 males and 1 female; false pretences, 1 male; contempt of Division Court, 1 male; insanity, 1 female; vagrancy, 5 females and 2 males.

Stratford is going to celebrate the 24th. In the morning there will be boat racing, base ball and lacrosse; in the afternoon there will be games, such as running, jumping, quoit playing, &c. The 28th Battalion Band have been engaged to liven up the proceedings during the day. We advise everybody to come to Stratford.

Messrs. Oakley & Welch, assessors to S. Beattie, have opened a boot and shoe store.

The fire brigade salaries are as follows:—20 firemen at $15 each; 4 branchmen at $21 each; 1 foreman at $25.

ST. MARY'S.

Now buildings are springing up at every corner.

The Rifle Club have elected the following officers:—President, John E. Harding; Vice-President, Dr. McKay; Secretary and Treasurer, G. Stephens; Executive Committee, Lieut. Col. White, W. C. Mowrip, and J. Chalmers, jr.

Blanchard Court of Revision will be held 1st Monday in June.

The farm of Mr. John Berry, lot 21, 12th con. will be sold by Sheriff Gillarton, containing 100 acres, was sold under mortgage. Mr. P. Welhim bought it for $4,000.

SARNIA.

The water-works debentures were sold last week by M. r. Hayes, Esq., for 96½. This is very high indeed for town debentures. It shows that Sarnia is prospering.

Two or three cases of scarlet fever were reported in town last week.

Large quantities of cattle are being shipped to England from here. Mr. Mc-Intosh, of St. Thomas, shipped 150 on less than five carloads in one day.

The crops look well about here.

WINDSOR.

The admission examinations for entrance to the High School, commence 29th and 30th June, at Chatham.

The semi-annual meeting of the North Huron Teachers' Association will be held the 20th and 21st, in the school house.

Mr. James Hay, son of D. D. Hay, intends starting on a trip to the Old Country next week.

The grading on the P. D. & L. R. R., between here and Palmerston, was to be resumed last week.

Quite a number of trees have been planted in town, and yet there is room for more.

The Ancient Order of Foresters of this place will hold a demonstration on the first day of July.

GODERICH.

The annual meeting of the South Riding of Huron Conservative Association will be held at Exeter, the Wednesday, 19th, at 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of reorganization and election of officers.

What Goderich is worth. Real property, as per assessment roll, $1,040,655; personal do. $70,078; taxable income, $26 640; aggregate value of all property, $1,148,670; population, 4,328 persons.

Mr. McLean, of this place, is busily engaged in shipping cattle. One day last week he shipped over 80 head.

IRON.

New York, May 15.—Pig iron has declined some $10 or $12 per ton, and the market is much demoralized in consequence. This is partly caused by large importations from England and Scotland glutting the market. Some cargoes have recently been shipped back, an almost unprecedented occurrence in the history of the trade. It is not thought that legitimate houses will be seriously crippled by this set back, but outside speculators who hold large stocks will no doubt suffer severely. As I write there is a rumor that a large speculator in iron has gone to pot, but it is not yet confirmed. Many new enquiries for railroad and other enterprises, which will continue for many months to come.

One of the results of the low prices is the cessation of work by the Oxford Iron Company of Oxford, N. J. They claim that the ways they are paying are based on the high prices prevalent some time ago and that they can no longer produce iron at a profit. They will not resume work until some arrangement is made for reduction of wages. This is a very large concern, engaged in several branches of the trade, and employing 1,500 to 2,000 men.

INTERESTING RAILROAD DECISION.

From the Boston Advertiser, May 13.

The action for assault and false imprisonment which was brought by Ward McAllister, a Harvard law student, against the Old Colony Railroad Company, and decided for the defendant at the trial, was heard, on appeal, before Judge Bacon, in the Superior Civil Court, yesterday, and judgment was given for the plaintiff in $75 and costs, or about $200. The material point of the case was to determine whether a corporation, having agreed to carry a passenger over a through route at the reduced rate, less than that asked for transport to some immediate station, has a right to prevent the passenger from stopping at that station until he has paid additional fare. The decision by Judge Bacon holds that the company has no such right. McAllister bought an ordinary limited ticket over the Old Colony Line, from Boston to New York, and stopped at Newport, to which place the regular fare is 1.50, he started to go ashore, when he was stopped by the conductor of the company and not allowed to leave the boat until he had paid the 60 cents difference in the fare. He accepted the decision, and then brought the above action. According to the decision, it seems that a railroad or steamboat company can not lawfully prevent a passenger from leaving the cars or boat at any station when a regular stop is made for the exchange of passengers. The company may demand the difference in fare between the local and the through rate, and, if payment is refused, recover the same in a civil action, but have no other remedy.

THE BRANTFORD COTTON FACTORY.

Brantford, May 17.—The cotton mills of the new cotton factory now being erected by Mr Clayton Slater, of Craven England, upon the Homedale property, about one mile from the city, were visited this afternoon in the presence of about one hundred and fifty of Brantford's most prominent citizens, the ceremony performed by Mayor Henwood, who accompanied the act with a few well chosen words, expressive of the advantage the city of Brantford derived from the establishment of such an enterprise. After the Mayor had finished his speech, the party adjourned to an elevated plaiform close by, where a champagne lunch was had, a pleasant hour being spent in speechifying, etc. Among those who spoke were Mr. R. T. Livingstone and Mr. Aquilla Walsh, of Simcoe, and Messrs. Wm. Paterson, M. P., ex-Mayor Heney, Wm. Wells, sr., Alfred Watts, Ald. Hoyd, Wm. Buck, George Watkins, Wm. Slater, B. F. Fitch, J. H. Scratford, and Ald. Whittaker, of this city. To the many complimentary remarks, Mr. Slater replied in neat terms, thanking the people of Brantford for their kindness, which he hoped to show them was not misplaced. The factory is to be a very large four-story building, in which some two hundred hands will find employment. It will be a most important addition to the manufacturing industries of this city.

General Notes.

Ten car-loads of cucumbers left Savannah, Ga., for New York recently. Other stomachs will ache.

The rails used by companies within a radius of six miles from Charing Cross, London, would form a single line of 760 miles.

The Minnesota arrived yesterday with a cargo of Canadian goods for the Hudson's Bay Company—goods of that class which the company purchased in the United States before the inauguration of the N. P. —Winnipeg Times.

The new wool clip will be in the market in a few weeks, and there is considerable uncertainty as to future prices, buyers and sellers being from 15 to 20 cents apart. Some think that prices will be lower, the market for the past few months having been bolstered up previous to each clip. The demand for wool, however, will be active, and only a moderate reduction in price can be expected.

The boats are bringing in a small number of merchants from different localities along the river, whose purchases give the market about all the life that can be reported, and this is not much. The leading houses confess to some disappointment now that navigation is fully opened, but are not disposed to grumble seriously, there being a constant sprinkling of orders sufficient to encourage hopeful expectations.—Montreal Paper.

The New York Bulletin makes a compilation of crop reports which shows—so far as can be shown at this time—that the wheat production of 1880 will fully equal that in 1879. Iowa and Kansas will fall off, but their deficiency will be fully made up by gains in Illinois, Ohio, Minnesota, and Pennsylvania. If present promise shall be verified, this will be the fourth successive great grain crop in the United States—a continuance of prosperity almost, if not quite, without precedent.

1880. SPRING SEASON. 1880.

TO THE

Citizens of London and Surrounding Country:

This season we are showing a larger and more complete stock of Clothing, Hats and Caps and Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods than was ever offered by any one concern in America.

Our large purchases this season have given us a great advantage over small dealers. In fact, we can sell at lower prices than smaller concerns pay for them; and when we come in competition with Canada, we leave them in the shade both for price and style. When you buy a suit there for $6, $8, $10, $12 or $14, you get one with no style of cut; and as for trimming and making, the manufacturers of Canada think anything will do. A few weeks ago I went through several clothing manufacturing establishments in Canada, and was perfectly surprised at the old styles, the poor cut and make, and the fearfully high prices they get for them. I made enquiries about piece goods, figured on the price of making and trimming, and found that wholesale dealers made a profit of about 40 per cent. In talking to some of them about it, they said they had to sell on long time, consequently had to run large books and must have big profits. Now we pay cash for all of our stock, buy direct from the mills, and hire the best cutters and workmen that money can get, and turn out our work with some style, so that when a person wears our goods there is some comfort in them. As for prices, you can readily save the fare from London to Detroit. It will pay you to come and trade with us. Largest stock of imported and American Woolens for custom work in the United States.

PRESENTATION. — Yesterday Mr. Alex Campbell was waited upon at his new place of business—the Central Drug Store—by a deputation of clerks from Mr. Saunders', who made him the recipient of a beautifully illuminated address and valuable silver present. The address was read by Mr Slater. Mr. Campbell responded feelingly, and assured them he should never forget the days they spent together. The address was beautifully illuminated by Mr. Charles Ore.

REFORM MEETING AT MOUNT BRYDGES.— At the annual meeting of the West Middlesex Reform Association, held at Mount Brydges Monday, a vote of condolence was tendered to the family of the late Hon. George Brown. The course of the Hon. Alex Mackenzie during the thirteen years he led the Reform party in the House of Commons was approved of. The recent appointment of Hon. E. Blake to the same position was also decided to be in the interest of the party. The election officers was postponed.

TOO LATE TO WORK.— A couple of months since a man named Henry Patterson belonged to the 7th Battalion Band in this city. He subsequently offered a position in the Artillery Band at Guelph, and accepted it. Later on he tried to take his life, the assumption being that he was out of unsound mind. From what has since transpired it is believed his chief trouble is laziness, as he was unwilling to work when offered a good job. Last Monday forenoon he was arrested for vagrancy and sentenced to one month's imprisonment by the P. M. of that city, who said that during the fourteen years he had occupied the Bench he had not heard a case wherein a prisoner charged with vagrancy had admitted that he could find employment. In giving a term of one month he was showing leniency, but if the prisoner was brought on a similar charge again he would be sentenced to six months in the Central Prison. The case is one peculiarly calling for sympathy towards Mrs. Patterson. She is in poor pecuniary circumstances, and having a small child to attend to, will be prevented from seeking every kind of employment.

HOW HALL'S LEG WAS BROKEN.—The Cincinnati Enquirer, speaking of the accident to Al. Hall, formerly of this city, and one of the Cleveland nine, says:—"The game opened with a serious accident. Manning was first at the bat, and sent a high fly for three bases to the left centre, being a right field batter. Hotaling was playing well to the right of centre. He and Hall both started on the dead run, trying to get under the ball. Hotaling was called, but Hall did not hear it, and both met with full force. Hall was hurled with great force to the ground. Hotaling ran after the ball and fielded it in, stopping Manning on third. Hall was observed to be trying to get up, but fell back upon the ground again. The players gathered round, and it was discovered that both bones of the right leg were broken clean off half way between the knee and ankle. Two physicians went to his aid from the spectators. A few splints were improvised and the leg bandaged as well as possible while he lay on the field suffering great pain, but bearing it cheerfully and heroically. Then they carried him to the Club-house and an ambulance was sent for, which conveyed him to the Cincinnati Hospital for treatment. Last night he was resting well, and the broken limb had the appearance of getting on finely for so bad a hurt. Mr. Hall's fine physique will probably pull him out in a month or two, but he says he will never more play ball."

LOCAL NOTICES.

LAND BY AUCTION TO-DAY.—Manville & Brown will sell on the premises, corner Dufferin and Maitland streets, at 3 p. m., five choice building lots. This sale offers special inducements to capital. Do not fail to inspect. See advertisement.

When Beattie & Co. get up a sale, great bargains may be expected, as all their goods are of a very superior class. See advertisement in another column, and pay them a visit on Saturday morning.

TWO COTTAGES BY AUCTION TO-DAY.—Manville & Brown will sell on the premises, 209 and 211 Hill street, at noon, two medium-sized cottages. To parties seeking investment a good return is assured in rental, and as a home, a rare chance. See advertisement.

DERBY DRAWING.—The drawing of the eighth annual Derby Sweepstakes will take place at the Albion Restaurant this (Wednesday) evening, commencing at 8 o'clock sharp. Ticket holders should make a point of attending.

There is one live man in the city of Detroit who does not hide his light under a bushel. There are many large firms in the city, but he occupies six times the amount of room of any in his line of business. Fair dealing and good goods has done the business for him, and his store are visited by thousands daily. It is hardly necessary for us to say that we refer to Mabley, the giant clothier.

Our lady readers will be pleased to hear that Tees, Beattie & Co. are about commencing a great cost price clearing sale, previous to removal to their premises about to be erected on the ground recently purchased by them at 190 and 192 Dundas street, as noticed in our paper last week.

SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING.—Mr. H. E. Nelles, assignee, gives public notice that bids prepared to attend to all assignments placed in his hands for the benefit of creditors, with that care and efficiency for which he has been credited.

REMOVABLE.—Gilmour's underclothing in all-wool, merino, silk and balbriggan, with socks to match.—GARLICK.

Four "confidence operators" were arrested in Detroit on Monday night. They have been making that city their headquarters for two months past, and have quietly extended their operations as far east as London. One of them played the freight bill game on a farmer here a week ago to-day. They gave their names as Thos. E. Britton, W. H. Bryant, Oliver A. Wilson and Archibald McGillum. Two of them said they belonged to London, one to Toronto and the other to Guelph.

POLICE COURT—TUESDAY.

L. LEWTHWAITE, P. M., Presiding.

DRUNK, DISORDERLIES AND VAGRANTS.

Thomas Attwood, of abduction fame, had absorbed an unknown quantity of liquor into his system yesterday, and while wandering aimlessly about was jugged by a temperance-loving policeman for creating a disturbance in the City Hall Arcade. Discharged, with a warning.

Michael Moylan did not feel hurt by the accusation of drunkenness, but he wanted it most emphatically understood, that it took more than one policeman to arrest him. For this luxury he was assessed $3, and for raising a row in the cells, and smashing a door his taxes were increased to $5. Pending the arrival of his friends from the country he was committed to jail for fifteen days.

Billy Howard, the hero of a thousand drunks, made his record appearance this week. He pleaded hard to be allowed to go to the Hospital, but a sentence of two months at hard labor was passed upon him before his eloquence began to count. "All the hard labor," said Billy, as he left the court, "they'll get out of me, will fit into their eye."

Jacob Farwati, alias "Old Sassafras," a German near the extreme end of his three score years and ten, had been found in a back yard towards midnight, peacefully sleeping the sleep of the homeless and weary. "I vill gone oudt and sold vater grass and you let me go. Your Vorship, und coom no more py dis polees shoshun house," he argued with a strong Teutonic accent. He was old and harmless, his crime was a light one, and he bowed his white head in grateful acknowledgment when the P. M. said "You can go."

Mary McKiller, from Point Edward, a young servant girl, with more fruitiness in her composition than good sense, went on a little bender with Ada Gray, another maid servant, last night, and this morning they paid the penalty in a fine of $5 and a thoroughly breakable.

Grace Peters, the notorious Serogeantown, was sent down for two months in default of a fine of $6 and costs for public lewdness, &c.

Mrs. Epperson formed another of the procession heading towards the rail, but owing she hadn't the necessary wealth to pay her fine for drunkenness.

FIGHTING

M. O'Hearn was bailed to appear on Thursday to answer a charge of fighting on the Market Square on Sunday night.

THE LONDON PRESBYTERY.

Regular Quarterly Meeting Yesterday.

Business of Interest to Presbyterians in Western Ontario.

The quarterly meeting of the London Presbytery was convened in the First Presbyterian Church, Clarence street, at two o'clock yesterday afternoon, Rev. J. Mackinnell, Moderator, and the following ministers and elders present:—Revs. G. Dubbertsen (clerk), J. B. Duncan, M. Fraser, J. Rennie, H. Currie, R. Roble, H. Cameron, L. Cameron, J. M. Goodwillie, F. Ballantyne, A. Henderson, A. Fraser, G. Sutherland, J. Wells, R. McDonald, D. McEachren, F. McRae, A. Bremner, P. C. Goldie; Elders S. Milliken, Charlton, Craig, T. Gordon, J. Douglas, J. Campbell, W. Mullen, J. Gordon, S. Milligan, Cameron, A. McKay, A. McLean, G. Telfer, D. Duff, A. Brodie, J. Lawson and others.

After devotional exercises and routine business,

Mr. James Munro, the unfortunate blacksmith, whose troubles with St. Andrew's Church have been referred to from time to time, presented a petition, which, however, was not accepted by the Presbytery. A committee was appointed to explain to Mr. Munro the proper course he should take.

A call was presented from the Lobo congregation to Rev. Mr. Johnston.

Committees to examine the sessional records were appointed.

OFFERED TO A SEPARATION.

Rev. F. McRae presented a petition from the West Williams church protesting against the division of the Presbytery, to be transmitted to the General Assembly.

UNION OF CONGREGATIONS.

Rev J. Sieele presented the report of the Committee appointed to visit Centre Road and 21st concession churches in West Williams, showing that the division of this congregation from Nort-east Adelaide would be decidedly unadvisable. It advised cementing the congregation with those of West Adelaide and Arkona.

The Committee was thanked for its diligence, and re-appointed with the following additions:—Revs. J. B. Duncan and H. Currie, and Elder McCallum, who were instructed to consider the whole scheme of division among those congregations, and interview all bodies concerned.

Rev. Mr. Henderson asked on behalf of Mr. Whitmeter for three months leave of absence, with Presbyterial certificates, and that Mr. McDonald, student, be allowed to supply the latter's place. Granted.

ARREARAGES FOR MINISTERS.

Rev. Mr. Bremner was heard in reference to the amount due him from the Springfield and Aylmer congregations. The question has been previously before the Presbytery, and elicited considerable discussion in respect to arrearages generally.

On motion of Rev. A. Henderson, it was resolved that Rev. Mr. Fraser be instructed to lay the matter before the congregations, and report to the Presbytery at its next session.

SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS.

Rev. Dr. Cuthbertson (Clerk) read the report of the Home Mission Committee on supplementary grants to stations in the Western District, as follows:—Wardsville, $400; Point Edward, $200; Port Stanley, $150; Delaware, $1 per week until settlement, and $150 after; Hyde Park and Komoka, $150; East Williams, $100; London East, $3 per Sabbath; Manilamin, $200; Lucan and Biddulph, $100; Cormuna and Moorefields, $2 per Sabbath; Oil Springs, $3 per Sabbath.

The report showed a considerable reduction in the supplementary grants heretofore given to the stipends of many of the ministers. In answer to a number of questions, the Clerk explained the reasons set forth by the Home Mission Committee, for the reductions.

Rev. M. Fraser believed that the Port Stanley station would have to be given up. He urged the working up of the various fields.

Elder Craig, a representative of the South Dalhousie congregation, stated that it would be impossible for that congregation to pay the stipend of their minister, if the supplementary grant was withdrawn in the manner proposed by the report.

Various schemes were suggested to overcome the difficulty, the majority of those present addressing the Presbytery on the matter.

The report was, on motion, adopted.

A PATRON WANTED.

Rev. G. Sutherland presented a petition from the Walkerstown congregation asking permission to moderate in a call to that station, and guaranteeing a stipend of $700 per annum.

On motion, it was agreed that the request be acquiesced in by the Presbytery, and Rev. G. Sutherland appointed to moderate in the call.

The Presbytery then adjourned to 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SEDERUNT.

The Presbytery resumed at 7.30 p. m., the Moderator in the chair, and after devotional exercises the minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved of.

SESSION RECORDS.

The committee appointed to examine the session minutes of Knox Church, Camlachie, reported that the minutes aforesaid were carefully and correctly kept, but would beg to call the attention of the Presbytery to the fact that the session had agreed to expunge the minutes of session of the seven months' church—a proceeding entirely unconstitutional.

The report elicited a lengthy discussion, after which the following resolution in support thereto was carried:—"That the report of the Committee be received, and that the Presbytery enjoin the Session to note the irregularity and to suppress the minutes, as constituting an integral part of the Session records."

Several other reports of committees on session records were presented and agreed to.

Subsequently the resolution respecting the sessional records of Knox Church, Camlachie, was reconsidered and withdrawn, and the following substituted:—

Moved by Rev. Mr. Wells, seconded by Rev Mr. Goldie, that the report of the Committee appointed to examine the records of Knox College, Camlachie, be received, the irregularity pointed out by the Committee be noted, and that the minutes referred to as expunged be engrossed in the records of Knox Church, Camlachie.

Rev. A. Henderson then moved that the clerk be instructed to acquaint Mr. Symington of the action of the Presbytery.

The resolution was lost and the mover entered his dissent.

A CALL ACCEPTED.

Rev. Mr. Johnston intimated his acceptance of the call to Lobo.

Rev. G. Cuthbertson moved that the Moderator be instructed to prescribe trial subjects for Mr. Johnston, to be given in at the next session of Presbytery.

Rev. G. Cuthbertson moved, and it was seconded, that the next session of the Presbytery be held in the First Presbyterian Church, St. Thomas, on the third Tuesday in July.

In amendment, it was moved and carried, that the next session be held on the third Tuesday of July, in the First Presbyterian Church, London.

Rev Mr. McEachren applied for three months' leave of absence. The request was agreed to.

Rev A. Henderson, in view of the reduction in the supplementary grant to Komoka and Hyde Park, handed in the following:—"I beg hereby to tender my resignation of the Komoka portion of my pastoral charge, if I may be retained in Hyde Park on the terms of my original settlement there; if not, I pray to be released from the united charge as soon as the forms of the Church allow.

Rev. Mr. Cuthbertson moved that the resignation be received, and the parties cited at the next meeting of Presbytery.

The Presbytery then adjourned.

INSTALLED.—The following officers were installed at Victoria Lodge, No. 505, I. O. G. T., by Bro. John McCormick, Lodge Deputy, on Monday evening last, in Victoria Hall:—Bro. M. Scarrow, W. V. T.; Bro. J. McCormick, W. S.; Sister E. Hillier, W. T.; Bro. M. Hines, W. F. S.; Bro. W. F. Darch, W. C.; Sister N. J. Hastings, W. I. G.; Bro. Dr. Oronhyatekha, W. O. C., Sister Elizabeth Hastings, W. A. S.; Sister Louisa Emery, W. D. M.

AN EXCELLENT MODEL.—Mr. Paul Peel, of this city, son of ex-Ald. J. B. Peel, who has recently returned from a lengthy academic course in Philadelphia, has modelled a most truthful half-bust of the late Hon. Geo. Brown, in clay. Mr. Peel's genius will be appreciated when it is known that he had no other guide than the electrotype which appeared in the Free Press at the time of the late Senator's death, and yet the likeness is strikingly correct. In addition to several fine studies in oil, Mr. Peel has also executed a life size model in clay of a young lady playing with a kitten on her shoulder. It is unique and charming, as well as novel to most of our citizens.

How the people of Siloam is trying the patience and ingenuity of the Russians. The St. Petersburg manufactory of explosives objects to be turned out the grants in large quantities with the notice that in using them they develop the virtue of patience in all.

STEWARD AND MATRON APPOINTED.—The House of Refuge Committee at a meeting on Monday night last at Strathroy, opened applications for the positions of steward and matron of the County of Middlesex House of Refuge. The choice fell upon Mr. Archibald Ballantyne and wife, of the township of Caradoc.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Tuesday Morning.

The business men and others in the southeastern portion of the village are complaining of the railway facilities afforded them by the G. W. R. At present only two trains going west stop at the station in the village, and an effort is to be made to induce the Company to have every train stop.

About two months ago the Grange or co-operative system was introduced among the employes of the G.W.R. car-shops. Each week has added to the number of those who are favorable to the "new departure," until at the present time the majority of the married workmen are associated together for this purpose. So far the system is confined to groceries, which are bought wholesale in Montreal or elsewhere, the Company providing a store-room at the works and making a reduction in the freight charges. The grocers of the village already feel the effects of this change.

The residents of the village view with favor the proposal to hold the Western and Provincial Fairs at Queen's Park.

A number of parties in the East Riding of Middlesex who had neglected to take out licenses were before Squire Bolton yesterday, and after conforming to the law were dismissed.

On Sunday the dead body of a horse was discovered in the village, and Squire Anderson yesterday issued a summons for the arrest of the owner. Constable Nichols, after considerable trouble, ascertained the owner's name and served the warrant. The case was settled by the owner removing the carcase and paying the constable's fees.

The Dundas street merchants are, as usual, complaining of the dust, which rolls along the streets and into their stores in clouds. The only remedy is to accept of the rate offered by the Water Commissioners, and thus secure a supply of water which will serve the treble purpose of domestic use, fire protection and abolition of the dust nuisance.

The proposal to extend Rectory street to Queen's avenue meets with the approval of the Village Council. It is urged by the petitioners that the present is the best time to have the work done as only two houses will have to be removed. The English estate and Carling's farm lie to the north, and the owners offer to open a street through their property to the second concession if Rectory street, which is the south limit of the village, is continued through to Queen's avenue. The value of the property required for opening the street is about $1,700, and the buildings thereon, which could be removed, about $1,800 more, making the total outlay, if the work is proceeded with at once, only $3,000. A considerable part of this amount has already been subscribed, and an effort is being made by those specially interested to secure the balance.

Very few are aware of the number of improvements which have taken place in the village during the past year, and consequently surprise as well as satisfaction was manifested at the progress of the village, as shown by the report of the building operations published in yesterday's FREE PRESS.

Work is brisk in the G. W. R. car-shops, the employes being frequently called upon to work overtimes. At present a number of old-style conductors' cars are being repainted and fixed up for the use of excursionists.

The Egyptian Rite of Masonry.

How a Masonic Adventurer Humbugged Several London Brethren.

In the May number of the Orafteman, published at Fort Hope, Bro. Robert Ramsay 33°, the Supreme Secretary-General of the Sovereign Sanctuary of Canada, exposes the doings of an expelled Mason named Calvin C. Burt, who in company with D. D. Wilson, of Bosica, constituted a Rose Croix Chapter and made some worthy men 90° Masons of the Egyptian Masonic Rite of Memphis. After showing that Burt has been twice expelled by the Grand Lodges of New Jersey and Michigan from all the rights, titles and privileges of Freemasonry, and that Burt has imposed upon a number of honest Brethren in this city, and generally flown a bogus charter that cannot be recognized anywhere on the face of the earth, Bro. Ramsay, who is one of the best posted Masons on the continent, gives two reasons for saying so, and these are:—

"1st—The Ancient and Primitive Rite of 33°, the Oriental Rite of Misraim of 90°, and the Egyptian Rite of Memphis of 95° are duly under the control and jurisdiction of the Sovereign Sanctuary of Canada, established 1879, and consequently no foreign authority can possibly, according to the American Doctrine of Exclusive Grand Sovereignty, establish within its consent any Rose Croix Chapter, or any other body of any of these Rites within its jurisdiction. If any such Chapter, or Body of Prescott, Ont., Supreme Grand Master, being the only brother within the Dominion who will lawfully grant Dispensation for the same.

"2nd—Calvin C. Burt being expelled from Ancient Craft Masonry in two States after proof positive were read and approved of.

PERSONAL.—Mr. N. McKechnie, of this city, received the degree of M. D., from Victoria University, yesterday. The young doctor sails for Scotland, per SS. Sarmatian, on Saturday, and intends to spend some time in the hospitals of Edinburgh and London. On his return he will commence practice at Thorndale.

THE CONCERT AT SPRINGBANK.

A Disorderly Gang Mar the Pleasures of the Occasion.

Last evening the steamer Forest City left her dock at the foot of Dundas street with a fair sized load of passengers bound for the concert at Springbank. Quite a number of people from the neighborhood of Byron were already there, and the concert opened with a number of pieces from the local class. The singing was not as excellent as city concert goers are used to hear, but was creditable to a class which had not practised but a few times, and the members of which have not enjoyed the facilities for musical culture which the city affords. The second part of the programme was excellent. About forty members of Messrs. Freeland and Lacy's class distinguished themselves, and did credit to their trainers in a variety of choruses, part songs, &c. The singing was greatly appreciated by the small audience in despite of many unpleasant incidents which greatly marred and, with some, entirely spoiled the evening's entertainment. Boys, hobbledehoys, and many who have seen years enough to possess some grains of common sense, if they are ever going to have any, romped around the verandahs mocking the singers' voices, yelling "encore it," "Go it easy!" throwing fragments of various articles at the patient and efficient leader, pushing open the doors, pounding on the floor above the audience, and acting generally like a band of heathens. That was not the worst of it. The good hearted Byron folk had provided a generous repast for the London singers and stored it away in the small refreshment room. The "boys" found it out, broke open the door, cut the tarts, pies, and some of the cake and sandwiches, broke some of the dishes and carried off and wasted almost everything that could be found of an eatable kind. Chunks of cake were thrown around as if it was made for no other purpose. Of course, the singers got little or nothing after the concert was over. On the way home the festive youths behaved in a disorderly manner, and disgraced the entire worthy passengers. Certainly, if this kind of thing is kept up Springbank will soon lose its popularity with those whose patronage is worth encouraging. No one seemed to be relegated with the task of keeping order, and consequently order was not kept. Those in charge of the steamer and hotel proprietors did all they could, and most likely the blame lies with those whose parsimony caused the efficient staff of last year to be reduced.

THE HANDFORD CASE.

The Committee Declare their Pastor Innocent — His Resignation Withdrawn.

Special to the Free Press.

