The World's Fair on Saturday Devo to the Emerald Isle. EDWARD BLAKE'S SPEECH

Long Letter From Gladstone-T G. O. M.'s Utterances on the Present Home Bule

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—Saturday was Ireland's day at the World's Fair and it was a red letter day, the greatest the Fair has yet seen. Every possible feature that could be evolved was furnished by the committee and the number of paid admissions exceeded 300,000, the largest since the gates were thrown ones.

The experiment of focusing the features of Lord Mayor Shanks of Dublin upon a cloud by means of a gigantic searchlight could hardly be called a success. Two Irish members of Parliament were present and delivered addresses, O'Driscoll, M.P., Centh Marchan and Palmard Holte, M.P. and delivered addresses, O'Driscoll, M.P., South Monaghan, and Edward Blake, M.P., for South Longford. They were wildly

Mr. Blake, who is a fluent and forcible political orator, said: "A few weeks ago, after seven years of struggle on new lines and a debate in Parliament, more severe and prolonged than any which have preceded it, you have seen the people's house in Parliament pass a measure of Home Rule by a sufficient majority. We expect to see it a law at no distant day. This measure means that all things which affect the material and moral interests of Ireland are to be controlled in the future by themselves. There are defects in the bill. We don't claim it is perfect, but we hope to eliminate the errors in time."

In conclusion Mr. Blake read a most important letter which Mr. Gladstone wrote to him on the eve of his departure for America. This letter was read for the first time in public and aroused great enthusiasm. It is as follows:

LOVING ONE'S COUSIN.

ADVICE ON THE SUBJECT OF THE MARRIAGE OF RELATIVES.

Inspiring Emotion.

Here is a question which has been often answered; but, as our correspondent says, its discussion is always interesting and is of deep concern to many young people:
"I love my cousin, and she loves me, but my mother is opposed because she does not believe in mixing blood, etc. Now, this is a question which interests a great number and more than you can ever imagine. Your answer to it would be of service to me."

It is easily explainable why so many young fellows fall in love with their pretty cousins. The relationship promotes the intimate association which breeds the tender cousins. The relationship promotes the in-timate association which breeds the tender passion. They start out with the affection of kinship, and thus come together on terms provocative of the love that leads to terms provocative of the love that leads to the desire for marriage. In childhood they may have been to one another almost as brother and sister, but when they have reached manhood and womanhood they find that there has grown up in them a natural sentiment radically different from fracternal attachment. It is possible for them to marry, and the consciousness of this generates the desire to marry.

When a man permits himself to entertain such thoughts regarding a woman, more especially in the romantic period of his life, they soon get the mastery over him. In his tyees she alone among women has irresistible attraction. His fidelity to her is absolute, because for the time no other feminine lute, because for the time no o nfluence is powerful enough to divert the general love of man for woman which he general love of man for woman which he has concentrated on a particular woman. He may have been a devoted son, yet new even his mother will lose his confidence unless she accords with his will. He may have been a reasonable boy, but now he is driven by the force of impulsive sentiment only. A fixed idea has gained possession of him, and opposition serves only to intensify his passion. His fate seems to him to be determined beyond the power of human influence to alter it. In all the world, he thinks, there is only one woman whom he can marry without outrasing the sanctity of wediock or dooming miser; to heading misery.

If parents wish to control the direction which this passionate and unreasonable feeling takes, they must take precautions is advance of the appearance of the first symptoms of the sweet disease. They must foresee its inevitable coming and make ready the course which they would have the tumultuous current follow, or they must stand by powerless to divert its tendency from a channel of its own choosing—that is, they must look out that the intimacy of young people which is stimulative of love shall be confined to those whom they think proper for mating, proceeding they think proper for mating, proc on the sound assumption that love r har provocation, but that in essence it is a general sentiment whose concentration depends on fortuitous circumstances, associations and opportunities. It is highly inflammable material, quick to blaze up when the spark reaches it. This spark may need to be a special fascination, but it is a fascination which may be exercised by any one of many under favoring conditions. It is not peculiar to an individual, as the enamored imagine, though it may belong only to a class of temperaments.

