POETRY.

A Cheerful View.

The winter's almost past and soon the warmer winds will blow.

The snow'll melt, the brooks'll break away.

The tramp'll come a-beggin' full of whist-key and of woe.

The robin trill his merry roundelay.

And then there'll be a spall of mud—there always, but still.

It won't take that so very long to pass. An' when it does, the mud'll be a-bustlin' with a will.

And the butter-bee-tastin' o' the grass.

The cow'll have a twinkle in his peaceful lookin' eyes.

To see the meadow gettin' green again; An' the haughty, struttin' rooster be so full o' pleased surprise.

That he'll crow real kind o' crazy, now and then.

The violets will be peepin' j'es leaf-ful ez can be.

The dandelions 'a-sproutin' hold ez brass.

Together with the daisies an' the temple-in' cherry tree.

While the butter keeps a-tastin' o' the grass.

The pigeons will be coo'in' in a sentimental style.

A-nest'n' on the barn in lovin' pairs; An' the landscape all a-blossom' in a-broad and beamin' smile.

With a sort of funny fragrance everywhere.

O, yes, I know the sultry days'll follow mighty close.

An' Naters then be j'es a molten mass; Still I'm feelin' ez if frisky—tain't no use to be morose.

When the butter is a-tastin' o' the grass.

CHAPTER XV.

"I'm afraid I can't help it, sir," said Wyndham.

Mr. Paget and his son-in-law were standing together in the very comfortable private room before alluded to in the office of the former.

Wyndham was standing with his back to the mantelpiece; Valentine's lovely picture was over his head. Her eyes, which were almost dancing with life, seemed to have something mocking in them to Mr. Paget, as he encountered their gaze now. As eyes will in a picture, they followed him wherever he moved. He was restless and ill at ease, and he wished either that the picture might be removed, or that he could take up Wyndham's position with his back to it.

"I tell you," he said, in a voice that betrayed his perturbation, "that you must help it. It's a clear breaking of contract to do otherwise."

"You see," said Wyndham, with a slow smile, "you under-rated my attractions. I was not the man for your purpose after all."

"Sit down for God's sake, Wyndham. Don't stand there looking so provokingly indifferent. One would think the whole matter was nothing to you."

"I am not sure that it is much; that is, I am not at all sure that I shall not take my full measure of pleasure out of the short time allotted to me."

"Sit down, take that chair, no, not that one—that—ah, that's better, Valentine's eyes are positively unconscious. You see, they follow you like a dog's tail, but that is interesting. He is mysterious, and that is captivating—yes, yes—yes. Now, what did he mean by that queer remark about my housekeeping—that it wasn't worth while?"

"I hope he's not superstitious while?"

"If anything could be worth while it would be well for a young girl like me to learn something useful and definite. I'll ask him what he means."

She drew a footstool to her husband's side, and taking one of his hands laid her cheek against it. Wyndham dropped his book and smiled down at her.

"Gerry, do you believe in omens?" she asked.

Gerald gave a slight start. Circumstances inclined him to superstition—then he laughed. "He must not encourage his wife in any such folly."

"I don't quite understand you, my love," he replied.

"Only you said it was not worth while to learn to housekeep. Why do you say that? I am very young, you are young. If we are to go on always together, I ought to become wise and sensible. I ought to have knowledge. What do you mean, Gerald? Have you had an omen? Do you think you will die? Or perhaps that I shall die? I should not at all like it. I hope—I trust—not to be taken of death before sent to you about me."

"None, my very dearest, none. I see before you a life of peace, peace and plenty—and—honor—a good life, Valentine, a guarded life."

"How white you are, Gerald. And why do you say 'you' all the time? The life, the peaceful life, and it sounds rather dull, is for us both, isn't it?"

"I don't know—I can't say. You wouldn't care, would you, Val—I mean—I mean—"

"What?"

Valentine had risen, her arms were thrown round Gerald's neck.

"Are you trying to tell me that I could be happy now without you?" she whispered. "Then I couldn't, darling. I don't mind telling you I couldn't. I—I—"

"I like you, Gerald. Yes, I know it—I do like you—much."

It ought to have been the most dreadful sound to him, and yet it wasn't. Wyndham raised his wife to his heart. Then he raised his eyes, and with a start Valentine and he stepped aside.

Mr. Paget had come into the room. He had come in softly, and he must have heard Valentine's words, and seen that close embrace.

With a glad cry the girl flew to his side, but when he kissed her his lips trembled, he sank down on the nearest chair like a man who had received a great shock.

"What, Val, what?"

"I'm afraid I can't help it, sir," said Wyndham.

The Younger Canadian Poets.

ARTHUR JOHN LOCKHART.

