NEW ASSOCIATIVE ENTERPRISE.

(From the New York Tribune.)
We learn that a number of believers in the doctrine of Cooperative Industry and Economy have purchased the estate of Dr. King, and some lands adjoining, at Perth Amboy, N. J., in order to establish there an Industrial, Educational and Domestic Association, upon the principles set forth in their Provincial Prospects, which, though intended for private circulation, we copy below for the information of the many persons who might desire to join in the enterprise, but would not otherwise be aware of its existence or nature. The domain consists of some 270 acres of excellent land in good order, well situated, with beautiful groves, and an abundance of pure spring water. The distance from this City is some twenty-five miles, water communication, and is accomplished by steamboat in two hours. The domain has water front of three-quarters of a mile, where wharfs can be easily built, offering every convenience for transportation to and from the Association. Having acquired the property on fair terms, the founders intend, at once to proceed with substantial improvements, which will largely increase its productive utility, and render the stock of the institution a secure and valuable investment. In treating with those who desire to become members, they contemplate the most liberal course, as will be seen by the following:

PROVINCIAL PROSPECTS OF THE PERTH AMBOY FARM.

A few friends who desire a higher form of Union in Industry, Education and Social Life than is found in existing society, have secured a position at the mouth of the Raritan River, near Perth Amboy, New Jersey, where they have purchased, unpledged by any social theory as yet presented, practically to apply such principles of Joint Stock Association as commend themselves to conscience and common sense. The domain, consisting of two hundred and seventy acres of fertile and easily cultivated land, well-watered, healthy, open to the sea air, and combining rare beauty with unsurpassed business advantages, is easy of access from New York and Philadelphia, and presents every need facility for safe and cheap transportation of produce, goods and manufactures. Here it is proposed, so soon as sufficient stock shall be subscribed—to erect a wharf; work-shops supplied with power and labor-saving machinery; studios for artists; a unitary dwelling, with suites of apartments and single rooms lighted, watered, warmed, and ventilated according to the most convenient modes now in use; separate houses for those who prefer a single life; a laundry, furnished with economical washing, drying and ironing apparatus; cold, hot and steam baths; a bakery and refectory, whence meals will be supplied at moderate rates, either in private homes and apartments, or in the public refreshment hall; a gymnasium; a school-house; rooms for library, lectures and worship, together with such other buildings as may be demanded by social use and convenience. The several departments of the farm, work-shops, &c. will be rented to groups or to individuals uniting in the enterprise either at a fixed remunerative rent, sufficient to induce the investment of necessary capital, and to keep the stock at its par value, or for a rent contingent in part on the profits of the business, as may in each case be agreed on. It is proposed, also, to establish an agency in New York for the sale of articles produced in the Union, where samples may be exhibited, and goods distributed without deduction of profits, directly to the retailer or consumer. Education will be a central object in the Union. The intention is to organize such a thorough system of training—gymnastic, industrial, scientific, literary, artistic, social and spiritual—as shall promote vigorous development and practical preparation for whatever sphere the tastes and abilities of the young, of either sex, seem best to qualify them. Education will be accessible to all the children of members; and as many children from abroad will be received as the limits of the Union will permit; and the hope is, to surround the people with such an atmosphere of friendly and parental guardianship as will, to a high degree, insure their health, purity, and symmetrical growth. The social advantages of the Union will be great, in degree, as an ample investment of capital, and the cooperation of enlightened friends, enable the founders of the Union to carry out the plan. It is most obvious, that such an organization, if it at all fulfills its promise, will present unsurpassed attractions to the farmer, horticulturist, forger, mechanic or artist, who wishes to combine efficient work with refined conditions to preserve a secure and improving home for children—to persons who, compelled by business engagements to pass most of their time during the day in the city or abroad, yet wish to provide for their families and for themselves, in leisure hours, a beautiful, quiet and healthful country residence—to all in fact, who are longing for a self-supporting industry, with a choice of congenial companions, and who wish to unite domestic comfort and quiet with culture and cheerful society.

