OPENING NUMBER AT 8 O'CLOCK SHARP.

The Rink has been extensively decorated for this big event, which promises to surpass any yet held. Four prizes will be given—two for ladies and two for gentlemen—kindly donated by staunch supporters of the Bands. The costumes of the large number of masqueraders that will attend, combined with the Rink decorations, will no doubt present a pretty spectacle.

Another feature of this event will be the rendition by the Joint Bands of the one-step "Striking Fire"; the Waltz "I Wonder What's Become of Sally"; the One-Step, "Washington Post" and Fox-Trot, "In The Garden of To-Morrow."

This will positively be the last night of these enjoyable Promenade Concerts at the Rink until after the Fair, when the Bands will re-open with something extraordinary.

The Band boys will greet you with their usual winning smiles. Even if you don't dance—COME.

CHAPTER XVI.

All was perfectly quiet. Unless she betrayed herself by some sound loud enough to disturb the household, the chances were a hundred to one against detection; but Sidney's terror was so great that she could hardly force her trembling limbs to move, and she dragged herself rather than walked down the stairs and across the hall to the drawing-room. All was dark there; and Sidney groped her way across the room, and sunk down trembling by the window, powerless in her terror and agitation, her breath coming audibly in gasping sobs.

"I cannot do it," she moaned—"it will kill me!"

Then she dragged herself to her feet again, and with fingers which shook so terribly that they were almost powerless unfastened the window.

The rain had ceased and the stars were shining in the deep blue sky as she closed the window after her and passed out into the quiet night.

With the cessation of the rain the storm had risen, and the wind was whistling fiercely around the gables and chimneys of Easthorpe. A sudden gust caught Sidney's long cloak as she closed the window, and snatching the long, heavy folds from her trembling hands, made her stagger as she stood. As soon as she recovered herself, she moved on down the terrace, and hurriedly crossed the lawn to a little rustic summer house, which contained a table and two garden-chairs. Upon one of these Sidney sunk, so breathless and exhausted that the person who was waiting for her there, and who had started forward hastily to greet her, hesitated to speak to her until the gasping, sobbing breath came more evenly. For some minutes—two or three perhaps—there was silence in the summer-house—a silence broken only by Sidney's gasping breath and the wail of the wind. Then a great dark cloud was suddenly rent, and the moon beamed forth, throwing a flood of silver light on the pretty tastefully-laid-out grounds, and on the two white anxious faces confronting each other in a silence more eloquent than any words—a silence which Frank Greville was the first to break.

"So you have come!" he said, half reproachfully, half bitterly. "I was beginning to give you up."

"It was difficult to get away," she answered, faintly. "But you might have known that I should come."

"How should I know it?" he demanded, in the low tone of repressed pas-whose beauty has made me what I am!"

"Frank, where is she?"

He drew back from her in amazement.

"Do you think I know? Heaven! is it possible that you believed that horrible story—that you believed that I had killed the husband to run away with the wife?"

"Hush for Heaven's sake!" she cried in an agony of fear, as the harsh bitter laugh rang out clearly on the stillness of the night. "We shall be overheard!"

"What matters?" he said, bitterly, but speaking in a lower tone now, and glancing out apprehensively into the moonlit grounds. "I am sick of the life I have been leading. To end it would be a mercy. Sidney, it is only the hope that some day I may be cleared that has prevented me from putting an end to myself. Do you know—can you even, conceive what my life has been? No; how can you? Living in luxury and comfort and able to gratify your every whim, you cannot realize what it is to be hunted from pillar to post; what it is not to know in the morning what may happen before night; not to have a roof over your head or a meal of dry bread to keep you from starvation."

A faint shuddering cry broke from her as she sunk down trembling on one of the rustic seats.

"Oh, Frank, oh, Frank, it has not been so bad as that—it has not been so bad as that!"

"So bad as that?" he questioned.

"Sidney, I have been near starvation more than once."

"Oh, great Heaven!"

The thought was a very terrible one. Never had the sadness and misery of Frank's fate been quite absent from her thoughts; she had pictured him hunted, concealed, hiding for his life, but she had not fathomed the depths of misery to which he had fallen, and Frank was not unselfish enough to spare her now. The relief was great to be able to pour out his misery where he knew he should find sympathy and commiseration. He sat down beside the crouching, shivering girl, and Sidney's great dark eyes looked upward at him in the moonlight, while she wondered if the dark, bronzed face was indeed the face of the gallant young lover who had wooed and almost won her for his wife. She herself would not have recognized him in the disguise he had assumed.

the dress of a laboring man, with the thick uncurled-for beard covering the lower part of his face, his hair dull and unkempt, his hands roughened and hardened with work, his eyes, formerly so smiling and gay, now full of a gloomy, morose despair. He looked like a man of middle-age, he was so bent and bowed with toil and care; and Sidney's heart seemed ready to break with anguish at sight of the ruined life, wrecked and destroyed for a woman's whim.

"You are sorry for me, Sidney?" he said sadly.

"Heaven knows that I am!" she answered pitifully.

"I wonder," he said, mustily, looking down at her with a dreamy look in his blue eyes—"I wonder if you are as sorry for me now, Sidney, as I was for you on the day I saw you make Stephen Daunt's wife."

Sidney's face changed, and she drew back a little haughtily.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"I cannot tell you," he answered, gravely. "When I saw, by chance, in a newspaper, an announcement of an approaching marriage between you and Stephen Daunt, John Daunt's only son and heir, I risked my life to warn you; but it was too late."

"Then it was you who—"

She faltered, looking up at him with dilated eyes.

"I who climbed up to your window on the eve of the wedding-day?" he said calmly. "Yes, I risked my life in more ways than one that night, Sidney. I saw you sitting there alone, a happy smile in your eyes, as you thought, I suppose, of the happy life before you—ah, such a happy life, poor betrayed child!—and, if you had not fainted, I would have told you what must ever remain untold now. The next morning, when I saw you his wife, I think the bitterness of death was over for me."

The Maker of Tiny Towns

In one of the busiest streets of London there dwell a certain man named Thorp, whose business is a most uncommon one—the making of models—and he makes a very good living out of it. A recent visitor to the "shop," tells of what he saw as follows:

In the fading light I surveyed the fascinating array of tiny houses, roads, and miniature horses and carts. Across a little bridge Lilliputians were strolling with lifelike gait. It brought to mind a page from "Alice in Wonderland." Phantom children might have stolen out from behind the shadows, but I could see nobody but a kind-eyed man in the corner, smiling to himself as he bent over a littered bench and caressed a treasured model in his fingers.

"They are not destined," said Mr. Thorp, as he welcomed me into his workshop, "for the nursery, but principally for courts of law. I have made thousands of them in the last forty years."

As a "Bluecoat" boy he made a model town of cardboard and wood. He charged his schoolfellows a penny each to see it! But Mr. Thorp's models have appeared at many exhibitions—some could be seen at Wembley. Queen Alexandra was an interested visitor to his exhibit of Old London Models in 1908, and he still shows with pride, the sixpence Her Majesty paid for admission.

"Models play a tragic part in human affairs," he told me. "A short time ago a model of a bungalow was produced in court, and still more recently another of a hut on a poultry farm was used to assist a jury." Lord Darling once paid Mr. Thorp a neat compliment. The details of an action defended by Sir Edward Marshall-Hall were very complicated, but when counsel produced a model the judge—then Mr. Justice Darling—smiled. "Now," he said, dryly, "I understand what you have been talking about for the last hour."

Sitting inside and outside a house at the same time! This was the unique experience enjoyed recently by the guests of a well-known public man who was very proud of his pretty villa. He had placed a small model of the building on the dining table.

Models of buildings cost from $500 to $2,500 to make, but they often save a firm a considerable expense. For instance, Mr. Thorp made a model of the entire working arrangements of a flour mill, situated in the country. The owners were then able to demonstrate certain details in their head-

Distressed After Meals?

Indigestion, no matter how slight, is a nuisance. It can ruin the good nature of the most genial of us.

If you are troubled this way, you'll be glad to know a simple way to avoid it.

Just try eating a few pop-o-mint Life Savers after meals.

It's wonderful how these little mint circles relieve that heavy, lousy feeling after eating.

Probably that's why our grandfathers so often had their bulky little bags of peppermints handy in their pockets.

Life Savers are granddad's bag of peppermints up to date.

See flavors displayed at all good stores so you may help yourself.

An American on a visit to this country went to the Zoo. Approaching one of the keepers, he said to him: "Say, keeper, I want you to take me right along to your head man so that I can talk business with him."

The stoical official eyed him suspiciously.

"And what sort of business do you want to discuss?" he asked.

"Wal, it's like this," explained the American: "I've taken a great fancy to this I'll exhibit, and I want to buy your Zoo for my kids."

"Nothing doing in that line," answered the keeper, tersely; "but I'll tell you what we might do—we might buy your kids for our Zoo."

Englishman's View of American Fashions

London, Sept. 24.—"American women are more richly clothed than the women of any European country, and 90 per cent. of them wear silk foulard and dresses, real silk stockings—and, incidentally, very little else. I should imagine," according to R. G. Thomson, a prominent English draper-haberddasher—just back from the United States.

This was just one of a series of impressions he had of America and Americans, which he has listed thus:

Things I Have Seen.

Ninety-nine of the male population wear straw hats.

Chemists sell, among other things, radio sets, toys, cigars, candy, food drinks, etc. etc. I think they also sell drugs, but I am not sure.

Sunday newspapers run to 1,000 pages—at least, I think there are that many.

5 YEARS' DEBT AGREEMENT ARRANGED.

Dr. Grenfell Lectures on Meaning of Life

Yesterday afternoon at the Normal School, Dr. W. T. Grenfell gave a lecture to a large gathering of the Normal School and Methodist College pupils, the Girl Guides and Boy Scouts. On the platform with the lecturer were His Excellency the Governor and Lady Allardyce, Miss Vili Allardyce, Major Chand, A.D.C., Hon. R. Watson, Principal Paton and others. Principal Paton introduced Dr. Grenfell whom he was glad to welcome as the first guest to speak at the University, and to whom he referred as a great Englishman whose career was a model for those in the audience to follow.