Toronto, May 21.—The Investigating Committee held its final meeting last night, and at seven this evening the evidence is to be placed before the Church and then handed over to the press for publication if they see fit. It is expected that resolutions will be passed to-night asking Mr. Handford to recall his resignation and occupy his pulpit next Sunday morning and evening.

From Our Own Correspondents.

Toronto, May 21.—The investigating committee in the Handford scandal held its final meeting to-night. There was a large attendance of church members. After the report of the committee had been read to the meeting, it was moved by James Farquhar, and seconded by William Iveson:—"That this church, having heard the report of the investigating Committee appointed on the 30th April last, hereby expresses its unfeigned thankfulness at the result which the Committee, through the statements and evidence, have unanimously arrived at. As a church we rejoice that not one of the grave offences alleged against our pastor have had the slightest foundation in fact, and hereby urgently request that Mr. Handford do at once recall his resignation and resume his pastoral duties, which have been temporarily suspended during the aforesaid investigation, and that this church pledges itself to active and earnest co-operation with him in all Christian effort." The resolution was spoken to by Messrs. Irish, Iveson, Robinson, Elgar and Wiley. A deputation then waited upon the Rev. Mr. Handford at his residence. On his arrival at the church the whole congregation rose and received him with unbounded enthusiasm. Mr. Handford replied in a speech of feeling and grateful thankfulness and great applause that could not be suppressed. He withdrew his resignation at the request of the meeting, pledging himself to more complete devotion than ever to the work of his future ministry. He regarded the vindication of the church as a divine call. He holds service twice on Sunday and immense congregations are predicted. There is general rejoicing amongst the members of the church at the result of the investigation. It has been conducted in the most searching manner, and Mr. Handford has been completely and triumphantly vindicated. All denominations will rejoice at this defeat of the tradiucers of a Christian minister. The utmost interest was manifested in the proceedings, and quite a number gathered outside the church waiting the result.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

London, May 21.—In the House of Commons to-day,

Sir Chas. Dilke, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, said the Government would lay upon the table the whole correspondence between the United States and Canada.

Lord Hartington stated that the troops in Afghanistan would gradually be withdrawn as soon as a ruler was selected whose authority was likely to be permanent.

In the debate on the report of the address Forster said he had no reason to believe that the Ins Horts would enforce their powers until they know the result of the harvest.

The report of the address was then agreed to.

GREAT BRITAIN.

AQUATICS.

London, May 21.—Boyd has challenged Trickett to row on the Tyne for £200 a side in the fall.

BRADLAUGH, THE ATHEIST M. P.

London, May 21.—Bradlaugh, appearing to-day to take the oath, Wolff (Conservative) opposed his admittance amid cries of order. The Speaker said the opposition is unprecedented, but Wolff must be heard. Bradlaugh was ordered to withdraw, which caused considerable uproar. Wolff said his opposition was because Bradlaugh is an atheist, and infringed the terms of the oath by his book entitled "Impeachment of the House of Brunswick."

Mr. Gladstone moved to refer to a select committee the question whether and upon what grounds the House has a right to prevent a member from taking the oath.

The debate on Gladstone's motion was adjourned after a protracted and warm discussion.

A FLAT DENIAL FROM BEACONSFIELD.

London, May 21.—Lord Beaconsfield denies that he ever uttered a single word attributed to him in the reports of his speech at the Conservative meeting at Bridgewater Hoome.

The Riley-Hanlan Boat Race.

Special per Dominion Line.

Washington, D. C., May 21.—Boating men and prominent citizens to-night formed an organization to arrange the details of the Hanlan-Riley race next Wednesday, referee to be chosen by contestants on Tuesday. Riley publishes a card stating that if Hanlan wins he will have all he can do. Riley promises that as far as he is concerned there will not be a repetition of Wednesday's fiasco. He says: "I shall do all that an earnest man can do to sustain the honor of the American flag. I mean business and shall pull to win."

Suspension of the Reading Railway

Philadelphia, May 21.—Strictest secrecy is being observed by the Reading R. R. officials regarding the transaction of the Company. As to the causes which led to the Company's embarrassment all agree it was the unprofitableness of the Coal and Iron Company.

LATEST FROM MONTREAL.

Montreal, May 21.—Eight hundred cattle arrived here last night and proceeded west this a.m. Two hundred and fifty were Swedes and the remainder from Great Britain and Ireland.

John Ford, a farmer of St. Luc, was drowned in the river near his dwelling in attempting to rescue a cow that had fallen in.

Charles Larkin, who was stabbed in a drunken row in Griffintown by, it is alleged, a man named Michael Dolan, died from his wounds to-day. Dolan is at large.

A scheme to erect a double track elevated railway, after the New York pattern, between Hochelaga and Point St. Charles is proposed. It is proposed to allow all railway companies the use of the track on equal terms, and that a fee of 2½ inches gauge will be used. The length of the road will be two miles, lacking a few feet. An application will be made for an Act of incorporation for a company for its construction.

LATEST FROM THE NOR'-WEST.

Winnipeg, Man., May 21.—Another death from scarlet fever has taken place at the immigrant sheds. This makes the third death from that disease in one family.

A man named Geo. Johnson, who has been missing for three weeks, had one thousand dollars in his possession when last seen by his friends. It is supposed that he met with foul play or has been accidentally drowned. He was employed at Cross Lake, on the Canada Pacific Railroad.

Drowned.

Walkerton, May 21.—A young man named William P. Fall was drowned near here yesterday afternoon while washing sheep. He was taking a swim after finishing his own sheep and becoming exhausted sank in the presence of all his companions, not one of whom was able to swim to his assistance. The body was recovered immediately afterwards.

The Sixty-first Anniversary

How Her Ms. Natal Day Will be Celebrated in the West.

You Pays Your Money and Takes Your Choice.

Monday next will be the sixty-first anniversary of Her Majesty Queen Victoria's Birthday, and as in the past, it will be celebrated in a becoming manner by Canadians, who earnestly pray that her life may be prolonged for many years to come. In London, of late, public celebrations have been the exception rather than the rule, and if we except the private enterprise of the Trustees of Queen's Park, this year's celebration will not differ materially from several preceding ones.

The usual cheap excursion to Port Stanley will no doubt attract a large number of Londoners to the lakeside. Those desirous of paying friends at a distance a visit, or witnessing the celebrations at other points along the lines of the G. W. R. or G. T. R. can do so to day and on Monday at greatly reduced rates, as the announcements in another column attest.

The steamers Victoria, of the People's Line, and Princess Louise, of the Thames Navigation Company, will endeavor to accommodate all those in search of a day's enjoyment at Springbank and the Waterworks.

The Queen's Park sports will begin at three o'clock. A good programme has been prepared for the occasion. The 7th Band will be in attendance during the afternoon, and a string band will furnish dance music in the evening.

The London Rifle Club will visit Strafford and shoot a match with the riflemen of that town.

The members of the Forest City Quoiting Club will play the annual match on their grounds, commencing at 8:30 a.m. The sides will be chosen by the President and Vice-President. An interesting game may be anticipated.

In the towns and villages throughout Western Ontario the day will be exhaustively celebrated, as a glance over the programme from the undermentioned places will attest:—

ST. THOMAS.—The Queen's Birthday will not be celebrated this year by any very grand display. The members of the Fire Department will turn out for inspection in the forenoon and give an exhibition of their forces. The lacrosse club will play a match with another club in the C. R. R. Park, commencing at 9:30 a.m. The Rifle Club will assemble at their range and compete for the club medal and Dominion badge, as well as for some money prizes. The Gun Club will have sweepstake matches at the Agricultural Grounds, and there will be rope walking and fireworks at the east end.

AYLMER.—The Aylmerites will celebrate the Queen's Birthday in a most loyal and enthusiastic manner. At 9 a.m. a series of athletic games and sports will commence, including a five mile foot race for a purse of $30. In the afternoon horse racing will be conducted by the Driving Park Club. A bazaar and art exhibition will be held during the day by the ladies of the C. M. Church, and in the evening a grand concert will be given.

INGERSOLL.—There will be no celebration in this town on the 24th. The Canadian Order of Foresters have made arrangements with the Great Western Railway to run excursion trains to Niagara Falls and return, taking passengers from Ingersoll, Beachville and Woodstock, leaving Ingersoll at 6.30 and 9.10 a.m. Besides the usual attractions around the romantic spot so adjacent to the Falls, there will be a grand lacrosse match between the Clifton and Toronto clubs, and in the evening excursionists will have an opportunity of viewing the Falls while beautifully illuminated by Barker's celebrated electric light. The fare for the round trip will be $1 50.

WARDSVILLE.—The 24th in this village promises to be celebrated with more than usual eclat, the sports comprising horse-racing, athelstic games, etc., for which suitable prizes will be given.

NEWCASTLE.—This village will also celebrate the 24th. A considerable sum of money will be distributed in prizes for horse racing, athletic games and for the best brass bands. The most amusing feature of the programme, perhaps, will be the Caledonian parade at 9 o'clock, for which an extra effort is to be made.

AYLMER.—Her Majesty's birthday will be celebrated in this place as usual. The amusement of the day will consist of horse-racing, athletic sports, Calithumpians, &c. A first class brass band has been engaged for the day to discourse music.

HAMILTON.—In addition to the list of sports announced for the 24th of May in this place, there will be a dramatic entertainment in Hodgins' Hall, and also a dance at the Centennial Hotel in the evening.

LUCAN.—The sports of the coming holiday in Lucan bid fair to be a grand success. Already several horses are on the course, training for the occasion, while several gun clubs have intimated that they will be here. The shooting tournament of the forenoon is the absorbing topic, and a very large number is expected to witness the part of the performance.

WOODSTOCK.—The Beaver Lacrosse Club have arranged to parade Woodstock with the list of games which characterize Queen's Birthday celebrations. Twelve Sioux Indians will battle with an equal number of Beaver ball tossers at one o'clock, and after that prizes will be awarded for horse and foot races. The purses are sufficiently large to tempt owners of good nags to enter the races. The amateur talent of the town will lend to the enthusiasm with their music.

NORWICH will not be behind neighboring towns. Calithumpians will parade in the morning, and two teams of the Mohawk and Six Nation Indians will play a game of lacrosse in the afternoon, to be followed by athletic sports. In the evening there will be fireworks, which, according to the advertisement, will be:—"winding up the proceedings of the day with a brilliancy never attempted before in this vicinity."

BRANTFORD.—The celebration in Brantford is announced to be under the auspices of the Caledonian Society and Cricket Club of that city. In the forenoon a cricket match will be played between a local club and an eleven from St. Thomas. At noon the athletic sports for prizes amounting to $200 will begin, and at two o'clock the "Excelsiors," of Brampton, and the "Brants" will test their relative merits as lacrosse players. In the evening there will be a grand military concert under the patronage of the Dufferin Rifles. The Brantford papers say it will be a "big day," and they ought to know.

IN STRATFORD, the amusements will consist of an athletic contest on the new fair grounds between the "Alliance" base-ball club, and the "Phoenix" lacrosse club. The trials of strength and skill will be as follows:—Base-ball match, throwing base ball, lacrosse match, throwing lacrosse ball, standing jump, running jump, standing hop, step and jump, running hop, step and jump, standing high jump, running high jump, standing three jumps, 100 yard race, sack race, walking match, 1 mile, three-legged race, wheelbarrow race blindfolded, three miles, go as you please, tug of war. The band will be in attendance. There will also be a rifle match between a team from London and the local rifle club.

ARNOLD.—This enterprising village will celebrate the 24th by a grand temperance demonstration under the direction of those who advocate the Scott Act. There will be speaking by leading temperance men.

GARDEN.—The celebration in this village will comprise, in addition to athletic games and other sports, a grand lacrosse tournament.

Alvinston, Ridgetown and Tyrconnel intend celebrating the day by horse races and athletic games.

CHATHAM.—The only town in this neighborhood that will celebrate the 24th is Clinton, and an extensive programme has been arranged for the day's enjoyment.

The day will be ushered in by a royal salute at 6 a.m. At 8 o'clock a grand promenade by the brass band will take place through the principal streets. At 9 o'clock a grand fancy dress procession of calithumpians will parade the town, in costumes of every description, and at 9:45 a.m. will assemble on the corner to receive their prizes. At 10 o'clock the athletic sports will commence. A number of good prizes are offered for the various sports. At 1 o'clock the races of the Clinton Driving Park Association begin. A spl

THE LAND REVOLUTION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The programme of the Gladstone Administration, so far as it has been set forth in the Speech from the throne, cannot but prove disappointing to those who have thought that Mr. Gladstone once in power, the many wrongs of the Conservative government in connexion with its foreign and colonial policy would be at once remedied. One needs, however, that the clauses of the Berlin Treaty are to be enforced in respect of Turkey. That the Transvaal is to be retained possession of in furtherance of the plan of South African Confederation, and that the pacification of Afghanistan is to be proceeded with. In other words, Mr. Gladstone consents to carry on and finish the work which Lord Beaconsfield began. This, together with the apologies to Austria, forms a complete back-down from the ground taken by the Liberals when assailing the late Government. Then one heard of the rank injustice done to the Transvaal Boers in depriving them of their territory and independence; of the terrible short-comings of the Berlin Treaty; of the importance of rectifying the Indian frontier in order to protect the great Empire in the East from contemplated aggression, through the medium of Afghan treachery. The exterior policy, then, of the Liberal administration will, thus, be little other than that of their predecessors. With regard to internal affairs the condition is much more critical. Indeed, time is asked during which to prepare measures suitable to the prevailing demands. These have reference, principally, to the compulsory compensation tenants for unexhausted improvements, the simplification and cheapening of land transfer, the prohibition of limited ownership in lands, and reform in the Game laws. This last has been already announced so far as ground game—hares, rabbits, &c.—are concerned, still retaining the more exciting sports of pheasant, partridge and grouse shooting for the favored ones of the earth. A sop has been thrown out to the Protestant Dissenters in relation to the Burials Bill, which may tend to allay the irritation they feel at the appointment of Lord Ripon to the Viceroyalty of India. The experiment of dispensing with the Coercion Act in Ireland is one well worth trying, for though much excitement still exists there, it can scarcely be supposed that the population will not soon regain its equilibrium, and that the ordinary conditions of society will be restored. At the same time it is pretty clear that Parnellism, pure and simple, has little chance in the new Parliament. Mr. Power's amendment declaring the urgency of immediate legislation for Ireland was defeated by 300 to 47, while Mr. Parnell's panacea, the temporary suspension of eviction, obtained the go by. Indeed, if the whole condition of the land tenure in Ireland is to be changed, if the property in the soil is to be transferred from the proprietors to the people, it is clear that such a radical change in existing institutions and prevailing rights should not be dealt with in haste. For it is evident that if the population in Ireland have an inherent right in the soil, so has that of England and of Scotland. If land is to be treated on a different basis from all other property, in view of its being the chief source of the sustenance of life, the Englishman and the Scotsman have rights equal to the Irishman respecting it. It will not take much consideration to arrive at the conclusion that a question of such a nature must be approached cautiously. No doubt many tenants in Ireland would be very glad to become de facto the owners of the soil. So, too, would tenants elsewhere, whose toil leaves so much to the benefit of the landlords. But though the Liberal party contains within it those who are bent upon an attack on rights, vested in land, and the forcible dispossession of the proprietors, it comprises also a strong conservative element, of which the old Whig aristocracy may be taken as the buttress and bulwark. The day may come in Ireland, and in England too, when the land will be held for the people in common rather than by individuals and families. Yet it can scarcely be doubted that such a fundamental change could not be brought about except as the result of a fierce, all-searching revolution. After all, the people of the British Isles will have to look more and more to this continent for food. The competition is so strong that it cannot be hoped that the English lands can be made to compete against the teeming acres of the West, except by the increased application of capital. But if those that have capital are to be deposed, what will become of the lands?

CROTCHETY STATESMEN.

Some surprise has been expressed that Mr. Stansfeld has been left out of the new English Government. The reason, however, is well known. Mr. Stansfeld had connected himself with so many of the crotchety agitations which disturb the surface of political life that he had become impossible. He is not only an advocate of woman's rights in the widest sense, but is strongly opposed to acts the carrying out of which has done so much to mitigate disease among soldiers, sailors, and dockyard laborers. In this country the crotchety agitation is equally at a discount. What we really want in Canada is not so much disturbing utterances, such as were once heard at Aurora, but sound, practical legislation leading to the development of the resources of the country.

Of all the epidemics which have ever appeared in Russia, diphtheria is the most destructive. This will be readily perceived by the following statistics of epidemic diseases in Russia in 1877 appearing in the report of the Russian Medical department for that year:—Small-pox—Persons attacked, 10,287, deaths, 2,639; scarlatina—persons attacked, 25,733, deaths, 6,439; diphtheria—persons attacked, 46,136; deaths, 18,698; measles—persons attacked, 45,925; deaths, 5,912; typhus—persons attacked, 60,445; deaths, 8,666; whooping cough—persons attacked, 11,775; deaths, 639; dysentery—persons attacked, 13,209; deaths, 1,956. These numbers are irrespective of army cases. Thus, according to this statement, the deaths from small-pox were 25.5 per cent.; from scarlatina, 25 per cent.; from measles, 12.8 per cent.; from typhus, 11.3 per cent.; from dysentery, 9.5 per cent.; from whooping cough; 5.1 per cent.; and from diphtheria, more than 40 per cent.

The lord chief justice of England has decided that, if a vessel should proceed out of her course, and suffer partial or total loss, in helping to save only the goods, or merely to assist or save a vessel, the insurance will not be allowed. But if a vessel should deviate from her course to save life, and thereby suffer loss, the underwriters will still have to pay the amount insured for.

The Montreal Post says:—"We remember at this time of the year in 1876 that a procession of the unemployed paraded the streets of Montreal with the red flag, while at present we see a strike for higher wages. Facts are stubborn things."

The fashionable ailment in old London this season is measles, which has been a perfect epidemic amongst grown-up people this year, there being few cases amongst children. In Canada, the reverse has been the case.

THE BLOCK PAVEMENT.

The people of Toronto have at a public meeting adopted the cedar block pavement, such as used in Detroit, by an unanimous vote. The arguments leading to this conclusion were cogent and irresistible. During the past thirty years Toronto has spent $3,000,000 on Macadam and cobble-stones, which always sank into the mud, leaving the roadway no better. In the same period Detroit has spent $8,000,000, too, but look what the city has got for its money! Sixty miles of cedar block pavement and twenty miles of cobblestone pavement! It is found that the block pavement not only lessens taxation by its durability but increases the value of property wherever it is laid. People of Detroit say that it has increased the value of their property one-third in one year. It is in such favor in that city that in some streets where stone had been already laid down it had been abandoned for the cedar. It attracts business and traffic, because it does not produce dust, it can be easily and perfectly cleaned, it is non-injurious to horses' feet, and can be easily repaired. The experience of Detroit has been, that at the end of five years it requires repairing at the end of ten years, on heavily travelled streets it would have to be taken up and replaced with new, though on the lightly travelled streets it would not require renewal for fifteen years. To lay this pavement no planks and no tar is required. It is laid and held together with gravel, of which there is plenty in the vicinity of London of the best quality. No pools of water form upon it and it always looks clean and good. It is noiseless, smooth and firm. Cabs drive over it without jolting, and frail goods can be transported by waggon with less danger of breakage than on any other roadway. Besides, there are collateral savings of very considerable amount. The Toronto City Commissioner calculates that he will be able to save $10,000 a year, which meant the paving of 10,000 feet of street; he will save in the cost of watering the streets; and the citizens at large will save in the greater convenience and comfort secured. One of the speakers estimated that he was paying $25 a year for the present Macadam roadway in front of his property on Yonge street, and he was getting no value for it, but under the proposed system he would pay only $5.50 a year for the next ten years. It is not surprising that in view of such facts, the meeting came to the unanimous decision to go on with the block pavement at once. The only wonder is that any city claiming a live and intelligent population should remain without such a great public advantage when it is to be had so cheaply.

It seems that the process-servers in Ireland now refuse to serve processes on the tenants except on receiving a fee of 1l. for each process, and even then being escorted by a large force of constabulary. For the service of ten processes in one well-to-do village as many pounds were demanded, and must have been paid by the landlord had not his second son been home on leave from Aldershot. The young soldier, who was ready for a little excitement, offered to effect the service for half the money. Driving to the end of the village, where his presence excited no suspicion, he walked to the other end, where he accosted the owner of the first house to be served. "Well, Martin, have you been getting much relief meal?" "Troth, Master Albert, I am not gettin' my due," answered the worthy. In the corner of whose kitchen two full sacks attested the liberality of the commissariat. "Very well; you can give this paper to the parish-priest, and see if he can do anything for you," the volunteer process server resumed, handing him the paper, folded. Martin was profuse in his expressions of gratitude, and similar papers were handed to nine other grateful recipients. Just as the last was served, the truth burst upon one who had opened and read the folded process. The start out was lively.

A correspondent—a lady—who was present when the explosion at Monte Carlo occurred, writes:—

"I was sitting in the salle de reunion tranquilly listening to Schubert's "Ave Maria," played as few orchestras save Monte Carlo's could play it, when the audience was startled out of its placid enjoyment by a tremendous boom. Men started from their seats, women turned pale beneath their rouge, and there was a general flight. The mystery was soon solved. A small gunpowder plot had been hatched by some miscreants, with the purpose of taking advantage of the confusion to pocket all the loose coin that might be on the tables at the time. I went into the room as fast as I could. A number of women were sprawling in hysterics; a few others had really fainted, and looked ghastly through their powder; chairs were overturned, metal was burst into contortions, and mirrors were in fragments; there were bleeding croupiers carrying away the bank in hot haste; French women gesticulating and screaming, and English women pale and excited. Altogether I never saw a scene to compare with it in bustle, terror, and confusion even on the stage."

The Spectator:—The opinion in favor of the repeal of the insolvent act grew steadily for several years before the repeal took place, and it became irresistible at last. Both the leaders of the House of Commons were opposed to the repeal of it and yielded only when they saw that resistance would be of no further avail. To the state of public sentiment which existed the creditors were the objects of sympathy; the case of the debtors did not for a moment enter into the consideration of the question and the creditors were in a very exasperated state of mind over their losses. We were always of opinion that they blamed the law for a good deal more than it was responsible for, and that there was more of feeling than of calm judment in their demand for its repeal.

What does Hon. Edward Blake say to this paragraph in the Toronto Globe?:—"An English agriculturist of means who was induced by the flaming advertisements of 'free homes' and 'Kansas lands,' to pay a visit to that much lauded country recently, writes to Mr. Scully, immigration agent, of this city, under date of May 17th, as follows:—'I have been long enough in Kansas to form an intelligent opinion as to its value for settlement, and I am not at all favorably impressed with it. I am sorry that I did not take your advice and inspect Ontario before coming here. I intend to do so on my return to Toronto.'"

House-breaking is quite the rage in the larger London. Not a week elapses without a daring attempt of the kind being made, with more or less success and certain immunity. In less than a month two such attempts have been made by thieves who managed to gain admission to the house of Viscount Lismore. On both occasions the thieves were disturbed, but got off.

Hamilton Times:—We are glad to see a semi-official confirmation of the rumor that there is no probability that the Ontario Government will issue a proclamation to put into force the creditors' relief act which was intended by the Legislature to take, as far as possible, the place of the insolvent act which was repealed several weeks ago by the Dominion Parliament.

A few weeks ago the telegraph informed us that Spain was casting jealous eyes on Gibraltar. Little attention was paid to it at the time, but there may be really something in it, at least it is a rather significant fact that the English Government have ordered Malta and Gibraltar to be supplied with 100-ton muzzle loading guns.

THE AGRICULTURAL SEED TRADE

London, May 5.—The attendance of buyers on the market to-day was most meagre, and such business as took place was quite of the retail character. Small country orders for alsike, white, trefoil and other descriptions, still come to hand, which are executed at the moderate rates current. As regards American clover seed, increased firmness is observable. This is owing to trustworthy reports received from Canada, and also from the States, as to the poor prospects of our next year's crop. Moreover, the stocks remaining in this country prove to be very light. The depressed quotations now ruling for Italian ryegrass attract attention. There is a good sale for white Dutch runner beans; these are now extraordinarily cheap, while scarcities have suddenly become very scarce and much dearer. Hempseed sells at 31s per quarter. Sicilian canary seed, of handsome quality, is now exceedingly cheap. The supply of good blue pease is short.—John Shaw & Sons' Circular.

LIVERPOOL PROVISION MARKET.

May 8, 1880.—LARD—Market quiet, and prices 6d per cwt lower. Prime Western in tierces is now offered at 37s 6d per cwt, either for prompt or future delivery.

PORK.—There is a better demand for finest parcels, both Eastern and Western, and holders ask 2s 6d per barrel advance. We quote choice Prime Mess 67s 6d to 72s 6d. Ordinary Western 60s to 65s per 200 lbs.

BEEF.—The market is dull. Prices lower in tierces is now offered at 37s 6d per cwt, either for prompt or future delivery.

CHEESE.—The stock of Old is in small compass, and is being steadily cleared off at 70s to 75s. The few New Cheese which have arrived are of medium quality, but find ready buyers at 62s to 64s. Our market is very bare of stock and a good demand is expected for first arrivals of Fine New at about 66s to 70s, with gradually declining prices.

BUTTER.—American and Canadian is almost unsaleable, the demand just now being principally for New Irish and Continental, which is offered at low prices. Quotations for American are quite nominal, holders accepting the best obtainable price over about 110s per cwt for finest. Butter-line, in tubs, sells at 80s per cwt.

ENGLISH CATTLE MARKET.

For week ending May 8th.

London—Best beef, 8¾d to 9¼d per lb; best mutton, 10d to 10½d per lb. Without being active the cattle trade here was firm. Supplies were not large. A fair enquiry prevailed, especially for fine breeds, which commanded full prices. The sheep pens were not over filled. The market was decidedly strong, the tendency being against the buyer.

Liverpool—Beef, 6¾d to 9¼d per lb; mutton, 8¾d to 11¾d per lb. The supply of cattle to day was less than last week; of sheep rather larger. A slow demand for each at higher prices.

Glasgow—Best beef, 8¾ to 8¾d per lb; inferior and secondary, 6¾d to 8¾d per lb; best mutton, 11¾d to 12c per lb; inferior and secondary, 9d to 11d per lb. Ordinary supply of cattle at market this day, and many of good quality. Demand fully equal to last week's quotations for top sorts fully maintained. Of sheep there was a short supply, and generally of good quality. Trade is in demand, and last week's prices fully maintained.—Reported by John Bell & Sons, Glasgow.

THE SCOTCH LINEN TRADE.

Messrs. Armsted & Co., in their weekly report, dated Dundee, May 4th, says,—"There is no improvement to notice in the state of our trade during the past week, the tendency, on the contrary, being rather to increased quietness; and this, indeed, seems also to have been the case with all the chief industries of the country. The flax market for spot goods has been dull throughout the week. Prices are not much changed, as, in the absence of demand, holders do not alter their quotations. The jute market has maintained a quiet tone during the week. The demand for flax and tow yarn has been quiet throughout the week. Jute yarns are also quiet, with a downward tendency. There is now a quiter feeling prevailing in the linen branches, and fewer orders of any importance are being placed. Canvas is still dull. For jute fabrics prices are irregular and the demand is decidedly slacker."

BATTLING FOR BLUBBER.

An Extraordinary Catch of Whales in Providence Harbor.

Boston Herald.

Sunday morning a Herald correspondent at Provincetown visited the Cape Cod Oil Works. Entering the works where work is going on, the huge boiler under a drift boat of steam, the huge tanks greasing under the weight of whale blubber, we find the head of the concern, Joseph Atwood, familiarly known as "Jot." "How many whales have you received?" was asked.

"Since the commencement of this 'spurt' I have cooked fifteen, have the blubber of one humpback and one finback in the cooking tanks to-day, and, as you see, six just brought here, making in all twenty-three. The six on the beach were brought here since last evening."

"How many barrels of oil will the twenty-three whales yield?"

"About 840 barrels, and, besides, say 100 tons fertilizer. And you don't know how much glue."

Outside of the factory were the carcasses of eight that had been stripped of their blubber, and near the shore six leviathans, averaging sixty feet each in length, that will be "stripped." From the whalemen on the beach the following was gathered:—The day before a fleet of fifteen sail were off from Race Point to the Wood End, no toward Barnstable, was Saturday alive with finbacks, who, when the sun went down, left little head to the numerous whaling boats in pursuit of them. Sailing or rowing near them, the gunner would take aim and fire a bomb and the hand-lance he "turns fin out." Every one of them sinks to the bottom, riding, however, on the two, when they are secured. The number killed Saturday can be safely put down at eighteen, all of which are at the bottom of the bay, as the numerous "oil slicks" indicate. The school of whales Saturday is estimated at fifty, scattered all over the water of the bay. Numerous incidents are related, but no fatal accidents. One boat was stove, and several men were knocked overboard. Two fishermen, drawing their trawls in the bay, became alarmed at the familiarity of the whales, who were swimming around them with their mouths wide open, to get a good fill of food, a mouth large enough to take in a good sized dory, cut their trawls, and, grasping their oars, pulled with all possible speed away from the whales. Capt. Samuel Fisher and crew had a ride of two and a half hours before he succeeded in killing his whale. Capt. Robert Lavender killed four in succession, each bomb killing instantly. Perez Bangs "laid out" four of them, Capt. Higgins three, Capt. McCurdy two, Capt. Atwood two, Capt. Abbott three, Capt. Kelley two, Capt. Fisher went into a school of seven, shot three of them and harpooned one. Saturday evening the bomb lance dealers sold out their stocks, and could have sold more; their only answer was "plenty more on the way from the Vineyard."

