The bailiffs made several attempts to force their way into the dwelling, but their tenders resisted them with stinging water and showers of stones and forced them to retreat—a number of them with severe wounds. This scene occurred at the house of Mrs. Mary O'Connell. Finally the police loaded their weapons and threatened to fire if an immediate surrender was not made. The occupants then fled, and submitted to arrest. They were twenty-five in number and all were taken into custody. The police officers were in a fainting condition. #### AN ITALIAN KNIFING MATCH.

A mysterious affair in St. John's Ward East Night.

In a small tenement house, at 126 Chestnut street, Tony Belcan and Peter Dero, two Italian laborers, last night held a knife match. The winner was the principal, who was killed. Both men were intoxicated. A dispute of some kind arose, in which Belcan upbraided his fellow-countryman for an alleged wrong done him in the past, and a moment later Dero found that his enraged accuser had stabbed him in the left abdomen. Belcan thereupon started to leave the premises, and as he was passing a passage way, Dero rushed up and made a single lunge with a knife at his throat, inflicting a serious wound on the neck. Belcan then made his way to his home close by, at 112 Chestnut-street, whilst Dero, who was accompanied by his landlord's son—youthy Glimo—went to the Agent-street Station and laid a complaint against Belcan. He was taken to his own house, bleeding profusely, and was taken to the station by Policeman Coombes. When the officers discovered that Belcan had been knifed, Dero was likewise arrested. Beyond the statement of Young Glimo, nothing is known of the affair, and his information was from Dero, who has not been seen since.

BILL NYE.

He is Studying Zoology in North Carolina Mountains.

There is no place in the United States, so far as I know, where the cow is more valuable or ambidextrous, if I may be allowed to use a term that has above mentioned in North Carolina, where the cow is indeed a valuable animal, and is indeed a valuable animal, and is indeed a valuable animal...

Jackasses in the south are of two kinds, viz., male and female. Much as has been said of the jackass for and con, I do not remember ever to have seen the above statement in print before, and as it is as true as it is incontrovertible. In the Rocky mountains we call this animal the burro. There he packs flour and salt to the miners. The miners eat the flour and the salt, and the burro is enabled to successfully salt the mines.

The burro has a low, conical nose which ought to have some machine oil on it. The tip of this animal is not unpleasant if it would pull some of the paths out of it and make it more joyous.

Here the jackass at times becomes a cow-boy with the cow in hauling tobacco, and other necessities of life into town, but he goes no further in the matter of assistance. He compels her to tread the cheese press alone and contributes nothing whatever in the way of assistance for the butter industry.

The North Carolina cow is frequently seen here driven double or single by means of a small rope line attached to a ball, ensnared gentleman, who is generally clothed with the divine rig of suffrage, to which he adds a small pair of ear boots during the holidays.

The cow is attached to each shaft and a small singletree, or springtree, by means of a broad strap harness. She also wears a swathing in which respect she frequently has the advantage of her escort.

I think I have never witnessed a sadder sight than that of a new milch cow, torn away from home and friends and kindred dear, descending a steep mountain road at a rapid rate and striving in her poor, weak manner to keep out of the way of a small Jackson Democratic-Union looking with big hogweed full of tobacco. It seems to me so totally foreign to the nature of the cow to enter into the tobacco traffic, a line of business for which she can have no sympathy, in which she certainly can feel very little interest.

A great many people come here from various parts of the world, for the climate is so good, and when they have remained here for one winter, however, they decide to leave it where it is.

It is said that the climate here is very much like that of Turin. But I did not intend to go to Turin, even before I heard about that. Please send my paper to the same address, and if some one who knows a good remedy for chilblains will contribute to the fact, both Globe I shall write for it with great interest. Yours are as 24. BILL NYE.