The very fact that a young man and a young girl are "madly in love" with each other suggests the speed of caution as to their marriage. They should get in their

The very fact that a young man and a young girl are "madly in love" with each other suggests the angle of caution as to their marriage. They flouid get in their right senses before venturing to take a step so momentous in both its practical and sentimental consequences. It is better for the passion to cool off before marriage than after. It is better for them to get their eyes open before rather than afterward. The test of the feeling, whether it is mere instinctive and evanescent excitement or real and enduring affection, should be made before they go to the altar, since at one time or the other it is bound to be made. All this seems to be far away from the question of our correspondent, but in truth it is pertinent to it. Simply because he loves his cousin and she loves him in return is no sufficient reason why they should get married. They can love each other without being married, and the best way they can express and prove their mutual love may be in not gettling married. If the objections of our correspondent's mother to their union be well founded, each should look on their marriage as a selfish gratification at the expense of the other.

Cousinship is not necessarily a bar to

Cousinship is not necessarily a bar to marriage for fear of injury to the offspring of the union, but the collateral consanguinity dictates special caution about entering into wedlock. Where there is a common inheritance of tendencies to physical or mental defect or weakness, it is dangerous, for the hereditary disposition may be intensified by the breeding in, but so, too, these tendencies may be common to a pair not thus related.

Some of the current social references.

tendencies may be common to a pair not thus related.

Some of the current social reformers want a board of physiological and anthropological experts legally empowered to regulate marriages in strict accordance with scientific theories of breeding, but under such a system the whole institution of marriage would be destroyed. Mating would take the place of marrying, and the sentiment which gives life its greatest beauty would be extinguished. Society would be turned into a human stock farm, and men and women would be degraded to the level of brutes. Moreover, under such physiological restraints there, would be little mating. Not one marriage in a hundred would stand such a test of its fitness, so and men and women would be degrated to the level of brutes. Moreover, under such physiological restraints there would be little mating. Not one marriage in a hundred would stand such a test of its fitness, so general is the inheritance which might be described as defective, so mixed up is the blood of the human race. Nor can the qualities most desirable for preservation in meu be perpesuated by the methods used in breeding horses and cattle.

Hence we can lay down no absolute rule for the guidance of our enamored friends, Many cousins have married without evil consequences to their offspring. In many other cases the results bave been deplorable. Each case must be decided by itself in view of possible chances and probable fruit. A wise physician acquainted with the family history would be the best adviser for our anxious correspondent, since the only objections urged against the marriage seem to come within the special province of such an expert.—New York Sun.

An Adventure With Mountain Terrapin.

The Rillits' Mine stage was coming over Needle pass, in Arizona, a few weeks ago with only two people aboard—Mike Dugraw, the driver, and Jack Skinner, a passenger who was going to work at the mine. They were delayed by an accident until darkness came on, and then they decided to camp until morning in the pine woods. The horses were unhitched, and the two men spread their blankets and lay down. As they lay there they heard a strange sound like the distais dashing of breakers against the cliffs. The sound grew louder until they could hear the crackling of breaking branches. Both men got up, thoroughly alarmed. The horses were shaking like leaves, showing plainly that they were listening to a sound that they did not under stand.

Louder and louder it sounded until it had become a roar that was all around them and gradually coming nearer. At first Mike thought it might be a storm, but there was absent that weird, whistling sound always an accompaniment to a storm in the pines. But what it was could not be determined, and such womant it become more terrible. But what it was could not be determined, and each moment it become more terrible. Suddenly it, struck Mike that it was a herd of wild beasts of some kind, but he thought it strange that there was no barking or growls—nothing but the incessant rumbling and crackling. The strain was becoming too intense, and Mike concluded to hitch up and be ready to leave. He threw several sticks on the fire and then went for the horses while Jack got the harness in shape.

