House of Commons Debates

SECOND SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 20, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 214, respecting the Hudson Bay Insurance Company.—Mr. Knowles.

Bill No. 215, to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Mackenzie.—Mr. Proulx.

Bill No. 216, to incorporate the Ruthenian Greek Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Canada.—Mr. Macdonald.

Bill No. 217, to incorporate the Canadian Northwestern Railway Company.—Mr. McKay.

Bill No. 218, respecting the Empire Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Bradbury.

Bill No. 219, respecting the Casualty Company of Canada.—Sir Edmund Osler.

Bill No. 220, to enable the city of Winnipeg to get water outside the province of Manitoba.—Mr. Bradbury.

Bill No. 221, to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.—Mr. Nantel.

Bill No. 222, to amend the Adulteration Act.—Mr. Nantel.

Bill No. 223, to vest in the Van Buren Bridge Company the charter rights of the Restigouche and Western Railway Company to construct and maintain a railway bridge across the Saint John river.—Mr. Carvell.

WINNIPEG WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. BRADBURY: By permission of the House, I move that Bill No. 220, to enable the city of Winnipeg to get water outside the province of Manitoba, be now read a second time. The matter is very urgent, and it is desirable that operations be proceeded with immediately.

Mr. SPEAKER: This can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BRADBURY: I ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Consideration in committee of Bill No. 36, respecting Banks and Banking—Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance)—resumed from May 16. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 43—transfer and transmission of shares:

Mr. WHITE: This is the section which was under discussion at the instance of my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell). It provides that a person making a transfer of bank shares must leave enough to discharge his debts to the bank. I explained to the committee on Friday when this matter was under discussion in the Banking and Commerce Committee and that, after hearing the evidence on this point, the committee came to the conclusion that this legislation was in favour of the shareholders rather than of the banks themselves. Under the Bank Act, a bank is not permitted to loan upon the security of its own stock or of the stock of any other bank. But it is often found very convenient for shareholders to be able to obtain an advance from the bank which they would not otherwise be able to obtain really upon the security of their own shares under the authority of this legislation. In times of money stringency it is of very considerable advantage to shareholders, because the only alternative would be to sell the shares or to obtain a loan elsewhere, and at such a time a loan might be difficult to obtain. The committee, after hearing the evidence from bankers and others, I think, very generally came to the conclusion that the section should be allowed to stand as in the existing Bank Act. I said on Friday that it did appear at first blush that the exceptions taken by my hon. friend from Carleton were justified and that this was an anomaly not found in legislation affecting joint-stock companies, and so was a special privilege to the banks. But I think the burden of the evidence went to show that the legislation was in favour of the shareholders and not of the banks.

Mr. CARVELL: Was there any evidence on this point before the Banking and Commerce Committee except from the bankers themselves?

Mr. WHITE: I think it was all from the bankers, but I think they showed to the satisfaction of the committee that this legislation was in favour of the shareholders and I think it was not shown that there had been any abuse of it. Bank shares being what are known as 'book' shares, that is, transferable only on the books of the bank, the shareholder who obtains a loan from the bank would not be able to hypothecate his stock to obtain another loan outside without actually making the transfer into the name of the lender upon the books of the bank, nor to sell without giving a power of attorney to transfer into the name of the purchaser. So, I think the legislation is not liable to abuse, and cases of abuse have not been brought to my attention.

Mr. CARVELL: I have no strong feeling in this matter, nor have I any particular interest, for I do not own bank stock and I do not suppose I ever shall. I do not know to what extent the banks use this power. But everybody knows that bank stock is considered good security, and it seems unreasonable that the value of it should be reduced by a clause which allows a bank to have a first lien upon it for a debt which the owner might owe to the bank. I have never even heard of a case in which this right was abused except one, in which there was danger of loss to the bank lending on its shares. It may be a great advantage to the holder of bank stock to be able to borrow without giving security. It is a sort of underhand transaction, but the minister meets it so fairly that I cannot but admire his honesty, and I suppose the banks put it as fairly before the committee. As I say, I have no strong feeling upon the subject, and if the committee think it well to allow this clause to stand, I have no fault to find.

Mr. AMES: Before the Banking and Commerce Committee the evidence was given by four or five bankers each of whom stated that this right had not been abused. One said that he had never heard of a case, and another said that in an experience of forty years he had known of but one case. The bankers seemed to assume a rather indifferent attitude as to the retention of this clause. It is not for them it was put in, but really for the sake of the shareholders. The shareholders of a bank number, quite commonly, three, four or five thousand people scattered throughout the country. It is a great convenience to these shareholders to be able to negotiate small loans with the bank without collateral security. It tends to popularize bank shares, which is a good thing for the country, because we find it difficult to secure banking capital enough for Canada's commercial expansion. This is an attraction in bank shares which offsets to a certain extent the disadvantage of the double liability. I know how the shareholder feels in this matter, because I come into constant contact with them. I know it is a great convenience to a shareholder to be able to go to the bank and borrow to cover an overdraft without giving collateral security which he has to endorse over to and leave with the bank.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it not a fact that every bank disaster that has taken place has been caused by shareholders securing too great a share of the funds of the bank? Would it not greatly secure the deposits placed in our banks if shareholders were absolutely debarred from borrowing money from the banks in which they hold shares?

Mr. AMES: That would certainly be a drastic measure. No more effective way could be taken to make the securing of shareholders an absolute impossibility.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not exactly understand the whole of this subsection. This part of it is clear:

> Unless the person making the transfer has, if required by the bank, previously discharged all his debts or liabilities to the bank——

But what is the meaning of the rest of the clause?

> —which exceed in amount the remaining stock, if any, belonging to such person, valued at the then current rate.

I think it should be stated without qualification that no person should be allowed to transfer stock unless he has discharged the full amount of his liability to the bank.

Mr. WHITE: Section 77, which is connected with this particular matter, reads in part as follows:

> The bank shall have a privileged lien, for any debt or liability to the bank, on the shares of its own capital stock, and on any unpaid dividends of the debtor or person liable, and may decline to allow any transfer of the shares of such debtor or person until the debt is paid.

Sub-section b of section 43, to which my hon. friend has referred, says that no transfer of the shares of the capital stock of the bank shall be valid unless:

> The person making the transfer has, if required by the bank, previously discharged all his debts or liabilities to the bank which exceed in amount the remaining stock, if any, belonging to such person, valued at the then current rate.

If a stockholder has fifty shares and desires to transfer twenty-five, before he can make that transfer he must previously have discharged all his indebtedness or liabilities to the bank, which exceed in amount the remaining stock, namely twenty-five shares. The theory is that the bank should be entitled to retain a lien upon sufficient stock to cover the liability of the shareholder to the bank.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It is not unfair to the shareholder, when he desires to transfer his stock, to be told without qualification or restriction: You must discharge all your liability to the bank; but some complications may arise if you allow the clause to remain as it is.

Mr. WHITE: No change has been made in this particular clause, and I think it will work out in the future, as it has done in the past, satisfactorily. It simply puts the bank in a position to say: You owe us $5,000; you propose to transfer all your shares, and we object to that. We will allow you to transfer a number of your shares, but you must allow a sufficient number to remain in your name to give us a continuing lien to cover the amount of your indebtedness.

Mr. OLIVER: I asked the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) a moment ago if it was not a fact that in all cases the wrecking of banks has been caused by the borrowing of money from the banks by the shareholders?

Mr. AMES: By no means.

Mr. OLIVER: Have not a large majority of the wrecks occurred as a result of that condition?

Mr. AMES: No.

Mr. OLIVER: Have any bank wrecks occurred for that reason?

Mr. AMES: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 146—managers or agents engaging in insurance business:

Mr. TURGEON: I have had several letters from managers of banks in the small country towns in northern New Brunswick, who claim that they should be allowed to retain the privilege of engaging in insurance business. I believe that as a rule a great deal of the insurance business in our small towns has been carried on by the bank managers, as our merchants have not the time to devote to it. A single individual cannot carry on the business with any reasonable degree of profit, and it naturally falls into the hands of the bank managers, who have time to devote to the business. I would move, therefore, that section 146 be amended by striking out sub-section 2 thereof.

Mr. OLIVER: I would make the suggestion that the banks pay their managers a sufficient salary, so that they will not require to engage in other business.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): When this clause was under discussion in the Banking and Commerce Committee, the amendment offered by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was flung rather hurriedly upon the committee; it was not discussed for a very great length of time, and the bankers and bank representatives did not oppose it very strongly. It struck me during the discussion that, while the banks were very jealous of all their rights, when it came to small managers in small districts, they were willing to let them suffer. I am free to confess that I voted for the amendment embodied in sub-section 2, but upon reconsideration of the matter I think it would not be in the best interests of the bank managers who are drawing small salaries in some of the outlying districts. I do not know that any persons in my constituency would be affected by its application, but I have had a number of communications from men outside of my constituency in reference to the matter. One of them is to the effect that one of the bank managers has built up an insurance business that means more to him than his salary as manager. Although he has been with the bank for twenty-two or twenty-three years, he would under the operation of the Act, and because the insurance is the best portion of his business, have to give up his managership, sacrifice his right to the pension fund, and continue the insurance portion of his occupation. This letter, which is dated May 13, 1913, says in part:

> Banks like the little Western, which could not pay big salaries, let their agents act as agents for insurance, and some of them have built up very substantial offices. One of them writes me that he will have to give up the bank, as the insurance is the best end, and that means a loss of salary and 28 years' service with the institution and the pensions that go with it.

I think it is a fact that there are very few bank managers throughout the country who are engaged in the insurance business, but it seems to me it would be a great hardship to deprive them of the opportunity of adding to their incomes in this regard. I think some good results would be obtained if the banks wrote to their managers at the local centres and asked them for a report with regard to the insurance business they were carrying on. The Finance Minister might ask the bank to make a special report in connection with the matter, with a view to rectifying any abuse which may exist. Upon reconsideration, I am disposed to support the motion to strike out this clause.

Mr. WHITE: Personally, I think the principle underlying this legislation is sound, although I believe it is drastic, having regard to the conditions which exist, and to which I shall refer a little later on. The complaints that have been made are, in substance, this: A bank manager is the trustee of the bank's funds, having under his control the making of loans to customers. Of course that puts him in a position to compel a customer to effect insurance in the company with which he is connected, and that constitutes a very valuable franchise in his hands. If he were loaning his own money as a private banker, I think it would be proper for him to say: Now I will make you a loan, but only on the condition that you place your insurance with the company which I represent. But he is not in that position. He is in the position of loaning the funds of a bank. In other words, he is a trustee or agent. Now, some of the banks have absolutely prohibited their managers from engaging in the collateral business of insurance, and as I have said, I think that is a sound policy for the banks to adopt.

Mr. CARVELL: Can the minister give me the name of any bank which is doing that?

Mr. WHITE: According to the evidence given in the committee, the Bank of Commerce has prohibited its managers from engaging in any kind of insurance business. I think that the banks of this country, making the money they do, might very well afford to put their bank managers in such a financial position by the salaries paid to them that it would not be necessary for them to engage in the business of insurance. The principle that underlies this subsection is, in my opinion, a sound one. In addition to what has been mentioned by my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), there is the further consideration that, in some districts in the West, the bank manager, as insurance agent, serves a very useful purpose to the community, because there is no one else engaged in the business within easy distance. Having regard to the fact that these branches have existed for many years, and that vested rights so to speak, although that is not a particularly happy expression, have been acquired in agencies of insurance by many bank managers; having regard also to the amount of revenue which such an agency yields them, and to the other consequence which, as mentioned by the hon. member for North Ontario, would flow from this legislation, I am of the opinion that this clause should be struck out of the Act. If we were commencing anew, that is to say, if there were no bank managers actually engaged in the business of insurance, I think this would be desirable legislation, but I have had representations made to me that it is going to work hardship. I would therefore suggest that the clause be struck out, and I will take up the matter with the Bankers' Association, and, so far as the future is concerned, see if they cannot adopt the policy, now adopted by some banks, of prohibiting their managers from engaging in fire or other insurance. That conclusion I have reached in view of the representations that have reached me from the outside, and from many hon. members of this House.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like to give my view of the conditions in the West. However enterprising the banks have been in establishing branches in small places, I have not seen yet a place, having a bank branch where there was not somebody prepared to do insurance business outside of the bank. The insurance agent is just as pushing in the matter of business as a bank, perhaps a little more so, as he has not to carry so much baggage.

Mr. CARVELL: Before this clause is voted out of existence, I should like to say a little more about it. It seems to me that the very fact that such pressure has been brought to bear upon the Minister of Finance, and evidently upon other members of the House, for I see that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) has fallen under this evil influence as well as the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), indicates that the system must be more prevalent than hon. members thought it was. I have been somewhat surprised at the correspondence I have received since the matter went through the committee. I am bound to say that my correspondence has been all on the other side; it has been congratulatory. I have had letters from the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, congratulating me on the stand I have taken, and the only fault found with me in the letters is that I did not go far enough. One gentleman in the western portion of Ontario claims that a bank manager should be prohibited from going into the business of real estate. Another man writes to me that there is a bank in his town in which it is almost impossible to do business, because the manager is in the bank office all the time putting through real estate transactions, or something of that kind. In my own county, so far as I know, no bank has ever interfered with the insurance business, but I do know of a place in New Brunswick where the thing has almost reached a scandal, that is about the mildest word with which I can characterize it. I know of cases where bank managers, who are insurance agents, are compelling people to insure for more than their properties are worth, or for more than it is necessary to carry under reasonable conditions. There is one estate, for which I am the solicitor, a lumber business, that has been insured almost out of existence, simply because the estate is unfortunate enough to owe the bank, and the bank manager runs the insurance end of it. It is a case of policy after policy without our consent or advice; we do not know anything about it, and we are paying thousands of dollars a year on insurance. That is a condition of affairs of which I know something. I do not want to take the bread out of any man's mouth; I would be the last man in the world to interfere with any man's legitimate business. I quite agree with what has been said by the Minister of Finance, it might be a hardship in many cases. But surely the great banking institutions of this country can afford to pay their managers a sufficient salary on which to live without taking away the legitimate business of other people, because every bank manager doing insurance business is taking away business from other men. It is just as necessary to have an insurance agent in the town as it is to have a bank; we cannot get along without insurance, and I think the legitimate insurance business should be encouraged, not only by everybody throughout the country but by Parliament as well. Our ordinary business intelligence teaches us that the bank manager carrying on insurance business has an enormous advantage over the other insurance agents in the town. I do not say that many of them carry it on to such an extent, but they can practically control the insurance business in the town, and force it into their own hands. Three or four banks acting as insurance agents in one town could absolutely corral all the insurance business of that town. However, I have not much feeling in regard to this matter, and I do not care personally whether the clause is stricken out or not. The matter was put up to me by the people from different provinces, and I thought it my duty to bring it before the committee, because it seemed to me a reasonable proposition. It was so reasonable, that only three or four members of the committee voted against it, and the Minister of Finance was the strongest advocate of the amended clause. I see that the bank managers have been getting busy since.

Mr. OLIVER: They have got their second wind.

Mr. CARVELL: Evidently they have been getting busy all round. They have not confined themselves to the Minister of Finance, they have been directing their energies to this side of the House as well as to the other. I will not feel it very badly if the proposed legislation is defeated, but I think it should not be defeated, because I think it is right in principle. I believe those bank managers should not be allowed to do insurance business, because they are taking away the business from other people who are entitled to it, and in several cases they are in a position to exercise an undue influence on the business affairs of the community. So far as I am concerned, I will vote for the retention of the sub-section.

Mr. NICKLE: When the hon. member for Carleton introduced this amendment in the committee, I was particularly struck with the logic of his argument, and though I had no previous conviction in regard to the matter, the tendency I had, after the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., had spoken, was accentuated on my hearing the argument of the Minister of Finance in favour of the insertion of this clause in the Bill. If, as the Minister of Finance says, the principle of this sub-section is right, I fail to see why we should hesitate to interfere with a so-called vested interest. If this committee and this House are going to take the stand that wherever a vested interest is affected, no matter what unfortunate situation might exist, we shall not pass any legislation at all, I think that Parliament might as well abrogate its functions. If I understand the functions of this House and of this committee, they are to remove an error if an error exists, and for that reason I am with the hon. member for Carleton in the opinion that this clause, inserted almost unanimously in the committee, should be retained.

Mr. OLIVER: The matter resolves itself into something like this, that the banks of Canada are able to relieve themselves of a portion of the proper charges of carrying on their business by the privilege given to their managers of entering into a side business. If the managers are prevented from doing outside business such as insurance, the banks will surely have to raise the salaries of those bank managers. There is no reason why the banking institutions of Canada should not pay a living wage to the men who are carrying on their business. This privilege relieves them of that responsibility, and I do not think the purpose of Parliament is fulfilled by that course.

Mr. WARNOCK: Now that so much attention has been drawn to this matter, I think that the banks themselves should take steps to stop the practice, because, undoubtedly, it is injurious to the business of the bank. I know many cases in the West where bank managers are interested in insurance business and I have often heard depositors and business men dealing with the bank say that if there were a competing bank they would transfer their business, because they were pestered by the bank managers asking them to withdraw their business from other insurance companies and to do business with the companies which they represented.

Mr. BORDEN: I think that in recent years there has been a distinct change in policy on the part of banks in regard to such matters. My earliest recollection of the business of banking in Nova Scotia is of a time when men did not devote their whole attention to the business of carrying on a branch or such agency of a bank. I can remember when a very prominent firm of solicitors in the western part of Nova Scotia were agents or managers of the Bank of Nova Scotia. They carried on their business as solicitors, and also managed an agency of the bank. If I am not mistaken, a very prominent firm of merchants in the county of Pictou also acted as managers for one of the banks. The policy of the banks in later years has been to do away with that system, and to have managers who entirely confine themselves to the actual duties of carrying on the banking business. Although that may not be so in all cases, it seems to me to be a matter for regulation by the banks themselves. The principle to which the Minister of Finance has alluded may be a very proper principle, and I do not dispute it. But if you are going to regulate matters of this kind, it seems to me you should go further and prescribe the regulation of the duties of the manager of a bank in other matters than in respect to this particular business. Why should we set out in the Statutes of Canada that a bank manager shall not carry on a particular business so long as he is a bank manager, and leave it absolutely open to him to carry on every other kind of business? We ought to do either the one thing or the other; we should say he shall not carry on any other business, or leave it entirely to the regulation of the banks themselves. It seems to me that it would be perfectly safe to leave a matter of that kind to the regulation of the banks, because if we undertook to regulate the administration of a bank in respect to one matter, the result would necessarily be that we must undertake to regulate it in a great many other respects.

Mr. OLIVER: I think perhaps that the parallel my right hon. friend suggests is hardly exact. There is a relationship between the proper business of a bank, assuming it to be the loaning of money, and insurance, both life and fire, which possibly does not exist between the loaning of money and any other line of business. It is because the two work together so naturally and so conveniently that so many bank managers have gone into the insurance business. It is because they so naturally fall together that objections are raised to the condition, not only by men who are competing in that line of business, but also by the customers of the banks, who think, perhaps, they are not getting a square deal in the matter of their banking business by reason of the pressure exercised upon them in respect to insurance.

Mr. WHITE: As I stated before, the principle underlying this clause is sound, but I think that legislators generally when introducing new legislation have regard to existing conditions and try, as far as possible, not to do any damage to those who, under preceding legislation, have built up their business. As I have stated, I think that the banks of Canada should pay their bank managers a sufficient salary to make it unnecessary for them to engage in any side line. At the same time it has been impressed upon me that to put through this legislation, in this particular shape, and at this particular time, would have a very serious effect upon a number of people. I think, therefore, that as the practice has been recognized by existing legislation, it would serve the purpose the committee had in view if I took the matter up with the different banks, or with the Bankers' Association, and stated to them that there was a general opinion in Parliament, and in the committee, that these insurance agencies were greatly to the disadvantage of other citizens of Canada, that it gave to the bank manager an advantage over them in obtaining business, and that it was a practice which should be stopped, at all events so far as the future is concerned. I thought, and I still think, that the banks should change their policy, and instruct their managers that in the future they are not to do business of this kind, and try to bring about a discontinuance of the practice within a reasonable time. That, it seems to me, would have this advantage, through the action of the banks, it would ultimately bring about, what I take to be the desire of Parliament and of the committee in this matter, and at the same time have a reasonable regard for existing interests. In other words, we should do the minimum of damage, and at the same time accomplish within a reasonable time what we have in view.

Mr. OLIVER: I would agree with my hon. friend in the desirability of not interfering with vested interests.

No person wishes to do damage in dealing with this matter. What is wanted, I understand, is to do good. My hon. friend's proposition is a fair one. It is good as far as it goes, but let me point out that we are now providing legislation on the principle that it shall not be interfered with for ten years. We are passing legislation, and while Parliament, of course, will have the right to interfere with it, it is generally understood that it is for the good of business that, having once settled upon the provisions of the Bill governing the operations of banking, that legislation shall stand for ten years. It does not have to stand for ten years and Parliament can deal with the question whenever it wants to. Will my hon. friend agree to this proposition? When he discusses this matter with the banking interests, if they are unable or unwilling to come to the view which he has expressed and which he believes is in the mind of Parliament, might we expect then that at a later date, without waiting for the expiration of the ten years' term, he would be willing to make legislative provision for compelling the banks to do what they should do without being compelled and which we are very glad to leave to them to do so long as they do not need to be compelled to do it?

Mr. WHITE: That strikes me as a fair proposition. After I talk it over, as I intend to do, with the bankers, if they fail to carry out that policy, I think it would be very proper for me to introduce legislation which would compel its adoption.

Mr. DOUGLAS: There is one point that has not been mentioned and it is the fact that a man who borrows money from a bank, usually a business man, has to deposit his insurance policy with the bank manager. This gives the bank manager an undue knowledge of where this man is placing his insurance business. It gives the bank manager an advantage that he should not have because he is placed in a position to bring pressure upon that man to place his insurance with the companies represented by the bank manager. This is rather a serious question to a man who is borrowing money and depending on the good will of the bank manager to get that money. Therefore, this clause should remain in the Bank Act. Any reputable bank prohibits is employees from soliciting for insurance, dealing in real estate, or engaging in other speculative transactions, and if a bank is not sufficiently alive to its interests to force its managers to keep out of business that interferes with the business of its customers then Parliament should enact legislation compelling it to do so.

Amendment (Mr. Turgeon) agreed to: yeas, 41; nays, 17.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 56—shareholders audit; selection of persons competent to be auditors:

Mr. OLIVER: I assume from the fact that no amendment has, up to the moment, been offered to this section, that the Banking and Commerce Committee decided that it was satisfied with a shareholders audit rather than an audit on Government responsibility.

Mr. WHITE: Yes, I believe that was so. Very full evidence was taken on that before the committee and I think it was shown that inspection by the government would be practically impossible in the case of a banking system such as Canada has with three thousand branches scattered over the continent and in various parts of the world unless that inspection were carried out as thoroughly in regard to all the offices of the several banks as the system in vogue and operation by the banks themselves. The main question then as to audit was how to qualify the auditor if he was appointed by the shareholders. My hon. friend will recollect that when the matter was in the House, and he will have observed also that when it was before the committee, it was pointed out that the directors might control the appointment of an auditor and that consequently his audit might not be thorough, especially if he fell under any evil influence from the board of directors or from the management. It was pointed out in evidence, I think by Mr. Clarkson, who was the liquidator of the Farmers' Bank, that if we could be sure that the auditor was a man of high standing and integrity it would not make very much difference by whom he was appointed. In view of the evidence, especially of Mr. McLeod, late general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, who has given a very great deal of attention to this question and who was the first bank manager in Canada to introduce a system of audit, the conclusion was reached, fairly unanimously by this committee, that if the general managers of the several chartered banks in Canada acted together and by ballot, so as to remove them from the possibility of influence on the part of the association as an association, the result would be the selection of a list of auditors from whom the shareholders might choose with a certainty of getting reputable and trustworthy men. There is an amendment of a minor character suggested by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) for the purpose of particularizing the duties of the auditor.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): Can an auditor be appointed year after year, as long as the bank so desires? It seems to me it would be desirable to restrict his time as auditor to a term of years. Under this clause is the auditor restricted to auditing once a year at specified times, or may he go into a bank at any time? During his investigation or audit, if he discovers any violation of the Act or any fraud, is it his duty to report to the Minister of Finance and the shareholders at once?

Mr. WHITE: It was thought inadvisable to limit the appointment of an auditor to a definite term of years because a man doing his duty faithfully for four or five years might find himself minus his position as auditor at the end of that time as some of the other banks might not select him. I have never known of any legislation that has gone the length of saying that an auditor should be appointed for only a limited time. The check is that in the event of any complaint as to the auditor, the shareholders need not appoint him, and in the second place the minister may disapprove of the appointment of an auditor at any time as to particular banks. What I had in view in that was, that a man who had been many years an official of a particular bank might be an excellent auditor, but I should not like to see him appointed for that bank, although he might be an excellent auditor for any other bank. This audit clause has been drafted having regard to the provisions of the English Act and to the decisions of the English courts as to the duty of an auditor, and I am inclined to think it is as full as it can be made, if the principle of audit is adopted.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not wish to offer any amendment to the clause at the moment. The Banking Committee has had the matter under full consideration and I am willing to leave the responsibility there. I am not sufficiently familiar with banking matters to offer any amendment or even any serious objection, but it appears to me that the result of this provision as it is, while it may have some value and it may be the best way of getting at the conditions, yet, I see in this section, as in other sections of the Bill, an abdication of that right to control by the people through their Government that I think is absolutely necessary for the well-being of the state. I have nothing whatever to say against the principle of the banking law, but there is no doubt that our banking interests to-day have become a great power in the state. They have arrived at such a pitch of power that it seems to me it is necessary that the supremacy of the state, that the propriety of control by the state, that the authority of the state, should be asserted in this Act. The passing of the Act is an assertion of that authority, but the provisions of the Act one after the other as I read them are an abdication of that authority, so far as it can be abdicated. That is the criticism I desire to make. I am not in a position to make any suggestion contrary to the provision that is contained in this clause. But it seems to me that the matter of ensuring that the money of the people to the amount of over a billion dollars is being properly handled is a responsibility that, in the nature of things, should rest upon the government of the country. To abdicate that responsibility to any authority, and especially to that authority which has a private rather than a public interest in the matter, is not, on the face of it, such legislation as in these days we should look for. There have arisen in the commercial life of the world new conditions which require to be dealt with. There is legislation required to-day; there is assertion of public control or governmental authority required to-day that was not required in years gone by. I am sorry that in this revision of the Bank Act, which is supposed to stand for ten years, there is not that progress towards that assertion of control by the public through the Government, which I think would be for the good of the state, and which I do not think would be bad for commercial or financial interests immediately concerned in this Bill.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has hardly had his attention directed to certain sections of the Bill, or he would not say that substantial progress had not been made towards safeguarding, so far as legislative enactments can safeguard, the interests of depositors and others doing business with the chartered banks of Canada. Without going into the merits or demerits of inspection, I desire simply to say that this legislation is in advance of any legislation in the Empire to-day, so far as restriction upon the operation of banks is concerned. I wish to say again, what I said in this House and in the committee, that in the last analysis, no matter what legislative enactments you may have, the safety of the public will depend upon the integrity and ability of the men who administer the banks. Unless the Government actually takes over the business of the banks, so that it would be responsible for the making of the loans, it will not be in a position to guarantee the public that a bank is absolutely safe, because the question of whether loans are good or bad must depend upon the judgment of the directors and the managers of banks, and because, whether there will be fraud or not will depend in large measure on the integrity of the management. We have sought to embody in our legislation this principle that the Government should, to the best of its ability, safeguard the interests of the depositors by providing for external audit or inspection of banks by auditors occupying an independent position, not officials of the banks appointed by the proprietors for the shareholders. We have gone further than that. Not only have we made audit compulsory; but we have provided that, in the event of shareholders representing one-third of the paid-up capital of a bank informing the minister that they are dissatisfied with an appointment made by a majority of the shareholders at an annual meeting, they:

May make application to the minister to have the person or persons so appointed superseded, and the minister may, after such inquiry as he may deem necessary, select an auditor or auditors instead of the auditor or auditors appointed at the annual general meeting, and the auditors so appointed shall thereupon cease to be the auditors of the bank

In addition to that, we have provided that the auditors shall be selected by the men who are probably most interested in the safe and honourable conduct of banks in Canada, namely: the general managers of all the banks acting jointly. In addition to that, section 56-A, which is a very important one, and which goes a very long distance along the lines which my hon. friend has in view, says :

The minister may direct and require any auditor appointed under the next preceding section of this Act, or any other auditor whom he may select, to examine and inquire specially into any of the affairs or business of the bank, and the auditor so appointed or selected, as the case may be, shall, at the conclusion of his examination and inquiry, report fully to the minister the results thereof.

That means that, upon the minister receiving notice that the business of a bank is being conducted improperly, he can ask the auditor appointed by the shareholders to make an investigation into the affairs of the bank and report to him. The reason why I introduced that clause was because it was brought to my attention that under the present Act, if a Minister of Finance had notice as to an irregularity in a bank, he was powerless to make any inquiry with regard to it. In 1891, an attempt was made to introduce an external audit; and, in response to the remonstrance of members on both sides of the House, it was dropped as being unfeasible. My predecessor thought it would be impracticable to introduce audit or inspection. When my hon. friend recalls these facts, he will agree that we have made very substantial progress. We all recognize that the banking organization of Canada is probably as important an organization as exists. We want to be fair to that organization and to the public, to safeguard its interests in every possible way. I think we have made a long step forward in that direction. More may be done in the future; but, for the present, the committee almost unanimously have reached the conclusion that this legislation is as advanced as it can be at the present time, having regard to the distribution of the branches and offices of Canadian banks throughout this Dominion and other parts of the world.

Section agreed to.

On section 76—business and powers of bank:

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): The other day I suggested an amendment which I should like to discuss shortly. This is an amendment to section 76, sub-section 2, to which it is proposed to add as follows:

(d) Lend money or make advances in excess of ten per cent of its paid-up capital to any one foreign person, company, or corporation or upon the securities of any such foreign person, company or corporation.

In the immortal words of the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) I think that the people of this country think that there is not enough money to go round. Therefore, without absolutely prohibiting the banks from lending money to foreign corporations, I think there should be some reasonable restriction upon the sending out of money that is needed in Canada to be loaned abroad. I have here a letter from a Winnipeg business man, which says:

We had a line of credit with this bank, personally and as a firm of $40,000. They have asked us to pay back all the money advanced to us on loan, which we were compelled to do, and have done. It appears to us that they are hard up themselves, and have no money to loan to their customers, and that they are making all who can, pay up, and only carry the parties who cannot pay.

He goes on:

We think that before the bill finally passes it might be well to call the attention of the House to a few facts in connection with the way that the banks treat the people. When times are good and people can get along without the money, they are anxious to loan. When people really require the money in order to carry on their business then they refuse to loan. Further, the custom of the banks generally is to extend large credits to railway corporations and large manufacturing and mercantile interests, and to do little or nothing for the farmer and the smaller business man and merchant. In fact, at the present time, it appears to be a fact that the former class have absorbed all the available funds of the banks, and there is nothing left for the little fellow at all. These large railroad corporations and other large concerns are all depending upon the farmer, and without the success of the farmer there would be no need of either the large railroad corporations or the large manufacturing concerns.

He goes on to discuss the difficulty which the small ordinary business man has in getting funds. I think this evil in part at least arises from the tendency of the banks to lend money to foreign individuals and corporations on transactions outside of Canada. I contend that the exigencies of the business situation in Canada call for some restriction on the banks loaning money abroad. The expansion of such loans may be dangerous to the country. I believe that the failure of some of the banks can be traced directly to their over-expansion of loans to foreign interests. Take the Sovereign bank, for instance, they loaned money to the extent of twice their capital to the Milwaukee and Chicago Railway Company and to a railway company in Alaska. The Farmers' Bank was involved in loans to a person having his domicile in New York state, a person associated with Travers and others interested in the bank. He was outside the jurisdiction of our courts and hard to get at. In my opinion that is a dangerous principle.

Mr. OLIVER: Was this amendment considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee ?

Mr. SHARPE: It was defeated by only three votes—seventeen to fourteen.

Mr. AMES: Generally speaking, banks may be trusted to be extremely careful as to how much they shall loan and what proportion of their assets and capital they shall loan to any one person or corporation. They are as anxious to keep liquid and solvent as can be expected of them. Anything that tends to a limitation of the doing of a legitimate business by the banks tends to making banking more unprofitable and undesirable as a business investment. Banks find it necessary to have money in New York on call loan, and we know by experience that these call loans are of great advantage to the country in times of stress. When there is a great demand for money in Canada at certain times, it is possible to recall this money which is on call loan without having to ask Canadian borrowers to reimburse their loans. In the stringency of 1907, from $24,000,000 to $25,000,000 was brought back from New York and rendered available in Canada to keep faith with our Canadian borrowers. Take a concrete instance. We have a bank here, the Bank of Ottawa, with a capital of $3,900,000. You are going to say to that bank: You shall not loan more than $390,000 to any single customer outside of Canada. But it might be a very profitable thing for the Bank of Ottawa to have an agency in New York through which they could make call loans. Suppose that a perfectly solvent customer wanted half a million dollars on call. That money could be recalled at any time on twenty-four hours' notice. Everybody knows that it is difficult to get call loan money in Canada, but in New York a transaction of half a million dollars is a mere bagatelle, many concerns being able to handle it. The Bank of Ottawa has total assets of about $50,000,000. If it were given power to loan even one per cent of its total assets to a foreign borrower it would be able to loan a larger sum than under the limitation here proposed. Some of our banks do business in Cuba and the West Indies. We learned in the Banking and Commerce Committee that that business was very profitable for Canada in two ways: Canadian merchants who are pushing into that field find it extremely valuable to have their banking connections there to help them in giving credit; and it is found that the deposits in Cuba and elsewhere far exceed the loans, thus making it possible for a large sum of money, their surplus of deposits over loans, to be placed in New York and available for the call loan market and to be withdrawn in case of stringency in Canada. There are always large enterprises that have to be temporarily financed. In the case of a big bank like the Bank of Ottawa with a assets of $50,000,000, to say that it could not finance an enterprise to the amount of more than $400,000 at one time would curtail unnecessarily the enterprise of that bank.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has presented the case from the bankers' standpoint, I admit, in a fair way and with a good deal of logic, I do not see how the committee can adopt the amendment of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) as it stands, because we know that the Royal Bank, and I think the Bank of Nova Scotia and some others, have branches in Cuba and the British West India Islands, and I do not think it would be right to say that they cannot loan more than ten per cent of their capital even though they might be doing more than ten per cent of their business there. But in principle I believe the hon. member for North Ontario is right, notwithstanding the very able argument to the contrary of the member for St. Antoine. The member for St. Antoine says that it is of great advantage to Canada to have money on call loan in New York. We had this argument advanced in the Banking and Commerce Committee, we have heard it in this House, and we read it in the newspapers—that every time that money gets tight it is advantageous to have money in New York to draw on. But I find that the time when we in Canada want the money is the very time when the banks want the money to send to New York. It is of no advantage to us to have money in New York when our bona fide business is strained for want of it. I have a clear recollection of the conditions in 1907.

What happened in that year? The banks simply demanded that borrowers pay up, and because they could not pay up, they increased the interest one per cent and made them pay the interest once a month. If a man could pay, they made him pay the money, and then sent it off to New York, ostensibly to create a liquid fund which they could call upon in case of trouble, but really to make some money out of it.

Mr. AMES: I think the hon. gentleman will find that the shrinkage in call loans in New York at that time was very much greater than the shrinkage in Canadian call loans.

Mr. CARVELL: At any rate, in 1907 in the maritime provinces it was practically impossible to get money, and every man who could possibly pay his liabilities to the bank was called upon to do so. That money was taken somewhere; according to the argument of my hon. friend, it was taken to New York; according to his assertion it was not taken to New York, and I shall leave it to the committee to judge which is right, his argument or his statement. But it is not necessary to go back as far as 1907; take the months of November, December and January last. At that time it was almost impossible to get $100 in the maritime provinces, let alone $1,000 or $10,000. I do not say that firms carrying on a manufacturing business and who had a line of credit were unable to make use of that credit, but the ordinary borrower, the man in the country who is really the backbone of the banking business; the man without whom the banks of Canada could not exist—for we know that three-quarters of the capital which is being loaned by the banks in Canada to-day comes from the small depositors—could not get even $100. I think that in times of stringency the ordinary small borrower in the country who wants $100 should have a right to get it. But in times of stringency the banks say: We must have liquid assets in the form of call loans; therefore not only can we not make advances to you, but we must make you pay what we have already advanced. During the months of November, December and January, many cases of real hardship came under my own personal observation. I myself was compelled to loan money which I really could not afford to let out, simply because the borrowers would go to the wall if they could not get it, and they could not get it from the banks. In the months of December and January, not on my own account, but on behalf of a friend, I went to a bank, with absolutely gilt-edged security, for the loan of a small sum of money, but I was told that their instructions were that no money should be loaned, and we could not get it. In order to keep the man from going to the wall, I had to advance the money, which I could ill afford to do. It is probable that these local managers were carrying out their instructions, but I think that banks ought not to be allowed to loan their capital outside of Canada. They get their capital from the people of Canada, by the legislation of this Parliament, and I may add that if this Parliament did not choose to grant them a charter for the carrying on of business and the making of loans, they could not do it, because the people would not deposit their savings with private banks as freely as they do in chartered banks. I do not find any fault with the chartered banks; I always advise my clients to deposit with them rather than with the savings banks. I would rather encourage the three banking institutions in my county, the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Royal Bank, than the Government Savings Banks, because they are absolutely safe and sound, and are fully as reliable as the government post office savings bank. When the people put their money in those banks, I think that that money should be kept in Canada for the benefit of the people, and not be sent out of the country just at the time when it is most needed. At ordinary times, it makes no difference where the banks send the money, but when a time of stringency comes; when the banks are closing down on everybody, contending that they must have liquid assets, something should be done to remedy the conditions. I think my hon. friend should be willing to amend his amendment to some extent to meet the conditions under which the banks are doing business in the West Indies, and if he would do so, I feel like voting for it, because I think it involves the proper principle.

Mr. WHITE: The argument of the hon. member for Carleton proceeds upon a misconception which is widely prevalent in Canada. His idea appears to be that the money which the banks loan in New York and in Canada should be loaned out to relieve the stringency which has existed now for many months. I might say to my hon. friend that if money were not carried on call in New York, it would be lying in the vaults of the banks, and would not be loaned out in Canada. In other words, if a bank loaned out all its money, the institution would be heading straight for insolvency. A bank must either keep gold, or other legal tender on hand to meet its demand liabilities, or it must be in a position to obtain the money over night. The result is that banks do not loan all their money to commercial concerns, farmers and merchants in Canada; they keep from thirty to forty per cent in a liquid condition. What is that liquid condition? It must be either in the form of cash, or upon call, so as to be immediately convertible into cash, or upon securities which can be quickly liquidated. If the banks of Canada would loan all their capital and all their deposits, especially in times of stringency, to the borrowers throughout Canada, they would become insolvent, because they would not be able to meet any unexpected run or demand upon their funds. I changed my own view in this regard a few years ago, because I happened to learn what the policy of the banks was, and why they adopted it. The banks must either hold their reserve in the vaults in the form of cash to the extent of a certain proportion of their liabilities, or they must loan that money where they can turn it into gold and make it cash over night. The only market on this continent in which that can be done is New York, just as the only market in England where it can be done is London; they are both international money markets. The interest paid upon call loans in New York is much less than that paid for call loans in Canada. Call loans in Canada pay six or seven per cent, and call loans in the United States pay two or three per cent, because there are so many bankers in the world doing practically the same thing, namely, loaning their money in New York for the purpose of keeping it in liquid form. The difference between a call loan in New York and a call loan in Canada, speaking of a time of stringency, because a call loan in Canada as a general thing is available when money conditions are not particularly stringent, is this: As the New York market is an international market, a call loan there is strictly a call loan, convertible into cash by the bank in Canada having a line of call loans and drawing low rates of interest and any bank is able to make a call for gold to-day, to-morrow or the next day in the city of Montreal or the city of Toronto. What is the advantage to the bank? The bank must either carry its reserve in the form of gold here and not loan it out, or carry it in the form of call loans in the only international money market on this continent, namely, New York, where they get for it a rate of from two to four per cent. The advantage to the banks is that they derive this comparatively small rate of interest in New York whereas, if they were to keep it in their vaults, they would derive no rate of interest at all and in neither case would they be able to loan it out to the commercial community. That is the reason why the Canadian banks loan in New York just as the British banks loan in London. They loan money in London upon bills and other securities at a lower rate of interest than the discount rates prevailing in Great Britain and just as the banks in England would not be justified in loaning all their money by way of discounts to the commercial community, so also the banks in Canada would not be justified in loaning to the commercial community to the extent of all their available resources because they would be heading straight for insolvency if they did. The banks in England make 25 to 40 per cent of their loans in London just as our banks carry about 20 to 30 per cent of their loans in New York with all the liquidity which such loans possess and which represents the reserve they would otherwise have to maintain by keeping gold in their vaults here. The point I make is that even if there were no call loans made in New York the borrowing community in Canada would not be in any better position because the banks would have to hold the specie or legal tender which they are bound to carry in order to maintain their position as strong, solvent institutions. I think I may say that the committee came to the conclusion, in view of all the evidence presented, that the loaning of money in London and New York is a practice in accordance with the best principles of sound banking and indispensible for the carrying on of the proper banking business, and that they adopt the policy of carrying their reserves in gold.