Bound to Unshrine Taber. The presence in Chicago of Mr. James Cahale, of Pueblo, Colo., calls to mind an incident in connection with the case of Taber, the man who became rich from the output of Leadville. The bonanza alluded to was Gas Rische, and when the present millionaire and ex-senator, Taber, was keeping a store in California, Gulch, Mr. Taber used to "grub stake" Rische while he prospect for a lead. Eventually Rische and his crew, a man named Hook, almost accidentally found the great carbonate lead that quickly built a city among the clouds and loomed Denver so satisfactorily and made a large number of millionaires. Of course Rische became rich, but the others, but being always a man of unexcelled tastes and decidedly illiterate, drank a fine wine within a few years in which he came to be known as the "millionaire." It happened that once, when Taber and others were entertaining some eastern magnates and capitalists with a banquet at the Clarion Hotel in Leadville, Rische walked into the saloon and beheld Rische consoling himself with an immense schooner of beer.

"Hello," said Carlisle. "Why not at the banquet?" "For per pest of reasons, Chim; I don't get an invite," replied Rische. "Dem fellows was no aristocratic; dey was de centest unit respectably initiated into de ways of de money."

"Now that's too bad," returned Carlisle. "I'll get a banquet myself. I will get me dot bill of fair and I will more as duplicate it, and I don't get a decent, respectable son of a gun at our table." Then suddenly, as if remembering something, he added: "Don't you get an invite, Chim; you will get an invite."—Chicago Mail.

Our Modern Zepp. A Groceryman once had an Apprentice who was young and green in the ways of the world. "Let me teach you how to succeed in life," said the Groceryman; and he forthwith proceeded to initiate him into the ways that lead to Fortune. He showed him how to sand the Sugar, put Beans into the coffee, trim down the Weights, place a Pease bottom in the measures, and substitute decayed vegetables for good ones whenever the customer's back was turned. In course of time the Apprentice became more dexterous in the business than the Groceryman himself, at which the latter's heart rejoiced exceedingly. "Hereafter, my son," said he, "I will let you go to market and buy the supplies for my bank book; and pay cash for all you purchase." But instead of going to market the Apprentice hurried to the bank, drew out all his master's Money, and hid it away to Canada.

Moral—As the twig is bent the tree is inclined.—The Judge.

Henry Clay and John Randolph. John Randolph having ruled the house of representatives despotically, a number of members met together near the close of the Fourteenth congress to devise means for putting a stop to his outrageous conduct. The question was, "How is this to be done?" "I'll tell you," said a veteran member; "by electing a speaker who will enforce order." "Then it must be some man who is not like Randolph," said another, "for he disregards all rules." "This was assented to by all." "Then," said one, "he must be a man who can meet John Randolph on his own ground, and the field, for he may have to do both." This being assented to, "But where is the man who can do this?" it was elected. "Well, you know," said Mr. Randolph, "I will let you go to market and buy the supplies for my bank book; and pay cash for all you purchase." But instead of going to market the Apprentice hurried to the bank, drew out all his master's Money, and hid it away to Canada.

Queer Wrinkles. Miss Ethel—Have you and George had a quarrel, Clara? Miss Clara—No, indeed. It is getting too near Christmas for us to quarrel with George, dear fellow.

FORCED POLITENESS. Mrs. Hendricks, the landlady, and Mrs. Simpson, who keeps a first-class establishment around the corner, were retreating from market when Dunly came to meet them. He almost swept the ground with his hat. "That is Mr. Dunly, my fourth floor back," explained Mrs. Hendricks. "I defend" said Mrs. Simpson; "what a very polite and deferential young man." "He is three weeks behind with his board," replied Mrs. Hendricks grimly.

AN UNEARNED REPUTATION. Feathers was blowing his tea to cool it off, while Bob regarded him with intense interest. "What's the matter, Robert?" said the old man. "Don't you know that it is very impolite to stare at a person in that way?" "I don't stare at you, Bob. You said you had the biggest blower in town. He can't blow any harder than I can."