The whalers taken to the oil works thus far foot up an estimated value of $6,000.

F. C. Barnard:—"To adopt the stage as a profession means to penalize the art of acting not merely as a pastime for one's self, and perhaps for the amusement of others, but only for the entertainment of the public, who pay the actor for his trouble, and so make his employment in their service furnish him with the means of living. 'Give me a song,' says the public to the actor, 'and I'll give you your supper.'"

WHAT IS MORE BECOMING than one of BELTZ'S latest style of Hats? There is none, in fact, there can be but one answer to this—Nothing. BELTZ is master of his profession, and full well knows he what to produce when he issues any new style. BELTZ'S HATS are things of beauty—they give joy to the wearer. They add grace to the figure. They brow they shadow. Poets speak daily in their praise. Gladstone may feel proud of his title of won on the English election field; but BELTZ should feel prouder of those won on the field of science and art.

Gold Flake Cut Plug.

ITS MERITS.

We claim that this is the best Smoking Tobacco ever produced in this country, and present a few facts to substantiate our claim:--

1. It is made from the very best selections of Bright Old Virginia Leaf.
2. It is absolutely pure, and entirely free from the noxious properties so common to other smokings.
3. It will not gum the pipe; this fact alone proves its superiority over any other tobacco made.
4. It burns free and sweet to the very last, and leaves no bitter taste in the mouth.
5. It gives a cool and pleasant smoke, and does not parch the throat or dry the tongue.
6. Its lasting properties equal that of any plug made, and being cut ready for use is much more convenient.
7. It does away with the thraldom of the knife and tobacco-cutter, and saves much valuable time and material.
8. It is put up in neat and convenient packages, handy for the pocket, and warranted to keep in any climate.
9. It forms a live coal in the pipe, and will keep its fire in the strongest wind, making it the best in use for sportsmen.
10. Its pleasant aroma and fragrant smoke makes it a favorite with the ladies.
11. It is superior in every point of ECONOMY, CONVENIENCE and EXCELLENCE to any smoking ever introduced Canada.
12. It is made by a responsible concern, which makes no assertions that cannot be substantiated.
13. It is put on the market at great expense, entirely on its own merits, and at so low a price that only large sales can give a fair return.
14. It shall be kept up in every point of quality and excellence so long as it is manufactured by us.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We would respectfully inform our many friends and the Tobacco-using public generally, that while we may seem to confine our attention largely to manufacturing the Gold Flake Cut Plug, that we are still supplying a constantly growing trade with all the various brands of Cut Goods, both Chewing and Smoking.

Our Globe Fine Cut Chewing, so justly popular in the United States, is also manufactured in our Windsor Factory, and having the same stock and material, as well as equal facilities, we make here, as in the States, the best Chewing Tobacco in the world.

The "Victoria" brand, known to chewers for the past twenty years in Canada, has been so improved by us that it is growing in popularity every day. We have also cheaper grades of Cut Chewing and Smoking Tobaccos.

The "Wig Wag," a common smoking, is also well known, and gives universal satisfaction.

It is expected that the Government will require all Cut Goods to be put up in packages of one pound or less, and we are now as rapidly as possible perfecting our arrangements to comply with this new requirement.

This new law, while entailing upon us an amount of additional labour, will be a great convenience to both dealer and consumer, and result in having our Goods reach the Consumer in much better shape than at present.

How and Where Our Goods are Sold.

We employ no travelers, and sell only to responsible Wholesale Houses. The saving of the cost of selling Retailers is given to the Wholesaler, who is thus enabled to sell at Factory prices,

We give below the names of prominent merchants who keep our goods in stock, and from whom dealers may order as they need—

Clippings from the Press.

Hamilton, May 29, 1879.

GOLD FLAKE CUT PLUG.—It is free from stems, and is put up in convenient shape. The flavor suits the palate of the writer, and the odour is, to say the least, less obnoxious to non-smokers than of most tobaccos. There is no bad taste or furring in the mouth even after smoking the Gold Flake to excess.—The Spectator.

Ottawa, May 31, 1879.

THE GOLD FLAKE is by all odds the finest article in the market, and, as such, we can have no hesitation in recommending it to all lovers of the fragrant weed.—The Free Press.

Port Hope, June 3, 1879.

GOLD FLAKE—The aroma of this tobacco is such that Those who always smoked will smoke the more. And others smoke who never smoked before.

GOLD FLAKE.—It is of superior quality, done up in tin foil, in convenient packages. Smokers will appreciate it.—The Daily Telegraph.

Parkhill, Feb. 26, 1880.

TOBACCO.—Indulgence grows upon the smoker, and we have been casting about for some relief to the thraldom, to the knife and tobacco cutter. We have tried the Gold Flake Cut Plug, and hereafter you couldn't coax us to use any other. It is fragrant, exhilarating, and not hot for the mouth.—Parkhill Gazette.

Kingston, Feb. 25th, 1880.

GOLD FLAKE—This is a species of tobacco made specially to meet the requirements of the Canadian public. It is a Cut Plug of moderate strength, and more pleasing than offensive in smell. We can recommend it, since we know just what it is.—The Daily British Whig.

L'Original, March 4th, 1880.

Tobacco as an article of consumption in this country has now almost become one of the necessaries, and to be able to furnish the public with a genuine article is quite a consideration. The Gold Flake Cut Plug Smoking Tobacco is fast superseding all others in use, as it has become a great favorite with those who are good judges of "the weed." It is made from purest leaf, and done up in tinfoil packages in a very careful manner, which prevents the slightest deterioration, preserving its original moisture and fragrance. Those who are in the habit of sending their sorrows curling into the air from a tobacco pipe should invest in a package of "Gold Flake."—The Advertiser.

Dresden, March 4th, 1880.

GOLD FLAKE.—We confess to a weakness for the weed—that is, we smoke—and also profess a horror of the stinking stuff that many people are in the habit of using, which, while ostensibly cheaper as related to quantity, is really the dearer article, in that the outsides are invariably composed of the coarser grades, the inner being composed of the residuum, cured in a liquor, the main feature of which is its adhesiveness. We can heartily recommend the "Gold Flake as a smoking tobacco, both as to fragrance and cleanliness.—The Dresden Times.

Brantford, Feb. 27, 1880.

A BOON TO SMOKERS.—There is nothing conduces so much to an enjoyable smoke as good tobacco. No matter how costly the pipe may be if the filling is not of the first-class quality the pleasure of the smoker is marred. The Gold Flake Cut Plug, although but a short time has elapsed since its appearance in Canada, has become a favorite with smokers. It is mild and pleasant in flavor, and it is not the least disagreeable to those who do not use tobacco.—The Daily Courier.

We had the pleasure of receiving a few days ago a sample of Gold Flake Smoking Tobacco, and if we know anything about the weed—and if we do not we ought to—our readers who enjoy a really good pipe of tobacco may take our assurance that they will find it to their advantage to give this brand a trial.—The Goderich Star.

GOLD FLAKE.—Having tried the sample sent, we are free to admit there is plenty of smoke in it. It has a mild and pleasant flavor, does not burn the tongue, and has all the lasting qualities of plug tobacco. We believe it to be an article of merit and destined to win the favor of lovers of good smoking tobacco.—Evening Journal.

Simcoe, March 10th, 1880.

We have tried a sample package of the Celebrated Gold Flake Cut Plug Smoking Tobacco, and have no hesitation in saying that it surpasses anything of the kind we have ever used, therefore we do not wonder that it is becoming a great favorite with Canadian smokers. All "lovers of the weed" should try it, and they will be convinced of its excellent qualities.—The British Canadian.

GOLD FLAKE.—We have received a sample of the Gold Flake Cut Plug, which we have distributed among our smoking friends, and they all say it is of the very finest braid. The price is also said to be reasonable, and, if so, the Gold Flake Cut Plug is bound to carry the day among the "epicurean" smokers.—The Pembroke Observer.

Guelph, March 6th, 1880.

We have to thank Mr. Saxton for a package of Gold Flake, which is first-class. It is greatly in favour in this section, and is largely taking the place of the old-fashioned plug.—Daily Mercury.

A Good Thing.

A manufacturer who spends the life in preparing for the market some necessity for humanity should be a good judge of the worth of the article that he produces. When he is devoting his energies to a legitimate trade, and his productions come into daily competition with those of many others, the value he himself places upon his goods may be well estimated by his confidence in putting them upon the market. It is now only one year since the Gold Flake Cut Plug was first introduced to the notice of smokers in Canada. But the manufacturer had full confidence in its worth, and was not afraid of letting people know that he had a good thing. A year of prosperity, where many predicted defeat, has proved that he did not over-estimate the value of his productions. One of the largest buyers in Canada recently remarked that "The Gold Flake is beyond question the best smoking ever introduced here, and its consumption will increase just as fast as people find out that it is manufactured, and have tested its excellence."

To do this the manufacturer is testing the value of printers' ink, that all who read may know that a good thing is being made especially for them.

Economy.

A gentleman accustomed to smoke cigars thinks nothing of giving ten cents for one and smoking it up [illegible] minutes. Now, for ten cents, He can buy a package of Gold Flake Cut Plug, which will fill a more than common sized pipe eleven times. Each pipe full will last an ordinary smoker a full half hour. In this way he gets five and one-half hours' of continuous smoking for his ten cents, or eleven smokes for less than one cent each. Again, for purity of material and excellence of flavor, there is no comparison between this tobacco and the common cigar, the Gold Flake being much superior. We claim that for rich or poor this is the most economical smoking in use. You can get more solid comfort out of your money in the Gold Flake Cut Plug than in any other tobacco made. Just try and prove the truth of this statement for yourself.

GOLD FLAKE.

It cheers the sad, revives the old, inspires
The young, makes weariness forget its toil,
And fear her danger. Opens a new world
When this the present fails.

The Best, the Cheapest.

The Dominion of Canada has a population of about four millions. There was consumed during the last fiscal year about seven millions pounds of tobacco, affording to the Government a revenue of nearly one and one half millions of dollars. It is estimated that about two in seven of the population uses tobacco in some form, which would give to each a little over six pounds and make him a taxpayer in supporting the Government to the amount of $1.20. The excise duty on manufactured tobacco is twenty cents per pound, and is the same on all grades. That which sells for five cents in bond pays the same excise as that which sells for fifty. The consumer who buys the cheap tobacco pays a much larger percentage to the Government, and also of profit to the dealer, than he who buys the best. Now, take into consideration the purest of material and its lasting quality, and you will find that in tobacco, as in other [illegible]

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 21—1 a. m.—Indications—For the Lower Lake region, higher temperature cloudy with rain.

THE POULTRY REVIEW for May—published by Mr. Jas Fullerton, Strathroy—is to hand, filled as usual with interesting matter regarding poultry and pet stock.

A RARE TREAT.—The world renowned violinist, Wilhelmj, will give one of his popular entertainments at the Opera House here on the evening of the 28th inst. He will be assisted by Marie Gilsrudi, prima donna, and the young pianist, Max Vogrich —both leading artists, whose names are familiar to our musical citizens. Keep the date in mind. Popular prices of admission.

MERRILL LODGE ELECTION.—The following officers were duly elected last Thursday evening in Merrill Lodge, No. 344, G. M. C., Dorchester Station:—J. N. Burdick, W. M.; R. T. Shaw, P. M.; William McKay, S. W.; W. H. Collins, J. W.; Samuel Wilson, Chaplain; Francis Chittick (re-elected), Treasurer; W. H. Shaw (re-elected), Secretary; W. E. Wilson, Tyler. The lodge is in a very prosperous condition, having paid the last of their indebtness on their new hall. There is a membership of 45.

BROWN VS. THE DOMINION SAVING AND LOAN SOCIETY.—Judgment was given in this case by Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, on Tuesday last. It will be remembered that this suit arose out of the fraudulent dealings of C. S. Jones, barrister, late of St. Mary's, the questions being one of agency and one of forgery, both of which were decided in favor of the Society and the mortgage held valid for the full amount. Costs to be paid by the plaintiff. Smith & Smith, St. Marys, for plaintiff; Parke & Purdom, London, for defendants.

BETTING ON THE DERBY.—The latest betting (on the 20th) against the principal starters in the race for the Derby stakes for three year old colts and fillies, which will come off at the Epsom summer meeting on Wednesday, May 26th, is as follows:—9 to 4 against the Duke of Westminster's chestnut colt Ben d'Or; 8 to 1 against C. Brewer's bay colt Robert the Devil; 9 to 1 against Lord Rosebery's bay colt Eroldtine; 10 to 1 against the Duke of Westminster's colt Muncaster; 100 to 8 against W. Taylor Sharpe's bay colt Valentine; 16 to 1 against Prince Bollyoff's chestnut colt Mask; 16 to 1 against Lord Falmouth's chestnut colt Apollo; 19 to 1 against John Gretton's chestnut colt Draycott; 20 to 1 against Naylor's bay colt The Abbot; 20 to 1 against Gerrard's bay colt The Dart Team; and 20 to 1 against M. Dawson's bay colt Fire King. There is no other betting under 40 to 1 against.

THE JUDICIAL MAY FAIR.—This festive gathering is taking place during the present month with a daily regularity that is worthy of emulation in other quarters. Savages of the invitations were only sent out the previous night and yet the guests presented themselves yesterday morning before the P. M. without a murmur. James Biddle was duly introduced, and after being interviewed on the propriety of remaining sober for the balance of his days, was allowed to bow his way out of the door. James Griffin apologized for the irregularity of his habits, and left to cool his parched throat. Robert Manly, the besotted relic of a once prosperous merchant, was sent down to the cells for a few days, in order to brace up for the formal levee. F. Muller, paid $2 for disorderly conduct, and left. James Baker, alias Betsy Baker, had been bailed to appear on the charge of stealing a pair of boots, but failed to show up. The bail bonds were ordered to be estreated and a warrant issued for his arrest.

THE DISORDERLY CONDUCT CASE.—On Tuesday evening last, as has been mentioned in these columns, a concert was given at Springbank, and a number of young men added very disorderly both at the hotel and on the steamer as she was returning home. Mr. Moore, the proprietor of the hotel, being desirous of checking disorderly conduct both on the boats and at the grounds, had eleven of the supposed disorderly youths summoned before Squire Peters to show cause why they should not be punished for their unseemly orgies. The examination took place yesterday forenoon, Mr. E. Meredith appearing for eight of the defendants. The evidence adduced did not establish the charge of disorderly conduct against any other of the accused persons, and from the fact that Mr. Lacey, one of the originators of the concert, swore that the young men, whom he could not identify, had simply forestalled the choral society in singing on the return trip, and that the songs were not offensive to him from a moral point of view, the Magistrate had no alternative but to dismiss the case against the defendants. Mr. E. J. Freeland, his partner in the concert, testified, however, in contradistinction to Lacey, that the young men were not conducting themselves as gentlemen are supposed to do, that they were singing boisterously, and cutting up in such a manner as to necessitate the removal of himself and wife from the portion of the boat in which they were seated. The Magistrate mentioned to the [illegible] evidence

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Hon. Senator Vidal, of Sarnia, is in the city.

Mr. H. P. Boyland, known to quite a few Londoners, has located at Winnipeg.

The Rev. Mr. Brethour, of Florence, has resigned for a time, owing to ill health.

Gas piping is being laid for the new lamps to be located at Kensington Bridge.

His Lordship the Bishop of Huron leaves this morning, for confirmation in Woodstock and Zorra.

The Rev. P. McLeod, of Stratford, has been called to the Central Church, Toronto, at a salary of $2,500.

The widow of the late engineer, James Riley, resides on York street in London. Riley was known to many Londoners.

The Rev. Mr. Seaborn, of this city, has been appointed by the Bishop of Huron to the parish of Thamesford and Lakeside.

Mr. S. C. Mallery and family, who left this city about six weeks ago for British Columbia, arrived safely at Victoria on the 3rd inst.

Mr. Thomas Ouellette, of McGregor, Essex County, ships weekly ten car loads of white oak timber to the car companies of this city.

The earnings of the Great Western Railway for the first week in this month were $87,419, an increase over corresponding period last year of $12,700.

The Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. of Ontario have made application to the Supreme Lodge for separate jurisdiction, to take effect on the 1st of June.

Eight prisoners were removed to the Central Prison yesterday by Bailiff English. Their numbers were augmented by three others from the west.

The Great Western Railway main line track is being thoroughly overhauled, and a large number of new ties are replacing those worn or partially worn out.

Mr. Thomas Haggest, of London, is trying to secure suitable premises for a foundry and machine shop at Brigden. His machinery is all ready to move in.

McCollone's old stand in Tilsonburg is to be fitted up as a bank, the managers of which will be Dr. McTaggart, of Parkhill, and Mr. Bailey Harrison, of London.

William Lewis, who was found guilty of manslaughter at the Norfolk Assizes, has been sentenced to five years' confinement in the penitentiary for killing Mike Donnelly.

Mr. G. C. Ellen has been elected Town Clerk of Woodstock, in place of Mr. Greig, resigned. The latter gentleman will receive $600 a year as a gratuity for past services.

The channel is being dredged with the new dredge of the Thames River Navigation Company, and an additional dock is being built immediately below the Gulphur Springs.

Mr. W. G. Marrin, of Parkhill, has issued a challenge to the Rev. J. B. Anderson, Evangelist, to discuss the subject of Spiritualism, the Bible to be accepted as authority.

Mr. James Ward, of Wardsville, had one of his three-year-old colts stolen from the field a few nights ago. The thief was traced as far as Bothwell, but has not yet been arrested.

It is stated that Mr. George Pearce, of the Beaver Mills, Wardsville, has jumped from Ontario to Michigan, his wife and furniture having been previously dispatched westward.

Nancy Ferguson, an inmate of the Elgin House of Industry, has been transferred to the County Jail. She is insane, and after medical examination will be taken to the London Asylum.

The disbursements of the Grand Lodge of Canada, A. F. & A. M., last year for charitable purposes amounted to $10,963.03, a fact which speaks well for the benevolent character of the Order.

The Parkhill Gazette, alluding to the Times's bogus prophecies in regard to political appointments, says it "has wonderfully active ears in this respect." None of your "dignaminious sarkasm," now.

The Catholic Church at McGregor, Essex County, is to be dedicated on Sunday, June 6th, services to be conducted by Bishop Walsh, of London, assisted by Rev. Father Gracé, of Amherstburg, and others.

In excavating the new nower trench at the corner of Dundas and Ridout streets the workmen came upon a section of the old corduroy road, and it required "fully a day to chop through the huge pieces of timber.

The steamer Victoria made her first trip down the river as far as Griffith's dam yesterday afternoon, and, in regard to speed, answered all her owners anticipations. The run was made in twenty minutes.

His Lordship Bishop Walsh, of this city, while officiating at Bothwell a few weeks since, suggested the propriety of raising the old church. The parishioners have adopted the suggestion, and the improvements will be commenced as soon as possible.

The Guelph Herald man apparently wishes to be dissected. Witness the following skit:—"Dr. Sippi, of London, in a rousing address to the Canadian, made a decided hit in the aria, 'Invoking Death.' Any doctor in good practice ought to be at home for inquiry. After a hard day's apology had been made, and a full conference of every method, with manoeuvred heads, the combatants shook hands and went home. This is a true story.

The Fraser House opening.

The formal opening of the Fraser House at Fort Stanley took place Thursday night, when a large number of ladies and gentlemen from London and other places participated in the ball and supper, arranged by the genial host. The spacious dancing hall in the new addition to the hotel was brilliantly lighted up for the occasion, and dancing commenced shortly before nine o'clock to the excellent music of the Italian Band. This form of enjoyment was kept up until near midnight, when the company were invited to supper. The tables were got up and decorated in a magnificent style, the new silver plated furnishings adding materially to the brightness of the scene. After supper, dancing was resumed and kept up until about one o'clock, when a majority of the guests returned home by a special train. While it was evident that the rain prevented many from joining in the festivities of the occasion, a telegram to that effect having been received from St. Thomas, there is no doubt but that a thoroughly pleasant time was [illegible] by all who had the good [illegible]ursion. NEW COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

The Fifth of the Prospectus—Mr. Carling's Efforts to Meet the Members' Wishes.

A copy of the prospectus of "The Canadian Co-operative Colonization Society," an outgrowth of the old Canadian Colonization and Aid Society, has been shown us. The object of the new Society is to enable persons of limited means to avail themselves of the opportunity which the free grant lands offered by the Dominion Government in Manitoba and the North-west Territory permits to any person desirous of acquiring a homestead. To accomplish this object, the society proposes to establish settlements annually, the funds necessary for that purpose to be raised by shares of $800 each, payable by monthly subscriptions of $5. The entrance is fixed at $1 per share, and ten cents per month per share will be charged to defray the working expenses of the Society. The prospectus shows the manner in which the proposed settlements are to be formed, plans and tables being annexed showing the method in which these settlements are to be worked. The business of the Society is to be conducted by a Board of fifteen directors, holding office for a term of three years, one third of the number retiring each year, and being eligible for re-election. From this Board a President, Treasurer, Solicitor and Secretary are to be chosen, the Board also selecting a bank and insurance office. The Society furnishes all the necessary implements, &c., which, of course, togeth[illegible] with all other expenses, will be paid for out of the anticipated profits. The Society does not ask for any special favors. The prospectus, which is a very lengthy document, dealing with the question very minutely, was sent to Hon. John Carling on the 24th ult., and by him laid before the Minister of Agriculture. The following is a copy of the letter received in reply from the Department of Agriculture:—

Ottawa, May 6, 1880.

SIR,—I have to inform you that your letter of the 24th ult., addressed to the Minister of Agriculture, together with the rules and regulations enclosed by you. In reply, I am to say to you that the general scope of your project is approved, and if carried into effect with such care and judiciousness, it cannot fail to be successful. Every possible facility that can be afforded to place your colonists on land will be, and every possible information given to them as to lands available.

"Mr. Carling mooted the question of reserving a township, and asked, if this were possible, that it should be done; but on this point I am to state that the policy of the Government is so decided not to make reserves in any circumstances whatever, that this request could not be complied with. All unoccupied Government lands must be kept open and free for the first comers. The utmost, therefore, that can be done, under the most favored conditions, is to afford information as to available lands, and, in some circumstances, guidance.

"I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

AN AFFAIR OF HONOR.

How two Students of a Talkative Profession Settled a Difficulty with Pistols.

They are both well known in the city. On Thursday afternoon a few words occurred between them on an "affair of honor," as they called it, and it was agreed to settle the difficulty after the French style of duelling. Each sought out a second, and the two latter held a conference to decide as to the time and place of fighting. The Toronto Base Ball Park was agreed upon and Thursday afternoon fixed upon as a suitable time for the sanguinary meeting. While the seconds were drawing up the necessary papers the principals quietly received to load the pistols only with blank cartridges, believing that both would be sufficiently frightened to call the matter even before the third round would have been fired. They further decided to teach the worst combatant of the two a lesson, and their choice of a full loaded Africa, this morning's edition. At the appointed hour the duelling party put in an appearance. The senior principal was secretly advised that the pistols were loaded with blanks, and his whitened face assumed a cherry hue as he thought of the joke he was having on the other. The principals were assigned to proper positions and at the word "fire," a solitary pistol shot rang out from the weapon of the one on whom the joke was to be played. He looked somewhat surprised when his opponent coolly dropped his pistol and drew a bristling Colt's from a breast pocket, and proceeded to calmly raise the nipple. This was a startling incident in the affair. "It must be a real duel, so far as he is concerned," he thought. His face whitened his eyes grew blue and cat struck at attitude, and his knees began to smite each other through fear when the arm came up to the present. "Hold on, sir," he cried, "give me a chance to change pistols;" but the smaller of the two never wavered. "Ready!" called the second. "No, sir—stop!—I am satisfied—I apologize," and the terrified duellist ran behind his second and roared for mercy. After a hard day's apology had been made, and a full conference of every method, with manoeuvred heads, the combatants shook hands and went home. This is a true story.

THE INQUEST.

Coroner J. R. Flock held an inquest on the body of the unfortunate man Arthur Brown, who died yesterday. The evidence of Mrs. Brown went to show that deceased had on one occasion threatened to take his life in the same manner as he carried out his intentions, it cannot fail to be successful. Every possible facility that can be afforded to place your colonists on land will be, and every possible information given to them as to lands available.

Methodist Church of Canada.

SECOND DAY—FRIDAY.

The meeting of the London district of the Methodist Church of Canada was continued in the Lecture Hall of Queen's Avenue Church yesterday, Rev. Dr. Sanderson presiding

The following young men, recommended by their respective quarterly meetings, were recommended to the Conference to be received on probation, viz:—G. Lounds, E. H. Royle, J. W. Sifton, W. G. Wilson, J. Pring and J. W. Saunby.

At 10 a.m. the lay representatives names were called and the following gentlemen responded.—S. Peters, A. Johnston, T. W. Foreman, W. Harwood, W. Orme, W. Warner, J. O'Brien, J. Charlton, Dr. Stevenson, Dr. Williams, S. Roberts, A. Kennedy, J. A. James, J. B. Lane, J. Franks, S. Hunt, I. Borrows, G. Willis, D. Elliott, J. Wroxton, R. S. Munson.

The financial, church, and membership returns were called for by the Chairman, and the remainder of the morning session was occupied in the examination of the several returns.

A part of the afternoon session was taken up in further consideration of the returns. In a few instances the reports were not indicative of prosperity; but the mass of the reports was of a very cheering character. The net gain in the membership was reported as nearly 900. The Rev. Thos. Colling, B.A., presented the report of the Scholarship Fund.

The report on the relief and extension was eminently satisfactory. The amount subscribed within the bounds of the district was $6,371, being more than $1,000 in excess of the district's proportion of the $150,000 to be raised in the Dominion. Of the amounts subscribed, $3,369 have been paid.

A small increase in the Superannuation Fund was reported. Total amount, $1,800. There was also reported $4,516 in behalf of the Missionary Society, an increase on this fund of $150.

The Rev. J. Philp, M. A., was elected to accompany the Chairman (Dr. Sanderson) as representative to the Stationing Committee.

Mr. Thos. McCormick was again elected on the Missionary Committee.

Rev. G. A. Mitchell, B.A., was elected to serve on the Sabbath School Committee.

Several cases of special affliction were considered, and recommendations for financial aid were concurred in. The readjustment of the work in Glencoe, Appin and Napier was a subject of discussion, and the whole question remitted to the Stationing Committee for final action.

A cordial vote of appreciation of the services of the Rev. Dr. Sanderson, as Chairman of the District for the past three years, was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

The District meeting closed shortly after ten o'clock.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

On Wednesday evening last Mr. George Shannon, who has been a resident of the village for some time past, entertained between twenty and thirty of his personal friends to a supper at Stanfield's Dominion Hotel. After the excellent bill of fare provided by the host had received due attention, a few hours were pleasantly passed in toast, song and sentiment. Before the party broke up Mr. Shannon was presented with a kindly worded address, expressive of the regret felt by those present at his departure. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Shannon, much to his surprise, was made the recipient of a second address, accompanied with a handsome gold watch-chain, by a few of his more intimate friends. Suitable replies were made on each occasion. Mr. Shannon accompanies Mr. J. S. Longhead, of Sarnia, to Cape Breton, where they will be engaged in sinking oil wells. Three wells were sunk by these gentlemen in Cape Breton on a previous occasion, the oil flowing therefrom being acknowledged to be superior for lubricating purposes to that produced here. A number of new engines and other oil-boring material has already been shipped from Sarnia for Cape Breton by those gentlemen.

The bridge over the creek on Egerton street has been down this morning, a gentleman driving across at the time narrowly escaping from serious injury. Constable Aldridge immediately notified Squire Belton of the fact, and orders were at once given to have it repaired.

An old resident of the village, who for some reason appears to be somewhat jealous of the exceeded success of the Africa, visited the residence of the latter, smashed the windows and otherwise lessened the value of the building. The trouble will be ventilated before one of the village Justices.

Crewels, and How to Use Them.

Crewel should be cut into short threads, never more than half the length of the skein. If a long needleful is used, it is not only apt to pull the work, but is very wasteful, as the end of it is liable to become frayed or knotted before it is nearly worked up. If it is necessary to use it double (and for coarse work, such as screen panels or salicloth, or for embroidering on Utrecht velvet, it is generally better double), care should be taken never to pass it through the eye of the needle, knotting the two ends; but two separate threads of the length required should be passed together through the needle.

Crewel should not be manufactured with a twist, as it makes the embroidery appear hard and rigid; and the shades of color do not blend into each other so harmoniously as when they are untwisted.

In crewels of the best quality the colors are perfectly fast, and will bear being repeatedly washed, provided no soda or washing powder is used.

Crewel is suitable for embroidery on all kinds of linen—on plain or diagonal cloth, serge, flannel, &c. It is also very effective when used in conjunction with embroidery silk, or floselle, either in conventional designs or where flowers are introduced. The leaves may be worked in crewels, and the flowers in silk, or the effect of the crewels increased by merely touching up the high lights with silk.

Tapestry wool is more that twice the thickness of crewel, and is used for screen panels, or large curtain borders, where the work is coarse, and a good deal of ground has to be covered. It is also used for bath blankets and carriage and sofa rugs. Tapestry wool is not yet made in all shades.

CHEAP GOODS
THE YEAR ROUND.

