OUR FOOLISH WISDOM.

Often and often doth he hear, amid The many importunities wherewith we press, Our wants on him, this prayer: 'O God forbid
That we should live beyond our usefulness!'

Meaning the time when no more in the throne,
Of the world's workers we may take our place;
When hand and brain and heart no more are strong,
And when our feet are weary of the race;

When we must see the sowing of the seed, Must look on others as they toil and sweat,
Must see the earnest strife, the noble deed,
'For the world's good, and take no part therein.

Then, one day, through a lesson sadly sweet
Our eyes are opened, and 'tis ours to see How true a guide may be the wisest head,
How true a help the helpless hands may be.

Watching some dear face radiant with the light
From the great light within, at last we catch Glimpses of star-line through the heavy night,
And read life's deeper meanings while we watch.

The larger love, the growing faith that sins
Our hearts, the tenderer touch, all show What lasting helpfulness may still be ours Whose shadows want is ministered unto.

So, till all longings of the soul are met, By the hand's service, till we deem life less Than meet or need, we may not dare to set
A bound or limit to life's usefulness.

Interesting Story.

Miss Bashby.

"The old kitchen is a-going to be torn down," said Keturah, as she placed a plate of buckwheat cakes on the breakfast table.

"The Bee-hive is torn down!" said mother. "Why, Keturah, who told you that?"

"Jones's boy, when he came to borrow the wheel-barrow. He says, says he, 'They're a-going to tear down the old Bee-hive,' and time enough too, says I; it ain't been fit for human creatures to live in this long time."

"Edward," said mother, "have you heard anything of this?"

Father slowly emerged from the depths of his morning paper. "What!
Oh, the old Weatherbee place! Yes, I believe the town has decided that it is unsafe to live in and so better be tore down."

"Poor Miss Bashby!" said mother.
"What will become of her?"

"Poor-house, most likely," answered father, dreamily, again absorbed in the stock list.

The old Weatherbee house, or the Bee-hive, as it was called, stood on a hill just at the outskirts of the village.
A winding lane led up to it from the main street, a lane that in summer was a tangle of blackberry and sweetbrier bushes, with here and there a gnarled oak tree hanging against the old stone wall. People said that it was once a pretty avenue that led up in gradual windings to the fine house on the hill.

But the once fine house was now a dilapidated old building, and only a cart track wound up the hill among the tangle of neglected trees and shrubs.
It was a two-storied, squarish-built house, with huge chimneys, and small diamond-pane windows. A flight of stone steps led up to the front door, and a long L connected the main house with huge barns and out-houses.

But the windows were broken, a part of the main roof had fallen in, and only two roof rooms in the L had been habitable for many years. There, Miss Bashby and her invalid sister, Miss Patience, had lived, dependent for their daily bread on the pittance the two earned by plain sewing and the kindly charity of the neighbors.

Miss Patience, who, Miss Bashby often scornfully declared, "hadn't a bit of Weatherbee in her," received gratefully the assistance of friends, but Miss Bashby could not forget that she was a Weatherbee and accepted what was given to her more as her right than as a gift.

Often, mother sent us children up the long lane to the old house with some little delicacy to tempt the appetite of the invalid. I dreaded, yet was half glad to go. The old house, and the two tall women with their queer, old-time ways, had a strange fascination for me.

As I stood on the worn steps, knocking at the door, and heard the slow creak of old Miss Bashby's echoing down the long passage, I felt like placing my basket on the door-sill, and running away.

"What do you want, child?"

"Please Miss—Miss Weatherbee—mother sent you this."

"Oh!" said Miss Bashby, calmly, as she lifted the snowy napkin, "jolly! It looks nice; I hope it will taste as good as it looks. Tell your mother that the last she sent was a little too strong of lemon; I hope this is better."

Then the soft voice of Miss Patience floated out through the doorway; "Is that you, Sadie Allen? Tell your mother, dear, that we are very thankful for her kindness." Then Miss Bashby shut the door with an emphatic bang, and I knew, as well as if I had heard it that Miss Patience was receiving a lecture, repeated for the five-hundredth time, on her want of pride.