Wife (just home from the camp meeting)—We have had such a glorious meeting to-day. You know what an invalid Mr. Bouton has been for fifteen years? Husband—Yes. Wife—Well, if there ever were saints on earth, she's one of them. She says that she has sat all through those long years in her invalid reclining chair without a murmur, and in perfect peace and contentment. Husband—What you would get the name and address of the man who made that chair.—New York Sun.

They Go Together. Passenger on Ocean Steamer—I suppose the company gives you great latitude in the management of a steamer while on a voyage? Captain—No more latitude than longitude, sir.—Judge.

NAMING THE BABY.

Bill Nye Discusses His Mysterious Infatuation on the Problem.

"Fond Mother," Bruley's Fork, asks: "What shall I name my little girl baby?" That will depend upon yourself very largely, "Fond Mother." Very likely if your little girl is very rugged and grows up to be the fat woman in a museum, she will wear no name of Lily. When a girl is named Lily she at once manifests a strong desire to grow up with a complexion like Othello, and the same fatal yearning for some one to strangle her. It is not always that, but girls are obstinate, and it is better not to put a name on a girl-baby that she will not live up to.

Again, "Fond Mother," let me urge you to refrain from naming your little daughter a soft, flabby name like Irma, Geraldine, Beatrice, Lillias, Frances, Valerian, Rosemary, or Castoria. These names belong to the inflammatory pages of the American novelette. Do not put such a name on your innocent child. Imagine this inscription on a marble slab:

IRMA, daughter of General and Madame Irma, died March 10, 1885. She caught cold in her front name.

I have seen a young lady try faithfully to live down one of these flimsy, cheese cloth names; but the harsh world would not have it. A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and while I can imagine your little girl in future years as a white-haired and lovely grandmother, wearing the name of Mary or Ruth, with a double claim to respect, I cannot see the old gentleman to come and chuck his fat forehead under it. I cannot, in my mind's eye, see her as a housewife deity, wearing a white cap and the name of Rosemary or Penumbra, or Sogodonia, or Catalpa, or Yohumama.

Good-by, fond mother. Do not be offended when I have said. Never having had any experience as a mother, for that is not my forte, I have assumed a good deal of responsibility in this writing you, but I ask you as betrothed to me and my yet to give your daughter a name that will make her a butt of ridicule when Gabriel pours it out of his horn.

George R. Beath, Arcola, Ill., writes to know "the value of a silver dollar of 1878 with eight feathers in the eagle's tail." It is worth, what you can get for it, Mr. Beath. Perhaps the better way would be to forward it to me and I will do the best I can with it. There being but eight feathers in the eagle's tail, you may draw back. Send it to me at once and I will work it off for you, Mr. Beath.—Bill Nye in Boston Globe.

He Kept Selling the Dinky. "There were many ways to make money in the old time that can't be worked now," said Col. Bill, as he sat in the corridor of the Grand hotel. One day yesterday afternoon talking to a friend. "Back in 1847 I was steward of the Golden Age—as good a craft as ever sailed between here and Orleans. One day a colored man with a good deal of white blood in his veins came to me and said: 'Say, massa, you want to make some money?' 'Yes, I do,' I answered. 'Well, you can take me down to Orleans and sell me for $1,400. I'm a likely nigger, and worth dat.' 'But do you want to go into slavery?' 'No much. You sell me. I can escape; come back; we divide the money. Then you can sell me again.' 'It was not without some misgivings that I accepted the novel proposition, but I took him along with me, and as soon as the Golden Age reached Orleans I led him to the slave market. The auctioneer dressed him up in a new suit put a smart cap on his head and the sale commenced. He was a likely nigger, sure enough, and sold for $1,400. I got $1,000 in cash and mortgages for $400. Well, I came back to Cincinnati, and in about three weeks back came the coin. Next trip I sold him at Natchez for $1,300. It was again my duty to sell the same nigger twice after he had escaped, but every three or four weeks I'd have that coin on my hands again. I sold him at Baton Rouge, Vicksburg, Memphis and at every port on the river. 'At last I traded him off for a terrible looking nigger and got $800 to boot. Then I sold the nigger I had traded for a right smart sum. This time Fido—that was his name—did not turn up for six months, and I thought he was done for, sure; but he came round one day and we divided up. Then the second nigger came due, and I collected them every buyer sayin' the coin had escaped. Well, it's the honest truth, I sold that dicker fourteen times. Then came the telegraph and we had to stop it, but you can't imagine how much money we coined. These days are not like the old ones for making money.'—New York Sun.