The year the gods supposed to preside over the kitchen and which, by the way, were located in another part of the kitchen with the special day should come around. These women every day were doing a great kindness and all were put in the world for the same purpose, which the uniform of the Scouts and Guides signified they were ready to do. Again a College had been built on the Nile to give the boys there a chance to make themselves ready to meet the vicissitudes of life. One of these Mohammedan lads had been imbued with the true idea that life is what you put into it, not what you get out of it. The result was that when a little girl fell from a high bridge into the foaming water, the boy, despite the fact that by his people women are considered of no account, jumped after her. He lost his life through his clothes becoming fouled in hooks in the water, but proved that he had the true conception of his purpose on earth. His picture adorns the college walls and a statue is being erected to him. In Ottawa there is a memorial to a hero whom the lecturer knew well, and it bears only the inscription: "If I lose my life I save it," which expresses all. Again in China, a boy, whose father and elder brother had been captured by brigands, left his Christian school and, finding the party offered himself in place of the captives who, he said, could work which he could not, and pay the ransom. The father and the brother were released, earned the money and finally secured the boy's freedom. That is what Scouts and Guides are for, that they may be ready to do these things. Another instance of preparedness and the spirit to do right, was given in the case of a naval man whom the lecturer had as engineer on his motor boat on the Labrador coast. That man, as he had promised,

Jackie Coogan Received by the Pope

Jackie Coogan realized his fondest hope the day he arrived in Rome from Paris en route to Athens with his money cargo for the orphan refugees of the Levant. On the Levianan after leaving New York, Jackie met Bishop Walsh of Trenton, N. J., and told him that he was looking forward to an audience with the Pope. When Jackie arrived in Rome the Bishop had made necessary arrangements for an audience with the Pontiff, and Jackie and his parents set out for the Vatican. The day, telling of the visit, said: "About noon we started for the Vatican, going in the big bronze doors of St. Peter's Square. There are two sentinels there and a pretty colonnade. As we entered the door, the Swiss Guards who dress in beautiful uniforms, all came to attention, saluting Bishop Walsh, who accompanied us, as we went up the marble stairs where two great big gendarmes also came to attention. There we waited until the Pope came in, dressed in white. We all knelt and the Pope gave me his hand. I kissed the ring and then all the others kissed the ring and he gave me a special blessing. Bishop Walsh had told the Pope all about us before we came. Then the Holy Father patted me on the cheek, then went to a drawer and took out a box and presented it to me. Inside was a little silver medal with the Pope's coat of arms engraved in gold. It's a wonderful gift and made me very happy because only a very few people get it. Jackie's first picture since his return from abroad will be seen at the Nickel Theatre Monday. The production is the fourth on his Metro-Goldwyn contract and was written by Willard Mack. It is entitled "The Bad Man" Robert Edson, Max Davidson, William Conklin and Lydia Yesmans are in the cast.

was ready with steam at all hours and in any weather. He typified the Navy which is always ready and that is the spirit for all. On Labrador, too, there was the case of a boy from a family of eight who asked Dr. Wakefield for a job at driving his dog team. These teams consist of twelve dogs, each weighing about 150 pounds, so that the task of driving them is no light one. The boy was considered small but his consistency won him the job and, with the Doctor, started from Battle Harbour for Nain, a distance of 400 miles, but much longer, owing to the tortuous route. Crossing the land at Cape Harrison, in order to save distance, the doctor with a man who was showing them the way, went off after caribou, telling the boy to stay with the dogs and sledges. As a result of a blizzard the two men went astray and broke out next morning in Hamilton Inlet, finally reaching a cottage. There the idea of the boy being still with the dogs was mooted, but on search it was shown to be the case. Jimmy was on the job where he

"Feet of Clay" at Star Movie To-Day

Cecil B. DeMille's first Famous Forty production is Feet of Clay. I have seen this picture, and I want to say that the box office wizard of "Manslaughter," "Male and Female," and "Why Change Your Wife?" made Feet of Clay.
The scenes in which scores of beautiful bathing beauties race on surfboards; the society ballroom designed by Norman Bel Geddes, who did the settings for Geat's "The Miracle"; the scenes and gowns in the ultra-fashionable modiste shop—here is audience stuff that DeMille knows how to create to perfection.
Feet of Clay is, in addition, an unusually strong love-drama. It is the story of a bapper of eighteen growing into a wife at twenty-one, but still retaining much of her love for jazz and excitement, and getting into complications thereby. The backgrounds

Storing Sounds on Steel

A man sitting in an office in Berlin, Cape Town, or Peking may soon be able to dictate a letter that will be heard and taken down instantly by a shorthand writer in an office in London.

This is one of the startling results of an invention perfected in a Berlin laboratory. The invention, which has taken eighteen years to perfect, consists of recording and storing sounds on steel. The sounds are recorded on a steel wire by electro-magnetic means, so that the wire bears no surface markings of any kind and can at any time be "emptied" of its sound contents in readiness to receive others.

The wire can be connected with any telegraphic cable, which conveys the sounds farther. It is predicted that within a short time every newspaper correspondent in the world will be able to dictate his articles direct to his office.

To empty the wire is a very simple matter: one simply reverses the process, and re-transforms the magnetic waves into ordinary sound-waves.

Instead of being "emptied" for further use (says a writer in 'Science') the charged wire may be disconnected and stored up, when it will, on being reconnected, repeat its sound contents as often as desired. The life of such a sound wire, unlike that of a photograph plate, is limitless.

The Zoo's Menu

The Zoo's menu is not only various in its dishes, but very bulky in its aggregate. It comprises the needs of beast, bird, reptile, fish, and insect.

Last year the walrus alone consumed 4 tons 15 cwt. of cod. The carnivorous animals—lions, tigers, leopards, panthers, hyenas, and wolves—consumed the flesh, and some of the bone also, of 440 horses. A few other items were 35 tons of herrings and whittins, 1,500 pints of shrimps, 343 gallons of fresh milk, over 14,000 tins of condensed milk, 128lb. of honey, 288lb. of ants' eggs, 77lb. of meal-worms, 150 bunches of onions, 108 heads of celery, 1 ton 17 cwt. of grapes, and 213,080 bananas.

The total cost, including whole stacks of hay, many bushels of bird seed, Indian corn, barley, and wheat, reached £11,837. Fuel cost £2,014, and water £1,291.

Towards paying for this and the many other expenses of the Zoo, the 2,057,446 visitors during the year paid £29,219 at the gates, and for entrance to the Aquarium an additional £23,056, not to mention payments for elephant, camel, and llama rides, or the £150,000 paid as subscriptions by Fellows of the Zoological Society.

For a good Tonic try BRICK'S TASTELESS, price $1.20. —sept28.11

All Through a Mouse

One of the results of the increasing complexity of things is that the merest trifle may disorganize a whole community. A recent fire, which resulted in damage to the extent of £27,000, is supposed to have been caused by a mouse gnawing through a lead gas-pipe.

Twice within twelve months there has been a similar happening, though with less grave consequences, in a Welsh church. A mouse or rat has interfered with the apparatus for blowing the organ, which for this reason has broken down during a service.

In a Gloucester shop a flood took place through a similar cause. Rats gnawed through a lead pipe, allowing water to make its way to all parts of the premises, in which damage estimated at £400 or £500 was done.

But usually such mishaps are in connection with electricity, where they cause a maximum of confusion and expense. Sometimes they paralyze a whole works. A case in point occurred a few years ago in one of the largest iron and steel foundries in Essex. Suddenly the place was brought to a standstill, all the machinery stopping through a failure in the power supply. After several hours' search the cause was found to be an electrocuted mouse. The little creature, which had crept into a motor while it was standing still, had, through approaching too near a live wire, turned itself into a "conductor," thus diverting the current completely.

Trams Stopped By A Rat.

Towns, too, are put out of gear by such trifles. At Derby a rat gnawed its way to a duct near the electricity stores, and thus held up the tramway service on several occasions. In the end it attacked the casing of a power cable and was electrocuted. The cable fused and there was considerable loss of current.

More serious still was an incident of the same nature at Aberdeen. A mouse got between two 6,000-volt cables, making them short circuit, and instantly disorganizing the electric supply for both lighting and power. Out went the lights everywhere; machinery came to a standstill, and many business men and shoppers who were in lifts had to remain suspended in mid-air.

Lincoln has been particularly unfortunate in regard to "breakdowns" through trifling causes. As mice gnawed the rubber of a cable, and very light in the town went out, cats were installed in the power station to catch such trespassers. The first was a victim of misplaced confidence. Thinking that a rotary transformer was still, he attempted to sit on it. His reign ended there and then. Another cat made the mistake of mousing inside a high-tension cubicle. So black night swept over Lincoln for the third time.

Wasn't the Big Brown Bear calling the little rabbit on the telephone in the last story? I hope he is still on the wire. Little Reader, for I'm curious to hear what he has to say.

And so are you, I know full well. For every time that little bell gives a tinkle, calling me, I'm full of curiosity.

"Did you see Old Mr. Dog's Cross Word Puzzle in this morning's Bugle?" asked the big brown furry animal. "Splendid advertisement for my lollypops. Already have had 23 orders. Goodness me, I hope there's enough on the Lollypop Tree."

"Did you see Mother's name right at the top?" asked the excited little bunny. "She said she wishes mine were just like hers!" "That's true," answered the thoughtful old bear. "Mothers are always unselfish. Mine was, too. I can remember she always saved a little honey in the jar for me. Well, goodbye. Give my best regards to your mother."

The next minute dear Uncle Lucky hopped up on the back porch, his old wedding stovepipe hat on his head and the Bunnymede Bugle in his right paw.

"Where's Lady Love?" he asked, peeping into the kitchen.

"In the flower garden," answered the bunny boy. "But she's seen the answer to the Cross Word Puzzle."

"Well, I'm going to motor over to see Old Mr. Dog," cried happy Uncle Lucky. "That old dog deserves a new collar for remembering the sweetest little lady in all Rabbitland."

"Who is she?" asked Lady Love, tripping up the little path with an armful of flowers and two roses, one in each cheek.

