Poetry.

The Friend of Ages Ago. 'Should old acquaintances be forgot?'

There are several things that trouble one's mind. And work for a man much, such as his gut—and doubt—doubt that will not be.

And things that will not flow. But when all has been said, do we not meet a friend?

Of the many hours that we know, That obligations lay, the woman or man, Who know not 'ages ago?'

In youth—'you were young, and foolish perhaps; You flirted with high and low, Had she loved you in a far-away way, Yet never were wicked, ah, no!'

And the girl that was a far-away way, In a way that was only so,— Just enough to give her the cry about you. 'Oh, I know him ages ago!'

You are married now and quite circumstanced, Your past, like your present, is slow, You tell in a bank, keep silent in church— Are one it is proper to know; But this vigilant friend will never consent To the virtues unthought-of shall go— 'Though she never denigrates, but only says, 'This is the man of ages ago!'

And sure I am that if ever I win To the place where I hope to go— To sit among sages—perhaps the chief! In retirement as white as snow, Before me and busy among the best— Perhaps in the self-same room, I shall find my man, this woman or man, Who know not 'ages ago?'

And shall hear the voice I so oft have heard, Do you think it is sweet and low?— At a distance still with accents shrill, 'The refrain that so well I know: 'Oh, you needn't be setting much store by it, 'This young angel's not much of a show. He may fool some saint who is not acquainted, But I know him 'ages ago!'

—Charles Henry Webb, in Century.

A Heroine.

She was nubile into a room that almost appalled her by its magnificence. She had never seen anything so palatial before. She tried to give some idea of it to her mother, but she returned, but she could not remember half its bewildering contents.

Dr. Lawson did not appear. She seated herself at the study table, writing to herself—'I will write a note. Perhaps it will be better than an interview; surely it will help me. Any one who has such a beautiful place must have immense wealth and will gladly lend the little I ask.'

She wrote the note and then she had returned twice before, then calling the servant gave the note into her charge and departed.

The answer came promptly. With trembling hands Nannie tore open the envelope and read: 'My dear Miss Wilson—The interest of the Antinomian Fund is devoted exclusively to the education of young gentlemen for the ministry. Yours truly, F. A. LAWSON.'

'Poor Nannie! her last hope gone, she was like a flower beaten to the ground by the wind. She gave way to her feelings in a burst of tears while despair filled her heart.'

She told Miss Hardy of her attempt and their failure. Miss Hardy sympathized with her, and advised her to abandon further efforts.

'Depend upon it,' she said, 'when all you need friends they are so hard to find as one needs in a by-street.'

One afternoon soon after this conversation, Nannie left the store and started for home.

A minister once told Wendell Phillips that if his business in life was to save negroes he ought to go South, where they were so few.

'That's worth thinking of,' replied Phillips; 'and what my business in life? To save men from hell, replied the minister. Then go to the attend to your business,' said Mr. Phillips.

How a Child was Saved from a Alligator.

Living on Lake Charles, Apple of Paul Lake, as it is called in a family named Lambert, who reports a very startling experience, says the Los Angeles Evening Express: The family is composed of Mr. and Mrs. Lambert and three children, two boys and a girl, the boys being 8 and 10 respectively, and the girl just one to toddle about. They moved there about two years ago and pre-empted a homestead on the south side of the lake.

The house is built about 200 feet from the lake and on a slight elevation, the land in front sloping down gradually to the water's edge. At the left, off some little distance, is an immense sea grass pond. Near this, Mr. Lambert built an alligator pen for his pet, one of the best in the lake, and up to a month ago he had a magnificent lot of porkers.

One night several weeks ago he heard a tremendous uproar in his hog pen, and, hurrying out with his shotgun and lantern, was just in time to see one of his five hogs disappearing in the lake in the mouth of a huge alligator, while the scores of balls of fire shown glittering in the darkness on the lake showed the presence of others.

From that beginning their intruder kept up with great regularity, and though he killed a dozen or more, yet the pork was too soon for him to relinquish their feeding ground. Lately they have grown so bold as to crawl into the yard in the daytime, and the predatory raids of these marauders on his hogs and fowls have rendered Mr. Lambert's life a burden.

Recent adventures, however, of two members of the family with one of these dreadful creatures has so terrified the farmer and has so alarmed his entire household that he is seriously contemplating abandoning the place. One Saturday afternoon, a short time ago, Mr. Lambert, who was in the back part of the house, was attracted by the screams of his little girl and frantic cries of 'Mamma, mamma!' hurrying to the front of the house, he could not at first find the little one, who, however, but her piercing screams continued, and the almost frantic mother soon discovered the father of her child's dress near the lake shore, the palmetto bushes nearly hiding her from view.

Stacking up an axe from the yard, she flew to the water's edge, and as she rounded the palmetto a slight burst upon her that nearly drove her crazy. On the edge of the bank with its body half in the water was a huge alligator, its jaws protruded, making it seem from the ground, while its tail lashed the water into foam. Just in front of it and clinging to a palmetto root with her hand for aid, was the little girl, her dress being held in the jaws of the alligator, who was slowly dragging the child. The alligator's dull eyes gleamed with anger, his red coils of fire, and when Mrs. Lambert appeared, the monster uttered a hoarse bellow and started back, making her lose the child's slight hold.