With regard to the amendment of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), I think it is not a sound principle in banking to argue that because in a particular case evil results have followed from the making of a certain class of loans, legislation should be introduced prohibiting or restricting that class. We are apt to overlook the fact that in thousands and tens of thousands of cases these loans are made with effects that are beneficial to the entire community. We are apt, as they are in the United States, to fix our vision upon the exceptions and in favour of legislation of this kind instead of considering the general course of banking and seeing what are the facts and what is the best course to pursue in legislating, having regard to existing conditions. When this amendment was before the Committee on Banking and Commerce it was pointed out by one of the makers there that one of the very best classes of business that banks could carry on was the making of loans upon grain. There is no better security, there are no assets that are quicker in character than grain. A banker would be perfectly safe in making a loan of from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 upon wheat to a partnership or corporation whether foreign or domestic, for the reason that the security is of an ascertainable value from day to day and very liquid in its nature. It can be instantly sold.

The result is that an enormous business is done by our banks upon the security of grain, particularly wheat from our own northwest. Some of our banks have agencies in Chicago and they all have branches in Winnipeg. There are foreign corporations engaged in the grain trade in the West. Let us take the case of a bank having a million of capital and having assest of $30,000,000 altogether. It would mean, if this amendment is adopted as it stands, that the banks could not make a loan of more than $100,000 upon grain although it would be perfectly safe for them to make a loan of from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 upon grain, in fact, safer than the making of a loan of $50,000 to an individual without security upon his general standing in the community as is done every day by banks throughout Canada. . It would prevent a bank with a million dollars of capital and $40,000,000 of assets altogether, while carrying on a call loan business in New York, from making a loan to the strongest firm there. It would prevent them from making a loan to J. P. Morgan and Company, even upon the security of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company stock, or upon the best collateral security in New York, of more than $100,000.

While I realize the principle that my hon. friend has in view and while I recognize that he is trying to prevent some of the abuses that have happened in connection with Canadian banking, I think that we are prone to overlook the manifold advantages which have been enjoyed by the banks and by the community as a whole from having business carried on in the usual and ordinary manner. Is the reason given a sufficient justification for amending the law in the way proposed? English legislation, I think, knows no restriction. They say there that each case must be dealt with on its merits. It may be unsafe to loan $50,000 to one individual and by consequence ten such loans to individuals who may fail would involve a loss of several hundred thousand dollars while it might be perfectly safe to loan $2,000,000 upon wheat or other collateral that would absolutely secure the loan. We are concerned really with the ordinary carrying on of business in the ordinary way as recognized throughout the English speaking world.

I do not intend to make any special plea, but I do not think that the Committee on Banking and Commerce had before it, nor do I think this committee has before it, evidence upon which it can say arbitrarily you must not loan more than ten per cent. Why ten per cent, why not fifteen per cent, or why not five per cent? What I am afraid of in regard to an amendment of this kind is that we have not evidence enough before us to justify us in saying that it is not going to be a harmful amendment. I have the greatest respect for the motive of my hon. friend from North Ontario who, I know, desires only to prevent a recurrence of some of the practices which have occasioned very heavy losses to depositors and others in Canada, but I would submit that until we have before us evidence as to the operations of banks in foreign countries and as to the transactions which they carry on there it would be injurious for us to lay down the hard and fast rule that they must not loan more than a certain percentage to a foreign corporation.

Mr. CARVELL: It is a great pity that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance did not spend ten years of his life in practising law instead of devoting his time to making money. If he had, he would have known that there are always two sides to a case. He would have known that you can get splendid evidence on one side and that you can have an excellent case until the evidence on the other side is produced. Unfortunately, with reference to this particular feature of the banking law, you can only get evidence on one side. We have only been able to get the evidence of the bankers and of course the bankers have given evidence which seems to have satisfied my hon. friend. I am not saying that there is not a great deal of difficulty in getting evidence upon the other side of the case, but we should exercise a little of the common sense which the Almighty has endowed us with and when a man has practised law for ten years, after he sees what the evidence is on one side of the case, he naturally tries to investigate the matter and find out what it is upon the other side and when he does he usually finds that it is not so infallible but that he can pick a hole in it. In this case the minister thoroughly believes that the money must be loaned in New York, where you can keep your assets in a liquid form and at the same time get some interest, or you must keep it in your vaults. The hon. gentleman attempts to justify it by reference to the English practice, but he fails to realize that there is a great difference between banking in Canada and banking in England. In England they have more money than they know what to do with; the idea of the investor in England is to invest his money, usually outside of England, but we in Canada are all the time trying to get funds here. Our Government is not borrowing money from the people in large quantities, and when you ask them to increase the rate of interest in the savings banks they frankly say: if we want ten millions and we raise the rate of interest to four per cent we will get it from the people of Canada, but if we take ten million dollars out of the people of Canada we are reducing the amount of money in the country to that extent; it is better for us to go abroad and borrow our money and leave the ten millions for the banks to handle. I repeat that what would be good policy in Britain might not be good policy in Canada. We want our money kept in Canada to develop the country. We are passing legislation giving the banks the right to receive the money and to issue dollar for dollar of their capital in paper money. If a bank has a capital of five million dollars, then it can issue five millions in paper and it has its own five million dollars capital in addition. We are giving valuable privileges to the banks of Canada, and in return we have the right to demand that the banks will keep their money in Canada and do business in Canada. The Minister of Finance may believe it is necessary to pile up forty per cent of the banks' assets and not loan them in Canada, but I do not believe it. I look upon the bank as very much like a business man, and it would be foolish for a business man, especially in time of stringency, to divest himself of his ready cash, but when I am told I have to keep forty per cent of all I am worth in ready cash in my safe, I do not believe it.

Mr. WHITE: It is to be carried in the form of cash or readily available assets; in bonds that can be readily sold.

Mr. CARVELL: It amounts to the same thing. If the Minister of Finance says I should keep forty per cent of all I am worth in some sort of a liquid asset on which I can realize in a day or two, I say it is not necessary.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Does the hon. gentleman think that the banks, under the conditions he has described, do pile up the capital?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not believe they do. They take it to New York because they can make more money out of it. That may be a violent assumption on my part, but I would like to see some evidence to the contrary before I would feel that the banks are justified in taking this enormous amount of money from the people of Canada at a time when the people of Canada need it.

At one o'clock, House resumed, and then took recess.

At three o'clock, House resumed and again went into committee.

On section 76—business and powers of banks:

Mr. CARVELL: I trust the Minister of Finance will see his way clear to accept the amendment moved by my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), with such changes as may be necessary in the case of banks doing business outside of Canada.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

On section 88—loans upon live or dead stock:

Mr. WHITE: With regard to this section, I have a rather important suggestion to make, arising out of the discussion of Friday last. Upon that occasion I stated that the Bank Act, under section 88, expressly recognizes the principle of giving bankers a lien upon the products dealt in by wholesalers. Section 88 provides:

> The bank may lend money to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in products of agriculture, the forest, quarry and mine, or the sea, lakes and rivers, or to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in live stock or dead stock or the products thereof, upon the security of such products, or of such live stock or dead stock or the products thereof.

I pointed out that it had been the practice of the banks in the West, under the authority of this section, to make loans upon the security of live stock to parties engaged in the wholesale rearing of cattle, that is to say, ranchers in the sense in which I understand that term, namely: men who are engaged in rearing cattle on a large scale as their principal occupation, and whose farming operations would be subsidiary to that. Some doubt was cast upon the validity of such a lien by a judgment of Chief Justice Sifton in the Supreme Court of Alberta. It was in order to make it perfectly clear that a bank might make a loan under the authority of this section to ranchers that I inserted sub-section 3, which reads as follows:

> The bank may lend money to a rancher upon the security of his cattle.

In other words, the legislation of the new Act was intended not to be of an enlarging character but to be declaratory, namely: to declare that the law was as it had been understood to be by bankers. It has been pointed out to me by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and other lawyers in the West that there appears to be no reasonable doubt that the banks, under the existing Bank Act, can make a loan to a rancher, that is, in the sense in which I understand the term, and can validly take back a lien upon his cattle, under the provisions of section 88 which I have just read, and especially under this provision:

> The bank may lend money to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in live stock.

I am assured therefore, by eminent legal authority that the banks to-day can legally do under the existing Bank Act what I had in mind to make perfectly clear that they could do. Therefore, I desire to amend this section by striking out sub-section 3, not only for the reasons which I have given, but for this additional reason, and largely on account of the fact drawn to my attention the other evening by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the definition which he read. The American Standard Dictionary defines a 'ranch' as follows:

An establishment for rearing or grazing cattle and other stock in large herds; as a sheep ranch; a cattle ranch.

That was the meaning I had in view when this sub-section was drafted, and I think that is the generally accepted meaning of the word 'ranch.' There is another meaning which the word has taken on which is synonymous with 'farm,' because the second meaning given by the American Standard Dictionary is 'a farm'. That is the original meaning, probably from the word 'rancho,' which I think is from the Spanish word. Therefore it is perfectly clear that the word 'rancher' is ambiguous. It has always meant to me a man engaged in the rearing of cattle and other stock in large herds; and, if he is engaged in farming, it would only be incidental to his main occupation. From this definition it is clear that the word 'rancher' may mean a farmer engaged in mixed farming. It was not the intention of this legislation that we should extend to bankers the right to take a lien upon the live stock of farmers throughout Canada, for two reasons. In the first place, it is not necessary. The evidence before the committee showed conclusively that any farmer of good standing and reputation, who is entitled to a loan by virtue of his credit, is able to obtain all the advances he requires without specifically hypothecating his live stock to the bank. As I pointed out on Friday last, it has always been the principle underlying the Bank Act that banks should loan upon the personal credit of individuals rather than upon collateral security so as to become the pledgees of chattel property throughout Canada. I think that is a sound principle. The second reason, which is a very important one is this: if a bank is to be permitted to take liens from farmers throughout Canada upon the security of their live stock, then without question, having regard to the rights of creditors and landlords who are able to distrain for rent, I think it would follow that the lien must be registered so as to give public notice. That is in accordance with the principle underlying the provincial legislation of all the provinces with one exception, which is a very important one indeed, namely the province of Quebec. In that province the chattel mortgage is unknown. I think the theory of the civil law of Quebec is that a man is deemed to be the owner of property of which he is in visible ownership or possession. So far as outsiders are concerned, they have the right to treat him as the owner of chattel property in his possession. Therefore it is not legal to give a chattel mortgage in the province of Quebec. It accordingly follows that there is no machinery in that province for the registration of chattel mortgages. Consequently it is not possible in the province of Quebec to register a lien which might be taken by a banker from a mixed farmer upon the security of his stock. For these reasons it has appeared advisable that sub-section 3 should be struck out. We think that mixed farmers in Canada will be able to obtain such accommodation as they require without hypothecating or pledging their stock as security to the bank. That will dispense with the necessity of having the last sections providing for registration which were added by the committee to section 88. The section would then be left in this way; that, so far as threshed grain is concerned, the banker would be allowed to take a lien without the necessity of registration; that so far as cattle are concerned, the law would remain precisely as it is. I am assured that those who raise cattle in the West on a large scale and who, properly I think, are called ranchers, according to the more popular definition at all events, would continue to be able to get from the banks the accommodation which they require. Members of the legal profession have assured me that that right of banks was undoubted. On these grounds I think it will clarify the situation and get over some of the difficulties that were adverted to in the discussion of Friday last, if we strike out sub-section 3; and further, if the committee so approve and subject to discussion of it, sub-sections 9 and 10. I therefore move that sub-sections 3, 9 and 10 be struck out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: For my part I have always thought that this attempted legislation was not in the right direction. My opinion, however, is not shared by a good many people. They argue that it is proper to give the small farmer the privilege of borrowing upon his movable property. My hon. friend will not allow the farmer to give a pledge upon his cattle, but he will allow him to give a pledge upon his grain. What is the reason of the difference as between one and the other?

Mr. WHITE: My right hon. friend asked me that question on Friday, and I am afraid I did not make it clear to him. I think he and I would probably agree—at least I gather from his opening remarks, that we should agree—that legislation should not be passed to permit the banks to become chattel mortgagees for either farmers or retailers. Let us commence from that. Now, whether wisely or unwisely—and there is much to be said against the change to which I shall refer—we have de cided, having regard to the particular situation that exists in the West as to transportation and storage of grain, to permit the bank to loan to farmers taking as security a lien upon threshed wheat remaining in the possession of the borrower. That is a rather radical departure from the principle in the existing Bank Act. The advantages to the farmer will, I think, be not inconsiderable. A great deal of evidence was taken before the committee, and while many doubted whether the banks would make many more advances, or greater advances than they would have made had this legislation not been enacted, at the same time, I think I am stating it fairly when I say that the opinion was that this would be of advantage to the farmer of the West, particularly by reason of the difficulty which he has on account of lack of transportation and comparative shortness of the market season—that the banks would probably lend more money or lend the money more readily, and that by reason of the advances so made the farmer would not be obliged to sacrifice his grain by throwing it on the market when all others were doing the same. That is the reason for the departure from the principle that the banks shall not be the pledgees of borrowers all over the country. With regard to registration of such liens, when the Bill was first introduced there was no provision made for the registration. I think it was largely on account of sub-section 3 which it is now proposed to strike out that the committee decided, and I think wisely, that the lien should be registered, because in the case of cattle especially very serious questions arose as to landlords and creditors being prejudiced by making these liens without provision for registration. Again, the difficulties about registration are insuperable in the province of Quebec, whose population is from one-fourth to one-third of the whole population of Canada. These are the considerations which appealed to me in making the difference between threshed grain and cattle. I do not know whether they will appeal to my hon. friend, at any rate they are what influenced me in my proposal.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER: I desire to say a word with regard to sub-section 3 which my hon. friend has decided to strike out, I do not wish especially to take issue on the first point; I am willing to say that there is a great difference between the case of the threshed grain and the live stock. As long as sub-section 3 did not apply to the holder of live stock who operates as a mixed farmer, from my point of view there is no reason why it should be here at all. If the Government's policy from the start was that this section should not apply to the live stock of what might be called a mixed farmer, then I think its presence in the Act was undoubtedly objectionable, and it was much better to take it out. But while I admit that there is an important difference between the grain and the live stock, I wish to go on record as saying I cannot see any good reason why the man who is raising live stock should not have the advantage that this section on its face would have given him subject to the registration that is provided under sections 8 and 9. It is true that there are special conditions surrounding the raising of grain, they have not been enlarged upon, it is unnecessary; the section is agreed to. But there are conditions surrounding the raising of live stock particularly in the West which have been spoken of so repeatedly that I will not touch upon that again. The desirability of the people of the West going into mixed farming, going into the raising of live stock in connection with their grain operations, is so plain that it seems to me very remarkable that, having in hand the amendment of this Act, having in view the desirability of aiding the man who is exclusively raising grain, we deliberately refuse to consider the case of the man who is doing, or trying to do, the very thing that everybody agrees he ought to do, and therefore ought to be encouraged in doing.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: I understand that this Act when put into effect will permit the rancher, but not the mixed farmer, to obtain money on his cattle. If that is so, I must enter my emphatic protest. I would certainly be deemed to be derelict in my duty to my constituents if I allowed such a clause to pass without registering my objection to it. One of the difficulties experienced by the mixed farmer in raising cattle in the West, speaking for my part of the country, has been the competition of the ranchers. I have no objection to the ranchers having that privilege; I believe it is quite right; but there is no more reason why a farmer should not be permitted to go to the bank and give security upon his live stock than upon his grain. I regret very much that the minister has seen fit to extend this privilege to the ranchers, and to withhold it from the mixed farmers. We are doing our utmost in the West to go into mixed farming, and the best way to encourage mixed farming is to permit the farmer to obtain money from the banks by giving security upon his live stock.

Section agreed to.

On section 99—purchase of the assets of a bank:

Mr. OLIVER: I take it for granted that the matter of bank mergers was dealt with very fully by the committee, and that the mind of the committee is represented by the clauses as they stand, which are of the same effect as the clause in the original Bill which provided that purchase of banks might take place with the consent of the Minister of Finance. The tendency of the present day is towards monopoly by combination in trade, transportation and finance. The banks are our great financial organizations. They control all the liquid assets of Canada; they hold in their hands billions of the dollars of the people, and upon their handling of that money very largely depends the course of commerce and of business generally throughout the Dominion from year to year. It is recognized that in finance, as in trade or transportation, it is for the good of the public at large that there should be competition, and, considering the number of banks that we have in Canada, it is presumed that we have a measurable or reasonable degree of competition in the handling of financial matters. As I have said, the tendency of the age is towards monopoly by combinations. There is evidence that that tendency exists in the financial world, in the banking world, and in the world of industry, trade and transportation. I shall not go into details to prove the point, which is accepted by everybody, that competition is good and that monopoly is bad; therefore I need not delay in placing before the committee the view that if it is desirable that there should be competition amongst banks, it is desirable that the elimination of competition by combination should be facilitiated by legislation of this Parliament. It is true that times occur and occasions arise when combination becomes desirable, and when it becomes impossible to prevent it without doing injury. Admitting that, for the sake of argument, I still maintain that whether or not a combination between two of these special and separately chartered and privileged institutions should take place should be in the hands of Parliament and of Parliament alone. There have been granted to each of these institutions, under the authority of Parliament, powers, privileges and rights to be exercised in the interests of the public as well as of the individuals immediately concerned. The interests of the public are, to a measurable degree, jeopardized by the combination of any two of these separately and specially chartered and empowered organizations. It seems to me to be elimentary that that combination should not take place except on the responsibility and with the knowledge and authority of Parliament. I have already said in regard to the Bank Act, and particularly in regard to the Act as it comes before us in its present form, that the tendency is to relieve as much as possible, those great financial institutions of government control, to create of those institutions, so to speak, an Empire within an Empire, to place upon them responsibility which, in my humble judgment, should not pass from the government which represents the people through Parliament. We have, I say, handed over to the banking institutions authority that should have been retained by Parliament, and the tendency of this measure is to still further hand over that authority to them. The result is that just in proportion as authority is placed in the hands of the combined banking organizations of the country, so that authority can be used for the purpose of elminating competition from time to time by closing out this, that, or the other bank, and amalgamating two or more existing banks. That being the case, and I do not think that any person can deny the proposition I have placed before the committee, the last thing this Parliament should do, if it recognizes the purpose of its existence as being the protection of the interests of the people at large, is to permit the elimination of competition under the control of banking companies without the sanction or authority or limitations that might reasonably be placed upon the banks by Parliament. I desire to place before the committee my view that, in so far as these sections of the present Act, or of the Act as it formerly existed, for it makes no difference to my argument, make provision for eliminating competition by establishing combinations without the special sanction, authority, and restrictions of this Parliament, they are contrary to the public interest and are, to that extent, objectionable.

Section agreed to.

Mr. WHITE: I think we might now take up the clause in which my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) is interested.

On section 79—acquisition of real estate:

Mr. EMMERSON: This section as it appears before us reads as follows:

> The bank may acquire and hold real and immovable property for its actual use and occupation and the management of its business, and may sell or dispose of the same, and acquire other property in its stead for the same purpose.

Rightly or wrongly a very common impression prevails throughout the country that the banks have invested an excessive amount of their capital not merely in bank premises, but in real estate which they lease to others. I propose to place before the committee an amendment to the section as follows:

> The bank shall not expend more than 5 per cent of its combined capital and reserve in real estate.

I shall also move that a further sub-section be added as follows:

The bank shall show in its monthly and annual statements the real value of its real and immovable property, giving detailed particulars.

I submit to the committee that there should be some limitation upon banks with respect to the percentage of capital that they may be permitted to invest in real estate for their own use. If they were to confine the use of real estate to their own purposes, perhaps it would not be so objectionable; it might be left to the discretion of the directors to decide as to the character of the offices required. But in many cities of Canada, if not in all, and in many of the large towns, private individuals have complained that the banks are in a position to acquire the very best sites, and to expend large sums of money in the construction of buildings, not merely for their own use, but for leasing in competition with other real estate owners. Now, the banks are limited to the holding of real or immovable property for their actual use and occupation, but they defy the law. If we were to pass this section as proposed, they would violate it. We must recognize that at this moment they are violating the law, and investing in real estate beyond that required for their own use. We must recognize the conditions, and, recognizing them, we must apply a remedy in some form, we must legalize at least what the banks are doing to-day, or if deemed advisable, limit the percentage of expenditure of their capital and reserve on real estate. They are in the business to-day. I called the attention of the Banking and Commerce Committee to a letter which I received from a prominent gentleman in Charlottetown setting forth very strong complaints in that regard. I do not wish at this moment to move the amendment that I moved before the Banking and Commerce Committee, but it seems to me that the minister might fairly take into consideration these two points, first, as to whether the banks should not be limited in these investments and, secondly, as to whether, if they are permitted to make these investments they should make a statement monthly to the minister as to the amount they have thus invested. I am not so urgent with respect to the first feature, although I think there is a wrong which requires a remedy. We all know that the bank statements to-day represent not a tithe of the amount that the banks have invested in real estate. Everybody knows that; the banks will admit it. Many banks merely put in their statements nominal sums in comparison with the amounts that they have invested in buildings throughout Canada. You eliminated the clause with respect to interest because you recognized that the banks are charging more than seven per cent in face of the declaration of Parliament prohibiting them from doing it. You wiped out that section because you did not wish the banks to be placed in the position of violating the law. Now, for the same reason, it seems to me that it is necessary to amend this 79th section in order to legalize what they are doing, but if you do not, then let the country know because we are giving them a franchise and the country has a right to know. Let there be a statement of the actual values, let publicity be given to the facts as they exist, let not this hypocrisy and deceit continue as it has continued for many years. I think I am speaking within the bounds when I make this statement and I would ask the minister simply to give consideration to these features and particularly with respect to publicity of the facts.

Mr. WHITE: The matter to which my hon. friend has drawn attention is one of very great importance and one very difficult to deal with. There is no doubt that under the present legislation it is the intention that the banks shall hold real estate only for their actual use and occupation. I think that the reason for that legislation is this: It is a sound principle of banking that banks should invest their money or loan it upon securities of a character and that they should not be permitted to invest their money in fixed capitals. They should invest it in circulating capital so that they would better serve the purposes of the commercial community. It would be an absolutely unsound principle that banks should be allowed to invest any considerable proportion of their total assets in real estate. That has been tried on some occasions in the financial history of the world and always with disastrous results. The banks should loan as much of their money as possible in liquid form and for short dates and as little as possible in the way of furnishing fixed capital or in real estate. Under this section 79, the banks have acquired sites throughout Canada——

Mr. EMMERSON: And the very best available.

Mr. WHITE: I will come to that in a moment. They have acquired sites throughout Canada, and in some cases they have erected buildings for their own use and occupation, and no portion of these buildings is rented to outsiders. The banks are very desirous of obtaining the choice corners because there is very active competition among the banks for business. It has often been said that there is a combination among the bankers, but I think nothing has been shown more clearly before the committee than that there is a very active competition among the banks for business. The result is that, as I have said, the banks compete amongst themselves for the best corners and the best sites in cities and towns. Take the corners of King and Yonge streets in Toronto where the Dominion Bank is erecting a large building; if the Dominion Bank paid last year $10,000 a foot front, because the property is worth that, for the corner of King and Yonge streets and erected, let us say, a building solely for their own use, that is what is called a single chamber building, the cost or rental which they would have to charge themselves with respect to that corner would be very large indeed. The valuation of $10,000 a foot is reached by taking into consideration the fact that a very high building can be built there and that the upper storeys can be rented and the return from the upper storeys would help to pay the interest upon the cost of construction and the maintenance of the building and also return a rate of interest upon the $10,000 a foot value. Therefore, the banks have in many cases, I should think in most cases, erected buildings not only for their own actual use and occupation, but for the purpose of renting the upper storeys to tenants. It has been by reason of economic conditions that they have done so in order that their rental for the ground floor might be that much less to them. It has been contended that by erecting these large buildings they have not only violated the spirit of this section 79, but they have locked up a very considerable amount of money in real estate to the detriment of commerce. I think it is only fair to the banks to say that it has been the policy of the chartered banks to build up large reserves, and I think that their real estate investments have been comparatively within their reserves. The banks make answer, although it does not meet the objection that they are violating the Act: Instead of distributing the assets to our shareholders to whom they belong, because they have been accumulated either from premiums paid on stock by our shareholders or from profits over and above the amounts that we have distributed to our shareholders, we have bought real estate well within our reserves and we do not think that the public have any right to complain of that. I must confess that I do not think that meets the situation. My own view is that with regard to what has been happening there has been an abuse in some cases under this section. If the banks had acquired sites for their own use and occupation, or even if they had erected a few additional storeys, no question would have been raised, but it is the sky-scraper and the locking up of public money in the sky-scraper that has caused this agitation. I think that the bankers would be well advised in the future, if that change is made, although there are difficuleies in the way of making it, if they would keep their building operations within due bounds. Skyscrapers, as a matter of fact, having regard to depreciation and cost of maintenance, return a very small rate of interest upon the investment and are not profitable in places. I think the banks would be well advised if they would exercise moderation in the buildings they erect throughout Canada, and had they done so in the past these questions would not now arise. As to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson), I would point out that it is very difficult indeed to fix a percentage which would be fair for the banks in this respect. I do not think the evidence we have heard would justify us in fixing any particular percentage. The Bank of Montreal has several hundred branches; it has its head office in Montreal with, I suppose, one million dollars represented, and it has in way of investment in premises, and it has important offices in Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Victoria, London, Eng., New York, Chicago, and indeed all over the English-speaking world. I think, therefore, five per cent would be entirely inadequate to the requirements of the Bank of Montreal, even if the bank were to confine itself simply to the very letter of this section. My assistant deputy minister tells me that the Bank of Montreal uses the property which it owns solely for its own use and occupation, but nevertheless five per cent would not be adequate to meet its requirements having regard to the area over which its operations extend. The returns of the Bank of Montreal show about four million dollars in real estate, but I think that is a very low valuation of the buildings occupied and owned by the bank. In connection with this question, Mr. McLeod gave evidence before the committee of a very interesting character, and I think the committee was very greatly impressed with everything Mr. McLeod said because it was recognized he had been a pioneer in trying to introduce reforms into banking in Canada. Mr. McLeod believes that the banks should carry their real estate at a very low figure for the reason that the buildings did not represent immediately realizable assets; that the balance sheet of a bank should show a liquid condition, and that a bank should be able to readily convert its assets into cash for the purpose of meeting liabilites of a demand nature, such as deposits payable on demand, or on notice, which latter is seldom insisted upon by the banks. That leads to another consideration, which touches upon the second part of the amendment of my hon. friend and emphasizes the difficulty of dealing with this question of what is the value of bank premises. Take a bank building such as that of the Bank of Montreal, and the Bank of Commerce on St. James street in Montreal. What is the fair value of these buildings? There is nothing more difficult than to value such buildings. It would not be fair to say the land is worth so much and the buildings cost so much and put the two together, because in connection with all buildings designed for a special purpose, you have to take into consideration the market for such. I can illustrate that in a simple way: a house that is valuable for the use of the ordinary class of citizen always finds a ready market because there are hundreds of citizens who are looking for that class of house, and it is well within their means; but if we have a house to sell that cost two or three hundred thousand dollars and which is built on a site worth one hundred thousand dollars more, then your market for that property is a very narrow market and you have to sell such a house at a great sacrifice in order to realize. If there happens to be some individual who wants that house, he will not pay more than he is obliged to pay, as competition in that case would determine the price. In buildings designed for a special purpose, there is usually a heavy depreciation when you come to sell. Let us apply that principle to bank buildings. Take a bank building used solely for the purposes of a bank, and built as they nearly all are, expensively—because the banks like to advertise their financial strength by a handsome building, to which within bounds I do not take exception as I think our civilization demands that; I like to see a certain taste and ornamentation and expense within bounds on the part of the large financial institutions in a country such as ours, and I think we will all agree as to that. But when you come to value a bank building suitable only for the purposes of a bank, then the only purchaser for that building would be another bank, and if the other banks are provided for as most of them are you sometimes have to sell it for simply the value of the land; the building being suitable only for the one purpose it is not valuable to other parties who may desire the site for another class of building. Take the Bank of Montreal on St. James street, Montreal, which is a magnificent building of handsome architecture, porphyry pillars inside; an enormously expensive building, and ask yourself what would that sell for? That is a very difficult problem. It is, therefore, difficult to comply with the view of my hon. friend that a valuation should be made. The cost would be misleading. If the banks would show that the land and the buildings cost so much, that might be misleading as to their financial strength, because the premises are not immediately convertible into anything like the figure they would be set down at. Another thing, the real estate is increasing in value all the time, while the building itself would be depreciating. I had a very great deal to do with valuations in the city of Toronto many years ago, and I know there is nothing more difficult to value than buildings erected for special purposes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Take for instance, a church.

Mr. WHITE: Yes, a church is another example: It is extremely difficult to place a value on a church. I do not wish to magnify the difficulty; I suppose we are here to get over difficulties if we can. My hon. friend moved his amendment in the committee, and having regard to the evidence given and the returns, which are of the same class as the English returns covering the real estate, I think the committee reached the conclusion that they could not improve upon the clause as it stands. I think, however, we can say that it would be very much in the interest of the banks themselves that they should take notice that there is a growing feeling in the community against their erecting large buildings such as have been erected in various parts of Canada, thus locking up considerable part of their available capital. Unless I am very much mistaken, the banks themselves have reached that conclusion. If my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) desires to press his amendment I would like to consider it, but having regard to the conclusion reached by the committee, I am rather of the opinion that it would be wise to accept their finding and allow the section to stand as it is.

Mr. EMMERSON: I was not convinced that the committee were at all unanimous, or that there was a general feeling among the members of the committee that there should not be publicity. There was some question with respect to the getatableness of just the amount of money that was invested by banks in buildings, but if we let this clause stand as it is, we are in one sense simply saying that banks can only invest in buildings for their actual use. At the same time every hon. member knows that the banks are investing and expending large amounts in buildings which are not confined to their own use. My hon. friend's assertion as to the necessity of banks building sky-scrapers, in order that the rental cost may be lessened is an argument against this section as it stands.

Mr. WHITE: I do not approve of banks building sky-scrapers.

Mr. EMMERSON: Their assertion is: We have expended large sums in certain sections of the country in erecting large buildings; we are utilizing certain portions of the buildings for our office purposes and the rest are rented for the purpose of lessening the cost of our office rent. That is an argument against permitting this section to remain as it stands, because, if it is necessary that they shall invest in that way in order to lessen their operating charges, we should give them the power to do so. I am against legislating in a false, deceitful way, declaring that such and such shall not be the case and at the same time knowing that the law will be violated every day. It brings all sections of the Act into disrepute to pass one section of this character. I am not convinced by the arguments presented before the committee, and I do not believe that the committee are agreed that the section should remain as it is. It may be that five per cent of the combined capital in the reserve is too restricted a sum. I propose to test the opinion of the committee on that question later on.

There is one branch of the subject that I shall ask this committee to pass upon, and that is with respect to publicity. If the circumstances detailed by my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, are to be regarded as a justification for the Act as it is, then it is right that publicity should be given to those facts. If the banks have invested in buildings and sky-scrapers, let us have a statement of their value. There will be no difficulty in getting at the real value. The Bank of Montreal is not a sinner in regard to expending money on buildings other than for their own use. Other banks have sinned in that respect.

Mr. WHITE: Is it possible to make section 79 any stricter than it is? I think the banks in erecting these large buildings are not complying with the Act. I do not think that section 79 could be drafted to show more clearly the idea that they are not to hold real estate beyond the requirements of their actual use.

Mr. EMMERSON: I note what the minister says in that regard. I want to call the attention of the committee to conditions which prevail in the city of Ottawa. The hon. minister says that there is difficulty in getting at the real value of bank properties. If you go down Bank street, at every other corner you will find a bank building. The best corners are reserved for the use of banks. They are not violating this section in constructing these buildings that are for their own use, but they put a high valuation on property in the vicinity by reason of the fact that they can select the best quarters and pay the highest prices, utilizing their reserves for that purpose. They are holding the best sites as against the business public. It would be very much better for banks and for the business interests of the city of Ottawa if those sites were not used simply for bank premises. If it were desired to get at the actual value of those premises, it would not be difficult to do so, and the value would not be an inflated one. The very circumstances detailed by the hon. minister could be taken into consideration in fixing the value of these bank properties throughout Canada. I think that should be done. At any rate I claim that we should have a statement of the actual facts and that they should be given publicity, so that the shareholders and the public may know the actual conditions which prevail. To-day they do not know these conditions. There is not a statement of a bank in Canada that gives actual facts with respect to the amounts invested in real estate. It is not desirable that the banks should go into the business of real estate. I do not think that this Parliament would justify any such legislation, and I do not think we should allow them to go on in the way they are doing; there should be some limitation. If we permit them to go on in this way, let us have an exposé of the conditions as they exist, and let us not exist in an atmosphere of deceit with respect to the whole matter.

Mr. F. B. McCURDY (Shelburne and Queens): With the second part of the amendment of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), I am in accord. So far as the first section of the amendment is concerned, I see difficulties. I think the experience of everyone who has watched the operation of restrictions imposed upon banks is that they really constitute a tax upon the clients of the banks; the restrictions imposed upon the banks are passed along in the shape of higher rates charged for services rendered by them.

It is more particularly with regard to that aspect of the case that I wish to draw the attention of the committee not only to section 79, but to section 91, which is not yet passed, because to my mind these two sections are largely bound up in one another.

The old Bank Act sought to limit the rate of interest charged by banks. That attempt was found to be ineffective, and accordingly by a substantial majority in committee it was deleted from this Bill; but no one has paid attention to the fixing of the rate of interest allowed on deposits.

Different parts of the country are interested in different sections of this Act. In a certain portion of the counties which I have the honour to represent, with a thrifty population, and but little industrial activity, $20 is placed on deposit in the branch bank to every $1 that is borrowed. Naturally that district is more vitally concerned in the rate of interest on deposits than in the discount rate. In other communities the conditions are reversed, and so on.

Bankers claim that the fixing of rates of interest should be left entirely in the hands of the banks, and that if they allow a higher rate of interest on deposits they must charge a larger rate on loans. Section 91 of the old Act sought to fix a maximum rate of interest which may be charged on loans and discounts.

With the bankers, I am opposed to government interference with either the rate of interest paid on deposits or the rates charged on loans. The bankers should, I submit, agree with me that if the rates are not fixed by the Government, they should not be fixed by any body with more limited jurisdiction than the Government. My idea is that they should be fixed by the natural law of supply and demand.

As is well known, money is dearer in Canada to-day than it was twenty years ago. It is worth more to borrowers to-day than it was then. It can be used with profit by borrowers to-day, on account of our great industrial activity, and I fear also our real estate speculations, at higher rates, than it could, say, in 1890 or 1892, and higher rates for loans are being charged all round.

The banks are to-day doing an immeasurably larger volume of business than they were then, and the natural conclusion would be that a large volume of business would be conducted on a smaller 'spread' between the deposit rate and the discount rate. But, what is the fact? The fact is, and I am speaking with local but accurate knowledge, that small but perfectly safe and solvent local banks some twenty years ago, issued deposit receipts bearing four per cent interest and were glad to receive the deposits at that rate and turned them over at satisfactory profits, as was indicated by the balance sheets of banks at that time and the fact that bank stocks were then largely sought for as investments.

To-day we have very large banks doing a tremendous volume of business, but our thrifty population, who have for generations regarded nothing 'so safe as a bank,' and therefore in their timidity leave their funds in a bank, are able to receive not the same rate of interest on their deposits, but twenty-five per cent less. Is that due to the natural free play of the laws of supply and demand? If it is, everyone will be content, but I for one, cannot believe that it is.

The explanation given by bankers is that present banking profits will not admit a narrowing of the 'spread' between the deposit rate and the rate of interest. We are told that 'the Canadian banking system is to-day a model system—that improvements have been made with the lapse of time until it is to-day the best in the world.' This is the bankers' opinion, it is true, and it is doubtless the opinion of a large number of bankers' clients and those doing business in large centres of population.

We look at the system also, from the viewpoint of the citizen who is frugal, and who, on account of his thriftiness, performs a most valuable service in accumulating savings, and in accordance with the early teachings of his youth that nothing is 'so safe as a bank,' his inclination and habits compel him to place his money in these institutions, where it is immediately available for the requirements of commerce.

We also look at it from the viewpoint of the ambitious and promising young man, wishing to engage in business and who should be afforded the same facilities as are accorded to his existing competitor in business, who may be a bank director or a favoured client of the bank. The young man calls for a 'square deal' to enable him to gratify his very laudable ambition of rising, through his industry, to a position of prominence and influence in affairs of business and state.

The explanation re profits afforded by the bankers is to my mind not conclusive. I cannot clear my mind of the impression that a sinister influence exists, as between the deposit rate, at any rate, and the free play of the law of supply and demand. But let us consider the matter from the standpoint of the explanation offered by the banks themselves. It seems to me that their explanation invites further investigation into the operations of these institutions, and particularly into the provisions of section 79. As already pointed out, some twenty years ago perfectly solvent and prosperous banks, in some sections of this Dominion where capital was not much in demand, were willing and glad to pay four per cent interest on deposits, but with the growth of a system, and the absorbtion by big international and financial banks of these smaller institutions, which ministered so well to the then needs of the local communities, has come the necessity for a bigger 'spread' between the interest and deposit rate, and I fear an abitrary fixing of the rate as regards the more helpless of these classes.

And what is the reason? It must be internal with the banks, and we seek the reason because we desire to legislate for the benefit of the country as a whole, as opposed to the interest of a small part of the community. In examining the bank returns of the not remote date of 1900, we find that the total investment in bank premises at that time was under $6,500,000. According to the Government bank statement for December, 1912, the total investment in bank premises exceeds $37,000,000. Some of the largest banks carry bank premises in their balance sheets at fifty per cent of their cost, and I assume that some such system is in a greater or less degree adopted by all the banks, and we should probably be nearer the mark if we state that, instead of having expended $37,000,000 for bank premises Canadian banks have expended $50,000,000. At any rate, according to the Government returns, there are over five dollars and a half invested in bank premises to-day for every dollar which was so invested in 1900.

The hon. Minister of Finance stated a few moments ago that there is much competition between Canadian banks to-day. I quite agree that there is, and probably too much in some ways; but I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that banking competition has run along altogether wrong lines in this country in the past few years, and one of the errors is illustrated by the figures above given.

In 1889 there was one banking office for each 11,700 of our population; to-day there is one banking office for each 2,560 of a population. The attention of each one of us has no doubt been arrested, in walking along the streets of almost any city in Canada, to observe the close proximity of banking offices to one another. There is an old saying that 'misery loves company': evidently the 'Canadian branch bank loves company.' I have nothing to say against the enterprise shown by banks pushing into new and promising territory when the requirements of the territory demand the facilities of a banking office; but how often have we seen branches opened up in barren territory by rival banks, only to be abandoned by one or the other later, and the losses incurred by this rivalry loaded on to the operating expenses of the bank. In many of our large cities, branch offices are opened in premises much too expensive for the business proposed to be carried on. It is not unusual to see two, three or four banks facing each other on opposite corners and looking for deposits, which district would under the present system, be as well taken care of by one of the two, three or four. If the competition would take another and the natural form of increasing the interest rate paid on deposits, it would be more welcome, I have no doubt. The point is that these expensive offices, running at a loss, must be charged up against the profits of the parent bank, which leads up to the argument advanced by the bankers, that the cost of operation 'spread' between the deposit and the discount rate. I think the attention and supervision of some official, perhaps the minister, might be directed to this abuse, and a saving in expenses effected which would allow a more moderate 'spread' to exist in the rates mentioned. The decrease of the ratio of the public served by branch banks, which as I have stated has decreased in twenty-four years from 11,770 to 2,560, is due to a considerable extent to this unnecessary duplication of branch offices.

It would appear that we shall never get back to the day of small banks, when, owing to their economical management, depositors could get four per cent and lenders borrow at six per cent, and I may say in passing that these conditions exist in the United States to-day. But we should at least, I think, effect that the banks shall, in return for their franchises, give us a service economical and useful from the customer's standpoint. Theoretically it ought to be more economical to conduct the banking business of the country by the large banks than by the old small bank; but if economy is not practiced and losses in operation make it impossible to accommodate the public with most reasonable rates an undue burden is placed on the merchant and manufacturer, and all those who use a bank's services, and industry is hampered.

I endorse the prevailing idea in the latter part of the proposed amendment to the effect that there should be publicity as regards real estate holdings. In the Banking and Commerce Committee I moved that this should take the form of a disclosure of assessed value to shareholders in the annual statement; but any idea that makes for further publicity should be welcomed. With the other part of the amendment I am not so in accord. I think it can be laid down as a truism that any restriction on our banks is a tax on its customers, and I therefore would hesitate, as I have in the Banking and Commerce Committee, to impose restrictions on the banks, especially such as may react on others interested.

