LONDON SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1907.

NEW ONTARIO'S SECESSION MOVEMENT.

The Sault Ste. Marie Express, edited by Mr. Charles N. Smith, M. P. P., discusses the secession movement in New Ontario.

The taking from the newer part of Ontario the chief revenues which make up the receipts of Ontario, the spending of these moneys in old Ontario, and leaving New Ontario's interests neglected.

Unfair discrimination in favor of the lumberman as against the settler. The unjust mining laws which have been passed.

The general neglect of the wants of New Ontario in many respects. The filling of important offices by the importation of people from the older part of the Province.

The Express says it is not in favor of secession, but advises organization and agitation on the part of the people of New Ontario to secure redress of their grievances. It adds:

"We could awaken among the people of older Ontario a realization of the fact that we are of the same mold as they are and that we do not lamely submit to injustice. We could teach the people and the governments that we are not to be treated like a set of subjects of a superior race inhabiting older Ontario.

The people of New Ontario may find it difficult to convince the people of old Ontario that this language is justified. We shall be inclined to ask what New Ontario would have been today but for the expenditure of public moneys in developing that portion of the Province, and the fostering care of the Provincial Government.

BRITAIN'S NAVAL PROGRAMME.

Although Great Britain is strongly advocating that the question of a decrease of armaments by the various powers be taken up at the forthcoming conference at The Hague, that she has no hope of anything being accomplished in that direction is shown not only by the policy of preparedness which has been adopted by the warships, but by the fact that she continues building ships of war as in the past.

ing that of the British admiralty. The general understanding abroad was that in case the limitation proposal took shape to promise definite results, at least in the way of practicable discussion in good faith, Britain would lay down only one new battleship of the Dreadnaught class.

Nor is the present programme confined to great battleships. The "Mosquito" fleet is also being kept well in advance. At the present time there is being built at Birkenhead a most formidable vessel of this type—a torpedo-boat destroyer of 1,830 tons, and 30,000-horsepower, which is to have a speed of 36 knots an hour.

King Edward has done more than his ancestors for two hundred years to make his royal house popular in the empire. Paragon-making golf. Golf cannot be played really well unless the temper is schooled to such a degree that misfortune, accident and a general run of defective play never lead to passion overflowing the limit of a decorous and restrained equanimity.

How often, oh, how often, Summer and winter through, Has she sat at bridge at midnight—Aye, sometimes till one and two.

And forever and ever, While this bud our fair land swoops, Will she fade the interval day, 'Twill be the time she wakes and sleeps.

So she sits still at bridge at midnight, And prides in her bosom stars, For she holds the best secret of a series, And the tournament trophy is hers!

Winter had lingered in Spring's lap Six weeks or thereabout; But summer came along one day And fired the couple out.

The little girl admired her mother's dress, striking it softly. "Isn't it pretty?" said her mother. "It is silk. Do you know what silk is made from?" "No, mamma."

A REFORMER. (Spare Moments.) Her Husband (angrily)—I was a fool when I married you. His Wife—Aren't you a fool yet? "No, I am not."

SENTENCE SUSPENDED. (Philadelphia Press.) "You're not so strict with that youngster of yours as you used to be," said Popley's friend.

MUCH ALIKE. (Philadelphia Press.) "Yes, indeed," said Miss Uppish, "my great-grandmother on my mother's side was noted for her proud and imperious bearing."

LOVE OUT OF SEASON. (Washington Herald.) "Buying violets will bankrupt me." "Cheer up. She's worth it." "Maybe so. But why did I fall in love on a bull market?"

A GOOD KING. (Buffalo News.) King Edward has done more than his ancestors for two hundred years to make his royal house popular in the empire.

AT BRIDGE. (LIFE.) She still sits at bridge at midnight, As the clocks are striking the hour; Nor thoughts of her home or her family To move her have the power.

And how often, oh, how often, Through the golden hours of day, Has she striven with others like her For purse or prize at play!

The little girl admired her mother's dress, striking it softly. "Isn't it pretty?" said her mother. "It is silk. Do you know what silk is made from?"

"No, mamma." "It comes from a little, insignificant worm." "Do you mean father, mamma?" asked Isabel.

"Have you seen the new Psyche that Mr. Gottalot brought home from Europe?" asked Mrs. Oldcastle.

"No," replied her hostess. "I thought he was going to have an American-built machine this year."

Messrs. Foster Bros., general brokers, Hull, were summoned at Grimsby recently at the instance of the Cleethorpes urban district council for leaving a whale they had recently purchased on the foreshore, thus constituting a danger to public health.

Olara—You may not believe it, but I said "No" to seven different men during the past winter. Maude—Oh, I don't doubt it. What were they selling?

Many a young man is leaving Ontario who will regret it. Many a boy is throwing up competency here for an expectancy there. Eases may come faster there, and wheat-gold and land-gold grow bigger, yet it is at the expense of comfort, of quiet life and unassisted wanderings.