Two Fish Stories. They tell of a singular thing that happened at the close of the last week. The little son of Mr. Washburn, 7 years of age—the son, not the old man—had been in the habit of feeding the pickered that abound in the lake, and he had been doing so for some time. One day the little fellow, while engaged at this from a boat in front of his father's residence, fell overboard, and this identical pickered, in memory of the past work of all previous years, saw suspended in a tree a small catfish, scarcely able to struggle, and beseeching help. The lady climbed the tree, released the trembling fish, who appeared to have been there about a week. But how he got there is unexplainable unless he was thrown there by some inhuman agent. No sooner had the little animal touched the ground than he made a dash for the water, and the old man, who was in the boat, manifested the most extreme joy and gratitude, finally throwing himself into the water and professing apologies for being obliged to depart. And yet there are people who say that fish are incapable of gratitude.—J. W. Watson in Life.

FORCED POLITENESS. Mrs. Hendricks, the landlady, and Mrs. Simpson, who keeps a first-class establishment around the corner, were retreating from market when Dunly came to meet them. He almost swept the ground with his hat. "That is Mr. Dunly, my fourth floor back," explained Mrs. Hendricks. "I defend" said Mrs. Simpson; "what a very polite and deferential young man." "He is three weeks behind with his board," replied Mrs. Hendricks grimly.

AN UNEARNED REPUTATION. Feathers was blowing his tea to cool it off, while Bob regarded him with intense interest. "What's the matter, Robert?" said the old man. "Don't you know that it is very impolite to stare at a person in that way?" "I don't stare at you, Bob. You said you had the biggest blower in town. He can't blow any harder than I can."

Wife (just home from the camp meeting)—We have had such a glorious meeting to-day. You know what an invalid Mr. Bouton has been for fifteen years? Husband—Yes. Wife—Well, if there ever were saints on earth, she's one of them. She says that she has sat all through those long years in her invalid reclining chair without a murmur, and in perfect peace and contentment. Husband—What you would get the name and address of the man who made that chair.—New York Sun.

They Go Together. Passenger on Ocean Steamer—I suppose the company gives you great latitude in the management of a steamer while on a voyage? Captain—No more latitude than longitude, sir.—Judge.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Will cure a Cold more thoroughly and speedily than any other preparation in use.

While in the army I contracted a severe Cold, which settled on my Lungs, resulting in exhausting fits of Coughing, Night Sweats, and such loss of flesh and strength that, to all appearances, Consumption had laid its "death grip" upon me.

When about 23 years of age, a severe Cold affected my lungs. I had a terrible Cough, could not sleep, nor do any work. I consulted several physicians, but received no help until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

MY FRIEND EDITH.

CHAPTER I.

I have been accustomed for some time, longer than I care to remember, to describe myself as a man of middle age, yet people speak of me as an old bachelor, sometimes in derision, but frequently, I fancy with envy.

Yes, I am a bachelor—the adjective is unnecessary—rather by mischance than anything else, for I never started on life with any intention of celibacy, or when young asserted myself aggressively on the subject.

Oh, all might have been very different—but that has nothing to do with the story. At all events I am a bachelor now, and intend to remain one.

My—well, the physical disadvantages which time has brought—a tendency to embonpoint, and more than partial baldness—although, for I continually see such Benedicts as myself striking their color and falling victims to rheumatism and other ailments, or even to the gray ones, to brick widows and bright-eyed maids hardly out of their teens.