In calling the attention of the purchasing public to the above somewhat unusual heading, our idea is to protect people generally from being misled by certain advertisements calculated to influence, at least the unthinking. The people of London and surrounding country are no doubt aware, or should be, that the dodge of selling out, removing and going out of business, in order to get patronage under the guise of selling cheap, is a very old one, and also a reprehensible practice, particularly when their flaming manifestoes are not carried out; and when these dodges are periodically practised, people should be on their guard, frown down such practices, and stamp them out by buying their goods from houses that sell cheap all the time, in a straightforward, business like way. Every intelligent buyer knows well, that to carry on business honestly a living profit must be made; and the very idea of selling goods below cost, at an actual loss, bears on the face of it at least too much generosity to be real. We have no hesitation in saying, and our sales so far this season prove the truth of this assertion, that we are not being undersold in the city. Our goods are fresh, seasonable and uniformly cheap all through. Customers are well served at the counters of our large and attractive store, which extends from street to street.

Lord Beaconsfield's Matrimonial Prospects

The Ex-Premier's Policy Vindicated.

The Anglo American Rifle Matches—Labor Troubles.

Specially Telegraphed to the Free Press.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S MATRIMONIAL AND POLITICAL PLANS.

New York, May 23.—A special cable from London to the Herald says:—"Vanity Fair vaguely hints at a coming change in Lord Beaconsfield's condition in the following paragraph:—"It is not often that a man after seventy three years of active life, foremost in politics as in society, commences to turn his thoughts to matrimony as a serious profession, yet I am told that the evergreen Earl has almost made up his mind."

It is said Lord Beaconsfield is writing himself biography, and certainly he should print that certain day in May in red letters when he received Gladstone's letter, in which the present Premier admitted, on the same day that he wrote the apology to Count Kvolyi, that his predecessor's foreign policy was justified, that is, if said letter is not a hoax, which some of the papers assert, on the authority of Herbert Gladstone.

RIFLE MATCHES.

Sir Henry Halford writes the following information regarding the Anglo American rifle match: Last year I asked Mr. Hyde if he would arrange to bring over a team of four or six men to shoot against us, and he said he would do so. Now that America is to send a team to Dollymount I have asked Mr. Hyde to make up his team to eight men, as he will have an opportunity of filling up those who will shoot in Ireland. To this he agreed. The match will be shot at Wimbledon on the last day of the meeting, on Saturday, July 24th. The range will be 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, and fifteen shots will be fired at each, under the same terms as those for the Elcho Shield. The Palme and other long range matches will, I think, prove the most interesting match of the year. The following are the names of the gentlemen who will form the British team at Wimbledon:—Sir Henry Halford, Martin R. Smith, John Rigby, Capt. Fenton, Major Young, A. P. Humphrey, W. Ferguson and H. Thornbury. These are undoubtedly the strongest long range shots in the United Kingdom. They are practising most industriously.

Charles August Krebs, the German composer, is dead.

London, May 22.—The failure of the Reading RR. caused a semi-panic in the American market to-day. The coal-carrying lines all suffered heavily.

THICKETT AND SONS.

Thickett declines Boyd's challenge until after the former meets Hanlan.

COMMUNIST DEMONSTRATION.

Paris, May 23.—The Communist demonstrating to-day in commemoration of the death of comrades shot on the 23rd of May, 1871, passed off without more serious incidents than the arrest of thirteen persons, including one Prussian, and a slight encounter between the police and the throng.

THE TURF.

The race for the French Derby to-day at Chantilly was won by Beaminet by a short head, Leon second.

THE ITALIAN ELECTIONS.

Rome, May 23.—Among those elected on the second ballots for members of the Chamber of Deputies are Garibaldi and Crispi.

FAILURES.

London, May 23.—James Harrison & Sons, millers, Limerick, have failed. Liabilities, £60,000.

RUSSIAN RUMORS.

A Fearful Feat.

Cincinnati, O., May 23.—Thos. Boyd, who recently made the fearful leap into the Kentucky River, to-day jumped from the middle suspension bridge into the river, 91 feet. Only a small crowd witnessed the feat. He turned twice in the air, and struck the water with his head and shoulders. He was picked up unhurt, though his shirt where it struck the water was badly torn.

Destitute and Belligerent Sioux.

Bismarck, D. T., May 23.—Fork Keogh specials say destitute Sioux, under "Rain-in-the-Face," who killed Custer, are now a short distance north of Yellow Stone, opposite Fork Keogh, anxious to surrender, but do not wish to give up their guns and ponies. They are not in good humor, and hostility is threatened.

A Death Trap.

Binghamton, N. Y., May 23.—D. J. Sullivan, a prominent builder, died on Saturday with malarial fever, contracted at the Insane Asylum building. Malaria from an old sewer under the building, it is thought, caused the sickness of many men engaged on the work, three of whom have died.

A BIG COLLAPSE.

Suspension of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad and Coal and Iron Company.

Philadelphia, May 22.—President Gowen announces that the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company has suspended payments, being unable to meet their obligations. The suspension created great excitement. Mr. Gowen declines to make any statement at present. It is understood that the company was obliged to pay New York parties, for borrowed money, $600,000, and this swamped the concern. President Gowen makes the following announcement:—"The Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company and the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company have been compelled to suspend payments. The managers will take immediate measures to protect intact the property of both companies, and will continue business. For this purpose the daily revenues will be applied, as far as required, to the payment of wages and supplies."

The strictest secrecy is being observed by the Reading Railroad officials regarding the suspension. President Gowen has refused positively to see any newspaper men. It is understood that the Directors this afternoon agreed to ask for the appointment of a receiver. A Director said to-night the whole trouble grew out of the floating indebtedness. Obligations came in too fast to be met. This debt is between $2,000,000 and $6,000,000. It was $7,500,000, but recently a large sum was wiped out. The interest on the debenture bonds is about due. The company had an extension of five years on these bonds. Besides these, the interest on the consolidation bonds ($30,000,000) was to be met on the 1st of June, and measures were being taken to provide therefor.

The suspension of the R. R Co. was long ago expected from the enormous losses arising from its advances of $50,000,000 to an associate company for coal mining purposes, and the effect of the payment of high dividends for successive years out of money obtained by the issue of bonds. When, in an evil hour, that very profitable railroad corporation undertook to monopolize the mining as well as the transportation of coal in the Schuylkill region of Pennsylvania, the Reading Coal and Iron Company was the over-reacher which it made its first chasm. It was a very large, and has proved a most extensive cavern, substantially wrecking what was fifteen years ago one of the most profitable railroad properties in the country.

New York, May 22.—There was great excitement in Wall street to-day over the Reading failure, and Reading stock dropped almost ten points, and then recovered somewhat.

Philadelphia, May 23.—Charles E. Smith, ex-President of the Reading Railroad, charges that the large floating indebtedness of the company was concealed by fraudulent entries, and that in 1876 an investigation was ordered, but the result was concealed by the officials, and in consequence Smith resigned from the company.

Reading, Pa., May 22.—The Reading Iron Works suspended payment owing to complications with the Philadelphia & Reading R.R. Co., they being under control of obligations. The iron works own several furnaces, a large rolling mill, tube works, nail works, foundry, steam forge and shafting, employing a large number of hands. They pay out about $60,000 a month. The works will continue operations.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 23.—The excitement over the Reading failure continues. Rumored number of failures owing brokers, but only one said to have succumbed to the pressure, are James B. Young & Co., Rehr Newhall & Co., and C. H. Jordan & Co. The Reading stock sold down as was as 10 per cent per share, but now 12 is bid.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

An American Company About to Undertake the Great Work.

Panama, May 15.—The Star and Herald says a contract has been made between A. G. Menocal on the part of an American Company and the Government of Nicaragua, for the construction of a canal across the Nicaraguan country. It now awaits only the approval of Congress, which has been convened for that purpose. The terms of the contract are said to be extremely liberal on the part of the Government. The moving spirits of the new American Company are President Hayes, General Grant, Admiral Ammen and A. G. Menocal. Great enthusiasm exists in the various cities of Nicaragua in favor of the new contract.

THE IRISH RELIEF.

Thanks from the British Government.

Washington, May 22.—The British Minister here, under telegraphic orders, has conveyed to the Government of the United States the thanks and cordial thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the generous aid so readily rendered in having dispatched the United States ship Constellation, loaded with provisions, which were so much needed for the relief of the distressed subjects in Ireland, and which, besides being a substantial aid to them, has been accepted by all Her Majesty's subjects as a proof of the friendly feeling entertained towards them by the Government and citizens of the United States.

A PENNSYLVANIA TOWN BADLY BURNED.

Seventy Buildings Destroyed and 100 Families Homeless.

McInnes' Grist Mill at Parkhill Burned.

Two Lake Steamers Completely Destroyed.

Edinburgh, Pa., May 23.—Last evening flames were discovered issuing from the windows of the United States Hotel, an unoccupied building. They soon spread to the adjoining houses. Before water was thrown on the building twenty homes were in flames. From Railroad street to Main, and from Main to Pennsylvania avenue, and down the latter thoroughfare, the fire swept, destroying seventy buildings, among which are the post office, Clarion County Bank, the Brown Hotel, United States Hotel, and the United Pipe Line offices. Losses, $150,000. Upwards of a hundred families are homeless, and many slept on the ground last night.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Chesterville, May 22.—Last night two old people, named Straker, living in a house owned by John Butler, in that part of the township of Manchester known as the Boyne, was burned to death. The building also was destroyed. The cause of the accident is not yet known.

Special to the FREE PRESS.

Parkhill, May 23.—A fire broke out on Saturday morning in the drying kiln of McInnes grist mill, but was soon extinguished by a few pails of water.

This morning at two o'clock the fire alarm was sounded and it was discovered that it had again broken out and that the whole building was in a mass of flames. The fire had gained such headway before it was noticed that it was impossible to enter the structure. The mill was built by Mr. McInnes in 1876, and was composed of white brick and stone, with five stories, and considered one of the finest mills in western Canada. The machinery was from the establishment of Goldie & McCulloch, Galt, and was complete in every particular. The cost of the mill was twenty thousand dollars, with an insurance of eleven thousand in the following Companies:—Mercantile, four thousand; Waterloo Mutual, four thousand; Gore District, three thousand. The stock was estimated at three thousand dollars. Mr. McInnes was in the mercantile business a few years also, and the building of this mill crippled him so that he failed. He, however, by indomitable perseverance, paid one hundred cents to the dollar, and was getting out of the difficulties nicely when this sad blow occurred. The loss will not only be felt greatly by the town, but by the surrounding country.

Montreal, May 23.—A fire occurred to-night in the extensive premises formerly occupied as a tobacco factory by Mr. Macdonald on Water street, but was soon extinguished. One of the walls of the building is considerably damaged. The loss will probably reach $500 or $600, and is fully covered by insurance in English and Canadian offices. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Ayton, Ont., May 22.—Last night a stable belonging to John Booth, whose hotel was burned about two weeks ago, was destroyed by fire, none of the contents being saved. Supposed incendiary. Loss small. Insurance $100.

LETTERS FROM WINDSOR.

May 22.—Wm. Boomer's residence, on Sandwich street, corner of Mercer, was entered by a burglar, and a thief last night about 9 o'clock and $250 worth of jewelry and diamonds stolen. Mr. Boomer was in the library, and some friends were in the parlor, lined room at the time. In his retreat the thief dropped a diamond cross and a box containing valuables, but the above amount of jewelry is still missing.

Charles Bourbeau is having his wife and six children. He is a first-class painter and paper-hanger and could have work the year round if he would attend to it; but he drinks to excess and neglects his opportunities. Yesterday his wife complained to Magistrate Bartlet that for six months past he had only given $10 towards the support of his family; that he came home drunk nearly every night and abused her, and was in general a worthless vagabond. A warrant was issued and he was arrested last night, and remanded to Sandwich Jail for trial at the police court on Tuesday.

LATEST FROM MONTREAL.

Montreal, May 22.—An inquest has been opened on the remains of P. Larkin, who died from wounds alleged to have been inflicted with a knife by M. Dolan, who is in custody at Prescott. THE FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY.

Few sovereigns have filled a throne for a longer period than her Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, that of Great Britain. She is now sixty-one years of age, and by the 20th of June she will have reigned over the British Empire for the unusually long period of forty-three years. The average reign of English sovereigns since the Conquest, omitting the Protectorate and disregarding regencies, is twenty-two years, and out of nine thirty-five or thirty-six sovereigns, only four have had a longer reign than that to which Queen Victoria's has already extended. Henry III. reigned fifty-seven years, Edward III. fifty years, Elizabeth forty-five years, and George III. sixty years. If the life of Victoria be spared to see two additional anniversaries her reign will have equalled in length that of good Queen Bess, whom she resembles more in the glories of her reign and in her wisdom as a sovereign, than in her character and disposition as a woman. If the wishes and prayers of her subjects could avail aught in obtaining for Victoria long life and happiness, she would live to leave behind a record more lengthened and glorious than any of her long line of royal ancestors. Few sovereigns have so endeared themselves to their people as has this noble and pure-minded woman, and few indeed have deserved such universal esteem and affection. While all parties who speak the sentiments of their soul, unbiassed by political feeling, must admit that Queen Victoria has been, from her eighteenth year up to this hour, the most loyal of Constitutional Sovereigns to whatever party could wield sway, that he, for the time being, possessed the confidence of a majority of the people's representatives in the House of Commons, yet on one or two occasions she has had to endure criticism and instructions as ill-natured as unjust; but at the same time she has had the satisfaction of seeing how promptly such attempts were frowned down by all classes of her people. Like all other persons, she has had her personal predilections, but these have never been permitted to influence her conduct as a sovereign of a free people. Even in the very beginning of her reign, at the time when the Melbourne Administration was forced to resign, and Sir Robert Peel was sent for as the coming man, who could tell him, that though she was sorry to part with her Ministers, of whose conduct she approved, and whom she esteemed, yet she cheerfully bowed to constitutional usage, and the same spirit has guided her public life down to the present moment.

We have seen at least an attempt made since the recent change of government in England to originate the idea that Her Majesty wished to subordinate the will of her people, constitutionally expressed, to her own royal will. This was first instituted in some of the organs of public opinion in England, but it has been more plainly and offensively expressed by an English writer resident in Canada, who loudly declares, no doubt in the political heat and train the 'prentice hand of our Canadian journalists in the higher walks of their profession. "If the Court," he remarks, "by betraying its unwillingness to accept Mr. Gladstone has brought upon itself something like humiliation, it may thank Lord Beaconsfield, who for many years has been instilling into it autocratic fancies, intoxicating it with slavish flattery and pandering to it in disgusting personal propensities and antipathies, the manifestation of which his English predecessors would have thought themselves bound by chivalrous sentiment, as well as by their duty as Ministers, to repress." This first paragraph is more unjust and less complimentary to Her Majesty than anything that has ever been penned by any of her subjects, unless by a Bradlaugh. It implies first, that Queen Victoria has the will, had she only the power, to be a despot; and second, that she possesses not the good sense and discernment to know when she is being made the victim of gross and slavish flattery. This may be pardoned on account of the peculiar idiosyncrasy of the writer, upon whose sensorium the term "royal" or "aristocratic" produces such irritation as to unhinge his judgment for the moment. By the "Court" is meant Her Majesty, by humiliation is implied that the Queen was forced against her will to accept of Gladstone as Minister, and we leave our readers and Bystander to settle the question between them.

No one can deny that the present reign has been as eventful as any that has gone before it, and Her Majesty, during the long rule, has witnessed as many great changes in the Governments of the world, and in the social condition of the people, as history has ever recorded, or crowded into the same space. Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Turkey, have undergone remarkable transformations within this time—some of them as respects governmental forms, some as respects territorial change, and not a few as respects both. Revolutions have swept over some of the most powerful nations in Europe, and the proudest dynasties have fallen and disappeared before it, while under the happy reign of Victoria England barely felt the swell. Chartism, Repeal, Young Irelandism, and Fenianism, have each had its day, but none of these produced anything beyond a passing ripple upon the surface of society, and Feargus O'Connor, Dan O'Connell, Smith O'Brien, and all the rest, have strutted their brief hour on the stage and left the social atmosphere all the clearer and purer for the agitation they occasioned.

The social progress has been quite as remarkable as any other changes that the page of history will record. Science has contributed more during this reign to the progress of humanity, and to the productive powers of the people than in any other period of equal length in the history of the race. Of the natural forces more especially subjected to the will of man, heat and electricity must be allowed the first place. The one under the form of steam has in its infinite applications revolutionized the manufacturing and commercial interests of humanity; and though the wonders of the other already transcend description, yet one is justified in claiming, that the discoveries and practical applications of this subtile element are only yet in their infancy, and judgment and imagination alike fail in setting limits to the discoveries that may be made in this branch of science in the future, and what these may effect for humanity.

In speaking of the social changes that have taken place under Victoria's reign, one must not overlook the question of education. Though at the beginning of this reign, the wealthier classes were perhaps the best educated in Europe, yet the great masses of the people were as illiterate as those of any other nation claiming to be civilized. The parochial system had done much for the people north of the Tweed, but in England and Wales the state of popular education was simply a shame to the nation. Since that time, however, vast strides have been made, and now this question engages as much of the attention of the Government and ruling classes, as any other of those upon which social progress depends, and it is as liberally supported from the public treasury and local rates as in any of those countries which had the start of Great Britain in respect to time. Among the glories of Victoria's reign this will not be the least enduring, nor the least important factor in the general advancement of the English people.

While all parts of the Empire have made progress during the present reign, none have advanced with such rapid strides as the colonies, and among these Canada is entitled to the first place. In 1837 those colonies were of but little account, and now they are rapidly developing into a powerful state, second to few as regards territory and resources, while the promises for its future in wealth and population are of the brightest kind. Our people are the most loyal, and, taken altogether, perhaps the most prosperous part of her Majesty's subjects, and they will celebrate her birthday with a loyalty as ardent, and with a respect and affection as sincere and devoted, as any other part of her Empire. The Princess Louise will have no cause to complain of the enthusiastic and right royal manner in which the anniversary of the Queen's birthday is observed among her Canadian subjects, and in no place will the prayer—Long live the Queen—be more sincerely and devoutly uttered.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN "REFORM."

The question, How far may the removal of the late Hon. Geo. Brown affect the interests and well-being of the "reform" party, is one that must have presented itself in almost every quarter. And the inquiry is a natural one. If we except the period when the "reformers" were the warm admirers, the enthusiastic followers of Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Cartier, they were kept in antagonism to those two representative men mainly by the efforts of Mr. Brown. But will the efforts of those efforts be of a lasting character, or will they undergo rapid modification, now that their author has passed away? Answers to these questions will vary very much with the hopes and wishes of individuals. Some are already found to say that the party will gain strength, which is as much as to declare that Mr. Brown was a weak man, a hinderance to it. Those who can properly estimate the life and energy he put into the political body with which he was associated can scarcely concur in this position. And what ever his errors a great statesman among all classes he was its characteristics tone on many important matters. On the value of British connection; on the stability of the Senate, of which Mr. Brown was a member; on the integrity of the Bench; on the unimpaired confidence of the prevailing safeguards to property, person, and of society. On all such and kindred matters the tone of the Reform party as advanced by him was one which the large majority of the people approved of. But evidences exist that there will soon be a sloughing off, more or less marked, from such positions. Already the Globe has thrown itself in with the movement for the abolition of the Senate, though it professes to wish to see the change it now advocates gradually. If the conservative character which marked so strongly many of the positions of the Reform party is to be abandoned, if a career of hacking, hewing, and upsetting is to be ushered upon, it may be anticipated that many will be repelled rather than attracted. The argument in favor of the abolition of the Senate, which is the first blow upon existing institutions, is chiefly twofold. The first that it is expensive; the second that as the legislation of Ontario is carried on by the aid of one Legislative Chamber, the affairs of the Dominion could be equally well served through a similar simple process. The principal point at issue is not the cost, but the desirability of the second chamber. If it is useful as a balance, a counterpoise, a check on hasty legislation, its cost is a matter of secondary consideration. Constitutional privileges and safeguards should not be calculated by dollars and cents. True liberty is beyond price, and if the constitutionalism of Canada enforces and guards our liberties, it can scarcely be held to be too dear at any price. Those who appeal to the single legislative chamber of Ontario as an illustration of their wishes forget that it is not an absolute body. Its doings are held in check, first, by the duties to which it is limited by the terms of Confederation; and, secondly, by the power vested in the Dominion Government to disallow its legislation if occasion seems to demand. But who would control hasty legislation rushed through the House of Commons in moments of party excitement or popular clamor? The Senate has upon several occasions wisely interposed between the Commons and the country, in order that time might be given for the true state of public feeling to develop itself. It has also instituted many important measures, and the presence of so experienced a body of men at the Capital during the Legislative session must have a valuable effect upon affairs in addition to the legislation performed in assembled capacity. So far from the country having confidence in St. Clair River.

VISIT OF SAMIA, 1879.

Spreading on the mid-summer noon,
Under sunniest majestic flood, St. Clair!
A rivulet rock on their babbling tune;
Up them arrogance crashing southward there
Tide of sky with all things strong on-bear.

With fadeless power, for untold ages thou
Hast rolled up thy liquid wave from mere to lake;
Forests crumbled to their latest bough;
Of forests leafless in those forests wake
Animal-man disturbed the swamp or brake.

Once where I gave to London ones was lord;
Shadowed my pure waters in his bark built shell
Aloof!
Now untamed for ere long I had shaped a sword
How those days depart, or hid farewell
To songs of war, and vengeful deeds of hell.

Another race, with undiscerning power,
Cleaves now thy banks and current as its prize.
Yonder a nation, energy its dower,
Works vain hands over realm of boundless size.

Each year a triumph and besides surprises.

Mother of nations, friend of the oppressed!
This soil is mine whence I surray these waves
The blue divine, yet leaves them both at rest:
God! may it never feel but peaceful oars,
And only hail the summon's festive roars.

Out from Lake Huron's broad expanse it glides
As if on wings, with means that bosewear'd shoot.
A splendid bark: even now in front it rides,
A living thing with swan-like motion mute,
Vast pearl dared for lake's earthling fruit.

Then seemest proud upon thine azure lap
To bear it safely, trusting in thy might;
But on my vision dawns the grander map
Of things to be, and feels arrest its light
Of him who then looks from this gassy height.

Fires blazed the orb to-day on his high throne;
Awoke the languid hours week creeping past;
But ever in thy track a breeze is blown,
And fanned my fevered refreshment came at last
Tame of that upon thy waters vast.

Ever keel not singly ventured on thy plain,
To catch the gentle wind so cool and sweet;
A gale or swell to unskilled meeting strain,
Had sail and away in jubilant retreat.
To woo thy breath, and shun the sweltering heat.

A blessing and a beauty thou, O Stream!
And I have stored what pilgrims seldom rear—
More than my fancy's eager hope or dream,
In gazing on thy form, and on thy sweep
Of restless depths that scorn the thought of sleep.

With undiminished wealth thy tide has run,
Since man recorded what his eyes beheld:
Through ages yet unseen will the run.
Still bring with burden to remotest eld,
Thy face thus fair, thine ancient strength upheld!

BARBARA.

"Polite! I will be as elaborately civil as a character in an old comedy: 'Madam, you are vastly obliging;' 'I protest, madam, you overwhelm me with your undeserved condescension.' Will that kind of thing please her, do you think, Bab?"

"Don't talk nonsense, Flossie. Be as polite as you can; and if she should say anything disagreeable, hold your tongue."

"That is just the one thing I can't do," protested Flossie. "If she gird at me, I must gird again, though I were to risk being forbidden her brother's house forever by her."

"Flossie, I want to ask you a serious question," said Barbara.

It was the night of Flossie's arrival. The ladies had dined and refreshed themselves, and now it was bed time, and the two were strolling side by side in front of the fire in Flossie's bedroom.

"Oh!" said Flossie, looking morose. "Major Leland is in England."

"I should call that a statement, and not a question," said Flossie, trying to be flippant, but inwardly disturbed.

"He is in Cornwall. I have seen him.

"Oh," said Flossie. "I hope he is very well, and that he—enjoyed himself—in India."

"Flossie, where did you post that letter I gave you the day I left? That last letter I ever wrote to Captain Leland?"

Flossie gasped, and turned pale.

"Where did I post it?" she said. "I suppose it never have been at the watchmaker's, where the man was always so civil, you know. He's a German, or perhaps a Swiss, as he's connected with watches."

"The letter never reached him, Flossie. Our fate, his and mine, depended upon that one little letter, and he never received it."

"I suppose if he had got the letter, you and he would have been married!" asked Flossie.

"Yes."

"Then what a blessing that he didn't get it! Think of the difference in your position as mistress of this house, and as East India Company's major's wife! For you know, Bab, it was all very well while he was sending in strawberries and salmon and things, we could afford to [illegible] ourselves to the truth; but the Company's service does not rank as high as the army. I'm sure. If the letter did go astray, you ought to be very grateful to Providence for that lucky accident."

"Flossie," said Barbara, bitterly, "it has made a wide difference in my life. As to what's wife I should have been happy."

"Then are not happy in a house that was built in the time of Cromwell, you have neither artistic taste nor gratitude to God for His mercies," said Flossie, with a religious air. "And then think how comfortable you have been able to make poor overworked man, Dompey's office! I could not have given you six hundred a year."

"Well, there is consolation in that; and Ryan is very good to me. Do you think that I am ungrateful to him, or to Providence; But I want to know about that letter. I can not understand why that one letter, on which so much depended, should have gone astray. Are you quite sure you posted it, Flossie?"

"I'm quite sure I didn't," cried Flossie, raising on her knees and hurriedly risking. "I can not be such a horrid little storyteller as to say I did. I lost the letter, Bab dear!" and she burst into tears. "Put together in the kitchen, and we just felt that it was much better for you that the letter had not gone, though there was no knowing whether some officious person in the street wouldn't pick it up and post it, and we determined to say nothing to you about it; and the consequence is that you are the wife of one of the richest men in Cornwall, and ought to be as happy as the days are long."

"Oh, Flossie, you have done your best to break two hearts," cried Barbara, covering her pale indignant face with her clasped hands. "And my mother knew of this, my mother joined in the plot against me, my mother whom I have loved so dearly!"

"And you were bound in duty to love her," argued the indomitable Flossie, who had dried her tears and prepared herself for action. "Think how manfully she has been; how she has always sacrificed her own pleasure and her own comfort for ours; how she has waited upon us and cherished us, and has been father and mother both to us. Is it a great thing, even if you have sacrificed your own happiness, or what you think would have been your own happiness, in order to make her declining years as free from care? I am sure I would have married the vulgarest soapboiler in Camberwell, a creature who only gurgles by accident, if by such a marriage I could have secured comfort for my other."

"You are right, perhaps. I ought to be grateful for your carelessness and for your [illegible] candour," Barbara answered, bitterly. "But I know George Leland would have let my mother starve. She would have been cared for, God bless her!"

"I suppose you would have sent me a pound note once in a blue moon, and would have called that helping your family!" ejaculated Flossie, contemptuously.

"Good night," said Barbara, coldly; and so she left the delinquent, who knew not whether to consider herself forgiven.

Mark felt his life badged round with danger after Flossie's arrival at Place. Molly had taken it into her head to be jealous of that young lady; and as there were eyes to see and tongues to report to her all that wanton in the house, Mark felt as if he were forever under observation. And Flossie, having no one else of the male sex to amuse her, took it into her head to be particularly fascinating to Mark, especially as she wanted to ride one of his horses.

Mark's stud had been severely reduced since the awful Pepper and a thirteen-hand, impossible for a lady to ride [illegible] possible for a gentleman.

Flossie's in door amusements at Place were limited to novel reading, fancy work, playing with Mark's dogs, and eating cake and cream, and even these mild enjoyments were made less enjoyable by the presence of Miss Penruth, whose contentment, since the young lady's coming, had fixed itself in a stony disapprobation. Flossie's invention was exercised in finding corners where Priscilla's severe gray eye could not reach her. She would sit on the carpet in the embrasure of a window, screened from view by a curtain that smelled of by-gone centuries, gloating over Carver Bell or Mrs. Marsh, and would emerge from her retreat at the sound of the luncheon gong, smiling defiance at the offended spinster, who had been wondering where she was all the morning.

Out-of doors Flossie was free as air. She made friends with all the tigers and quadrupeds in the stable. She drove Barbara's ponies, with a delightful ignorance of the first principles of driving, and it was only the innate virtue and discretion of those two amiable Norwegians, and the primeval solitude of the roads, that saved her from ruin and death. Mrs. Trevernook sat by her daughter's side in happy unconsciousness of danger, and admired Flossie's skill and style on the driving box.

"You are really a very clever girl," she would say, mildly. "It seems to come natural to you to do things right."

"That shows the advantage of not having all one's talent ground out of one by a school mistress, ma. I really ought to be thankful to Mr. T. for never having expended a sper os on my education. I dare say if I had been brought up as a boarding-school, I should be as commonplace as other girls."

Flossie took to horsemanship just as she took to driving. She was utterly fearless, and she possessed a talent for sticking to her saddle. Beyond this her gifts were small; but Mark admired her boldness and her firm seat, and consented to lend her even illustrious gray Pepper, a horse out of which he expected to make money before he had done with him. On Pepper Flossie scorned the moor far and wide, sometimes attended by a groom on one of Vyvyan's horses, sometimes alone. She had serious thoughts of climbing Brown Willy. She could not ascertain that the feat had ever been performed by an equestrian, and this made the idea so much the more attractive.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

FLOSSIE'S HAPPY THOUGHT.