The latest and one of the best offerings in the melodramatic line, "As Told in the Hills," will be presented at the Grand on Wednesday next. The play is a melodrama of the kind that has as many thrills as the most exciting, yet has no strained situations or climaxes that in real life are improbable or impossible.

Out of the Darkness

"You have a Mr. Carruthers here," began Rotha with difficulty, and in an instant a shade came over the woman's pleasant face. "Dear, dear, yes, she has her" The rector, has sent the poor creature! The rector, has sent the poor creature! Rotha said, "Yes, impatiently, and begged that they might be shown up at once; but Meg put her hurriedly aside. "I am his wife, good woman—his wife—do you hear? For my sake take me to him at once." "Hush, he's partly asleep," said Bet, a strong-featured, red-armed wench, coming forward. "It's been Madge off and on all the afternoon till I'm that maddered I'm half crazed." "It is the gentleman's wife, Bet," said the landlady, wiping her eyes on her apron as Meg, with a sort of sob, knelt down beside the narrow truckle-bed, and Rotha, half-awed, half-dizzy, looks round the comfortable room with its blue-striped counterpane.

prayer, isn't it? I haven't said my prayers for seven years; never, I think, since I was a child." He looked up in her face as though a glimmering of the terrible truth reached him even in his semi-consciousness. "I haven't said my prayers, and I am going to die." "Say them now, Oh, Jack, fold your hands in mine and say one prayer for mercy!" He shook his head feebly. "I don't know any. Teach me, Madge." "And he let her hold his hands, and tried to say the words after her. "To my Father! What next, Madge? And will you say unto Him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee—before—" The broken clause was never finished, for he dropped his face, muttering still, upon her bosom. Two hours afterward he slept away, lying upon Rotha's neck, and suffered her to lead her from the room.

of sadness still lingers—a quiet curve on two, an added thoughtfulness on the brow, which would tell a keen observer that Rotha Maturin had not been exempt from her woman's lot of love and suffering. Five years have made less havoc with the vicar than with anyone else; he is not thinner, but of course, and he continues to mope over his loss of love and suffering. Five years have made less havoc with the vicar than with anyone else; he is not thinner, but of course, and he continues to mope over his loss of love and suffering. Five years have made less havoc with the vicar than with anyone else; he is not thinner, but of course, and he continues to mope over his loss of love and suffering.

of Rotha had any work to do she certainly did not do it that evening. Meg found her sitting at her window looking out at the sunset, as though she had been doing little else for hours. It would be difficult to describe Rotha's exact feelings when she heard of the news of Robert's speedy arrival; but from the moment the words "he may come any day" had been spoken, a curious mixture of confusion, terror, excitement had thrown her into a whirl of conflicting emotions. Three years had passed since she had answered that passionate letter of Robert's, and the correspondence which had been carried on between them had strained her on both sides, Robert's especially had been brief and rather forced; and though he had never referred to his disappointment since that even in the most distant manner, it was in a way brought home to Rotha every word. Robert never spoke of himself now, never even answered her friendly questions as to his health and prospects. His letters related mainly to Rotha and her affairs, every trifling detail of which she had alluded was canvassed and magnified; but the unrestrained outpourings of the writer's heart seemed kept in check and forced back by a strong hand; only a tender phrase than usual sometimes conveyed to her that the writer himself was unchanged, patient but hopeless, and perhaps no eloquence could have touched Rotha's heart more deeply than those thoughtful but, yet so suggestive; so herself for her, so forgetful of himself.

Once he had been ill, but Rotha never heard of it till long afterward. He had met with an accident, and inflammation and fever had set in, and Austin told her one day very gravely that his life had been despaired of for days, and his recovery was chiefly owing to the watchful nursing of his landlady and her daughter. Rotha wrote a reproachful letter to Robert after that, a letter full of sisterly affection and tenderness; but he wrote back in a little surprise, thanking her for her kindness. "I should not have thought that you would have cared so much whether I lived or died," he said. "I never fancy that I am much good to anyone, or to myself either. I sometimes think that my life has been a failure, and that it would be better to go to one's long rest than to labor without hope in the heat of the day. When the laborer is weary he can go home; I have no home—not a soul belonging to me, but to myself and the woman who loved me under the grass sod. Sometimes I wonder why God permits such loneliness, such desolate hearts, such broken denied lives." Forgive me, Rotha, I am weak still from recent illness, or I should not write like this. Just now, Rachel, my faithful nurse, and told me some of myself. I will not tell you how I thanked her—I was very ungrateful, and she went away with her eyes full of tears. She thinks I ought to put a higher value on my life. She little knows—there, I will not finish that sentence. Good-night, Rotha. Thank you for your goodness to me, dear—I was going to write "sister," but I have sworn never to call you by that name; I will subscribe "friend." There; it is cold enough, it makes me shiver, but many a man might think himself rich with such a one; but not when he is sick and solitary—growing old, but still far enough off his end—as I am, Rotha. Adieu. ROBERT.