The animals were anxious to go, but before the harness was over their backs Mike heard a branch crack just behind him. He pulled his revolver and fired where the sound came from. This only increased the roaring sound until it was deafening, and an occasional his could be heard.

on every side he saw dozens of strange ereatures. A close look convinced him that they were mountain terrapins. He had seen them before, but singly, and looked upon them as harmless.

But here was a new side to the animal's nature, for these were ferocious and of extraordinary size. Those generally seen on the desert of Arizona are sellom over two feet long, but many of these would measure four. The creatures come up from the gulf of California and often spend years in the desert. They carry water with them like a camel, and after it is gone they seem able to get along without. They have been seen 200 miles from the gulf.

These were the animals that now threatened the two men, and in an instant it occurred to Mike that they were different from those he had generally seen. They were surely older and had very likely come from the gulf in a company and got lost. Now they were hunting and were angry and hungry.

At any rate, it was a serious fix. The horses became frightened and jerked away from the wagon and started off. They ran to the edge of the circle of ugly heads, and then ran around looking for a way out, while the turtles snapped at their legs. There was no opening, and at last both horses made a bold dash over the creatures, their hard hoofs orashing over the shells for several minutes and then ceasing suddenly, showing that they had reached the other side and very likely were safe.

Nearer and nearer the turtles came, and Mike and Jack soon had to climb into the Nearer and nearer the turtles came, and Mike and Jack soon had to climb into the wagon to keep out of their way. The turtles crowded around the wagon, which was the only place of refuge. Mike thought the turtles might move on and did all he could to frighten them by shooting at them. It was almost dark, and the fire had been burning low, and as Mike could not aim none of the bullets took effect on the turtles' backs. They soon began climbing over one another in their efforts to get at the men. At last there was such a number all around that the wagon commenced to move and was forced to one side until the hind wheels were broken. There was no hope of scape except to do as the horses had done, and the chances were very slim. But they had to do it and started as soon as the wagon broke.

They jumped from one turtle to another for some time, and it seemed to the men as if they covered the earth. But they kept on and knew that unless they fell they would soon be safe. It was hardly possible to see, but the two men were soon awars.

A QUEER DUEL.

If the snake's head was too close, the turtle would draw back into the shell, and if the head was far enough away the turtle would seize his antagonist, and when the snake, mad with pain, tried to revenge himself the turtle would retreat. This strange warfare was kept up for several hours, when the turtle succeeded in getting his antagonist by the throat and nearly severed the head from the body. Then, with the snake still wrapped around it, the turtle reached the water, and the dead snake floated off on the surface. The turtle had been victor A QUEER DUEL.

Hunting Turtles on a Florida Beach. Hunting Turtles on a Florida Beach.

The beach on the lower coast of Florida is the home of thousands of loggerhead turtles. During the summer, in the full moon, they come out on the beach to lay their eggs. They dig out a rounding hole several feet deep with their claws, lay 50 or 100 or more eggs in it carefully, putting them around in circles with an exactness one would not expect from such clumsy ap-would not expect from such clumsy appearing things.

After laying the eggs the mother turtle carefully throws the sand over them and smooths it down so well that only the closest search reveals them to the turtle hunters. Sometimes a turtle takes two or three nights to finish her laying. She will creep out the second night, carefully and deftly partially uncover the eggs deposited before and then lay the balance, covering them all so nicely that hardly the least trace remains of nicely that hardly the least trace remains o any disturbance in the sand. They always go above tide water, and only on beaches where there is a clear stretch of dry sand above there is a clear stretch of dry sand above the tide will they lay. The eggs are es-teemed a great delicacy by the beach and coast residents. Not only that, but bruin has a hankering for fresh turtle eggs, while foxes, opossums, wildcats, etc., hunt for these rich caches of food. Turtle soup and steak are also prime luxuries, so the poor loggerheads have hosts of enemies to look out for in their efforts to raise up their families.