The bard whom we now consider is a native of our own Nova Scotia. Arthur John Lockhart was born in the year 1850, at Lockhartville, a village in Kings county, situated about eight miles to the westward of Wolfville and near the Avon river.

In 1872, Mr. Lockhart entered the East Maine Methodist Conference and the next year was married. The only volume published by Mr. Lockhart is entitled "A Masque of Mysteries." It appeared in 1887 and contains, besides those pieces written by himself, (much the larger number) some poems of very high merit by his brother, Burton.

The bent of our poet's mind is decidedly religious. His faith in the power and will of the living God to bring all things right in the end is apparent in nearly all of his poetry. Nature herself seems conscious of this and continually praises the Lord, and man should not be silent. This thought finds expression in a noble hymn entitled

PRaise.

Praise ye the Lord! for who but he Whose face no mortal eye can see— On whom his angels scarce can gaze— Is worthy of adoring praise? His light and power extend afar, From sun to sun, and star to star, Through spaces winged with ether crossed, And where our wandering thoughts are lost.

Let every creature that hath breath Sing to the Lord of life and death; And let the shining choirs on high, Their rapturous hosannas cry! To him the virtuous all reside, By him is every good supplied; Praise to the Lord with gladness give! Let all on earth the anthem raise!

PRaise.

This hymn well deserves to be printed in the collections used by the different churches. Lockhart's poetry possesses a dreamy cadence; and its subdued music strongly resembles Wordsworth. His imagination is not strong, but he has a pleasing and sometimes half fancy. Passion is almost completely absent. There is nothing strange, nothing sensational in his work; and it often lacks the force which is found in the productions of more erratic bards. His love of nature is strong and his expression of it poetical. He seems to be at home with nature in all her moods, but especially her milder ones. Indeed it is only the poetical soul that is truly in fellowship with her. It is only those few favored ones possessing "The vision and the faculty divine" who learn a song from the robin, a sermon from the fading leaf, and rage with the storm, glow with the sunshine, darken with the shadow, and feel themselves to be part of the mighty universe around. Beautifully is this communion between Nature and Nature's child expressed in

A SPRING SONG.

"A joyous rhyme of a glad time, That sings in coming to greet the earth, When Winter springs on his cold white wings, And Light and Beauty renew their birth, When the swelling buds burst forth, and the woods are green, With song, brain over and streams run clear; When the sweet toned rills are heard from the hills, And the cheery singing of birds is here, Another element in Mr. Lockhart's poetry is his patriotism. Although he has lived so long in the United States, he has never wavered in his passionate love for his own country, but sings as one, Exiled to foreign fields afar from the home of his fathers."

This patriotism receives a grand, touching, and pathetically beautiful as well as forcible expression in his ode to ACADIE.

While British bands the lyre awake, And strike the harp to glory strings, Do none my country's praises speak— Must my fair land remain unused? Awake to noblest minstrelsy, Loved Muse! the patriot bosom stir! And strike to passion, fiery-free, My wild unshorned hair, for her! Yet not unknown to song is she, 'Ere since the Western March came To twine the flowers of poetry Around her sweet unstoried name— Yet the enchanting story tell, And point Affection's heavenly mien— The mournful fate of Gabriel, The sorrow of Evangeline! But, O my birth-land! wilt thou not Bring forth thy glowing minstrel choir— Bright masters of enchanted thought, And skilled to strike thy native lyre? Its slumbering chords too long lie dumb, Since rust must's earlier year; Come! ye enraptured songsters, come! Sing! and the listening land shall hear! Sweet now to tread her morning fields

I have the agency for King's County for the three following articles:

The Page Wire Fence,

The strongest fence made; cheaper than a board fence and will last longer. Guaranteed to turn any kind of farm stock.

The Ideal Spray Pump,

Recommended by all the leading horticulturists in Canada. Guaranteed to thoroughly agitate. Use Bordeaux Mixture freely.

Steel Harness,

For ploughing orchards. No whistle-trees; will not bark trees.

I am now taking orders for these, to be delivered in April. Don't buy without seeing me.

MONEY TO LOAN

at 6 PER CENT. KENTVILLE, Aug. 24th, '94

Where once her dew embathed my feet, And bear the song each thicket yields, And drink each wild blossom's breathing sweet;

Or, when the tide of evening light O'er-floes with gold the crimsoned west, From hills, to watch the splendors bright, With fern and flowing laurel dressed.

Though here be not the storied lore To which earth's prouder lands aspire, Yet there are legends on her shores, That court the bard's historic lyre; Look forth, O stranger!—not in art, In nature is Acadia's fair!

And thou may'st find the purest heart, The simplest mould of beauty there!