Shelley, exclaimed I, reading the title. "It has met with the same fate as its poor author." She glanced at it with a comical little expression of sorrow.

"You are much kinder than I deserve," said I, still feeling rather foolish; "the only way I can make amends is by helping you off."

"I have a better get of yourself first," she answered laughing. "So I commiserated a broken water like a wild goose with an inch wing, but unable to budge an inch."

"I am glad," said I, as I paused for want of breath, "that I afford you some amusement."

My companion in misfortune, fully appreciated the absurdity of the spectacle, burst into a fit of laughter, which she never in vain to check.

"I am glad," said I, as I paused for want of breath, "that I afford you some amusement."

which gave me an opportunity of leaving Edith on the pier. I intended, however, on her going on a visit to some friends. She departed with so much cheerfulness that I felt convinced she had conceived some means of seeing the "nameless one" as I called him, and I accused her of it; but she only laughed and said, "Nonsense! and that is easily said, and we had quite a touching little parting in the garden, and I called her my dear child."

one, I know no more about some- where watching us, and suffering pangs of jealousy. Go, my child, go and see your dear father in the suburbs. Edith beamed at me with eyes full of pleasure. "I haven't got any wings to flap yet! but will you let me go, really?" "I got you, indeed!" "I thought, you know," said she, "you might have some absurd notion that I was under your charge, but you are not too clever; and I am sure for any such foolish ideas. I never knew a less narrow-minded man than you, never! I was all puffed up like you."

"My dear boy! My dear boy!" Then we both understood the little game Edith had been playing. And my eyes grew moist, and I touched the fountain of my emotions. "I only staid away," said he, "because I wanted to show you I wasn't such a miff as you thought I was." "You have been quite right to be an actor," said I, "but I don't think your hand an unnecessary while, and I am sure you will be a successful one." "It seemed to me he must be capable of anything after pulling me out of the water. Then we went down to lunch, objects of curiosity to the other guests, and drank both of our champagne for a wine I only take when my nerves have received a shock. That day it seemed to have a strange effect on the root of my tongue and to increase the warmth of my affection for the picture at large. Charlie told me how his pictures were beginning to sell, and every thing appeared to me in a very rosy light.

CHAPTER V. On calling after breakfast I found or some inscrutable reason, Mrs. Lyall had decided that she would stay at home, and that I was to take Edith. "Do you particularly wish to go on the pier?" I asked. "I'll go wherever you like," she said, "and I'll do anything to get rid of me." "Don't you think you are wasting valuable time with me? I know where you want to go—to see the nameless one. You can't deceive me, and she was hardly debating I went on. "I have not lived all this time in the world without gaining some knowledge of human nature. Come, Edith, you see where he is." "Oh, Mr. Merton," she said, "what wonderful penetration you have!" "I could see she was laughing at me, but I was determined to be magnanimous. "And now," said I, "I suppose you want to desert me for the nameless one."

"My dear boy! My dear boy!" Then we both understood the little game Edith had been playing. And my eyes grew moist, and I touched the fountain of my emotions. Charlie told me how his pictures were beginning to sell, and every thing appeared to me in a very rosy light.

CHAPTER VI. I paddled away toward the cliffs, fancying I might see the lovers at their former trying place and gain another advantage over them. The sea was very calm except where the tide swept over a reef of rocks, where the water is wont to roar and show gleams of white teeth. Beyond was a lonely boat apparently drifting with the tide. Almost before I was aware of it I had reached the troubled waters. The little choppy waves began to splash over my gunwale, and while I was arranging the waterproof over my legs, suddenly my dismay, my paddle fell into the sea. Using my hands as oars I began to row myself laboriously toward the shore, and in a few minutes I was afloat in it. My embarrassment causing some mirth among the idlers on the shore, but people at the seaside will laugh at anything.