A St. Louis Globe-Democrat correspondent thus describes a hunting expedition with a party which included two ladies and a veteran turtle hunter: After a pleasant journey by moonlight we reached the beach and soon sighted a turtle. All hands seemed possessed with the idea of selzing the prize first, and a wild run was made in its direction. Soon we came close up to the loggerhead, and an immense one she was. She sat there on her nest as unconserned as if we were far away. She was about the size of a huge oblong laundry basket. The scales or squares on her back were several inches across. Her ugly ed looking head was peeking out from under the shell, watching us closely, but in no way did she seem afraid. The old hunter, who was at home in this pursuit, moved around behind her and cautiously digging down in the sand began hauling out her eggs. Fully 50 or more were thus secured, when suddenly the old turtle arose on her segs. Fully 50 or more were thus secured, when suddenly the old turtle arose on her feet or flippers, half turned around, and with a swift, deft movement drew the sand sver where the eggs should have been. Then, before any one could interfere, she set out for the water's edge, several rods distant, with a celerity that surprised us. Our young lady visitor, whom I will call Miss H., was standing nearly in front of the truth education is reconsistent when it the turtle admiring its proportions when it so suddenly rose. She screamed as it so suddenly rose. She screamed as it moved and attempted to jump to one side. But the old turtle meant business now and was bound for home, no matter what obstacles were in its path. None of us knew how it happened, but as we looked up we saw the big loggerhead speeding for the ocean and Miss H. seated on its back and screaming lustily. For a second we were dumfounded at her peril, as the waves were quite high along this beach, and then we all set out in pursuit.

The writer and the captain ran ahead of the turtle and tried to stop or turn it to one side. We were both flung down, as the turtle ran right into us, and as its heavy weight passed over us we both thought that turtle hunting wasn't such sport after all. The veteran knew his game better, however, and running alongside of the now thoroughly alarmed loggerhead he reached out and grasped Miss H. by the waist, eleverly lifting her on to the sand, where she promptly fainted. In the hurry attending it all the eld turtle dashed into the water and escaped. Miss H. soon recovered, and then she was so vexed that she vowed not to go home until a capture
had been made.

But a short distance below this another turtle was spied, just coming off her nest. Seeing us running up, she put for the water at once. Having been instructed, the captain and the writer made a better record. Running alongside of the loggerhead, we seized her flippers, and with a sudden raise and push flopped the big turtle over on her back. She lay there flopping her flippers furlously and endeavoring to turn herself over, but in vain. But a short distance further on another was encountered. We tried the same tactics, but it being a tremendous big fellow we couldn't overturn it. We raised one side up, but the old turtle only made her other flipper fly the faster and carried us right along. The veteran came running, and the ladies, too, gave us a lift, and finally with a big heave we turned her over. But the veteran got caught this time, for he overbalanced himself, and as the turtle fell over he sprawled over on her. Two flips of her powerful flippers, and the veteran landed in the saff head first. He arcse unhurt, but rather injuured in his dignity.

For the next half hour the firm warred.

to make substantial means out or canner the same.

Most of the turtles taken are females, for it is the females only that come ashore for the purpose of laying their eggs, the males remaining usually in much deeper water. The female is easily distinguished from the male by her tail, which is so short as to be absolutely nominal, while his usually averages 6 or 6 inches in length.

There are only a few places in the Bahamas where turtles are stored and fattened, and yet the increase of weight pays well mas where turtles are stored and fattened, and yet the increase of weight pays well for the very slight outlay of time, trouble and expense required. The storage ponds are natural lakes, with a slight rise and fall of the tide, the sea water making its way with ease through the prorus lime-stone rocks of which the islands are composed. The turtles are put in here and left, to themselves to grow, the only care required being to throw in a few green leaves occasionally.

There are many ways of cooking turtles in the Bahamas, but the favorite plan is to make the bulk of the flesh into a kind of a hash, well doctored with port and other wines, and then to serve it up in the shell covered with crust, so that it looks like a kind of meat pie. This is called a "baked trustle."

A Three Legged Turtle.