Without professing a definite creed, or attempting to lay down precise laws, the originators of the Perth Amboy Union, assure those who may feel prompted to become stockholders and members, that their purpose is to organize such relations as shall strengthen and purify all ties—conjugal, parental, filial, fraternal, communal; which are sanctioned by the Christian religion and approved by the highest experience, and that their hope is to attain more and more to that loving communion, which is the only true law of life in God's Kingdom, alike on earth as in heaven.

In the confidence that such a Joint Stock Association as it is proposed now to establish, will commend itself to capitalists, business men and producers, as a safe and profitable enterprise, and that such an organization will fulfill the earnest wishes of many who are seeking for a freer, larger, more harmonious form of human existence, we, the undersigned, invite subscription to the stock of the Union, and applications for membership.

Several of our number have for years enjoyed the privileges and boon trained by the experience of associated life; and others, who have been already attained by our friends in the North American Phalanx and of Hospitals, we wish to organize another Union which, while in friendly sympathy with them, may yet present a somewhat different form of social combination. It is our desire to make this movement strong and substantial from the outset, and thus to insure its steady progress and expansion.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

To the Editor of the London Weekly Dispatch.
Many of our readers will, perhaps, recollect that when the County Courts Bill was first submitted to the consideration of the Legislature, the lawyers opposed it in every possible way, except by argument. They were wise enough in their generation to know, that their endeavor to convince the people, by any argument they could use, that cheap law would not be a blessing to them, would be altogether futile; but, where argument fails, it is said, ridicule often succeeds; and this proverb was not lost upon the legal fraternity, who retained the services of an artist celebrated for his caricature sketches, and who produced before their deluded patrons, a sketch of a County Court, such as might be expected when the County Courts' Act came into operation. It represented the presiding judge in the act of throwing an inkstand at a member of the bar, while the learned gentleman for whose head it was destined, was putting his thumb to his nose, and inviting the learned judge to "take a sight." The cry of the Court was engaged in keeping order, by breaking the heads of the suitors with a staff, &c. There was a degree of quietude in all this, more than the artist perhaps, intended; for in the new court, the most disorderly people even as represented by him, were the lawyers themselves. Nevertheless copies thereof were posted in every law stationer's shop window, and many a barrister called the attention of his friends thereto, with the anticipation that no County Court could stand for a week after being so held up to public ridicule. But alas! their disinterested anticipations have been altogether disappointed, and perhaps ere long the same artist may be induced to furnish the public with a sketch of one of the superior courts of Westminster-hall in 1853, representing a terrible row of the "briefs" tauntingly asked by the Chief Justice. "If they have any thing to move," to which they can only reply by a melancholy shake of the head. The success of the County Courts in, to use a modern phrase, a fact accomplished. To prove this assertion, I have only to refer to a paper published this week, by order of the House of Commons relative to the proceedings in the different courts during the year 1851. It includes a return of the total number of plaintiffs entered in each court, distinguishing those for sums above £20, and not exceeding £50; and the total number of plaintiffs entered in each court, by consent of the parties under the 17th section of the Act extending the jurisdiction of the County Courts; of the total number of cases tried by each court; of the number of appeals heard, and the result; the total amount of the monies sought to be recovered; the amount for which judgments were obtained, exclusive of costs; the number tried by a jury, &c. The above returns extend over upwards of forty pages of an ordinary sized Parliamentary blue-book. Of course it would be quite impossible in the columns of a newspaper to give even the abstract of each of the above returns. All I can do is to direct the attention of your readers to a general statement of the proceedings in 1851, and then of the preceding year. It appears that the total number of plaintiffs entered in 1850 was 306,793, and in the following year 441,894, being an increase in the latter year over the former of 135,101; the total number of cases tried in 1850 was 217,174, and in 1851, 233,446, being an increase of 16,272; the total amount of monies sought to be recovered, in the first year, was £1,000,000, and in the second year, £1,100,000, being an increase of £100,000; the total number of judgments obtained, in the first year, was 100,000, and in the second year, 110,000, being an increase of 10,000; the total number of appeals heard, in the first year, was 50,000, and in the second year, 55,000, being an increase of 5,000; the total number of cases tried by a jury, in the first year, was 100,000, and in the second year, 110,000, being an increase of 10,000; the total amount of the monies sought to be recovered, in the first year, was £1,000,000, and in the second year, £1,100,000, being an increase of £100,000; the total number of judgments obtained, in the first year, was 100,000, and in the second year, 110,000, being an increase of 10,000; the total number of appeals heard, in the first year, was 50,000, and in the second year, 55,000, being an increase of 5,000; the total number of cases tried by a jury, in the first year, was 100,000, and in the second year, 110,000, being an increase of 10,000.