Rockport is one of those places which might have been left out of the world without making much difference in the history of mankind; and yet there are few finer or bolder bits of coast scenery upon the rugged western point of England. It is not so grand a spot as the Land's End, nor so lovely as that pinnacle of verdure clad rock crowned with the Logan Stone, nor so striking as the Lizard; but the green hills and gray rocks of that quiet bay, the steep village street, the background of mountain and moor, the winding roads between farmy banks by which the stranger descends from the great open moors to the little harbor by the water's edge, the parish church among green fields, the cottages and garden perched anyhow on the side of a rugged hill-side—all these are as picturesque and as interesting as anything to be found in Cornwall or Devonshire.

Here, at the easy inn, kept by kindly people, and roaring over with the fatness of the land, Major Leland found a halting place of most exquisite repose, after the troubled days of the year that was gone. He had come back to England seriously ill—come back, as he thought, to die; and it seemed to him as if it could matter very little to any one, not even to Vyvyan Penruth, where he spent the last few weeks of his life.

"I don't want to make the husband uncomfortable," he said to himself: "but for me it is almost happiness to know that I am near the woman I shall love till my heart ceases to beat."

The quiet beauty of the place and its surroundings pleased him. He was able to climb to the topmost green point above the sea, and to lie and rest there, smoking his cigar, watching the sunset roll down the shimmering whitely above the white crest of lead-colored water, idly thinking of summer nights more than a year ago, when he had stood on the ridge at Delhi, under the purple Indian sky and the big bright stars, watching the glancing lights in the scattered city, where we old king and his favorites were holding their revels in the palace of Lal Kuan Mogul, the Centre of the Universe, the Shadow of God on earth, in the hall on whose walls the boastful conqueror had inscribed, "If there be a paradise upon earth, it is here." A day soon came when the Shadow of God on earth sat upon a mild charpoy, or four legged bedstead, in that splendid hall with the peacock throne once shed its rainbow light, to be tried for his life by the power he had defied and outraged, and to be sentenced to finish the remnant of his days as a convict in the Andamans.

Sometimes the evenings were fair and sunny, and the sea took its summer hues of emerald and amethyst, and a mistaken bee came humming across the flowering turf in search of a belated harebell or the last tuft of clover. Vessels passed and vanished on the distant horizon; but Major Leland no thought of George Leland with them. He felt as if he had done with all the earth except just this homely corner of it where he was content to be. He spent many a tranquil hour in the old churchyard on the hill, and it was sweetly said to him to think that he might lie there before very long, and that Barbara might come some day and kneel beside his grave.

His family would gladly have had him at home at the vicarage in Somersetshire, where he would have been nursed and petted and worshipped by father, sisters, and old servants; but he shrank from the very thought of that loving circle. He wanted to be alone with his grief, now that the busy work of life was done—such work as he had done in India, which had left him so little leisure for thought.

Years had gone since the parting on the 20th, 22nd, 24th, 27th of May, yet the girl he had clasped in his arms that day was no less dear to him. He had surrendered her of his own accord, believing that to do so was his duty, and he had loved her so much the more because of that surrender. Never had she been dearer to him than when he wrote the letter that renounced her. Never had she been lovelier in his eyes than on that day when he saw her again in her matronly pride and dignity, bearing herself calmly and nobly, true and faithful to her loveless marriage bond.

He had no thought of seeking a second interview, of introducing himself to her husband. He knew and said that they might meet as friends, that nothing forbade them to be friends; but his stronger soul revolted against such a mockery of friendship.

"She must be all the world to me, or nothing," he told himself.

THE GATINEAU OUTRAGES.

A Important Witness Cleverly Trapped

From the Montreal Star.

The history of the Gatineau outrages are no doubt yet fresh in the memory of our citizens, and the capture of the gang, which included Father Fawe and Z. B. Doyle, by Detective Fahey, of this city, will always be a creditable one to the officer. Doyle turned Queen's evidence and was an important witness for the prosecution; but one fine day in March he skipped across the border and hied to Ithaca, New York, where he engaged in business. It was thought at the time that he had been paid to not appear against the priest, as it was well known that without his evidence the alleged "frebugs" would stand a good chance of acquittal. How to bring him back from Uncle Sam's dominions then occupied the attention of the officials, and as the Government offered no reward the affair remained in statu quo. Detective Fahey took the case in hand and despatched an emissary to Ithaca, who after a round of pleasure succeeded in inducing Doyle to come with him as far as Montreal in order to have a $2,000 insurance policy, which Doyle held, settled. The latter, to make matters all right, brought with him one of the most prominent lawyers in Ithaca, and the three, including the emissary, arrived in the city yesterday. Doyle unsuspectingly walked into Fahey's Dominion Detective Agency and had a conversation with the latter. The result was that they both took a walk down town, and on the way called at High Constable Bissonette's Office, when Doyle was arrested. He was taken to Aylmer yesterday afternoon. The trial will take place on July 1st at Aylmer. The Ithaca lawyer considers that the trap was cleverly set and is complimented.

Doctors Gave Him Up.—"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die!"

"Well, say I. If that is so, I will go this minute, and get some for my poor George. I know they are good."

Troys	5	7	0	12

THE TROY-PROVIDENCE MUSS.

Mr. W. A. Hulbert, President of the League, has called a meeting of the Board of Directors to be held on Tuesday afternoon, at the Cataract House, Niagara Falls. The meeting is to take action in regard to the Troy-Providence postponed game muddle. As the case now looks the Troys have clearly forfeited their membership in the League. The question to be decided is whether to appoint another club to take their place in the championship race, or to re-elect them to membership. Since the Troys forfeited their membership they have played three games with the Worcesters, and according to the constitution the latter must have forfeited their membership. If the Providence club insists on enforcing the above rule it will raise the very deuce, and it is very likely they will, for if the Troys are not re admitted it will take off several defeats that the Providences have sustained at the hands of the Trojans. After the Troy club has been dispersed of the case of the Worcesters will come up, and an interesting debate on that question may be looked for. Altogether it is a grand mix, and the following named gentlemen, who compose the Board of Directors—President W. A. Hurlbert, of Chicago; J. F. Evans, of Cleveland; John B. Sage, of Buffalo; Harvey Root, of Providence, and A. H. Soden, of Boston—will have their hands full in untangling the snarl.

NOTES ABOUT THE GAMES.

"Galvin, who is again playing with the Buffalos, succeeded in 'stealing' that California detective and walked thirty six miles to a railroad station before he could board a train for the East. Now, Galvin had been there without money with which to get back. They went to California without leaving the State of Michigan, and Detroit Remand, of last year's Chicagos, has turned up as an umpire.

Jim Whitney has signed to play in Cincinnati, only for July and August.

Friday the Clevelands defeated the Dubuques by a score of 8 to 4.

Burkhalow, who played in Detroit last year and in Rochester the year before, is pitching for the Bay City baseballers.

LATEST AQUATIC INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. Riley wraps himself up in the American flag and promulgates the following:—"Some of Mr. Hanlan's admirers have very cleverly and effensively circulated the report that I concede that Mr. Hanlan must certainly win the international race which is to come off on Wednesday next. While I am ready to award to Mr. Hanlan all the credit which he may be entitled to, and while my worst enemies can never honestly accuse me of boasting, I can assure the citizens of Washington that I do not consider Mr. Hanlan invincible, and he will have all he can do to win the race with me, if he does win. So far as I am concerned, I promise there will not be a repetition at Wednesday's fiasco. I shall do all that can possibly be done to sustain the honor of the American flag. I mean business, and shall pull to win.—JAMES H. RILEY.

Hanlan has nothing to say in reference to the forthcoming race. Riley was on the river this morning.

London, May 22.—Trickett cannot accept Boyd's challenge at present to row a four-oared race. Trickett's great desire is to meet Hanlan.

Auburn, May 22.—Henry C. Carr, of Fellow Springs, Loudoun county, Virginia, says Courtney's sickness was a bare faced sham throughout, and he is firmly convinced the race was sold before.

Washington, May 22.—Hanlan and Riley have formed a partnership for the regatta at Providence June 17. They signed to-day new articles for the race Wednesday, regarding the responsible the holder of the original articles.

A reporter of the Syracuse Courier had an interview with Courtney after the race at Washington, and this is what the saw dust man says:—"I know now that I can outrow Hanlan. I could fully believe it before. If I had been all right to day I should have beaten Hanlan as sure as fate." Hear, hear, and cheers!

MISCELLANEOUS.

A correspondent writes:—"C. n. Biggar can have a match with Tisdale for one hundred ($100) or two hundred ($200) a side by addressing Tisdale's backer, Hamilton P. O."

The Californians, by way of variety, are indulging at the ancient sport of fighting. At home a day, the horses, California mustangs, being run at top speed with riders on their backs.

The first meeting at Saratoga will commence Saturday, July 17, and continue the 20th, 22nd, 24th, 27th and 29th days. The second meeting will commence Thursday, August 5th, and continue the 7th, 10th, 12th, 14th, 17th, 19th and 21st.

Mr. C. Lossie, of St. Hyacinth, proposes to show W. H. Vanderbilt, who thinks the Long Island Railroad is a big thing, a horse who will make three hundred miles in three consecutive days, and probably in less time. Should the horse perform the feat the price asked is $1,000, or as much more as Mr. Vanderbilt is willing to give. The $5,000 trotting match between Flora Wood's Edward (2:19) and S. Foster Dewey's Richard (2:21), is creating much discussion in the Commercial of May 21, reported in June. Both horses are reported to be in fine condition. Dan Mace has charge of Richard, and will drive him in the race. John Murphy will drive Edward.

Wm. Elliott and R. W. Boyd have entered for the great sculling race on the Seekonk River, R. I., June 17. This event will, it is now well assured, bring together the best men in Canada, America and England.

Bogardus and his son Eugene, Fred. Erb and S. A. Tucker, of Meriden, Conn., shot in the team match at Nebraska City, and were beaten by a granger from Syracuse, Nebraska.

George H. Wade, of Brooklyn, and H. Monroe, of Jersey City, will swim a five match at Chautauqua Lake on the 5th of June.

The Long Point Shooting Club have arranged to hold their annual meeting June 1st, at the Prospect House, Niagara Falls.

Mr. Ed. Higgins, who made the McMahon-Kennedy match, says he will bet $1,000 that Kennedy can throw McMahon two out of three, in harness, any time within three months; match to come off in Buffalo. His money is ready, and he will probably be accommodated.

O'Leary's best heel-and-toe record in England was 519 miles, 1,588 yards, 141. 29-50.

Hart, the pedestrian, is said to have been once a waiter in the Kennard House, Cleveland. This explains why, when he got sleepy during the late contest in New York, he would cry, "Coming, sir."

Harry Hill has a trotter that can beat 2:20, and fear that can trot in 2:30.

Louisville claims that there will be 350 horses in attendance upon the spring meeting at that place.

The Monmouth Park Association will give a four-day meeting, July 3rd and 10th, with six races and $4,000 each day.

The annual Stake shoot of the New York Sportsmen's Association will take place at Seneca Falls, commencing to day. Prize to the value of over $3,000 are offered, and a successful "shoot" is assured.

George Slocum sent Jacob Schaefer a challenge, in due form, to play him for the championship at the "Champion Game," and the challenge has been accepted. The game will probably take place about June 19.

The following rifle team has been selected to go to Ireland, as the result of competition of the past few days at Creedmoor—W. H. Jackson, Wm. Farrow, S. J. Scott, H. F. Clark, J. F. Brown, Homer Fisher, H. T. Rockwell, S. Rathbone.

MITCHELL.

Mr. J. H. Fengt has left for New York, to attend the annual meeting of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge I. O. G. T. He is one of the representatives appointed by the Grand Lodge of Ontario.

The annual convention of the County of Perth Sabbath School Association was held in St. Mary's on Wednesday and Thursday last. There was a large number of delegates present. The Rev. J. Calder was elected President for the ensuing year, and Rev. R. Hamilton, Secretary. Rev. Mansly Benson conducted the musical part of the programme. The sessions were very interesting, but a large number of speakers who promised to take part failed to put in an appearance.

The Mitchell Cricket Club has been reorganized for the season. The following are the officers for this year:—President, Mr. J. W. Coll; Vice-President, Mr. Alex. Mitchell; Sec.-Treas., Mr. R. W. Keeler; Field Capt., Mr. F. G. Lynde, and a Managing Committee of six.

The County Attorney and our local lawyers have decided that it is against the law to get shaved on Sunday.

At the last meeting of Tudor Lodge, A. F. M., a resolution of thanks was given to W. Bro. Thomas Babb for his valuable services to the Lodge, also expressing their regret at his departure for Manitoba. Mr. Babb was a thorough Mason and will be much missed by the Lodge.

The Queen's Birthday will be celebrated here in a loyal manner by a calithumpian procession in the morning, boat race on the pond, foot races, etc., and by the annual meeting of the Mitchell Turf Club in the afternoon, when purses from five to fifteen dollars will be given for the best horses.

The Annual District Meeting of the Exeter District of the B. C. Church was held on Wednesday last—all the ministry and an equal number of laymen being present —Rev. W. Weber, Chairman of the District, presiding. There was a slight decrease in the membership, and in all the funds there was an increase over last year. This is one of the best districts in the connexion.

STRATFORD.

The police, the other evening, impounded no less than 35 head of cattle, besides horses and other animals—the result of a row among the rest.

The Stratford Board of Trade strongly protest against the Port Dover sailing their road to the Grand Trunk. The town has $80,000 interest in the Port Dover, and this sum should not be sacrificed.

Mr. Mowat thought the proceedings at the meeting of Woodstock next week would be interesting, and Mr. Blake will probably protest against the Port Dover sailing their road to the Grand Trunk. The town has $80,000 interest in the Port Dover, and this sum should not be sacrificed.

Mr. Mowat thought the proceedings at the meeting of Woodstock next week would be interesting, and Mr. Blake will probably require to be closely watched, and he moved that Messrs. Heaton, Jingston, Buckingham, Carscadden, Cowan, Thompson, W. R. Marshall, McLaughlin and Williams be appointed to co-operate with a committee of the Town Council to attend the meeting to be held at Woodstock on Tuesday, 25th, and generally to assist in any manner deemed advisable to protect the interests of the town.

GALT.

Mr. John Scott, cattle buyer, has been delayed, and very seriously, too, for want of cars to ship his cattle on May 24th, 25th.

Fall wheat in this locality never looked more promising. A good crop is predicted.

HAMILTON.

There are a number of horses running at large here. The by-law reads that no horse shall run at large in the township of Barton, Hamilton.

Large crops of apples, cherries and plums are predicted about here.

Farmers have commenced sheering sheep.

Sawed wood is selling for $1.50 a cord here.

Mr. Charles Coulter, merchant, of this village, has recovered from his recent indisposition.

Mr. Conrad Schmidt is about building a large wagon shop.

Mr. Charles Coulter, merchant, of this village, has recovered from his recent indisposition.

Mr. Conrad Schmidt is about building a large wagon shop.

Mr. Schmidt informs me that he has more work since the protective tariff came in than he ever has before. That's what they all tell us.

THAMESBORO.

May 21.—The crops in this locality, with the exception of fall wheat, look exceedingly well. What is left of the fall wheat looks well, and is now growing finely after winter-killed. Some fields, however, look thin, and on the whole it will be nearly an average crop.

At the regular lodge meeting of the I. O. G. T., on the 19th inst., the following officers were installed for the ensuing quarter by P. Templar Brock:—Bro. C. M. Thompson, W. C. T.; Sis. Kate Broughton, W. V. T.; Bro. Wm. Broughton, Chaplain; Bro. Wm. Hall, R. S.; Bro. — Cooper, W. F. S.; Bro. — Reevely, W. M. Sis. Eliza Storey, W. L. G.; Bro. Cooper, I. O. G.

The anniversary entertainment of the son-denominational Sabbath school, which meets in the Temperance Hall, in the town line between West Nissouri and London, two miles north of Dreaney's Corners, was held on Friday evening, 14th inst. The recitations by the children were well rendered, showing a pretty thorough drill. The singing, also by the children, was excellent. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Robertson, Campbell, Harris, and Rev. C. M. Thompson, of Thamesford. On the whole the entertainment was good, and reflects credit on the Superintendent, Mr. John Robertson, and his staff of helpers.

Mr. Rowe, chemist, ably occupied the chair.

Rev. Mr. Daunte, M. A., Episcopal clergyman, has removed to Thorndale. The minister's daughter, and Mr. Daunte has charge of the Thorndale portion. He will be missed in Thamesford.

INGERSOLL.

May 21st.—Mrs. David Carnfield, aged 80, wife of David Canfield, Esq., Clerk of the Division Court, died at her residence this afternoon of heart disease. Mrs Canfield was down town this morning, and after partaking of dinner she sat down to read a book. After a few minutes Mrs. Wilson discovered she was quite dead. During a life-long residence in Ingersoll she made a large number of true and sincere friends who loved and admired her for her many good qualities. The extremely sudden manner in which she has been taken from our midst, makes the sympathy that is universally expressed for the bereaved ones all the stronger. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn over the late that has bereft them of a kind and affectionate mother, and a true and sincere Christian woman.

There will be a celebration in Ingersoll on the 24th of May. An excursion to Niagara Falls is advertised, which, no doubt, will entice a large crowd from here.

The Alleged Wallacetown Boom.

A DETONITE ON THE SITUATION.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—Would you kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to correct any erroneous impressions your readers may have received from an article by your Wallacetown correspondent in the FREE PRESS of May 10th, concerning the great mining discoveries (?) in that neighborhood. We have heard that some buildings that were moved from this place to Dutton are likely to be moved back (?), writes your correspondent. No doubt we heard it, but it is quite a mistake, I can assure him. Not in less they are wafted through the airby sense wonderful freak of nature will they ever adorn that village again. In fact, we living in Dutton have heard nothing of the kind I may say I was somewhat surprised at the air of mystery which envelopes the aforesaid article, of which, were it divested, would in my humble opinion leave a bad—nothing. "Crowds can be seen standing on the street corners almost every hour of the day and evening," &c. Ah! such an unusual occurrence for that model village. Perhaps your correspondent is one of the "street cornerites" referred to, and in his day dreams has imagined them hauling back those edifices in which to store away the treasures of their rich mines. Dutton, you are aware, is a small village, sprung up since the Canada Southern ran through, and which is rapidly growing and improving. It is an old saying that a drowning man will catch at a straw in hopes of being yet saved from a watery grave, and methinks, perhaps, we ought to be more charitable towards those unfortunate Wallacestonians who stand on street corners fanning this spark of hope into an ingnivey flame, which will so lighten their eyes as to bring to view a resurrected city with a railroad of its own, while Dutton, alas! will sadly sink into hopeless obscurity. More anon. A SUBSCRIBER.

LONDON GROCERY MARKET.

London, May 22.—In Mincing Lane during the past week business has been restricted owing to the holidays. Public sales of sugar went at fair to rather higher rates for most descriptions. Privately the demand continues good, and quotations in some instances are 6d. higher. Coffee was very dull, only small quantities clearing, and prices of most kinds show a slight decline in buyers favor. Rice was steady, but transactions were limited. Tea was unimproved, but in rather more inquiry.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN TRADE.

Liverpool, May 21.—A leading grain circular says:—"The grain trade during the past week was somewhat inactive, but generally steady. A majority of interior wheat markets were quiet, at the previous rate, and some few hope for occasional improvement. In foreign descriptions the few cargoes remaining at calling ports continue to meet with moderate demand, at rather easier prices. In spot and neighboring markets since Tuesday there has been a limited business. Wheat is unchanged. Corn is held for 1d. advance. There was an unusually small attendance at this market to-day. Wheat was in very limited sale at Tuesday's prices. Flour was quiet and unaltered, and corn in good demand at an improvement of 1d."

ENGLISH WOOL SALES.

London, May 22.—The following is a report, in detail, of the wool sales on Thursday:—3,044 bales New South Wales and Queensland fleece, 1c 4½d to 2s 5½d; scoured, 1s 11d to 2s 5½d; locked and pieces, 1s 4½d to 1s 11½d; greasy, 4½d to 1s 7½d; locks and pieces, 1s 3d to 1s 8½d; 1,761 bales New Zealand fleece, 1s 1d to 2s 3½d; scoured, 1s 7½d to 1s 10½d; greasy, 7½d to 1s 3½d; locks and pieces, 1s 3d to 1s 6½d; lambs, 1s 4d to 1s 7½d; 967 bales Victoria fleece, 1s 4½d to 1s 11d; scoured 1s 9½d to 2s 3½d; locks and pieces, 1s 3d to 1s 8½d; greasy, 9½d to 1s 3½d; 402 bales Tasmania fleece, 1s 3d to 1s 7½d; greasy, 4d to 1s 3½d; lambs, 1s 3d to 1s 6½d; greasy, 11d; 308 bales Cape and Natal fleece, 1s 4½d; scoured, 1s 7½d; greasy, 9d to 10½d; lambs, greasy, 10d.

APPLES AND POTATOES.

Latest English mail advices report recent sales of apples shipped from Montreal to Liverpool at 35s to 40s 6d for Golden Russets; 27s to 27s 6d for Hunlow's Pippins; 35s to 39s for American Pippins, and 38s for Rock Pippins. Wet and wasty stock brought 17s 9d.

Advices from Liverpool by mail report large supplies of potatoes and a consequent decline in values. Part of the 1,000 Canadian potatoes ex SS. Sardinian sold at 5s per cwt. A lot of American sold at 4s for seed purpose. German Reds sold at 5s, and German Whites at 3s 6d.

THE LUMBER TRADE.

Liverpool, May 4.—The month has closed with a strong impression among buyers that prices are going to rule lower; much, however, will depend on the supply and demand in the future. In the early part of the month there was very little attention paid to business, but latterly a slight improvement has shown itself, still a good demand is far from being realized yet; in fact, the consumption now is confined to the winter-filled. Some fields, however, look thin, and on the whole it will be nearly an average crop.

At the regular lodge meeting of the I. O. G. T., on the 19th inst., the following officers were installed for the ensuing quarter by P. Templar Brock:—Bro. C. M. Thompson, W. C. T.; Sis. Kate Broughton, W. V. T.; Bro. Wm. Broughton, Chaplain; Bro. Wm. Hall, R. S.; Bro. — Cooper, W. F. S.; Bro. — Reevely, W. M. Sis. Eliza Storey, W. L. G.; Bro. Cooper, I. O. G.

The anniversary entertainment of the son-denominational Sabbath school, which meets in the Temperance Hall, in the town line between West Nissouri and London, two miles north of Dreaney's Corners, was held on Friday evening, 14th inst. The recitations by the children were well rendered, showing a pretty thorough drill. The singing, also by the children, was excellent. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Robertson, Campbell, Harris, and Rev. C. M. Thompson, of Thamesford. On the whole the entertainment was good, and reflects credit on the Superintendent, Mr. John Robertson, and his staff of helpers.

Mr. Rowe, chemist, ably occupied the chair.

Rev. Mr. Daunte, M. A., Episcopal clergyman, has removed to Thorndale. The minister's daughter, and Mr. Daunte has charge of the Thorndale portion. He will be missed in Thamesford.

INGERSOLL.

May 21st.—Mrs. David Carnfield, aged 80, wife of David Canfield, Esq., Clerk of the Division Court, died at her residence this afternoon of heart disease. Mrs Canfield was down town this morning, and after partaking of dinner she sat down to read a book. After a few minutes Mrs. Wilson discovered she was quite dead. During a life-long residence in Ingersoll she made a large number of true and sincere friends who loved and admired her for her many good qualities. The extremely sudden manner in which she has been taken from our midst, makes the sympathy that is universally expressed for the bereaved ones all the stronger. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn over the late that has bereft them of a kind and affectionate mother, and a true and sincere Christian woman.

There will be a celebration in Ingersoll on the 24th of May. An excursion to Niagara Falls is advertised, which, no doubt, will entice a large crowd from here.

The Alleged Wallacetown Boom.

A DETONITE ON THE SITUATION.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—Would you kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to correct any erroneous impressions your readers may have received from an article by your Wallacetown correspondent in the FREE PRESS of May 10th, concerning the great mining discoveries (?) in that neighborhood. We have heard that some buildings that were moved from this place to Dutton are likely to be moved back (?), writes your correspondent. No doubt we heard it, but it is quite a mistake, I can assure him. Not in less they are wafted through the airby sense wonderful freak of nature will they ever adorn that village again. In fact, we living in Dutton have heard nothing of the kind I may say I was somewhat surprised at the air of mystery which envelopes the aforesaid article, of which, were it divested, would in my humble opinion leave a bad—nothing. "Crowds can be seen standing on the street corners almost every hour of the day and evening," &c. Ah! such an unusual occurrence for that model village. Perhaps your correspondent is one of the "street cornerites" referred to, and in his day dreams has imagined them hauling back those edifices in which to store away the treasures of their rich mines. Dutton, you are aware, is a small village, sprung up since the Canada Southern ran through, and which is rapidly growing and improving. It is an old saying that a drowning man will catch at a straw in hopes of being yet saved from a watery grave, and methinks, perhaps, we ought to be more charitable towards those unfortunate Wallacestonians who stand on street corners fanning this spark of hope into an ingnivey flame, which will so lighten their eyes as to bring to view a resurrected city with a railroad of its own, while Dutton, alas! will sadly sink into hopeless obscurity. More anon. A SUBSCRIBER.

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 24.—1 a. m.—Indications—for the Lower Lake region, fluctuating cloudiness and local rains.

SOCIAL CANUCKS.—The Canadians resident of Chicago are interested in the organization of a Canadian Club, and met at the Pacific on Thursday and adopted a constitution. The following officers were elected:—President, William B. Sullivan, of the Inter Ocean; Vice Presidents, B. Bronsan, sen., Dr. M. D. Ogden; Secretary, Joseph Le Boeuf; Assistant Secretary, Dr. Montgomery Jones; Treasurer, W. F. Peterson; Executive Committee, C. H. Brooke, R. R. Davis, Donald Moodie, J. D. Lizars, Dr. E. J. Ogden, Nathan T. Fitch and Charles W. Cooper.

INAUGURAL MEETING.—The first of a series of Sunday temperance meetings was held in the City Hall yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The attendance was not very large, but was nevertheless encouraging to the ladies, feeling as they do that when the meetings become generally known the hall will be well filled. Mr. John Cameron presided, and in his opening remarks announced the intentions of the Union, and the manner in which the meetings would be conducted. After several hymns had been sung a short address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Dowslie, in which he impressed on temperance people the necessity of personal as well as co-operative work. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Gopland, of London South, who spoke at length on temperance work in a very interesting manner. The meeting was closed, pursuant to announcement, at five o'clock.

A CANADIAN WHO MADE HIS MARK.—The New York World of Saturday says:—"Among the passengers who sailed in the Pacific Mail steamer Aspinwall yesterday were—R. W. J. Wallace MacWhinnie, M. D., and family. The R. W. Brother will proceed from Aspinwall to San Francisco, where he intends to take up his permanent residence. He was initiated in Montgomery Lodge, No. 68, September 21, 1874; passed October 19, and raised November 2. In December, 1875, he was elected S. W., and in December, 1876, was chosen Master, a position he occupied for three consecutive years. At the election of M. W. Charles Rome as Grand Master in June last he was appointed D. D. G. M. of the Fourth Masonic District, a position which he filled with honor to himself and credit to his lodges. A number of prominent Masons were on the dock to wish him a pleasant journey." Mr. MacWhinnie is a native of Woodstock, and brother of Mr. R. MacWhinnie, Collector of Inland Revenue there. The Doctor is also an old newspaper man.

THE USUAL RESULT.—During the rain of Friday, Thomas McDowell thought it was as necessary to have the inside of his body as wet as the outside; but while carrying out this idea there was a sudden cessation of the storm, and the dampness of the interior was so much greater than that of the exterior that Tom succumbed and was borne away to the cells by a cold water living policeman. Explications were made to the P. M., and Mac. went forth with no more confidence in the doctrine which caused his safety wreck. John Arty, an unfortunate sailor-looking old tar, was taken to the station by the policeman on duty at the Mud Scrapers, but a search has been unsuccessful. He would keep his eyes with his hands and peer wistfully about, as though looking away to sea for an incoming boat; then he would shake his head and weep. In order to be properly taken care of he was put up for a month. James Alias Botsy Baker was examined on the charge of stealing a War of books from Wm. McIntyre, previously referred to. After hearing the evidence for the prosecution, the P. M. committed him for trial before the County Judge.

COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS OF ONTARIO.—The following candidates passed before the Board of Examiners of the above College at their final examination:—W. E. Allen, F. H. S. Alma, James Anderson, J. M. Bollard, George Bowman, W. W. Boyce, M. Brownlee, D. C. Buchanan, A. W. Campbell, H. H. Chown, W. S. Clark, G. H. Clemens, L. B. Clomery, George Colquhoun, J. M. Cotton, W. J. Cowan, J. A. Dodsworth, F. P. Dickey, Isaac Judson Ellis, A. Fisher, J. E. Galbraith, J. I. Glendining, John Gordon, T. N. Gowan, H. Hamilton, W. Hall

Grand Review at Quebec.

Sham Fight on the Plains of Abraham.

Royal and Viceregal Praise of the Troops.

A Gala Day in the Gibraltar of America.