"You, of course," answered the old gentleman rabbit. "Who else could it be?" And he raised his precious old wedding stovepipe hat. Yes, he did, that nice, polite old bunny uncle. He rode in the dear old bunny's car.

never forgot his manners, although he didn't always remember his pocket handkerchief. But if he didn't, Little Miss Mouse always did. Yes, indeed, His devoted little housekeeper always made it a point to slip her paw into his pocket to make sure it was there. Sometimes instead, she found a tiny peppermint heart, on which might be printed in red letters:

"I love you, So don't be blue."

Then, with a happy laugh, she'd eat the candy and slip a nice, clean handkerchief into the empty pocket.

He raised his precious old wedding stovepipe hat.

"Want to come along with me?" enquired dear Uncle Lucky a few minutes later, pinching the little rabbit's ear very gently, of course, for he wouldn't have hurt his little bunny nephew for the world. No sire, not for the world and a couple of planets.

"Be back in time for lunch," called Lady Love, as away sped the bunny-mobile.

And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that, for the old dog's cabin is not very far when you think of it.

Summer crowds out the spring,
Autumn tints field and tree
With splendid majesty,
And soon, alas,
Winter hurls frost and snow
All below.
Perchance the young green tree
Perceives its destiny
When to remain,
When reaching middle-age
Should hold that ampler stage
In spite of pain,
Perchance, with winter's frost
All will be lost.
So much to learn and see,
So much to know and be,
So brief the stay,
How wonders if the strife
To wrest some charm from life
Is truly pay,
How can he become sublime
In such a little time?
And the things of grace
Are not the seasons' pace,
How much is sure
That summer follows spring,
That age to which we'd cling
Must not endure,
For the soul shall be
Through eternity.

A Non-Stop Music Hall

BRINGING PARIS TO LONDON.

Of the many strange theatrical ventures in London, none is stranger than the Alcazar, a new music-hall that has three stages and no seats. There, for the modest sum of 12s 3d., you can enjoy a twelve-hours' variety programme.
I entered a long, low-roofed hall which was painted to give the effect of rough stonework. At the far end, mounted on a small platform about ten feet square, and raised about a foot from the ground, one of the performers was singing a familiar old song to people crowded round the edge of the platform.
When he stopped, the audience moved like a swarm of bees to the second platform, where a pretty dancer had appeared. A few minutes later the announcer drew attention to the Spanish tenor climbing on to the third stage in readiness to sing "Until" in broken English. There are no programmes.

Mind Your Hat!

"This is the first time that license has been obtained for a non-stop variety entertainment," said M. Lucien Samet, the manager. "I started the Alcazar music-hall in Paris on similar lines and it met with immediate success."

The music for artists on two of the platforms is supplied by a pianist whose instrument stands on the floor between them. Another duty he performs is to switch the lights on and off the appropriate platforms. If you like, you can push your way through the audience and study the music over his shoulder. I saw many people doing all at once to help the poor pianist turn over the pages at the right moment.

The closeness of the performers to the audience has advantages as well as disadvantages. Music-hall artists are always interesting when seen at close quarters. You can see the comedian actually wink, and can hear "rasdies" that you can never hear at a theatre unless you happen to sit in the stalls. Performers at the Alcazar certainly get to grips with their audiences, for you can stand near enough for the high-kick dancers to knock your hat off.

But there is something disconcerting about the darkened eyes and the grease paint of artists when seen at a distance of only a few feet. Illusion is a precious thing in the theatrical world.

From twenty to thirty vaudeville acts are provided at this show, and there is nothing to prevent your seeing them all over and over again without any extra charge. No artist, the manager told me, is paid less than 5 pounds a week.

When artists appear on the platform near the performers' entrance the pianist has a rest, for a jazz band, consisting of a pianist and a trumpeter, then comes into operation. There is a full complement of "etceteras," dear to the heart of the comedian, the man with hoops, and the trick dancer.

At this music-hall any aspirant to stage success can have a free "auditions." Several old "stars," who topped the bill in their day, have performed there.

Being refused a part is a tragedy of the saddest kind. "Some of these auditions," M. Samet related, "can tear the heart-strings." One woman advanced to sing a song, and after a few bars fell in a dead faint. She was starving, yet you can find her name in the stage "Who's Who."

Every day about 1,500 people visit the show, which is certainly the nearest you can get in London to the cafe chantants in Paris.

"Pass the Pepper"

FROM PLANTATION TO POT.

Raw pepper reaches us from China, Singapore, the Straits Settlements, and other countries, in the form of shrivelled black or dark brown berries. Furthermore, when the bags of raw pepper are opened they are found to contain whole berries, broken berries, and a quantity of dust.

The surplus rubbish is separated from the berries by feeding the whole into a blowing machine. It is blown along a corridor fitted at the bottom with funnel-shaped openings under which bags are suspended. The force of the draught is regulated until the whole berries fall into the first bag, the slightly lighter ones into the next, and so on until there is nothing left but light dust, stems, and other rubbish.

Skinned By Machinery

A whole pepper berry consists of an outer shell or casing of dark pepper, at the centre of which is the pure white, aromatic table pepper. The dark outer skin is removed by a machine called a decorticator, consisting of an almost cone-shaped stone revolving in an opposite direction to, and inside, a wire mesh cage. This cage helps the stone to scrape the shell off the berries, and also to sift the dust and shells into separate bags from the whole berries.

When a consignment has passed through the machine once the berries are known as "C quality whole." This quality is used for pickling pepper or for mixing with spices.

After passing through the decorticator again the result is "B quality"; and still once more, "A quality." The latter consists entirely of round, hard, shiny berries of pure white pepper.

It is then ground again and again until fine, and finished off by being passed under two huge revolving stones called edge runners. Finally it is packed into barrels and kegs for dispatch to the consumers.

In Aid of St. Anthony Patients
REQUEST FOR DISCARDED PERAMBULATOR WHEELS.

Dear Sir,—Dr. Curtis of St. Anthony Hospital has been introducing for the sake of the patients suffering with tubercular diseases of spine and joints, portable splints on wheels as used in the big Orthopaedic Clinics in England, the Head Nurse of the Pyram Hospital, England, being there at the present time directing the work. He has wired me to ask whether anyone interested in this unfortunate class of sufferers have not stowed away somewhere in their garrets or elsewhere, wheels of superannated perambulators of which he wants two dozen sets very badly. Mr. Leveson, Seaman's Institute, would be very grateful to anyone who could help in any way, would receive the wheels at the Institute and would forward them to Dr. Curtis by the northern boat. They would form part of permanent splints.

Thanking you in anticipation,
Sincerely yours,
WILFRID GRENFELL.

LUSCOMBE-LARBY.
A very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 30th, at the home of the bride's parents, British Square, when Miss Violet Maude, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Luscombe, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Cyril Roy, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Darby. Rev. T. B. Darby, uncle of the groom, officiated at the ceremony. The bride, who looked charming in a very pretty gown of cream silk Canton crepe with bridal veil and wreath and carrying a bouquet of roses and maiden hair fern, entered the room leaning on the arm of her father. The bridesmaid, Miss Jessie Watson, looked charming in blue crepe de chine and carried a bouquet of astors and sweet peas, while the groom was supported by Harold Luscombe, brother of the bride. After the ceremony a reception was held when a very pleasant and enjoyable time was spent by relatives and friends of the bridal party. The groom's present to the bride was a handsome grey fox fur, to the bridesmaid a $10 gold piece, and to the groomsmen gold sleeve links. The presents were numerous and costly, amongst which was a cheque and purse of gold from the firm of Job Bros. & Co., where the bride was employed for a number of years, testifying to the esteem in which the popular young couple were held. Amidst showers of rice, confetti and good wishes the happy young couple left by motor car for Topsail where the honeymoon will be spent.

Rotary Luncheon

MR. CONROY DISCUSSES "TENANTS' RIGHTS."

The weekly luncheon of the St. John's Rotary Club was held yesterday at the Sterling Restaurant. Chairman Reuben Horwood introduced James O.N. Conroy, Barrister and Solicitor, who delivered a very timely address on "Tenants' Rights under the new Charter." His address is as follows:—

My Chairman, Gentlemen of the Club, I greatly appreciate the honour of having been asked to address you, and I shall endeavour to show my appreciation by being as brief as is consistent with clearness and as clear as is consistent with brevity. The subject of my remarks is to the position of a large class of the citizens of St. John's—those who are tenants under building leases—(as the law stands to-day). I should like to make it clear at the outset that I claim no special expertise in this subject among my professional brethren. It is simply that I have been up against this situation in my practice, and have been moved to public protest, and thus have come to your notice.

It will be easiest if I begin by stating this position in terms of the Common Law as it exists throughout most of the British Commonwealth and of the United States, except as it has been modified by statute in each jurisdiction. This law is clearness itself on the subject, whatever one may think of its justice. It rests on the simple rigid principle that the owner of the freehold is sovereign, and his rights limited only by the letter of his concessions. He may demise his land for what term he will, at a rental agreed upon. He has unique and effective powers to enforce the collection of that rental (as for example, distress), and in the absence of special provisions in the lease entitling the tenant to compensation the land reverts to him absolutely at its expiry, together with all improvements. Though land was vacant, though the tenant have erected a building worth many times its value (in many leases his doing so was a condition of the lease), though a valuable business goodwill have attached to the premises, when the term expires the Common Law hands over everything to the landlord. Theoretically of course, there is freedom of contract; no one is obliged to take land on such terms against his will. But where land is concentrated in a few hands the value of this illusory freedom is obvious and this is the secret of the great landed fortunes of the Astors and the Westminsters.

The old Common Law was a good friend to the landlord, as we have seen, and it prevailed in St. John's unmodified until just after the great fire of 1892. It was then enacted that any leases granted thereafter for a less term than 99 years should be subject to certain conditions limiting the landlord's rights on their expiry. Either the lease was to be renewed for a further period making up 99 years in all from its original commencement (upon terms to be settled by agreement) or the tenant was to be compensated for the improvements effected during the term of the lease, the amount of his compensation to be determined by ordinary arbitration. The option was with the landlord, who might offer a renewal or expel the tenant, and put him to his compensation. Moreover, all leases granted for 99 years and leases granted before 1892 were unaffected by this Act and continued to be construed according to the Common Law.