THE SKATER AND THE WOLVES.

(From Wild Scenes and Wild Histories.)
During the winter of 1844, being engaged in the northern part of Maine, I had much leisure to devote to the wild sports of a new country. To none of these was I more passionately addicted, than to skating. The deep and frozen lakes of this state, from the intense cold of a northern winter, present a wide field to the lovers of this pastime. Often would I bind on my skates, and glide away up the glittering river, and wind many streamlets that flowed beneath its waters on its way to the ocean, forgetting all the while time and distance in the hazardous course of the sliding motion—thinking of nothing in the easy glide, but rather dreaming, as I looked through the transparent ice at the long woods and crosses that were visible in the current beneath, and I would nestle with the waves by letting the ice, or I would follow the track of some fox or otter, and run my skis along the bank he had left with a his dragging tail, until the trail would end in the woods. Sometimes these excursions were made by moonlight; and it was on one of these occasions that I had a rencontre which was new, with kind faces around me, I cannot recall without a nervous looking-over-my-shoulder feeling. I had left my friend's house one evening just before dark, with the intention of skating a short distance up the river, and then returning directly before the door. The night was beautiful clear. A peevish moon rode through an occasional fleecy cloud, and stars twinkled from the sky and from every frost-covered tree in millions. Your mind would wonder at the light that would come glittering from the snow and frost, and increased branches, as the eye followed miles the broad gleam of the Kennebec, that, like a jewelled zone, swept between the mighty forests on its banks. And yet all was not so bright. The cold was with me, and the air, and water, and every living thing that moved. Even the ringing of my skates echoed back from the Moccasin Hill with a startling clearness, and the crackle of the ice, as I passed over it in my course, seemed to follow the tide of back to my skates with a startling clearness. I had gone up the river nearly two miles, when, coming to a little stream which empties into the larger, I turned into it to explore its course. Fir and hemlock of a century's growth had overgrown, and formed an archway radiant with moonlight, and the snow was with me, and the air, and water, and every living thing that moved. Even the ringing of my skates echoed back from the Moccasin Hill with a startling clearness, and the crackle of the ice, as I passed over it in my course, seemed to follow the tide of back to my skates with a startling clearness.

THE FAITHLESS BRIDE OF CAIRO.
Some years ago Zabit Bey, or head of the police, at Cairo, then a more important character than at present, was making his rounds on horseback, accompanied by Abu Hallin, the executioner, a slave, and torch bearer. He had passed from the Bab-el-Nasr to the Bab-el-Khayan, and found all quiet; not a soul abroad; not a single suspicious sound in the air. He was about to retire to his palace, when the fancy struck him to explore a mass of ruined houses near the southern end of the square, famous as a haunt of robbers. Being a bold man, danger did not appal him; and leaving his horse and sis under the shadow of a wall, he penetrated, followed only by his constant attendant, Abu Yalim, into the gloomy alley that intersected the suspicious quarter. He wandered about for some time without seeing anything to attract his industry; but, at length, a light, twinkling in a distant ruin, attracted his attention. Looking his pistols, and feeling that his sword worked easily in the scabbard, Abu Hallin stepped with his hands, the Zabit Bey, and climb cautiously over a heap of rubbish, and following a low wall broken down here and there, at length reached the neighbourhood of the light.

It burned in a small room, the roof of which yet remained, while one side was broken down. Three men, two fellows, the other a black, sat there talking unreservedly, as quite secure from being overheard. At first it was difficult to understand the subject, but the practical ear of the Zabit Bey caught the words, from every disjointed utterance, a most terrible story. It appeared that the black was the slave of a very distinguished person in Cairo, an Effendi, whose name I forgot, but whose character of benevolence and kindness of disposition was wide spread. He had not long before married a young girl, and became so enamoured of her, that he determined to divorce himself entirely to the beautiful Kadogh. As he was very wealthy, besides being an excellent man, every one celebrated the good fortune of the bride; and it was regarded even in the baths among the women, generally so clear sighted, that she was the happiest bride in Cairo.