Mr. OLIVER: I have not in mind the exact wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), but the question involved in the consideration of this section is one which may be considered without direct reference to that amendment. It may be assumed that the bank has a right to do as it pleases with its own property. This section says that the bank may hold real estate for its own use, and I assume that if that provision were not there the bank would not be entitled to hold real estate; in other words, the bank would not be entitled to do as it pleased with its own money. It is bound to be assumed that whoever drafted the first Bank Act; whoever drafted the provision that is contained in section 79 did so for reasons which at that time and afterwards were supposed to be good reasons for the existence of that provision. At any rate it is to be assumed that there exists the right to restrict the bank in the use of the funds under its control. When it is considered that something like three-quarters of the funds controlled by the bank do not belong to the banks, but to the people at large, it is easily seen that any legislation authorizing the banks to do business and clothing them with authority to control this vast sum of money that does not belong to them, may very reasonably contain provisions restricting the banks in the use of such money. So I take it that that is the foundation reason for the provisions of section 79; that the banks not being the owners of the larger part of the money that they control, Parliament takes the right to say what they shall not do with this money which does not belong to them. That is to say, of the money which belongs to the people whom Parliament represents, Parliament has the right, and it is the duty of Parliament, to say how far a bank may go in its disposition. I take it that this section contemplated the possibility of such a condition as exists to-day, a condition in which the money of the people is used or liable to be used by the banks for purposes that are more in the interests of the banks than in the interests of the owners of the money. It was contemplated by those who framed the Bank Act that the banks would want to use the money of their depositors to construct buildings which would give them prestige in the eyes of the public, and thereby assist in advancing their business, and it was considered by the framers of the Bank Act that that was not a proper use to which to put that money.

But I gathered from what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said, that it is not the money of the depositors that is used for the erection of those buildings, that it is the money of the banks; that is to say, it is either the money of the shareholders or the profits of the shareholders that are employed in the purchase of those properties and in the erection of buildings. If that be the fact, and that fact is guaranteed, then the contention that the money of the depositor is being used for this purpose falls to the ground, and the interest of the depositor is sufficiently protected.

But there is nothing in the bank returns which show conclusively whether it is the money of the depositors, or the profits of the bank that are being employed in the erection of those buildings. I maintain first of all, that such a statement should be produced by the bank from year to year, so that it would be known conclusively whether those properties were being acquired out of the money of the depositors, or out of the money of the shareholders. It is desirable that that should be known for this reason: My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has said that it is desirable that the bank should keep its funds in liquid form, because when money is placed on deposit with a bank, the bank is liable to be called upon to return that money at any time. Therefore, it is all the more necessary that money, which the bank is liable to be called upon to return at any time, should not be in such a form that it cannot be returned at any time. Under any circumstances, money that belongs to the depositor should not be tied up in permanent form in real estate investments, at any rate, beyond the immediate necessities of the bank itself. That, I think, will be taken for granted. When such large investments are being made, it is right and proper that the Government, as trustees for the public, should have knowledge as to the use that is being made of that money. We will assume that none of the depositors' money is being used in that way. We will assume that those properties are purchased and buildings erected thereon out of the money paid in by shareholders, or out of the profits made by the management of the bank. If that be the case, if those buildings are built out of the bank's legitimate profits, there is no question that the buildings properly belong to the shareholders of the bank. On the face of it, they have a right to erect such buildings as they please, and to invest in such property as they please with the profits that they have made. But then we come to the point made by my hon. friend from Queens and Shelburne (Mr. McCurdy), that if those properties are acquired and those buildings are erected out of the legitimate profits made by the banks, the banks are certainly making more money than they are entitled to make, and the fact that, instead of listing in their statement of assets those properties at cost, or at their present value, they list them at half or less than half, in fact at only a nominal value, is absolute evidence that if those buildings represent bank profits, the banks are afraid to state to the people of Canada what their profits are. They are deliberately carrying on business at a scale of profit which they are afraid to let the people of Canada know for fear that when the Bank Act comes up for revision, as it comes up to-day, measures would be taken to bring the business more in line with the hints thrown out by the hon. member for Queens and Shelburne. It has been said that it is not possible to interfere with the law of supply and demand in the matter of over-paying interest on deposits or fixing a limit of interest to be paid on loans. But this whole Bank Act from beginning to end is an interference with the law of supply and demand. It is a special provision, giving special powers, under special limitations, for special purposes, and certainly if it is evident that under the privileges and powers given by Parliament to those financial organizations they are able to make such profits that they are afraid to give the facts to the public, I think it is a condition of affairs that calls for earnest consideration, and that Parliament is not justified in allowing the Bank Act to go through with that condition existing within its knowledge.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance spoke of the advantage of the banks keeping a large amount of money in New York so that it would be available in liquid form to meet the demands from time to time. I was very greatly impressed with the view he then expressed, and not having heard at the moment from my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell), I was rather inclined to support it, and I am still so inclined; but if there is any necessity for the banks to keep millions of money in New York in order that that money shall be in liquid form, there is just as much necessity for them not investing their money in assets upon which they cannot realize, and upon which, if they were compelled to realize, they could not get more than say fifty or twenty-five cents on the dollar. I say it is just as necessary that their capital held in Canada should be kept in liquid form as that the capital sent to New York should be kept in liquid form. The fact remains that the banks invest enormous sums in sites and buildings, and if the money so invested is the money of their depositors, they are using it improperly. If they make those investments out of their profits, their profits are unquestionably excessive. The admitted fact that the value of these investments is not disclosed in the returns which are made from time to time to the Government is evidence of an impropriety that certainly should not be permitted and this should not go through Parliament without a thorough sifting and without such legislation as will produce a satisfactory readjustment. With evidence before us that millions of money are invested in real estate and in buildings, it is right that the shareholders and the country should know how much money has been so invested. It is not a question of what the value of these buildings is today as going concerns or what would be their selling price in case the bank vacated them; the question is, how much of the money of the depositors and how much of the profits which have been taken from the borrowers have gone into the purchase of these properties or the erection of these buildings? It is admitted on all sides that an excessive amount of money has been so employed. I assert that it is not only the right, but that it is the duty of Parliament and of the Government, before this Bill is assented to, to find out just to what extent that condition exists and to make such provision in legislation as will prevent any impropriety that exists in connection with it at the present time being continued.

Mr. NICKLE: Perhaps it would be only fair to say to the House that it was not for want of effort that the Act was not amended so that useful publicity would be given to the holding of real estate by the various banks of Canada. But we were met by the fact that no more lucid language could be used than that of section 79 as drawn in the old Act and as drawn in the present Act. There could have been no more clear cut enunciation of the principle that the banks should not hold real estate than the wording of this section which reads as follows:

> The Bank may acquire and hold real and immovable property for its actual use and occupation and the management of its business, and may sell or dispose of the same, and acquire other property in its stead for the same purpose.

Section 83 specifically makes a declaration against continuing loans being made by banks on real estate. The whole purport of the Act, is that the banking institutions should provide ready money for the commerce of Canada. But during the consideration of the Act before the committee we found that while the banking interests readily admitted that the declarations of the Act were against the holding of real estate, they were equally bold in their declaration that they had ignored the restrictions of the Act. Let me call the attention of the committee to the statement of Mr. Pease, general manager of the Royal Bank, who gave evidence before the committee. Clause 79 of the Act was read, and he was asked:

> I was asking whether you interpreted that clause to mean that the banks should not acquire or hold real estate in excess of what they occupy?

To which he answered:

> That is the intention of the clause and so far as the Royal Bank is concerned, we have tried to live up to it, and I do not think that we have transgressed. We have one building of fifteen storeys which we inherited. We have five buildings of four storeys, twenty-six buildings of three; seventy-one of two; and sixteen of one, making 119 buildings in all. We occupy forty-three exclusively for our own purposes.

Mr. AMES: Or as tenants.

Mr. NICKLE: Or as tenants in other buildings. Then, in answer to the minister, Mr. Pease said:

> I have a statement here showing the position of the banks in Canada as a whole. The proportion of bank premises to paid-up capital is 32.86, to capital and reserve 17.04, to total assets 2.55, and I have prepared a statement showing that in Scotland by comparison the proportion of bank premises to paid-up capital is 47.97 as against 32.86 in Canada. The proportion of capital and reserve is 26.26 as against 17.04, and in proportion to total assets 3.12 as against 2.55.

Mr. OLIVER: Was that the actual value or the value set down in the books of the banks?

Mr. NICKLE: That is just what I was going to enlarge upon. The figures proved themselves of very little value, because, being addressed by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson), Mr. Pease said that these did not represent the true value of the real estate but the value of the real estate as given in the returns, and he set out in his evidence that in the bank which he particularly represented he thought their equity was between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000; in other words, that the real estate of the Royal Bank was undervalued in its statement to the Government by some $5,000,000 or that it was put in at about half its proper value. I quite agree with what the hon. member from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) says that, if at the present time there is no section in the Act which compels the observance of this provision, it certainly is time that Parliament took such steps as would make the public aware of the amount of the funds that are invested by banks in real estate, and what is the true value of this real estate so that the people may have some adequate idea of what the profits of the bank really are. If this system is allowed to continue, if values are to be written up and written down, the bank can make a stated rate of profit and the people at large, particularly the shareholders, have no means of accurately knowing whether the bank is being concerned in a businesslike, or in a lawless, manner and whether the banks are really becoming speculators in real estate.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): Before the minister replies to what has been said by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), I would like to say a word. I paid particular attention to the evidence given before the Banking and Commerce Committee relative to this question and from the evidence that was adduced there it was apparent that clause 79 of the Act was a dead letter. Every bank in existence is violating the terms of that section. There was an amendment moved by the hon. member for Queens and Shelburne (Mr. McCurdy), I think, requiring the banks to make a return of the assessed value, in addition to the nominal value of real estate held by them. But the committee, in its wisdom, voted that down. There was much evidence given that the value of real estate as put in the bank's returns was not indicative of the real value and, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Kingston, this is a grave injustice to the shareholders of the bank excepting those who are on the inside. Only the board of directors, with the statement as it is now, know what the real value of the real estate is; consequently they have an advantage in buying and holding the stock of the bank over other shareholders. It is a great injustice to the shareholders or to any person who desires to purchase the stock. I agree with hon. members who have supported the contention that there should be some limitation to the right of banks to speculate in real estate and compete in that regard with individuals. The banks are strong financial institutions and there is no reason why they should invest the money of the depositors in the purchase of expensive corners and the erection of sky-scrapers. A corrective of this would be a provision by which the minister would be empowered to compel the banks to make a return at stated intervals of the real value of their real estate holdings. The minister might use his influence to compel that return to be made perhaps once a year and also to compel the banks to correct this grave evil in connection with our banking system.

Mr. WHITE: As has been stated, the committee had before it an amendment providing that a return should be made of the assessed value of the several offices of the banks throughout the Dominion. I think it was felt that the assessed value was not a good criterion of the real value, because the assessor is very apt to take the value of the land and add to it the value of the building having regard to its cost. That would not be a proper way of estimating the value of bank premises. I have given the matter a good deal of thought, and I am in favour of a return which would not be misleading in character, and yet would give a general idea to the public of the value of the premises held by banks in the Dominion. I have an amendment along the lines of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) and by my hon. friend from Queens-Shelburne (Mr. McCurdy) in the committee. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) seemed to think it would be better, instead of having a valuation of the premises as of to-day, to have a return showing how much money had gone into the bank premises; but I submit for his consideration that that would be misleading, for the reason that the banks have been in operation in Canada for many years, the Bank of Montreal almost a hundred years, and many properties acquired years ago at a very low cost have become extremely valuable. I should more highly value a return, so far as it can be ascertained, of the fair valuation of bank premises to-day. I will give an illustration to my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) from his own city. I remember purchasing the corner of Jasper and First avenues in Edmonton for a financial institution I represented at $350 a foot; but afterwards building in another place and not needing the property, it was sold at $2,000 a foot, and I suppose it is now worth $2,500 or $3,000 a foot. I submit that so far as a return by the institution holding that particular corner is concerned, it would be more to the interest of the public that the fair valuation of that corner should be incorporated in the return. What I have in mind is that the banks should indicate to the public what their holdings of real estate are worth on a fair valuation, so far as it can be ascertained by the exercise of good judgment. The English financial system inclines to the view endorsed by Mr. McLeod that the banks should show their holdings of real estate at a low figure. I have in my hand a return of one of the principal banks in London, and I find this wording:

Bank premises, chiefly freehold, at cost or under.

In other words, if they had written off half the cost, then only half the cost would appear as the valuation. The English practice has been to consider it meritorious to show the valuation of bank premises under and not in excess of cost. The financial position of the Bank of Montreal was judged to be extremely sound, and the bank had a very high standing, because, among other reasons it showed its entire premises which were worth perhaps several million dollars at only $600,000. The reason that opinion prevails is that the financial community likes to see a bank's balance sheet liquid; it does not like to see too much money locked up in real estate, because it is not immediately realizable and available for the purpose of meeting demand liabilities. The committee had in view that it is possible for the banks under the returns now made to show a condition that is misleading inasmuch as the bank may have very valuable bank premises written down to one-third or one-half their real value. I would submit for the consideration of the committee what I had in mind when the Bill was before the Banking and Commerce Committee but did not submit because the committee decided that the making of a return on assessed values might be misleading; and of course banks are a fair mark for municipalities who desire to obtain the full taxation therefrom. I would submit, as an amendment to clause 79, the following:

The bank shall annually, during the month of January, make to the minister a return showing in detail the fair market value of its real and immovable property held under this section.

I do not believe that the clause referring to the actual use and occupation of the bank could be strengthened, and this amendment will provide for the fair valuation of the premises of the bank which can be checked by any person who desires to check it. In that way we will have the fair market value of the premises which may be subject to such comment as the public may desire to make on it. I do not believe the banks will suffer at all in public estimation if their balance sheets show in respect to their real estate about its exact value.

Mr. EMMERSON: The amendment of the minister covers the point as to publicity which I had view. I can appreciate the difficulties with respect to exposing the banks to an admission of their false position in the past if we were to limit their holdings to five per cent of the combined capital and reserve, because if we did so evidently it would be out of proportion to existing conditions. Apparently, if it were possible to get at the real value of bank premises throughout Canada it would be found that probably nearly twenty-five per cent of the combined capital and reserve of the Canadian banks was invested in real estate, ostensibly for their own use but in reality in many instances for the use of their tenants. I would not wish to move an amendment to clause 79 without the approval of the minister, but in leaving that section as it is we are in a way placing the banks in the position of being real estate dealers.

Mr. OLIVER: While the hon. minister's proposal for publicity is very good, he does not touch the point that I think the country should have information on, and that is the amount of money that is being invested by the banks in these properties from year to year. I am not asking for information in reference to what has taken place in the past. If we are to know what profits the banks are making, we must know what amount of money they are investing in real estate from year to year. It would be satisfactory to the shareholders, after knowing what amount of money went into real estate, to know what value that real estate had from year to year afterwards.

Mr. WHITE: There will be a difference each year. I think we ought to be able to get that information.

Mr. OLIVER: There is no information as to how much money was invested originally, and I think that is something the shareholders are entitled to know. With regard to the section as it stands, and this amendment, I venture to make a suggestion. The law is on the statute-book. The Government is responsible for seeing that that law is carried out. As long as this section remains as it is, it is the Minister of Finance who is in question as well as the banks, if the banks do not live within the terms of the section.

Mr. WHITE: I intend to have a heart to heart talk with the Bankers' Association in regard to these and other matters.

Mr. CARVELL: They will stand a lot of that.

Mr. WHITE: As I read section 79, I agree that banks are absolutely prohibited from holding real estate beyond what is required for their actual use. We have not changed the law in that respect. I think the matter should be drawn to the attention of the banks.

Amendment agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 91—interest which may be charged:

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): I do not think this clause was given the consideration that it was entitled to in the committee. According to the section as it stands, a bank can charge any rate of interest, and it would be an extraordinary condition of affairs to permit a bank to over-ride the ordinary usury laws and to charge any rate of interest, no matter how necessitous a customer might be. I would respectfully suggest to the hon. Minister of Finance that he should revert to the old section. While it is objectionable inasmuch as it is being violated as other sections in the Act, still in its original form it is not so objectionable as in the present form. In the original section there is a stipulation by which banks cannot charge more than seven per cent; that acts as a corrective.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) will recall that when this section was under consideration by the committee, I stated that it was entirely acceptable to myself that the section should remain as it was. Other members of the committee, however, were of the view that the section on its face permitted a rate of interest to the banks not exceeding seven per cent. That certainly appears to be the case. I shall read the section as it was originally, that is to say, in the revision of 1901:

> The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact any rate of interest or discount, not exceeding seven per centum per annum, and may receive and take in advance, any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

It seems to me that is as clear a statement that the bank is limited to maximum seven per cent as it is possible to make it in a statute. Notwithstanding that section 91 and the plain language therein contained, the banks have been taking rates of interest in excess of seven per cent and have been taking those rates in advance, following their usual practice. If a man borrows a hundred dollars from a bank for a year at eight per cent, the bank would not give him $100 at the time the loan was negotiated and then take his note for $100 at eight per cent, but would give him $92 and take his note for $100. The banks' practice in taking a higher rate of interest than seven per cent has been sanctioned by a judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council delivered by Lord Moulton on the 17th of February, 1913, in the case of McHugh versus the Union Bank. I shall only read one section of that decision which seems to confirm the right of the bank to take such rates of interest as may be stipulated for, provided it is taken in advance. This is the quotation:

> The plaintiff must be taken to have known that the bank had no right to stipulate for and no power to recover interest at eight per cent, but he voluntarily assented to that which was equivalent to payment of interest at that rate, and he has no right to recover back any excess which he thus voluntarily paid.

That finding surprised me, for this reason. It proceeds upon the principle of estoppel. If a man agrees with a bank that he will pay eight per cent, he cannot be heard to say that that is not a binding agreement between him and the bank. I should have thought it would be argued in contravention of that that it was ultra vires of the bank to take more than seven per cent. That either was not argued or was regarded as not arguable by the Judicial Committee. The effect of the finding is that a bank may take any rate of interest that is stipulated for, provided it takes it by way of discount and deducts it at the time the loan is made. Take the case of seven per cent under that decision. Suppose that a bank made a loan to a man of $100 with interest at eight per cent, and did not deduct it in advance, and then sought to recover it by action. I think without question, under that decision, the bank would be limited to seven per cent interest. The decision goes further and holds that, if the loan has gone past maturity, only the legal rate of interest of five per cent can be recovered for the period after maturity. If we sum all that up, because the law is not only this section but this decision under it, the law to-day is as follows: If a bank makes its bargain with a man who borrows the money at 8 or 10 or 12 or 20 or 30 per cent, and deducts it at the time the loan is made, the bank's action in doing so is legal under the decision which I have quoted; but, if the bank loans the money upon a note bearing interest at 8 per cent or 15 per cent or 20 per cent, and does not deduct the amount of interest at the time the loan is made, then the bank cannot recover by process of law interest at a higher rate than five per cent. Further, if the loan goes past maturity, the bank under the McHugh case, is limited to the legal rate of interest of five per cent for such period after maturity. It was pointed out by the committee that the test of the law to-day and the practice of the banks, to which I have referred, are in contravention of what appear at all events to be the plain terms of section 91, and it was thought advisable that the anomaly should be removed if possible. I stated at the time that the government was entirely willing that the section should stand as it was or that it should be made so as to show the law as it exists to-day. Consequently the section was amended by the committee to read as follows:

The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact such rate of interest or discount per annum as may be agreed upon, and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest than seven per cent shall be recoverable by the bank.

That, as I understand it, represents the law as it is to-day; but, having regard to the reasons put forth by my hon. friend from North Ontario that the section should be allowed to remain as it is, I am entirely agreeable to that course. Because, when you have a section which has stood for a number of years and a decision under it has been given, there is always a danger that a new clause, no matter how carefully drafted, may be given a different meaning by the courts from that which the draftsman intended. Therefore, as I say, as the intention in drafting this new clause was only to embody the law as it is to-day, it might possibly be better, if the committee agree with my hon. friend from North Ontario, to allow the clause to stand as it is.

The question may be asked: why not limit the rate of interest to seven per cent? I think the evidence before the committee on that point satisfied all the members that such a provision would recoil on the public which it was the intention to benefit, namely, the borrowing community, and especially the small borrower. The evidence given showed that in the West the prevailing rates were eight and nine per cent; and on the other hand it was known that rates of interest were known as high as sixteen and even twenty-four per cent. But these higher rates were in cases of this kind: A man borrows $25 for three months and gives his note. The bank charges him $1 as a minimum charge. That would be at the rate of $4 a year for $25, which is sixteen per cent. The evidence showed that it would hardly be possible for the bank to make a loan at a charge of less than $1, because there is as much trouble in making a loan of $25 as in making one of $200. It is known also that the amount of loans in the West are very many times in excess of the deposits of the districts in which they are made, and therefore the banks have to obtain a higher rate of interest than they would have to obtain from discount business in districts where, in addition to making the loans, they receive the funds from which the loans are made.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not able to propose an amendment to the clause as it is in the Bill, nor am I able to accept the proposal that my hon. friend from North Ontario has made to replace the clause formerly in the Act, if that clause has the same effect that the minister has specified. I take it, as in the case of the section that we were discussing a while ago, that whoever framed the Bank Act in the first place, and whoever framed the section corresponding to this in regard to the rate of interest, had the intention of limiting the rate of interest. I take for granted, in view of what has been said by the minister and by the hon. member for North Ontario, as well as from my own reading of it, that it was the intent that the rate of interest should be limited. Now, I know it is asserted that the rate of interest cannot be limited, that it must be governed by the law of supply and demand. And to a certain extent, I am willing to agree that that is a fact. Allow me to suggest that there are other elements entering into this question than the mere question of supply and demand. It has been mentioned before and I mention it again, this Bank Act is a special provision, it is an attempt to legislate upon supply and demand. At every point from beginning to end, it governs, or assumes to govern, both supply and demand. There are reasons why that should be so. The banks are handling the money of the people. Their own money would give them but a small part of their profit; it is out of the money that does not belong to them, but belongs to the people who are especially under the protection of this Parliament, that the banks make their money. And it is because of that fact that the Bank Act from beginning to end contains restrictions as well as empowering clauses. Now, it is a well-known rule that if you have high interest you must take great risk, the risk corresponding to the interest. I say that, considering the source from which the banks derive the money that they loan, they should not take such risks as warrant these high rates of interest. It is contrary to the whole principle of the Bank Act from beginning to end, it is contrary to the welfare of every interest that the Bank Act was supposed to conserve, that the banks should be allowed to take excessive interest, because that means they are taking excessive risks. Now, it is said, if they are not allowed to take excessive interest they will not do business. From my point of view, having regard to the basic principles of the Bank Act, that is the proper course; if they have to take a big risk they should refuse to do the business. It is no part of the business of the chartered bank to take such risks for the sake of high interest. It is not the purpose for which they are created; it is not the purpose for which they are empowered. While the evil has not been carried to any great extent up to the present time—I will admit that; the evil at the present time is only serious to the person who is borrowing at the high rate of interest, and, of course possibly his security is in proportion to the rate, but if the bank be authorized and empowered by Parliament, if it is to be permitted that they can go into the business of charging excessive rates of interest, I maintain that, while the bank profits may be maintained, the risks of bank losses are correspondingly increased and danger to depositors is increased equally.

As regards the conditions in the West, there is no reason why the bank interest in the West should be higher than it is in the East. The fact that money is not deposited in the West makes no difference. For what purpose do we endorse a system of centralized and branch banks, except to give the benefit of having the money of depositors in one place to be loaned out at another place? Banks are anxious to do business in the West; they come there in large numbers; they spread their branches over the prairies; they build their buildings and pay high rates for property. There is no reason why the borrower on the western prairie should pay to the bank a rate of interest that will enable the bank to pay fancy prices for property and put up magnificient buildings that are not necessary for the bank's business. There is no reason why interest in the West should be higher than it is anywhere else, and, as a western man, I desire to protest absolutely against the contention that it should be. The Bank Act should limit the rates that the companies should be entitled to pay or to collect. There is no reason why the banks should be nominally restricted but actually allowed to enter into the business of usury, and that is what some of the banks in the West are doing to-day. I am not able to propose an amendment, but I want to affirm the principle that there should be no distinction in the rates of interest in the West and the East, and that there is no sufficient ground for any such difference in the rates of interest. Reputable banks in the West are not charging usurious interest; it is the banks that are not reputable who are charging those excessive rates, and there is no reason why banks who want to go into the business of usury should be permitted to do so as competitors of those who do not want to go into that business. The original intent of the framers of the Bank Act, as shown in the clause as it formerly stood—namely that it was right and proper that there should be a limit to the rate of interest charged—was a proper principle, and if it was not effectively embodied in the Act as it formerly stood, it should, in the light of present knowledge and of present conditions, be effectively embodied in the Act as it passes through Parliament to-day. I do not say that the figure should be seven per cent, eight per cent, nine per cent or ten per cent, but I do say that there should be fixed whatever maximum the sense of Parliament should agree to be proper, and that the law should be so framed and administered that a bank that desired to go into the business of usury should not be permitted to do so, and if it did, it should be punished.

Mr. SEXSMITH: I took objection to this clause in the Banking and Commerce Committee, and I wish to register my protest again. For my part I cannot see why we should allow a corporate body to charge any rate of interest they choose; we have laws at present in nearly every province of Canada prohibiting an individual from doing so. I do not say that the banks have been charging usurious rates, but there is nothing to prevent them from doing so, and the principle involved in this clause is that, if any individual goes to a bank desiring to obtain a loan of from $25, $50, $100 or even $5,000, and if he is sufficiently hard-pressed to pay 25 per cent or 50 per cent upon the loan, the bank is legally entitled to take it. In reading over the two clauses, the old section and the one proposed under the present Bill, I agree with the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), but if the interpretation asserted by the hon. Minister of Finance to have been put upon that clause by the courts is correct, then I would take objection to that also, and would agree with the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that the clause should be so worded as to place the banks on equal terms with individuals who may be in the money business.

Mr. KYTE: I also desire to protest against the provisions of this section as pointed out by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe). There is a law on the Statute Book at the present time which regulates the rate of interest which other persons shall charge for the use of money, and I cannot see why this Parliament should accord to the banking institutions of this country privileges which are denied to ordinary individuals. During the discussion on the second reading of this Bill I pointed out that the tendency towards merging financial institutions in this country has resulted in an increased rate of interest to the small borrower. The Minister of Finance has said that at the present time when small loans are put through the bank there is a minimum rate of 75 cents or $1 which is, as a matter of fact, sometimes 15 per cent of the loan, according to the amount. A minimum rate of 75 cents or $1 is of course a very small rate for the borrower to pay. If a man goes into a bank and borrows $25, and the bank charges him $1 for putting the loan through, there is not much to quarrel about, but if the borrower desires to obtain $100 or $500, the bank manager, under the provisions of this section, if it is allowed to remain in the Act, and if the necessities of the borrower are sufficiently great, may exact a rate of 15 per cent, which would be a very considerable tax upon the borrower. I think that if no better protection or safeguard can be made for the small borrower in his transactions with the bank under the section which has been substituted for the clause in the present Act, I think the present Act ought to prevail. At all events the provisions of the old law do not legalize the exaction of extortion, as this section would do. The hon. Minister of Finance stated that the banks were heretofore improperly imposing illegal rates of interest upon the borrower; yet under this section we propose to legalize what it is illegal for the banks to do at the present time.

Mr. WHITE: Allow me to correct my hon. friend; I am afraid I have not made myself sufficiently clear. Section 91 of the present law apparently limits the rate to 7 per cent, but I pointed out that the decision in the McHugh case was that if the rate of interest were stipulated in advance—and that has been done for years—the bank could legally take the rate of interest so stipulated. So that the profits of the banks have been quite legal, although apparently contrary not only to the spirit but to the letter of section 91. I would like to say further that when this Act was originally drafted, Canada was, of course, a different country from what it is to-day. Evidence was given before the committee to show that at the time of the gold rush in the Yukon territory, which is a part of Canada, rates of interest were as high as from 24 per cent to 36 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent a month; and it was also shown that the expenses of carrying on the business of the banks at that time in Dawson city were enormous. The banks said they would never repeat the experiment. It was pointed out that a plate of pork and beans cost, I think, $5, and it was stated that the cheapest thing in Dawson at that time was money. We, therefore, must have regard to the fact that we have a country the size of Europe, with different conditions prevailing in its different sections.

My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) contended for an equalization of rates. I think that would be very desirable if we could accomplish it without denying bank accommodation to sections of the community in which he is particularly interested. I do not believe you will ever be able to put legislation on the statute book that will compel banks which, like others, after all, are pursuing their vocation for the sake of gain, to go into a particular district remote from the central communities, unless they think that the opening of that branch will immediately or prospectively result in gain. The evidence before the committee showed that banks would not go into new sections of the country if confined to a rate of interest of say seven per cent. In fact, evidence was given, and some members of the committee may dilate upon this, to show that it would be very unprofitable for the banks to do that, and that as a matter of fact it would result in depriving many communities of banking accommodation which they very greatly need, and for which they would be willing to pay eight, ten or even twelve per cent. In other words, the law of supply and demand would govern. If we limited the rates of interest absolutely to seven per cent, in other words, if we changed section 91 so as to give legal effect to what was obviously in the mind of its original drafter, instead of benefiting the borrower, we should take a step that would recoil to his disadvantage. There are districts in the Northwest and in the Yukon and other parts of Canada where the banks are under exceptional expense in opening up their branches. That being the case, and in order to remove the anomaly, the committee decided upon the clause which appears in the Act now before the committee, but in view of the request of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), and of other members of the committee, who were, I think, quite properly of the view that the decision of the Privy Council to which I have referred permitted the banks to take in advance the rate stipulated for, and when they sought to recover by a process of law, limited them to the maximum rate of seven per cent before maturity and five per cent after maturity, and in view of the further fact that it is impossible to forecast what legal decision might be given on a new wording, I have said to this committee, as I said to the Banking and Commerce Committee, that I am entirely willing to restore clause 91 as it appears in the present Act. In other words, not to disturb the wording, the banks will be in whatever position they were in under the express wording of section 91, which appears to limit the rate to seven per cent. It is only fair to the committee to say that according to the McHugh decision they have the right to a higher rate if taken in advance.

Mr. KYTE: We must not forget that we are legislating for the whole of Canada. While it may be said that conditions as regards banking, and the value of money, were unusual in the Yukon some years ago, those conditions do not prevail to the same extent at the present time. If this section passes, it will not only enable a bank manager in the Yukon to charge a rate of interest according to the necessities of the borrower, but it will result in increasing the rate of interest all over Canada. The advantage of the section that exists under the present law at all events is that it indicates that it was in the mind of Parliament that banks should have no right to exact a larger rate of interest than seven per cent. That circumstance had the effect of operating upon the consciences of some bank managers in eastern Canada.

Mr. OLIVER: Upon what?

Mr. KYTE: Some bank managers have consciences.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I have handed in an amendment under which clause 65 will be restored.

Mr. KYTE: I would prefer the former clause.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. White moves:

That clause 91 be struck out, and that the following be substituted therefor: 'The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact any rate of interest not exceeding seven per centum per annum and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.'

Mr. McCURDY: The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was not, I think, present at the sittings of the Banking and Commerce Committee. The evidence produced there was to the effect that the operating cost of a branch in western Canada was some two per cent on the total volume of business in excess of the cost of operating a branch in eastern Canada. I think it was Mr. Henderson who produced those figures, and he explained that his bank therefore charged on an average two per cent more interest for similar business in a large centre in the East. In other words, the reason given by that banker for the higher rates was the higher operating cost. We all know that there is a very large demand from the West for money. The West is prosperous, and we all rejoice in that. But the fact remains that, under our banking system to-day—and it is particularly true at the present moment—the West can only be supplied with the money it needs by draining the East dry. Some three or four years ago, in 1909, the National Monetary Commission of the United States was investigatisg the banking systems of different countries with the idea of making a report to Congress. They sent to this country Mr. Joseph French Johnson who, in April, 1910, reported to the National Monetary Commission. I have here in his published reports his conclusions regarding the Canadian banking system, and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read one bearing on the point raised by my hon. friend from Edmonton.

Mr. Johnston makes the statement that when making his investigation of the Canadian system in 1909, he had access to information of the most reliable kind. On page 92 of his report he says:

This transference of funds from sluggish to active communities is the inevitable result of a system of branch banking, and is the cause of the tendency of the rate of interest toward uniformity in all parts of Canada. Whatever may be said against a system of branch banks, there can be no question that it does bring about a more even distribution of capital in a country than is possible under a system of independent local banks. Canadian bank managers are anxious to put out their money where it is most wanted, for there they get the best possible rate of interest and obtain paper of the best quality. No matter where a manager's headquarters may be he is most deeply concerned in three questions: (1) Where is idle money accumulating? (2) How can he best draw it into his bank? (3) In what parts of the Dominion is money most needed? In localities of both kinds he establishes branches; in the one the branches accumulate deposits often much in excess of their loans, in the others the loans exceed the deposits.

Thus it happens that the savings of the eastern provinces, where the growth of industry and trade is slow and the demand for new capital is not increasing, are sent westward and loaned out to merchants and manufacturers and farmers of the new territories. The people of the East supply the capital for the development of the West, though many of them perhaps are entirely ignorant of the useful purpose their savings are made to perform. In the western cities of Canada one hears no talk among business men about the scarcity of capital.

That was written in 1909. There are complaints at the present time, but the present money stringency is world wide.

Mr. OLIVER: If my hon. friend will take a trip out there now, he will hear something different.

Mr. McCURDY: I do not have to go so far as that for complaints regarding money scarcity to-day; but that will pass. (Reading):

A merchant or manufacturer in Manitoba gets the money he needs as easily as does a merchant or manufacturer in Toronto or Montreal.

Justifiable as the bank's policy is from a national point of view, one cannot help believing that the branch banking system has really checked development of business and industry in the maritime provinces. If Canada during the last thirty years had depended, like the United States, upon independent local banks, there would have been a plethora of capital in the East, and Montreal, Quebec and Halifax, like Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, would years ago have had 4 and 5 per cent money, while Winnipeg and other western cities, less populous than now, would still be paying one per cent a month. The relative cheapness of capital undoubtedly helped build up the prosperous industries of Massachusetts. The same cause operating in the maritime provinces of Canada would doubtless have led to the establishment there of industries of which the people under existing conditions have not ventured to dream.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I wish to register my protest, along with that of the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith), against this clause in either shape. Something has been said about suggesting another amendment. I would like to make a suggestion to the minister as to how an amendment might be made. He has referred to a decision in England that, when the interest is charged in advance, and when it is a discount, the law does not apply. I do not think the law will apply at all under the section as it was before and as it appears now because it is drafted so that it shall not apply.

Mr. WHITE: The decision was given under section 91 of the present Act, which, I say, we are restoring.

Mr. THOMSON: The decision will be exactly the same under the present Act.

Mr. WHITE: No doubt.

Mr. THOMSON: If the law applies now to prevent a banker from recovering interest after the date of payment it can be made to apply to the discount as well and if so I see no reason why we should not say so. If that is one of the difficulties in the way it is very easy to overcome it. I would make the suggestion to the minister, so that he can remove any doubt that there is at present, that he insert after the words 'per cent' in the final line, the words 'either by way of interest, discount or otherwise.' Would not that cover it?

Mr. WHITE: That would limit the rate absolutely to seven per cent would it not?

Mr. THOMSON: I am only dealing with this one difficulty now which the minister has raised and I think the minister will be willing to confess that the insertion of these words will do away with this difficulty.

Mr. WHITE: Yes.

Mr. THOMSON: Then, one of the difficulties that has been placed before us is removed. If these words will not remove it the minister can very easily provide words that will. So long as he makes the enactment clear the judges are bound to enforce it. Another objection has been raised by the minister and that is that in the case of a small amount loaned for a short time the interest recoverable is very small. That is very easily overcome. If we were to make an exception where the minimum amount of interest does not amount to one dollar, it would overcome the difficulty. Thus, there are two difficulties which seem to have been wiped off the slate. I am not dealing with the question as to whether the rate of interest shall be limited to seven per cent. If seven per cent is too low make it higher. But if we are going to have a rate of interest let us enforce that rate. If you say that a certain amount of interest shall be charged and that only, let us provide machinery which will ensure the enforcement of that law. I must confess that I doubt very much if the present machinery will enforce it. I made the suggestion when the matter was before the House on the second reading of the Bill that the only way of making that provision effective was by Government inspection or by having some Government official to deal with it. The borrower is not going to enforce it because, as a matter of fact, he dare not enforce it. If he is a regular borrower and if he refuses to pay more than the rate of interest that the law allows the banker can easily say: If you do that, all right, we shall not lend you any more money. Notwithstanding all that has been said about competition between the banks I believe that there is enough close corporation among them that if a man were shut out of one bank he would be shut out of other banks too. The borrowers feel that and therefore such an enactment would have to be enforced by the Government. I am not asking the minister to state any particular rate of interest, but that the Government enforce the rate that is decided upon. We are told that there should be a higher rate of interest in the Yukon and in western Canada than in eastern Canada. I do not like the idea of zones, but if it is really necessary you could provide zones and you could say that a certain rate of interest shall be charged in a certain locality and another rate could be fixed for another locality. I think there is a good deal more said about the necessity for high interest in the West than is justified. I do not believe that the cost of carrying on the operations of the banks in the West will exceed the cost in the East by more than two per cent. I do not believe some of the things that these men tell us and I doubt very much if the men who say them believe them. We have heard a great deal about the fact that the rate of interest in the West should be higher because there is very little money placed in the banks on deposit in the West. That works both ways. There is apparently enough money generally for the purposes of the country. If there is less deposited in the West than is borrowed there must be more deposited in the East but the people in the East are not prepared to borrow it and therefore it is an advantage to the East to have the West borrowing more than it is depositing. If the East is depositing more money than it is borrowing then, it is necessary to have the West borrow that money; otherwise the East will be losing the interest on the money. So, I think that it is about as broad as it is long. I do not know if I make myself clear to the minister. If the East is depositing more money than the West, and no doubt it is, as a matter of fact there are sufficient deposits in Canada as a rule to meet legitimate requirements. Then, the West is as much advantage to the East as the East is to the West; we borrow the surplus. And with the East and the West working together, we claim we are as much advantage to the East as the East is to us.

Mr. EMMERSON: Provided there is equilibrium.

Mr. THOMSON: It is said the banks will not loan to some people unless the rates are high; but to my mind these extraordinary loans are something like gambling; that is all you can call them. Let us put the maximum rate of interest as high as necessary, and if it goes beyond that on loans the chances are these loans are not in the interest of the country, are not in the interests of the bank, are not even in the interests of the man borrowing. I know of many men who are getting money who would be benefited if they were refused. If a man is paying too high a rate of interest it is because he is too hopeful, and the chances are he will lose. Money is worth just so much; sometimes we think it is worth more than it really is, and because a man by paying a higher rate of interest is getting money when he would not get it otherwise, that results in a disadvantage all around. I think the minister will overcome the difficulties he has mentioned by adopting the two suggestions I have made. If we are to have a rate of interest fixed let us enforce it and not make a mockery of it. If the rate is too low, let us increase it, but do not let us shirk our responsibilities, let us face them like men.

Mr. WHITE: I desire to move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again this day, the reason being that it will enable me to present the supplementary estimates so that the members of the press gallery may get them, as otherwise they would have to wait until after midnight.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1913-14.

A message from His Excellency the Administrator, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1914, was presented by Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL—SECOND READING.

Bill No. 207, respecting a Patent of the Commercial Acetylene Company of New Jersey.—Mr. Maclean (South York).

BANKS AND BANKING.

House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill No. 36, respecting Banks and Banking.—Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance). (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 91—interest which may be charged.

Mr. EMMERSON: When the committee rose, I was going to make some observations with respect to this section. In my judgment, the section as amended by the committee is directly at variance with previous legislation passed by this House, and with the principle which Parliament has recognized for many years. As the amendment of the committee reads, it leaves the door wide open; the banks may charge any rate of interest. I am not going to assume that banks would do so; but I know that it has been done in some sections of the Dominion, as has been demonstrated in trials of important cases in the Supreme Court, notably that of Barretts vs. the Bank of Commerce, a Yukon case. The bank there charged as high as twenty-four per cent on loans and renewals. It was held in that case that where the party had voluntarily paid the amount, he could not recover the excess beyond the seven per cent. We have on the statute-book of Canada the Money Lenders' Act, chapter 122 of the Revised Statutes. Section 6 reads as follows:

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Interest Act, no money-lender shall stipulate for, allow or exact on any negotiable instrument, contract or agreement, concerning a loan of money, the principal of which is under five hundred dollars, a rate of interest or discount greater than twelve per centum per annum; and the said rate of interest shall be reduced to the rate of five per centum per annum from the date of judgment in any suit, action or other proceeding for the recovery of the amount due.

Mr. WHITE: Has my hon. friend had his attention called to the definition of money-lender there?