A man in New Durham, N, J., has a snapping turtle that moves about on three legs. He owns also a cat that has only one ear. The two animals are on terms of the warmest friends of and are unhappy when they are separated. Such intimate relations did not always exist between them however. Some months ago the relations did not always exist between them, however. Some months ago the turtle viciously snapped at the cat's ear and bit it off very close to the head. The mutilated cat retailisted by seizing the turtle's left hind leg with her teeth and claws and so mangling the limb that it became necessary to amputate it. Both wounds healed rapidly, and as though each respected the provess of the other they became inseparable. The turtle is a little lopsided in the rear, and its owner is thinking of fastening a small wheel to its shell to enable it to preserve its equilibrium.

SWALLOWED BY A PYTHON.

The Strange Experience of an American In the Philippine Islands.

"The existence of man eating snakes has been doubted by naturalists, but I can prove the fact from my own experiences," writes an American recently returned from the Philippine islands. "In 1886 I was living at Ti Rando. One of our servants was a short, broad shouldered Javanese named Picul. He was a cattle herder and frequently in the woods. Several times he had told us of the existence of a monster python 50 feet long, not a mile from the plantation. I gave hing a gun and buckshot to kill it, but it never materialized, and we became incredutous.

"One day Picul was missing. His gun and hat were found in the woods and brought in. One of the native hunters examined the ground and gave his opinion. Plcul must have been caught by a snake, as no blood had been shed, but there had evidently been a struggle. The next Sunday, in company with an Englishman named Mason and some native trackers, I took the woods to look for our lost servant. The natives led us to the edge of a track of submerged land covered with long grass. The water was about three inches deep. Here in the mug was the track of a big snake. merged land covered with long grass. The water was about three inches deep. Here in the mughwas the track of a big snake. The depression made by the body in the mud was quite 18 inches wide. Suddenly one of the men called out, 'Sook! sook' (look! look). Three hundred yards away the water was agitated into waves, and gliding toward us was a yellow snake that looked 100 feet long. The heard was as large as a bucket. It was a bright yellow striped with black.
"To watch it gliding toward us was trying on the nerves, but we waited and at 40 yards gave it two loads of buckshot in the head. It rearred 10 feet out of the water and lashed about, but finally sunk, and the natives hauled it on the bank with a rope. It was just 38 feet long—our fears had added the other 60. To keep it from the white ants, it was at once cut open and skinned. the other oo. To keep it from the write ants, it was at once cut open and skinned. Inside was the lower jaw of a human being and a leg and thigh bone, while a loin cloth was rolled into a perfect knot no bigger than a man's fist, and this Picul's sixters identified. So the poor fellow had fallen a victim to this horrid reptile."

Scientific Classification of Snakes To the British museum series of catalogues Mr. G. A. Boulenger has recently added a classification of snakes. It is a moot point whether snakes form a distinct order of reptiles or a branch of the group to which lizards and chameleons belong. Mr. Boulenger adopts the first theory as regards his text and recommends the second in his notes. He is the only man who has ever classified snakes scientifically. The popular generalization that "snakes are pizen" cannot be accepted as scientific; neither can the slightly more discriminating subdivision into snakes which are "pizen" and snakes which are "pizen" and snakes which are too the slightly more discriminating subdivision into snakes which are "pizen" and snakes which are not. The only classification fit to stand, up till now, is the one based upon cravial differences, which Mr. Boulenger has a xpounded in his work on the "Reptilia and Barrachia of British India." According to this work, there are nine noot point whether snakes form a distinct "Reptilia and Batrachia of British India." According to this work, there are nine different families of snakes, and India alone knows 264 separate species which fall under them. The commonest families are the boide, embracing boas, pythons and the cryx (a two headed snake much affected by Indian jugglers), the viperide, including vipers and rattlesnakes, and last, but not least, seeing that fully two-thirds of all the snakes belong to it, the colubride.

A Bottomless Abyss.