The latter's frantic efforts were drawn into an agonized appeal, and as the animal dragged her down she was completely paralyzed with fear—so over-come that she could not utter a cry, and all fear from Mrs. Lambert, and she rushed up and struck the animal on the head with the axe, and the child with her hands, tried to pull her out.

The sharp blade cut into the alligator's eye, and, mad with pain, he started back, and half sprang at the woman. This left the child free, and the both fell backward. Mrs. Lambert said afterwards that at this moment she never expected to save her life. As she fell the alligator swung around his tail with a terrific scowling, but the fortunate fall of the two just placed them outside the deadly sweep.

The alligator retreated as far as it could with untold waddling, and Mrs. Lambert attempted to rise and escape. Her dress caught on a root and before she could get up and free herself the alligator made a snap at her and missed, catching hold of her dress instead. Finding that it had secured something it coveted, he backed towards the water, dragging along the prostrate woman, who fully realized her peril, and filled the air with her cries for help. She frantically clung to the roots as she was dragged over, but her dress was of stout material, and the alligator's strength soon overcame her feeble resistance.

Suddenly with a heavy sinking of the heart, she felt that her foot was in the water, and that, if no help came, she was doomed to a terrible death. The horror gave her strength for the moment, and she made another frantic effort to free herself, but it was in vain, and she bit herself down into the water. Suddenly her hands, which had been clutching at anything and everything that seemed to promise support, passed over the axle handle. With swiftness of thought and with superhuman energy she pulled the handle and scrambled up, and how she cannot say, she managed to deal the monster's heavy blow with the blade.

With rare good fortune it struck his other eye and crashed into the head. The maddest and wildest reptile opened its jaws with a roar of pain and rage, and Mrs. Lambert's dress slipped off its huge teeth. Scrambling up she sat her hand on the floor by a dead palmetto. The alligator, on retreating home at night, found her there unconscious, with the child panting her mother's cheek and trying to arouse her.

Doctors were at once summoned, but at last someone the society of the mother was living over again her heroic fight in the fever of delirium. The next day Mr. Lambert went to the lake, and at the same spot found the old alligator lurking in the woods. As he walked over he heard approaching, he came forth maniacally, and two shots from a 45 caliber Winchester soon placed him in a state of combat. His wounds in his head were deep and showed that the mother's arm had struck him in the eye, and only cost 10 and 25 cents to try it. Simple and large bottles at any drug store. A Life Insurance Romance.

Some ten years ago a German took out in a Boston company, a life insurance policy for $5,000 for the benefit of a girl to whom he was engaged. The father afterwards died and married another woman, when the policy, by the consent of all concerned, was transferred to a second sister, who agreed to make good to the young man the loss of affection he had sustained by the faithlessness of his betrothed. The second sister, however, proved as false as the first, and she, in turn, wedded somebody else, passing the policy, and with him the policy, over to a third sister. By this time, however, the German had begun to be a little wary, and he had inserted in the new policy the proviso that this third sister should marry him. In case she did not do so the $5,000 should go to his brother. In due time the third sister, who was considerably his junior, took her turn at jilting the ill-starred German, whose dilatory fashion of proceeding towards matrimony may have had something to do with the small favor he found in the eyes of these capricious damsels. Thereupon the German, seemingly convinced that life insurance was unprofitable, ceased paying the premiums. His brother, however, to whom he confided the matter in the matter to make it worth his while, stepped in and satisfied the company, so that when the first day dropped dead of heart disease—an ending, it may be remarked in passing, singularly appropriate under the circumstances—the policy was still good. The youngest sister, influenced 'unconsciously' by purely sentimental reasons, with singular promptitude and engagement, immediately broke her second betrothal, and betrothed herself to the recipient of the $5,000, which the company as she paid over. Meanwhile, however, the husband of the first sister had died, and between two days she scattered the man and married him without giving any word of her intention. Last of all, the newly-made husband managed to get himself drowned while on his wedding trip, and the two-widowed ladies thus came into the enjoyment of the proceeds of the policy which had been drawn for her benefit in the first place. This can hardly be called poetic justice, but as a singular instance of the workings of the willful of time, and as a curious illustration of the fantastic complications arising from engagements, it is not without interest. It is to be reflected, however, that the original German got for his money nothing but engagements, and perhaps, three thorough-going cons to count about as many as one marriage.—Arts Notes in Providence Journal.

Kearney Milk Swear.—Milk as it comes from the cow is at the temperature of the animal's body—namely, from 90 to 95 degs. Fahr. When rapidly cooled down to 88 degs., or thereabouts, it keeps much better than when allowed to cool slowly. Why this is so has never been very satisfactorily explained. The fact, however, is established—namely, that the fact remains—but recent investigations seem to substantiate the explanation sometimes given that sudden cooling destroys the infusoria or vital organisms, which are the prime cause of decomposition. The refrigerator, therefore, should be used not only to keep the temperature of the milk low, but also to rapidly lower by setting the milk-can in a constant stream of running water, or in a bath of iced water. If it is to keep the milk longer than twenty-four hours, its natural sweetness may be preserved by heating it up to 65 degs. Fahr. and then allowing it to cool slowly. The air is expelled by this means, and the curd, which under the influence acts as a disturbing of the milk, loses for a time its power of being a chemical agent. Indeed repeated heating of milk nearly to the boiling point, at intervals of twenty-four hours, will keep it sweet for several days.