At last, one day, poor Miss Patience, weary of life, slipped out of it quietly, and was laid to sleep with the rest of her grand family in the great Weatherbee tomb.

I have no doubt Miss Bashby sorrowed long and bitterly for her sister, but the tears she shed, if any, were all in secret; and no one ever saw her weep.
An extra bowl of black on the old-fashioned bunnet; a sterner set to the thin lips; a few added crows' feet under the cold gray eyes—that was all.

And now the old house was to be torn down—not fit to live in—but what could be done with your Miss Bashby?
Not many of the neighbors had any sympathy for her, but mother's tender heart was touched. "If she has to go to the poor-house, it will be the death of her," she said.

"O children, don't you think we ought to ask her to spend the winter with us? I can't bear the thought of her going to the poor-house."

"Why, mother Allen!" was the universal exclamation, "how can we?"

"Oh! I don't like her," said Ned, gruffly, "she is horribly proud."

"O, mother!" I said, "do you really think we ought? Isn't there some other way?"

"Never mind," said mother pleasantly; "we will say no more about it.
Perhaps it wouldn't be best. I shall not ask her unless you are willing."

But the next day there were signs of capitulation among us. Strange to say, our big boy, Ned, was the first to surrender.

"See here, mother," he said, "I don't want to be mean. Let her come. I can stand it if the rest can."

Will said quietly, "Poor old thing!
I don't care, if Ned doesn't."

"Then I, too, said, but with a foreboding heart, "We will try and get along some way."

"But there still remained one tower of strength to storm.

When Keturah heard of it she exclaimed, "The Lord love us! Comin' here? Not if I know it! Now, Miss Allen, do be reasonable! I've lived with ye more'n fifteen year—nussed most all the children helped fetch 'em through the whoopin' cough, measles, and crectry, but as for havin' that mean old crecter—"

"Keturah!" said mother, warningly —then the kitchen door was shut, and only the occasional sound of mother's pleading voice and Keturah's angry sniffs came to us from the scene of battle.

When mother came out of the kitchen some half hour later, we knew by the quiet smile on her face, and the subdued rattle of dishes from Keturah's domain, that the latter was vanquished.

So the very next day Miss Bashby came. We gave her the south bedroom, and had an open fire, and a cozy armchair beside it, ready to welcome her, but if an idea that she would show any gratitude had crept into our minds, we were doomed to disappointment.
Hoping she would say that she was pleased with her room, I walked softly to the door, and glanced in. She was standing by the dusty bed, closely examining the sheets and pillow-cases.

"H'm, h'm," I heard her mutter, "cotton, all of 'em; gentilefolks used linen in my day," and then she sighed heavily.

The autumn days went swiftly by, and the cold, snowy days of winter came. Miss Bashby had been with us now two months, and we got on very well. Keturah was the most patient of us all, and won good opinions from my mother. The boys were courteous and respectful, but said very little to Miss Bashby; I think they were half afraid of her. Little Joey tried to keep out of her way altogether, as, the only time when he visited her room, she said she didn't like little boys.
But the gaze of her large round spectacles, and the sharp click of her knitting needles, had a curious fascination for the little man. Often when he was unusually quiet, on hunting him up, he was found just outside Miss Bash-by's open door. Once, on coming to take him away, I heard him ask solemnly, with his brown eyes fixed on her wrinkled face:—

"What makes you look so, Miss Bashby? You is all wizened up! Is your skin too big for you?"

One day in January, a cold, clear, frosty day, there came a letter saying Aunt Mary was very ill.

After a hurried consultation, it was decided that mother should start at once for Brunswick, where Aunt Mary lived, and that father should accompany her. After many hasty directions to Keturah and me, they started to catch the early train. Mother's last words were, "Be kind to Miss Bashby."

For a few days things went on very well. The boys were less unruly than usual. Miss Bashby was quite amiable for her, and Keturah was as sunny as a May morning. But alas! the peace was of short duration.

One morning, in going down the cellar stairs, Keturah slipped and sprained her ankle. It was very painful, and poor Keturah, with many gasps and groans, could do nothing but lie helpless on the kitchen lounge and give directions abt work.