Mr. EMMERSON: Yes, but that was a principle which was adopted by this Parliament. It was recognized that certain individuals should be restrained. Seeing that it has been demonstrated in the courts of the country that banks have been offenders in this respect and that they have charged as high as twenty-four per cent, this Parliament should put some restriction upon them. My proposition would be to restore the section as it was originally. I would make the rate even higher, if seven per cent is not sufficient. I would have a maximum rate of a certain amount beyond which the banks could not go, that is, that they could not accept or retain any rate beyond that. Of course that would not apply in cases where the interest did not exceed one dollar. Section 4 of the Money Lenders' Act reads:

This Act shall not apply to any loan or transaction in which the whole interest or discount charged or collected in connection therewith does not exceed the sum of fifty cents.

I would say: 'the sum of one dollar.' Where the bank did accept or retain, even with the consent of the party who secured the loan, the excess amount beyond the limitation which we had fixed, it should be recoverable in any court of competent jurisdiction. I would also have a provision that each bank shall furnish a statement monthly to the Minister of Finance showing the maximum and minimum rates of interest or discount charged or retained on loans by such bank at its head office or at any of its branch offices, such statement not to include percentage rates or minimum charges on small loans less than fifty dollars. That would seem to obviate one difficulty with respect to a bank showing a very high rate of interest on a loan of say twenty dollars for a month, where it had charged its minimum charge of fifty or seventy-five cents or a dollar, as the case might be. I would not require banks to make statements as to such small loans; but, if we fixed for them a rate of interest beyond which they must not go, then we should tie them down so that they shall be obliged to return any excess, if the party brings suit against them in any court of competent jurisdiction. Seven per cent as a maximum amount is perhaps too small under present conditions. I do not think banks in the East usually go beyond that; but, in the West they charge as much as eight or twelve per cent, and in this case from the Yukon, they charged a rate as high as twenty-four per cent. Under those circumstances I think we should limit the rate to perhaps 8 per cent, the 8 per cent not to apply to small loans in regard to which a minimum charge is made by the bank. I think if you make the maximum rate higher, the banks should be obliged to refund any excess of that charge, providing the borrower seeks it. In addition to that I would require that this statement be made to the minister monthly, so that publicity should be given as to the minimum and maximum rates charged by the banks of the country.

Mr. WHITE: Does my hon. friend propose to offer an amendment?

Mr. EMMERSON: I was going to propose an amendment with respect to the monthly statement.

Mr. WHITE: I think it would be a mistake to raise the rate of interest from 7 per cent to 8 per cent, even if we made the 8 per cent absolute. In those districts of Canada in which the prevailing rate is now less than 8 per cent, there would be a tendency on the part of the banks to feel a justification that they do not now feel in raising the rate to 8 per cent. I am impressed with the suggestion put forward in the committee that the provision for a 7 per cent rate is an indication to the banks on the part of Parliament, notwithstanding the decision of the Privy Council, that the rates of interest should be moderate. So far as the coast communities are concerned, in which the rates of interest are at present 7 per cent or under, I think the fixing of the rate at 8 per cent would have an adverse influence. Let us take the case of a western community, particularly those parts of the country in which a higher rate than 8 per cent prevails. It was shown to the satisfaction of the committee that the bankers discriminate as to loans; they always have and always will. A gets a better rate than B, because his account is larger, his credit better or his standing higher in the community. A borrower in a particular community where the deposits are large and where there is particularly keen competition will receive more favourable rates than a borrower in a community where there are no depositors, where the deposits are small, or where there is no competition on the part of the banks. The hon. member has mentioned the case of the Yukon. I have no hesitation in saying that if you had had an 8 per cent or 9 per cent maximum rate in the Yukon, fixed by the Bank Act, the business community of that territory would not have received any banking accommodation at all, because the carrying on of the banking business would not have paid. I do not believe that it is feasible to impose legislation that would compel the banks to make loans in any particular community. The banks, so far as the Yukon is concerned at the time of the gold rush, would not have entered the field at all if they had been limited to an 8 per cent or 9 per cent rate. I know that there prevails in the community in general a very considerable sentiment in favour of strictly limiting the rates of interest, but I submit that we must face all the conditions that exist in such a large country as Canada. As legislators, it is our duty to do what we regard to be the proper thing in the interests of the community as a whole, and I am perfectly satisfied that any legislation, so far as western communities are concerned, seeking strictly to limit the rate of interest to eight per cent would defeat the very purpose of those who are desirous of bringing about that condition. I think that banking accommodation would be denied to a large number of borrowers who would be willing to pay eight per cent or ten per cent, especially upon small loans, to their own great advantage. I think that view was amply confirmed by evidence that was taken before the committee. We are all in sympathy with the principle of obtaining as low a rate of interest as we can for the borrowing community, but two things must be borne in mind. In the first place, banking, just like any other business, is engaged in for purposes of gain, and, so long as there is no combination affecting the rates of interest there is, undoubtedly, competition, not only among banks, but between the banks and private lenders of money, for there is a great deal of money loaned in the country by institutions other than the chartered and private banks. It is desirable that bank captial should flow into this country, and if we adopt a rate of discount which will affect or restrict the profits of the bank unduly, I think the whole country would feel the ill-effects of it, because the money would simply cease to flow into that capital. Undoubtedly you will injure the borrowing community if you adopt restrictions that might be too harsh. Evidence was given by the manager of the Weyburn Bank, who produced a statement with regard to his institution—a very carefully managed bank, at least so far as we could judge. It was a bank operating in Saskatchewan, a purely western institution not doing any business in the East at all. His evidence was confirmed by figures which he laid before the committee as to the net earnings of the bank and the rates of discount charged, and it was clearly shown to the satisfaction of the committee that a reduction to seven per cent of the rate of interest which they obtained upon loans would close the doors of the bank. During the course of his examination, I asked him:

Q. I want you to make a little calculation for me. According to the bank statement your current loans and discounts amount to $894,000?—A. Did you take in the past due?

The Chairman.—It is about $910,000.

The Witness.—About $910,000.

By Hon. Mr. White:

Q. How much interest would you lose on these if they were on a 7 per cent basis? What is your average?—A. I would say our average is 9 per cent.

Q. Then you would lose 2 per cent?—A. Yes.

Q. What is 2 per cent on $900,000?—A. $18,000.

Q. How much per cent is that on your capital?—A. About 6 per cent.

Q. How much dividend do you pay?—A. 5 per cent, well, now we make more than that.

Q. If a 2 per cent reduction in interest were made, what in your opinion, would be the effect?—A. It would wipe out our profit on the loaning business. You might as well go out of the banking business.

Here is a man who gave his evidence very sincerely and impressively before that committee, and I think it establishes the fact that so far as the banking business in the western community is concerned by banks operating there solely—and that is a fair test—having regard to the amount of deposits that they can get now at any rate—I look forward to a great increase in deposits there, because I have the greatest faith in the West—to compel the banks to limit their interests to seven per cent would defeat the very purpose that hon. gentlemen have in view who advocate that course. I understand that my hon. friend from Westmorland does not differ on that point. There was a suggestion made in the committee, I think by my hon. friend from Westmorland and concurred in by myself and many other members of the committee, and I think favourably received by the committee, though there was some difficulties that arose or were suggested as likely to arise in its carrying out because of difficulty in obtaining returns to comply with the requirements of the amendment. I agreed in principle with the amendment that was suggested, for this reason, that I believe that the best result will be obtained by not limiting the rate of interest, and it will not be limited when we restore that section 91, because as I pointed out before the House rose, the decision under that section enables the bank to charge such rate of interest as may be agreed upon, provided it is taken at the time the loan is made and is not recovered by legal protest. I believe that it is better to leave the situation exactly as it is. But I am a great believer, as are many other members of both sides of the House—in fact, I have no doubt, all members on both sides, because we are legislators—in publicity as a check upon anything that might be against the interests of the community. Therefore, I suggested as an amendment to the amendment in the committee—or I am not sure that I suggested it to the committee, but I had it drafted—that a return should be made by the banks at least once a year—because there is great difficulty in making returns monthly—whereby the maximum rate of interest charged by the banks throughout Canada should be made a subject of return to the Finance Department, so that if an extortionate rate of interest were being charged, the bank could be asked why it was necessary to charge this rate, what the circumstances are which made necessary a rate so much in excess of the rate mentioned in the Bank Act as being fair. Therefore, I shall propose an amendment to section 91, though I have only been able to consider it very cursorily, because it has been comparatively hurriedly drafted by my assistant deputy who has been a good legal advisor throughout this Bill as all the members of the committee know. The amendment is as follows:

The bank shall make a quarterly return—

Because that will give them time.

—to the minister as of the last juridical day of the months of March, June, September and December in each year, giving such particulars as will be prescribed by regulations made by the Treasury Board of the interest and discount rates charged by the bank.

I have it in mind that the Treasury Board can make regulations as to loans up to a certain amount, loans in certain districts and so on, so that it would not be of a general character and yet would be fair to the banks. Sub-section 3 is also a part of the amendment:

Such returns shall be made up and sent in within the first thirty days of the respective last juridical days aforesaid, and shall be signed by the same persons as are required to sign the monthly returns made to the minister under section 112 of this Act.

The effect of section 91 on the amendment will be that the banks will be reluctant to go into new districts and get such a rate of interest as they may be able to get, and that may be fair having regard to the conditions. On the other hand, they would be compelled to make a return to the Finance Department so that, if it should appear that an undue advantage is taken of the borrowing community, attention would be drawn to it and the matter may be taken up between the department and the bank. It seems to me this is as good a reason as we can get on this question.

Mr. EMMERSON: I am very thoroughly in accord with the suggestion made by the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind the fact that the minister has made provision for a return to be given in the month of January as to the value of bank premises, I was going to suggest the following:

All banks shall furnish a statement on the first day of January in each year to the minister showing the maximum and minimum rates of interest or discount paid to, charged or retained by such bank at its head office or at any of its branch offices during the preceding year on loans—this not to apply to any loan or transaction in which the whole interest or discount charged or collected in connection therewith does not exceed the sum of one dollar.

Mr. WHITE: I would point out to my hon. friend that the provision for regulations of the Treasury Board, I think, cover the situation better than his amendment, as giving more flexibility.

Mr. EMMERSON: I had accepted the suggested amendment of the hon. minister. I was going to explain to him that I had in mind offering this amendment for the consideration of the committee. But, in view of the step the minister has taken, I will certainly not interject my amendment.

Mr. CARVELL: Would the minister say what amendment is before the committee? I understood him to move an amendment before dinner, another was suggested and the minister has moved another one still.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has before him, no doubt, the Bill as it came from the committee. I propose to strike out section 91 as it appears in the Bill and to restore section 91 as it exists in the present Act. Again, there is the amendment which I have just suggested with regard to returns concerning rates of interest and discount.

Mr. CARVELL: I think the minister is right in restoring section 91 to the Bill. It is pretty hard to regulate what a man shall charge for his money. Although I know the banks are recipients of very great favours at the hands of Parliament, yet I presume that there are cases in which they might have the right to charge more than in other cases, although I must say I can hardly follow the argument that it costs two per cent more to do business in the West than in the East. It may be true; I am not an authority. I wanted to say a word on behalf of the banks. I do not think they have ever been guilty of usury so far as the eastern portion of Canada is concerned; at least I have never known of a case. I have never known of a bank in eastern Canada asking for more than seven per cent interest during the last ten or twelve years, although it may be possible that they have done so. I know that a very large amount of money is loaned at six per cent, but so far as our portion of Canada is concerned, I do not think there is very much fault to find with the amount of interest charged by the banks. I think it would be better to leave that seven per cent in the Act. While the minister does not think it is of much legal value, and probably, in view of the decision of the Privy Council, it is not, I would rather see it left that way than have a maximum of eight per cent provided, for I fear that if we fix the maximum at eight per cent, in many cases the banks would say, if we are compelled to do business for less than it costs us in the West we will have to make it up in the East, and probably the borrowers in the East would suffer. Between the two evils I would choose the least, and therefore I think it would be better to leave the section as it was originally.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I am very sorry to take up any of the time of the committee on a matter which has been discussed so much, but I have certain opinions which I voiced on the second reading, and which I feel impelled to repeat now. Throughout my life, ever since I could do any thinking, I have considered that it was a misfortune to have any law upon the statute book of a civilized country which was not respected and enforced, I do not care against what class of society that law is directed, or against what proceeding of society. Now the original clause reads in part:

> The bank may take any interest not exceeding seven per cent, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

If that clause has any object, it is to assert that the law of Canada, as applied to banks, is that they shall get seven per cent interest upon money as the maximum. What are the facts, Mr. Chairman? In the province of Alberta, if a man goes to the bank, it is not a case of collecting interest before hand; he is presented with a note. If his credit is good his own name will be accepted on the note, if not, he is required to have the signature of another citizen of repute. On that note he promises to pay eight per cent, and the banks invariably collect that eight per cent. I say it is a misfortune that in a country in the British Empire we should, with our eyes open, enact this clause and have this proceeding go on. I do not wonder that a lawyer of the eminence and repute of Chief Justice Moulton should have given the decision he did, because by that decision I think he inferentially expressed his absolute contempt for that clause as a piece of legislation. I have not his private opinion, but I am perfectly certain that if I got it, it would be what I am expressing at the present moment. I would be surprised if it were otherwise. I do not know what answer my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may make to what I am stating. It may be said that when a man signs a note at the bank to pay interest of eight per cent in six months, he does so with eyes open, and makes a contract. I quite agree, but he cannot help himself. He needs the money. The point is that the law of the land says that you shall not take more than seven per cent, and the banks proceed incontinently to take eight per cent. I do not know how this assembly can respect itself if it knows the facts and enacts this clause. I can only explain the fact that more borrowers do not take advantage of this clause on two grounds. One may be that they do not know anything about the clause, and I think that is true of the great majority of them. The other may be that they are so upright, that when they sign a contract they feel like standing by it. Suppose the latter is the explanation. It would be so in my own case; no man can be surer of another man's uprightness than he can be of his own. Suppose the latter explanation is the true one, what conclusion must we draw? Why, it is that the morality of the ordinary borrower in the province of Alberta is higher than that of the Parliament of Canada, because Parliament enacts a clause which extends an invitation to financial immorality on the part of the borrower, who can sign a note saying: I promise to pay eight per cent but who, if he knows enough, may say at the end of six months, you can whistle for your eight per cent for all you are going to get is seven per cent. If Mr. Justice Moulton had a poor opinion of the original clause, I would not like to think what his opinion would be of the amendment. But as the minister has dropped it, I do not want to criticise it. I never lick a dead foal. I do not favour any clause, I could not favour any clause, which says that the banks cannot take more than seven per cent and which yet allows them to take eight per cent. I could not do that and respect my intelligence and common sense. I hope the minister and the committee understand where I am at. I am certain that the people of Alberta do. One thing the people of Alberta do not understand is why they should pay eight per cent while the people of Saskatchewan pay only seven per cent. But if he cannot make better legislation, I suppose we will have to go on paying the extra one per cent.

Mr. OLIVER: I agree with what the hon. member for Red Deer has said, and I suggest to the Minister of Finance that every argument he used in favour of the clause as he proposed to have it, was an argument that there should be no clause at all. I quite agree with the hon. member for Red Deer that if the clause in regard to interest is not to be respected, it should not be there.

Mr. CLARK: It should be penal.

Mr. OLIVER: What I urge is what was urged by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) and by other members, that whatever may be considered as a maximum rate of interest should be fixed as the maximum.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): What is the hon. member's suggestion?

Mr. OLIVER: I am not making a suggestion at the moment; it is not my business.

Mr. SHARPE: You represent the West.

Mr. OLIVER: Let my hon. friend represent North Ontario a little more honestly than he does, and it will be better for North Ontario and for the rest of us. All I want to say is that if a purely western bank, such as the Weyburn Bank, can do business, and does do business, on an average rate of interest of nine per cent, there is either nothing in the contention that our system of banking with branches all over the country is superior, or else the system is not being carried out fairly.

Mr. WHITE: Might I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the Weyburn Bank's rates were eight per cent, ten per cent and twelve per cent, but the average was nine per cent?

Mr. OLIVER: The Weyburn Bank is a purely western bank, dependent on western capital and western deposits, but its average rate of interest was nine per cent. That is to say if the Weyburn Bank charged all its customers nine per cent, it would get just the same revenue as it gets to-day. It suits the Weyburn Bank, being an American institution, run by people from the United States, according to United States principles, to vary their rate of interest. The average rate is nine per cent. If the Weyburn bank, depending entirely on western capital and on western business, can do business at nine per cent, our chartered banks having their headquarters in the East ought to be able to do business in western Canada at a lower rate than nine per cent. If they are not, there is no benefit in the system of branch banks. My hon. friend seems to think that it is a splendid arrangement whereby there is to be left on the face of the Act a provision, as he says, suggesting to the banks that they ought not to charge more than seven per cent but at the same time leaving them free to charge whatever they please. He says that will work beautifully because in eastern Canada they will only charge seven per cent and in western Canada they may charge whatever they want to. If my hon. friend will take the section out of the Act altogether and will hold out to the country that his Bank Act, put through Parliament this year of grace, 1913, takes no account of the crime of usury when practised by a bank upon the western people, he will be honest anyway in his legislation. But to put a section in the Act which holds out to western, as well as eastern, people, the idea that the banks are limited to a charge of seven per cent and yet allows them to charge what they like is not honest legislation, it is not fair and it is not decent, and I protest against it and protest very strongly. My hon. friend made the suggestion that a fixed rate of seven per cent would close the banks operating in the West.

Mr. WHITE: I said that in the case of the Weyburn bank the manager showed that it would, but that in regard to other banks, my view was that they would not go into new districts to the same extent as they otherwise would and that probably they would draw out from some that they are now in.

Mr. OLIVER: Precisely. Neither myself nor my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle, nor any of the men from the West, urged that the rate be limited to seven per cent. What we are asking to be protected against is the usurious rates which are being charged, which my hon. friend knows are being charged and which he cannot justify. My hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) stated to this House that in the course of his business he had collected accounts for banks where the interest was twelve per cent. It is nothing more nor less than a scandal, and it should not be permitted under the legislation of this Parliament. It is a disgrace to the banking system of Canada. We know that the reputable banks of Canada do not do that sort of business, but there are some banks which are run in that way, they are doing that kind of business, they are doing it in the West, and my hon. friend stands up and says that it is all right so long as they do it in the West. I object most strenuously to that proposition. I do not ask that a low maximum rate be fixed, but let us have protection against usury in the West under the provisions of this Act, or else let my hon. friend say that he will not give any protection and that, while other institutions and persons are prevented from practising usury, the banks shall have free and full liberty to do it so long as they do it west of lake Superior.

Mr. NICKLE: When this matter came before the Banking and Commerce Committee, we found ourselves confronted with this difficulty. The law, as it stood in the old Act, was made up of the original section plus a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the net result of which was that if a bank took their charge by way of discount they were entitled to charge any amount they cared to levy, but if they did not make the charge by way of discount but by way of interest, they were not entitled to charge an amount in excess of seven per cent. If the instrument called for the payment of a rate of interest in excess of seven per cent it was ultra vires as to any rate in excess of the legal rate of five per cent. Part of the law was not exactly as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has stated. It was this: If the rate of interest was in excess of seven per cent the borrower had a right to say: 'I will pay five per cent,' and the banks could not collect beyond that amount. In the consideration of the situation considerable evidence was given by western representatives and, if I remember correctly, one Mr. Chipman gave evidence and produced some two hundred or three hundred notes of various banks by which he amply proved that the ordinary rate of interest in the West did not, except in odd cases, exceed ten per cent. Further evidence was given by Mr. Henderson, representing the Bankers' Association, by which he showed that the expense of carrying on business in the West was 2·58 per cent higher than in the East, and that the average rate of increase in interest was two and a half per cent in the West as compared with the rate in the East. He read extracts from the statements of various men in authority who went the length of saying that if this Parliament tried to fix a rate of interest of less than seven per cent the net result would be that the supply of money to the West would be restricted and there would be a dearth. The committee therefore found itself confronted by these difficulties. If they fixed a rate of seven per cent, or less, then the West was going to suffer from the closing up of branch banks because the cost of doing a small business was necessarily proportionately larger in the West than that of doing a larger business in the East. There were no deposits there and nothing like the proportion of loans made by the banks as compared with the amount of business done in the East. The net result was that section 91 as it stands in the Bill as presented to the House to-day was drafted and carried in the committee, together with a sub-section that monthly the banks must present to the Minister of Finance a statement showing what the rate of interest was on all loans of over one hundred dollars. The committee in dealing with section 91, drafted as it appears in the Act now under consideration, together with this sub-section, thought they would effectively block any attempt on the part of any bank to charge usurious rates. But the committee, at a subsequent sitting, cancelled the sub-section and left section 91 as it appears in the Bill now before the committee. Under the present clause a bank may collect by way of discount any rate it pleases, but in case it charges a higher rate of interest than seven per cent, it can collect only seven per cent. It differs from the original section in the old Act in this, that a rate of seven per cent could not be collected if a rate in excess of this were charged as interest, but only a rate of five per cent. I quite agree with the opinion of the hon. member for Red Deer that it is most unfortunate that this Parliament should enact a law that practically means nothing. I am with him in this, that whatever we intend to be the law, we should state clearly and fully and that we should if necessary put in some penalty to insure that the provision shall be observed. I am sorry to say that I do not agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in thinking the old section better than the present. It seems to me that the wisest provision we could make is not to restore the old section, but to leave the present section 91 as in the reprinted Bill, and put in an amendment or sub-section to the effect that monthly or quarterly returns of all loans over one hundred dollars shall be made to the minister. The publicity incidental to that notice would prevent, through shame, usurious rates, and section 91 in the amended Bill is consistent with the intention of the committee.

Mr. KYTE: There was evidence produced in the Banking Committee to show that it costs two per cent more to conduct banking business in the West than in the East and consequently the banks insisted on the privilege of charging nine per cent. According to that, any rate beyond seven per cent in the East is too high and should not be permitted. In Nova Scotia some branch banks are charging eight per cent for loans, a fact which cannot be denied. They are not doing it in cities and the larger towns where there are two or three banks doing business, but I do know they are charging eight per cent in certain places in Nova Scotia where they have bought out the competing banks and have a monopoly. If it was the intention of this Parliament when the Bank Act was revised in 1901 that banks should absolutely be debarred from charging more than seven per cent, and if it turns out that a flaw has been discovered, as indicated by the decision of the Privy Council, and that banks are permitted to charge more than seven per cent, it is our duty to so amend the existing section of the Act that the courts cannot get around the intention of Parliament. Surely language can be found to explain definitely what the intention of Parliament is, so that there will be no danger of a decision of the Privy Council or any other court giving a different interpretation to the clause.

The financial conditions existing in the West and in the Yukon were more pressing in 1901 when the Bank Act was last revised than they are to-day, and with a full knowledge of these conditions as regards the high cost of money in the West and in the Yukon, Parliament deliberately asserted that banks should not have the right to charge more than seven per cent. Therefore, I think the situation existing in the West to-day is not such as to induce Parliament to modify the Act in this particular. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) points out that unless the banks charge their interest by way of discount, and deduct it from the proceeds of the note, by agreement forced upon the borrower, they could not charge more than seven per cent. I know that banks will be sure to take advantage of the interpretation of the statute that will enable them to collect the highest amount of interest by way of discount. There is not much danger that a bank manager will permit the borrower to place upon the face of the note the rate of interest he is paying, but rather he will discount the note and collect his discount before he passes the balance over to the borrower. My hon. friend from Kingston says that if that note runs beyond the time for which a higher rate of interest than seven per cent is mentioned, the higher rate cannot be collected. In the West, as I understand the hon. member for Red Deer, banks advance money upon a note signed by the maker without requiring an endorser when the maker is in good financial standing. That practice does not prevail in Nova Scotia. It is absolutely impossible for the maker of a note, no matter how wealthy he may be and how good his financial standing is, to get a loan of five dollars unless he has an endorser.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Oh, no.

Mr. KYTE: I am speaking now of the smaller communities. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) may have had a different experience.

Mr. CARVELL: And in pretty big communities too.

Mr. KYTE: There is no danger of a bank allowing a note to run beyond maturity. When the bank knows it will be debarred from collecting more than seven per cent after the time the note matures it will take care every time to collect that note the date it matures, and if payment is not made it will force it out of the maker or the endorser by the issue of a writ. It comes down to this: that it was the intention of Parliament in 1901 that a bank should not have the right to charge more than seven per cent, but the decision of the Privy Council has disclosed the fact that that section is not binding upon the bank where the discount is deducted from the face value of the note. That is an interpretation of the Act which Parliament did not have in mind at the time, and therefore it is the duty of Parliament now to so amend that section as to make it absolutely impossible for the bank to get around it in any way. My hon. friends from the West, in the generosity of their hearts, concede that banks under the circumstances existing in that country ought be able to collect more than seven per cent. I say that so far as the East is concerned, the evidence of the western bankers is to the effect that seven per cent will give a good profit in eastern Canada in view of the large number of deposits they receive here and on which they pay a small rate of interest to depositors. Then, so far as eastern Canada is concerned, banks ought not be permitted arbitrarily to increase the rate of interest on loans from seven or eight, or nine per cent in defiance of the law under which they are conducting their banking business. The situation is absolutely simple; if Parliament sincerely desires to place a check upon this usurious rate of interest, either in the West or in the East, we have the power to do so. If, on the other hand it is not thought desirable to so limit the section as to the rate of interest, I would insist that the section as it stands in the Act at present is much more preferable than the section proposed in the Bill before us. The reason for that is that while it is conceded in the Bank Act that it is the intention of Parliament the banks should not be permitted to charge more than seven per cent, that will have an influence upon certain bank managers, it will be an intimation to them what the intention of Parliament is. There are certain bank managers who feel bound to respect the intention of Parliament and the borrower in the East will be relieved in some instances at all events from paying more than seven per cent for the accommodation he receives.

Mr. AIKINS: I quite agree with what has been stated by the hon. member (Mr. Kyte), that it is better to restore the clause as it was and as it does exist in the present Act.

Mr. KYTE: I was going to add also: in view of the amendment proposed by the Minister of Finance, which I think further strengthens it.

Mr. AIKINS: My reason for saying so is that the section as it now exists suggests seven per cent to the country as a reasonable rate of interest generally. I think it would be improper to increase that suggested rate of interest because it would give an indication to the country that this House of Commons thought a larger rate of interest would be reasonable. The next reason why I think it should be retained just as it is in the present Act is because it has been there for a long time; it has become honoured in usage, and there has been no general outcry in the country against it. I think, in the way in which it has been generally exercised, it has proved satisfactory to the country, although it may not have proved satisfactory to some customers. The third reason is because it has received judicial interpretation. I think that recent judicial interpretation shows clearly the exact meaning of that section, which is this, that if the parties agree upon a rate of interest and it is paid, at once it becomes a settled and closed account; a person who does so pay does it voluntarily with eyes open, knowing what is being done. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) says: They usually cannot help themselves. I submit that the customer is in no worse a position than if a fixed rate of interest was put in the Act, say seven or eight per cent, because the bank would decide not to lend in that particular district at that rate and so the customer would not get the benefit. Therefore it seems to me, when it is left as a matter of agreement, and people ordinarily understand how to protect themselves, it is the more reasonable way of doing it. If the payment is left executory, that is, if the agreement is simply that the interest is to be paid, then the Bank must stick to the seven per cent, because otherwise it would be an illegal agreement and then the only interest that could be charged would be five per cent. Under these circumstances I quite agree with the hon. minister that the old section should be retained, and I also agree with him in respect to the rider that should be attached to it.

Mr. OLIVER: I just want to call the attention of my hon. friend to the way in which this section, which has been found so useful, has operated in the past. I have here a statement of the proceedings of the Banking and Commerce Committee which sets out that the Bank of British North America has placed certain loans. There are thirty or forty of them and none of them at a rate less than ten per cent. The rates charged by the Dominion Bank vary from eight to eleven per cent; by the Canadian Bank of Commerce, from eight to twelve per cent; by the Union Bank, from eight to twelve per cent; by the Merchants' Bank, from eight to twelve per cent; by the Northern Crown Bank, from eight to twelve per cent; by the Bank of Hamilton, from eight to twelve per cent; by the Weyburn Bank, from eight to ten to twelve per cent; by the Bank of Toronto from eight to ten per cent; by the Quebec Bank, from nine to ten per cent; by the Bank of Ottawa, from eight to twelve per cent. The rate charged by the Royal Bank stands at eight per cent. In view of this evidence before the committee as to the regard that has been paid to that section of the Act, unless the hon. minister is going to make the section have some effect, the proper course would be to strike it out. It has discredited our legislation, or it has discredited our administration, because no regard has apparently been paid to it. I certainly think that such legislation should not remain on the Statute Book unless the Government is prepared to say that the interests of the people are to be protected by the intent of that section being carried out.

Mr. NICKLE: Which section do you mean, the old or the new?

Mr. OLIVER: I mean that neither of them should remain. The new section has the merit of being honest. It simply authorizes the banks to practice usury without restriction. That is honest and fair, but I object to it. I do not think it would be for the credit of Parliament to allow such a section as that to pass into permanent legislation. As for the old section, while on its face it has an appearance of value, as a matter of fact, on the word of the minister and on the evidence before the committee, it has no value. It is not the intention of the minister to give it value. Therefore, I say it should not appear on the statute-book. The business of Parliament and of the Government is to provide in this Act against the charging of usurious rates of interest by a bank.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have not yet heard this evening from any hon. member a sound reason for departing from the section as we find it in the reprinted Bill. All the hon. gentlemen who have suggested that we revert to the section in the Bill as originally introduced have not accompanied their remarks with any argument, any reasoning, any logic, which appeals to me in the slightest degree. I quite agree with the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that Parliament should say what it means and should mean what it says. There are many difficulties in the way, and I quite easily perceive motives which may prompt hon. gentlemen to suggest the restoration of the old section. At the same time, I feel that the people of this country would be better satisfied if the section in the Bill as reprinted were left and were enacted as our final judgment rather than if we were to restore the old section which really means nothing, and which I do not think has any value by reason of the judicial interpretation given to it by the Supreme Court of Canada, because I believe that, in view of the judgment of the Privy Council in the McHugh case, on the first occasion when the section of the old Bill ever reaches the Privy Council for interpretation they would decide that the Canadian banks could not recover more than seven per cent even by taking that rate of interest either at the time of discount or at any other time.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): That was a decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. MACLEAN: No, they have not so decided. That question did not come up in the McHugh case at all.

I believe the rate of interest, with the competition we have in this country, will adjust itself usually to the proper rate. Neither our friends in the West nor people in the East can expect cheap money and high priced land, or cheap money and high priced other commodities. Whether my hon. friend from Red Deer would believe me to be a free trader or not, in the matter of money I am at one with him; and I would prefer very much, though it is a matter of indifference to me personally, that we should leave the section in the reprinted Bill as it is.

Mr. KYTE: Does the hon. gentleman know the rate charged by the banks in the city of Halifax?

Mr. MACLEAN: I suppose it is seven or eight per cent at the present time, and that on small notes of $25 or $50 the rates would be higher. I do not blame a bank for charging more than seven per cent in such cases.

Mr. KYTE: My information is that the banks are charging eight per cent in communities which have only one bank.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: There is no clause to which the committee gave more serious attention than the one under discussion. We received evidence from many quarters and endeavoured to assimilate that evidence. I concur wholly with what the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has said, that the clause really should remain in the Bill. While I agree with the hon. member for Red Deer that we should not put legislation on our statute-book that is not to be carried out, still I think that this clause is such that it can be carried out. That is my view. It should be carried out in the spirit which the Finance Minister intended it should be, that is that the rates contracted for in the first place shall be the amount collected and if the note becomes the subject of a process of law for collection, the interest shall not be greater than seven per cent. That is perfectly practical legislation, and while there is no penalty attached to the breaking of it, still the plain statement the Minister of Finance has given as to what he wishes the banks to understand to be the law, I think, will correct any overcharge in the long run, if such there be. The hon. member for Edmonton I think could hardly be sincere when he says that bank interest should be uniform throughout Canada.

Mr. OLIVER: No, I did not say any such thing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The hon. member objected that the West is paying more than the East.

Mr. OLIVER: I say that the West is certainly paying more than the East, but I did not say we were legislating to compel it to pay more than the East. What I said was that I wanted legislation to prevent usurious rates of interest in the West.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The tenor of the hon. gentleman's remarks was that the East was exacting more interest from the West than was legitimate.

Mr. OLIVER: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I will not submit to being put in a position of segregating West and East. It was the Finance Minister who pointed out the necessity of charging more in the West than in the East.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I do not wish to misrepresent my hon. friend. I understood that to be the basis of his argument. I want to point out that there are sections even in his own province that on a business basis should be charged more than others. My hon. friend will not deny it.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not deny it. To make it clear I may say that in Edmonton, I think they charge no more than one per cent more than in Toronto and perhaps not any more.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: There are whole districts in which new towns are just established, where immediate success is doubtful and where the business transacted is very limited. It is not reasonable to expect that a bank will go into such a district and lend money at the same rate as in a settled community. The bankers who gave evidence before the committee made it clear that they should not take up business on that basis. They would not go into a new community and take the risk of the expense in order to do business there and charge the same rates of interest as in a community in one of the established parts of Canada. It is not only in the West that high interest rates are charged. In the clay belt—which I believe the hon. gentleman spoke of as a myth—just as high rates are charged. The new districts whether East or West must pay relatively high rates of interest, which is perfectly right. I have no brief to speak for the banks, but let me give to my hon. friend the statement of the manager of the bank at Weyburn, who, I think, he will accept as an authority on such a matter. This manager was asked whether similar credit was any better in the United States than in Canada, whether banking facilities were better and money cheaper. His reply was to the effect that where a man in Saskatchewan or Alberta could borrow two thousand dollars at nine per cent, in the western states similarly situated he could only get one thousand dollars at twelve per cent. If we are to compare ourselves with others across the line —and the hon. gentleman has often been anxious to make such a comparison—we have the evidence of this bank manager at Weyburn that a man in Canada would get double the amount at twenty-five per cent less interest than one similarly situated in the United States. That shows that our banks are reasonable. I would point out to the committee that if you are going to put too much limitation on banks, if you are going to reduce their credits, you are going to make it more difficult to get capital into banking institutions. You cannot encourage capital to go into banking institutions with a club. The only thing to be done is to make the revenue so inviting that it will tempt the investment of capital. The evidence given to the committee shows that the return on banking capital in Canada, so far as the shareholders are concerned, is less than five and a half per cent, and in addition to that they have the double liability. Surely, nobody will say that when the profits of the shareholders are less than five and a half per cent, with a double liability, the banks are overcharging the people. I think that the Finance Minister has in that clause a very wise provision. I agree with the hon. junior member for Halifax that it is better to keep the present wording, because it is the result of mature thought, and I believe that it will justify itself in the working out. I trust that before the committee reverts to the old clause they will consider the wording we have here, believing that it will work out to the advantage of both East and West, North and South. Before I sit down, let me say I believe this country is fortunate in that it has in the financial chair of this House a gentleman of the experience of the Hon. Mr. White. He has been a man among a million on this measure, both in his patience and in the wisdom and tact he has brought to bear upon this Bill. The more closely you follow what he has laid out, I believe, the nearer you will be to promoting the general advantage of Canada through this measure.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary: It is a very simple question that is before the committee: Shall or shall not Parliament impose a restriction on the rate of interest the banks may charge ? That question has been solved in two ways. By the late Parliament it was solved by a section which was a gold brick.

This section proposes to make perfectly certain what we are going to do. An excellent argument may be advanced to this committee why we should not limit the rate of interest which the bank charges its customer. I am not going to discuss that at the present moment further than to say that I think there should be a restriction. As to what this first section under the old Act means, I do not think Parliament had any knowledge as to that when they passed it. When Parliament passed that section it was intended unquestionably to impose a restriction upon the rate of interest the banks should take from their customers, and it was intended that the rate should be seven per cent. As a matter of fact, the courts in the province of British Columbia in a Rossland case, which was decided many years ago, held that a bank might discount a bill which came into its hands at any rate of interest it pleased, and so long as the customer paid that rate of interest, he could not recover it back again. When a man goes to a bank to get a note discounted, he usually wants the money so badly that he is not going to inquire whether the rate of interest is eight per cent or ten per cent; he usually pays just what the bank charges him. There was a certain case decided by the Privy Council in February of this year, and my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) cannot have read it, or if he has read it, he has not understood it, because the judgment distinctly decides that if a customer goes to a bank and discounts his note, and the bank takes the discount and treats it as part of its profits, the customer cannot recover it back under any circumstances. These are the words of the judgment of the Privy Council in that regard:

The plaintiff must be taken to have known that the bank had no right to stipulate for and no power to recover interest at eight per cent, but he voluntarily assented to that which was equivalent to payment of interest at that rate, and he has no right to recover back any excess which he thus voluntarily paid.

The customer is estopped, by reason of his conduct, from recovering the difference between seven per cent and the rate of interest which the bank takes from him in discounting his paper. The second point decided in that case was that as in the contract between the bank and its customer, contained in one of the paragraphs of a chattel mortgage, the rate reserved was eight per cent, which was one per cent in excess of the sum stipulated by the Bank Act, the bank could not recover either eight or seven per cent, but was thrown back upon the rate usually paid when no rate of interest is stipulated, five per cent. In other words, the contract to pay eight per cent was illegal, and, being illegal, the customer was entitled to recover only five per cent. The facts of the case were these: Large ranchers were carrying on business; they had dealings from time to time with the bank, and paid eight, nine, and in one case ten per cent interest for their money. Their account had continued for a period of not less than ten years, and suddenly they brought an action against the bank, claiming that the accounts of the bank were incorrectly kept, that the rate of interest charged was in excess of the amount provided for by the law, and that they were entitled to an order for an accounting and for a rectification of the accounts between them. The court held that they had a right to the correction of what you might call arithmetical computations and the right to have the accounts rectified so far as the dealings between the two parties were concerned. But in a chattel mortgage given by these customers to the bank for their indebtedness, there was a statement that the rate of interest should be eight per cent, and on that state of facts the Privy Council held that the bank could only recover five per cent, because any contract with the bank, whether by way of chattel mortgage, note or other security, providing for a rate of interest in excess of eight per cent was illegal, and the bank was driven to resort to the statutory allowance of five per cent. If seven per cent had been inserted in the document as the rate of interest, it would have been all right, but, the rate being eight per cent, the contract was illegal, and only five per cent could be collected. This is the language of the judgment dealing with that matter:

The statutory provisions applicable to the case are to be found in the Bank Act, 1906, which enacts, section 91, as follows:

The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve, or exact any rate of interest or discount not exceeding seven per centum per annum, and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the express provisions of the first portion of this clause rendered it ultra vires on the part of the bank to insert in the chattel mortgage of 28th May, 1907, the stipulation that interest should be payable at the rate of eight per cent, and that therefore that stipulation is inoperative. They are of opinion, therefore, that the contention on behalf of the plaintiff in this respect is right, and that the interest under that mortgage must be calculated at the rate of five per cent per annum.