The celebrated abyss of Jean Nouvean (Vaucluse) is one of the most interesting in France and perhaps in the world. It is simply a vertical pipe, 3 feet to 12 feet in diameter, running down in the earth for about 500 feet, where it ends in a kind of chamber, from which another abyss obstructed by debris descends for an unknown distance into the bowels of the tarth. It is supposed to be the vent-of an ancient geyser.

On the principle of "In Rome do as the Romans do," I think it is a safe rule to pronounce the name of a place as the residents of a place do. St. Paul, Minn., arrived last week on a visit to friends in their former home. Lanedowne rear. The convention of temperance workers called by Mr. Orser, of Gananoque, will be held in this village on Thursday, Oct. 5.

It is reported that Rev. Dr. Wild, late pastor of Bond street Congregational church, Toronto, will likely be a McCarthyite candidate for the Commons in Haldimand.

The Friends' quarterly meeting will be held at Athens from Friday to will be held at Athens from Friday to Sunday next, inclusive. Meetings for worship will begin on Saturday at 10, and Sunday at 11 a.m. A cordial nvitation is extended to all. At Westport, on Friday evening, Oct. 18th, the Sons of Temperance will hold a grand concert in the town hall. An excellent programme has been provided, which will close with a Ticketa 25c : children burdens many a soul: The furnaces must soon start up, and also the bills for coal. The melanchely days are here our tortures to begin, when winter clothes are all too warm and sum mer ones too thin.

The Toronto "Mail" says : The Toronto "Mail" says: "The selection by the lordships of Bishop Machray for the office of primate of all Canada seems to have been unanimous. Naturally Archbishop Lewis, the venerable metropolitan of Canada, might have been expected to fill the position, but the weight of years, together with his other duties, evi-dently disinclined him from accepting it, for he nominated for the high honor his brother metropolitan the west."

On Sunday evening in the Metho-dist church, the paster, Rev. John Grenfell, who has just returned from the World's Fair, spoke at length of the great exhibition as being one of the modern world's wonders. He said that during bis visit he heard no swearing, saw no drunken men, and that considerably less than one-tenth of the average attendance took advantage of the open gates on Sunday. He was connected with, and, perhaps, chiefly interested in, the great conference of the world's religions, and he said that christianity had nothing to lose but everything to gain by being brought face to face and standing side by side with the great heathen beliefs of the old world.

Weeks carried on this kind of "business" or a number of years without meeting any betacle which he was not able either to odge or jump over. But last February the cockholders of the land company began to ecome too inquisitive for his comfort and othered him a good deal with requests for xplanations and statements of accounts and other details distasteful to the lofty or the form of the company of the request of the company of the company and other details distance and account-mind of errant genius. When an account-ing with his creditors could no longer be ing with his creditors could no longer be postponed and exposure seemed imminent, Mr. Weeks hastily made an assignment and disappeared from the scene of his financial exploits.

In choosing Costa Rica as his place of refuge, Weeks was probably influenced by the fact that we have no extradition treaty with that country as well as by the satubity of the climate. But the people of Costa Rica have no affinity with felons and refuse to give him protection, so that the brilliant speculator will be brought back to face the widows and orphans he has swindled.

CRUEL CHINESE PUNISHMENT. low a Malefactor Was Starved to Dea A typical case of Chinese cruelty is thus described by The Pall Mall Budget: Four men were captured some time ago at Chinekiang, near the mouth of the Yang-tsekiang, who had for some months past carried on a systematic course of kidnaping children, one of the most heinous crimes known to Chinese law. They were duly tried and finally sentenced to death by the slow process of exposure and starvation in a cage. The sentence was first carried out on the ringleader, and on Sunday morning he was placed in a cage, standing apright on a pile of bricks a foot high, with

On the lower flat of the main building the grain, roots, fruit and vegetables were exhibited. The disvegetables were exhibited. The dis-play was large and the quality excell-ent. The butter, cheese and dairy products were there in large numbers, products were there in large numbers, while the display of honey made by F. L. Moore, W. D. Livingston and Wm. G. Lee was very large and fine. Each of these gentlemen did a large retail business in honey, nearly half a ton having changed hands or was contracted for during the fair.