Tread where her vale are deep and sweet, When left in Summer's busy dreams, Where will thou, pentive wanderer, meet With greener woods or clearer streams!

Her wildwood nooks seclusion give To him who seeks to muse or rave, And each inspiring thought of thee! In music such as poets love.

How often from a stranger shore, The exile-spirit turns to view In Memory's magic glass, once more, The peaceful scenes that once she saw!

For thee, Acadie, art my home— Sacred to Boyhood's joyous mirth— Where'er I rest, where'er I roam, The most beloved land on earth!

Land of the Mayflower, could I deem That thou would'st yet remember me, What joy in every muting dream, And each inspiring thought of thee! But long self-exiled from thy shore, Singing apart, my idle songs! How should I be remembered here? What of thy praise to me belong?

Yet shall I love thee O my land! Yet shall I still remember thee! And could my power such been command, The sons of honor thine should be; Heroes upon thy soil should spring, Sublime in war and true in peace; Poets, the world should crown, to sing Such songs as live till song shall cease.

Acadie! sweet thy name to me, As music trembling from afar, And creating o'er some moonlit sea, 'Twixt fire-lit wave, and silver star; Of other lands a sound I hear, Names with a meaning half divine; But none can ever fill my ear With such a melting throeb as thine.

Mr. Lockhart's lyre has a note of contemplative sadness which is heard in all his songs. But he is no pessimist and the slightest mournful in his verse arises from his seriousness. The stream of his poetry is smooth, never overflowing its banks, having few shallows and no places of great profundity. All Nova Scotians should read him.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the ACADIAN.

I regret to know that the Star Course committee have been unable to secure a Liberal politician to lecture in College Hall. While I hate to find fault, I am inclined to think there has been some mismanagement in the efforts to secure a speaker.

I am afraid the committee tried to secure a speaker from a distance and overlooked better ones near home. We have some well known Liberals in this County, who I think would be pleased to accept the chance to speak in the classic hall of Acadia. I would suggest that Dr. Borden be invited to lecture on the subject of "Repeal." The Dominion Parliament meets on April 18th, so no time should be lost in trying to get him. If Dr. Borden cannot be got there are other fine speakers such as: William Young, Hon. A. P. Walton, Col. Shippey Spurr, of Annapolis, etc. I hope the committee will make an effort to fulfill its promise to the ticket-holders, and the public.

Mr T. A. Munro, merchant tailor, of this town, has gone to Cleveland, Ohio, and will remain a few months. If he finds the climate there better suited to his health than here, he will likely remain. For the present Mrs. Munro and family will reside here, and we hope to again have Mr. Munro back among us, fully restored to health.

Kings College, Windsor, has had a course of lectures during the present College year. They have been delivered in Convocation Hall before the Faculty, students and numbers of citizens of the town. The lecturers have been: Fred W. Adams, Rev. Dyson Hague, Professor MacMechan, of Dalhousie, Hon. J. W. Longley, Professor Keimsted, of Acadia, Professor Roberts, of Kings, it to give the closing lecture.

On Sunday evening last Rev. S. McCully Black, of St. John, N. B., addressed a large audience in College Hall, upon the subject of "The Light of the World." The meeting was held under the auspices of the College Y. M. C. A. Good music was furnished by the College choir, and the quartette, which is earning popularity, sang in excellent form. The officers for next year take their places now, the President being Mr. Jackson of '04.

We would call the attention of our readers to the Halifax advertisements which appear in this issue. A number of other Halifax business men have secured space in the ACADIAN for advertisements which will appear probably next week. The ACADIAN is more and more being recognized as an excellent medium for reaching trade.

Mr R. O. Chisholm who for nearly a year past has acted as manager of the American House, left on Saturday last to resume work on his pleasantly located farm in Canada. On Friday evening he was given an "after supper" by the boarders at which an enjoyable time was spent. Mr and Mrs Chisholm will both be missed very much from our town.

The reception given by the members of the Atheneum Society in College Hall last Friday evening was a most successful and enjoyable affair. The evening was pleasant and a goodly number responded to the invitations. The hall was prettily decorated and furnished for the occasion, and presented a home-like and attractive appearance. The guests were received by Messrs Griffin and Parsons, and all appeared to enjoy the evening. The students are to be congratulated on the manner in which all the arrangements were carried out, and the general success of the entertainment.

Jettings from the Seminary.

A small, typical series of minerals and rocks suitable for illustrative teaching has recently been added to the collection in Acadia Seminary. These specimens came from the Geographical Survey Department at Ottawa, of which Dr. George M. Davison is director. They were secured for the Seminary through the kindly solicitation of Prof. A. E. Caldwell.

A recital will be given by the students of the Seminary in the early part of April. Look out for posters.