When the Banking and Commerce Committee was face to face with this consideration, what did they do? The committee had to decide whether or not we should place a restriction upon the rate the bank should recover, or whether we should leave the old section as it stood. This old section has been properly described as a goldbrick, nothing more nor less, and the new section unquestionably has the effect mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton. It is a perfectly honest section in so far as phraseology is concerned, and it stipulates what the rate of interest may be, but it also implies that the banks may take any amount they like. As the hon. member for Edmonton has well said, this might be a usurious rate of interest, the taking of which, I think, should be prevented. I have no hesitation in saying, so far as I am personally concerned, that I do not think this is a question as between the East and the West. It is simply a question whether or not this Parliament shall impose a limitation or restriction upon the rate of interest the banks may charge their customers. My own personal view is that we should fix the rate at 8 per cent. I am told on excellent authority that this would work a very great hardship, and that in the Yukon, for instance, owing to the conditions there, the rates of interest could not be restricted to 8 per cent. In that district the rates were sometimes as high as 20 per cent, and that rate was not regarded as high in that part of the country as 6 per cent might be regarded here. In the Cobalt district the rate of interest is hign, and in some remote sections of the western provinces new branches could not possibly open up if the rate of interest were fixed at 8 per cent. I therefore think that the committee should strike out this section in its entirety, or make some provision by which the bank should by publicity be, if I may use the word, shamed into charging only a reasonable rate of interest. If we cannot impose a restriction by limiting the rate to 8 per cent, let us by some method of publicity prevent those evils which are real and not imaginary, and which by this legislation we will give a direct incentive and inducement to become greater. However much you may argue as to the authority or influence of individual managers, it is the individual manager who has to deal with these transactions, not the general manager at the head office. A young manager is, as a rule, anxious to make the largest passible profits in connection with a new branch; in some instances where a man has given the bank a $100 note and has received $95, he thought he was doing a very good thing, but the rate charged was really 20 per cent. That is the reason why I think this committee should not pass this section of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE: As I explained to the committee, so far as the legal effect is concerned, I do not think that there is any difference whatever between section 91 of the present Act and the new section, which I drafted myself, and which was approved by the committee. I believe that the legal effect is precisely the same. There are two considerations that incline me to favour the clause as it stands in the present Act, although, as I said, in my opinion, and, I believe, in the opinion of those who have considered it from a legal standpoint, there is no difference in the legal effect between the present section and the amendment. The two considerations are these: First, the point emphasized by my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins), that section 91 has been judicially interpreted and I have a very great respect for res judicata. There is no doubt whatever that the law is not section 91 as it has been read in this House, but section 91 as interpreted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We all know that in the legislation of the several provinces you will find any number of statutes that apparently have a certain apparent meaning. They go before the courts, before our courts, or before the Privy Council, and that apparent meaning is changed by the judicial decision. Now in respecting legislation of this kind, or in consolidating statutes, I believe it is not the custom to seek to introduce new legislation or new language into those statutes if the decisions have been clear, and if the cases clearly show that a particular section or a particular statute has a specific meaning. In other words, it is a case of res judicata. In connection with that, there is this further argument. I believe that the amendment, which I drafted myself in order to represent the law as we understand it today, represents the law, but of course it has not yet been judicially interpreted, and it has been suggested to me by a legal authority in this House, which I respect, that it might possibly be capable of another interpretation, and that therefore, without realizing it we might be changing the law. It is pointed out that as we have the section with the decision of the Privy Council, and the two together contain the law which is clear, the net result of the section and of the decision being that banks may stipulate for such rate of interest as may be agreed upon, and may deduct that by way of discount at the time the loan is made, but if they seek to recover by way of interest then they cannot recover more than seven per cent. As I have said that is res judicata, and we are certain of that if we leave the section as it stands. If we amend it along the lines of the amendment which I drafted, and which the committee approved I believe we are still in that position, but you have only my opinion and the opinion of others as opposed to the judicial opinion with its binding interpretation of that section. That is one consideration. The other is, if we raise the rate, or if we leave the rate wide open I cannot help thinking there is something in the suggestion which has been made that it might be taken as an intimation to the banks that Parliament regards this seven per cent rate as considerably too low. We are dealing, as I have said, with a country as large as Europe, and seven per cent is certainly too low a rate of interest in some sections. It may be just a matter of temperament how you regard those things. Personally, if the law is, as I have indicated, res judicata, that the banks may stipulate for and take a certain rate by way of discount, provided they take it up to the time the loan is made, I would rather have that than have a new clause which is untested in the courts. If the banks might misconstrue the action of Parliament in leaving it wide open and in having no rate of interest mentioned as a guide, I am inclined to think we would not do a good turn to the borrowing community by seeking to make clear in the expressed letter of legislation what is already clear in the section and by virtue of the decision of the Privy Council. These are just arguments which I desire to set before the committee for consideration. We are, I think, pretty well protected by compelling a return on the part of the banks to the Finance Department, so that we can know what rates of interest they are charging in the various sections of Canada. So far as the two clauses, the old clause in the present Act, and the new clause which I drafted, and which was approved by the committee are concerned, I repeat that in my judgment there is absolutely no difference in the legal effect. If I incline to the first, it is not because I believe there is any difference, but because I am more certain of it since it has been legally interpreted and I would rather abide by the existing clause, even if it should be considered an anomaly, than change the section even for a wording that on the face of it would seem to indicate precisely what the law is to-day and that is free from the anomaly which exists in the present Act. So far as I am concerned, the committte may choose either section. There are different views on both sides of the House, and it is entirely a matter of how it is regarded. Essentially, I do not think there is any difference between the two. I would incline towards allowing the clause to stand, but it is not a matter of any vital moment in my judgment.

Mr. CARVELL: Do you mean as it stands reprinted in the Bill?

Mr. WHITE : As it is in the old Act.

Mr. KYTE: It appears to me that the only effect of the change that has been introduced in the new section is to salve the consciences of good Christian bank directors. That is how it appears to me. As the law stands at present, it states specifically that banks shall not charge more than seven per cent. However, they have been able to get round it by virtue of the decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): They did it long before that.

Mr. KYTE: They prefer to have the sanction of law for getting round it, and this amendment is introduced, not with that intention—I do not want to attribute that to the Minister of Finance—but it has the effect of easing the consciences of those bank directors who do not like to stand before the world as wanton violators of any public statute.

Mr. OLIVER: I desire to suggest to those who favour the reprinted section that after the word 'upon' in the last line on the top of page 49, there be inserted the words, 'not in any case to exceed' such and such an amount—eight, nine, ten, fifteen per cent, or whatever the committee think fit to fix. It seems to me that if we can impose a limit which shall be as high as the committee sees fit to make it, it will protect us against usurious interest and will have the effect of showing on its face what Parliament means.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): You cannot do that. You might put something in at the end of the clause stating that when a Bill is discounted it shall show upon its face what the rate is. If upon the face of every Bill taken by a bank for discount there shall appear: Being at the rate of.... per cent per annum, I think a great deal of the difficulty would be overcome.

Mr. OLIVER: That would not be controlling the matter; that would be merely giving information.

Mr. BENNETT: But if the information is given in a great many cases the conscience hardly exists to charge twenty per cent per annum.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like to suggest to the minister the placing of these words in the present section, and if that is not acceptable I desire to move specifically that the section be stricken out.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): With reference to the suggestion of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that this section should be accepted by the committee, it seems to me that it is a question in effect and practice as to whether the wording of the old section or the new section is the more acceptable. The position I take is simply this. If we increase the rate, or if we allow a bank to stipulate for any rate it may agree upon with the customer, we will have critics, like the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), going before the electors and saying that the bank, under the old Act, was bound to charge not more than seven per cent, but the Government have opened the gates and allowed the bank to make any rate it likes.

Mr. OLIVER: No, the hon. member for Edmonton does not talk any such nonsense as that. It is in North Ontario that that kind of thing is heard.

Mr. SHARPE: We have had a lot of criticism from the hon. member for Edmonton to-night, but we have not had any constructive suggestion from him. The hon. gentleman lacks the courage to state what the rate should be. He has never stated to the committee what, in his opinion, the rate should be in the West. The onus will be upon the Government if they change this clause and make it different from the provision contained in the old section. My reason for stating that is simply that the Government will be open to criticism for increasing the rate if they adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton, who has not the courage to state what he thinks would be a fair and reasonable rate.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. gentleman is using expressions that he is not entitled to use.

Mr. SHARPE: I do not want to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman. I asked him a question a while ago which he answered in what I considered to be an unbecoming manner—in a manner that I might characterize as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) characterized his attitude a few days ago. I do not wish to repeat the language of the Prime Minister with respect to the hon. gentleman. I am simply discussing this question in the interest of the Government and I desire to say that if these two clauses mean the same thing, we should revert to the old clause in the old Act, and that if the Government allow the rate to be increased they will be open to criticism in that they have allowed the bankers to raise the rate of interest. If they allow an open rate so that the banker may stipulate for any rate he likes with the customer, the Government will be open to the criticism of removing the restriction of seven per cent and allowing the bankers to demand any rate they may care to charge. Consequently, it will be in the interest of the Government to revert to the old clause in place of the newly amended clause.

Mr. OLIVER: The proposition that I desired to make to my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) was that if the Government will not accept the suggestion to fix a maximum rate I will be responsible for stating the figure.

Mr. SHARPE: What rate will you say?

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. White moves a sub-amendment to section 91 as follows:

The bank shall make a quarterly return to the minister as of the last juridical day of the months of March, June, September and December in each year, giving such particulars as will be prescribed by regulations made by the Treasury Board of the interest and discount rates charged by the bank.

3. Such returns shall be made up and sent in within the first thirty days of the respective last juridical days aforesaid, and shall be signed by the same persons as are required to sign the monthly returns made to the minister under section 112 of this Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will that information be published in the bank returns?

Mr. WHITE: It would be made public just as the bank returns are.

Mr. KYTE: Does that amend the section of the old Act?

Mr. WHITE: That is by way of a sub-amendment to the amendment I moved that the old clause should be restored in place of this section in the printed Bill.

Mr. MARCIL: Will these returns be published in the Canada Gazette as the bank returns are?

Mr. WHITE: The bank returns are published although I believe there is no provision in the Bank Act completing their publication. Consequently, these returns can be published as the bank returns are published to-day.

Mr. MARCIL: Unless provision is made to have them published in the Canada Gazette the public will have no notice of them.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not sure that the public would have much notice of them from the Canada Gazette. Is there any clause in this Act prescribing a penalty if the banks decline to furnish the returns?

Mr. WHITE: It would be an offence against the Act and a penalty would be incurred if they failed to supply the returns under the penalty clauses which are final clauses in the Act. But they would not refuse. The banks could not afford to be placed in a position of antagonism to Parliament by refusing to make these returns.

Mr. GRAHAM: I know that in some cases where departments asked for certain returns from certain companies it was almost impossible to get those returns and there was no penalty provided in case of their neglect or refusal. We found a great deal of difficulty in getting returns from companies for what is known as the statistical branch of the Department of Railways and Canals. That branch was established and certain returns were required under the Act. As time went on certain transportation companies were added to those which must send returns to the department. I do not know how it is now, but I experienced considerable difficulty in getting companies to make returns and I had not any means of compelling them to do so.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): What the hon. gentleman said is quite true. Failure to supply these returns might be declared to be an offence under the Act.

Mr. EMMERSON: You retain section 91 as it was in the old Act and not the section as it appears in the Bill reported by the committee?

Mr. WHITE: In answer to my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), I might say that my deputy tells me that it will be an offence against the law in that it will be a failure to comply with the requirements of a public statute. I do not anticipate any difficulty in getting the returns, and as I desire to get this Bill advanced on account of the late date of the session, I would ask my hon. friend not to press his suggestion. If there should be any difficulty, I will try to remedy it by legislation.

Mr. GRAHAM: I merely asked for information based on my own experience. I will not press the matter if it requires many changes, but I call the attention of the minister to it.

Mr. EMMERSON: The following amendment was placed by me before the committee and it was bowled out very summarily:

That the said section 91 be amended by adding thereto the following:

'And all payments made by or on behalf of any borrower, whether paid voluntarily or otherwise, and all moneys accepted or retained by or on behalf of any bank under the provisions of this section for interest or discount charges in excess of said rate of seven per cent shall be recoverable by the person, firm, or corporation so making such payment or from whom such interest or discount is exacted or retained, in an action in any court of competent jurisdiction.'

When that was disposed of, I then proposed the amendment as to the monthly statement and that was accepted, but at a later date it was also thrown out. I call attention to the fact that this amendment was offered in the Banking and Commerce Committee.

On section 64—bank circulation redemption fund:

Mr. WHITE: I wish to suggest an amendment to section 64 which is of some importance. Section 64 refers to the circulation redemption fund, and members of the committee are doubtless aware that all the banks have to contribute an amount equal to five per cent of the average note circulation to that fund, which constitutes a security for the note circulation of the banks. We are providing a gold reserve against which the banks may issue notes in excess of the amount of note circulation which they may now issue against their paid-up capital and against the fifteen per cent of the paid-up capital in reserve in the emergency period. Mr. McLeod, who appeared before the committee, wrote to me about this from London, and I think he is entirely correct in his views. He says that it is not necessary for the banks to contribute five per cent in respect to the note circulation which is issued against gold. In other words, it is the note circulation, which is issued against paid-up capital, and the so-called emergency circulation that should be safeguarded by the contributions of the banks. Therefore, in order to give effect to that recommendation and suggestion, which I have said is a very pertinent and good one, I move that section 64, sub-section 8, be amended by inserting, after deleting the period, after the word 'relates,' the following:

Provided, however, that in determining the average note circulation of a bank under this sub-section the daily average for each month of the amount of the bank's deposit, (if any) in the central gold reserves, which has not been withdrawn or deemed to be withdrawn within the meaning of this Act, shall be deducted from the greatest amount of the notes of the bank in circulation at any time during the month.

That means that the banks shall contribute five per cent of the balance. As regards the note circulation secured by gold, that is absolutely secured. That leaves it precisely as it is at present so far as the constitution of the banks is concerned towards a guarantee of the note circulation of the banks. In so far as the note circulation of the banks is safeguarded dollar for dollar by gold deposited under the provisions of the new Act, it is not necessary to contribute for that.

Mr. GRAHAM: If it had not been for the provisions of the new Act in adding to the gold security, this would not have been necessary.

Mr. WHITE: Quite so.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 114—annual returns for unpaid dividends and balances:

Mr. WHITE: The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) made a suggestion that we should insert the words 'certified cheque' in line 40, page 57 of the reprinted Bill after the word 'balance.' The purpose is to make the term slightly more complete.

Amendment agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Arts, agriculture and statistics—exhibitions, $375,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Last night we passed this item which we did not discuss at all. The hon. minister said that we could ask any questions concerning it at a future session of the committee. It would perhaps save time and a lot of questions if he would just give us a little idea of these exhibitions; what work he is carrying on; if this vote has anything to do with the vote for the Toronto exhibition; what is included in it; who is in charge of the exhibits; what are the exhibits; what success we are having, and if we are getting any returns that he can see directly or if they are indirect. Exhibitions properly conducted are the best advertising we can have for Canada. What are included in the exhibits—manufactured products or natural products? A few explanations would be acceptable, so that we may know what the money is for.

Hon. MARTIN BURRELL (Minister of Agriculture): This special vote is confined to large internal exhibitions, and is not for exhibitions in Canada itself. There is a vote for exhibitions every year. There is in the main estimates a vote of $50,000 for the Dominion exhibition which goes from province to province in turn. There are occasionally special votes. Last year there was a vote of $100,000 towards the Toronto National Exhibition, to pay for a building to house the exhibits of all the provinces. As I have said this vote has nothing to do with exhibitions of that kind, but it is to be confined to what we may call international exhibitions where Canada exhibits on a very large scale her natural resources and products. The first of these exhibitions was held in Stockholm in 1897. Since that time, fifteen or twenty exhibitions have been held, the last being the Festival of Empire in London. The money of this vote is largely to be for the exhibits at the International Exhibition in Ghent, in Belgium. The same man is in charge who has been in charge for many years, Colonel Hutchison, who is well qualified for the work and has a natural genius for exhibition work. A considerable sum will also be necessary for preliminary expenses in connection with the Panama Exhibition in 1915, for which we shall have to begin to get ready before the end of the present year. The Ghent Exhibition is just opening.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I hope the names of the two commissioners published are correct, Mr. Lafontaine and Mr. Plante.

Mr. BURRELL: Nothing has been decided on that point. No assistants have been sent as yet. In regard to that, the only object in sending anybody from this side was not to represent Canada but to strengthen the staff in Belgium of French-speaking people.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not know what the particular qualifications of Mr. Lafontaine may be, but as regards Mr. Plante, if my hon. friend will appoint him, I am sure he will find in him a man most conversant with the resources of our country and quite a creditable representative of Canada. At the time we had the exhibition at Brussells three years ago, Canada was never so well advertised in Europe as by our exhibit there. If my hon. friend could only reproduce what we had at Brussels—and I think he could improve on that—he would confer a great benefit on this country. I must say that in Mr. Hutchinson, and his immediate staff, Mr. Hains, for instance, we have most competent officers. At Brussels, I myself visited the exposition, and it was really a matter of pride for Canadians who were present to see the enormous crowds that were struggling from morning until evening to see the exhibits of Canada. It was practically a farmers' exhibit, a representation of the life on our Canadian farms, an exhibition of our fur-bearing animals, a display of the fruits of Canada and of the products of our forests and of our mines. It was a most extraordinary fact that so many people from that wealthy country came to see what Canada had to exhibit. I am quite sure that with the literature which was distributed there, Canada derived great benefit from that exposition. I congratulate the minister on his decision to have our exhibit this year at Ghent, and I hope Mr. Hutchinson will be given a free hand, as he has had a free hand in the past, because he has a real genius for such organization. Might I suggest to the minister to be generous—I do not say in salaries, because I know he will pay good salaries to our officers—but to be generous in the printing of pamphlets, booklets, atlases and other literature in French. There is in Belgium, as my hon. friend knows, a large French population, and it is from that country that we expect, more than from France, to receive immigrants. The population of Belgium, in contradistinction to that of France, increases every year. The territory of Belgium is rather limited, and there is no country in the world where the population is so dense. They are well-to-do farmers, they have large families and they emigrate, while the French peasants do not emigrate. Especially will that be the case this year, for the new law which is being enforced in France for service in the army will make immigration more restricted than ever. From Belgium we may expect an excellent class of farmers and gardeners, and I am quite sure that if the statistics are consulted since the exhibition of Brussels, it will be found that there has been quite an increase in the immigration from Belgium into Canada. If French and Flemish literature is being distributed, it will certainly result in a numerous class of desirable immigrants.

Mr. BURRELL: The hon. gentleman can rest assured that no pains will be spared to make the exposition at Ghent worthy of Canada. I agree with what he says concerning Belgium. We have a certain population from Belgium in the far West—in my own province especially. These people are most thrifty and their methods of intensive farming are a revelation to us. We could not get a better class of immigrants. We have made provision for a large distribution of suitable literature.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This item is largely increased this year as compared with last. The minister gave us a general outline of what he intended to do with the money, but it would be interesting to have items of the expenditure of this $200,000, so that we may know how he intends to expend so large an amount.

Mr. BURRELL: I can only say, as I have already said, that a large proportion of this money is to be spent in connection with the exposition in Ghent. That exposition will close about October or November. But before the expiry of the fiscal year, we shall have to incur fairly heavy expense in getting ready for the Panama exposition to be held at San Francisco in 1915. As my hon. friend knows, if he has seen these expositions, there is enormous expense in sending the exhibits and otherwise. I think he will find that for this expenditure, large as it is, the country will get a very excellent return in final result.

Mr. SINCLAIR: From an answer given to a question which I asked in the House some time ago, I understood that the Government did not intend to participate in the Panama Exposition.

Mr. BURRELL: I think my hon. friend is confusing the Panama Exposition with the San Diego Exposition. It was not thought advisable to take part in the latter, as the San Francisco Exposition is probably the more important.

Mr. GRAHAM: Can the minister tell us to what extent Canada intends to take part in the Panama Exposition?

Mr. BURRELL: I could not give my hon. friend any definite information, but speaking personally, for it is somewhat early to take the matter up officially, my own feeling is that at the Panama Exposition Canada would be justified in making one of the strongest exhibitions that she has ever made. It is of immense importance that on that occasion we should be worthily represented, and that our great natural resources should be given due prominence.

Mr. GRAHAM: Have representations been made to the Government by the manufacturers of Canada with regard to their being represented at one of these great expositions?

Mr. BURRELL: I have not any in mind.

Mr. GRAHAM: I see no reason why the manufacturers should not endeavour to exhibit their products at these great fairs so that the people of the world would understand not only that we are a great agricultural country, but also that we have important manufacturing industries as well. I say this to impress on the manufacturers of Canada what I have often said to them privately: that they are missing a great opportunity in not coming to the front and endeavouring to get their products to these great expositions with a view to showing the people of the world that we are a manufacturing as well as an agricultural country.

Agricultural development of dairying and fruit industries; improvement in transportation, sale and trade in fruit and other agricultural products, $190,000.

Mr. BURRELL: The items composing this amount are: expenses in connection with headquarters, $15,000; expenses connected with the various dairying branches, $62,000; fruit division, $70,000; markets division, $22,790; cold storage, $18,900; a total of $190,000 and an increase of over last year's estimates of $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER: What, generally speaking, are the dairying operations of the department?

Mr. BURRELL: We are taking up various kinds of work. One of the important activities in which we are engaged is the extension of a system of what we call dairy record centres. Under this system we place an expert, who thoroughly understands the use of a Babcock test, in charge of a certain district, and whose duty it is, within a certain radius to test the cows, the products of which are going to the creameries. The results of his tests are made known among the farmers who own the herds, in order that they may be instructed in the best methods of feeding and caring for their animals, and they may be enabled to tell which animals are paying and which are not. We have now nearly twenty of these centres.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Where are these centres located?

Mr. BURRELL: There are nine or ten centres in various parts of the province of Ontario, and three or four in Quebec. We are establishing two or three in the maritime provinces; so far we have not gone into the western parts at all, except in one of the smaller districts of British Columbia.

Mr. SINCLAIR: In what portions of the maritime provinces have these centres been established?

Mr. BURRELL: In the maritime provinces we have not done very much as yet. There is a station at Clifton, New Brunswick; and we have one in Prince Edward Island, we are establishing a centre in the French Acadian portion of New Brunswick, and propose to extend the system during this, or certainly during next year.

Mr. MACDONALD: What about Nova Scotia?

Mr. BURRELL: We have many of these points under consideration, so far as the expenditure which we propose to make to enable us to do the work this year.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are these officers permanent? Do they remain the whole year in one locality?

Mr. BURRELL: The officer works the whole year round, and by using the Babcock test he is enabled to tell the farmer the exact amount of butterfat contained in the product of each cow.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does he travel over a certain district, or is he permanently located in one place?

Mr. BURRELL: He works within a certain radius, sometimes within a circle of twelve, fifteen or twenty miles.

Mr. MACDONALD: If it is the intention to establish a station in Nova Scotia, it would be desirable to have it located in the centre of the province. The hon. member referred to Yarmouth, and, while I have no objection to the establishment of one of these centres in the Yarmouth district, it is at the extreme end of the province.

Mr. BURRELL: I was speaking only generally; it is not decided in what particular part of the province the centre will be located, but I know we are making arrangements to establish one in Nova Scotia.

Mr. LOGGIE: Has any arrangement been made for the establishment of one of these centres in the north-eastern part of the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. BURRELL: We are making arrangements to start work in that part of the country, I think in the county of Kent.

Mr. LOGGIE: That district is perhaps the best farming portion of north-eastern New Brunswick.

Mr. BURRELL: It is not always advisable to start these things in the best sections. It is sometimes advisable to start them in the sections that are not so far advanced, so as to give better education to the people.

Mr. OLIVER: What are the prospects of an extension of this work in the prairie provinces?

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot answer my hon. friend offhand. We have developed the work to a very considerable extent. We started four or five years ago with two centres I think, and we have gradually developed until we have seventeen or eighteen. It is quite obvious that we cannot extend the work to every portion of the country, otherwise we would commit ourselves to an enormous expenditure. The result of the work has been so satisfactory that whereas one firm which had been in the habit of selling fifty Babcock testers three years ago, sold during the past year one thousand for the use of individual farmers because the farmers knew the results of the tests we had been carrying on and knew what would be profitable and what would not. The work was initiated by my predecessor, and we have tried to develop it, and nothing has done more good to the dairy industry than those cow tests.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What does it cost?

Mr. BURRELL: We pay the men from $1,000 to $1,200 a year, and there are not very many other expenses connected with it.

Mr. OLIVER: The minister did not say anything very definite about extending the work in the prairie provinces.

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot very well say offhand, but if we are justified in extending the work to other portions of the West I shall be glad to give the matter every consideration.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any prospect of extension in the prairie provinces?

Mr. BURRELL: I would not say this year, but I do not see why it should not be done at an early date.

Mr. GRAHAM: I observe that the word 'transportation' is mentioned. That opens up a big avenue for improvement as well as for profit in the province of Ontario. I imagine there is no overlapping between the department at Toronto and the department at Ottawa in the matter of improving the quality and increasing the quantity, particularly of cheese. It was stated last night that the province of Quebec produced the greatest amount of butter. I think that is true, but no one will suggest that the province of Quebec, or any other province, equals Ontario in the production of cheese. Both as regards quantity and quality, the cheese that Ontario produces is as good as any to be found in the world. The Ontario provincial work has been very successful. If my memory serves me rightly, they have inspectors who go from factory to factory consulting with the makers, and in addition there are, I think, two dairy schools, one of them at Kingston. An endeavour is being made constantly to raise the standard of production, and it would be unwise for the two departments to clash. There is work for them both to do, and I know that the work of testing has been very beneficial. When I was connected with the press we took great pleasure in publishing the results of those tests, and that created an interest. I imagine that the press can help the Department of Agriculture a great deal in that respect. In regard to transportation, what improvement does the minister propose? The facilities for the transportation of dairy products and of fruit have been greatly improved in recent years, but I imagine they are not yet perfect. It is possible to approximate, at least, to the condition that the product will be in as good a condition when it reaches the consumer as when it leaves the producer. That means that the price is enhanced, and any money expended wisely in that direction means money in the pockets of the farmer. It would be very interesting if the minister could state whether he has any particular improvement in mind in the way of increasing the number of refrigerator cars, or of imposing more exacting demands on the railway companies to provide them, or upon steamship companies to provide better cold storage facilities.

Mr. BURRELL: We are trying all the time to improve that portion of the service. So far as the transportation and marketing go, we are keeping up a refrigerator car service, not only for butter but for cheese. It is largely from Quebec and Ontario points to Montreal and subsequently for export. Up till 1908, there was practically no arrangement for the provision of refrigerator cars or of cool chambers on vessels. The shipments were so few that the vessels would not retain cool chambers. Now the Government guarantees a certain amount of space on, I think, six steamers. These are reserved for fruit, and I may point out that the facilities have been taken advantage of for the shipment of some tender fruits like peaches. Whereas in 1910, 3,000 cases of peaches were shipped in those cool chambers, in 1912, in the guaranteed space in the vessels, nearly 9,000 cases were shipped. In regard to the refrigerator car service, we guarantee every year a minimum of two-thirds of a full car, and the shipper is allowed to avail himself of the broken carload rate, regardless of the ice storage for which we pay. In return for our guarantee, if when the car reaches its destination the ice is gone, we refuse to pay and we are enabled in that way to keep the railways up to the mark. I think we are doing as good work in keeping the companies up to the mark as is probably being done in any other country.

Mr. GRAHAM: In what condition does our fruit arrive in the West?

Mr. BURRELL: Very good as a general rule. My hon. friend will be surprised to know that eastern Canada sent 11,000,000 pounds of butter to western points last year, largely to the prairies and a considerable amount to British Columbia.

Mr. GRAHAM: Alberta will stop that after a bit.

Mr. BURRELL: In two prairie provinces last year nearly half a million dollars worth of dairy products were put on the market produced by the western dairy farmers.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Does the minister say that he guarantees two thirds of the car load and does that enable the shipper of the food to get carload rates for his goods?

Mr. BURRELL: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Suppose a car is sent out that is only half filled and the Government pay the difference between the half and the two-thirds, what rate does the shipper pay?

Mr. BURRELL: Each year from about the middle of May to the middle of October, iced refrigerator cars are run regularly over certain routes in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec for the carriage of butter to Toronto and Montreal. These cars are run weekly or fortnightly, according to the requirements of the route, on an advertised schedule so that shippers can deliver their butter to the stations with the least possible exposure to heat. A shipper may forward any quantity, from one package upwards, and pay only the regular less than carload rate without extra charge for the icing. The Government guarantees a revenue each trip equal to two-thirds of the minimum carload earnings from starting point to destination plus $4 per car for icing. This guarantee only holds if the car arrives in good shape with the ice not exhausted. It gives an opportunity to the shipper to get his goods forwarded in refrigerator cars that he would not otherwise have.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It looks like a good thing for the railway company.

Mr. BURRELL: Although we give this guarantee, we do not pay the freight if the freight in the car pays for itself.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You pay if it falls short?

Mr. BURRELL: If it falls below two-thirds we pay it but if the car pays of itself we do not pay it, and it very often happens that we do not have to pay anything.

Mr. MARCIL: I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to a section of the country which I am sorry to say he is probably not as familiar with as he ought to be. I was not here the other evening when the matter was taken up concerning experimental farms, but I might say that during the present session I have obtained important documents, one of which I would like to read to the committee as emanating from a former member for the constituency of Bonaventure, Mr. L. J. Riopel, who represented that constituency in this House for many years and who wrote a letter on the 26th of March 1912 to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture calling special attention to the conditions existing in the county of Bonaventure and in the Gaspesian peninsula generally, a matter which was alluded to last night by my hon. colleague from Rimouski (Mr. Boulay). With the permission of the committee I will read this letter which summarises well the position in which the farmers of the country find themselves:

Quebec, March 26th, 1912.

G. O'Halloran, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to the suggestion which I laid before you in the absence of the Hon. Mr. Burrell, I beg to submit the following remarks in connection with the establishment of an agricultural school at New Carlisle for the benefit of the Gaspé Peninsula.

That section of the province of Quebec, comprising the counties of Bonaventure, Matane and Gaspé has suffered great drawbacks on account of its isolated situation.

Its population, now being nearly 100,000 was originally composed largely, of fishermen and lumberers; although during the past twenty-five years, they have made fair progress in agricultural pursuits.

The institution of a model farm would greatly promote the welfare of those people, who as a rule, are lacking experience in that paramount industry.

The soil of the Gaspé Peninsula is generally well adapted to farming and is most suitable for growing all sorts of vegetables.

As I have mentioned to you, sir, the large farm of the late Lieutenant Governor, Hon. Théodore Robitaille, New Carlisle, the Shiretown of the county of Bonaventure, is in every respect suitable for the purpose in view.

It comprises nearly one hundred acres of land all under cultivation, with a frontage of five acres on the Baie des Chaleurs, and is provided with all buildings required for a Government farm of moderate dimensions.

A wood lot of sixteen acres, about three miles distant from the farm would also be secured.

The farm is conveniently situated within a few acres of the New Carlisle Government wharf, and of the railway station; and it commands a magnificent view of the Paspebiac harbour, and also of the shore of New Brunswick, about twenty miles across the Baie des Chaleurs.

It may be noted here that the counties of Restigouche and Gloucester in New Brunswick could share the advantages of such an undertaking, as it would be easy of access to the people of that shore.

The proposition now submitted to the consideration of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture was suggested to me through the announcement of the policy of the present Government promising to take measures for the encouragement and promotion of Agricultural pursuits.

Seeing that there are only two model farms in the province of Quebec, and those institutions are beyond the reach of the Gaspé population, it is obvious that an Agricultural school, or model farm would be most beneficial to the inhabitants of that large section of the country.

With the hope that the proposition may be earnestly considered.

I beg to remain,
Dear Sir,
Yours truly,
(Sgd.) L. J. Riopel.

This was followed by an acknowledgement and subsequent correspondence, but up to the 9th day of May last when the papers were laid before Parliament nothing seems to have been done for the purpose of affording to this large population some of the benefits of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Under very trying circumstances, during the last ten years, one of the devoted priests of the constituency, Rev. Jacob Gagné, who is well known to the Department of Agriculture, has at great trouble and inconvenience to himself, established a number of butter and cheese factories throughout the constituency and has assisted the farmers very materially in that respect. The country is one admirably adapted to the raising of cattle and the production of cheese and butter. But owing to the policy which has been pursued in regard to railway communication the butter and cheese output has to be carried many a hundred miles before it reaches the Intercolonial railway at Matapedia. There are a great many drawbacks which must be overcome. The population has been increasing in the three constituencies, but I am sorry to say not as largely as it would have done if better farming and transportation facilities had been given to the people. A large proportion of the population have had to emigrate, many of them to New Brunswick, some to other parts of Quebec and others to the United States. But there is an area 10,000 miles square, an immense field for the activities of a great agricultural population. I hope that, having called his attention to the subject, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture will take it in hand and see that some of the benefits of his administration are extended to the population of that constituency. The letter I have read comes from Mr. Riopel, who for nearly twelve years sat in this House, who occupies a high position in the ranks of the Conservative party and whose word is to be accepted as being quite reliable. I should like to see the minister send some of his best men down to the constituencies of Bonaventure, Rimouski and Gaspé to make an examination and report. Rimouski, of course, being on the Intercolonial railway, is not handicapped as the other constituencies are. The minister should send a good man to investigate the conditions in order that something may be done for these enterprising people who are mostly French-Canadians, although at New Richmond, Port Daniel West and New Carlisle, there are three important English-speaking agricultural parishes. During the past ten years these people have made an effort to give up fishing as being unprofitable and go into farming, but they have been handicapped for want of transportation to the markets and lack of experimental stations and agricultural instruction. The people are energetic, the soil productive, the season short but fruitful, and with ordinary assistance from the department they would be placed in a position to become prosperous and happy. Should an experimental station be erected by the Government no better point could be selected than New Carlisle, which is the shire town of the constituency and is situated about one hundred miles from Matapedia and one hundred miles from Gaspé Basin, being about half way across the peninsula. If facilities were given to these people to pursue the agricultural industry any expenditure in that direction would repay the department and repay the country one hundredfold. There is in that district a field for the minister to do abundant good work.

Mr. BURRELL: I have had a talk with Mr. Riopel and I have also met a deputation from that district, and I quite appreciate the argument advanced by the hon. member (Mr. Marcil). I have abundant sympathy with the large sections of the country which are not sharing the advantages that other parts receive, but it is difficult to supply facilities for the entire Dominion at once. I do not see why some of the benefits that may be derived by farmers from the new Agricultural Aid Bill recently passed could not be shared by the people of that district. I am sure the influence of my hon. friend from Bonaventure would be considerable and I would advise him to make a strong appeal to the Quebec Government, and if anything can be done to make advances to that district to assist agricultural development through educational means, say the establishment of a school in New Carlisle, I shall be only too glad to look at it sympathetically.

Mr. SEXSMITH: It is specified in the item in the estimates that this vote of $190,000 is for the development of the dairying and fruit industries and the improvement in transportation, sale and trade in fruit and other agricultural products. It seems to me that a vote of $190,000 is very small for the purposes for which this vote is destined. Especially is that the fact when we realize that the dairy products of our country last year were worth over $100,000,000 and that while the production of butter has increased, the production of cheese has somewhat declined. I am glad to hear the Minister of Agriculture say he intends to establish a great many more dairy record centres. One of the first of them was established in my district and it has done a great deal of good to the farmers in that community. The farmer sends his milk to be tested and has the record sent back to him and at the end of the year he knows what cows are worth keeping. I know a farmer who had his herd tested and he found quite a number of them were only boarders and he discarded them and in three or four years he had practically doubled his production. I strongly advocate the establishment of these dairy record centres in the dairying sections of the Dominion. Then, as to the fruit industry, we had evidence before us last year of the great difficulties the fruit people encountered in getting their fruit to the market, and I would suggest to the minister that probably the best way to help the fruit industry now is to stimulate co-operation in the packing and marketing of fruit. Again I repeat that this vote of $190,000 is small for the objects it is to be devoted to. I hope by the time the minister develops his policy he will be able to come to Parliament and ask Parliament to vote at least half a million dollars to assist the dairying and fruit industries of the Dominion. I do not want to take the position that the farmers of Canada are asking Parliament to be spoon-fed, but at the same time I do not think the Government could spend money in any better way than in educating the people in the different branches of farming. The provincial governments are doing a great deal, but there is still a wide field of usefulness for the federal Government and it can work in co-operation with the provincial governments to stimulate the most important industry in the country. I trust the minister will next year take the larger vote for this purpose and extend the work.

Agriculture—to enforce the Seed Act, to test seeds for farmers and seed merchants, to encourage the production and use of superior seeds, and to encourage the production of farm and garden crops, $100,000.

Mr. KYTE: Can the hon. minister say where these tests are made? Are there particular stations where seeds are tested, and how are they tested and distributed?

Mr. BURRELL: The great portion of the seed testing is done at our central laboratory in Ottawa. In the far West, we have a station at Calgary where we are doing seed testing. I am not sure at present whether we have any other branch or not. We have a staff of inspectors covering the different provinces who are doing what this item says. They are not only enforcing the Seed Act; but they are testing seeds for farmers and merchants; they are keeping track of merchants who sell seed below the standards set in the Act, that is in the way of germination, quality, impurities, weed seeds and so on. In addition to that, we are giving subventions to the different provinces in respect to seed space, in proportion to the amount of acreage they have under crop. We give $1,000 for every million acres under crop, amounting on the whole to $35,000 on that item alone. In addition to that, we are making grants to the seed growers' associations, which are doing good work.

Mr. MACDONALD: I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to a condition of affairs that arose last year in my county. The farmers purchased seed grain from Winnipeg. I do not know what method of seed inspection there is in that part of the country, but an enormous loss was caused to the farmers of my county through having purchased that seed. None of it germinated and a great many farmers lost their whole crops. I would like the minister to explain, if he can, how such a large quantity of seed came through without inspection.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not think we would have power under the Act to deal with that. This year a good many complaints of that sort were made, especially in Quebec and the eastern provinces, where the farmers were short of seed and of money to buy it. In many cases we offered to give the assistance of our inspectors to advise the farmers as to the quality of the seeds they were buying. We would certainly be justified in extending that work as far as we can. We dealt with it in another way this year. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior distributed a large amount of seed grain in connection with the unpatented land in the West. We got the minister to co-operate with our department and not to allow any of that seed to go out until it had passed our inspectors.

Mr. KYTE: My object in asking the question was to lead up to the very point. Farmers in my own county and other counties in eastern Nova Scotia had the same experience. A very considerable quantity of seed oats arrived in eastern Nova Scotia last spring from the province of Manitoba, and none of it germinated, which caused very great loss to the farmers. I had an idea that the Seed Act provided that no person should advertise seed of any kind for sale, unless he had a certificate of inspection or some guarantee to offer intending purchasers that it was proper grain for seed purposes. Seed inspection ought to be provided for in the different provinces. It is a great disadvantage to farmers to sow seed oats which are not of such a character as should be used for seed. The hon. minister might extend the operations of the Seed Act so as to have inspectors placed in different sections of the provinces to guarantee that the proper kind of seed is placed on the market.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The observations that have just been made in regard to impure seed are of such importance to the farmers of Canada that I think we might continue the discussion for a little longer. There is nothing to prevent a farmer from going to a feed store and purchasing grain, that has been imported, for instance, from western Canada, and using that grain for seed. It may not have been imported for that purpose. How you could lay down any law that would prevent a farmer from purchasing and using that seed is something pretty hard to imagine. The complaints made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and others have been general not only in the maritime provinces, but in the other provinces. Last year many farmers in Ontario suffered through the very same cause. A farmer must realize that he is taking big chances when he purchases from a feed store, grain which has possibly been imported to be used as feed, and uses it for seed. I quite agree that the Department of Agriculture might, with advantage to the farmers, exercise some control over all grains used for seed; but there is a greater danger than the loss suffered through sowing such grain as he has described. The weed nuisance in the country has spread to such an extent that it should cause the very gravest concern. I do not think there is anything else causing the farmers so great a loss as the spread of noxious weeds. We have the Conservation Commission considering ways and means of conserving the resources of our country. The weeds that have spread during the past few years, for instance over Ontario, have caused a greater loss possibly than anything else. Last session a Bill was put through this House with regard to what is known as the Grain Act. It provided for the cleaning of grain at the elevators. At that time I took exception on several occasions to the fact that screenings from the elevators were permitted to be sent out and sold to anyone who would purchase them. As a matter of fact, immense quantities of those screenings have been shipped into every province, and as a consequence weeds have spread all over Canada. Great care is exercised to see that the small seeds, for instance clover and timothy, are cleaned thoroughly and that as small a percentage of weed seeds is left in them as possible. The farmer takes particular pride in purchasing the very best and purest seeds that he can. He may be at the same time purchasing from the West large quantities of damaged grain which he is grinding up for feed. In a bushel of that mill feed there may be millions of foul weed seeds. I think provision ought to be made that the screenings from these elevators should not be sent throughout the country but destroyed at the elevator. The item is not a very large one, and I quite approve of the increase which is about twenty per cent. But I think that if the item were a great deal larger and precautions were taken that weed seeds separated from the grain should be destroyed at the elevator it would be much better. These screenings are sold to a great many people who are not interested very much in agriculture who use them for feed and the weed seeds finally find their way back to the soil. Travelling through some agricultural districts of Ontario at harvest time, one is astonished to think that these valuable lands are being taken up by the weeds. This, I believe is one of the most serious things that confront the people of the rural districts. Some heroic treatment will certainly have to be resorted to in order to overcome this nuisance. There is not a person who is familiar with farming conditions but must realise that there are many sections of this country that are absolutely, you might say, useless, for agricultural purposes through the spread of weeds. If anything can be done to overcome this nuisance, it ought to be done. I do not think this item will go a great way towards overcoming this great nuisance.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) approves of this increase. I think we would all approve of it if we thought it was going to be put to any useful purpose. But the minister has not shown us that he is doing any good with this money. There are nothing but complaints on both sides as to the results. In my own province nothing has been done, so far as I can learn, to better conditions. If the work of this Government is to be confined to the experimental farm at Ottawa and only the people who send their seeds here are to have them tested, I do not think it will ever amount to very much as a benefit to the farmers of the country. Is not there some system the minister can devise by which dealers will be made responsible for the seeds they sell to farmers? Cannot he license them or provide other means by which they can be controlled and prevented from selling inferior seed? This is a matter of the greatest importance to the farmers, and as my colleagues from Nova Scotia have said, it was a great loss to the farmers of that province last year. And that loss is constantly going on. I see that a part of this money is to be spent to enforce the Seed Act. If I remember rightly that Act contains a provision imposing penalties upon seedsmen who sell useless or injurious seeds to farmers. What has the minister done to enforce the Seed Act?