"Keturah, I would question, as with sleeves rolled up and an long apron on, I went resolutely to work, "how much molasses do you put in the ginger-bread?"

"O, Miss Sadie! Miss Sadie!" poor Keturah would groan, "only to think of me a-lyin' here like a dog, and you, such a little spindlin' crecter, a-doin' my work. Oh, dear! Oh, dear!"

"But, Keturah, do tell me how much molasses, or I shall never get the gingerbread done."

"Oh, land! Bring me the jug and I'll measure it for you. Goodness, child, not that two-quart bowl! What are you thinkin' of? It only takes a cupful. To think of Keturah Skinner ever comin' to this pass! and so on during the long day.

Miss Bashby was particularly disagreeable just at this crisis. No wonder she complained of the cooking.
Poor Keturah, lying helpless on the lounge, couldn't see to anything, so the bread was heavy, the pie-crust like dough, and the coffee a very unsettled beverage.

The boys, good fellows, laughed and joked about it; said they had never enjoyed anything so much in their lives. But Miss Bashby—she said nothing, but the gesture of disgust with which she pushed away her plate at table, and gathering her shawl about her, marched majestically to her room and shut the door, was worse than anything we had to bear. Poor Keturah, with her promise to mother fresh in her memory, could only shut her mouth resolutely and groan.

One bright, cold Wednesday afternoon, Keturah, whose foot now allowed her to hobble about a little, was helping to finish the kitchen work, and Miss Bashby was safely shut up in her room, when Will and Ned rushed pell mell into the kitchen, with a loud demand for Joey.

"Just let us take him on the ice a while! We won't keep him long. It is such a splendid day; the ice is as firm as it can be, no danger at all.
Get the little chap ready, that's a good sister, and hurry up about it; we can't wait."

With a questioning look at Keturah, which she answered with an emphatic nod, I hastened to get the little cap and mittens and gray ulster, while the proud owner of those boyish garments danced and pranced and wriggled with delight, till I could scarcely get them, on, and I only had time for a word here!

Old Dr Wilbur is a hitehin' up his team," said Keturah, as she glanced out of the window for a last look at the retreating boys. "I guess some of them poor trash over to Hingham's Corner is took sick again. They always send for Dr Wilbur, 'cause he alrus goes when they send, and he never charges 'em nothin'. Them kind is mighty cute!"

Smiling at Keturah's philosophy, I hastened my work of getting the kitchen tidy.

Presently Miss Bashby made her appearance at the kitchen door.

"Sadie Allen," said she, solemnly, "I'm going to lie down for my afternoon nap. If any of the neighbors should come in and inquire for me, don't disturb me on any account. I can't be broken of my rest." Then she shut the door and walked slowly back to her room.

"Land o' love," said Keturah. "Ef any of the neighbors call! D'd ye ever hear the like of that! 'I'll risk their askin'!"

"Keturah! Keturah!" said I, as gravely as I could, though my lips would twitch in spite of me. "Don't you forget what mother said about—"

"Now, Sadie Allen," retorted my irate help, "you know I wouldn't so much as hurt a spear of her hair, and she ain't got many; but she is most awful aggravatin', that you'll allow."

Yes, I would allow it.

But hark! What was that? Loud shouts, followed by an ominous silence, and then a wild, confused murmur of steps and voice. Keturah and I glazed at each other in dismay. Suddenly the kitchen door opened, and Will, with cap and coat off, with dis-hevelled hair, and face as white as death, staggered into the room and flung himself into a chair, covering his face with his hands.

"Will!" said I, breathlessly.

"Will Allen!" gasped Keturah, rushing to his side and tearing his hands away from his face. "What is it? Tell us, quick!"

"Oh! I groaned the poor boy. "O mother! mother! And you left him in my care! O Joey! Joey!"

"What about Joey? Oh, Will, what has happened to Joey?"

"Drowned!" said Will, desperately.
"Went down through a breathing hole.
They fished him out, but, oh, dear! he's dead. Oh, Joey! Joey! They're bringing him home!"

There was a tramping of feet out side the door, and a crowd of men and boys entered, one among them bearing a dripping, half-frozen burden in his arms.