Special to the Free Press.

Quebec, May 24.—Contrary to the anticipations of a majority of the inhabitants of and visitors to the city of Quebec, this morning dawned bright and clear, and as the day progressed the sun shone gloriously upon a scene which the ancient capital has not witnessed since the cold bleak day when Montgomery stormed the heights of the Citadel and met a similar death to the gallant Wolfe. The Saturday previous had been characterized by a continued downfall of rain, and the troops having Montreal were thoroughly soaked before reaching the boats which were to convey them to Quebec. And yesterday, although the weather remained fine until evening about 6 o'clock the clouds began to gather, and in a few minutes later umbrellas were as imperative necessity. About two o'clock yesterday (Sunday) morning the S. S. Sardinian sailed into port having on board His Royal Highness Prince Leopold, who therefore arrived in time to assist in and enjoy the celebration to-day. The steam yacht Dolphin conveyed His Excellency the Governor General and H. R. H. Princess Louise and suite to the vessel, where a tender greeting took place between the two brothers and sister. After a few minutes passed in conversation the party returned to the Queen's wharf. There was a strong force consisting of 100 of "B" Battery, the Queen's Own, Canadian Hussars, the city police and the railway of the gunboat Napoleon III. were drawn up to receive them. The Prince was then taken to the Citadel, where he remains as guest of H. R. H. and His Excellency during the day.

Visitors continued to pour into the city until it was estimated that fully 10,000 persons had arrived to crowd the various hotels. Among those may be mentioned Major Gen. Sir E. S. Smith, Major Henry Smith, Captain John Stewart, Princess Louise Dragoon Guards; Sir Alex. Campbell, Minister of Militia; Lord Archibald Campbell, Lieutenant-Col. Freemantle, military secretary of Sir Patrick Macdougall; Marquis de Caraolle, Vicomte de Gard, Baron Martin Du Nord, Hon. Mr. Fogo.

The boats conveying the troops from Montreal were expected to arrive between 8 and 9 o'clock, but owing to the fog did not do so until about 10 o'clock. The steamer Montreal arrived with the 6th Fusiliers, and with whom later the steamers Chilvarous, Three Rivers and Canada hove in sight, bearing the 5th Royal Scots Fusiliers, 1st Prince of Wales Rifles, 2nd Victoria Rifles, Sutton 65th Mount Boyd Rifles respectively. They were received by the Quebec battalions, and marched to their different places where dinner had been prepared for them. The 62nd Battalion, from St. John, N. B., arrived by the Intercolonial Railway about six o'clock. During the evening the military bands gave a sacred concert on Dufferin Terrace, which was, of course, crowded with promenaders.

This morning the various battalions mustered on the wharves, and about 11 o'clock marched to the Plains of Abraham, where the grand review was to be held. At twelve precisely a herald announced the approach of the Governor-General and Princess Louise, and immediately after words His Excellency, H. R. H., and Prince Leopold, attended by a brilliant staff, appeared upon the ground.

The Princess and Marquis were on horseback but Prince Leopold, who is a good looking youngster, wearing a light moustache and imperial, drove in a closed carriage. The Plains and grand stand were black with spectators, but the required space was kept clear without trouble, and the greatest good order was maintained. The troops were immediately drawn up in alignment and inspected by His Excellency and the Princess, after which the distinguished party took up a position at the saluting point. For fully an hour behind the royal standard were stationed Prince Leopold and other notabilities, who had arisen on the approach of the Viceregal party, and remained standing. These were noticed by the Princess, who moved her horse back ward and turning towards them said, with her peculiarly sweet smile, that there was no occasion for them standing any longer, as the official part of the proceedings was over. At the direction of the Marquis the troops formed line before the city, and the movements or manœuvres. A laughable incident occurred just previous to the formation of the troops. Two little gamins, evidently anxious to have a good look at her (the Princess), stationed themselves about two feet in front of her horse and gazed intently into her face. They remained standing for about five minutes before they were noticed by the police. Her Royal Highness then beckoned to one of the children carefully, for she laughed very heartily. The march past was then proceeded with.

The march past, which was done in excellent style and time, consisted the first part of the review, and preparations were then made for the sham battle. Her Royal Highness retired to the walls of the Citadel in order to obtain a view of the proceedings, while His Excellency remain on the ground with his staff. A sham battle is at all times a delightful affair, but in the present case it was made unnecessarily so. The plan of attack and defence was good, but the details were badly carried out. The attacking force were supposed to storm the approaches to the Citadel, succeed in their efforts for a while, but to be finally driven back along the St. Louis road. Little attempt was made to take advantage of the nature of the ground. Skirmishers took possession of the most exposed places on which to make a stand. Battalions grouped together in the centre of a valley, and bore a withering fire from the enemy on the heights above with the most dignified unconcern without replying with a single shot, and remaining until there was sufficient time to kill the last man before a retrograde movement was made. Guns were limbered up and driven away with the greatest alacrity in face of an approaching enemy. At the conclusion of the fight the troops were reassembled on the Plains, where they were addressed in congratulatory terms by His Excellency the Governor-General. Finally they marched off the grounds along the St. Louis road to the city, preceded by the Marquis and staff, and the great review was over.

In the evening the officers of the visiting troops were given a dinner by the officers of the resident battalions. The Montreal and St. John regiments left for home late in the afternoon.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.

How it Was Celebrated in the Western Counties.

General Notes on the Holiday Elsewhere.

ST. THOMAS.

From our Special Correspondent.

The anniversary of Her Majesty's birthday was celebrated at St. Thomas in an appropriate manner, the principal amusements, however, being confined to the east end of the town.

The day was inaugurated in the usual manner with ringing of bells, firing of cannon, fire-crackers and other infernal missiles.

At 9 o'clock the fire brigade, comprising Torrent Fire Company, Hook and Ladder Company and the Collegiate Institute Cadets, assembled at the Market Square, and having formed into rank marched in procession along Talbot street, headed by the Battalion Band.

CLAY PIGEON SHOOTING.

The Clipper Gun Club held a glass ball shooting match at the east end, 10 balls each, the score being as follows:—A. M. Petet, 10; A. White, 8; W. A. Dier, 8; G. Favel, 7; G. Bapley, 7; J. Robinson, 7; Smale, 4; A. Baird, 2; E. Waite, 2.

LACROSSE MATCH.

A lacrosse match had been arranged to be played in the C. S. R. park, between the St. Thomas Club and an Indian team; but as the Aborigines failed to put in an appearance, an exhibition game was substituted between two twelves of the club, captained by J. Haight and T. Ferry respectively, the former winning in two straight goals.

PIGEON SHOOTING.

In the afternoon the St. Thomas Gun Club held the first pigeon shooting match of the season on the Agricultural grounds, for the club cup and a sweepstakes divided into three prizes. The conditions were, as usual, 21 yards rise, 80 yards boundary, 10 birds each.

The tie between Messrs. Barnes and Comfort resulted in the former taking the cup and first prize; Mr. Comfort taking the second. For third prize, Messrs. Slover, Clapp, Carr and White shot off, Mr. Slover winning the money.

A glass ball match then took place between teams of seven men, captained by J. Robinson and L. H. Clapp. Score:

RIFLE SHOOTING.

A shooting match took place at the range under the auspices of the St. Thomas Rifle Club, several valuable prizes being offered for competition, the principal prize-money being the medal donated to the club by the Dominion Rifle Association. This was won by Mr. James Bradley.

ON THE TURF HOPE.

During the day Messrs. Cromwell and Moore, assisted by a young man Curtis, gave a novel and daring exhibition upon a tight rope stretched across Talbot street, in front of the Elgin House. The most astonishing feats of skill and daring were executed upon the rope by these artists with wonderful grace and an utter absence of fear, while the trapeze and cloud swing were brought into requisition to give additional colat to the thrilling display.

ATHLETIC SPORTS.

During the afternoon a series of athletic sports came off along Talbot street, and were witnessed by a large throng of people. Among those events were the following:—

Foot race, one mile—1st, James O'Reilly; 2nd, H. Brady.

Boys' race, one hundred yards—1st Haggett Cochrane; 2nd, James McIntosh; 3rd, L. Tarrent.

FIREWORKS.

The programme of the occasion terminated with a grand display of fireworks in the evening, and after this social dance in the large throng quietly separated.

During the day the 25th Battalion band, under the leadership of Mr. W. Brownell, enlivened the proceedings with choice selections of music.

ST. MARY'S.

By our own Reporter.

With accustomed energies, St. Mary's prepared for her citizens an excellent programme, whereby they might fittingly celebrate her Majesty's birthday, and in carrying it out there seemed to be the fullest satisfaction on the part of all concerned. From the opening salute of the small boy with his fire-crackers until the closing parade of the town band, the enjoyment was universal. In the morning there was everything to remind one of real old time Queen's birthdays; as each by the unusual stir among the youthful celebrants as the good shades which the more elderly pleasure-seekers wore. The surviving members of the once famous Actives played a go as-you-please race ball match on the flats, which was unfortunately interrupted by the collapse of the ball and the importune arrival of the Fire Brigade. The latter had turned out to exhibit their new Ronald steamer, and in the presence of a large number of spectators threw two powerful streams through several hundred feet of hose. They appeared to be an efficient body of men, in whom the inhabitants of the youthful stone city can rely at all times for protection from the ravages of fire. In the afternoon the objective point of immigration seemed to be the race course, and by two o'clock there were over one thousand persons on the grounds, many of whom were Londoners and visitors from surrounding localities.

Shortly after one o'clock the five mile foot race, or in other words a walking match, open to all comers, was begun, the entrants being Messrs J. Babcock, Stratford; J. B. Grayson, London; J. Kibley, Stratford; A. B. Forde, St. Marys; S. B. Fossett, and Thomas Nicholson, London. The runners were all fine looking men and made a good showing on the first mile; too good for their own sakes, for several of them gave out before the race was half over. Grayson led with his well known quick trot, which served him until the end. Second place was keenly contested for by Kibley, Nicholson and Fossett, all of whom ran well. Babcock was ruled off with a sponge on his head, an objectionable, which were restricted to him, in winning the race; but the London boys took the joke off as he rode. At the end the points were theoretical as Officer Grayson was 210; Kibley 35; Nicholson 84, and Fossett 98.

The horse races opened with the farmers' trot, and three out of five heats to win, for purses of $60, $30 and $10, was called on. Doyle's Sam Slick, Joe Mitchelltree's Sam, of London, and Dr. Barkett's Dolly Brae, of Thamesville, were the only horses that came upon the track. Doyle's little black was liked, and the big chestnut was in good trim. Sam Slick led until near the close, owing to Sam's nervousness, but he was overtaken and beaten on the home stretch. The doctor couldn't get his mare to start and took her off the track. Time of race, 2 46½.

In the second heat of the farmers' trot Sam Slick got right up and distanced, leaving Batey so far behind that he was able to walk in from the last fifteen rods. This showed the relative abilities of the two animals and although this left it a tie the race was henceforward a foregone conclusion.

The second heat of the business trot was more interesting than the first. O'Leary showed Dolly ahead at the start, with Nelly close at her heels, Tom next, and Dan in the rear. Doyle gave the latter the signal at the half-mile, however, and he forged ahead without any trouble, winning his second heat after a mile of somewhat trotting. Dolly, who trotted with a peculiar nervous gait, made a good second, with Nelly, a fine big grey mare, third, and Tom fourth.

The open running race, mile dashes, came next in order. Tastes differ, but for genuine excitement a run catches the popular eye; there is so much of will expression about it. The entries were J. Doyle's Lady Byron, of London; J. Devereaux Gulfdish, of St. Mary's; Sheriff's Thomas Wasmuth, and J. W. Cathcart's Ada Bell, do. Lorry got Warmenby to the front during the first third, with Ada Bell at his heels, Lady Byron holding back, and Gulfdish a poor fourth. But blood told, and at the last half Byron was called for ahead by the veteran jockey. Ada Bell, and O'Leary ran his big mare in a good second. Ada Bell ran well, but like Gulfdish, appeared to lack the necessary training.

As expected, Sam Slick took the third heat of the farmers' trot without any serious exertion on his own part or opposition from his less handsome contestant.

Nelly led off in the third heat of the business trot, and although she was closely pursued by Nelly, managed to keep it until the three-quarter pole, when Little Dan took all responsibility in the leading business off their shoulders, and passed under the string, fully fifty yards ahead of any of them. Dolly came in second, Nelly third, and Tom fourth. Time 2 47½.

The open trot for horses that have never beaten 2 45, best three in five, for purses of $60, $30 and $10, was called on. Doyle's Sam Slick, Joe Mitchelltree's Sam, of London, and Dr. Barkett's Dolly Brae, of Thamesville, were the only horses that came upon the track. Doyle's little black was liked, and the big chestnut was in good trim. Sam Slick led until near the close, owing to Sam's nervousness, but he was overtaken and beaten on the home stretch. The doctor couldn't get his mare to start and took her off the track. Time of race, 2 46½.

In the second heat of the running race, the four horses got a pretty start and were past the judges' stand at a terrific pace. Tweedy ran Lady Byron to the front from the start, with O'Leary's scarlet close behind. Both jockeys rode beautifully, and the sight was both interesting and exciting as they came down the home stretch amid the cheers of the spectators. The little blood mare carried off the first prize, Warmenby second, and Ada Bell third. Time 1:56½.

In the second heat of the farmers' trot Sam Slick got right up and distanced, leaving Batey so far behind that he was able to walk in from the last fifteen rods. This showed the relative abilities of the two animals and although this left it a tie the race was henceforward a foregone conclusion.

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND.

This journal was the first to point to the defects of the present regulations and laws respecting the superannuation fund for the Ontario teachers. Whether the fund be large or small, and the provision certainly moderate enough, it should at least be so administered as to do the greatest amount of good, both to the cause of education as to the members of the teachers' profession. As it is now managed, or rather held it open to assault on both points, and it is to be hoped that the Government will be induced to consider the subject carefully with a view to secure a more equitable administration of the fund. It requires but little knowledge of the teachers' life to know, that many are incapacitated for the active duties of the profession before they reach the venerable age of sixty years, and who may yet find it impossible to procure medical certificates to the effect, that this incapacity has its origin in sickness. Cases of this kind are not rare, and every such case is a grievance, a palpable injustice, which demands an immediate remedy. Then, as the supply of teachers in this Province is much in advance of the demand, and as the agencies now in active operation are likely to add largely to this supply every year, how are old, worn out teachers, between fifty and sixty years of age to secure employment? If forty years' service does not tell upon the capacity of a teacher for work, then that teacher has been singularly gifted, both as regards mental and physical powers. Unless among those who are active, diligent students all their lives, half a score years will leave them as antiquated in manner as they are feeble in body, and in neither one view nor the other are they likely to compete successfully with younger and perhaps much better qualified men.

These views were no doubt present to the minds of the teachers assembled in convention in Picton, Prince Edward, on the 19th of the present month, and we are glad to see that they have taken form in resolutions to be forwarded to the Minister of Education. They are in substance what the FREE PRESS has already advocated on more than one occasion, and the various teachers institutes, as they meet, would act wisely in taking united action on this subject. These resolutions are as follows:—

1st. That twenty-five years' service in the profession, or having reached the age of fifty, should entitle a teacher to participate in the superannuation fund.

2nd. That the widows of all superannuated teachers should be entitled to no less than three-fourths of the yearly allowance granted to their husbands.

3rd. That no part of the yearly subscriptions to the funds should be repaid to teachers who retire from the profession before ten years' service.

4th. That in case a tax be imposed for candidates for certificates, the money so paid should go to supplement the superannuation fund, and,

5th. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Hon. the Minister of Education.

The first and second of these cannot be too much insisted on by all the Ontario teachers, whether they belong to the public or high schools of the Province; the third is at least open to discussion, though there is really nothing of injustice in it, when properly considered. It must not be forgotten that the profession is, in many instances every year, used simply as a stepping stone to something higher, at least in their estimation, and surely that which furnishes them with the means of gratifying their own ambition, is worth paying four dollars a year for while they use it. Besides these parties are not likely to be as efficient and conscientious in the discharge of their duties, as they who take up teaching as a permanent profession, and as they are butchers of passage, and care not to make for themselves a name in the profession, their duties will, in most cases, be performed in a perfunctory manner, and therefore their exclusion from the ranks would be no loss to the country nor the profession. However this affects but little the leading questions, and it is doubtful whether it is wise to weigh the more important principles by questions of trifling value. As respects the fourth, it will be quite soon enough to discuss the appropriation of the proceeds when the tax shall have been imposed and found productive. The teachers of the Province will do well to confine their efforts to the reform indicated by the first and second of these resolutions; both are just and considerate in spirit; both are calculated to improve the condition of the teacher directly, and the profession indirectly, as these will have a tendency to keep the best members of the profession from abandoning it from the conviction, only too well founded, that a provision for old age is difficult to secure, while a provision for a widow is altogether overlooked, and what goes directly to the improvement of the teacher's profession is more likely to be for the benefit of the community generally.

COST OF OCEAN TRANSIT.

It is remarked that although new and improved facilities are constantly being adopted on the great transatlantic steamship lines, and the competition between the companies appears to be keen, these never bring about any reduction in the rates of passage. Twenty years ago the rates asked for first-class passage were lower than they are now, yet since that time a revolution has taken place in ocean transportation by steam. The vessels have an infinitely greater carrying capacity, are built upon a better model, are rigged so as to take advantage of favoring winds, and have engines which for much greater work need only about half the quantity of coal formerly required to drive a ship across the Atlantic. The effect of these various economies has been strikingly shown in the reduction of the rates of freight; but, for some unaccountable reason, these have thus far failed to have any effect upon the rates of first-class passage. In 1860, the average price of this was $75, rising in certain instances, for superior state-room accommodations, to $90. Now, the average price might be put at $80, with an increase in some instances to $100. The average rate for steerage passage was then $50, and might now be placed at $28, thus showing a slight decline. Batt is safe to say that in the interval since 1860 freight rates have fallen off more than 50 per cent., and hence it appears that the advantage of improved steam transportation has been a one-sided one, turning almost wholly to the benefit of the shippers of freight. It is highly probable that if one of the leading steamship companies could be assured of having 100 or 200 cabin passengers for each trip during the year they could put the price of passage as low as $40 and make for themselves a good return of the venture. One present trouble is, that they are forced to make their money during six months in the year, while in the other six the numerous state-rooms and large saloons of their steamers are relatively empty. Where they are at fault is in not holding out greater inducements to winter travelers. They do in certain cases put down their prices to $60, but they should do better if they came down materially below that figure. As to steerage passage, the price now is much too high, for the space that the immigrants occupy is usually taken up by freight when they are not on board. Coming in the numbers that they now do, no money would be lost if they were taken for $18 each, and if this incoming flood continues it is quite likely that a competition from outside steamers will spring up which will reduce the price of steerage passage far below its present level, for as it now stands it offers a larger promise of profit than any business in which the owners of ocean steamers can engage.

The Clevelaand Board of Works has decreed that nothing but stone pavements shall be laid down in that city; but on account of the excessive cost a strong popular movement has been set on foot to use cedar blocks instead. The Press, advocating this form of pavement, says:—"Cedar block pavement, properly laid, has proven a cheap and substantial pavement. Its durability, when thoroughly put down, is from ten to fifteen years, with little or no repairs. Here on the lakes, where cedar is so cheap and so easily obtained, it is much to be preferred, and it would enable property owners to pave every important residence and every minor business street in the city without impoverishing themselves. Cedar blocks, ordinary wood, concrete, asphalt and stone pavement have all been thoroughly tested in both Chicago and Detroit, and a trip to those cities by the Board of Improvements and the City Engineer might give them some new ideas on the subject. Chicago and Detroit have the most miles of pavement, in proportion to their respective sizes, of any two cities in the West. Detroit leads Chicago, and she is the most economically governed city of her size in the United States. Drive in whatever direction you will in the City of the straits, and you will find solid, level, cedar block pavement, even on unimportant residence streets clear out in the suburbs.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, convened at Saratoga last year, convened in Madison, Wis., last week. It consists of nearly 600 delegates, ministers and elders, from the thirty eight synods of this country, which included 179 presbyteries. The strength of the denomination may be known by a few figures. In 1879 there were 5,115 churches, 4,893 ministers, 574,486 communicants, and 614,774 Sunday school members. To support these churches $6,211,768 was contributed by their congregations, while to home missions $700,000 was given, and to foreign missions $661,659. For all purposes the amount of money raised aggregated $8,360,013. In connection with the denomination are thirteen theological seminaries, with 534 students for the year, and 161 were graduated. The consideration of all these interests some within the scope of the General Assembly. One of the most important subjects to come up during this session will be the report of the committee appointed in 1878 to revise the form of government and book discipline. The assembly will probably remain in session about two weeks.

A new cheap fuel is described by the Boston Journal of Commerce which says that the fuel used for generating steam at a brewery in that city is twenty per cent. soft coal and eighty per cent. green peat dug directly from the swamp. A pressure of seventy or eighty pounds is carried, and the proprietor reports a saving of over fifty per cent. between the burning of this mixed fuel and anthracite coal. The peat costs 92 per car load for digging and loading, and the railroad charges $7 per car for hauling from the bog, and a further expense of $1 per car is incurred for carting to the firm room. The reporter saw the fuel burning, and says the gas was carried nearly or quite the whole length of the boiler. Another large brewery near the one alluded to is arranging to adopt the use of the same fuel.

There are still serious complaints of illtreatment of steerage passengers on some of the leading lines. Paul and Sebastian Werner and six other German steerage passengers by the California, which arrived in New York on Friday, made a formal complaint against that vessel. They say that, owing to the crowds of immigrants awaiting transportation at the German ports, they and 300 more of their fellow-countrymen went to London and sailed on the California. The meals furnished were not according to the contract. The cooking was unclean. Dirty Italians were employed to peel the potatoes, and dirty English cattle drivers to serve the meals. The food was not given out in sufficient quantities. The meat and potatoes were of poor quality.

Telegram:—Commercial men are far from pleased with the position of affairs since the repeal of the Insolvent Act. Under the old law, which now governs failures, an insolvent trader may protect one creditor at the expense of the rest by so arranging it that the debt held by the preferred creditor shall be the only ones coming due at the time the failure takes place. This is alleged to have been done by a Paisley dealer the other day. Another thing is that if all the creditors agree, a trader may get off on the payment of a few cents on the dollar, while if one creditor holds out against him he cannot get off, no matter how much he pays short of dollar for dollar.

A New York genius has devised a new method of securing a jury in murder cases. He proposes to have a panel of forty-eight men drawn, examined and sworn in the usual way. These are to sit together and hear the evidence, just as the twelve do now, but when the case is closed twelve of them are to be drawn by lot and retire to deliberate. If they agree, that ends the case; if they do not, twelve more are drawn, and the process is repeated as often as necessary until an agreement is reached or the panel gives out.

CROPS AND MARKETS.

The old rhyme says:—"A cold, wet May fills the barns with grain and hay." These conditions already give promise of fulfilment. Owing to the late cool rains all kinds of vegetation have been greatly advanced. The wheat in some parts is heading out, fully a fortnight ahead of the usual time, and gives evidence of a rich yield to come. The meadows, too, were never more luxuriant than now. It promises to be a great year for the obverse interest, and on account of the high prices maintained butter makers are giving up that line and devoting themselves to the kindred industry. The rage for cheese making amongst our farmers has left the supply of good butter in our market shorter than it has been at this season for ten years past. Cheese at present rates is considered to be a safer and more profitable product for export than butter, though there is no reason why, with proper handling, Canadian butter should not be sent abroad at a high profit. The British and foreign market is a perpetual and ready absorbent of these commodities. Englishmen have a better appetite for foreign eatables now than formerly, and the better table which the British artisan ate down to is largely furnished with Canadian food products. The British yearly consumption of foreign butter has advanced from 15 pr head thirty years ago, to six and one-half pounds per head, and the demand is still growing. And the same is to be said of the British consumption of foreign cheese. John Bull now uses more tea and sugar, and more wheat flour than ever before. The choice, grain-fed steers of this country are received by him with little less favor than the prime cattle of home breeding, and a great deal more room is given to the fresh fish of South American and Australian cattle. The great Atlantic ferries and our leading lines of railway have practically, as far as good supply is concerned, annexed the English Shires to this Dominion. To all intents and purposes the intervening leagues of brine have been bridged, and bonds of mutual interest more firmly established between Canada and the Mother Country than ever before.

The Globe's Ottawa special states that ten thousand copies of the report of Mr. Blake's speech on the Pacific Railway question are being printed there for exclusive circulation in the Maritime Provinces. It may be added that the Western Provinces have been already well furnished with copious extracts by the scouts of the Kansas speculators. The efforts of these agents, it appears, have not gone far enough, and are to be supplemented in the way stated by the Globe's correspondent. "Horrah for Kansas!" is the newest Grit motto.

THE CROPS.

Sarnia and Lambton County.

The fall wheat promises well, especially on well drained lands. On untrained lands it has suffered in places. There is very little spring wheat planted this season, owing to the almost entire failure of this crop the last two years. Oats have been largely sown. The fields look well in this locality, and there is an excellent home market for all that can be raised. Barley has not been so extensively planted as in some former years. What is sown looks well. Clover has suffered severely, being thrown out of the ground by the frost in many places. Timothy meadows have a splendid appearance. Fruit trees promise well, and if we escape the late frosts the yield will be great. Vegetation is well advanced for the season. The crops have been got in in good order, and the outlook for 1880 was never better for the historical swamps of Lambton. This county is also fully adapted for cattle raising, and many of the best farmers are giving considerable to the business. They find that it pays better than grain. Mr. Henry Cash, a farmer near Thedford, sold the Duke of Cornwall, R. M. during their recent wanderings, one hundred dollars, and many similar sales are reported. The cheese industry promises a good return for the year, given to the factory. We are of the opinion that the early sales will be the best.

The Interest Act.

The following is the Act, as finally passed last session, relating to interest on moneys secured by mortgage on real estate:—

Whereas doubts have arisen as to certain provisions concerning interest on moneys secured by mortgage of real estate; therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Whenever any principal money or interest secured by mortgage of real estate is by the same made payable on the whole or any part of any term or time under which the payments of principal money and interest are blended, or on any plan which involves an allowance of interest on stipulated repayments, no interest whatever shall be chargeable, payable or recoverable, as any part of the principal money advanced, unless the mortgage or other deed or instrument in writing out of such principal money and the rate of interest chargeable thereon, calculated yearly or half yearly, not in advance.

2. Whenever the rate of interest shown in the abatement referred to in the next preceding section is less than the rate of interest which would be chargeable by virtue of any other provision, calculation or stipulation in the mortgage, then the greater rate of interest shall be chargeable, payable and recoverable on the principal money advanced than the rate shown in the said statement.

3. No fine or penalty or rate of interest shall be stipulated for, taken, reserved or exacted on any arrear of principal or interest which shall be in default of increasing the charge on any such arrear beyond the rate of interest payable on principal money not in arrear, provided always, that nothing in this section contained shall have the effect of prohibiting a contract for the payment, in the event of any such arrear of interest or principal at any rate not greater than the rate payable on principal money not in arrear.

4. In case any sum is paid on account of any interest, fine or penalty not chargeable, payable or recoverable under the foregoing sections, such sums may be recovered back or deducted from any other interest, fine or penalty chargeable, payable or recoverable on the principal.

5. Whenever any principal money or interest secured by mortgage of real estate is not, under the terms of the mortgage, payable till a time more than five years after the date of the mortgage, then in case at any time after the expiration of such five years any person liable to pay or entitled to redeem the mortgage, tenders or pays to the person entitled to receive the money the amount due for principal money, and interest to the time of payment as calculated under the foregoing sections, together with three months' further interest in lieu of notice, no further interest shall be chargeable, payable or recoverable at any time thereafter on the principal money or interest due under the mortgage.

6. This Act shall apply to all moneys secured by mortgage on real estate executed after the first day of July, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty.

...Mlle. X., of one of the Parisian theatres, asked leave of absence for a few days. She wished, she said, to mourn for her mother, who had just died. The congé was granted. The next day the director of the theatre met the actress in a ravishing toilet of fresh, bright colors. "It was very bad of you to abuse my confidence in this manner," he said. "Your mother is just dead, you say, and here I find you in the gayest costume." "Monsieur," responded the young artiste, "I declare I did not deceive you. Mama is certainly dead, but then, you see, she died in Bretagne, and you ought to know that custom does not compel one to wear mourning for a distant relation."

...A savage disposition is inherited by horses as well as by men. Tims Meloy Edris, who bit the jockey Archer so severely at Newmarket the other day, has in his veins the blood of Edmund, got by the Libel. In 1845, "Merry Monarch's year," the Libel, at the starting post, flew at Mr. Greville's Alarm, which was the favorite, with open mouth, drove him over the rails, and mortified his celebrated jockey, Flatman. Later on, the late Duke of Bedford's Golden Drop killed Flatman in the ring, and certainly previously, if he did not cause his death.

Imposing Masonic Ceremony.

Laying of the Foundation Stone of a New Cathedral in England.

The Prince of Wales' Speech—A Gorgeous Sight.