Mr. BURRELL: I am sorry I have not the details of a number of prosecutions. But I am surprised to hear the hon. member say that nothing has been done to show value received for this expenditure. As a matter of fact there is a great deal of machinery in connection with the Seed Control Act with which, I suppose, the hon. gentleman is more or less familiar. We have the following inspectors: British Columbia, Alfred Eastham; Alberta, A. D. Campbell; Manitoba and Saskatchewan, F. H. Reid; western Ontario, W. J. Lennox; maritime provinces, S. J. Moore; eastern Quebec, J. A. Simard; Eastern Townships of Quebec, Carl Sweet; Prince Edward Island, Garnet LeLacheur. All these men are highly qualified, not only graduating from the agricultural colleges but having taken special work in the seed divisions of those colleges, and subsequently having been trained to some extent in our central laboratory. The hon. member thinks that nothing is being done, but dozens of prosecutions for violation of the Seed Act are going on all the time. I agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that nothing has been done of greater value to the farming community than the work of the Seed Control Act, for to that Act is due the greater purity of the seed sold to farmers all over the country. I shall be glad to give my hon. friend a list of the prosecutions carried on by the department against dealers for violation of this Act. It is true these have been largely in connection with clover, timothy, alsike and alfalfa and have not extended to cases mentioned by the hon. members for Richmond and Pictou.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The hon. minister says he had heard that the sale of these inferior Manitoba oats in Nova Scotia had caused great loss to the people. Did he make investigation or prosecution?

Mr. BURRELL: Speaking offhand I am not sure that under the Act we have power to deal with this particular case. The Act is confined largely to the grass and clover seeds I mentioned, and besides, there is the provision under the Seed Act that a farmer may sell his own oats whether dirty or clean. The Act is merely confined to the seed bought and sold by merchants and to certain seeds. I shall be glad to go into the matter of amending the Act, though there will probably be difficulties that hon. members of the House do not suspect. I would not like the hon. gentleman to think the money is not being wisely spent, or that it is not accomplishing great good. This vote, while a fairly substantial one, must be increased. But in the year before I took hold of the department, this appropriation was $50,000; it has been increased until this year it is $100,000. The vote for dairying in 1910-11 was $100,000 and we have increased that to $190,000, and with the amount in the supplementary estimates about $210,000. If you include all branches of agricultural work, the amount in 1910-11 was $1,143,000, whereas this year it will be $2,633,000. So, though the hon. gentleman contends that we are not going fast enough. I think that he will see that the doubling of the expenditure in two years is considerable. And there is danger in going too fast, because you cannot maintain efficient administration in this line of work if too great haste is made. It is my hope, and I think that of everybody, to see a far more generous expenditure on agriculture than has been made in the past. I believe the country would favour that. We are going fairly fast, but we must avoid the danger of going too fast, and not keeping up the efficiency of our administration.

Mr. WEBSTER: In many cases where farmers in certain communities have received poor seed, it is not the fault of the seed merchants or the Government. Supposing some gentleman writes to a friend of his in the West and asks him to ship a carload of oats or wheat for seed. He receives it; it has never been inspected either by the Government of Manitoba or the officials of the experimental farm, and he is able to take advantage of this condition of affairs. He gets the oats for 5, 10, and sometimes 20 cents a bushel less than he would have to pay for No. 1 seed purchased from the seed merchants. In some cases the seed grain is bought from persons in the West who, although it is not at all the best, represent it to be of first-class quality, with the result that when it is sold it fails to germinate, and the loss must fall upon the purchaser. In that regard, of course, the minister is not to blame; the farmer who buys an inferior article and sows it, not knowing whether or not it has been tested, is entirely responsible for his own loss. A specific case came under my observation on Saturday last. In the Grain Growers' Guide this winter there appeared an advertisement stating that all seed oats or seed grain shipped from Manitoba would be carried by Canadian railways at half price. One of my constituents, seeing that advertisement, ordered a carload of oats for seed. It was billed to him as seed oats, but I saw the oats myself on Saturday last, and I know that as it had been injured by the frost, not more than 30 per cent of it will ever germinate. The railway did not forget to charge full freight rates for the grain, and the purchaser naturally felt very much aggrieved, considering that the Government has not taken the interests of the farmer into consideration in this respect. Of course that farmer was to blame for that transaction, not the Government or anybody else.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Webster) has placed his finger on the weak spot in the Seed Act. The hon. minister, as he has said, is powerless under the Act, because the Act permits the farmer to sell this seed grain and not become liable to its penalties. I quite agree with the hon. member for Brockville in his assertion that much of the seed that is sold throughout the country is distributed by irresponsible dealers who have no interest in the producing of a good crop. There is no person more interested in getting a good crop within the district in which the seed is sold than the responsible seed merchant or dealer, because he knows that if the seed grows well and produces a good crop, he will have additional sales in the fall. I think the minister should take into consideration, if not this session, then during the next, the advisability of amending the Seed Act so that the farmer who sells inferior seed will incur the same penalties as the merchants and dealers.

Agriculture—encouragement of establishment of cold storage warehouse, $200,000.

Mr. KYTE: Does that include cold storage for fishermen in the maritime provinces?

Mr. BURRELL: Some of the cold storage warehouses dealing only with fish are under the control of the Marine and Fisheries Department. Under this Act, we really deal with the encouragement and establishment of cold storage warehouses for the better preservation and handling of all food products. It does include fish to a certain extent, for in some of these warehouses fish is stored. This vote is necessary to pay the instalments, spread over a term of years, towards the maintenance of a number of warehouses that have been established. Altogether the number of warehouses completed is twenty-six, those under construction two; further contracts entered into, two.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Can the hon. minister give us the names of the places in Nova Scotia where these warehouses are located?

Mr. BURRELL: Halifax Cold Storage Company, Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia; Lockeport Cold Storage Company, Lockeport, Nova Scotia.

Mr. CARVELL: And in New Brunswick?

Mr. BURRELL: New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, St. John, and Cold Storage Limited, Woodstock. These are the only two in New Brunswick; the others are scattered all over the country. We give a bonus or subsidy of thirty per cent on the cost of construction, the terms being that the warehouse shall be constructed according to lines laid down by the department, and that the rates shall be subject to control by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KYTE: Does the department receive any report from these cold storage companies as to the work they are doing?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, we receive reports from time to time and take a note of their operations.

Mr. KYTE: Is there any condition imposed upon these companies as to the class of product they are to store in the warehouses, or are they entitled to the bonus even if the space is entirely devoted to the storage of their own products?

Mr. BURRELL: One of the conditions is that they are obliged to take such products as are offered by the public, because it is a public utility. We would not think for one moment of granting a subsidy to a firm that would simply build a warehouse for its own use.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are there any new warehouses projected under this vote?

Mr. BURRELL: We have two under consideration, and I think one or two have been applied for. Contracts have been entered into for the payment of subsidies to the Acadia Cold Storage Company, Halifax, the Edmonton Produce Company, Edmonton, the Algoma Produce Company, Sault Ste. Marie, and the Tillsonburg Cold Storage Company, Tillsonburg, Ontario.

Agriculture—development of live stock industry, $200,000.

Mr. ROBB: Will the minister explain how this money is to be spent?

Mr. BURRELL: It is spent in a great variety of ways, chiefly for the encouragement of the live stock industry. We do a great deal in the way of supplying judges for live stock fairs held throughout Canada, and we also contribute a certain amount towards winter fairs and various other exhibitions of live stock held throughout the country. In connection with this we give grants to various poultry and live stock associations. We are now contemplating the purchasing and supplying of stallions, bulls, boars and rams to all districts, especially the newer districts of the West and the East, which are in need of first-class animals for the improvement of the live stock industry under certain conditions laid down by the department, and we are ready to receive applications for these from any such district through our live stock branch, the stipulation being that we will buy and own the animals, and that the associations which will be formed for the purpose will undertake their proper maintenance, control the amount of the service fee, and so on, we reserving the right to see that the animals are kept in proper shape and are transferred from point to point. A very considerable portion of this vote will go in that direction.

Mr. ROBB: Any particular breed of horses and cattle?

Mr. BURRELL: We lay down no condition. We simply leave it to the associations to say what breeds they shall prefer, making the condition that they shall not introduce into any one section animals of a breed which is represented by animals of private owners in that particular section.

Mr. ROBB: I notice from the Auditor General's report that a considerable amount of money has been devoted in the past to the breeders of thoroughbred stock. I cannot find anywhere that the breeding of heavy draught or serviceable horses has been encouraged. It seems to me that considerable encouragement has been given to racing horses. I hope that in the enlargement of this policy the minister is not going to be carried away by the lobby that was put up last Parliament and during this Parliament by certain breeders of racing horses for the encouragement of the breeding of that stock at the expense of the general public. There is a considerable demand for good heavy horses. That is the best class of horse for a farmer to breed. If you start a farmer breeding racing stock, it will be absolutely useless on the farm, and it will be bad for the boys starting out in life. I would like the minister to make a statement to-night as to whether the policy of encouraging the breeding of racing stock in this country is to be enlarged.

Mr. SMITH (South Ontario): When was that policy started?

Mr. ROBB: It was started, unfortunately, under the last Government.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not know what my hon. friend means when he speaks of the policy being enlarged. I do not think he puts it quite rightly when he says that the idea was to encourage the breeding of purely racing stock. It was felt, and possibly felt rightly, that although the heavy draught horses occupy a very valuable place, after all the lighter horse industry was not getting the attention it deserved, especially in regard to the remount question, which, according to the people in his country whose opinions are worth something, is of importance. For that purpose a bonus was given to the thoroughbreds which met certain requirements laid down by the Veterinary Department. The bonus is $250 a year, certain conditions being imposed as to the service fee, the number of mares served, and so on. I do not think it is well to discontinue that bonus. We are continuing it this year, but my hon. friend may rest assured that under the policy, to which I have just referred, not only an equal, but probably a much greater proportion of help will be given to other types of horses than thoroughbreds. As probably he knows, we have separated our Veterinary Department and placed the live stock branch in charge of Mr. John Bright, a well-known breeder, who knows the heavy horse side well. I think my hon. friend may rest assured that the horses to which he refers will get ample consideration.

Mr. WEBSTER: My hon. friend from Huntingdon made a statement with which I cannot agree. While I am free to admit that heavy draught horses are to-day selling at higher prices than we have ever seen in Canada, possibly it might not pay the individual farmer to breed them. If the individual farmer has a mare that will cross well with a standard bred or thoroughbred and that will not cross well with the heavy draught, he must breed to the horse that will mate best with his mare. Last week we saw in Ottawa a pair of horses for which the lady who owned them refused $20,000, and you can buy a lot of heavy draught horses for $20,000. To-day a good carriage horse is worth the price of two heavy draughts, and if the individual farmer has a mare that will produce one of that class, that is the kind he should breed to to get the best results. With regard to the thoroughbred, I agree with my hon. friend from Huntingdon. I am not a lover of the thoroughbred. I do not know what use they are outside of race horses. I know that for getting remounts, the United States Government have practically discarded them for the heavy-weight standard bred. I noticed that the United States Government have bought three stallions in New York within the last year for that purpose, and they were sent to the remount station. If our Minister of Militia gets busy in regard to remounts, he had better drop the thoroughbred and get into the heavy class standard bred; he will get a more adaptable horse for ordinary remount purposes.

Mr. ROBB: I differ from my hon. friend (Mr. Webster). I am an admirer and lover of the thoroughbred. While a lady refused $20,000 for a pair of horses shown here last week, the point is that for one person looking for a $1,000 driving horse, there are fifty people looking for a heavy draught horse. The heavy draught horses are the most serviceable for a farmer to raise. The raising of the thoroughbreds is a business. You cannot raise them on the farm, because if you do, the boys are going to make them unsound before they are marketable at four years of age.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I was glad to hear the minister state that the animals which they were purchasing were to be owned and practically controlled by the department. I do not see why any difference should be made between the thoroughbred and the other classes of pure bred stock. This system, as has been remarked by my hon. friend (Mr. Robb), was adopted some years ago. In looking over the Auditor General's report, I find that apparently some people are making a business of taking advantage of the bonus that is now being paid not only to the owners but to the controllers of thoroughbred stallions. It is not even necessary for a man to own one so long as he can get control of him. Horses worth one hundred dollars, and many of them are not worth one hundred dollars and would not bring fifty dollars, are drawing two hundred and fifty dollars from the Government of Canada. I think that the sooner that system is stopped the better it will be for all concerned. If we are in such desperate straits to breed remounts, we ought to adopt some sane policy. When horses of that class command a superior price, the farmers in this country will go into the breeding of them. For instance, a horse is worth we shall say one hundred dollars, and some one gets control of him and farms him out to a number of farmers. He not only gets two hundred and fifty dollars a year from the Government, but collects a fee of three dollars, I believe, for every mare served. I believe there is in existence not far from this city a group of individuals who have a number of horses and who received thousands of dollars last year for the horses that were sent out through the country. I believe that a great many of these horses would not even pass inspection. If the breeding of thoroughbred horses was put on the same basis that has been adopted with regard to other pure breeds it would be better for the country and all concerned. How many hon. gentlemen present, during their lifetime, have seen a demand in this country for remounts? I can only recollect that once during my lifetime was there a demand for army remounts and that was during the South African war. I do not know whether it was very satisfactory or not, but I know that as a matter of fact it was not the farmer who reaped the benefits so much as the middlemen who were purchasing for the Government in this country. Many of them made immense fortunes out of this business at that time. But I believe that the farmers reaped a great advantage in getting rid of the class of horses they had at that time. It has been remarked by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Webster) that the heavy standardbred horse is a better horse for army purposes and many other purposes than the thoroughbred. I quite agree with him, and yet you may raise as perfect a standardbred horse as it is possible to conceive of and reap no advantage under this Act. But on some freak that has been bred for racing purposes and is registered as a thoroughbred you can receive $250 a year from the Government. It was an Act which was hard to defend when it was put into effect, and I think the actions of certain parties in reaping the benefit of the Act have shown that it should no longer be continued. If it is desirable to give a bounty for breeding remounts then give it to parties who are raising horses, and not to those who are farming out horses among the people of Canada.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I think the minister ought to give some explanation in regard to this item especially after the speech we have heard from the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), who has told us that in his opinion money is being paid by the minister for the support of horses that would not pass inspection. I would be very much surprised to learn that the business is being managed in such a careless way as that, and therefore I think this item is one on which we should have some explanation.

Mr. BURRELL: My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) need not alarm himself very seriously. I am sorry to say that whilst I must agree with some of the remarks made by my hon. friend from South Oxford, I cannot agree with all. It is perfectly true that, while I am the responsible minister, I did not originate the policy of giving a subsidy for thoroughbred horses, but while something may be said against it, there is a good deal to be said for it. I have a good deal of respect for Dr. Rutherford, who was Live Stock Commissioner and Veterinary Director General when I came into office. We lost his services, but I need not go into that. I must say that I entertained a very strong feeling of regard for Dr. Rutherford's ability and judgment, and he had a fairly strong opinion on this point. I would like to say that the whole of the figures as to the amount that has been expended were put on 'Hansard' some time ago in response to a question by my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland). My hon. friend from Guysborough can get the figures, but I want to assure him that there are no bonuses paid on those animals that do not pass inspection, but that, on the contrary, there is a very rigid inspection before those who breed animals can receive these subsidies. These subsidies are open to the owner of a thoroughbred horse whether he comes from one province or another and they are being paid to gentlemen all over the country. If I had known this subject was coming up I could have brought quite a number of letters from men whose opinions I regard very highly. For instance, Mr. Hubbard, who was secretary of the Department of Agriculture in the province of New Brunswick, and who is now in charge of our new experimental farm there, justifies the good work being done in that connection. I could also quote Mr. Carruthers, of Montreal, a very well known man. I could also bring the testimony of Mr. Clifford Sifton, who is certainly a good judge of things of this kind, who feels very strongly on the question, and who realizes that good work has been done along that line. I do not think that it is quite right to say, as my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) states, that any freak which has figured as a racehorse can receive that subsidy. It should be borne in mind that a great many extraordinarily valuable horses that may have served their uses as racers may render great service in the way of breeders and sires. While I do not want to enter into a disquisition upon horse breeding and racing, I think that any man who knows anything about the horse business will admit that there is a good deal of truth in the statement that a horse that has finished its best racing days may be capable of some splendid service when he comes to be used as a sire. All these animals which are justified in considering as sires are subjected to a rigid examination as to health, conformation and so on before these subsidies can be received. Whatever may be thought best in the future, I must confess that I do not see any reason for discontinuing the subsidies during the present year.

Mr. CARVELL: Mr. Chairman, I would not have entered into this discussion if my hon. friend had not mentioned Mr. Hubbard of New Brunswick as an authority with regard to the value of this class of horses. Mr. Hubbard's evidence, in my judgment, is not very good along that line. I do not mean to say that Mr. Hubbard does not know a good deal about the breeding of horses and agriculture in general, but some three or four years ago the Government of New Brunswick, acting under his instructions, when he was Deputy Minister of Agriculture, made an importation of twenty-five or thirty of these spider-legged horses from Kentucky, brought them to New Brunswick, and auctioned them off to the farmers. The farmers paid a portion down, gave a note for the balance and in many cases they refused to pay the balance and the Government had to take the horses back. One or two of these horses were absolutely useless. But I have no hesitation in saying, and I am speaking not so much from my personal knowledge as from what I have heard from my neighbours and farmers generally, that perhaps nothing ever happened so detrimental to the horse industry in New Brunswick as the importation of these Kentucky race horses. I suppose that a race horse from Kentucky is about the same class of cur as you get from any place else. He is all right for the man who has lots of money and wants to spend it, such as the Hon. Mr. Sifton. It is all right for the Hon. Clifford Sifton, if he wants to spend $25,000 or $30,000 a year on race horses; that is his own affair, but that is not the kind of horse that the ordinary farmers should produce if we want to do something to assist the general welfare of the country. I find that the difficulty in reference to the purebred horse is that there is a continual deterioration. The great difficulty seems to be to keep them up to the standard that we would like to have maintained. Take thoroughbred Clydes and Percherons, cross them with smaller animals and there is a constant deterioration.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH (South Ontario): Surely you do not believe that?

Mr. CARVELL: I do believe it and I have pretty good reason for believing it too. If you cross any standard animal, Clyde or Percheron, with these purebreds, there will be a deterioration in value. You may get a good animal out of them once in a while, but as a rule you are getting an article that will not sell for money and after all what the farmer ought to have is something that he can sell for money. I object to the attempts to cross with these racing horses which are of no benefit to the farmer. If the minister devotes the money towards draught horses he will always get a saleable animal. I think the minister would do well to quit the practice entirely.

Mr. SMITH: When we consider the high price of live stock to-day, it appears to me the position taken by the minister is a sound one to place in certain sections of this country purebred animals, bred in Canada and not imported. I think the minister is taking a forward step to help the breeders and farmers of Canada in doing that. The other policy referred to was started some years ago, not by the present Minister of Agriculture, but by Mr. Sydney Fisher

Mr. CARVELL: We know that all right.

Mr. SMITH: I am telling you again. I understand that the policy was commenced upon the advice of the late veterinary director, Dr. Rutherford. No man in this House or in this country has a warmer admiration for Dr. Rutherford than I have, but I unhesitatingly say that when he gave this advice he made a mistake. I think it was hardly wise, perhaps, on the part of the present Minister of Agriculture, that that mistake should be continued. I want to place myself on record that in my opinion, at the end of the year 1913, that grant should cease. I cannot for a moment understand how the hon. member for Carleton, as I understood him, should have made the statement that when you are using a pure-bred sire the animals must deteriorate.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH: What did you say?

Mr. CARVELL: I said that in my judgment the stock is continually degenerating, and if you cross your stock with a small animal, such as these racing horses, you are not improving the stock. I would like to see every farmer use thoroughbred or pure-bred or standard stock, but I object to trying to breed animals that have no size and no value except for fancy racing purposes.

Mr. SMITH: After some practical knowledge of farm life, I say to the hon. member that he is wrong, and that these animals should be pure-bred and of a certain size and certain character, and having to undergo the inspection these animals have to undergo, the hon. gentleman is making a statement that is not correct. Whilst I do not agree that any great practical results can come from this, neither do I believe that the ordinary farmer will grow rich from pursuing this course. It is true that some good may have come out of it, but I believe it has gone far enough and the minister will be wise in the time to come to see that these grants are not continued. These animals that have been used, have been inspected by most reliable men from the department, and so far as I know the animals that have been used have done in some ways good service to the breeders of Canada. I do not believe that the further use of these animals will advance very much the interests of the farmers and in that way I believe it might be wise if the grant should stop. Every breed of animal has a certain place to fill and they are required in different parts of the country for different purposes. We must have these remounts and how they shall be bred it is scarcely for me to say to-night, but I think everyone will agree with me that at the bottom there is nothing like a thoroughbred.

Mr. ROBB: While we on this side agree with the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith) it is remarkable that the Minister of Agriculture for Canada should officially defend the grant that apparently the majority of the House, as at present composed, is opposed to—

Mr. BURRELL: There was a special grant given the last year or two over and above the subsidy, and this special grant last year, I may say frankly, I gave under the advice of the late veterinary director general. This year I have not given a special grant and this particular subsidy is open to everybody all over the country, apart from the firm which was principally in evidence, namely, the Bureau of National Breeding in Montreal. It is open to every man possessing a thoroughbred and I do not see any reason for discontinuing it.

Mr. ROBB: Who are the president and directors of the National Breeding Association in Montreal?

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot say now but I will be very glad to get the list.

Mr. ROBB: It is not necessary. My hon. friend beside me has made reference to the Hon. Clifford Sifton, who we all know is raising stock that have won much advertisement for him. The other authority mentioned, my good friend James Carruthers of Montreal, is also associated with a racing outfit, and it is quite natural he would approve of that policy, but the point is that the present Minister and the past Minister of Agriculture have been encouraging the breeding of racing stock and bonusing it and inducing farmers to abandon the breeding of stock that is really profitable to the farmer and to the country.

Mr. BURRELL: I would not like my hon. friend to go so far as to say that. I do not think my hon. friend will accuse me of being a racing man. So far as any encouragement of the thoroughbred horse is concerned, any influence that has moved me in the direction of keeping up this subsidy has been entirely in connection with the recommendation of not only Dr. Rutherford but a great many prominent men in this country, who have given sufficient information to justify the little that has been done in that direction, and it has not been very much. It has not been in connection with racing but entirely in connection with the remount question.

Mr. WEBSTER: In reply to the hon. member for Carleton, I would just say that the trouble lies in the fact that your farmers in that section lack proper brood mares to cross with thoroughbred stallions from Kentucky. With thoroughbred stallions you must have proper brood mares in order to obtain from them the desired results. You might just as well cross a Jersey bull with a Hereford heifer and expect to get a milch cow.

Mr. CARVELL: We have got a very poor result.

Mr. WEBSTER: We want in this country to-day drivers or carriage horses just as much as heavy horses. What is the result to-day? If you go to the country and look for a good driver or carriage horse, he is not to be found. Any man who has got one asks two prices for him. It is in the interest of the hon. minister to encourage the breeding of good standard breeds in order to get good horses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I would not like anyone to think I had not a very high regard for the thoroughbred horse. I believe it is the finest animal in the animal kingdom. I would not say a word that might cause anyone to think that the thoroughbred horse is not what it really is. What I object to is the system under which this vote of money is being paid. If the same policy were pursued with regard to the thoroughbred that is now being pursued by the hon. minister with regard to other pure breds, it would have a much more satisfactory result. I notice, in the return that was brought down to the House, that in the year 1911, of $8,250 that was paid for this purpose $5,250 was paid to the National Bureau of Breeding. This past year a large proportion went to the same association. We had an exhibition in the city of Ottawa last week that we should all feel particularly proud of, as it showed what a fine class of horses we have in this country. We can realize that the gentlemen who make a business of showing their horses there are very anxious indeed that they should be bred in large numbers throughout the country, so that they will have a larger number to select from. So far as granting a bonus of $250 per annum and a service fee being collected by the owner or controller are concerned, I do not think it is good business, and I do not think it is going to build up the breed as we would like to see it built up. Let the Government select pure-bred animals of a good type, if they wish to spend money in that direction, and have them placed and owned and controlled as the pure-breds are, and I believe you will have much more satisfaction.

Agriculture—health of animals, $450,000.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings, N.S.): I did not have an opportunity to speak on item 51. I would like to say a word in regard to the health of animals, which is a subject of great importance to the people of Nova Scotia at this particular time, especially in the county that I have the honour to represent. For the last three or four years in that province, according to investigations recently brought to light, we have had shipped over the province from the Government Experimental Farm at Truro—some six or seven coming into my own county—animals which have been shown conclusively to be tubercular. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that tuberculosis has been spread in various sections of the province through that cause. I would like to ask the hon. minister what steps are being taken at the present tome to meet so dire a scourge, emanating directly from the experimental farm, which has been under the eye not only of the local government, but, as it was attempted to be shown, of an official of the Dominion Government. I may not be within my rights in bringing a local matter to the attention of this Government, but I was informed a few days ago that the local authorities had turned the whole matter over to the Dominion Government.

I also wish to draw the attention of this House to a very important matter, that is the appointment of official veterinaries who might be available in the various provinces. I presume you have them in Ontario, Quebec and possibly New Brunswick. We have not one in Nova Scotia, that we can call on at any time that disease is found to have broken out on any breeding or other animal. It would be a great blessing to the farmers to have such an official at their call, either at the experimental farm at Truro, or at the new experimental station at Kentville. I have had letters from farmers complaining in this regard. I trust that the matter will also receive attention.

With regard to the encouragement not only of the health of animals, but of the live stock industry, there is a large section of country in the county of Kings and in the province of Nova Scotia that is admirably suited to the raising of live stock. During the last couple of years we have endeavoured to bring Scotch settlers into that part of the country. The difficulty is that they are not able to get the breed of cattle to which they are used. A certain Scotchman coming in brought with him three Clydesdale horses. He had to pay $320 duty on them on arrival at Halifax.

Mr. SMITH: Are you not mistaken in the amount of duty?

Mr. FOSTER: I am absolutely sure, because the amount of duty was afterwards refunded.

Mr. SMITH: Were they pure-breds?

Mr. FOSTER: I understand that pure-breds come in free up to a certain number.

Mr. BURRELL: They all come in free.

Mr. FOSTER: The difficulty is that in Scotland there are horses and cattle that are exactly as good to all intents and purposes, so far as marketing or breeding is concerned, as the pure-bred animal. The only difference is that the pedigree has not been kept and registered. This class of animal is debarred. The horses while not coming under the description of pure-breds were in reality as fine animals as pure-breds. This man paid the duty on them, but he was unable to bring in cattle unless absolutely pure-bred, for which he would have to pay a very high price in Scotland, whereas he could get the other kind at a very reasonable figure. I think the customs law should be modified so as to facilitate immigrants into the Maritime provinces and other parts of Canada bringing in as settlers effects such cattle, sheep and horses as will enable them to start business on the farm when they arrive.

Mr. WARNOCK: I notice there is an increase of $90,000 in this item. Is that to cover the proposed increase of compensation?

Mr. BURRELL: That is partly to cover the increase in the compensation, owing to the larger amounts we have had to pay both for hog cholera and for glanders; and it is partly for the extension of the service and increase of salaries. It was brought to our attention that many of our veterinary surgeons in the West were not paid in proportion to the cost of living in the West. We gave an additional amount of $200 to those west of the lakes. A good many officers were finding other employment while others were mixing up their private affairs with their duties as inspectors.

Mr. WARNOCK: I am glad to hear the minister say he has increased the salaries of these veterinary inspectors. Theirs is very hard and dangerous work, and I think our veterinary inspectors should be as well paid as those in the bureaus of animal industries n the United States—from $1,200 to $1,800 according to qualification and length of service.

Mr. BURRELL: We are doing the same thing now.

Mr. WARNOCK: I am glad that is being done. I understand that the amount required for compensation during last year was less owing to the decrease of diseases among our animals especially in the West.

Mr. BURRELL: But there was very much more in hog cholera.

Mr. WARNOCK: How about glanders and dourine?

Mr. BURRELL: That is slightly less.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How many inspectors are there?

Mr. BURRELL: About 123 in the meat and canned food branch, and in the health of animals branch from ninety to one hundred.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are they confined to the West?

Mr. BURRELL: No, they are all over the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are there some in Nova Scotia?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: Has the minister considered the question of placing a permanent veterinary surgeon in the district of Beauharnois? He has Dr. McCormick at Ormstown who inspects animals coming into the country. But there is a considerable export from that part of the country of animals to the United States, South Africa and even Japan. They have to pass a veterinary inspection, and shippers often have to wait for a man to come down from Ottawa to make this inspection. I understand that representations have been made to the minister to meet the demands of that industry.

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot recall any particular application. I do not receive every name in such cases, for it is a big service. We would do in the case referred to as we do in the West. At many points we do not pay a permanent inspector, the shipments not being very large. We employ a veterinary at fees, or give him a retaining fee of $200. If the hon. gentleman will kindly write me, I shall be glad to look into the case he refers to.

Mr. WARNOCK: Has the minister heard from the inspector he sent to Lethbridge in regard to the inspection of meat? We discussed that on the supplementaries.

Mr. BURRELL: Not to take up time with that now, I may say generally that the report was very satisfactory and everybody in the district was fairly well satisfied. If the hon. gentleman will call my attention to it, I will see that he gets a copy of the report.

Mr. KYTE: What special qualifications are these inspectors supposed to possess before appointment—these inspectors of food?

Mr. BURRELL: The food part of it is comparatively small. We have what is called the Meat and Canned Food Act. The great bulk of inspectors under that Act are concerned with the inspection of meat in the abattoir. No meat is allowed to be shipped out of the country or from province to province unless the animals have been killed under the supervision of one of our inspectors and handled in the abattoirs and stamped 'Canada Approved'—pretty much the American system. We have four or five inspectors who deal with canning factories largely to see that sanitary conditions are right and things put up in good shape. We do not go into it analytically—that belongs to the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. KYTE: The inspectors I have in mind are probably appointed by the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BURRELL: Probably.

Mr. SMITH (South Ontario): Has the minister ever heard from the jobbers, especially of the province of Ontario of any grievance with regard to the disposing of their stock in Montreal?

Mr. BURRELL: No, I have not heard of it.

To encourage the production and sale of Canadian tobacco, $30,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How much tobacco was raised in Canada last year?

Mr. BURRELL: I am afraid I cannot give the hon. gentleman the amount at this moment. We have a station at Harrow, one at Farnham, and one at St. Jacques l'Achigan in Quebec. Various lines of experimental work are carried on with different strains of tobacco and in methods of curing, and so on.

For experiments in cold storage for fruit, $28,500.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is that?

Mr. BURRELL: It is a special vote put in last year and revoted this year for experiments in connection with fruit cooling. We have not done anything yet, but I think along some lines of experimental work we may do something this year.

Grant to Dominion exhibition, $50,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Where is that exhibition to be this year?

Mr. BURRELL: In the province of Manitoba, in the city of Brandon.

For the administration and enforcement of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, $30,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How is that money spent?

Mr. BURRELL: In connection with the entomological work we carry on throughout Canada. We are carrying on a special work in the maritime provinces in connection with the brown-tailed moth, which has been such a scourge in the eastern states that over $6,000,000 have been spent there to eradicate it. We are trying to prevent it obtaining a foothold in Canada. In certain places in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick it has appeared, and we have a staff of inspectors in connection with this and with other entomological work.

Quarantine, $273,000.

Mr. BURRELL: This is the ordinary vote for quarantine stations at Grosse Isle, St. John, Halifax and Victoria.

Mr. GRAHAM: Why is my hon. friend getting this steamer?

Mr. BURRELL: The service has been unsatisfactory for many years, and we have come to the conclusion that at St. John we ought to do what we have at Grosse Isle, Halifax and Victoria—that is have a steamer belonging to the department, and not be hiring a boat for the service.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I understand that the Government are having a large number of ferry boats and steamers built outside of Canada. I would like to impress upon the minister the importance of having these steamers built in Canada, even if the cost should be greater than if they were constructed in England or Scotland. The Government in having these steamers built elsewhere, seem to lose sight of the fact that they could be a very good customer of the shipyards of Canada. I am told that some twenty-seven steamboats of one class or another are projected by the Government and proposed to be built across the water—enough to keep a large shipyard busy for the greater part of the year if the boats were built in Canada. This matter has often been discussed in Parliament, but the Government, finding that the ships can be built a little cheaper somewhere else, apparently take no steps to ensure their construction in this country. I hope that the Minister will see that these vessels are in future built in Canada, and that the work be given to our own shipyards.

Mr. BURRELL: I have a great deal of sympathy with the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. GRAHAM: It should be borne in mind that, upon any material imported to be used in the construction of these ships, the shipbuilders would have to pay to the Government a certain amount of duty, and that when the ships are built in England or Scotland and brought over in completed form, no duty is paid. This should be taken into consideration when a comparison of the cost of construction in the different countries is made.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 12.32 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 21, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS LAW BRANCH.

*Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish):

1. Was an investigation held some time ago into the workings of the office of the law clerk of the House of Commons?
2. If so, at what date and by whom was the investigation held?
3. During the present session was it not stated on the floor of the House by one of the members of the Government, that the report, evidence and all other documents relating to the said investigation would be brought down speedily?
4. Why has the report and evidence not been brought down, in accordance with the order passed by this House on Wednesday, 9th April?

Mr. BORDEN: An investigation was held before the commencement of the present session. A motion has been made to bring down the report, and it will be brought down in due course.

GROSVENOR MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish):

1. How many tenders were received for the mail service between Grosvenor and the railway station, who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of each tender?
2. Did J. M. McKeough tender for said service? If so, for what amount?
3. Was his tender accepted? If so, why was it afterwards cancelled?
4. Did Alexander Tate offer to perform this service for $63? If so, why was it not accepted?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. The tenders received for the mail service between Grosvenor and Linwood railway station were: J. M. McKeough, $100 per annum; R. V. Tate, $121.68 per annum; George Green, $130 per annum.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. It was at first considered advisable to accept the tender of McKeough but action was stopped pending consideration of a proposed mail service between Linwood and a railway crossing three miles distant from the post office.
4. Alex. Tate's offer was for the proposed service to the railway crossing, and not for the Linwood station service. After consideration, the department decided to continue the service to Linwood station and as the inspector had reported that McKeough had abandoned the service a contract was arranged with Redmond Tate at the rate of McKeough's tender.

LES BOULES MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the contract of Mathieu Bonenfant, of Les Boules, county of Rimouski, for carrying the mail been cancelled?
2. If so, why, and at whose request?
3. Has there been an investigation?

Mr. PELLETIER: This contract contained a clause which provided for its termination on three months' notice. This has been done and a contract made with the postmaster, Achille Bérubé, at the same price, viz.: $100 per annum.

SINTALUTA POSTMASTER.

Mr. THOMSON:

1. For what reason was James M. Hastings, postmaster at Sintaluta, dismissed from office?
2. When was this dismissal made, and who has been appointed in his place?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. For political partisanship.
2. On the 2nd December, 1911. Mr. George Hill.

ST. LAWRENCE CHANNEL BUOYS.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. Who has been appointed or who occupies the position of engineer for the placing of buoys for the Department of Marine in the channel of the St. Lawrence from Montreal to Gaspé?
2. If such engineer has been appointed, when was it?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Buoys between Montreal and Portneuf are under the direction of the agent at Montreal. Those between Portneuf and Gaspé are under the direction of the agent at Quebec. The respective agents detail one or more of the men attached to their agencies to place the buoys.
2. See answer to No. 1.

PRINCE COUNTY FISHERY OFFICER.

Mr. RICHARDS:

1. Has Daniel N. Forbes, fishery officer in Prince county, Prince Edward Island, been dismissed? If so, when and for what reason?
2. On whose recommendation was this dismissal made?
3. Was there an investigation held? If so, who held it?
4. What are the names of the witnesses?
5. Who has been appointed to fill the position?
6. On whose recommendation was the new appointment made?

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Forbes was a special fishery guardian. Such officers are employed by the season only. He was not dismissed, but when his term of employment ceased, he was not re-engaged.

MANILLA ROPE.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Is the Government aware that the price of manilla rope has doubled to consumers during the past year?
2. Will the Government take any steps to investigate the cause of this abnormal increase?

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs):

1. The Minister of Customs is aware, from reports in trade journals that a large increase in the price of manilla rope has taken place within a year or two.
2. The cause of this increase in price is already apparent according to information furnished through trade journals and other sources, which indicate that the increase in the price of such rope is chiefly due to the increase in the price of the fibre from which the rope is made—the fibre being produced in and imported from the Philippine Islands free of duty.

ST. SIMEON AND TADOUSAC MAIL SERVICE.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. What is the name of the mail carrier between St. Siméon and Tadousac?
2. Has the new contract been granted for the carriage of the mails?
3. If so, since when, and for what period of time?
4. Were tenders asked for?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Alfred Poitras.
2. The contract, which expires on 31st December, 1913, has been renewed.
3. For four years dating from 1st January, 1914.
4. No. The contract was renewed without calling for tenders in accordance with the provisions of the statute which empowers the Postmaster General to adopt this course when the service has been satisfactorily performed and the terms and conditions are advantageous in the public interest.

A. GEORGE CHAMPAGNE.

Mr. DEMERS:

1. Has Mr. A. George Champagne been appointed to the Board of Examiners for the licensing of engineers? If not, is it the intention of the Government to make such an appointment?
2. Is the Government aware that Mr. Champagne is said to be connected with the Boiler Insurance Company, and that his appointment would be regarded as undesirable by other companies, and would also be an injustice to other companies transacting boiler insurance business?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

EMPLOYMENT OF JOHN HOUGH.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Has the Commissioner of Customs received any communications complaining about a member of a union by name of John Hough, employed in the Customs Department in Montreal?
2. If so, what is the intention of the Government in respect of this communication?
3. Is the Government aware that such communication was intended, as alleged, to injure Mr. Hough?
4. Have any complaints been made regarding the moral or physical ability of Mr. Hough? If so, of what nature?

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs):

1. The Department of Customs received a communication protesting against the employment of John Hough, customs clerk, in work outside his customs duties.
2. Mr. Hough has been instructed that he should comply with the conditions of the Audit Act in respect of employment outside the customs.
3. No.
4. No.

BONAVENTURE SIGNAL STATION.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Who is in charge of the signal station at Bonaventure, Quebec, and what salary is he paid?
2. Have orders been given to have this signal station attended to this year, and has this been done?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Frederick Arsenault. Sixty dollars per annum.
2. Yes. The station was opened this year, on April 21.

ST. GODFROY BUOY.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Who is the contractor for the placing of the buoy at St. Godfroy, Quebec, and what is paid for the service?
2. At what date was the buoy placed in position this year, if it has been so placed, and if not, does the Department of Marine and Fisheries intend to have it placed in position?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. (a) Mr. William Huard. (b) $25 per annum.
2. Buoy placed in position May 5.

SOUTHAMPTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has a subsidy contract been signed with the Southampton Railway Company?
2. If so, for how many miles, and for how much per mile?
3. Has any amount, and if so, how much has been paid thereon?
4. To whom was said amount paid?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes.
2. Thirteen miles; $3,200 per mile not to exceed $6,400 per mile.
3. Yes; $48,442.88.
4. To the Southampton Railway Company.

RIGAUD ARSENAL.

Mr. BOYER:

1. What is the amount that has been paid to the contractor who recently made repairs to the arsenal at Rigaud on behalf of the Militia Department?
2. If his claim has not yet been paid, what is the amount of it?

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia):

1. $2,245.
2. Answered by No. 1.

MALBAIE MAIL CARRIER.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has Léon Trudel, a mail carrier between the steamer Champlain and the wharf of La Pointe à Pic and the village of Malbaie, been dismissed?
2. If so, was a three months' notice given him?
3. Has there been an inquiry?
4. At whose request was the contract cancelled?

Mr. PELLETIER: There is no contract for this service, which is being performed under temporary arrangement.

UNOPPOSED AND UNDISCUSSED MOTIONS.

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged during the year 1912 between Captain Bélanger, commandant of the Eureka, and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, both at Quebec and Ottawa.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, reports and inquiries, relating to an accident which occurred at Trois Pistoles, Intercolonial railway on 10th September, 1912, respecting the death of Arsène Ouellet, and the wounds inflicted on Joseph Gagnon, at the time that these two men were struck by train No. 150 on the above date.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all papers, letters, documents, contracts, settlements, records of settlements, and all other papers and documents in any way relating to the claim of the Rainy River Navigation Company against the Government, arising out of a subsidy agreement for the operation of certain boats between Fort Frances and Kenora for the season of 1911, or in connection with the settlement of the said claim, or of the said subsidy.—Mr. Macdonell.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I would like to ask the Government when they intend to bring down their new legislation?

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN: I should think about the end of the present week, or the beginning of next. Some days ago the right hon. gentleman made an inquiry as to what further legislation was to be brought down during the present session. A Bill is under consideration having for its purpose the amending of the present law respecting the liability of municipalities for the pay and subsistence of militia called out in aid of the civil power. I am not quite sure whether the measure will be ready to be brought before Parliament this session; a conclusion has been arrived at in regard to the matter, but some further consideration will be required to determine the exact nature of the proposed amendment. The Minister of Justice intends to introduce a short Bill with regard to the staffs of the penitentiaries, and I understand that it will be necessary also to amend the Judges' Act, in view of provincial legislation which has provided for an increase in the judiciary in some of the provinces. The Postmaster General expects to introduce a short Bill to amend the Post Office Act. This Bill will deal with the salaries of letter carriers, and with some technical matters in connection with the Post Office Department. It will not, I think, be of a controversial nature. There may also be necessary amendments to the Acts establishing the departments, having regard to their organization. I am not quite sure of that, but as soon as we arrive at a conclusion I will give an intimation to my right hon. friend.