Was that our Joey?—the little white face set and rigid, the small hands hanging helplessly down, the brown eyes closed, and the long hair, wet and shining, flung back over the dripping clothes.

"Poor little chap!" said the burden-bearer, in a choking voice. "Guess he's done for. Ye see, he went in under so far, and we couldn't"—Here his voice grew husky, and he turned away his face from us.

"Oh!" wailed Keturah. "What shall we do? Somebody run for the doctor —somebody get some thing to give him —somebody"—and she wrung her hands helplessly.

No one moved. The man still held his dripping burden; the crowd waited, awed to silence. I stood like a stone, my head whirling, my senses fast leaving me, when a new actor appeared on the scene.

"What's all this?" said a sharp voice, and Miss Bashby's head was thrust in the door.

She took in the situation instantly.

"Keturah Skinner," she said, in a commanding voice, "take the child and carry him into my room. Sarah Allen,

Our contemporary, the Harvey, N. B. Observer, has just entered on its second year. May it be a prosperous one. Five quires of Fine Writing Paper for only 20c. at Rockwell & Co's. 17 We are pleased to notice that the Trans Canadian is now published semi weekly. We wish the enterprising proprietor success. TAKE NOTICE.—If your razor is dull, take it to J. M. Shaw's Barber Shop, and he will put it in first-class order for the small sum of 15c. 10-4f A large quantity of snow fell on Tuesday last, and unlike the usual March storms lay very evenly, making the sleighing the best it has been this winter. AUCTION.—On Sat., 27th inst, there will be sold at the rectory barn, near Ryard Berden's, Church St., Corn, walis, a horse, wagon, and harness, and a quantity of English hay and straw. Our readers will do well to remember it. Smoke the "TWIN'S," the best first-class cigar in town, at Shaw's Barber Shop. 9-4f In another column appears the adv. of Mr. Johnson Bishop, who has opened up in the store recently occupied by J. L. Brown & Co. As will be seen, Mr. Bishop is confining his stock to Flour, Meal, and Feed, and he will no doubt cut prices fine. Give him a call. If you wish to color your cottons, silk or feathers, use the new Electric Dyes, Strongest and Best in the world. 10 cents at all dealers. ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.—Divine worship on Sunday next at 3 p. m. and 7 p. m. Special sermons will be preached throughout the Lenten season. On Sunday next at 3 p. m. "Sin; and its consequences;" at 7 p. m. "The little sin of temper." All persons are welcome. Lumber, Shingles and Bricks for sale low at S. R. Sleep's. An open meeting of the Acadia Athleteum was held in Academy Hall on Friday evening last. The students of the Academy and Seminary were invited; and also several from the village among whom we had the honor of being numbered. Mr. Balcom, president of the Athleteum, occupied the chair and a fine programme consisting of readings, singing paper on "Wolfville," its future destiny," by Mr. A. E. Shaw, a vocal solo, by Mr. Fletcher; given by the College Glee Club &c., was carried out in a highly creditable manner. At the close Prof. Keirstead took the platform and gave an excellent address on "The development of truth." The singing of the "National Anthem" brought to a close one of the pleasantest evenings we have enjoyed for a long time. Rockwell & Co. are still framing pictures at reduced rates. 4d. Canning. A ledge of the I. O. G. T. was formed here last week by Rev. W. G. Lane with a membership of about 40 members. The order bids fair to be very successful. Last Sabbath evening Rev. Mr. Nicholson, of Windsor, preached in the Methodist church to a good audience on the subject of Temperance. Scher, Milinda is loading potatoes here for the U. S. She is being loaded by the Grangers. Scher, Flora B. is also loading here for U. S.—shippers, W. H. Hardwick and J. B. Dickie. Scher, Glide, Capt. Hunter, cleared for Boston on the 16th March, having on board 3,418 bushels potatoes and 149 bushels tarps.

Gaspereau.