On the upper flat the ladies had their products in large quantities. Quilts and fancy work, paintings and artificial paper work took up large space and was carefully scanned and favorably commented on by who constantly thronged that part of the buildings.

Out on the grounds the usual quantiof agricultural implements were shown. A sulky plow exhibited by H.B. Brown, Addison, received more than the usual amount of attention. In these days of labor-saving machinery, it is not very hard work to convince the progressive farmer that a sulky plow is a very necessary adjunct to a well conducted farming outfit. Geo. P. Fakirs were there with their oily tongues to beguile the unwary into parting with their hard-earned dimes and dollars, and one hard working farmer of Kitley is said to now mourn the less of nearly $100 in a vain attempt to get something for nothing. In the horse ring the number of horses was quite large, but there seemed to be a falling off in the quality of the double and single driving horses, although there were a few really fine horses on exhibition Shortly after noon an exciting game of football took place between the Harlem

The prosperity of the fair is, perhaps, best measured by the receipts, and through the kindness of the secretary we are able to give the following figures, which are said to be under rather than over the exact amounts: gate receipts, $300; new members, $56; horse-tickets, grocery and fakirs, $35; making a total of $380, about $80 more that last year. about $80 more that last year.

The Reichstag will not resume its sessions before November 20. When the House opens the voice of Ahlwardtism will again be heard louder and more powerful than ever. Disgrace and social disrepute do not affect Ahlwardt's influence. At a recent congress of North German Anti-Semites his programme found unanimous acceptance. Among the proposals submitted and accepted was the absurd one of forbidding Hebrews to have German servants. The congress declared a new departure on the part of the Anti-Semites in denouncing an alliance with Conservatives with, whom the party at one time affiliated. A resolution adopted, declaring that the Anti-Semites should oppose all indirect taxation that burdened the lower and middle classes, proved the desire of the party to split with the Conservatives on the party to split with the Conservatives on hearing from Herren Liebermann and Von Sonnenberg that with the pledged support of the Conservatives on the Reichstag committees.

BERLIN, Oct. 2.—The newspaper discussion of the Emperor's relations to Bismarck does not abate. Although the public have been disillusioned as to the probability of their becoming friends, the official opinion as explained in last week's letter never shared the popular illusion. Reports are still rife as to exchanges of measages between the Emperor and Bismarck and the Empress Frederick as the mediator through Count William Bismarck and as to the Empress planning a visit in Friedrichsruhe. The truth is there is no present plan of reconciliation. Netther present plan of reconciliation. Neither the Emperor nor Bismarck ever intended a reconciliation to be achieved in any way except by the other's complete submissio With the growing strength of the Prin

Convention of Sobial Democrats.

BERLIN, Oct. 2.—The congress of Social Democrats will be opened on October 22. The delegates will hear the executive committee's report on the recent general election and will debate plans for May Day of next year. Relations of socialism to anti-Semitism, and the subject of strikes also will be discussed. Editor Landau, leader of the Berlin Anarchists, advises his comrades to join the Socialists so as to reform them. The Socialist leaders are on the watch and will throw out any Anarchists who try to take part in the congress. who try to take part in the congress. The credentials of all delegates will be scanned

LONDON, Oct. 2.—Despatches from Con-tantinople say that the Sultan has been reatly moved by the agitation in England in behalf of the Armenian prisoners in greatly moved by the agitation in England on behalf of the Armenian prisoners in Asiatic Turkey. He has ordered that all the papers bearing on the recent trial of Armenians in Angonira be laid before him, especially those concerning the charges against Professors Thoumsyan and Kaya Yan, of the American College in Marsovan. Abstracts from these documents were made a week ago and were despatched on September 26 to Rustem Pasha, Turkish ambassador in London. A courteous autograph letter from the Sultan was sent with them.