TRANS-ATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have noticed in the press some correspondence from business men with regard to the sending of letters to Great Britain via New York. When my hon. friend the Postmaster General laid on the table of the House the new contract for the trans-atlantic mail service, he stated that the additional number of weekly trips to Great Britain would probably do away with the sending of letters via New York. I observe that the business men in the city of Ottawa and elsewhere are complaining bitterly about this sudden change. I gathered from what the hon. gentleman said at that time that this change would take place immediately, and that, until the service was perfectly established and the new fast boats were engaged, mails could be sent by New York. Will the hon. Postmaster General explain what is being done at present?

Mr. PELLETIER: The new service was inaugurated on the first day of the present month. I may say that no business men, nor, as a matter of fact, persons of any kind, have complained to me, although I have seen the reports in the papers to which my hon. friend refers, and I understand that some newspaper editors have telephoned the department with regard to the matter. I would like it to be distinctly understood that we do not wish to prevent the people from sending letters via New York if they so desire and direct. We are trying to take care of the whole of the correspondence between Canada and Great Britain, but there is a rule of the Postal Union, to which, of course, we are bound to adhere, under which we are obliged to send the mails according to the direction in which they are routed. With the service we are giving now I am hopeful that all Canadians will help us in this matter by using our service for the transmission of this mail; but we cannot impose it upon them.

Mr. LEMIEUX: So that those who route their letters via New York can have them sent that way?

Mr. PELLETIER: Undoubtedly.

RESIGNATION OF GENERAL MACKENZIE.

Mr. MACDONALD: The House has no doubt heard that General Mackenzie, chief of the militia staff of Canada, has resigned. It is understood that General Mackenzie since coming to Canada has discharged his duties in a satisfactory manner, so far as the militia generally is concerned, and the announcement of his resignation has certainly been received with surprise by a large number of people. It has been freely stated in the press that the Minister of Militia and the General have had some personal disagreement, and I would like to ask the minister if he will be good enough to tell the House whether that is correct, giving us at the same time some information as to the circumstances in connection with General Mackenzie's resignation, and as to when it took effect. I would ask him also if he would be good enough to bring down all the papers showing the circumstances that led up to General Mackenzie's resignation.

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): I could not hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but I understood that he was referring to the resignation of General Mackenzie. It is true that General Mackenzie has resigned, and, if the hon. member will put his question on the Order Paper, I will answer it. Newspaper reports are sometimes exaggerated.

Mr. MACDONALD: Has he given any reason for his resignation?

Mr. HUGHES: I shall be glad to answer any question that is placed on the Order Paper, and to bring down all the papers.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will the minister not be good enough to state to the House the reasons given by General Mackenzie for his resignation?

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend has been told that if he puts his question on the Order Paper in the usual way, he will be answered.

Mr. MACDONALD: I think I have the floor, and there is no necessity for the Prime Minister's rather petulant remark. The Minister of Militia said he did not hear what I was saying and I wish to let him know what I was referring to. If he has heard me, I would like to know whether he is going to answer the question.

Mr. HUGHES: I told the hon. gentleman that General Mackenzie had tendered his resignation. I told him also that any other information he wished to obtain he could get it in the usual course by placing his question on the Order Paper.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I think the minister is acting within his rights in taking his own time for giving a full account of this matter, but I should be glad if he would give me his assurance that his very proper exercise of a little home rule tendency is not going to have any deleterious effect in the way of the immediate disruption of the Empire.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Consideration of the motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, resumed from May 12.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, on rising to resume the debate upon the budget, the adjournment of which I moved on Thursday of last week, I desire to say that it is my intention to present to the House my remarks in the shortest time possible and that I have no desire to extend the debate beyond reasonable bounds.

In reference to the statement made by the Finance Minister (Mr. White) the other day respecting the financial and material conditions of the country, I am sure that hon. gentlemen upon this side of the House will most heartily join with him in felicitating the people of Canada upon the very prosperous conditions which have prevailed throughout this country during the last fiscal year. Increased imports and exports, a buoyant revenue, a great increase in our immigration and commerce, are all indications to a remarkable degree of our prosperity and, I trust, are the tokens of a still greater future for this young country. We, upon this side of the House, followed with considerable interest the successful operation of the many political programmes or policies initiated by the late Government, and I am glad to observe that the continuance of these programmes and policies in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, is even productive of good. When hon. gentlemen opposite were upon this side of the House it was their persistent policy to condemn in the most unmeasured terms practically every act of the Government referable to trade and financial matters, and at this stage in the career of the present Government, it was only natural to have expected the announcement of something revolutionary with regard to matters relating to trade and finance. However, we find that we have been complimented in the sincerest form of flattery—that is imitation. The Liberal party never pretended to prescribe at any time any administrative or fiscal programme that for long would meet the needs and requirements of this new country, particularly in an age of great progress and change. Liberals, to-day, feel they themselves could improve their own policies to meet changed conditions.

A moment ago I expressed concurrence in the remarks made by the Finance Minister respecting the remarkable progress this country has made during recent years. I wish to revert to this for a moment just to point out to the House one consideration which I think should never be lost sight of: What is the source of the progress and development which have taken place in this country during the last decade and more? I submit that such an inquiry is always pertinent, because, if we do not know the spring and source of our development and prosperity, our administrative functions will not be directed in the proper channels, we will improperly ascribe our prosperity and development to wrong sources, and governmental forces will be directed to unprofitable ends. I think that I am merely stating a truism when I say that the prosperity which has been evident in this country in recent years is due to the fact that we are rich in natural resources and, perhaps, to be more specific, I might say, that development and that prosperity are due to the fact that we have had vast areas of fertile lands, that we still have a great reserve of fertile and unoccupied lands and so long as this condition exists this country is bound to be prosperous. Thomas Carlyle once remarked to an American with whom he was discussing the question of the prosperity of the United States: 'You may boast of your democracy, or any other ocracy, or any kind of political rubbish, but the reason your country and your folk are prosperous is that you have a vast deal of land with a very few people.' I say, Mr. Speaker, in all confidence, that the prosperity of this country has been due to the fact that we have had, and have, vast quantities of rich lands with a comparatively small population, and that, notwithstanding all our unscientific legislation and other impediments which Parliament and other causes have cast in the way of the progress of the country.

I only desire to emphasize this point for the reason that hon. gentlemen in this House, and others outside, are prone to ascribe the prosperity of this country to this, that and the other reason. I would not presume to say that the development of this country has been due entirely to one cause, but I say that substantially you can trace it directly to the fact which I have mentioned, namely, our great riches and reserves in fertile lands. To that you may trace the large measure of prosperity which we have had in this country in recent years. To it is due our large immigration, the establishment of many homes and the increase in the numbers of producers and consumers. It has been responsible for the increase in the rate of wages more than any other thing, because the agricultural wage in any country always dominates more than any other factor the general wage. It has been responsible for the extensive railway construction which has taken place; it has been responsible, more than any other factor, for the increase in the number, and diversity of the productions of our manufacturers and for the increase of our reserves of wealth.

The House must regret that the budget speech was not delivered at an earlier period in the session, and disappointment must have prevailed in the country that no important announcement was made by the Minister of Finance respecting tariffs, trade, and markets. There must be in the hon. gentleman's own party many men and many interests who were looking for tariff changes, because the leaders of the Conservative party in 1911, if not directly, then impliedly, must have mortgaged themselves to a very great extent to the representatives of certain interests, who are naturally now looking for the payment of the first instalment on the mortgage. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition they were continually decrying the tariff of the Government of the day. They stated it was not a tariff suitable to the best interests of the country, and they boasted that were they placed on the treasury benches they would give Canada a tariff which would be more suitable to her needs and which would more rapidly develop her resources and her trade. In what is known as the Halifax platform, one of the several platforms announced by the Prime Minister, he declared the policy of the Conservative party upon the tariff question to be:

> A fiscal policy which will promote the production within Canada of all useful articles and commodities that can be advantageously produced or manufactured through or by means of our natural resources, having due regard to the interests of the consumer as well as to the just claims of our wage-earning population.

This was a very extensive declaration of policy and it was calculated to meet the demands of any section of the country and any class of interests. If it was meant to be a statement that inherent defects and objections were in the tariff and that the Conservative party were prepared to rectify them when placed in power, then I submit that the Government party have had ample time to implement their pledges in this respect and to make plain what they meant when they asserted that the tariff of the Liberal Government was not one in the interests of Canada.

There are within my knowledge certain things which make me believe, that in 1911 the Conservative party did make promises to many interests respecting tariff changes. In September, 1911, I became aware of the following fact: The Independent Cordage Company was at that particular time, through their regular salesmen, endeavouring to dispose of the products of their factory in Halifax, and on September 1, an order for 150 tons of cordage was placed with the company by one of its usual customers, in Halifax, and which was accepted upon a condition which was stated upon the face of the order:

> This order is taken subject to the Government being returned to power. If the Government is defeated we expect the duty to be again placed upon lobster rope.

I know that another manufacturer of cordage obtained an order in Halifax about the same time, and a similar condition was imposed. Surely there must have been some promise on the part of the leaders of the Conservative party to the manufacturers of this particular article, that in the event of their coming to power there would be some important change made in the tariff on rope.

I was surprised that the Minister of Finance in his financial statement made no reference to the tariff item dealing with certain forms of rough lumber, which was the subject of discussion last session. I would remind hon. gentlemen that immediately after the Government came to power in 1911, under a ruling of the Treasury Board, made, I suppose, upon the initiation of the Minister of Customs, it was decreed that a duty of twenty-five per cent should be levied upon certain forms of rough lumber imported into this country which previously had been admitted duty free. This matter was brought to the attention of Parliament at its last session by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). On January 23, he moved the following resolution:

> That the Minister of Customs, in collecting a duty of twenty-five per cent on sawed planks, boards, joists, scantlings, studding and other lumber of wood dressed on one side when the edges thereof are neither jointed, nor tongued nor grooved, is violating the Customs Act, and unduly and illegally imposing a heavy tax on the people.

When that resolution was under discussion, it was stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that the late Government deliberately and purposely permitted what they termed smuggling of lumber into this country. One of the British Columbia members protested against my denial that, in any event, whether the lumber were properly admitted free or not, it was not a case of smuggling. All hon. gentlemen opposite who participated in that discussion were most emphatic in the contention that lumber importations of that character were properly dutiable. One would have assumed that the Government, having taken that position, would have continued in the imposition of the twenty-five per cent tariff. For some reason, which must appear strange to everybody, the question whether these importations were free or dutiable was referred to the Exchequer Court. I can conceive of nothing that would justify the reference of this question to that court. I think the decision of the Treasury Board was sufficient. The Government could have admitted these importations free, and have given the matter a generous interpretation if they had so wished. The reference to the Exchequer Court was most reprehensible; it was nothing more or less than deliberate waste of public money, and behind it there could have been no real desire on the part of the Government to settle the question upon principle. The Exchequer Court decided that lumber of this character was properly dutiable. Shortly after this decision was given, however, it looked as if an election would take place in the province of Saskatchewan. Somebody suggested that it would hardly do, during an election in that province, to have it said that the present Government, by a decision of the Treasury Board had transferred from the free to the dutiable list certain forms of rough lumber, and that that decision had been endorsed by the Exchequer Court. Something had to be done to relieve the Government from criticism of this nature. What was done? Something even worse than the reference of the issue to the Exchequer Court. An appeal was solemnly made by the Government to the Supreme Court of Canada against a decision of the Exchequer Court, which was in harmony with the decision of the Treasury Board, and which had the endorsement of the Government. Could anything be more reprehensible than that? The Supreme Court of Canada reversed the decision of the Exchequer Court, holding that lumber of this particular character was admissible free of duty. This was not dealing seriously, honestly, and in a businesslike manner with a public matter.

There was no reason in the world for the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. It was a deliberate and unpardonable waste of public money and a reprehensible trifling with a public matter. It was quite within the power of the Government to interpret generously this tariff item, whatever might be the strictly legal interpretation. The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, after all, is but a judicial interpretation, and may or may not represent what was the intention of Parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite said last session that the intention of Parliament was to impose a twenty-five per cent duty on lumber. They asserted that the late Government deliberately and wilfully permitted smuggling of rough lumber into the western provinces, and that officials of the Customs Department deliberately connived at such violations of the tariff. I want to ask the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the Government if, at last session of Parliament, it was their emphatic and clearly expressed opinion that this lumber should be dutiable at twenty-five per cent, why they have not imposed this twenty-five per cent duty during this session. If they are true to their expressed convictions made to Parliament, they would have this session announced the imposition of a twenty-five per cent tariff upon these importations of lumber. If they say they had no intention or desire to impose a tariff, why do they not amend the tariff so as to make it clear and indisputable that lumber of this particular character might be imported free of duty? Two important courts have disagreed as to the interpretation of this tariff item, and doubt still exists. I submit that the Government should make it absolutely clear, that rough lumber of the character involved, should hereafter be admissible free of duty. The Minister of Finance, and his colleagues must admit that they have not been entirely frank upon this matter.

Before proceeding to discuss the two matters which I have particularly in mind, namely: the matters of revenue and expenditure, I want to refer very briefly to one other matter. A little more than a year ago hon. gentlemen opposite were telling us that the proper market for this country to seek for its exportable productions was that of the United Kingdom. We were told it was large and not capricious. We were told that the Conservative or Unionist party of England were the advocates of protection and of the giving of a preference to Canada upon her natural products. But certain things have happened during the past few months, and I think we must express surprise that we have heard nothing from hon. gentlemen opposite respecting it. A few months ago the leader of the Unionist party in Great Britain stated publicly that it was the policy of his party, should they get into power, to give a preference to the natural products of the several dominions of the Empire. Hon. members will recollect that when this statement was made it caused a tremendous hurricane within the Unionist party, practically rending it asunder. Mr. Bonar Law, leader of the Unionist party, then announced that his former declarations would be abandoned, at least as a matter of party policy until after the next election. But that was not acceptable to his political friends, and he was compelled to make a further announcement. He said:

> If returned to power, he would immediately impose a moderate tariff on foreign manufactures and give the dominions a preference in the British market, the largest preference possible short of the imposition of new duties on food.

That is the last and final statement of the Unionist party in Great Britain upon the matter of preference to the dominions of the Empire concerning which we have heard so much from hon. members opposite for a great many years. Under the policy attributed to the Unionist party some years ago, we were to find ample markets for our exportable products, but apparently all hopes of that have been forever abandoned. Of course, we may possibly be thankful for the fact that, according to Mr. Bonar Law it is possible that, if his party ever does come into power, we may have the chance of exporting to that country our manufactures under some preferential tariff treatment, an advantage which hon. gentlemen in this House will readily perceive, would amount to nothing whatever.

There is just one other matter to which I would refer very briefly at this point, and that is the fact that we have heard nothing this session from the Government or from the Minister of Finance in reference to the appointment of a Tariff Commission. The Prime Minister in 1911, promised that one of the first things he would do if returned to power would be to appoint a tariff commission which should deal with tariff matters in a scientific manner. A Bill to authorize the appointment of such a commission was introduced last session. The Senate made a few amendments which did not vitiate the principle of the measure, yet these amendments were refused by the Government, and the Tariff Commission Bill consequently never went into effect. Now, this commission was expected to define a method of placing in the melting-pot all the discordant and irreconcilable facts which are referable always to the making of tariffs, and it was to take therefrom ingots of economic truth which were to satisfy protectionists, free-traders and fair-traders alike. I assume therefor that upon consideration the Government have concluded that a tariff commission could not serve the useful purpose alleged for it prior to the last election. So far as I am concerned I do not regret that the measure did not pass and has not been re-introduced. I regard the purpose of a tariff commission as mere fiscal fantasy, and as absurd in its entirety. It was a very good thing with which to humbug the people generally in reference to tariff matters. I could never conceive that it could possibly be of any advantage in the construction of our tariff.

Having said these few words in reference to tariff matters, I desire to discuss briefly some matters relating to revenue and expenditure. Some days have passed since the hon. gentleman made his statement, and some very interesting figures which he gave may not now be fresh in the minds of hon. members. I wish, therefore, to refresh their memories by again recalling some of these figures. The Minister of Finance told us that the revenue for 1912-13 was $168,250,000 and the revenue for 1911-12, $136,108,000, an increase during the last fiscal year over the year preceding, of $32,000,000 in round numbers. Let me give the House the revenue in four-year periods since 1896 to furnish a basis of comparison for the revenue of last year.

Revenue of the Dominion of Canada—Four year periods.

1900	57,000,000
1904	70,179,000
1908	96,000,000
1912	136,000,000
1913	168,250,000

It will be seen that there has been a remarkable and steady growth in the revenues of this country ever since 1896. Now, to show the proportionate increase of the revenue of the last fiscal year over that of some other years let me point out the following:

Increase of revenue for 1912-13 over 1896, about	450%
Increase of revenue for 1912-13 over 1900, about	325%
Increase of revenue for 1912-13 over 1910, about	65%
Increase of revenue for 1912-13 over 1912, about	25%

When looked at in this way the increase in the revenue for the last fifteen years would appear to be most impressive and striking indeed.

I wish to refer very briefly to the matter of our expenditures. According to the statement made by the Minister of Finance, I find that our expenditure for 1913 is greater than that of the preceding year by $15,000,000, and I find that in 1913 the increase in expenditure over 1912 is greater by 100 per cent than the increase of expenditure in any year since Confederation over the preceding year. I find upon a further examination of the estimated expenditure for the present year, 1913-14, that not only is the increase for this fiscal year very much greater than last year, but the proportionate increase will be very striking indeed. According to the estimates, the House is asked to vote for this year on consolidated fund account $125,855,000. In the supplementary estimates tabled yesterday I find a further vote asked for amounting to $17,328,809.98 on account of consolidated fund. At the end of the fiscal year the minister will probably come to Parliament and ask for a further supplementary vote which will amount to about $3,000,000; possibly more. Altogether that makes the estimated expenditure on consolidated fund account $146,000,000 for the present year. In addition to that there is in the main estimates for capital expenditure the amount of $53,000,000, and in the supplementary estimates $6,141,506, making a total estimated expenditure for the present year of $204,469,315. While it is true that a certain proportion of the proposed expenditures will lapse, we find that the probable expenditure for the present fiscal year will be the largest in the history of this country. We find that it will reach at least one-fifth of the proposed expenditure of the United Kingdom, which for the present fiscal year is, I think, estimated at £195,000,000. This is a very large estimated expenditure for this country for the current year, and I think it deserves serious consideration and close and careful scrutiny at the hands of all hon. gentlemen. The present Government are showing every evidence of being an extravagant Administration. They have shown a proficiency in this respect from the moment they came into office. Naturally they are inclined to prodigality; their desire being to dissipate the surplus. We are reaching a peculiar position in this country in respect to finance. Ordinarily we first estimate our expenditure and afterwards provide ways and means for securing revenue to meet that expenditure. But things are being reversed. We estimate our revenue and then we proceed to find ways and means to expend that revenue; in other words, the Committee of this House which has always been known as the Committee of Ways and Means has virtually become the Committee of Supply and the Committee of Supply has become the Committee of Ways and Means. The only question which confronts my hon. friend the Minister of Finance—and it has not worried him very much up to the present time—is how to get rid of the difference between revenue and expenditure. I submit that he is not exercising a proper control over the various hon. gentlemen who preside over the spending departments of the Government. I do not think they have any right to secure from the Finance Minister every single dollar they demand. I think that a brake should be placed upon them by somebody, but I fear the hon. Minister of Finance has not attempted to do this. Hon. gentlemen when they were in opposition were not slow to criticise the Government in regard to the expenditure of public money. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Prime Minister and the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) who, I believe, is to follow me in this debate, never failed to take advantage of every opportunity to complain about the rapidly increasing expenditure of this country. They never ceased proclaiming the disaster that would overcome this country if the Government continued to increase the expenditure as they were doing year after year. Throughout the country, the people were asked to condemn the Ministry of that day because the expenditure was increasing at such a rapid rate. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite what they have to say about the increased expenditures which have occurred since they themselves came into power? I do not propose examining critically or in detail the expenditures of the various departments of the Government, but that would be a very profitable field of research for any hon. gentleman to engage in. Let me refer, however, to the expenditures of the Public Works Department—and it was against the expenditures of the Public Works Department particularly that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and my hon. friend the hon. member for St. Antoine directed their batteries. The Minister of Trade and Commerce doubted in many instances if water could be found in places where money was proposed to be expended for the construction of breakwaters and wharfs, and the hon. member for St. Antoine sought to demonstrate the fact by visiting the localities with his photographic instruments. I would suggest to my hon. friends opposite that they take a look at the main estimates of the Public Works Department, and a further look at the supplementary estimates tabled yesterday, particularly having in mind expenditures in connection with wharfs, breakwaters and harbour improvements. Let me point out to the House in a word or two something in connection with the Public Works expenditures. In 1912 there was expended by this department $10,344,000, and in 1913 there was expended $13,000,000. The expenditures for the year 1913 were wholly within the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, and their promise throughout the country before they came into power was that if they were placed on the treasury benches they could carry out all the just and necessary demands of the country with regard to public works of this character with a smaller sum of money than had been expended by the late Administration. The estimates for the Public Works Department for the present fiscal year amount to $28,587,000 more than twice the actual expenditure of 1913, and almost three times the expenditure for the fiscal year 1912. I invite hon. gentlemen opposite, if they remain true to their statements, promises and pledges of bygone days, to peruse most carefully the estimates of the Public Works Department, both main and supplementary; I think they will find there something which should justify their most careful consideration and scrutiny.

Mr. BLAIN: Are they spending too much at Halifax?

Mr. MACLEAN: I am not complaining of any one particular expenditure at the present moment. I suppose it is desirable that a large portion of the money to be voted in these estimates should be expended, and I have no doubt that the expenditures in a great many cases will prove beneficial. But I would tell the hon. member for Peel that a great many of them are absolutely unnecessary and represent a pure and deliberate waste of money.

Mr. BLAIN: Will my hon. friend give a list of them ?

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes, some time I will, but I will not occupy the time of the House in doing so now. If my hon. friend from Peel will be as zealous in the cause of financial righteousness to-day as he was a few years ago, he will perform a great service to his country and to his fellow countrymen. Let me now refer to another department of expenditure. In the fiscal year 1912 the Department of Militia expended $7,580,000, and in 1913 $8,307,000, a very substantial increase. If there was any department of the public service for its expenditure which met with unrelenting criticism on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House, it was the Militia Department. I find that for the year 1914 the estimated expenditures amount to $10,500,000, practically $3,000,000 over the actual expenditures of 1912. I submit that that increase is alarming and is worthy of the very careful attention of this Parliament. I think that Parliament requires a full and frank explanation from the Minister of Militia as to this very great increase of $3,000,000 in the estimated militia expenditures for 1914 over the actual expenditures of 1912. As I have said, hon. gentlemen opposite pledged their word to the people that if they were given access to the treasury benches they would carry on the great public services of the country with very much smaller expenditures than the last Government required. The Prime Minister of this country, I think in 1910 or 1911, in a public speech which he made on one occasion,—the date and place of which I cannot for the moment remember—referred to the total expenditure of that year and the preceding year, and he added that the amounts were so large that prima facie the Government stood convicted of corrupt expenditures of public money, and that the burden rested upon the Administration to show that they were innocent of the improper and corrupt expenditure of public money. What do my hon. friends opposite say to-day, in the face of the estimated expenditure of over $200,000,000 for the present fiscal year, and which, if the contemplated expenditures of the Government in regard to highways and naval defence are made, will probably reach more than $225,000,000? I ask hon. gentlemen how they propose to square themselves with their professions of only a few years ago.

To the Minister of Finance I would say that I think this is a year in which he might very properly have curtailed his expenditure. It is probable that there will be a very substantial increase in revenue for the present fiscal year. It was $168,000,000 last year; it might very well be estimated to be $190,000,000 or $195,000,000 for the present year; but there are many circumstances which I think should have justified the Minister of Finance in reducing the expenditure of this fiscal year. I cannot help but feel that there will be a decrease in the amount of money borrowed from abroad this year, and consequently that there will be a reduction of importations and a lessening of the normal revenue. While the general effect will be an increase in the revenue for the year, that increase will not be in proportion to the increase during the last fiscal year or the year before. There are other conditions in this country which make one feel that the immediate future will not be as bright as the immediate past. I have no desire to be pessimistic as to the future, and I am not, but I do think that the circumstances to which I have referred, the financial stringency which has prevailed in this country during the past several months, the unusual industrial expansion and the vast speculation in land which has been going on during the last few years, must certainly have their effect upon our financial and material conditions in the near future. I think if ever there was a time in recent years during which the Minister of Finance should have evidenced some desire to curtail expenditure, it should have been for the fiscal year 1914.

I have pointed out to the House that in the last fiscal year we had a surplus of revenue over expenditure on consolidated fund account of $55,000,000, and in the present year that surplus will probably be $85,000,000 or more. I now wish to discuss briefly this matter and in its relation to taxation. A Government with a surplus of $55,000,000 in the past fiscal year, with a probable surplus during the present fiscal year of $85,000,000 or $90,000,000, can hardly justify its position unless they make a remission of a substantial portion of that surplus to the people. There are two reasons for the ground which I have taken, the one I have given, namely, that we have had for several years past a surplus which in the last year has grown to very substantial proportions and which will be greater still in the next year. There is another reason and it is that we are facing, as people are in most countries, a new problem created by the rapid and abnormal increase in the cost of living. Upon these two grounds I base my conclusion that we have reached the stage when no other course should be pursued by the Government than a remission of taxation.

In order that hon. gentlemen may understand what has been the history of surpluses, or the excess of revenue over consolidated fund expenditure, during the past several years, I would like to give to the House just a few facts upon this point. Let me remind the House that it has been the practice to consider as consolidated fund expenditures only those expenditures necessary to carry on the ordinary affairs of the country, occasionally including some expenditures that might properly be chargeable to capital account. It has usually been agreed by both parties that when it is absolutely necessary that we should embark upon expenditures of a larger and permanent nature, the money required for the same should be obtained by borrowings, and should be charged to what is called capital account. Occasionally that system of financing has been questioned by some people, but on the whole I think the same has met with the favour of hon. gentlemen belonging to both political parties. I think it is only proper that if the country engages in a very large undertaking requiring an expenditure of many millions of dollars, the benefits of which undertaking will be enjoyed by posterity, we should ourselves pay a fair proportion of it and the annual interest, leaving the liquidation of a portion of the capital expenditure to those who follow us and who will enjoy the results, to at least the same degree, and perhaps more than we do. Since 1900 we have had what are known in this country as surpluses, that is excess of revenue over consolidated fund expenditures, in the following amounts:

1902-3	14,345,166 17
1903-4	15,056,984 12
1904-5	7,863,089 81
1905-6	12,898,719 12
1906-7 (9 months)	16,427,167 20
1907-8	19,413,054 22
1908-9	1,029,171 97
1909-10	22,091,963 91
1910-11	30,006,211 46
1912-13 (approximate)	55,000,000 00

In 1914 the probable surplus will be anywhere from $85,000,000 to $95,000,000. There is no doubt, and I am sure that hon. gentlemen will agree with me, that this surplus will continue growing from year to year, barring any year of commercial depression, or unless the money is wasted by extravagant and improvident expenditures by the Government. It would appear from the figures that I have given that our surpluses began in 1900 at very moderate figures, averaging up to 1910 about $7,000,000 a year for the decade, and being about $30,000,000 in 1910, and a greater sum in 1911, then rapidly forging to the front to the amount of $55,000,000 in 1913 and it will probably be $85,000,000 or $90,000,000 in 1914. Therefore, I say that we have reached a stage when we may very properly consider, whether or not we are justified in taking that amount from the pockets of the people or whether it should be remitted to the people in some form or other. That is the position of affairs which hon. gentlemen opposite must take cognizance of and I wish to argue that principle at some further length.

There is another way of looking at this matter of surpluses, or of considering the question whether or not we are taking too much money from the people. Let us look at the amount of money taken from the people in the form of customs and excise taxation which are the principal sources of revenue in Canada. Out of a total revenue of $168,000,000 last year $134,000,000 was recovered from excise and customs in the following proportion:

Excise	21,000,000

I have not figured out correctly what this would represent per capita, but it would amount to $16 and over. I remember just a few years ago now when hon. gentlemen opposite were almost disposed to tears in this House and out of it, when the amount per capita taken from the people of Canada in customs and excise was $10 or $12. In the days of 1910 and 1911—they wailed like Jeremiah; to-day, I suppose they will talk like Isaiah. How do they propose to justify this increase in the taxation taken from the people by customs and excise, particularly when the Government are unable to expend it wholly? The increase in customs and excise taxation for 1913 over 1896 was over 500 per cent, over 1900, 350 per cent; over 1910, 50 per cent; and over 1912, 25 per cent. The customs and excise taxation for 1914 will show a very marked increase over 1913.

Hon. gentlemen opposite will perhaps say: why did not the Liberal party, when in power and when they had surpluses, make a remission of taxation to the people? I suppose it is a question which, while no answer to my statement, is deserving of consideration. In the first place, when revenue is obtainable from tariffs, it is not desirable that the same should be continually subject to change. Nevertheless, the Liberal party when in power did make a very substantial reduction in the customs taxation, so substantial indeed that the Conservatives frequently said that the Liberal tariff was not producing for this country the results which a tariff they would frame, would. Again, I might point out that the surpluses during the Liberal Administration were relatively moderate. From 1900 to 1910 they would not exceed on the average more than six or seven million dollars a year. True, for 1910 and 1911 the surplus did reach thirty millions and thirty-seven millions, respectively, but taking all the years the late Government were in power, their surpluses were small as compared with the enormous surplus of this year and the equally large probable surplus for the coming year. Further, during the years the Liberal Administration had surpluses, they were engaged in the construction of the National Transcontinental railway which was built by the country itself at great cost. For several years, from the commencement of the construction of this public work down to 1911, a large amount was annually taken from the consolidated fund account and applied to the construction of this railway, thus reducing the expenditure on capital account which otherwise would be added to the public debt. I believe the Government of the day were justified in so applying the surpluses, and I do not think it met with any criticism from the Conservative party. But at the present time we are not engaged, nor are we likely to be, in any great national undertaking which will require the expenditure of public money, comparable to that required for the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. That being so, no reason is left to hon. gentlemen opposite for continuing to take from the people of this country the amount of taxation they are now taking; and especially in view of the fact that last year they had $55,000,000 more than was required for carrying on the ordinary affairs of the country. I submit, Sir, that under present conditions there should be a remission of taxation.

Mr. AMES: Would the hon. member indicate the manner in which he would grant this remission of taxation?

Mr. MACLEAN: I will come to that later. Another reason why there should be a remission of taxation in this country is that hon. gentlemen opposite, when not in power, contended for reduction of taxation in similar circumstances. I can tell the Minister of Finance that every gentleman sitting behind him—in the days when Mr. Fielding announced moderate surpluses—claimed there should be a remission of taxation. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce was always shocked because Mr. Fielding was taking such a large amount of taxation from the people, and in order that hon. gentlemen opposite may know Mr. Foster's opinion, I shall read one or two extracts from his speech.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MACLEAN: When the House rose at one o'clock, I was endeavouring to show reasons why there should be a remission of taxation, the chief one being that the Government were taking from the people a greater amount of taxation than the necessary expenditures of the country seemed to justify. I was saying that one of the reasons why I urged that position was that hon. gentlemen opposite, when in opposition, had always contended that continued and large surpluses of revenue beyond necessary expenditure were undesirable and not in the interests of the country. I was about to read some statements made by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) a few years ago, which are particularly referable to this point. I wish to give this as evidence and authority for the soundness of the position I am now taking, namely: that, by reason of the immense and extraordinary surpluses which we have had this year and last, there is only one logical and businesslike course for the Government to take, and that is to make a remission of taxation. Speaking in 1905 almost directly upon this point, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce made the following statement:

> The axiom is as true as gospel that every dollar of unnecessary taxation you take from the people is so much extracted from their renumerative and productive capital, which otherwise they would employ in the constant processes of production and reproduction.

Upon reference to the words of the hon. gentleman immediately preceding this statement, it will be found that it has particular reference to this matter. Again in 1907, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking upon the budget debate, spoke as follows:

The Conservatives in their last years of office preferred to incur a debt of $31,000,000 and leave that extra taxation, which they would have had to take from the people of the country, with the people who need it, and to do with that $31,000,000 of debt what was necessary in the way of capital expenditure to be used and to be enjoyed not only by the people of these years but by the future generations. That is the proper way of financing. You have no right to take, especially from a young and new, striving and struggling country any great amount more than is needed for the current expenditures of the country. When you are building the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, when you are putting immense public works for the use of the country for hundreds of years, why call upon the poor toiling people of one year to put up these works which are to be enjoyed by all generations to come after us?

It will be seen that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was controverting the idea that all capital expenditure should be provided for out of current revenue. The conclusion from that is that the only amount of revenue collected should be that required to meet ordinary expenditures. (Reading):

The proper method is to borrow the money for these capital expenditures and place the burden of interest on each generation which enjoys the use of these permament works. Then those who come after us will pay their proportion of the cost of the works which they are using, and in good time, as the country becomes wealthy and able to do so, it can pay off its debt year by year as it pleases. The Finance Minister has made, to my mind, a radical mistake and has done an irreparable injury to this country in his mad race for taxation, and his avoidance of borrowing capital for these capital constructions, consequently drawing from the people their savings and earnings in larger proportions than he should draw them, and so crippling them to that extent.

This was the judgment of an experienced and highly qualified member and administrator of this Parliament, who takes the position that it is wrong to take from the people that amount of revenue which would meet ordinary and capital expenditures, and further that there should only be taken from the people for revenue purposes that which is necessary to meet ordinary expenditure.

In 1905, speaking upon the same point, the same hon. gentleman said:

Now, my honourable friend—and this is what I want the House to mark—argued that there was a class of expenditure which we ought to charge to capital account. The very moment he argued that and I agreed with him—that very moment he put the strongest argument to this House in favour of keeping your taxation simply up to the limit that is necessary to carry on your expenditures except those which are capital expenditures. But if you keep your capital account to a certain and well-defined line, there is no necessity for over-taxing the people. Only then should you tax to the limit of what is necessary to meet what you may call the current or consolidated fund expenditures of the country.

I commend these remarks to hon. gentlemen opposite. If they apply the opinions thus expressed to our financial position to-day, they will conclude that the Government should remit to the people this year a very considerable sum of money, approximating pretty nearly one-half of the surplus, because as the Minister of Trade and Commerce urged and I think with a great deal of force, particularly so far as this country is concerned—that capital expenditure should not be provided for entirely out of revenue, and that the revenue taken from the people should not exceed, to any great extent at least, the amount of money required for ordinary current expenditures. Therefore I am in a strong position to urge this course upon hon. gentlemen opposite, because they have always taken the same ground, when in opposition, and I think also when they were in power, that is, that it is indefensible, illogical and unbusinesslike to take from the pockets of the people more revenue than was actually required for our ordinary and legitimate expenditures.

Now, I wish to give a further reason why the Government should not take revenue from the people to an excessive or substantial amount above the ordinary needs of the country. It is axiomatic that no greater taxation should be taken from the people than is necessary. That is the commonsense theory with regard to taxation, and will meet with the approval of all economists. A British economist once truly remarked:

It is not wise, it is not just, to take from the pockets of the people into the treasury of the country an amount greater than the current expenses of the treasury require.

I say further that any taxation scheme that raises a greater revenue than the ordinary expenditure of the country requires does not correspond with the notions regarding taxation commonly entertained by the people of this country. If we go into the provinces, or to the cities and towns of this country, where the collection and disbursements of taxation is under the immediate and direct control of the people, at least to a greater extent than is the case in this Parliament, you find the prevailing idea regarding taxation to be that revenue should be on a parity, or thereabouts, with expenditure. We have, I say, reached a financial position in this country to-day when a remission of taxation must be made, or, in dealing with our financial affairs, we must reverse all preconceived theories and practise regarding finance. The Finance Minister either must remit taxation or must come to Parliament and state that our revenue is going to be a particular amount; and ask Parliament to provide ways and means of expending it. That hitherto has not been the practice in finance in this or any other country. As I remarked earlier in the day, the practice always has been to estimate your expenditure, as is done in the municipalities, and then provide ways and means for securing the necessary revenue. But here we have reached the position when the Finance Minister must say: Our revenue is growing and will be $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 more than we require for ordinary purposes: come to my aid and tell me how I am going to get rid of this surplus. I must say that his colleagues are displaying considerable capacity in this direction. The estimates presented yesterday indicate great capacity on the part of the Minister of Public Works to expend money. I put the question to hon. gentlemen opposite, whether they consider it good business on the part of the Government they support, to take all the revenue that it can possibly obtain, and then determine how it can be entirely expended.

Mr. BRADBURY: The hon. gentleman did not feel that way when his party was getting its surpluses.

Mr. MACLEAN: I think I answered that objection very well a few moments before the one o'clock recess. I think I gave very excellent and indisputable reasons upon that point. I would say what I am saying now, if my political friends were in control of the treasury. My political friends went out of power on a policy which meant the remission of taxes to some extent at least. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power two years. They knew before the budget was announced that they were to have a surplus of $55,000,000. They had ample time to devise ways and means by which they could reduce that surplus to some extent at least.

Another reason why there should be a remission of taxes in view of the large and continued surpluses is that unexpended surpluses are an incentive to governmental waste and extravagance and an encouragement to political corruption. I pointed out to the Minister of Finance last year that he had among his colleagues some extravagant gentlemen, and that they would lead him into unnecessary expenditure. I pointed out that the mere fact that he had such a large surplus—at that time $37,000,000—would be an attraction to his political friends throughout the country from coast to coast for unreasonable requests for public expenditures. I am sure no one on the other side of the House will more heartily concur in my statement that unexpended surpluses are an incentive to governmental waste and extravagance than my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). He, I am sure, will take the position he has always taken since he entered Parliament, that the existence of a surplus is a tremendous encouragement to waste. Let me refer the House to the financial history of the United States at a time when they were very much in the same position as we find ourselves to-day. We can frequently study Canadian political and financial problems by reference to the history of the same problems in the United States, for that country is very much like our own, and its people have many of our characteristics and tendencies. In 1887, when Grover Cleveland was President of the United States, he found himself confronted with a large surplus amounting to $140,000,000. His idea of dealing with that situation was to make a remission of taxation to the people. But the opinion of the Republican party at that time was that the money should be spent rather than that taxation be reduced. There is a very conspicuous similarity between hon. gentlemen opposite and the leaders of the Republican party in this respect. These hon. gentlemen, I have no doubt, will take the position that this Government should spend all the revenue it can get, whether the purposes be profitable or unprofitable. They will take the position that it is not sound finance to reduce taxation whether you need the revenue or not. Mr. James G. Blaine was then in public life in the United States, and he said that rather than reduce taxation it would be better to spend the whiskey tax, which amounted to $69,000,000, on coast protection and divide the balance of the surplus among the different states to reduce real estate taxation. That was what one of the leaders of the Republican party urged; hon. gentlemen opposite are practically coming to the very same position and are urging certain expenditures as unique as the suggestion put forward by Mr. Blain. Mr. Aldridge suggested that it would be wise to purchase United States bonds or make a prepayment of interest rather than a remission of taxation. He did not believe in making a revision of taxation if it could possibly be avoided. Another United States Congressman suggested bounties to wheat growers rather than a remission of taxation, while another suggested a very elaborate educational scheme. As I said before, President Cleveland recommended a remission or reduction of taxation to the people, and I think his position was sound. He went out of power without being able to effect any substantial remission in taxation, and the Republican party came into power with Mr. Harrison as President. On assuming the presidency, Mr. Harrison found himself confronted with this surplus—and a surplus of revenue must always be the subject of consideration by any government responsible for the administration of public affairs. President Harrison was, as I say, confronted with this plethora of revenue, and he carried out what was the true Republican doctrine, and which I fear is the doctrine of the Conservative party. That doctrine is to expend the surplus; whether the expenditure be wise or unwise, profitable or unprofitable. And what did he do? In the first year of President Harrison's term of office, the amount paid to the people in war pensions jumped from $87,500,000 to $107,000,000, and in his fourth year they had reached the sum of $149,000,000. At the present time I think the pension disbursement in the United States approximates $200,000,000. And what was the cause of the growth in United States pension payments? It was the existence of an annual surplus or a wide margin between revenue and expenditure. Has it been a good thing for the national life of the United States? I believe hon. gentlemen will agree with me that it has had a most disastrous effect upon the national life of the United States. The mere fact that the pensions in that country should to-day far exceed the amount paid ten years after the Civil War is sufficient to condemn and brand the expenditure as corrupt, as indeed, it is. I say that will be the result in this country. The Government of this country, enjoying such large and growing surpluses as it has in the past and will have in the future, will be simply opening the door to unwise, unprofitable, and sometimes, corrupt expenditure. Is there any evidence before us to justify me in making the prediction that we shall travel the same course financially as did the United States, by reason of these excessive surpluses ? Hon. gentlemen, since they have assumed power, have endeavoured, though frustrated in some instances by circumstances to which I shall not now refer, to make expenditures which are unusual in this country. It was inevitable that this should be the case. I think hon. gentlemen sitting behind the ministerial benches a year ago saw that with these large and prospectively larger surpluses, their leaders would be compelled to devise some means of dissipating such surpluses. As I said a moment ago, I warned the Minister of Finance last year that his friends would get rid of this excessive revenue for him if he would permit them to do so. Last year a Bill was introduced to increase the provincial subsidies to the province of Manitoba. I am not going to say whether or not Manitoba was entitled to this increase of her provincial subsidy, but I do say that that increase was made without any regard to policy or principle, and absolutely without consideration of all the circumstances and conditions. I say it would not have been made at that time and in the manner in which it was made, had it not been for the fact that the Government had that year a very large surplus, and that they anticipated surpluses in the future. That is an instance of the danger of large surpluses in this country. Let us go a little further and see what is taking place this year, in a public service of the same nature. A commission has been appointed to inquire into the claim of the province of British Columbia for an increased provincial subsidy. Whether or not British Columbia is entitled to an increased subsidy is one question, and whether or not a commission should be appointed to inquire into this matter is another. No fair-minded man, however, can give to this House a reason for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the question as to whether or not British Columbia is entitled to an increase in its subsidy. It is not a question for a commission to decide. How can a commission assist the Government in the determination of this question ?