The Gaspereau river has not been frozen over this winter. Such a thing has not been known before within the recollection of the oldest person in the neighborhood. Mr E. A. Davison, trader and Postmaster, cured last autumn over 1 ton of Hams and Bacon, which he disposed of in Halifax at fair prices, selling to one customer 1800 lbs. He is preparing to build a new store next summer near his dwelling on the south side of the river. The timber for the frame has been hauled to Jedrey's mill where it will be sawed as soon as the spring opens. The school-house was raided a few nights ago and two windows removed and taken away. On the following night three half sashes were brought back and placed under Mr Eldredge's carpenter-shop, minus a portion of the glass. Martin's Shingle Mill has been running all winter turning out about 10,000 per day. There is now in the mill yard from two to three hundred cords of wood which is being added to every day. A curiosity in the shape of a carpenter's bit may be seen at Jehial Duncanson's. It was brought from Scotland by his great-grandfather more than 150 years ago, and has been kept as an heirloom in the family ever since. The cutting part is about 3/4 of an inch, and similar to the old style center bit. The stock is nearly as large as the cutting end and some 8 inches in length. The iron stocks placed in a wood handle about 9 inches long and 2 inches in diameter furred with iron at one end, the other reduced squared and tapered, so as to fit a brace. It is quite as large and as heavy as any ordinary full set of modern bits. Colchester Notes. HIGHLAND VILLAGE March 16.—On Monday evening, "Steel Edge" Division, Acadia Mines, celebrated its 6th Anniversary. Rev. J. A. Mosher, G. Chap., presiding. "Iron Age," "Dawn of Light" and "Highland" Divisions participated. The band added much to the effect. Rev. J. Miles has removed to Philadelphia to take charge of a church there. Rev. Mr. Waters, Economy, has also resigned. Bare fields, roads and expectations of spring are in order. A good outlook for the Londenberry Iron Works is reported. The Bay is almost clear of ice. A railroad from Londenberry to Parrboro is to be built (on paper). Considerable hay is being shipped from this vicinity. A large quantity of marsh mud has been hauled this winter and the farmers are in expectations of crops accordingly. The voters list has passed a first reading. DAN'S PREGOITY. ACADIA LODGE ENTERTAINMENT. The Entertainment given by the I. O. G. T. in Witter's Hall on last Saturday evening was in every respect a success. The place was crowded to its utmost capacity and the programme well prepared. The interest of the evening centered on the drama entitled "Down by the sea," and as the rest of the programme was merely auxiliary to this I shall pass it once to it. The cast of characters was well chosen and as the play progressed this was made very evident, their performance comparing very favorably with that of the best amateurs. The following are the dramatic persons: John Gale.....Mr. Morse September Gale (July 1st son) Mr. March March Gale.....C. de do J. Mr. Gates Mr. Raymond.....Mr. J. L. Bishop Captain Dandelion.....Mr. H. Day French Peckler.....Mr. A. E. Shaw Miss Raymond.....Miss Vanlang Miss Gale.....Miss Vanlang Kitty Gale.....Miss Wallace There were several fine scenes and touching bits. One, where Sept Gale enters in the midst of a "storm" and expresses his unweakened love and gratitude for his foster parents, brings out the honest, bluff nature of John Gale, and the kindheartedness of his wife; which she vainly seeks to hide by the vexation apparently caused by the loss of her 'spear'. The manly character of the sailor was indeed well sustained by Morse. He acted his part—yet he did not act. I think this the secret of his success. What he did or said was perfectly natural and just the right thing. His voice and figure, his outspoken and fearless manner betokened the honest fisherman. A little peculiarity in the voice of Miss Buttick added a charm to her acting. How true a character was that impersonated by Miss H. Wallace, and how well she disclosed the passion of a class of her sex—a veritable flit! There was a finish and correct regard for details in her acting which is generally omitted by young actors who imagine when their cue is given their actions begin and should end with their words. On the whole I might say that the chief beauty of the play was in the support given by the several actors and in the absence of posing and more especially automatan movement—which is never to act till you speak. Miss Vanlang, as Miss Raymond, rendered a difficult part creditably. Amateurs do not, as a rule, care to carry out the love scenes as they should be done; and unless well done they are bad failures. But what was lacking in action was beautifully expressed in voice and her well studied part could not have been done better. The contrast between her ease and the impetuosity of Kitty was marked. Next, I would note, March Gale, the troublesome, noisy and hot-headed wail, looking for his 'lad'; Mr. Gates made his part irresistibly ludicrous and carried the attention of the audience even in the most affecting scenes. There is something in good fun that always catches our attention, and a play without this element is but a half one. Mr. Gates made a decided hit, judging from the very frequent rounds of applause that greeted him. Mr. J. L. Bishop, as Raymond, was splendid; and the part in which his astonishment and anger rendered him speechless, would do justice to Irving. He was a perfect old gentleman; rich and diffident. The idea of a boy refusing to acknowledge him as a father was indeed sufficient to merit his saying, "Why—why—! I'll disinherit him!" Sept (Mr. March) I think was the leading character of the play and the most difficult to carry. A manly and noble character, which was better represented by a little deficiency of gesture and motion than it would have been by an overdoing. Better an easy air than an awkward one, and although many will say that Sept was a trifle stiff, yet he pleased the audience too much to be excepted in the awarding of praise. Of Mr. Day as Capt. Dandelion it is sufficient to say that he was all a dude could be, with a nose too delicate for "havid fish." Mr. deBolis represented "Ze Frenchman" well, both in tone and gesture. His make-up was however a few years too young. There is nothing more shocking to an appreciative and sympathetic audience than the guffaws and remarks of shallow-brained youths and men, who in the midst of a party as ignorant as themselves interrupt the actors in their efforts to please—and it is worse when the entertainment is a free one. I regret to say we have too many such—and they are generally stampered by their actions. The music was good—it is always so. Wolfville has talent of various kinds, but there is a sad want of something to develop it properly. We have an orchestra, musicians and young people, who might, by the organization of a proper society, be educated and brought out in a manner beneficial to themselves and interesting to others. Life might be pleasanter and time be made to move along at a pleasant gait and to bear the pleasures now hidden. There is poetry in the lines. "Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, And waste its fragrance on the desert air!" but in its application to the youth of our town is not pleasing. EDUCATION ON THE FARM.