London, May 23. Certainly the most interesting event of the week was the laying of the foundation stone of Truro cathedral yesterday by the Prince of Wales, whose title, the Duke of Cornwall, made his invitation to and presence at the ceremony peculiarly appropriate. The event was made still more interesting from the fact that this is the first cathedral erected in England since the Reformation. The ceremony was unusually splendid. The chief features were the grand Masonic rites, the Prince being Grand Master of England, and the princely state and religious rites which, with almost barbaric pomp and glitter, marked every phase of the proceedings. Brilliant weather added lustre to the scene. Truro was decorated in flags and triumphal arches with Masonic and loyal mottoes. The Prince, wearing his Masonic robes of purple, heavy with gold embroidery, was received at the royal pavilion by the Bishop and clergy, clad in their white surplices and scarlet academic hoods. The members of the Grand Lodge, in their dresses of crimson, blue, green and purple, with gold chains and enamelled jewels, flanked the pavilion. Behind them were the white robed choir and choral philharmonic societies. The Princess of Wales was dressed in a light sage green and gold. Her two sons, who wore the uniforms of naval cadets, stood in advance of her. Then a line of officers in their uniforms of scarlet and gold, ladies in brilliant toilets, and civic dignitaries in their official robes, made the scene one of striking splendor. As the trumpets sounded the first notes of the National Anthem, the cannon roared in reply. The Prince then advanced to lay the foundation stone and delivered the following speech to the assembled Masons:—

"Brethren,—We are an ancient fraternity, which from the earliest days has been identified with all that is beautiful and grand in architecture. You will, therefore, be proud to have aided me, as I have been proud to work with you, in commencing a building which by the beauty of its design and the solidity of its construction will, we think, be an ornament to this city and Province for centuries to come. But, brethren, it is something far more than this. It is a temple to be erected to the glory and worship of our Heavenly Father, the great Architect and Creator of all things; and whatever minor differences may be among us, I feel sure that the same spirit must be in your minds this day which animated the Jewish old, when, as Kerbrius us, the builders laid the foundations of the temples of the Lord and they sat the priests in their apparel with trumpets to praise the Lord, after the ordinances of David, King of Israel, and they sang together in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord because He is good, for His mercy endureth forever; and all the people shouted with a great shout when they praised the Lord, because the foundations of the House of the Lord were laid."

Then, addressing the Bishop, His Royal Highness said:—"My Lord Archbishop, brethren and friends,—Be it known to you that we are lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of our country. Although we are sometimes operative Masons, we have from time immemorial been associated with buildings to be raised for the benefit of mankind, the adornment of the world, and the glory of the Great Architect of the Universe. We have among us secrets concealed from those who are not Masons, but they are lawful and honorable and not opposed to the laws either of God or man. They were entrusted to Masons in ancient times, and having been faithfully transmitted to us, it is our duty to convey them inviolate to our posterity. We are assembled here today in presence of you all to erect a house for the worship of the Prince of the Most High, which we pray that God may prosper as it seems good to Him."

The Prince then called upon the Grand Secretary to read the inscription on the plate over the cavity stone:—"This corner stone of the Cathedral Church of St. Mary of Truro is placed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Cornwall, R. W. Most worshipful Grand Master of the A. F. & A. Masons of England, 24th May, 1880."

The Grand Treasurer then deposited a bottle containing coins, and a copy of the order-in-council creating the See of Truro.

The Earl of Mount Edgecumbe then handed the Prince a silver trowel bearing the several arms of the Grand Lodge, of the county, of the Bishop, of the city, and of the Prince. A smooth mortar stone was lowered, and the Prince applied the plumb and rule with the customary Masonic ritualism. The Princess then received purses from ladies contributing not less than £5 sterling. Each of the presentation purses carried with it the honor of an introduction to the Princess, and consequently the subscriptions were heavy.

A Panther Slayer.

Four Ferocious Animals Killed One After the Other.

(Spc. Butler Creek Oregon Enterprise.

A few days ago Mr. Haugh, who lives near Reuk's mills, started for Beaver lake to get some cedar timber. He had along a large-bored rifle, a little rat terrier and a fine bird dog, and as he passed through a large patch of brush, the dog, which had scented something, started in pursuit. Before Mr. Haugh had time to load he heard the big dog barking at something about two hundred yards off, down the hillside. On going to where it was he saw the biggest panther he ever saw—a very large female. She was growling and snapping her teeth at the dogs so much that she formed the most unique picture he had ever seen. It was difficult to get a good shot, but on firing she came down and the limb on which she was with her. As she ran off the dogs followed her, and on coming up with them he saw her on a stump about twenty-five feet from the ground. Mr. Haugh shot again, but, as no vital spot was struck, it only succeeded in making her growl and lash her tail fiercer than ever. On looking for a bullet Mr. Haugh found that he had only half a bullet left, with which he had to make a successful shot or lose his game. His patching was all gone as well, so, tearing off part of the lining of his coat, he put it round the bullet and rammed it home. Taking careful aim he fired. This time he saw the huge beast tumble to the ground to be seized by the dogs. She seized the big dog by the scalp with one paw, and had succeeded in tearing the scalp nearly off when death put an end to her struggle. The last one, on being measured, was over nine feet long from tip to tip. All the panthers were full grown, except one, which was only about two-thirds grown. They were all killed within two hours.

...A considerable steel-making industry exists in the present day in China, on the Upper Yangtze, whence the steel is sent to Tien-tsin for shipment and distribution. It fetches much higher prices than the Swedish steel imported into the country. The Chinese metallurgists recognize three kinds of steel, namely, that which is produced by adding manganese to wrought iron while the mass is subject to the action of fire, pure iron many times subjected to fire, and native steel, which is produced in the southwest. The different names for steel are kwan kang, or ball steel, from its rounded form; kwan kang, or sprinkled steel; wut tse, or false steel. The Chinese, apparently have known how to make natural steel from the very earliest ages.

UNITED STATES ITEMS.

Red Cloud, Spotted Tail and ten other Sioux chiefs are waiting at Rosebud Landing, Dakota Territory, for a boat to take them to Yankton, whence they will go to Washington to discuss the proposition to permit railroads to run through the Sioux reservation.

In a women's foot race at San Francisco, two of the contestants, Howard and Tobias, quarrelled violently on the track threatened to whip each other, and finally began to cry, all of which the spectators seemed to enjoy as a pleasing break in the monotony of the show.

A man was struck down by paralysis in a Michigan sawmill. His fall across a log which was being sawed, and was carried with it slowly but surely to the saw. He was conscious, but utterly helpless. The saw had cut half way through his arm when his awful predicament was discovered.

A curious car on the Boston and Albany Railroad is provided with various devices for testing speed, strains, clearances, distance, and other matters connected with the running of trains. Different pens, attached to ingenious machinery, record the distance and time, the slips of the driving wheels on the rails, the exact elevation of the outside rail at every curve, and many other points of valuable information in practical railroading.

A little company of men and women in Newton, Mr., the other day, engaged in an impromptu discussion of the question, "Why didn't the lions eat Daniel?" One side maintained that the reason was because Daniel was too good; and the other that the lions were not hungry. The upshot of the matter was that they got into a wrangle, and the police were called in to suppress the row. They carried one man to jail for striking one of the women.

The Boston Fire Department has adopted a simple but useful apparatus known as a "jumping cloth," to be used in catching people jumping from burning buildings. It consists of a sheet of strong duck about ten feet square, with convenient arrangements around the edges for the men to hold it by. The duck is strengthened by wide stripe sewed diagonally from corner to corner. The cloths occupy but little space when folded, and are easily carried with the fire apparatus.

Buckley is a Texas horse thief and murderer, for whom the law officers searched long and fruitlessly. A man called himself as a friend of the outlaw, and said that he was prepared to buy his pardon by giving information against other criminals. The Governor was inclined to make such a bargain, and sent him to the Attorney-General, who recognized him as none other than Buckley himself. The rascal drew a long knife out of his boating, but was overpowered and locked up.

The representatives of the Press to-night saw Courtney at his hotel. He looked very bad, having a pallid face, and talking like a man whose breath was nearly gone. He said he had no excuse for losing the race. He had only attempted to row because Biddle had begged him to go on the course if he only rowed ten yards. He was sick all the way through and his head hurt him excessively. He supposed his exertions in the sun had disabled him, and, after fulfilling existing engagements, he proposed never to row another race.—Dispatch to the Philadelphia Press.

Lem Offatt shot his father-in-law, Richard Evans, at Georgetown, Ky., two years ago. The bullet lodged in Evans' spine, paralyzing him, and thus making him an almost helpless cripple for life. He said nothing about vengeance, refused to appear in court as complainant, and it was generally supposed that he forgave his assailant. But Lem kept carefully away from him. This spring, Evans was able to ride out in an easy wagon; and he was observed that he always had a cocked pistol lying in his lap, and closely scanned every man who came in sight. He went looking for Lem, and on finally meeting him in the road, he sent a ball directly through his heart.

The English Derby.

In view of running two colts in the Derby says the London Sportsman, May 10, the Duke of Westminster has registered second racing colors. His Grace's new livery is yellow, black sleeves and cap. Which is, of course, a rather pretty combination of the Eaton Hall banner proper and, with only a single point now divating Bend Or and Muncaster in the quotations on the Epsom race, speculation is pretty certain to be rife as to which of the two sons of Dumbarton will be entrusted the bearing of the very familiar "yellow jacket and black cap." By virtue of his not having known defeat, and by reason of Archer having been asked to ride him during the winter months, Bend Or has the right to be the "boy in yellow," on the fast approaching 26th, but it is the circumstance of the colt encountering much hostility in the market, coupled with the fact that heavy metal has been asked for Muncaster about his second in the Two Thousand, that has led to the notion that Bend Or might not be the champion of the interests of Russley on the eventful day. Some people have the notion that Bend Or's work for some time past has not been altogether consistent with a Derby preparation, but Robert Peck must be allowed to know his own business best, and as he has had more of Muncaster's progeny through his hands than any other trainer he should be better qualified to speak with authority as to the quantity and extent of the gallops they require to get thoroughly fit. The mighty Doncaster was prepared himself prepared at Russley for every race in which he ran, and Robert Peck had doubtless to exercise all his training knowledge in regard to the Derby winner of 1878, for the son of Stockwell never ran as a two-year old, but came to hand wonderfully between running unplaced for the Two Thousand and winning the Derby. There is just some suspicion that Bend Or might not have been absolutely one of the most favorable horses in training when he left off as a juvenile, but if there had been anything radically wrong it must have been discovered ere this, and the assurance of those who should know most about him is that he has been neither sick nor sorry for a single day since his last appearance in public. Despite this, however, the laying of so much money against the colt has by no means had a reassuring effect upon his admirers, though plenty of people have stuck to him ever since the afternoon when he made a successful debut by winning the Chesterfield Stakes at the Newmarket July meeting. He won all the races after the fashion of a good racehorse, and if he has gone on well he will win the Derby, though with the least thing amiss with him a ready conqueror to the unbeaten one would be found in Beaudesert, than whom, it is said, there is not at the present time a better three-year-old in training.

Loving the Prairies—and Who Does Not?

Burdette in Hawkeye.

Do you suppose that men ever learn to love the prairies? That is as they love the mountains? Love them so they grow homesick away from them? So their hearts live in the prairies and throb anew at the sight of them, and echo with a dumb longing for them when they leave them, and grow to them as the heart of the mountaineer grows to his hills? Well, they do. You will find men out here who are infatuated with these fertile plains, who could not be lured to live away from them. I have a friend in Larned, Kansas, —Major Inman of the Chronoscope—who is a type of the true sons of the prairies. I have asked him the same questions I have asked in the foregoing paragraphs.

"Love the prairies," he cries, his fine face mantling with a glow of genuine enthusiasm. "I worship them. I live in tender and affectionate awe of their immensity. We dwellers of the prairies live between two heavens, one of matchless green beneath our feet, and one of the fadeless blue above our heads, and circling around us we see them fade into each at the horizon. I ride over the prairie, I drink in the clear pure air laden with health and life, the free winds blow in my glad race; there is more exhilaration in a gallop across our prairies than there is in champagne, and there is no headache nor heartache in the ride. The world stretches itself out before me, and a great, wide, unbounded world, full of room and freedom. You sent me up in some little narrow contracted valley, with the great mountains frowning down upon me every time I look out, and I would smother. Resplendent with beauty the valley might be, the beauty of gray rocks, the dainty fern and velvet mosses and sparkling cascades and pine crowned hills, but I could not breathe in it. I would tire of climbing and sliding like a worm up the steep hillside, and my heart would ache for my broad free prairie, with the springing turf under my mustang's flying hoofs, and the winds of Heaven fanning my face."

BARBARA.

No one at the Waterloo Inn, Roskport, knew that he had any acquaintance with the family at Place. He was only known to his landlord, and laudably as an Indian officer who had come to mend a broken constitution on that lovely coast. He soon won the liking of host and hostess and the inn being almost empty at this time of year, they devoted themselves to making him comfortable. From his landlady, who was inclined to indulge herself now and then with a cheerful gossip, Major Leland contrived to hear a good deal about Barbara and the family at Place. He heard how good she was, how the servants liked and respected her, how kind she had been, in her quiet, unpretending way, to the poor.

"Miss Penrith need to sal herself or go the Lady Bountiful to all the district," said Mrs. Thomas, of the Waterloo, "but Mrs. Penrith gives a sovereign where her sister-in-law would give sixpence, and makes no fuss about it. And everybody knows what a good wife she is, though nobody can suppose that she married the squire for love."

"So long as she is happy, that is enough," said George Leland.

She had told him she was happy, and he had not believed her. He had regarded that assertion as a heroic falsehood.

Mrs. Thomas expatiated upon the family at Place. Mr. Monk, who was not thought highly of, though he was liked for his easy good nature and absence of pride, and who was supposed to have entangled himself in an uncomfortable manner with a handsome barmaid at Camelot. And then Mrs. Thomas told her lodger all she could tell about the estate on the St. Colomb road, and how that sad de was now shut up, whereby it was supposed that the squire's brother and the barmaid had parted, perhaps because of the squire having got wind of the disreputable alliance.

"He's just the sort of man to be very strict in such matters," said Mrs. Thomas. "The Penraths always were a proud family—all except Mark."

She told her lodger how cheaper the squire had been by his late illness; how he had been gradually giving up all his old ways and habits of last summer, and how it was supposed in the neighborhood that he was breaking up, and would never be again the man he had been.

"To see him a Lingland family," she remarked, confidentially. "The father was under 6 by when he was taken off suddin by heart disease. I never saw such a change in anyone as in Mr. Penrith when I saw him at church four Sundays ago. There was a strange preacher come from Plymouth to preach for the schools, and the curate and a ladies drove over to hear him. He looked a good ten years older than he did last Christmas. He used to be the hardest rider in those parts. He'd come tearing over the moor on a big brown horse, or driving a high dog-cart, and going faster than small. He used to be sad and about all day long. And now they d'say he sits staring at the fire or reading his newspaper for hours at a stretch. It's not his young wife's fault if he's dull and melancholy, for everybody says how good and dutiful she has been to him, though it can hardly be expected that a handsome young woman can care much for a grumpy old gentleman. Vyvyan Penrith."

"Handsome is as handsome does," said Major Leland. "She may have learned to love him through his goodness to her. She seems happy, does she not?"

"She behaves herself as a lady should," replied Mrs. Thomas, with a sententious air; "everybody says that of her; and that's as much as anybody has a right to know. We can't go prying into the insides of people's hearts and minds, you see, sir. We must form our judgement from the outside, and be content. We've no more to do with what lies behind than we have to grumble because there's a dark side to the moon while her bright side is lighting us over the moor."

Was she happy? That was the question which George Leland perpetually asked of himself. She had assured him that all was well with her, that she was happy in married life. But this assurance he took to be a noble falsehood, a woman's sacrifice to her own self-respect. The thought that she could be happy, while he was so miserable for the loss of her, maddened him. He knew that this impotent jealousy, this rage against the fate that had parted them, was a base and a hateful feeling, yet he could not conquer it. He who had fought so stoutly against his country's foes was in this no hero. He could not subjugate self.

He was lying one day on a grassy headland, listless, low-spirited, having read all the news that interested him in yesterday's Times, and having nothing to do for the rest of the day but watch the sea and the gulls, with faint hopes of an occasional cormorant to diversify the scene. The morning was mild and sunny, though New-number had begun; summery-looking clouds were floating in a blue sky, and lending their varied color to a summery sea. The soft air seemed laden with a ghostly perfume, the odor of the dead year's flowers; or perhaps it was only the sweet scent of an upheaved turnip field, or that intraceable mysterious perfume which exhales from the very earth on such a morning, the spirit of fallow fields and fading woodland, and hidden violets under ragged hedges where the sturdy red-breast swings about a thorn, and chirps his welcome to the coming winter.

Startled from a gloomy reverie, George Leland looked up at the sound of horse's hoofs bounding over the short turf, and beheld a young lady in a blue habit, fair-haired, rosy-cheeked, blue-eyed—a bright familiar face which he had known in the happiest period of his life.

Flossie! he cried, starting to his feet.

"How do you do, Captain—I beg your pardon—Major Leland? said Flossie, yet as coolly as if they had parted yesterday.

There she sat, looking down at him from the summit of a big gray horse—a big horse of undecided temperament, that had hardly made up his mind whether he would be gray or bay, and had subsided into a speckly mixture of both, which justified his name, Pepper-and-Salt. She had her governess with her, as usually as if she had been born in the saddle, and she was as pretty and shrewd as ever as she had been five years ago in the garden at Camberwell, when they two had walked together on the soft springy turf, amidst night dews and roses, under a summer moon. Yet at sight of his gaunt wasted figure and faded face, lit by large haggard eyes, even Flossie's impertinences was put to the blush.

She looked at him earnestly, her eyes filling with tears.

"You are sadly altered," she said, "since—since—"

"Since the happy time when we were all young; since the summer day when Barbara and I lost ourselves under the Greenwich elms. Yes, I dare say I am changed since then. Such a campaign as I have gone through, is not calculated to improve a man's personal appearance."

His speak faltered, but his hand trembled a little as he held Flossie's bridle, while the fidgety Pepper dug holes in the turf with his fore feet.

"I wish I could hook this horse on to something, and dismount," said Flossie. "He is a wretched beast that will never consent to stand still; and I should like to have a long talk with you."

"I'll take care of the horse," said Major Leland; whereupon Flossie dropped lightly from her saddle, and gave the major the bridle.

There was a nondescript little building, surrounded with rusty iron railings, on the highest pinnacle of the cliff. Only a native of the soil could have told if there was any use or any intention in it. It might have been intended as a ruin temple dedicated to the four winds, and it might have been that Boreas and his brotherhood did not deem the face worthy of their acceptance, for they rushed in at its grated windows and tore round it and howled over it with exceeding savagery in tempestuous weather, as if they had marked it for destruction. No visitor to Rockport had the faintest idea of its meaning; but it was a mark in the landscape for those spring souls who are always saying "Excelsior!" and the railings were handy to lean against when one had struggled to the summit of the grassy hill; and if the winds were battering against three sides of the building there was a chance of shelter on the fourth.

Here, the day being quiet and fair, Major Leland led the schoolmaster's Pepper, who seemed to think he was going to get a bait and soon fastened his bridle securely to the railings on the landward side, and left him to crop the short salt turf, while he went back to Flossie, who was walking slowly up and down a narrow path upon the steep, grassy slope fronting the sea. He took one with his hands and grasped hers warmly.

"I am very glad to see you, Flossie," he said. "There is only one other person in the world whom I would rather see."

"You would not say that if you knew everything," she said, shaking her head with a contrite air, "you would hate me."

"I should hate you if I knew—what?"

"You are very sorry to have lost Barbara, I am afraid?" she said, looking at him deprecatingly.

"Sorry? Yes, I am sorry. It is a sorrow that will last me for my lifetime and go down with me to my grave."

"Don't," cried Flossie; you make me feel like a murderer. Is it that sorrow which has altered you so?"

"No, my dear. Grief and regret have gnawed my heart; but I went on living all the same as a dog, drank, slept, thrived as a brute thrives in his pasture. Hardship and privation, forced marches, deadly heat and dreary rain—these are the things that have sapped my strength, and perhaps shortened my life. But, for God's sake, tell me what you mean, Flossie! Why should I hate you? What had you to do with my sorrow?"

"Ever so much. Barbara wrote you a letter."

"Yes."

"One very enormously particular letter."

"Yes, I know, and it never reached me. She told me of it."

"I lost it," said Flossie, blurting out her confession, and looking him full in the face, almost as if she expected him to knock her down. "I lost it. I had ever so many things to get for ma, and there were all kinds of new things in the shop windows in the Walworth Road—glasses at a shilling and eleven-pence-halfpenny, with the eleven-pence-halfpenny written in pencil; you know—so deceiving; and there were bonnets and all sorts of fancy articles which you wouldn't understand if I were to tell you about them; and altogether I never saw the Road more attractive; and so—I suppose I must have dropped the letter," said Flossie, very slowly, after pausing once for the rate of an express train, "for when I got to the post-office—the watchmaker's, you know, where the man was always cross—I was going to—I don't suppose my pocket had been picked; for, you see, a thief would hardly care about a stamp. Indian letter without a stamp on it, and I had the shilling ready to pay for the stamp. That reminds me, by-the-bye, I owe Barbara that shilling."

THE FLY FISHER.

At morning gray he to the brook,
That murmurs through the dell repaired,
With ashen rod and fishing hook,
And elbows grandly squared.

His jack-boots reached up to the knee,
Were waterproof, and so was he.

A boulder in the brook he knew,
Whence whose shadow lurked a trout
Tast anglers who their detest threw
Not yet had wheedled out;
To wit: which four-pound trout his mission was
And that's just why he bent on fishin' was.

Now, flushed with hope, he marked the stream
That round the brown old rock data go
With bubbling splash and fitful gleam,
And "Come on, lo!"

There stood nine women in three rows,
Deeply engaged in washing clothes.

Bereft of speech, his rising tire
The angler curbed, although he shook;
He merely heaved on his shirt-sleeves
And strode into the brook.

Where, last summoned its gurgling stream in,
He made a cast for those young women.

And every time his lines he threw,
With several fly hooks on it fast,
A bundle of back hair he drew
Or torn bib instead.

Then homeward fled with merry fling,
Having alive outgrown on a string.

LITTLE HOUSEKEEPERS

Children of the Five Points Taught to Wash, Cook, Make Beds, and Set the Table.

Among the many associations organized in New York for the benefit of the poor is one that has for its object the promotion of the domestic industrial arts among the laboring classes by giving to the children gratuitous instruction in all that pertains to the housewife's duties. This is the New York Kitchen Garden Association, which, although it was started only four months ago, has a large membership, and is actively interested in the welfare of twelve "kitchen garden" classes, numbering more than 600 pupils. One of the classes recently formed is composed of 30 little girls belonging to the Five Points House of Industry. They range in age from 5 to 12 years, are for the most part naturally bright, and some of them are very pretty. Yesterday afternoon they gave an exhibition in the chapel of the Five Points House of Industry, which was a complete illustration of the methods of the "Kitchen Garden" system, so successfully introduced here by Miss Emily Huntington in 1876.

In the centre of the chapel floor was a collection of articles known fashionably as the kitchen gardeners as "occupation materials." Miniature bedsteads, chairs, tables, bureaus, washtubs, bedspreads, tablecloths, pots, kettles, napkins, forks, mattresses, knives, dishes, plates, pillows, clothes lines, brooms, salt cellars, dusting brushes, clothespins, and other things recognized as essentials in the domestic economy were piled up on a convenient stand. Twelve little girls occupied seats at a long table, at the head of which the teacher stood to direct operations. The many industrial arts of the housewife were to be taken up in order, and the details of the work not only illustrated by the young amateurs, but explained by them as well.

One of the most interesting features of the exhibition was the lesson in washing. At the sound of a bell the children rose, marched around the table to the lively tune of "Yankee Doodle," and received each her materials, with which the table was soon covered. Then the class was questioned as to the use of tubs, boards, soap, water and blueing, and as to how and in what order each class of wash material should be handled. Next, accompanying their work with a song, the children each packed their tubs, placed their boards, sorted their clothes, and, with invisible soap and water, washed, rinsed, starched to the line with tiny clothespins, many of the little laundresses holding the pins between their teeth till required for use. This mode of disposing of clothespins, although natural to full grown washerwomen, is not taught in the kitchen garden manual; yet it does not seem to be interdicted. The suvet wash having become thoroughly dry, time was called, the lines were stripped; the materials put away and the labors of wash-day were done.

Next, one member of the class showed how a good girl would receive the home visitors. Another demonstrated with materials for "Occupation No 3," how a sleeping room should be prepared for occupancy. Another taught how the morning work of cleaning and bed making should be done, the other members of the class giving their views in rhyme to brisk music. The attendance of visitors was large, and all were greatly interested at the operations of the little housekeepers.

Skulls, Brains, and Souls.

International Review.

The weight of the brain has often been held to be a criterion of the mind, though, apart from the fact of confirmation obtained by investigation, there are serious objections to such a standard. The brain, whatever other functions it may have, is undoubtedly a source of power supplied to the muscles, and we are ignorant to what extent the activity of the muscular system or the size of the body may influence that of the brain, supplying it with the nerve force necessary for its increased duties, enlarged or put power? It may be doubtful whether any one proves that this is so. It is, I think, certain that we cannot prove that it is not so. Dr. Lo Bon, in a work to which I shall refer again, has decided that the weight of cerebral mass affects, though in a very slight one, on the size of the brain. He found that the influence of the weight of the body in proportion to the face was sufficient to account for the variations of the brain. Another disturbing element is age. It has been observed that after a rather uncertain date, say 45 years the brain gradually dwindles. Again, may not some vegetable habits of life tend to cause a shrinkage of the organ, and may not other pathological changes increase its density? All these points are by no means make us skeptical as to individual results, though, at the same time, we cannot free ourselves from the influence of the general belief that the weight of the brain is an index of the mind. The weight of the brains of workers of all sorts, distinguished and otherwise, has been cited for and against this theory. Cuvier is usually found heading the list with a mean weight of 64 33 ounces. (The average for the male is between 49 and 50.) One is a man never realizes how plenty mustard is, and how scarce are bread and meat, until he tackles a railroad eating-house sandwich.

To be Wiped Out by a Tidal Wave.

A Extraordinary Bogus Despatch that its Author Never Sent.

Recently a telegraph operator named Thomas Hollister was arrested in San Francisco by a Chicago detective. Hollister had formed a plot to cut the telegraph wires uniting New York and San Francisco, and then to send East a despatch, dated at some station in the Sierras, saying that a tidal wave, followed by an earthquake, had destroyed San Francisco and Virginia City. The object of the plot was to cause a panic in Pacific Mail stock and Comstock securities in the New York market, the panic to be taken advantage of by confederates. For several months the Western Union Company knew that their wires were being tampered with, and they sent for the Chicago detective. He travelled along the line for several weeks, and finally came upon a clue at a spot a few miles east of Battle Mountain. At this spot the wire had been cut, and a plan that could readily be disconnected had been let in. The detective further found an insulated wire concealed in the grass and sage brush near by. An end of it long enough to reach the main line was coiled up. The wire ran north, and the detectives following it for a mile, came upon an excavation in the ground, which was roofed in with branches and turf, and which contained, buried in one corner, several Leyden jars, strips of copper, and bottles of acid. The detective commanded himself near by and watched the place for several days, but without result.

One day at Battle Mountain he saw in a newspaper an account of the arrest for a breach of the peace of a telegraph operator whom he had known in Chicago. The detective, from what he knew of the man, was prompted to go to San Francisco and look after him. He visited Hollister's room and there found what confirmed his suspicions that it was Hollister who had tampered with the Western Union wires. Hollister was arrested and made confession. In his room was found the following, written upon a piece of foolscap paper:—

"At 3 o'clock this morning a tidal wave from the Pacific Ocean swept over San Francisco, wiping out the entire city in ten minutes. It advanced inland and rose until the waters were ten feet deep in Sacramento and Stockton. Accompanying this ocean disturbance was a tremendous shock of earthquake, which was felt most severely at Virginia City. The mines on the Comstock are a mass of ruins. No further particulars can be gained at present."

This, Hollister said, he had intended to send as a despatch to the Associated Press. The decline in Comstock securities had decided the carrying out of his design. He made his headquarters in San Francisco, and was only waiting for a rising market. The apparatus found near Battle Mountain had been placed there by him, and he intended to cut the wires and send his despatch at that point.

AIMING IN ARCHERY.

Some Instructions by America's Champion Bowman.

The first principle of aiming is to be sure to have the arrow in drawing directly under the right eye and lying directly in the line of vision of that eye as it looks at the point of aim. To do this perfectly observe the following directions:—

1. Take your bow and knock the arrow as heretofore described.

2. Raise the bow with the left hand, drawing back the string with the right hand as the bow is lifted.

3. When the left hand has reached the desired position for shot, take aim with the right eye (without closing the left eye) over the point of the arrow.

4. The aim being thus taken, finish the draw by bringing the right hand to a point just below the chin, and there loose.

If the above rules are strictly followed, and the arrow, from the firing of the aim to the point of loosing, has been all the time kept under the right eye, the shot will be in the direct line of vision of that eye.

In following this practice of aiming, the upper limb of the bow must be slanted to the right sufficiently to carry the bow string entirely out of the vertical plane of vision of the right eye, otherwise two troubles will arise. In the first place, the string will be between the eye and the arrow, and secondly, the string will touch the chin before the draw is finished to the loosing point. When the bow is slanted to the right the arrow can lie directly under the eye, while the string is drawn to the loosing point under the chin, and when let go, the arrow will fly directly away before the eye in a perfect line.