This was the situation for nearly thirty years, until "The St. John's Municipal Act, 1921" better known as the Charter, received the Royal Assent four years and two months ago. Doubtless many of you are more familiar than I am with the course of the protracted discussions and negotiations which for three or four years preceded that event. There is no present need to dwell upon them, and I only refer to them in order to remind you of the almost excessive care and deliberation with which the Charter was weighed and considered by the various bodies concerned before it ultimately found its way to the Statute Book. You may criticize its various provisions, call them unjust or unwise if you will. But you cannot deny that they are deliberate and intentional.

Now the Charter amended the law of leaseholds as follows:—First, it provided for an automatic "twenty years' purchase" clause to be read into all leases granted subsequently to its enactment. You all doubtless know what the phrase "twenty years' purchase" means. Perhaps not all of you know that the clause only applies to subsequent leases and has no application to leases granted before 1892; there is at all events a popular delusion to the contrary. This particular matter, however, is none of our present business.

The second provision is what I am coming at, and is contained in Section 95. It applies to all building leases without exception granted before 1921, and provides that during the currency of any such lease (that is, before its expiry) the tenant—not the landlord—shall have three options:—

First, to buy out the freehold of the land. Second, to obtain a renewal of the lease. Third, to allow his lease to expire, surrender the premises, and obtain compensation for his "unexhausted improvements" a technical term usually synonymous with the present value of the buildings on the land, but which may include goodwill, etc.

You may well conclude, and I think most people have concluded, that this plan and fair definition of the tenant's rights all his anxieties and injustices are over. That feeling of satisfaction is, however, a little premature, as appears when one attempts to translate these principles into practical effect.

If the Legislature had been content to leave the adjustment of the mutual rights of tenants and landlord to ordinary arbitration based on the principles of the Act as was done in 1892, all would have been well. Unfortunately, it decided to erect a special tribunal for that purpose, and Section 96 provides that the determination (a) of the value of the freehold; (b) of an equitable term and rental for the renewal; and (c) of the value of the exhausted improvements, should be made by a Conciliation Board of three persons "to be appointed by the Governor in Council," who were also to prescribe its procedure; and so forth. Now in the absence of agreement between the parties—an improbable event—no other method of settling their rights is provided. And none of the five successive Executive Councils that have held office since the Charter became law has even appointed a Conciliation Board, much less prescribed for its procedure.

It would be premature, and very presumptuous in any case, for me to attempt an authoritative statement of the legal effect of that commission. There are many doubtful points, as for example the extent to which the 1892 provisions are repealed. But to put the matter at its blackest, it is possible that until the Board is appointed the sole effect of the Charter is to repeal the 1892 Act and to bring the former Common Law principles into force again. And it seems almost certain that so long as no tribunal exists to which the matter may be referred tenants will lose irrevocably their options of purchase or renewal, will be obliged to surrender possession without a cent of compensation, and will be left to wait until the Conciliation Board is appointed (with such patience as they can muster) to prefer a claim for improvements which by that time may, by reason of the landlord's death or insolvency very well prove uncollectable.

Certain legal brethren of mine, for whom both personally and professionally I have a very real respect, have spoken warmly to me of the vested rights of ground landlords and of the sanctity of existing laws. With all due deference, I strongly disagree. I say the existing law is the Charter, and the sanctity is in the rights, of the long-suffering tenants which the law all too tardily recognizes. And I say further that it is a black disgrace that these rights, solemnly conferred by legislative enactment, should be withheld by Executive inertia—for I believe it is nothing more.

Unlike the immortal Fat Boy I do not "want to make your flesh creep," and I shall leave the captivating subject of "Absentee Landlords' Gold" to the more sensational party in the Press—it ought to provide a good headline for a dull week-end. But frankly, I believe the only reason a Conciliation Board has not been appointed is that it has been less trouble for the successive Governments to "let it slide" than to undertake that not very Herculean task. If one is to be appointed it will have to be because it is less trouble for the Government to appoint one than not. Possibly that can be arranged, if any substantial proportion of those whose interests are involved will make it their business to assist.

I have no idea what proportion of Rotarians are tenants under building leases. But I believe that your organization prides itself—and justly—on its good citizenship. Here is an opportunity for your great influence to be exerted in the cause of good citizenship and of simple justice, to the end that the city's freemen may reap the fruits of their city's Charter.

A hearty vote of thanks was given Mr. Conroy for his opportune and interesting address.

The guests included Messrs. Sydney Bursell and Brian Dunfield.

ONE OF OUR ESCAPES.

What fun it is to plan! I have never yet in any season had what seemed to me just the right clothes, but every year when I plan the next season's clothes, I am perfectly convinced in the rosy glow of my plans that this time I shall get the most solid together just the right things. With this dress cleaned, and that one fixed over, and a more becoming fur on that coat, and a new frock or two that are going to be more wisely chosen this time, and a really good hat to supplement last year's hat, I am sure for once I am going to have just the clothes I need.

But The Reality Slips Up. And then the season comes around and when I take out last year's hat I find that it looks very different somehow from what it did when I put it away last year, and won't do at all; and the frock that was to be fixed over doesn't come out well; and I get too dressy a dress and find myself lacking the smart, simple frock I really need the most. And so I am in the end no better off than the season before.

But next year, I assure myself, I am going to do better. Next year I shall do this and that. And so again I escape from the disappointment of reality into the infinite possibilities of plans.

How Lucky It Is Never Right. I have never yet had my garden just the way I want it. But that is really fortunate for if it were perfect I should have no further chance to plan, but as it is, I can spend delicious moments planning just where I will have the zinnias next year and how many more snapdragons I will have, where I shall put the bachelor's-buttons to make them do better, and how I can get more pink and yellow into that corner that is altogether too yellow now.

If I have a tiresome ride on the trolley to take, I can easily amuse myself thinking of that garden and rearranging and rearranging my colors and forms in my mind. If it were perfect and there were no planning and rearranging left to do, how sad it would be!

The Imaginary Farm. Perhaps I am fonder of planning than most people. I wonder? I know it has always been a game with me. When we were small my sister and I used to plan our imaginary farm. We each had a slip of paper and a pencil and solemnly wrote down how many pigs and how many cows and how many hens (mine were to be all bantams, none of those ugly commonplace hens for me) and how many sheep, etcetera, each were to have. And later in school days another girl and I wiled away the time that was supposed to have been spent in the dreary business of study, by planning a trousseau for an imaginary bride. We wrote down the descriptions of her gown, hats, etcetera, on slips of paper.

How I wish I could find some of those descriptions of Madeline's gown!

I wonder if any of my Reader friends ever did anything as foolish and fanciful as that. I hope they did not. I hope they had as much fun as we did. And I know, too, that if they did they will want to write and tell me about it. And that would be fun for me.

Arresting a Ship. With the arrest of the Thames whisky ship, Governor Serret, many people learned for the first time that a ship can be arrested.

The law of maritime arrest is very complicated, but it appears that having committed a crime a vessel can be followed until she is caught, even if she has passed into different ownership since her lapse from grace. She must, however, be arrested in a port where the courts of the country which has ordered the arrest have jurisdiction, and there are many vessels afloat to-day that avoid making voyages to certain countries because there is a warrant out against them there.

The crimes that a vessel can commit are varied, but the most common is damaging another vessel, or piers or docks, by collision. In such cases a vessel can be arrested until security for the damage is given or liability for damage has been decided in the courts.

Evading dock harbour dues is another offence for which a vessel can be arrested. As in the case of the General Serret, arrest can also be made on an allegation that the owner has not paid some debt.

A ship is arrested by nulling the warrant to a prominent part, generally by a mast.

Some vessels cannot be arrested, for they belong to nations and not to private owners, and by international law are immune from legal process. This was all very well when nations owned only warships and the like, because it was essential that a man-of-war about to sail for battle should not be held up in port on some frivolous pretext.

To-day, however, many nations own commercial ships, and naturally the private ship owners resent the legal immunity which their State-owned competitors enjoy. So pressing has the matter become that the International Maritime Committee, which is about to meet at Genoa, is devoting much of its time to the discussion of the problem, and it is probable that international law dealing with the immunity of State-owned ships will shortly be amended.

Britain's New Capital Ships

H.M.S. Nelson, which was launched on September 3, at Walker-on-Tyne, is one of the first capital ships to be constructed for the British Navy since the war. Her consort, Rodney, is expected to be launched next January, according to advices received by Bankers Trust Company of New York from its British Information Service. The construction of these ships was authorized in 1922 following the conclusion of the Washington Naval Treaty. Construction in each case has proceeded at a leisurely rate, so that while before the war it was not unusual for a British battleship to be delivered ready for sea two years after the laying of the keel, it now seems probable that the construction of these two vessels will occupy from four and a half to five years.

Seven years have passed since the last British capital ship left the ways. By the ruling of the Treaty Great Britain is debarred from laying down any further ships of this type until 1931, in which year two more may be begun, with another pair in 1932 and with additional pairs in each of the three following years. It is provided by the Treaty that the completion of each new battleship will automatically displace certain of the older pre-Treaty units. For example, when the Nelson and Rodney are commissioned, the King George V., Ajax, Centurion and Thunderer must be scrapped. Consequently, as time goes on the numerical strength of the fleet will steadily diminish, until by 1936 it will contain no more than 15 capital ships, at which figure it will remain for the further duration of the Treaty.

Full details of the Nelson's design have not been released by the Admiralty. However, the principal dimensions are known to be as follows:—Length 702 feet, breadth 106 feet, mean draught 30 feet, displacement 35,000 tons. A remarkable feature of the design is the phenomenal breadth. The Nelson is expected to differ radically in appearance from all preceding battleships. She is to have three triple turrets containing 16-inch guns mounted on the centre line forward of the bridge, the second turret being raised to a higher level to permit of its guns firing directly over the first turret. This has necessitated the withdrawal of boilers and machinery to a position further aft than usual and the large single funnel is placed well towards the stern. British authorities state that the Nelson and the Rodney represent the very last word in battleship design, and that they will take to sea the heaviest and most powerful artillery ever mounted in a ship.