Let me beg young men, whose tastes are at all inclined, to remain upon the farm.

Many young men object to the farm because it is not the place, as they claim, to utilize the benefits of a college education.

We had run into the rear of a freight train which was taking a siding to let us pass.

SHORT OR LONG SERMONS.

There is a great cry now-a-days for short sermons. Few—even Bostonians—would endure the lengthened utterance of a Barrow or a Tillotson.

us of the destitution you had yourself seen, I put the whole contents of my purse into the bag, and now I have come to ask you to dispose of this ten pound note."

A CHRISTMAS OF SORROW.

We were coming up through Missouri on the afternoon before Christmas last year. It was terrible cold and bitter, and the snow lay deep on the tracks.

"He'll have us off the track! That engineer is surely drunk! Some one ought to hunt up the conductor!"

Some one crept into the broken window of the cab to shut off steam, and when he reappeared he had a package with the engineers name on it.

It was God's mercy that every man and woman was not killed outright, but, strangely enough, none of the passengers were even badly bruised.

Some one crept into the broken window of the cab to shut off steam, and when he reappeared he had a package with the engineers name on it.

"Then we accounted for the wild running of the train—for what had before been a mystery. There were the Santa Claus gifts for the dear boy at home—destroying all vision of happiness—shattering in one moment a thousand plans for the future."

PINE WRITING.

Just as peoples of little experience in social life are sometimes dazzled by a lavish display of jewels, so young writers are apt to mistake for fine writing a style in which long words, foreign phrases, and gorgeous figures are used.

"Our flourishing and prosperous young city was last evening the scene of the most disastrous conflagration it has yet witnessed. The devouring element first broke out in the mercantile establishment of Horner & Co., which magnificent edifice it consumed before its progress could be arrested in the slightest degree."

"The dry-woods house of Horner & Co. was burned to the ground last night, the flames having made such headway before the alarm was given that the engine company arrived too late to do more than keep the fire from spreading to other buildings."

"Nothing makes one's dinner pass off more pleasantly than to have nice little dishes which are easily digested. EAGER'S WINE OF RENNET has enabled my cook to put three extra dishes on the table with which I puzzle my friends."—Extract from letter.

Veterinary surgeons all over the country are fiercely denouncing parties who put up extra large packs of worthless trash and sell it for condition powder.