Before a beginner in archery can successfully practice aiming on correct principles, he must fully understand the laws of vision governed by the M. E. Chotres.

A Clever Kabul General.

From the London World.

Here is an extract from a private letter from the Punjab: "There is a very fine fellow here, a son of Shah Shujah, Dost Mahomed's old General who, they say, headed the massacre of poor Cavagnari. He is 6 feet 4 inches high, and a handsome, Jewish-looking man, like all Afghans. The officer in whose charge he is brings him to the club to read the papers to him sometimes, for he is a most interested student of events, and very eager for telegrams. His comments on European politics are amusing, though it is hard to make him fairly understand Radical and Tory, and Russian Nihilism. Still, he is wonderfully well informed, and a striking contrast for mental activity and general vigor to Indian swells. We want to get him a Kriegspiel, or war game, for he is an enthusiastic soldier, and a great student of battles and plans thereof. We made a mistake in underrating opponents like these. He is out of it now, of course, but he freely criticises Gen. Roberts, and points out his mistakes. It is a pity to keep a man whose brain is worth more to use to beat. We all say he should be sent to Sandhurst to teach our Commander in Chief the art of war. These Afghans are a queer folk. He is the mildest-mannered man that ever cut a throat, and yet throat cutting would come as easy to him as saying his prayers He prays devoutly five times daily."

An Ancient Jutland Tomb.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Our correspondent at Copenhagen writes "An interesting and probably unique discovery has been made close to the Town of Randers, in Jutland, of a grave, dating probably from the sixth or seventh century, containing the remains of a woman, who had been buried in her richest attire, it being still possible to trace the dress, which had been interwoven with gold thread. Across the chest were laid two bands with a kind of gold lace, on the top of which again were laid some ornaments composed of colored glass beads, some having an outer shell of gold leaf, and several cut like diamonds, as well as a small perforated silver coin. To the left of the body was found a knife, a pair of scissors, a small whetstone, (for needles) and a small glass cup, which was broken in pieces. In the tomb was also found the remains of a wooden pail with iron bands, which had contained the food supposed necessary to support the deceased on her journey to Hades. This discovery affords another proof of the exceptionally high position occupied by the women in Scandinavian families heathen times in comparison with nearly all other heathen countries. The body had evidently evidently been inclosed in a coffin of rough oaken planks. Great interest is taken in the scientific examination of the interesting find, by which the social period may be at least approximately ascertained.

A Clever Kabul General.

From the London World.

Here is an extract from a private letter from the Punjab: "There is a very fine fellow here, a son of Shah Shujah, Dost Mahomed's old General who, they say, headed the massacre of poor Cavagnari. He is 6 feet 4 inches high, and a handsome, Jewish-looking man, like all Afghans. The officer in whose charge he is brings him to the club to read the papers to him sometimes, for he is a most interested student of events, and very eager for telegrams. His comments on European politics are amusing, though it is hard to make him fairly understand Radical and Tory, and Russian Nihilism. Still, he is wonderfully well informed, and a striking contrast for mental activity and general vigor to Indian swells. We want to get him a Kriegspiel, or war game, for he is an enthusiastic soldier, and a great student of battles and plans thereof. We made a mistake in underrating opponents like these. He is out of it now, of course, but he freely criticises Gen. Roberts, and points out his mistakes. It is a pity to keep a man whose brain is worth more to use to beat. We all say he should be sent to Sandhurst to teach our Commander in Chief the art of war. These Afghans are a queer folk. He is the mildest-mannered man that ever cut a throat, and yet throat cutting would come as easy to him as saying his prayers He prays devoutly five times daily."

North-western Intelligence.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LUCAN.

On Tuesday last Mr. J. H. McRoberts shipped 56 head of fat cattle for the Kingston market. They were the finest lot ever exhibited in this village, chiefly all young steers, mixed with some grown oxen and a few bulls.

IMPROVEMENTS.

McLean Bros. have erected an Agricultural Implement emporium on Main street on the westerly side of the Central Hotel, which is going to be well supplied from their agricultural works lately established in the village.

Mr. J. S. Thom is making additions to his premises, and Mr. Parks is also adding a wing to his residence, which, when completed, will greatly improve both premises.

Mr. R. H. O'Neil is making preparations to erect a brick building adjoining the Post Office, on the south side of Main street. It is intended for a brokerage, bank and other offices, and will be quite an addition to the appearance of Main street.

Mr Richard Drought, cabinetmaker, is also about to erect a shop and dwelling on Main street on the premises known as the Walsh property, lately purchased by Mr. McConnell. This also will fill up another gap in the street.

A cricket club has been organized in the village for the coming season. The officers are, President, Mr. Thos. Dight; Capt. F. W. Hall; Sec., W. H. Woods; Treas., Wm. Quigley, sec. Committee, Messrs. Hossack, Sutton, D. McNeil, R. F. Lord W. Standley and the writer. From the calibre of the officers a good season's sport is expected from these.

CAMLACHIE.

The Camlachie base ball club is now in running order, and no doubt will give a good report of itself this season.

The crops in this vicinity promise well, and a good yield is expected. The fall wheat looks unusually healthy. Oats and barley have been largely sown. Meadows and pastures have suffered for want of rain, but will now rally.

FAIRFIELD.

Meadows and pastures are rather backward, owing to want of rain in the early part of the month. Fall wheat is unusually good, and there is a large acreage under cultivation. Not much spring wheat is sown. Oats are nearly all sown. There is an immense quantity of grain shipped from this place. It reached fourth on the Grand Trunk last year. The village continues to grow steadily, and many handsome stores and residences are being erected. Twenty years ago there were only a few houses here. Business is in a very healthy condition in Fairfield, and in proportion to its size there have been fewer failures here than in other places. It is beautifully situated, and is probably the finest village on the line. The more rain that falls, the cleaner the streets. Forest trees line several side roads, and will yet have their day.

The crops around Thedford are most satisfactory. Fall wheat splendid. Spring crops good. Very little spring wheat sown. No peas, bugs having for several years swarmed them for their own. Meadows and pastures rather lush. Business healthy; it has not been overdone here.

ALIAS CRAIG.

The crops in this vicinity are all that could be desired. There will be the largest yield of fall wheat ever known. The acreage is largely in excess of other years. The spring crops have been well put in, and the ground was never in better condition. Clover has suffered from exposure during the winter and is badly thrown out.

Cattle buying is now being vigorously prosecuted.

Alias Craig has hitherto borne the palm in cattle shipments, but Parkhill and Forest will push her hard this year.

Business is good, and merchants are doing a fair trade. The place is not overdone.

Alias Craig has room for some manufacturing enterprise.

Livingstone, the forger, will soon be liberated from the penitentiary. His talks of returning to Alias Craig. His friends think that probably he had better not.

Bradstreet, of May 19, says of Ontario:—Chatham—G. G. Martin, cigar manufacturer, compromised at 20 cents; Thomas Sutherland, builder, offering to compromise at 10 cents on the dollar. Florence—J. W. Morley, ploughs, etc., offering to compromise at 20 cents on the dollar. Guelph —J. A. Thorpe, stoves and furnaces, assigned in trust, and stock advertised for sale. Ottawa—J. R. Russell, confectioner, etc., reported left town. Port Hope—J. R. Mitchell, drugs, T. G. Watson admitted, style now Mitchell & Watson; Wilkie Quay, grocery and seeds, clothing in grocery and seeds, and going into the coal business. Barrie—J. S. Thomas, grocer, sold out by sheriff. St. Thomas—J. & J. McAlam, wholesale and retail grocery and liquors, dissolved, J. McAdam continues, style unchanged. Toronto—John Currie, boot and shoe manufacturer, A. G. Gibson admitted, style now Currie & Gibson.

CANNED GOODS.

Canned goods have of late become an important factor in the commerce of America. The grocery business is running more and more to cans, and it is surprising to see the great variety of provisions which are now put up and sold in this way. Most kinds of meat and fowl; an infinite variety of fruit and vegetables; oysters, and many kinds of fish; ox tongues, tripe, plum pudding—from the very rare-bit to the bon-mot hot nut feast, pork and beans. Canned goods are an important element in the dress now worn and of having everything in the grocery line put up in regular uniform packages ready for sale, doing away with the [illegible] of cooks in bulk and all weighing and parcelling at the counter.

THROUGH FREIGHT TO MANITOBA—A NEW DIFFICULTY.

It is now announced that there is a new difficulty in the way of carrying out the arrangements lately made for taking freight through to Manitoba in bond. The collector at Port Huron has refused to give the cars to go through without being opened and the goods examined. Mr. Simpson, the Collector at this port, who has had charge of the matter from the first, has written to the authorities at Washington, urging that the plan which obtained in the cases of goods passing from one port of the United States to another through Canada should be adopted, viz.: the privilege of closing and sealing the car at the first port. A second port is at present being constructed, and is expected to be completed within two years. Its construction will be of the highest importance to the trade of Calais and the completion is looked for impatiently awaited by the merchants of the town.

General Notes.

A steam wooden-ware factory is being erected in Moncton, N. B., to be at work in July.

There is at present no market for wool, and prices still tend in favor of buyers. Stocks are the lightest for ten years. The mills are still quite busy, and will be for some time.

The Waterloo Woollen Manufacturing Company is contemplating the manufacture of flannels upon a large scale, which would imply the erecting of a new building &c., &c.

Some large sales of tallow have been made in Toronto, and among others 40,000 pounds at 5½ cents. Prices are ruling lower than for years past, with little demand from Great Britain. Stocks are light.

A sorghum sugar factory is shortly to be in operation at Tillsonburg. The buildings are now up and nearly enclosed. We believe, however, that there will be [illegible] this season.

English steel rails are quoted in New York at about $65. American steel rails at about $70; iron rails $49@$52; old rails $34 to $36; American pig iron $18 to $20; Scotch pig $20 to $24. It seems to be generally believed that bottom has been reached, and that a steady though slow improvement may be expected.

The Edison patent, it is reported, has been found to work admirably in removing gold from the ore at the Bessie mine, and other mines and mills are about to have it used for that purpose. A large number of American speculators from Boston and New York are in Quebec in

MIDNIGHT WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, May 25.—1 a. m.—Indications—For the Lower Lake region, clear or partly cloudy weather, with stationary or higher temperature.

THE FOREPAUGH SHOW.—The great Forepaugh Show will exhibit at St. Thomas, on the vacant lot south of the Air Line depot, on Wednesday, June 9.

USEFUL.—The sale of furniture at 184 York street will take place on Wednesday, May 26, at 11. Some very useful goods will be sold. Brunton & Son, auctioneers.

RETURNED HOME.—Messrs. Sam. Stewart, Marry Beaton, Ed. Beliz, John Christie and James Duffield have returned from a week's fishing excursion to Fort Franks and the Sauble river. Between 400 and 500 of the finny tribe rewarded the efforts of the Londoners, who were much pleased with their experience.

MORE LICENSES GRANTED.—The East Middlesex License Commissioners granted the following tavern licenses on Saturday:—R. O'Neil (Hodgins' Hotel) at the village of Birr, London Tp; Samuel Woods, London Tp.; F. Leaghnant, village of Petersville, near Kensington Bridge. The Commissioners will meet again next Saturday to consider additional applications.

RESIGNATION.—The postmaster and assistant postmaster, Messrs. L. Lawless and R. J. C. Dawson, yesterday received notification from the Postmaster General that their suspension had been removed, and that from and after to-day they would continue to discharge the duties of their respective positions. The many friends of both gentlemen will hear of this decision of the P. O. authorities with pleasurable feelings.

THE CHILD MURDER.—An adjourned coroner's inquest on the remains of the infant found in Kettle Creek, south of St. Thomas, was held in the Town Hall, St. Thomas, on Friday evening, when the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown. A young woman named Ellen Coughlin was arrested yesterday by Chief Fewings on suspicion of being the mother who so inhumanly abandoned her offspring, and she will be brought before the Police Court there this morning for examination.

REPORTED DROWNED.—On Sunday an out-of-town youth named Alex. Donaldson, whose parents reside on Central Avenue, went for a bathe in the river. Not returning, his father proceeded in search of him, and found the lad's clothing on the Westminster side of the river opposite the City Hospital. Under the belief that his son had been drowned, Mr. Donaldson reported the matter to the police. On returning home, however, to break the news to the family, he was surprised and pleased to find his son alive and safe. It appears that some person had thoughtlessly, by way of a joke, secreted his clothing, thus compelling him to remain away until the shades of evening permitted him to return.

A DISORDERLY CROWD.—P. C's Crawford and Calderwood were dispatched yesterday afternoon to arrest a gang of colored individuals who were disturbing respectable citizens in the southern part of Wellington ward. It appears that a difficulty had arisen between a burly African named Jim Harris and his wife, which ended in the brute striking his wife in the face, blacking her eyes and bruising her face in a shameful manner. A general quarrel ensued, and the police were sent for. Harris ran when he saw the blue coats, but John Enos Henry Woodford and Ben. Diggins were taken and placed in the cells. Adelfine Harris, the woman who was beaten, and her three children were also arrested by P. C. Calderwood.

AUCTION SALES TO DAY.—Manville & Brown will sell at 2 p.m. sharp, the old bathhouse corner of King & Richmond Streets. This is a fine chance for contractors or owners of vacant lots. Auction sale of Private Residence and Lots. Manville & Brown will sell on the premises, corner of Wortley Road & Bruce street, the finest located residence in New Brighton, with every convenience and ample grounds. Terms easy. Sale at 3 p.m. Choice Building Lots. Manville & Brown will sell on the premises, Oalhart & Elmwood streets, New Brighton, three one-fourth acre lots in a locality surrounded by the handsomest residences in this suburb, distinguished for architectural as well as natural beauty.

THE DERBY RACE.—The race for the Blue Riband of the English Turf will take place at Epsom to-morrow (Wednesday). Those of our readers interested in the different sweepstakes gotten up throughout Ontario will be interested in knowing the probable starters, with the latest betting, and some of the jockeys for the race: Nine to four against the Duke of Westminster's chestnut colt Bend Or, jockey Archer; 7 to 1 against Brower's bay colt Robert the Devil, jockey Cannon; 10 to 1 against the Duke of Westminster's chestnut colt Muncaster, jockey Snowden; 12 to 1 against Lord Rosebery's bay colt Kridiford, jockey Constable; 15 to 1 against Mr. W. Taylor Shaw's bay colt Valentine, jockey Morris; 16 to 1 against Lord Falmouth's chestnut colt Apollo, jockey Wood; 16 to 1 against Prince Soltykoff's chestnut colt Mask, jockey Rossiter; 16 to 1 against Mr. John Gretton's chestnut colt Draycott, jockey Webb; 16 to 1 against Mr. Gerard's bay colt Vanner Tan, jockey Fordham; 20 to 1 against Mr. Naylor's bay colt The Abbott; 20 to 1 against Mr. M. Dawson's bay colt Fire King; 33 to 1 against Mr. R. Jardine's chestnut colt Teviotdale; 50 to 1 against ——— Ledalstrier; 80 to 1 against Lord Bradford's chestnut colt Ezekl; 95 to 1 against Count F. De Lagrange's bay colt Milan; 100 to 1 against Lord Scarborough's bay or roan colt Scot Guard; 100 to 1 against Mr. P. Lorillard's bay colt Boreas, jockey H. Jeffery; 100 to 1 against Lord Rosebery's black colt Pellese; 100 to 1 against Mr. H. Saville's chestnut colt Proctor; 100 to 1 against Mr. T. Goe's chestnut colt Napatony; and 100 to 1 against Patrick's bay or brown colt Boughton. The last two are doubtful starters.

LOCAL NOTICES.

MONT[illegible]CHANT. Success.—The great clearing sale of Thomas Beattie & Co. brought thousands of people to the store on Saturday, and goods were sold regardless of cost, and we believe there has been more cash taken in by Messrs. T. B & Co. than has ever been known before for any one day's sales. This certainly shows that the firm mean what they advertise, and deserve the patronage of the public generally.

How Citizens Disported Themselves Yesterday.

Excursions by Rail and Water—the Leading Attractions.

The Celebrations in Other Places

The celebration of the sixty-first anniversary of the Queen's birthday in London did not differ in any material degree from many of its recent predecessors. The weather was all that the most fastidious could have desired—indeed it was Queen's weather;—the citizens took advantage of the opportunities afforded them by the railway and steamboat companies to spend the holiday out of town, and that they did so—by a large majority—was evidenced by the crowds who thronged the depots and docks during the entire day. The populace, in a word, celebrated the anniversary loyally, enthusiastically, and in a manner becoming citizens of the Empire upon which the sun never sets. No accidents, so far as could be ascertained, marred the pleasures of the day, and the general feeling seemed to be one of unalloyed happiness at being privileged to honor the Queen, as all her dutiful subjects are only too happy to do. The manner in which the day was "done" by Londoners will be found chronicled below:—

THE CURLING MATCH

at the grounds of the Forest City Curling Club was quite numerously attended by lovers of this sport and their friends.—The occasion was the annual match between sides chosen by the President (Fairgrieve) and Vice-President (Sparrowhawk) respectively. The game was opened shortly after nine o'clock, and continued without cessation until noon. Some very good curling was witnessed by the players of Nos. 1 and 2 rinks, and the crowd, as a matter of course, confined their attentions to the portion of the rink occupied by these players. When time was declared, the score showed that the Vice-President's side had won the match, without Mr. Sparrowhawk's assistance, as the subjoined score attests:—

THE RAILWAY EXCURSIONS

by both lines of railway were numerously patronized, the cheap trip to Port Stanley being the most popular of the day, as it always is. Notwithstanding the counter attraction of the sail down the Thames, which it was feared by many would ruin the L. & P. S. R. excursions, the train which left here yesterday at ten o'clock was the largest (for the first of the season) that has been witnessed for several years. No fewer than 1,080 tickets were sold, and the seventeen coaches which that number of persons occupied did not permit of standing room. Over 300 tickets were also sold for the afternoon train, which brings the total up to nearly 1380. The fine warm day was, as a matter of course, an important factor in drawing such a large crowd to London's popular summer resort; and while those who carried a home were being paralleled by Old Sol. The excursionists who took advantage of the cheap trip "revelled," as one of them expressed it, "in clover during the entire day." The Fraser House was largely patronized, and the proprietor commended for his enterprise in providing the additional accommodation described at length in these columns a few days since. The sail on the lake, a peep from the summit of the Observatory, a refreshing bath in the surf, and a stroll through the shady grounds formed a programme of sufficient variety to please all and satisfy. The railway excursionists were on a par with previous efforts, and that is well known to travellers.

About 100 persons left here yesterday by special train for McKenzie's Grove, a delightful retreat a short distance from Hyde Park. The visitors were joined by large numbers from the village and surrounding country, and an exceedingly pleasant day was passed by all who took part in the festivities. The picnic was of the usual orthodox kind, and was highly enjoyed.

THE RIVER ATTRACTIONS.

From the early part of the forenoon until evening large crowds thronged the docks, at the foot of Dundas street, intent on having a boat ride. The steamers of the Thames Navigation Company to Port Stanley—"Victoria" had full loads at every trip. Indeed such crowds on the steamers were so great that very little pleasure could be had out of the ride, still the people waited patiently for their turn and stood the jam remarkably well. On board the vessels good order was observed by everybody. It is to be regretted that the spirit of rivalry between those in charge of the "Forest City" and "Victoria" was manifested in such a manner as to alarm the passengers and even imperil their lives. It was too marked to be called an accident and too flagrant to be treated with silence. On going down the river the two vessels named were side by side, and being of about equal speed remained so for some little time. Quite a number of acquaintances on the two steamers reached out and took hold of each others hands. This certainly was a harmless performance, but it seems that the master of the Forest City thought that it was an attempt on the part of the Victoria to grapple his vessel and hold her fast in her rival. He attempted to separate the handclaspers, but without effect, and the master of the Victoria claims that he deliberately forced the Forest City on to the shore, and crowded the latter boat on to the shore. Unfortunately for the overhung the steamer, and its big branches raked the covering of the upper deck, terribly alarming the passengers, who received a yet ruder smack when the vessel struck the shore. The hurricane deck, or rather the roof of the upper deck, was somewhat damaged, and a large limb broken from the tree shows the force with which it swept over the boat. Several ladies fainted, and a scene of wild disorder ensued on board the Victoria. That, however, was not the end of it. When the Forest City was again returning to the Water-works the delayed Victoria was just nearing the dredged channel, and gave the signal for the Forest City to go to the left. This, had the master been obeyed, should have been answered and obeyed by the steamer signalled, but it was not done in time, though Capt. Wastie claims that plenty of time was given, and a collision was the result. The passengers got a bad shaking up, and some were thrown from their seats. The steamers "caromed," as would be said in billiards, and as the ladies were turned one went ashore on each side of the river. The "Forest City" soon got off the city bank where water was deep, but the "Victoria" stuck on a sand-bar on the other bank, and stayed there for about twenty minutes or half an hour, in sight of about five hundred half-broiled and exasperated people, who had stood crowded in the sun waiting for the steamer, tickets for a passage upon which they had purchased. The murmuring, which was loud and long, began to grow into profanity when the steamer got off, reached the dock, unloaded and took on one of the maddest crowds that ever bought excursion tickets. If Capt. Wastie was to blame for the detention of his vessel and the trouble with the "Forest City," he certainly has done himself and his business most serious harm. If on the other hand the Master of the "Forest City" was to blame and deliberately forced the "Victoria" on the shore and collided with her, as is claimed by the master of the latter vessel and the passengers who were on her at the time, and who testify strongly against the "Forest City," he should never be allowed to earn by sacrilege the lives of those committed to his care.

The day at Springbank was pleasantly spent, and plenty of room was for the four thousand visitors who rested in the shade, and with their families and friends lunched in the old fashioned picnic style. The steamers carried about 3,500 people to the grounds, and very many drove thither in carriages or rowed down in small boats.

QUEEN'S PARK SPORTS.

Notwithstanding the exceedingly short notice given to the public by the Directors of this popular resort, the celebration was a gratifying success, between three and four thousand pleasure seekers being present to witness the various sports. No place could be better adapted for a demonstration of this kind than Queen's Park, affording as it does a quiet and cool retreat for those who do not desire to participate in the games, and providing ample space for races, ball playing, etc. Not a disturbance of any kind occurred during the day, and the proceedings passed off harmoniously and to the entire satisfaction of everyone. The sports were managed by the committee—Messrs. M. Anderson, J. P., A. McCormick, Jas. Egan and W. R. Vining—in a praiseworthy manner. The various contests were watched with keen interest, and were engaged in with considerable spirit.

Promptly at three o'clock the 7th Fusileer Band made their appearance upon the grounds, and taking their station in the comfortable band-stand, played at intervals, to the delight of the thousands present. Their arrival was the signal for the commencement of the sports, which were opened with a horse race between two colts from the village—the Ontarios and Forest Citys—nine players on each side, for a gold medal, subsequently changed to a cash prize of $10. The names of the players were:—Ontarios—J. Rodgers (captain), G. Stinson, E. Rodgers, H. Fletcher, E. Hunt, J. E. Rodgers, A. Allister, J. Cliff and W. Dennis. Forest Citys—W. Fysh (captain), F. Lashbrook, W. Weir, J. W. McKinnon, G. Hunt, F. Ross, J. Cliff, G. Bennett and C. Howard. The playing, although not of a first-class order, was break, the two sides being very evenly matched. The Forest Citys, however, proved the victors, winning the first, second and fifth games.

The one-mile race came next. The track, despite the late heavy rains, was very heavy and hard on the runners. The contestants, among whom are several well-known pedestrians, were:—W. H. Lavender, F. Murray, G. Burdick, R. Dean, L. Jeffery, G. Hazzaett and W. Fysh. After an exciting race, the last mentioned carried off the first prize ($5), Burdick the second ($3), and Lavender the third ($2).

The 100 yard foot race, for boys under 16 years,—1st prize, $2; 2nd, $1; 3rd, 50c.—was contested by B. Irons, B. J. Burke, J. Naven, W. Brenner, A. Allister and W. Bennett. The race was won by Bennett, Irons second and Naven third.

The entries for the half-mile race—1st prize, $3; 2nd, $2; 3rd, $1—were six in number, as follows:—M. Riley, G. Burdick, J. Naven, W. J. Walker, W. Fysh, and T. Jeffery. The first prize was closely contested for by Burdick and Jeffery, the latter securing the victor by about two yards, Walker taking the third prize. Fysh, who had been playing in the lacrosse match for about an hour, and who also won the mile race, was the favorite, but his previous exertions had used him up, forcing him to withdraw after running about 200 yards.

The 100 yard race, open to all—1st prize, $3; 2nd, $2; 3rd, $1—was the keenest contested of the afternoon, the entries being Messrs. G. Walters, Eli Hodgins, T. Hodgins, R. Dean and L. Jeffery. A fair start was effected, but after the first few yards Walters forged ahead, retaining the lead to the finish, T. Hodgins second, Jeffery third.

Then the greasy pig was unbagged, and rapidly darting off among the crowd, proceeded to afford considerable amusement, but with proverbial obstinacy, he made for the fence, and soon the thousand or more who were in pursuit had surrounded him, and though he made a "dog push" for freedom it was impossible to escape from the crowd. Willis Diggins, a colored youth, made the capture, and after "lugging" him back to where the judges were standing, received a dollar to release him. Pitching, perhaps, by experience, his piggish friend struck out across the Park, leading his pursuers a lengthy chase ere he was again made prisoner. Master Bell Fells was the fortunate individual, and was presented with the pig for his trouble.

A celebration of this character would be incomplete without the boys were afforded an opportunity of soiling their clothes by climbing a greasy pole. This "sport" was liberally patronized, several of the youths by a frequent application of sand to their hands and feet, succeeding a considerable distance, only to descend with greater ease. It is safe to say that $50 worth of clothing were ruined in the futile effort to win a dollar.

This closed the list of games, no entries being made for the bicycle race, when the winners received their hard-earned money, to the delight of the thousands present. The "breathing spell" or Park is highly appreciated by the young people, who flock in thousands to it during the summer evenings. The Park Committee might make it more and more popular if they would expend a few dollars in procuring a couple of dozen additional seats for the public convenience. The band played some excellent selections, and did fair to become great favorites with our citizens.

Shooting Accident at Thamesford.

Yesterday morning two young men named Wilmot Kester and Wm. Cinn, belonging to the village of Thamesford, started with horse and buggy to go a few miles from their homes, taking with them a gun which was laid in the back of the buggy. Seeing a woodchuck along the road Cinn jumped out and taking the gun by the muzzle was pulling it out of the buggy, when the gun went off, the charge lodging in his right shoulder. Drs. McKay, Hoyt and Scott, of Ingersoll, were called and amputated the arm. His recovery is doubtful.

Incendiary Fire in Ingersoll.

Ingersoll, May 25.—About 1.45 this morning a fire broke out in a brick building on Oxford street, owned by Mr. R. Vance. Owing to the prompt response of the firemen to the alarm the building was saved with but slight loss. Second incendiarism.

CELEBRATION NOTES.

Granton had no celebration.

Gemlachie had games, races and other sports. Quite a number attended.

In Ottawa there was a general holiday but no public demonstration. The city was deserted.

Thedford had no celebration. All the stores were closed and the citizens went to Fort Franks.

In Montreal, on no former occasion was Queen's birthday so generally observed by a cessation from business.

Crediton had the champion crowd in the west. Games and sports of all kinds, and a calithumpian procession.

Allan Craig had no celebration. All the stores were closed, and the villagers dispersed to the surrounding villages.

Parkhill had games, sports and races. The village had the best display of bunting and flags on the line. All the stores were open.

Forest had a regular old-fashioned celebration, consisting of calithumpians, races, Caledonian sports, climbing the greasy pole, etc. The crowd was not very large.

At Toronto every one that could left the city by boat and rail. An equal number seemed to come in from the country, giving the streets a lively appearance. All places of business were closed.

The celebration of Queen's birthday at Goderich passed off in a quiet way. The only event of interest was a lacrosse match between the Beavers of Seaforth and Hurons of Goderich. The Hurons won the first game and Seaforth the next three.

Sarnia.—The Hiawatha, Saginaw and Manitoba took immense crowds of excursionists to Detroit. The Oddfellows went on the latter boat, which had the Independent Band on board. There was horse racing in the afternoon, and a cricket match between Sarnia and Fort Gratiot. All the stores were close, and the day observed as a holiday.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The Court of Revision meets in the Council Chamber ante-room this forenoon.

CHEAP GOODS

THE YEAR ROUND.

In calling the attention of the purchasing public to the above somewhat unusual heading, our idea is to protect people generally from being misled by certain advertisements calculated to influence, at least the unthinking. The people of London and surrounding country are no doubt aware, or should be, that the dodge of selling out, removing and going out of business, in order to get patronage under the guise of selling cheap, is a very old one, and also a reprehensible practice, particularly when their flaming manifestoes are not carried out; and when these dodges are periodically practiced, people should be on their guard, frown down such practices, and stamp them out by buying their goods from houses that sell cheap all the time, in a straightforward, business like way. Every intelligent buyer knows well, that to carry on business honestly a living profit must be made; and the very idea of selling goods below cost, at an actual loss, bears on the face of it at least too much generosity to be rent. We have no hesitation in saying, and our sales so far this season prove the truth of this assertion, that we are not being undersold in the city. Our goods are fresh, seasonable and uniformly cheap all through. Customers are well served at the counters of our large and attractive store, which extends from stree to street.