Incidentally the construction is giving employment to many thousands of workers in various branches of industry, a very large proportion of the total cost of the two ships—£14,000,000 will have been spent in wages.

He lived in Mudville long, and always ran it down; the adjectives were strong with which he scored the town. "It is too dead to skin," he said, in accents sad, "no delegate can win a roll in such a grad. The main street's green with grass, so little traffic's here, and strangers, as they pass, can only josh and jeer. I'd like to move away, to 'Punktown-in-the-Dell'; there life is fine and gay, there only boozers dwell. That Punktown village grows, while Mudville's standing still, and there the wise man goes, if he can foot the bill." At last this grouch went to Punktown made his way, and there his "discontent" was voiced day after day. "This town's a false alarm, it's hoodooed, sure" said he; "it has no sort of charm, it gives a pain to me. Dear Mudville was my home, a village sweet and fair, and bats were in my dome when I pulled out of there—in Mudville there's a chance for every honest guy to prosper and advance, and put some money by. That town is up to date, it booms forevermore, there's work for every skate, and credit at the store." "Go back to Mudville, then," the Punktown people cried; "we have no use for men who can't be satisfied." And so he journeyed there, and paced the Mudville street, and started in to swear that Punktown "can't be beat, can stand the lad who always runs they ran him out of town; what burg it down, and boozes the other grad."

Arresting a Ship

With the arrest of the Thames whisky ship, Governor Serret, many people learned for the first time that a ship can be arrested.

The law of maritime arrest is very complicated, but it appears that having committed a crime a vessel can be followed until she is caught, even if she has passed into different ownership since her lapse from grace. She must, however, be arrested in a port where the courts of the country which has ordered the arrest have jurisdiction, and there are many vessels afloat to-day that avoid making voyages to certain countries because there is a warrant out against them there.

The crimes that a vessel can commit are varied, but the most common is damaging another vessel, or piers or docks, by collision. In such cases a vessel can be arrested until security for the damage is given or liability for damage has been decided in the courts.

Evading dock harbour dues is another offence for which a vessel can be arrested. As in the case of the General Serret, arrest can also be made on an allegation that the owner has not paid some debt.

A ship is arrested by nulling the warrant to a prominent part, generally by a mast.

Some vessels cannot be arrested, for they belong to nations and not to private owners, and by international law are immune from legal process. This was all very well when nations owned only warships and the like, because it was essential that a man-of-war about to sail for battle should not be held up in port on some frivolous pretext.

To-day, however, many nations own commercial ships, and naturally the private ship owners resent the legal immunity which their State-owned competitors enjoy. So pressing has the matter become that the International Maritime Committee, which is

The Recovery of Russia

Leeds Yorkshire Post (Cons.): The Western Powers, with either the cooperation or the friendly approval of the United States, should endeavor to reach a joint agreement as to their common attitude to Russia. The basis of that attitude should be an avowed readiness to consider favorably the question of offering special credits and facilities towards the economic and commercial recovery of Russia, if and when Russia denotes her own readiness to receive a representative Commission of Inquiry. No country which seeks credit can object to those from whom credit is sought asking to be allowed to examine the assets of the would-be borrower. If the Soviet would back its requests for credit by such a proof of genuine purpose, the other Powers might then be able to assist materially in Russia's recovery.

Quebec's Wriggling Industry

THE GENESIS, EXODUS AND REVELATION OF THE PROFITABLE EEL AS RELATED BY PIERRE THUOT.

By NAPIER MOORE.

A celebrated writer of sea stories recently wrote for a widely circulated American weekly a series of articles describing in vivid language the life of the fishermen who harvest the Banks. They were thrilling narratives of schooners, rail under, scudding before a gale; of dories adrift amidst mountainous seas; of the spears of sword-fish standing in the "pulpit," under the bowsprit, neck deep in green, swirling water. They were the type of men who, in the stinging, icy blasts of an Atlantic winter, sail forth to wrestle with death itself in order that they may bring fish to market and earn at most a modest livelihood.

This, too, is the story of a fisherman. He dwells in a picturesque little French-Canadian town. His "bank" is the swiftly flowing Richelieu River. He fishes three, or maybe four, months of the year. His market is assured. His daily catch for the next five years is already contracted for. And he stows away $10,000 or more each season.

He is Monsieur Pierre C. Thuot, Le Pecheur of Iboville, Province of Quebec. He is the harvester of eels.

For some time we had carried in our pocket a newspaper clipping an-

We tramp the dusty road back to Iboville and find the good-looking cottage of Monsieur Thuot. The womanfolk are in the kitchen, bustling over the pots and pans. Certainly, Monsieur Thuot will see us. We enter. Immediately a demonical laugh shatters the peace. He! He! Haw! He! He! He! It is a parrot, clattering in its cage suspended from the ceiling.

We are ushered into a room, half sitting room, half office. From a couch rises Pierre Thuot. A short man, with ruddy face, white moustaches and a pair of mighty shoulders. They carry his near seventy years as though they were but forty.

We apologize for interrupting his nap. "He! He!" sniggers the parrot.

"Tels? Monsieur fills his pipe, lights up, and sits back in his chair. "I have been catching eels here all my life. My father caught eels all his life. He was 84 when he died. He had two partners. They were over 90. Before my father, my grandfather caught eels here. Before him, my great-grandfather maybe. Maybe my son will catch eels after me. So? Always the Thuots catch eels. I have a license which I renew every nine years. It gives me the sole use of this spot. Three hundred dollars I pay the Provincial Government each year."

"Eels That Pass in the Night."

We learn that the eel fishing season is short. It starts in May (this year, May 17th), and by September it is all over. Unlike scale fish, eels when they have spent a certain length of time in fresh water, travel down-stream to the sea. This they always do in the summer months, and always by night. On moonlight nights they do not travel in such numbers as on dark nights. In this short period of from three to four months, an average of a thousand eels are caught each night. The method of capture is simple. At the four points of the big zig-zag dam are fixed wooden boxes, 5 feet x 3 by 2. With a hinged lid, they are completely enclosed except for a hole near the bottom. Leading into each box through this hole is a long funnel-shaped wooden structure. The boxes and funnels are submerged. The dam and the wooden fences upon it make corridors down, which the eels are forced to go. And once they enter the funnel and thence into the box they are trapped.

Every morning, Thuot and his helpers rise at three, put off from their shed in a flat-bottomed, punt-like boat, and row up the rapids to the traps. The lids are opened and the eels transferred to the boat by a big-throated, stout net. The boat is specially constructed, with overhanging planks around the gunwales to prevent any sprightly eel from wriggling out of the boat. With a big catch—and as many as 2,400 have been trapped in one night—two or three trips are necessary in order to transfer the squirming cargo down-stream to the receiving boxes—stoutly timbered square vats placed in the river—into which the catch is tumbled. Later in the day they are taken out and packed, still alive, in barrels. Fifty pounds of ice go into each barrel first, then 100 lbs. of fish. Early on the following morning the barrels are collected by the Dominion Express and shipped by rail to Quebec. All Thuot's eels are sold under contract to the American Eels Corporation of Quebec. This company loads them into vessels and ships them to Holland and Germany. New York and Chicago maintain big markets for eels, but under a New York State law, no fish caught in the Richelieu River may enter that State. Therefore, New York receives its eels from other fisheries than those of Quebec.

The American Eels Corporation pays Thuot eleven cents a pound. During the war the rate was 12 cents. Afterwards it dropped to 8 cents, before rising to the present figure, which Thuot regards as good pay. Thuot's average daily catch for the last three years has totalled 3,000 pounds. His average total for the season has been 100,000 pounds. At 11 cents a pound, the income is easy to figure. His expenses, including the Government license fee, average $2,000 a season. This covers wages and the cost of setting up his dam, fences and replacing those parts of the stone barrage which are carried away by ice.

For four months work this sounds like a good return. But it is strenuous work while it lasts. Each fall the fences and boxes must be removed from the river. Each spring they must be rebuilt. As the water level rises and falls, intricate adjustments of the apparatus must be made. The daily work of handling and packing a writhing, slithering three thousand pound mass is laborious.

Monsieur Thuot rises, goes to a cupboard and produces a jar wherein are four inch, cylindrical strips of gray flesh. They are smoked eel. He has a scheme for putting out canned eel, but as to that he can do nothing for five years, for it is not his entire harvest during that time contracted for Smoked eel, he figures will cost 30 cents a pound.

And now to consider the eel, whence it cometh and whither it goeth. We pull out the clippings and extracts from the Encyclopaedia.

"The Greek philosopher Aristotle said that eels have no sex and lay no eggs, but spring from the entrails of the sea." We begin: "We read further, that hundreds of years elapsed before an Italian scientist, Syrski, of Trieste, discovered there was a male eel as well as a female eel. To be precise, this revelation made the year 1873 a memorable one. How the male eel has kept himself out of sight during all these centuries was considered an unfathomable mystery until L. Jacoby, after much patient research, announced that he had found no gentlemen eels exceeding nineteen inches in length, whereas the females reached a length of thirty-nine inches or more."

Monsieur Thuot nods. "I catch them well over three feet, sometimes."

"Scientists tell us," we continue, "that there is every reason to believe that all eels have their origin in the depths of the ocean, either in the vicinity of the West Indies or the Azores; that the female eels spawn there and, spawning, die; that the eggs are hatched as they float midway between sea-bottom and the surface; that the baby eels (measuring less than an inch at birth), find their way to the rivers, swim upstream and remain in fresh water for about twelve years. Then they are smitten with a desire to return to their birthplace. They go down-stream to the sea, or to be caught in traps and sent to feed the sturdy Germans and Dutch."

Monsieur Thuot shakes his head doubtfully.

"We are even told by Compton's Picture Encyclopaedia that eels may often be seen wriggling through wet grass or along a muddy road, in search of fresh water."

"HEH! HEH! HEH! HAW! HAW!" roared the parrot.