From the conversation of the three miscreants in the ruin, the Zabit Bey learned the falsity of this opinion. Not only did the young woman, detest her husband, in spite of his fine qualities, but she was enamoured of a worthless young rake, named Selim Aga, who gave more trouble to the police by his pranks than half a dozen thieves. She had already contrived to have several interviews with him, and her passion increasing, had devised a plan for assassinating her husband, and uniting herself in due time with her paramour. It was to plan the consummation of this crime that the black, so other than the lady's confidant, had summoned two fellows of his acquaintance to a midnight conference. After some debating of the price, it was agreed that, next evening, the assassina should be admitted into the garden, where the husband used to sit and enjoy his pipe with the tea-house attendant.

Under other circumstances the Zabit would have at once presented himself, trusting to the awe inspired by his position, and have arrested the plotters; but he thought to himself, that the Effendi, known to be infatuated with his wife, might disbelieve in her participation, and might thus, though once saved, fall a victim at a future period. Besides, it must be confessed that he was not quite sure of the complicity of Selim Aga, and hoped that, this young scamp might commit himself so far as to render himself liable to punishment, and thus relieve the police from one of their chief annoyances. He resolved, therefore, to be prudent, and allowed the couple to break up in peace. Then he returned to where his horse waited, and rode home quite elated at being engaged in so exciting an adventure.

To complicate the affair, it is said that Abu Hallin, the headman, recognised in one of the hired assassins his own brother, from whom he had been separated many years ago. Whilst gazing over the shoulder of his chief, he had not uttered a single word, that might warn the wife of her danger, knowing that his own life would thus be forfeited; but he resolved next morning to go forth and endeavour to save him, in favour of whom spoke the eloquent veins of blood. Whilst the Zabit yet slept, therefore, Abu Hallin was aroused, and directing his steps to the scene of the crime, he was met by the young woman, who, in a state of great excitement, told him the whole of the plot. He immediately acted upon this plan. The assassins, having regained their feet, sprang directly towards me. The moon was removed for twenty yards up the stream; they were already close on my back, when I glided round, and dashed directly past my pursuers. A second yell greeted my evasion, and the wolves, slipping upon their haunches, sailed onward, presenting a perfect picture of helplessness and buffed

Improvement of HASZARD'S GAZETTE. TWICE A WEEK! IMPORTANT TO TOWN AND COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

THE management of the Newspaper which, for the last 30 years, has been successfully conducted by J. D. HASZARD, Esq., is now transferred to the Subscriber, who will assume all the responsibilities thereof after the publication of the present number.

THE circulation of HASZARD'S Gazette is, at present, and has always been, greater than that of any other newspaper in this Colony; and availing himself of some of the greatest recent improvements which have been made in the art and machinery of the Printer, its new proprietor and publisher hopes he shall be able still to secure for it the first place in the public estimation.

To this end, he has, at a considerable outlay, purchased a Power Press; and, on his premises, made the alterations and additions which were requisite for its proper erection.

By copious extracts from ENGLISH PAPERS, by approved and well-written TRANSLATIONS, by articles on AGRICULTURE and GARDENING, so fitted as to have direct relation to the immediate objects of the farmer's skill and labor; by MORAL and POLITICAL MATTER, free from sectarian bias; and by comprehensive notices of the State and Political Reformations, now rapidly in progress amongst all the civilized nations of the earth, there will always be manifest in the management of HASZARD'S GAZETTE, an earnest desire to provide valuable and acceptable instruction and entertainment for all classes amongst its readers.

For the transmission of IMPORTANT NEWS, by the Electric Telegraph, the Subscriber has also made arrangements with CORRESPONDENTS in Halifax, St. John, and Boston.

COMMUNICATIONS directly bearing on the general interests and well-being of the community, will always be thankfully received.