That was the last letter Rotha had received, nearly three months ago, and now he was writing home to her. She showed no one that letter, but put it away with mingled feelings of pleasure and pain. It was hardly in woman's nature not to be touched and made proud by this passionate fidelity—this patient hopefulness. For the first time she lost sight of Garton's love, to wonder upon the length and breadth of this man's affection, that could survive distance and time and disappointment, and could refuse to be satisfied with the crumbs of her comfort. "Could Garton have loved me better?" she thought, as though for the first time she realized Robert's feelings in love, and trembled a little and fear and trembling seized her. She thought, "What if he should ever renew his suit? Would he persevere in refusing so kind a friend as she sometimes after his mind without being open to the imputation of weakness? There, perhaps you can interpret that mysterious clause better than I can." But Rotha said nothing, and colored so exceedingly that the vicar rather abruptly changed the subject.

At the present rate of increase the population of Europe will double itself in a century. To Be Continued. The exact feelings when she heard of the news of Robert's speedy arrival; but from the moment the words "he may come any day" had been spoken, a curious mixture of confusion, terror, excitement had thrown her into a whirl of conflicting emotions. Three years had passed since she had answered that passionate letter of Robert's, and the correspondence which had been carried on between them had strained her on both sides, Robert's especially had been brief and rather forced; and though he had never referred to his disappointment since that even in the most distant manner, it was in a way brought home to Rotha every word. A CHARMING SMALL APRON—4139. Empire effects are very pleasing upon small waisters, and the one shown is an example of excellence. The apron has a front yoke, and a front skirt portion joined by a narrow band of embroidery. The back is straight and held in place by sashes fastened at the underarm seams and tied in the center. Ruffles serve as sleeve caps, but these may be omitted if preferred. The design is easily developed and suitable to any of the usual apron materials. INTERESTING TALK ABOUT AUTHORS AND LITERARY TOPICS

From the Reader, London, England

It has been pointed out that the late T. B. Aldrich occupied much the same position in America as Mr. Austin Dobson has so long filled in England.

Disappearance of Old Book Shop. The familiar shop in New Oxford street where for so many years Mr. Westell carried on his business has been closed.

"Shamela." The Reader, in common with his contemporaries, is attending to the bi-centenary of Henry Fielding. There is not much nowadays to be discovered about Fielding, and what there is has been intelligently and delightfully set forth by Mr. Austin Dobson.

IS LITERATURE DYING? Mr. Herbert Paul, in the Contemporary Review, is inclined to answer this question in the affirmative.

TESTATOR'S LAST WISHES. Sir James Colquhoun's desire to be buried in full evening dress costume recalls, says the London Evening Standard, curious wishes of other testators.

WHY THE ACTOR WAS SORE. An actor without funds managed in some way to get a second class ticket on a line of steamers running between Seattle and San Francisco.

THE UNSOCIALITY OF NEW YORK CITY. The voyage between these two points consumed the better part of three days, and at low ebb he solved the question in this way.

INDIANA LADY'S IMPRESSIONS—NOBODY KNOWS ANYONE. "What impresses me most in New York, is the fact that nobody seems to know anybody else, the Indiana woman wrote home.

simple and dignified or our work is a failure. Notice how the stems come down to the margin, giving us the comfortable feeling that the flower is growing, and that a frame has been held up, through and against which we see the flowers.

In preparing to make your composition, read carefully the first part of this week's lesson for Grades IV, V, and VI. Having made a careful outline sketch in pencil, of the flower you have chosen, draw a rectangle nine inches long by three inches wide, and with light pencil lines make the best possible arrangement of your flower within this rectangle.

Study the illustration in the paper to see how one leaf or petal shows against another or against the stem. Drawings in by June 12 will appear June 22.

dandelion composition and the example we draw from may have had its stem suit our purpose to draw them nearly vertical, and we are quite justified in doing so, but it would not be permissible to make the green leaves appear to grow out of the flower stems as that would be sacrificing the truth.

When you have made an arrangement that satisfies you strengthen the lines that are to remain and clean your drawing up with a soft rubber. Next you may make two tracings of your composition on the white drawing paper, or better still on white unruled writing paper. Paint one with flower and leaves and stem showing black on a white background, the other with the background shape black and the flower shape white.

The dog, to awaken the child and coax him to walk on, had pulled at his little garments until they were tattered and torn. The parents were rejoiced to recover the child, and the dog vied with them in showing its gratitude at the presidential Dispatch.

DOG GUARDS LITTLE MASTER. A shepherd dog, faithful to death to its master, almost as intelligent as a human in ordinary matters, and more intelligent to scent danger, is petted and almost loved to death by Mr. and Mrs. John Lauber, of Delwin, whose 2 1/2-year-old son wandered away from the home farm near Delwin on Tuesday, and was not found until late in the evening.

The little lad had toddled four miles, and the dog tagged along behind, watching him and guarding him. When the sheriff, who had been summoned to take part in the search, found the little boy he was unconsciously the cold. Over him stood the faithful shepherd dog, lifting up his voice in mournful howls.

Why not make a change, this summer, and use a Beck-Iden Acetylene Lamp?

Victoria Day was spent in London as some scores of similar holidays have been spent before it.