Monsieur Thuot smiles. "Monsieur, for me the eels are born in the fresh water—in Lake George Lake Champlain. I, myself, have found in Lake George, young eels not three inches long. Did they swim from the middle of the Atlantic and walk over muddy roads and, Monsieur, for me the eels don't lay eggs."

"No eggs, monsieur," reiterates Monsieur Thuot. "You have eyes. I have eyes. You shall see for yourself, maybe if we are lucky. Come!"

We march along the road until we have passed the dam and are below the rapids. We come to an unassuming wooden shed and enter. Barrels are stacked in the middle of the floor. The walls are hung with ropes, lanterns, wicker boots, well-sealed overalls, and an assortment of odds and ends that have a Dickensian flavor. Monsieur Thuot takes a stout pole with a husky net on the end. We embark on the flat-bottomed boat and push over to the half submerged box. Monsieur Thuot raises the lid. The sunlight pours into the pit, Pandemonium! It is as if an octopus with a thousand tentacles had been suddenly smitten with itch. One sees a writhing, wriggling, shimmering mass, splashing furiously. There are over a thousand eels in that box. One thousand eels trying to get out.

Monsieur Thuot reveals The Young Eel. Monsieur Thuot takes his net, angles, and bags two. Bang goes the lid. With his hands he takes the captives from the net and flings them on the floor of the boat. They slither over our shoes.

Thuot picks one up and throws it on the scale. Four pounds. He raises it above his head and hurls it to the floor. Again he does it. The eel seems stunned. We go ashore. Thuot hooks the eel's head on a nail and proceeds to skin it. Even when the body is skinned and severed from the head it continues to twist itself into knots.

Monsieur Thuot is about to make his big expose. Skillfully he dissects. He cuts open what appears to be a fleshy pouch situated slightly behind the gills. Carefully he scrapes. Then he thrusts the blade of the knife under our nose. On it lies a pinkish, semi-transparent, worm-like object about three-quarters of an inch long. Again he probes, and a second object lies on the blade. They wriggle slightly. They are alive.

"Young eels," announces Thuot. "We are lucky. It is getting late in the year. But in the spring, almost every eel I cut up has little eels inside. How they are born, whether from the mouth or from the gills, I do not know. See, you can see their eyes."

One cannot be a successful newspaper reporter without being sceptical. With his clasp knife M. Thuot, on the face of it, has just upset the theories of modern science as expounded by so august a volume as "E" of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. It is rather a poser.

It says it good!

Just a little rub and it's ready for your pipe

The parrot, not being present to ridicule us, we venture to ask M. Thuot whether it might not be possible that the objects before us are worms.

M. Thuot shrugs his shoulders. "I know a worm when I see it," he says. "I have fished for carp and other scale fish. I know what worms look like in them. Worms haven't those eyes. These are little eels. I myself, in Lake George, have seen them when they have grown to three inches, swimming about. If they were worms they could not be in that part of the eel's body. See—worms would be here." With his knife M. Thuot opens up more of the eel. "Here is where the food passes through. Here there would be worms, like a carp. But no, there are no worms."

M. Thuot performs the same operation on the other eel. But there are no little eels.

M. Thuot sniffs at the wind. "I'm afraid for the frost," he says. "The first frost ends our fishing. For the eel finds it and he starts to dig in for the winter. The moment the eel finds the frost he looks for a nice, muddy bottom, and there he buries himself until spring. In early spring I have caught eels that had parts of their bodies colored deep red and other parts blue and other parts a sort of white, according to the shade of the mud in which they had lain during the winter. Yes, they bury themselves in the bottom of the lakes, in the upper reaches of the rivers, until the winter is over. Then they make for the sea."

And Men Too

Do men use Talcum? It's a great secret of course, but we are going to risk giving it away. Yes! men do use talcum—that is Three Flowers Talcum—for their wives and lady friends like them to use Three Flowers, because of its delicate, faint and pleasing odor. There is nothing "loud" about Three Flowers. Its use is a real delight for men or women.

Father Tells How Prince Escaped

Egyptian Party Fearing Pursuit Kept Moving in Paris—Beard Shaved—Fugitive from English Asylum Hopes to Live in Constantinople.

Constantinople, Sept. 24.—A circumstantial story of the escape of Prince Ahmed Self el Dine of Egypt from the asylum in England, in which he had been held for 24 years, and his subsequent journey to Constantinople has been related here by Feridoun Pasha, father of the Prince, who up to this time has not appeared in connection with any of the sensational accounts of the Prince's escape.

The party then went to Paris and there believing themselves to be followed they changed hotels often and never made a journey, in the city without changing taxicabs several times each trip. The father continued: "Once when we were at the Hotel Des Pyramides in Paris we heard that detectives were about to raid the hotel, so at 4 o'clock in the morning we aroused Prince Ahmed, shaved his beard and successfully dodged his pursuers.

(Press dispatches soon after his escape said the Prince was in Paris disguised as a woman.)

"The matter of passports was finally adjusted and we went by automobile to Marseilles, where the Prince embarked on a steamer as a second-class passenger. We were greatly indebted to a French personage, who helped us in every way. Although we realized that there was no necessity of concealing the Prince's identity in France or aboard the steamer, we feared that a delay might be caused by a medical examination.

"After his confinement in England, Prince Ahmed is now anxious to live in Constantinople."

the English asylum. He alleged that the Prince was not allowed to see anyone, was not even told of the World War, or of the death of his brother. He said that on other occasions Prince Ahmed was offered assistance if he would try to escape, but he was so depressed and lethargic that he would not lend himself to any such plan.

When the escape finally was effected, Feridoun Pasha said, Prince Ahmed "was so feeble that he faltered and stumbled during the first few days of his liberty." The father says that he has now regained most of his strength in spite of the excitement attending the escape.

The Dickman Murder Case

UNKNOWN WRITER CONFESSES TO THE CRIME.

It is pretty generally known that murders which make a great public sensation, especially when followed by inquests and other legal proceedings that give wide publicity to the details of the evidence, often lead to bogus confessions of guilt. Now and then some individual goes to the police and "gives himself up"—it may be for a murder committed long years previously—with the result that he is speedily found to be suffering from a delusion. Such delusions are often stimulated by drink; but even in that case it may be that the drink only brings out an idea that has been lurking somewhere at the back of a morbid mind. Written confessions of the same kind, but usually anonymous, are frequently addressed to the authorities or to the lawyers engaged when a sensational murder trial is in progress. This statement could be corroborated by Home Office and police officials, solicitors, counsel, and even judges.

I have recently been exercised over a confession which is, I should think, one of the most extraordinary of its kind ever known. It reached 'Truth Office' by post a few weeks ago, with an illegible postmark and no clue to the writer's identity, unless this could be obtained from internal evidence by somebody who happens to know him. The man claims to have murdered a Mr. John Nisbet in a train in Northumberland on March 18, 1910, for which deed John Dickman was tried and hanged a few months later. To explain why after concealing his crime so long, he has now made a clean breast of it, he states that he is now dying of cancer, and desires to ease his mind before he dies and make the small reparation he now can, by relieving Dickman's family of the stigma of their connection with a convicted murderer. Incidentally, he hardly seems to have taken the most effectual course for that purpose by sending his tale anonymously to a newspaper office, where the chances are that it would go more or less expeditiously into the wastepaper basket. His procedure savours at the outset of abnormal mentality. However, he tells his story with a wealth of circumstantial detail, and as he writes quite lucidly and with a certain amount of literary skill, the effect is plausible; in fact, anybody reading the tale without other information about the circumstances might pronounce it convincing. It aroused so much curiosity in this office that, before consigning it to the receptacle above mentioned, I thought it worth testing by reference to the original records of the case. Having done this, I have no hesitation in saying that I think Dickman was rightly hanged, and that my anonymous friend's claim to the honour associated with a scaffold is unfounded.

The investigation of the affair, however, has been extremely interesting, and I think it may prove equally so to others. The Dickman case itself offered a fascinating problem in circumstantial evidence; the present confession offers quite an interesting study in psychology. I will, therefore, give an account of the whole affair, so far as space permits, it being understood at the outset that in my judgment there is no ground in this anonymous communication to a newspaper office for discrediting the report of a long and careful trial, subsequently reviewed by the Court of Criminal Appeal.

THE CASE OF JOHN DICKMAN.

The murder of Nisbet and the subsequent trial of Dickman excited great public interest at the time; and the trial is included in the "Notable English Trials" series of Messrs. William Hodge & Co., to which I am much indebted for particulars of the trial. On the day in question Nisbet left Newcastle-on-Tyne by a slow train for Alnmouth, starting at 10.27 a.m. He was a colliery pay-clerk, and the day being Friday, he had with him a locked handbag containing £370 9s. 6d. in cash for the payment of wages at his colliery, which was near Widdrington Station, on the further side of Morpeth from Newcastle. On the arrival of the train at Alnmouth his body was found under the seat of an empty third class compartment in the front passenger coach of the train, with five bullet wounds in his head. The bag was gone. Another colliery clerk named Hall, who knew Nisbet, travelled in the compartment in front, and having his head out of the window before the train started, saw Nisbet come up the platform in company with another man and enter the compartment with this man. At Heaton, two or three stations from Newcastle, Nisbet's wife came to the station to speak to him, and saw and spoke to him at the window of this compartment. She also saw another man seated at the other end of the carriage. At Stanington, the next station before Morpeth, Hall got out of the train accompanied by a fellow clerk named Spink. They had to wait till the train started before they could leave the platform, and as they stood there, both of them saw and nodded to Nisbet, who was then sitting next to the

into the first compartment of the next carriage. There was no evidence as to any unknown passenger entering or leaving the first carriage during the rest of the journey. The inference from these facts was that Nisbet was shot between Stanington and Morpeth by the man who had been seen to enter the compartment at Heaton and Stanington, but not at Morpeth, when, on the evidence of the platelayer, the compartment was apparently empty. The man must, therefore, have pushed the body under the seat and either got out immediately the train came into Morpeth, or (as the defence suggested) have jumped out before the train reached the station, and made his escape across country. As to this, it is to be noted that the distance between Stanington and Morpeth is less than three miles. The question, therefore, was: Who was this man? J. A. Dickman was identified as the man by as complete a chain of evi-

Mussolini as Julius Caesar

The "essentially Caesarist character" of Mussolini's aims came in for sharp criticism at the hands of a London editor not long ago, and, barely a week later, Mussolini owned up to Caesarism in a chat with Lady Drummond Hay at Rome. Reporting the interview, she says: "Why do you work with Julius Caesar looking over our shoulder all the time?" came my somewhat irrelevant question as I caught sight of a bust of the great Caesar in a niche over the desk. Mussolini's face took on an inspired expression, his eyes a curious dreamy look, and his voice sounded strangely moved as he replied, almost reverently: "He—he is my ideal, my master—Julius Caesar, the greatest man that ever was!" In the London Daily Express, whose special correspondent she is, Lady Hay tells us that Mussolini also said: "Liberty! Is there such a thing as liberty? Civilization is the inversion of personal liberty; in the long run it resolves itself into a matter of space—more space, more liberty, and those who would benefit from the advantages of civilization must necessarily pay in the coin of personal freedom. When the Liberals call out for 'Liberty,' they display their ignorance of the rudiments of the mechanism of government. "Mass can not govern mass. Quantity can not govern quantity. I maintain that there can be no such thing as liberty. It exists but in the imaginations of philosophers, who seek their unpractical philosophy from the skies. But mine is drawn from very near the earth. . . . for those of the earth." Much concerned over Mussolini's self-confessed Caesarism, the London Chronicle remarks that it "leaves one wondering for how long, in what used to be a constitutional monarchy, the monarchy itself will be able to survive the constitution." And another London paper, The Evening Standard, observes: "Whoever his ultimate place in history, Benito Mussolini is unquestionably a most original and interesting man; and the thoughts he has given the world on the subject of liberty and governing bear the impress of a mind untrammelled by convention. Mussolini seems to see in Caesarism, adapted to modern conditions, the solution of his country's problems. "The great trouble, however, is the supply of Caesars. If a Caesar fails to breed a Caesar, there is the certainty of a breakdown in the system. If a Caesar, on the other hand, breeds several Caesars, there is the certainty of civil war. The Ottoman Empire was an example of a great effort to meet both difficulties. Every old Sultan left a large number of sons, and every new Sultan signalized his accession by murdering his brothers. But even this drastic business did not indefinitely avail; the Empire declined by the failure to produce adequate talent within the Caesarian circle, and by the impossibility of importing it from outside."

Reminding us that "Rome for a time got over the difficulty by making any prominent soldier or politician Caesar and assassinating such Caesars as seemed to be too efficient or not efficient enough." The Evening Standard avers that: "Really this resolved itself into a crude parody of our own system—or, rather, a few favored legions—represented the modern electorate; the assassination was the equivalent of the modern vote of no confidence. The moment these means of election and dismissal became obsolete, and Caesar followed Caesar by right, the empire began to go rapidly to pieces."—Literary Digest.

Why Dogs Wag Their Tails

ODD FACTS ABOUT ANIMAL HABITS.

Why does a dog wag his tail? Not by accident. It is part of an ancient signal, a veritable wig-wag with a white flag. For we must remember every dog that has any white on him at all has a white tip on his tail, at the least a few white hairs.

We know, too, that the wild ancestor of the dog also had a white tail tip. We know that this wild ancestor was a small yellowish animal with white spots over the eyes, that he was indeed a kind of jackal. Suppose our wild dog jackal saw a strange animal coming. The first wise thing to do is hide and watch the stranger—that is, crouch in the grass. The stranger comes nearer. The crouching dog sees now that the newcomer is one of his own kind—and maybe even a friend, therefore not desirable food.

His "White Flag."

The stranger is now so near that concealment is no longer possible. So the wild dog rises and walks stiffly and guardedly forward. Then, on seeing no threats, the first dog raises his tail, so that the white flag it bears is above the level of his back, and waves it from side to side. The other, not desiring war, responds with the same wig-wag signal. They are now friends.

These things happened continually in the wilds long ago. To-day you may see them in our towns every day where there are roaming dogs.

No creature has any habit through freak or accident. There is a reason at the back of every established practice.

The wild dog, for instance, usually slept where bedbugs found him. His blanket was on his back. He selected a dry, sheltered spot. Then he smoothed the grass or moved the sticks and pebbles by turning round two or three times. And his tumbled cousin does the same to-day.

The wild dog has his bushy tail for a final wrap. His nose and his four paws, his only thinly clad parts, he huddled together, and around them he curled his woolly, warming tail. So do chow and mastiff yet. If the terrier does not hide his nose with his wig-wag flag, it is because his tail has been cut off.

Of all domestic animals the cat has changed least. Its life to-day is virtually the same as that of its wild ancestor of the Upper Nile.

There is one singular habit of the cat that needs explanation. That is the eternal twisting of the tail tip when she is crawling after a bird or watching for a mouse. Her colour blends her with the ground. Her actions are silent and perfectly timed.

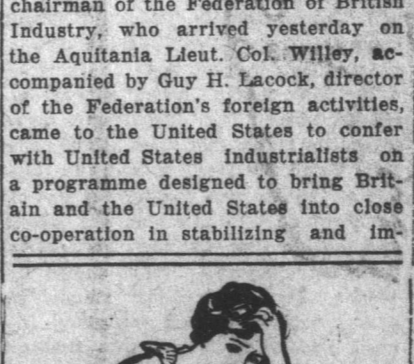

But that tail tip keeps on twisting in a way that one might think would betray her.

Crawling through the grass she takes advantage of every scrap of cover. Any animal seeing her would only see a dim furry something at the

Collapse in the World Trade

Due to U.S. Gold Lying Idle Instead of Being Employed in Development, Says Gen. Col. Willey.

New York, Sept. 26.—United States gold lying idle instead of being employed in the development of world business has resulted in "a complete collapse in world trade," according to Lieutenant Colonel Vernon Willey, chairman of the Federation of British Industry, who arrived yesterday on the Aquitania. Lieut. Col. Willey, accompanied by Guy H. Lacombe, director of the Federation's foreign activities, came to the United States to confer with United States industrialists on a programme designed to bring Britain and the United States into close co-operation in stabilizing and improving economic conditions throughout the world and re-opening world trade. Prior to the world war, Britain loaned approximately $1,000,000,000 a year to other countries to stimulate world trade, he said, but since the war has not had the funds to do so. Gold which poured into the United States during the war has not been returned into the international trade channels, he said, and this situation has led "to the demoralization of world trade."

As a barometer of the trade collapse, he pointed to the immense ocean tonnage which he said was now laid up and which cannot be returned into the trade routes so long as the distribution of gold remains so unequal.

The United States has two alternatives if she wishes to prosper, Lieut. Col. Willey said, either she must phys-

The Care of Shoes

By Fonthill Beckford.

It is said that one can tell a man's character by his footwear.

See a man, otherwise immaculately attired, with shabby shoes, and you suspect a kink in his character somewhere. See a man with trodden down heels, and you will surmise that he is drawn on his back, so to speak, by his habits, or unable to manage his affairs.

If such a man is asked for an explanation, he will probably say that his one and only respectable pair of walking shoes is being mended and in the meantime he is carrying on with an old pair. But this is false economy, for in a month or two, the only respectable pair of walking shoes will be as shabby as the old pair.

The wisest course is to go to a good shop, where it is possible to get a comfortable, well fitting shoe as well as a fashionable one, and then buy three or four pairs.

Wear them in rotation and treat them carefully when not in use. Keep them on trees until required, in order to keep the shape. Do this even when cleaning them.

As regards cleaning be particular as to the kind of polish or cream that you use. Preparations containing spirit rot leather.

Be careful when shoes are being cleaned to brush off all dirt and spots first, otherwise they will show through the polish.

Brown shoes stain more easily than black. It is quite a good plan to give brown leather shoes a bath or ordinary soap and water occasionally, with perhaps a mild mixture of turpentine in the water. Rub the shoes well with an old nail or tooth brush and let them dry. Then administer the polish. The shoes will come up like new.

Another good but old-fashioned plan is to rub the inside of a banana skin into the brown leather. This both softens and preserves the leather as well as cleans it.

Patent shoes have to be treated still more carefully, otherwise they are apt to crack and look extremely shabby. It is a good thing to rub vase-line into them occasionally. This both softens and feeds the leather. Also, patents are made more pliable by putting them in front of the fire (not too near, of course) before wearing them.

Wm. Farnum "The Conqueror"

Big Matinee With Fox Comedies Tomorrow Afternoon.

William Farnum, idol of stage and screen, will be seen at the Majestic Theatre to-night in a revival of "The Conqueror," a William Fox production in which the beloved Bill plays the role of General Sam Houston, the backwoods boy who grew to be one of Uncle Sam's most brilliant soldiers and who was once Governor of Tennessee and twice Governor of the great State of Texas.

This picture is said to contain an enormously generous proportion of the qualities which made Bill Farnum as popular an idol as the screen ever saw. It tells in vivid, and often amusing fashion some of the vents of Houston's early life; of his curious courtship with Eliza Allen, the belle of Tennessee, who, finding that an ignorant, Tennessee mountain lad was in love with her, refused to see him until he gained an education. When he returned to her later, she told him to become a sheriff. He became sheriff. Then she set the seal as Governor. He became Governor. And then, in a strange fit of rage because of the girl's repeated refusals, Houston had no more than made beautiful Eliza Allen his wife than he cast her aside and went to Texas. She followed and went into an convent.

But at this point the romance is only beginning in earnest. Sidney Stokes, a former rival of Houston's for the hand of Eliza, learns of the true situation and starts trouble once more by inciting the Mexicans against the Texans. With Houston leading Texans, loyal Indians and Texas Rangers and his "greasers," a big battle ensues which is one of the finest ever filmed. A hand-to-hand fight between Farnum and his rival can be depended on to give Farnum fans the old time thrill. Jewel Carmen plays the part of Eliza Allen in this picture.

To-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, a big matinee, with a series of Fox comedies is prepared. Send along the kiddies to the feast of fun.

Historic Find Near Babylon

The discovery at Ur of the Chaldees, 140 miles southeast of Babylon of a remarkable work of art is recorded in a statement from Baghdad, issued by the Director of the British Museum.

The statement says: We have found fragments, themselves large enough to be reckoned as monuments, of one of the greatest and most splendid works of art in stone that Mesopotamia has yet produced. Last year we laid bare the Ziggurat of Ur, the huge two-storey stage-tower of the Moon God set up by King Ur-Nugur about 2,800 years before Christ; now we have, beautifully carved in relief, upon a limestone slab which when complete was five feet across and nearly fifteen feet high, the portraits of its builder and his own record of its conception and achievement.

In one scene the king receives from his god the order to build the tower; the god holds out to him the measuring reel, and the flaxen line with which Ezekiel, an exile by the waters of Babylon, saw planned out the city and temple of his dream.

In another scene Ur-Nugur shows his obedience by appearing before the god carrying all the tools of the mason, ready himself to lay the first brick on the Ziggurat; in another, of which unfortunately but a few small fragments remain, we see the actual construction in progress.

The king was a great digger of canals, some for irrigation only, others for trade, that ships might pass from Ur to the Persian Gulf and take toll of the Arabian coasts; the list of such canals is written on the stone, and the blessing that they brought to the people is symbolically shown by scenes wherein the king stands in prayer before the god, and above his head angels fly downwards holding out vases from which streams of water descend upon the earth.

The discovery was made in the courtyard of B-dubalmak, one of the most important of the ancient shrines.

One evening gown of a pinky mauve has a jumper wrought with silver bugles, and a straight train.

The two-piece frock appears in strange combinations. For one, tweed forms the overblouse and velveteen the skirt.

Some of the best fall shades are penell blue, wine, browns, especially tanger and manakin, and greens.

NO FISHERMEN'S RACE THIS YEAR.

Vessels Will Be Busily Engaged This Fall, Is Reason.

HALIFAX, N.S., Sept. 25.—H. R. Silver, chairman of the board of trustees of the International Fishing schooner trophy, stated to-night that indications were that there would be no fishermen's race this year. The reason he said, was that so many of the fishermen were taking advantage of the good run of fish and ready markets to engage in fall fishing that it would be inadvisable to call them in for the annual contest. From Lunenburg this season there are twelve vessels outfitting for the fall trip to the Banks in comparison with five last year. The new Halifax owned, Haligonian, built as a possible racing contender will go fishing and it is expected that the champion Bluenose will be among the fleet from Lunenburg.

He also announced that Mr. Bishop had kindly donated a handsome script to start the Club, the statement being received with hearty applause. Votes of thanks were tendered Mr. M. STAR HEAVYWEIGHT FIGHTERS GATHER AT CHICAGO.

Jack Dempsey, Big Harry Wills and Gene Tunney Start Gossip Out West.

CHICAGO, Sept. 27.—The heavyweight championship pot started boiling over to-night with the arrival here of Jack Dempsey and two of his most persistent challengers, Harry Wills, giant negro heavyweight and Gene Tunney, conqueror of Tom Gibbons.

Wills, accompanied by Manager Paddy Mullins, came to Chicago ostensibly to address at the White Sox baseball park this afternoon in a benefit programme for negro soldiers who were crippled recently in an explosion of an artillery piece, at Camp Grant, where a Chicago negro regiment was in training.

Dempsey arrived from the South for a conference with Floyd Fitzsimmons, owner of the boxing arena at Michigan City, Ind., in regard to a match with Wills next July 4.

Tunney, together with his manager, Billy Gibson, announced their intention of remaining here and make "plenty of noise" if Dempsey attempts to close a match with Wills without first giving consideration to Tunney.

WILLS SAYS HE DOES NOT DRAW COLOR LINE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Harry Wills does not draw the color line and he is ready to meet any worthy heavyweight in the world.

This statement was made yesterday by Wills personally and his manager, Paddy Mullins, to the Associated Press in answer to an assertion in Chicago last night by Billy Gibson, manager of Gene Tunney, that the Black Panther has either drawn the color line or was afraid to meet the ex-madame.

Regarding Gibson's statement that he had refused an offer of $200,000 to fight Tunney, Mullins declared that he never received such an offer, but that if any promoter wanted to guarantee Wills that amount to meet Tunney, he was waiting to talk to him.

Furthermore, in refutation of Gibson's charges, Mullins revealed that he has signed articles with Babe Culpan, matchmaker for the National Sportsmen's Club of Newark, N.J., to fight any opponent Culpan selected.

This was verified by Culpan, who stated that he called on Gibson and Tunney and endeavored to make a match between Tunney and Wills, but that Gibson refused to consider it.

Cobb stood second to Speaker yesterday, though hard pressed by Helman and Simmons, who, by the way, has made the greatest number of safe drives in the majors since last April.

Rogers Hornsby, though topping all the big leaguers in the stick averages, has failed to come up to his mark of 1924, when he recorded 424.

George Sialer deserves much of the credit for driving the St. Louis Browns into third position in the American League race. The Browns to-day are playing the best ball in the circuit, barring the Senators. Perhaps they would have made a stronger fight for the pennant if injuries had not deprived them of Ken Williams, Rice and Gerber.

Sialer, evidently planning for 1926, has developed a fine pitching staff, including the youngsters Glard and Gaston. Joe Bush, who shut out the Yankees on Sunday, never looked better. The Browns must be reckoned with next season.

These remarks were made recently by Mr. Michelson, a British subject, who has come to England after 15 years in Russia as a merchant.

"The Russian working man lives chiefly on tea and bread. He is lucky if he sees meat once a week," he continued.

"The peasants, who form 80 per cent. of the population, are bitterly anti-Communist. They are heavily taxed and are obtaining none of the advantages promised to them at the time of the revolution."

The Communist leaders are faced with the possibility of a grave rising in the next two years if they do not succeed in engineering revolutions elsewhere. That is why they are so eager to carry out a revolution in England.

Tomsy the Terrorist.

I was amazed to see that Tomsy has been speaking at Scarborough. He is so hated in Moscow as a terrorist that when he goes out in the streets he carries two revolvers and has a guard of detectives with him.

THE SIGN OF THE BIG BOOT.

By tolerating the Communists in this country, England is running into a great danger.

A Doubtful Distinction

Vancouver Province.—There are two ways of balancing a budget. One is to cut expenditure to meet the revenue. The other is to increase the revenue that is the taxation—to meet the expenditure. With the latter system we in Canada are very well acquainted. We should like to have some experience of the former.

The Australian Government has announced a surplus for the year just closed of £3,018,000. It has also announced a cut of 12 1/2 per cent. in the income tax, and the federal treasurer has stated that, during the past three years, the war debt has been reduced £22,000,000. Contrast the situation in Canada. We haven't any surplus, though the government pretended for a time, last spring, that there was one. Our income taxes, like our other taxes, remain, and our war debt has not been reduced by a single dollar. The best we have been able to do is to refund certain loans at a better rate of interest.

Our position with regard to taxation is becoming serious. The United States has cut its income tax, and will shortly cut it again. The British income tax was reduced sixpence in the pound by the Churchill budget, and now Australia falls into line. Canada is in a fair way to attaining the doubtful distinction of being the only country in the English-speaking world that can not keep her taxes down. That is a distinction a country in need of capital and new settlers can ill afford.

The World's Loneliest Woman
HER LIGHTHOUSE HOME.

For thirty-five years Mrs. Kate Walker, after the death of her lighthouse-keeper husband, has kept the Robbins light burning, guiding the ships of the world safely into New Harbor.

To meet Mrs. Walker is to take a spiritual tonic. On her small, eager face, engraved with its lines of character, is a look of great peace. That she is a woman of indomitable courage is apparent from her personality, and her long and honorable record as a lighthouse-keeper. Thirty-five years away from the hurrying multitudes has given her an air of serenity, a well-posed calm and a peaceful manner.

Into The Breach.

"Lonely? Of course." The lines about her kindly eyes deepen into a smile. "But there are worse things than loneliness. Loneliness taught me that I could be a fairly entertaining companion for myself. And it has made me realize that the simple joys of life are extremely satisfying. Discontent and the resultant unhappiness do not find their way to the lonely places of the world. They exist only in the crowded cities, where competition, envy, desire, and greed reign also."

The conical iron tower, forty-six feet high, built on a circular stone parapet, with the wash of the waves heard, and only water to be seen from her windows, seemed, at first, a terrible place to live in. But she became interested in her daily tasks, and complained no more about her isolated home. Then her son, Jack, and a daughter, Mary, came to help her more completely occupied.

One cold and stormy night her husband contracted pneumonia, as a result of which he died. His widow took his place.

"As my home was a high cylinder, there was only one room on each floor." Mrs. Walker told our special interviewer, "and each room was round. On the first floor there was the combination kitchen and dining-room, and on the three floors above the parlour and the bedrooms. Everything was painted white, and I had fresh curtains at the windows. The endless sea permitted me to keep my house spotless, and all my rugs and hangings maintained their fresh original colours."

"I had to keep several sets of lamps, and cleaning the lenses and getting a lamp in order was a two days' job for me. There is more work in a lighthouse than people imagine. Winter always brought hardships and extra tasks. Frost would gather on the many windows of the lighthouse, and I would have to go out in the biting cold and scrape them every little while, for the coating of frost obscured the light."

"Several winters, when the ice surrounded the lighthouse, great blocks washed against our home and the bay was jammed solid with ice to the shore. The wind howled menacingly, and the snow swirled in gales all about us. I got the children dressed in their warmest clothes and marshalled them ready to climb out on the ice floes in case our house should be torn away from its foundations."

"My friends used to marvel at my attachment to my watery home; and used to remind them of the advantages: no burglars, no prying neighbours, no gossip, plenty of fresh air, beautiful life."

The bright eyes of the spry little woman have in them the steady glow of one who has looked at far horizons, across an endless clear blue sea, for half her span of life. For thirty-five years she was the keeper of one of the most important lighthouses. Never did she let the light go out. She saved many lives in that period, cared for a home, and supported her fatherless children.