Mr. BURRELL: What has my hon. friend got to say with regard to the appointment by Sir John A. Macdonald of Sir John Rose as a special commissioner to investigate claims for adjustment with Nova Scotia?

Mr. MACLEAN: That was immediately after Confederation, when there was in Nova Scotia a strong opposition to the terms of confederation. At that time many of the provinces were dissatisfied in regard to the terms made between them and the Federal Government, and it was only natural that the Federal Government should seek to establish itself upon friendly relations respecting finance with the several provinces. But it is a sheer and useless waste of money and an insult to the intelligence of this country that a commission should be appointed to make recommendations to a responsible government upon the question as to whether or not they should increase the provincial subsidy payable to any province. That commission has only been appointed to implement a promise made by the Prime Minister when in opposition, and I venture to say he would not have endeavoured to implement that promise were it not for the fact that to-day we have such a large surplus.

While I am speaking about this matter of British Columbia subsidies, I may say that I was very much disappointed when the personnel of that commission was announced. I have particularly in mind one member of the commission whom I know very well, who is a very able and excellent gentleman, indeed, but who is one of the executive of a large railway corporation in this country which in recent years has had large business transactions with the province of British Columbia. I say that that gentleman is disqualified from acting upon that commission by reason of his connection with a railway corporation that has extensive business relations with British Columbia.

I referred a few minutes ago to the very rapid increase of the pension allowance in the United States, due altogether to the fact that they have had surpluses there. We had introduced into this Parliament only a year ago the Fenian Raid Bounty Act. I do not know and I am not going to discuss now whether that legislation was proper or not, but I want to point out that unless the Minister of Militia and his colleagues of the Government exercise greater care than they are now doing in the administration of that Act we shall have a public scandal in this country which in some degree will be commensurate with the war pensions of the United States. I say that Act would be very much better administered were it not for the fact that the Minister of Militia is conscious that with such a large surplus as we have, he can administer it in a loose and easy fashion and permit many to obtain the benefits of that Act who in all probability are not entitled to it.

Last year there was introduced in Parliament the Highways Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite will say that that was to implement an election promise. Very well, but that election promise would never have been made, had the then leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister, not been cognizant of the fact that we were having surpluses and were likely to have for a number of years unless there was a remission of taxation and that therefore he might promise unusual expenditures. Never since September, 1911, when the Prime Minister of this country announced the Highway Bill as part of the policy of his party, have the Government given any businesslike consideration to this question. I say that an expenditure of that kind should never have been contemplated, or embarked upon, until a policy at least had been worked out. Assuming that that Act becomes law this year and that Parliament votes $1,000,000 for an expenditure under that Act as it did last year, I say it is humanly impossible to prevent the utter waste of that entire amount. I take my own province of Nova Scotia. Under that Bill and with a vote of $1,000,000 some $60,000 would be apportioned to that province and without any defined policy in mind, without at present any organization to expend it, with the claims that would be made by hon. gentlemen opposite from Nova Scotia for the counties represented by them, that amount of $60,000 would be absolutely wasted and this country and the province of Nova Scotia would never be able to see any tangible results from it. And why? I say it is altogether due to the fact that we have these surpluses which encourages the Government to adopt all sorts of schemes and policies without due and proper consideration, without reference to sound policy, in order to get rid of surplus rather than make a remission of taxation.

I say again that were it not for the fact that the Minister of Finance had in mind a probable surplus of $55,000,000 for 1912-13, the Prime Minister would not have been so hasty in his visit to England last year to negotiate with the British Admiralty upon a naval programme. To put it in another way, I say that if the Prime Minister had believed in the month of July of last year that the Finance Minister of Canada in his budget of this year would announce a deficit instead of a surplus, he would have proceeded in a different fashion upon his naval policy. I may say the same with respect to the matter under discussion here the other day in reference to the letter written by the secretary of the Minister of Public Works to the Senator for Antigonish. This was a letter, as was shown in this House the other day, in which the expenditure of $160,000 was promised on the eve of a provincial election in that constituency. It is easy to write such letters and hold such promises for political effect, in any province in Canada, to aid a candidate friendly to the present Administration, with a surplus of $55,000,000 in contemplation. I say that if there had been a deficit instead of a surplus of revenue that that letter would never have left the department of the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday the supplementary estimates were tabled. They provide for additional estimates amounting to $23,000,000, I think, in round numbers, $17,000,000 on account of consolidated fund and the balance on capital account. As I pointed out this morning, the estimated expenditures for the Public Works Department on consolidated fund account for the present fiscal year amount to $28,000,000, double the amount expended in 1913, and nearly three times the amount expended in 1912. I have not examined very critically the expenditures proposed by that department, but I have given them a cursory glance, and I observe there many expenditures which are very questionable indeed and many which I am sure would never have found their way into the published estimates of the Government were it not for the fact that there exists this surplus which must be dissipated, and which members of the Cabinet are apparently anxious to distribute for political effect, a desire which, I am sorry to say, the present Minister of Finance apparently countenances. Nobody who makes a request for expenditure of public money from the present Government seems to be refused. I would be extremely surprised if within the last six months anybody has made a request of the present Government involving an expenditure of money whose request was not granted wholly or at least in part, and I am sure if their request had to be deferred the applicant was kindly and politely told that next year his request would meet with favourable consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD: That is anyone who knows how to ask properly.

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: And who does not know over there?

Mr. MACLEAN: With the surplus of $65,000,000 this year and with a surplus of $85,000,000 or $90,000,000 next year is it not the natural thing that unreasonable demands would be made upon our exchequer?

We on this side of the House warned the Finance Minister last year, that unless, in some proper manner, he managed to diminish his growing surplus, his friends behind him would always be making unfair requests for expenditures. He now sees what the year has brought forth, and I do trust that he will in future give consideration to the matter that I am calling his attention to, and will recognize the fact that it cannot but end disastrously for the country if he continues taking from the taxpayers the amount of revenue he is now taking, and which leaves so great a difference between the ordinary expenditure and income. After all it is human to be extravagant if one has more than he requires. The vast amount of surplus that we have enjoyed during the past year has apparently determined the Government upon a race of riotous and wasteful expenditure.

In concluding my remarks upon this point let me repeat that there should be a diminution of this surplus in the way of a remission of taxation to the people. The people would prefer having the excess of revenue above ordinary expenditure in their own pockets. The Government is safer without it, and the people would rather have it themselves. Again, I say it is economically unsound to tax the people for a sum greater than is required for the ordinary expenditures of the country. Again, I say it inevitably leads to extravagance, and the Government have already exhibited too great a tendency in the direction of improper and wasteful expenditures, and I am sure that if they continue obtaining a large surplus year after year they will continue in their extravagant and wasteful administration of the financial affairs of the country. Again, I say that there should be a remission of taxation because it means decreased taxation for the people.

There is another reason why I think there should be a remission of taxation. I refer to the increased cost of living. That is not a point which I am going to labour at any great length, for I find I have already taken very much more of the time of the House than I had intended. I will refer, however, to this phase of modern life in just a few words and I shall be content to state my position in general terms rather than with any particularity. The question of the increased cost of living is a modern one, it affects many countries of the world. I grant you, but nevertheless in this country it is a pressing one and engages the attention of all thoughtful and reflecting men to whatever party they belong. The imperious cry for food at prices within the reach of the ordinary consumer is one that cannot be silenced. The promise of the Creator that the fulness of the earth is for man's enjoyment is one that must be fulfilled, and if its fulfilment is being impeded in any way it is our duty as legislators to remove the impediment in so far as we possibly can.

This question has been studied in recent years in a great many countries and many causes have been assigned for the high cost of living. The causes are not all within the control of Parliament. I do not take such an unfair and illogical position in dealing with this matter. The reasons usually assigned by students of the problem after all are quite few in number and I wish to state some of them. In the first place, it is, I think, granted that one of the reasons is the increase in the world's production of gold and silver which necessarily and inevitably reduces the purchasing power of both gold and silver. Another cause is the waste of nations and in some respects the waste of individuals. Another reason is the disproportionate growth of urban and rural population. There is an increase in consumption and a higher standard of living adopted by the people of many countries of the world and particularly of Canada. There is the over-expansion of industrial and commercial enterprise, there is the demand for capital, and consequently a very high rate of interest, there is speculative trading and there is also the question of taxation in all its forms. These are some of the causes assigned by students of the problem, and I suppose each of the causes that I have stated plays its part in some degree or other. But when I have stated the causes it does not in any respect minimise the effects. It is a modern problem thrust upon us for our consideration and action, and we must face and meet the issue squarely. That there has been an increase in this country in the cost of living is, I think, undoubted and undeniable. In the report of the Department of Labour, published recently and presented to Parliament, I find a statement giving the percentage of increase in twenty-eight articles entering prominently into the cost of living. It gives a comparison of prices in 1912 with those of 1911, 1890, and also with the year of the lowest prices in the last fifteen years. The results are as follows:

	Compared with 1911.	Compared with 1890.	Compared with low year.
Animals and meats.	9·7	44·6	95·1—1896
Dairy products.. ..	16·7	54·0	76·5—1897
Fish..	8·4	50·7	71·8—1897
Other food stuffs. ..	6·6	14·7	46·5—1897

The prices here quoted are the wholesale prices; but if we take into consideration the retail prices, we will find that they have increased in still greater proportion. I think I should also remind the House of the well-recognized economic fact that the smaller the income, the greater is the percentage he must pay thereof required for articles necessary for actual subsistence, particularly for foodstuffs. The proportion of a man's income usually required for the purchase of foodstuffs ranges from forty per cent to sixty-five per cent.

Mr. EDWARDS: Are the wholesale prices quoted representative prices generally over the Dominion or are they taken at particular points? May these prices be considered as the prices in Canada as a whole?

Mr. MACLEAN: They are taken from the figures collected by the correspondents in the different provinces, and I presume they would apply to Canada as a whole.

Another thing important to consider in connection with this question of the increased cost of living is the change that has taken place in our rural and urban population. According to the census of 1911, the population of Canada increased thirty-four per cent over that of the previous decade, and the rural population increased by seventeen per cent, while the urban population increased by sixty-two per cent. In that period our rural population fell from 62.3 of our total population to 54.4, while the urban population increased in the same ten years from 37.7 in 1901 to 45.6 in 1911. This shows a decrease of rural population and an increase of urban population greater than ever known before in Canada, and I believe greater than ever has been known in any other country. It may be interesting to give the proportionate increase and decrease of rural and urban population in proportion to the total population for the last three decades as described by our census statistics.

Rural population..	67.9	62.3	54.4
Urban population	32.1	37.7	45.6

Should our urban population continue to increase and our rural population continue to decrease proportionately, then the difficulty of meeting the increased cost of living will be accentuated. We will inevitably have an increase in the number of consumers and a decrease in the number of producers, which will intensify the problem and make it more difficult to solve.

Another aspect of this question should not be overlooked and that is, that wages do not increase proportionately with the increased cost of the necessaries of life, nor do salaries, I mean moderate salaries, increase as rapidly as wages, so that therefore the increased cost of living bears most heavily on the wage-earners and those in receipt of moderate salaries. The social effect of the increased cost of the necessaries of life on the majority of the people of a country, is another factor which enters into the consideration of this question. I shall deal but briefly with the sociological aspect of the question; and I believe that in the future our political problems will be more sociological than economic, and in that respect the politics of the future will be in contrast to the politics of the present and of the past. One effect of the high cost of living is to force many men and women into the labour market, it keeps a great number of people upon, and some under the poverty line to an extent that most people do not realize. I express the hope that during the recess hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to read the evidence given before the committee dealing with Old Age Pensions, and there they will find startling conditions in this country disclosed. I know that hon. gentlemen will be surprised upon investigation to find how closely, in this new and prosperous country, we approximate the conditions of some of the oldest countries in the world. The existing conditions do not make for physical efficiency; they aggravate the spirit of social unrest and they create new social problems which we must sooner or later face, and which are particularly undesirable in a country where we have so many avocations which can only be pursued by those engaged in them during certain months of the year. Our climate naturally gives us many occupations which are but seasonal. The conditions to which I refer are forcing a grave social as well as economic problem upon us for our consideration. In a general way the modern world has created new conditions which must be faced. In the last analysis it is a human problem and must be solved in a human way. These conditions are attributable to many causes, some of which I grant, are beyond our control; but one of the contributing causes is undoubtedly the question of taxation, which is very largely under our control, at least so far as federal taxation is concerned. These conditions are undoubtedly known to the Government, and the circumstances are such, particularly in view of the large and unnecessary surplus of revenue which the Government are enjoying, that they should face this problem squarely and should grant some relief by a remission of taxation. I think I have made it clear that upon two grounds, namely: that of the great disparity between revenue and ordinary expenditure, which means the extraction of unnecessary taxation from the people, and that referable to the recent increase in the cost of living, there should be made a reduction in taxation.

The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) asked me if I had any particular method in mind by which this taxation might be reduced. That is a question which might very easily be answered, but in no short time. Hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible to the people of this country for the collection and the disbursement of revenue. After all, I do not think the problem is a difficult one. The fact is that our revenues are in excess of the needs of economical administration, and a reduction is justified to the amount exacted from the people above the requirements of the Government. A reduction in taxation necessarily means a reduction in the amount taken from the people by means of the customs tariff. After the amount of such reduction has been determined, the inquiry follows where it can best be remitted and what articles can best be relieved from taxation in the interests of our citizens. That is the issue which confronts the Government; the responsibility which rests upon the Government and should not be evaded any longer. I go so far as to say that at the present session of Parliament that responsibility and that duty should have been faced, and that the Government should have declared their determination to make some reduction in taxation at once.

I intend saying something in reference to the changes announced in the tariff the other day by the hon. Minister of Finance. Having already occupied so much of the time of the House, I do not desire at this stage to do so. I shall reserve my remarks on the tariff changes until we are considering the resolutions in the Committee of Ways and Means, where these changes may perhaps be more fittingly considered, as many of them are of a technical character.

In conclusion, let me say that we on this side of the House deplore the rapidly growing expenditures of this country. We particularly deplore the proposed excessive expenditures as we find them announced in the main and supplementary estimates for the present fiscal year. We deplore the evidently extravagant tendencies of the present administration; we are of the opinion that a great many expenditures, which they have made and which they contemplate in the near future, will be unprofitable and unproductive to this country. We say further that, in view of the disparity between revenue and ordinary expenditure, a remission of taxation should properly be made at the present session of Parliament. I feel that I may express the regrets of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, that at this session of Parliament, and on the occasion of the deliverance of the budget speech by the hon. Minister of Finance, there was no indication of any substantial remission of taxation to the people of this country.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with pleasure and attention to the somewhat prolonged remarks of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). I have followed his remarks as carefully as I could, expecting, as his theme developed, that I would find something that might make it possible for me to term his remarks a criticism of the policy of the Government. During the years I have sat in this House, I have never before found the first speech in reply to a budget speech so absolutely devoid of what one might call critical analysis of the position taken by the Government in reference to the subjects treated in the budget speech.

When we rose at one o'clock, I was vainly hoping that my hon. friend would answer the simple question which I put to him whether, in view of his declaration that it is absolutely necessary that there be a remission of taxation, he would tell us how the members on his side of the House propose to set about doing it. There are many ways in which it may be done. Many ways have been suggested. I have waited anxiously, presuming that some of these ways would be recommended by the thoughtful and careful member for Halifax. He has avoided, however, disclosing in any way whatever the mind of the Opposition in reference to this matter. One is led to wonder whether the Opposition have a mind on this subject, or whether their mind is so diversified and divided that it is thought the best way is to say simply that something ought to be done, but not to suggest any way in which it might be done.

It is interesting as we take up year by year these matters that are treated in the budget to find how the point of view changes the remarks of hon. members. Very much that the hon. member for Halifax has said to-day by way of doubting the advisability of the action of the Government has in previous times been alleged from the Opposition benches, and I suppose will continue to be used so long as Parliaments endure. The difference of being a supporter of the Government or a critic of the Government seems to me to leave but little choice of argument, the same stock arguments appear on both sides of the House. I find, for example, that at the present time, what our Liberal friends were accustomed in times past to characterize as 'abundant revenues' are now spoken of as 'excessive taxation'; and one is hardly nimble enough to be able to adapt oneself to the change of definition. I find, too, that while in times past our Liberal friends were prone to claim for their leader, their Government and themselves credit for Canada's prosperity, growth and power, to-day that is all laid at the door of Providence, and the present Government is regarded as having done but their duty in so far as they have not greatly impeded that manifest development.

The hon. member for Halifax has raised the contention that the present system of taxation is taking out of the pockets of the people of Canada larger sums of money than it is advisable should be collected. His contention is that the people are overtaxed, and therefore he would argue that the system by which these abundant revenues are turned into the public coffers, should be altered in some way which he has not seen fit to define. I want to point out in the first place that the increased revenues are collected entirely by the continuation of the system in force for a number of years, and not changed since the present Government came into power. This proves that, instead of being an extraordinary growth in response to special stimulation, this growth has been the natural, regular, normal. When we find that the system of taxation which has been manifestly sufficient and proper for the past, let us say, twenty-five years, this year yields abundant revenue, I do not think it can be contended that the system, not having been to any notable degree departed from, ought to be altered at this time merely because it does yield abundant revenue. The first question that we have to deal with in taking up the adverse contention of the hon. member for Halifax, namely, that the people are being too heavily taxed, is: Are they being asked to pay more than they can stand? The sources of our taxation are well known. Roughly speaking, they are divided into three parts. We have no large public enterprises and large federal monopolies as they have in Australia and elsewhere. Only about $30,000,000 of our revenue comes from sources that are not regarded as taxation, and that amount is counter-balanced by the expenses of the same enterprises against which they are charged. We are generally content in this country, for example, if our post office service manages to make both ends meet. And I doubt very much whether it does make both ends meet, if we charge up against it the subsidies we now pay through the Trade and Commerce Department, the rent of which might properly be charged for buildings, and also the interest on such capital expenditure as might be found necessary from time to time for the extension of the plant. I doubt, were all things taken into account, if there would be a profit in our postal service. So far as our governmental railway is concerned, there were times when we thought that the Government was doing well if it paid expenses. We have improved on that; we are trying to meet not only running expenses, but betterments, repairs and renewals, and even to show what may begin to balance the great interest account, which might fairly be—and is in other countries—charged against government enterprises of that character. But we hardly expect this Government railway, even under its present business-like management, to reach the point where it can pay expenses, pay for renewals, repairs and betterment, and let us say, three per cent on the $90,000,000 or more invested therein. So, from these accounts the figures very nearly balance. Our main method of collecting revenue is from excise and customs. Now, the excise serves another purpose than raising revenue, for it is largely regulative of certain classes of commodities which, in all parts of the country are to a certain extent, controlled by means of taxation. So that, I think, as the customs tariff raises four-fifths of the money which comes from taxation, probably the reduction which my hon. friend from Halifax has hinted at, but has not very clearly defined, would have to be made on these lines. Let us, then, ask ourselves the question as to whether the customs tariff of Canada as we have it to-day is taking too much out of our people. I would point out that the customs rate as it exists to-day in Canada, is not by any means an unduly high rate, if we compare Canada with other countries where the protective system is considered to have a right of consideration, such countries as Germany, Belgium, France or the United States. We find that, in comparison with these countries, Canada would be reckoned as a low tariff country. Taking the tariff that is levied upon all classes of goods that come into Canada it only averages sixteen per cent of the total value, or taking it upon those goods upon which customs taxes are collected, we find that it falls somewhat under twenty-six per cent. That is a comparatively low tariff, and if we look into the history of the tariff legislation during the last twenty-five years, we find that under successive governments, whether Conservative or Liberal, there has been a constant tendency for the tariff rate to be reduced. Ever since 1888, it has been by slight gradations, diminishing year by year. In 1888 the rate of duty upon customs paying articles imported into Canada was 31.858. Then in successive years it fell to 31, to 30, to 29, for a series of years to 27, then to 26, then to 25 and a fraction at the present time, where it has stood for the last two years. So that, with a gradual and falling rate—and probably it will continue to fall inasmuch as some of the recent trade treaties will affect it to a certain extent—with a tariff which compared with other tariffs is low and with a tendency for the rate to gradually fall, it does not seem to me that a strong case can be made out in favour of the contention— if that contention has been fairly put by my hon. friend from Halifax—that our rates of Customs taxation are too high.

There is another phase of the matter which the hon. member has been dealing with. Is the tax rate more than the people can pay? That is a question not so much of amount as of relative capacities of endurance. I admit that the amount we take from the people of Canada to-day by way of taxation is very much greater than it was in preceding years, but I claim that the shoulders which bear the load to-day are very much stronger than they were in previous years. For example, if a man received a salary of $1,200 a year, he could quite easily pay a rental of $25 a month, but if his salary is increased to $2,400 a year, he can pay $50 a month rental quite as easily as he paid the smaller amount when his salary was only $1,200. So it is with a country. Our ability to pay taxes has greatly increased, as would appear from many statistics, only a few of which I shall give to the House as pertaining to this discussion. Comparing the Canada of to-day with the Canada of ten years ago, we find that whereas our total trade ten years ago was $467,000,000, the total trade to-day is $1,085,000,000. Ten years ago we thought we were doing well if our exports amounted to $214,000,000; to-day we are disappointed when they are found to be $356,000,000. Looking back over the bank statistics, we find that ten years ago the total amount of bank deposits, representing the active money of our people, accounted for $424,000,000; now we find that the amount has increased to $1,074,000,000. The circulation of Dominion bank notes, which is a fair evidence of the business of the country, was $38,000,000 ten years ago, and now it is $114,000,000. The one-dollar and two-dollar bills, representing the pocket money of the people, and the change which is constantly passing from one hand to another throughout the country, amounted ten years ago to $11,400,000; to-day we find that $21,000,000 is not more than enough to serve our purposes. Canada's burden-bearing power has increased so greatly during the last ten years that we have no hesitation in making the assertion that it is as easy, if not easier, for Canadians to carry a per capita tax of $17 to-day than it was for them to carry a per capita tax of $8.50 ten years ago.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) is greatly exercised over the fact that we have a surplus, and the burden of his song has, to a large extent, been that the Administration should desire to get rid of the surplus, and that it is dangerous for any government to be entrusted with a surplus of such a size. I desire to point out, by way of comparison, that it does us good once in a while to see how this lusty young man known as Canada is growing and feeling his strength and power. The Canada of ten years ago is not the Canada of to-day. Ten years ago there was one transcontinental railway, and we were wondering whether we could undertake the building of a second one. To-day we have three transcontinental railroads, nearly completed, each of them opening up vast new territories. We are also expecting to build the Hudson Bay railroad; in fact it is partially finished, and, following out the great development and extension of railroad construction in every province of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific, we find it necessary that large expenditures should be made on ocean terminals. Then, it does not often occur to us to consider how the inhabitable area of Canada has increased during the last ten years. We now have a new Quebec and a new Ontario. I have travelled from one end of the clay belt to the other, and I can say that it is a magnificent agricultural land if climatic conditions are such as to make it possible for a population there to thrive. In the future the development and building up of a country 350 miles in length in northern Ontario and Quebec is going to call for large expenditure on the part of the Government. Let us look at the development of the prairie provinces; let us compare the homestead map of ten years ago with the homestead map of to-day. Ten years ago, with the exception of the sections near Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary, and a few scattered homesteads along the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, little or no land was occupied, but, looking at the homestead map of to-day, it is almost impossible to find a spot as large as a postage stamp which has not already been pre-empted and occupied by farmers and settlers. The enormous new area which is being opened up in these three provinces will make a great demand upon the expending power of this Government. Then there is the province of British Columbia, in which new railroad lines are crossing, like the stripes of the British flag, from north-east to south-west and north-west to south-east, and doubling and trebling the available area of that province, and all of which will call for vast expenditures.

The hon. member for Halifax has directed attention to what I think will be admitted on both sides of the House to be a growing tendency on the part of the federal government, namely, to assist the provinces in doing what in the earlier days it was considered they should do themselves, out of their own revenues. I would like to point out that in the early days the total revenue enjoyed by all the provinces of the Dominion as compared with the revenue enjoyed by the federal Government was about as one is to two, but to-day the proportion is as one to five. In other words, while the revenue of the federal Government has greatly increased, the revenue of the provincial governments have not, and the provincial governments have demands beyond their ability to pay, while the federal Government is able to cope with all demands made upon it. The result has been that the people of the country have looked more and more to Ottawa and less to their own capitals for assistance in the financial requirements of their development. That is why Bills are introduced in this Parliament to assist provincial roads and agriculture; that is why we find that the various provinces ask for larger subsidies. The federal Government will in the future, no doubt, be asked to enter into further expenditures on behalf of the provinces which have hitherto been regarded as entirely provincial, and this will make a further inroad upon the public revenue of the country.

Let it not be forgotten also that the year 1913 marks the time when Canada is making her first real expenditure on naval defence. I do not refer merely to the purchase of the three dreadnoughts, but I would refer hon. gentlemen opposite to the outline given by the Prime Minister the other day of the expenditures which will be incumbent upon Canada in the future for her own self-defence; the erection of four dry-docks at the principal ports upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; the establishment of naval bases and their fortification, the development of our fisheries protection fleet and the establishment and maintenance of training schools for sailors and seamen. The Prime Minister the other day made no secret of the fact that the grant of three dreadnoughts would not end the programme of this Government, but that they intended to continue along other lines in doing what was necessary in many ways and in many places for the defence of Canada, all of which would involve enormous expenditure; so it does not seem to me that we can afford to be ranked among the little Canadians, among those who look back ten years and say we used to spend enough then, can we not go back to those days and still continue our small expenditure? We are coming to an era of greater things than we have ever known before and the next ten years will probably see a greater advance made by Canada than in any preceding ten years of her history. We must be prepared to spend what is necessary to develop our country in order that we may be able to deal adequately with the problem which enlarged population and increased development of our resources make incumbent upon us. I shall not be at all surprised if before we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Confederation we find that our annual revenues will considerably exceed $200,000,000 and for the Canada of that time that amount will not be proportionately a greater sum than the revenue of earlier days. I do not see that it would be wise at this time to make an attempt to curtail the revenue coming to us, because we must always be prepared for less prosperous years, we must be prepared for a time when money will not come so freely to us, as it has not come in so freely into Canada this year owing to the high rates of interest; we must be prepared for a time when there may be some check on immigration. While it is easy to cut off sources of revenue, every government knows it is extremely difficult to restore them and consequently it would seem to me to be the path of wisdom to let a normal system which is working reasonably well continue without interference. It is easy to put it wrong, but it will not be difficult to keep it right if it is left alone. I would suggest a remedy for the terrible evils which the hon. member for Halifax dreads. He seems to fear that the greatest possible danger would be large revenue or a surplus. But we have $316,000,000 of indebtedness to work away at in the meantime and if we find ourselves with more money than we know what to do with, it can be used in the reduction of this our debt, and I am sure that no one will say it is not wise policy in times of plenty to pay your debts and reduce your obligations because the times may become harder, when it will be necessary to increase your indebtedness.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance on some of the things which were shown by the budget which he delivered here a week ago. In the first place, I congratulate him on the fact that notwithstanding his revenues were large he kept well within them. Sometimes it is harder for a Finance Minister in bountiful years to keep within his revenue than in lean years. In hard times you can say to all comers: This is a bad year, we cannot do what you want this year, go away and come again. But when the revenues are abundant, it is much more difficult to say no and there are many who are always ready to make plausible suggestions as to how money may be expended so that a Finance Minister who can keep well within his revenues in a flourishing year is certainly deserving of great credit.

Mr. CARVELL: Will you name a man who was sent away empty-handed ?

Mr. AMES: I could name one without going very far from where I stand in some things I have asked for. In the year which has just ended there has been a real, not a paper surplus, and by a real surplus I mean a reduction of the debt at the end of the year, after all obligations under consolidated fund as well as capital accounts have been met. In the last twenty years real surpluses have not been very frequent, and it is a feat of which the Finance Minister may be well proud that he in this present year has reduced the debt of the country by $23,300,000. The Liberals were in office for fifteen years. During those fifteen years there were only four years in which they had what I call real surpluses, and those real surpluses only aggregated a little over $15,000,000. Eleven out of the fifteen years showed deficits which aggregated $96,065,000, leaving a net deficit for their fifteen years of office of over $81,500,000. This deficit was not confined to the earlier years of the Liberal regime when revenues were comparatively small, but was built up mostly towards the end of their regime when the revenues were double what they were at the beginning. We all remember the dreadful year of 1909 when the largest deficit ever known to Canadian history was recorded by a Liberal Government a year in which there was added $46,000,000 to the debt in that year. In 1910 they added $12,300,000, and in 1911 $3,700,000. So, in the last three years before the Liberals went out of office, they had an over-expenditure of $62,000,000, while the present Government, after being in office for two years, is able to claim an aggregate surplus over all expenditure, capital as well as consolidated fund, of $23,300,000, and this Government in the short time they have been in power have brought the debt back to where it was in 1909, namely $316,000,000. We should congratulate ourselves on not having had to go into the money market in the last year. There are but too many who have been forced to go in, and they have been made to pay right royally for doing so. The rates of interest have been higher than in many years previously. But our action during the past year has been just the reverse. Some of the short term obligations contracted at high rates of interest have fallen due, and the $23,300,000 we had in hand has been used in paying off debts running at three and a quarter and four per cent interest, which means that altogether we will start out in 1913-14 with a necessity of appropriating, in order to meet the interest on the public debt of the country, some $900,000 less than we had to appropriate a year ago. That $900,000 is so much saved money, it is so much to our advantage. It, therefore, has been a very fortunate circumstance that our Finance Minister has been able to look ahead, has been able to realize that this year was going to be a bad one for borrowing, has been able, instead of incurring large amounts of indebtedness at high rates of interest which would have to be paid by succeeding generations, to live within his revenue without incurring another dollar of debt and to take up the high interest bearing obligations to the extent of $23,000,000 and thus reduce our annual interest charges by nearly $1,000,000. Then, too, he has been able to sustain the credit of the country by coming to the rescue of the Grand Trunk Pacific and buying the bonds issued by that railroad so that they might not be put upon the market and sold at a reduced figure. In that way our credit as an endorser has been preserved. I think you may safely say that, although the past year has been one of considerable money stringency in certain money markets of the world, Canada stands today in a better financial position in those markets than she ever occupied at any time before in her history.

Now, I want to congratulate the country generally also upon the fact that the trade figures for the past year are on the whole thoroughly satisfactory. For the first time in the history of Canada we have reached high-water mark and passed it—I mean the billion-dollar mark as the total of our imports and exports for the year. I admit that the balance of trade is against us. I admit that at first glance one might say that to have sixty-four per cent of imports as against thirty-six per cent of exports was not a healthy sign. But it must be remembered that Canada is a very rapidly growing and expanding country. We are exactly in the position of a manufacturer who, seeing his business greatly extended, determines to put a new wing on his factory. While he is building that new wing he is paying out large sums of money for bricks, mortar, planking, machinery, roofing, and everything that goes into that structure. Consequently you take a balance sheet for the year and what do you find? You find that the produce does not begin to pay for what he has consumed. He may have borrowed that money, or the money may have been put into the business by some one else. But his products are not equal to his consumption because he is extending his business. That is what we are doing in Canada and the idea could not be better expressed than it is in a statement in the Canadian Year Book under 'Wholesale Prices' republished from the Toronto Globe. The extract is as follows:

> Our new labour is employed as largely upon the construction of the machinery with which we shall presently increase enormously our output of goods, as upon the production of food stuffs which would have an immediate revenue value, and this circumstance would intensify the effect of any serious slackening in our construction operations.

In other words, we are in the position that I have described of preparing for greater things. We are squaring our shoulders, we are buying new tools, we are enlarging our production and we expect to do a very much bigger business because of the fact that in a short time we shall have largely increased our plant.

Did we find a state of affairs such as we see in older countries where the exports and imports were exactly balanced, we would say that Canada was stationary, and we would be right in saying so because it would mean that we had reached the point of equilibrium and that expansion, growth and preparation for future increase were no longer in evidence. I admit that our market to the south of us is not taking as large quantities of Canadian goods as sometimes it is argued that market should. I think that our American friends are themselves preparing to make it possible for Canada to send more to them than we have been sending, but as matters have stood in the past the fault has not been ours, but that of our friends in the United States, because they have had towards us a tariff wall twice as high as we have had towards them. An analysis of the articles which we do send to them shows that they only take from Canada such raw materials as they can themselves work up and make a substantial profit upon. Our exports to the United States last year amounted to $113,000,000 and of this sum $67,000,000 represented minerals, coal and wood in unmanufactured form. Besides that the only other items of importance that we exported to the United States were breadstuffs, fish, hay and hides. At the present time the Americans take from us mainly our raw materials and, in order to make a profit, they manufacture them, export them and compete with us in the other markets of the world. It would therefore not be a very great loss to us if the amount of that export did not increase so long as it kept to raw materials of that character because we would ourselves manufacture them and make a reasonable profit out of them.

I also would like to congratulate the Government upon the wonderful showing that the Immigration Department has made during the last year. There again we have reached the high water mark which will stand as a record in the future. Four hundred thousand people have been added to our numbers during the year which has just ended. I do not think that we realize what our problem of assimilation is and how much greater it is than have ever been the problems of similar nations elsewhere. At the time when the United States had 80,000,000 population, they were only taking in about four times as many people as we are to-day. We, with a population of 8,000,000, are adding one-twentieth to our population annually by immigration. There never was a time in the history of the United States when they added more than one-fortieth or one-fiftieth to their population in any given year. We have to address ourselves to the solution of this great problem of taking care of the immigrants that come to Canada. But certainly it is an indication of the attractiveness of Canada and of the way in which our prosperity is challenging the attention of the world. It took a long time for immigration to get started. The earlier years of the Liberal regime showed but comparatively meagre returns.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Will the hon. gentleman give us a few years of the Conservative regime with regard to immigration?

Mr. AMES: Yes, you can go back as far as you want to. During the first ten years of the Liberal regime we had altogether an immigration equal to that of the last two years since this Government came into power, or 756,706. During the whole fifteen years of the Liberal regime there was an average immigration of 125,000 a year while during the past two years it has been 378,000. We are pleased to find that British immigration not only keeps up, but surpasses the wonderful year of 1907-8, when 120,000 British immigrants came in from Great Britain. Last year the number of immigrants from Great Britain was no less than 150,000 people who joined us here in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): We, on this side of the House never thought that immigration was going to cease because our friends came into power.

Mr. AMES: I listened to a great many prognostications from this side of the House when the Liberals were in power as to the direful things which would happen in case the places of the parties should be changed.

It is, I am sure, a great relief to all of us to find that Canada keeps moving forward in the same progressive way. We may be pardoned if we think that conditions are now even a little better than they were.

There is another important matter that I wish to speak of and it is one which has been under discussion for a considerable time. It is the tariff and the treatment that has been accorded it by the Minister of Finance in his speech. I had been expecting that we would have had the tariff views of the Opposition through the mouth of the hon. member for Halifax. I had been expecting that he would tell us whether he would revise the tariff, whether he would revise it generally or whether he would revise it with reference to special articles, or whether he would revise it with reference to certain parts of the world, and how he was going to undertake to reduce the incidents of taxation. Not a ray of light has come from him, not a word on those matters. Consequently I shall not be able to criticise any of the views which he entertains upon the tariff because they have not been disclosed and I shall therefore have to content myself with complimenting the Minister of Finance upon what he has evidently indicated to be the fixed view and policy of the Government for the present year and for the years that are to come. It is quite evident that the Minister of Finance has had a great many requests during the past twelve months to make changes in the tariff. He has had a great many demands, I am sure, to alter the tariff both upward and downward but apparently he has turned a deaf ear, for the moment at least, to all these requests because we find that the changes in the tariff, outside of those rendered necessary by the West India treaty, are very few indeed. It is a strange thing that the Minister of Finance of this Government, which has always been accused by members on the other side as being an ultra-protectionist government, should have introduced tariff changes which for the most part are reductions.

The Minister of Finance said there were anomalies in the tariff, and all of us have had these anomalies pointed out to us by our constituents, and some of us for the benefit of our constituencies have pointed them out to the Minister of Finance. These anomalies are allowed to remain for the present, but it is altogether probable that there will be a general revision of the tariff in the not very distant future when this accumulation of anomalies, which from year to year grows larger, will be dealt with, I trust, in a scientific manner and for a term of years, so that we may have that fixity of conditions which is so essential to the progress of industries. Such tariff changes as have been announced the minister has defended upon what I consider thoroughly sound principles. In the first place, he has put ditchers and typecasting machines on the free list, and he has given as reason for his action that those articles are not, and do not appear likely, to be made in Canada, and that consequently, since there is no necessity for protecting any Canadian industry in the making of these goods, they should be allowed to come in free of duty. With that we have no fault to find, and there may be other items in the tariff which can be similarly treated. The second principle laid down by the Minister of Finance is illustrated by what has been done in reference to cement. Last summer we had an unusual condition in the matter of cement, which, being an emergent condition, I think was dealt with wisely by the Government at that time. But when the emergency was over the rate of customs duty was restored and prior to the bringing down of the budget, the tariff stood as it had been before. As a result of a study of these conditions it was made evident to the Minister of Finance that the cement industry throughout Canada could still continue to take a fair share of the Canadian market under reduced protection, and therefore the protection is reduced so that British cement can come in at twenty-four and one-half cents a barrel and Belgian and other cement at thirty-five cents, and that being regarded as a reasonable protection for an established industry, we may take it that it will probably be the rate for time to come. No item in the tariff has been altered where the principle of reasonable and adequate protection has not been asserted, and therefore that principle still stands. I am sorry I have not an opportunity to deal with suggestions from the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) as to how he would bring about that remission of taxation which he urged. I had prepared myself in advance for his suggestions and as they have not come I find it necessary to curtail my remarks to a very considerable extent. I shall therefore be deprived of the privilege, which otherwise would have been mine, to express approval or disapproval, as the case may be, of these undisclosed ideas which are still back in the mind of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). I must say that his illustration taken from American history did not strike me as altogether a fortunate one. Are we to infer that the fate of President Cleveland is one he would commend to the members on this side of the House? President Cleveland committed political harikari and possibly my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has thrown this out as a suggestion as to the manner in which he would like to see the members on this side of the House meet a similar fate. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite have a lively willingness to take our places in case we fall by the wayside.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the hon. member give his opinion of the conduct of President Wilson?

Mr. AMES: Yes, I think the conduct of President Wilson for the United States is admirable, with a tariff of 48 per cent against the world. There was one phase of that American incident which the hon. member for Halifax did not bring out; he did not show that after the American civil war the Americans had an enormous debt and that their rate of taxation was purposely not only arranged for meeting expenses but for paying off that debt. Where the Americans made their mistake, however, was that when they had reduced that debt to a reasonable limit they still for a time kept to the high rate of taxation. But, that is not a fair comparison with Canada, whose system of collecting taxes has been a normal creation to meet normal needs. We did not start with a war debt, we did not start with a rate of taxation intended to wipe out that war debt, and as the country has proved adequate continued to prove adequate.

I have only a few words to say in reply to what the hon. member said regarding the high cost of living. I do not think he made his case very strong in endeavouring to prove that the taxation at present being taken from the country was the reason for the high cost of living. It may be an incident to it, but he has only to look around the world to see that the high cost of living is general. He will find it in protected countries and unprotected countries just the same; he will find it in Great Britain where since 1897 the cost of the foodstuffs of the British workingman has increased fifty per cent; he will find it in the United States; he will find it elsewhere. If he could point out to me that only in high tariff countries the cost of living had gone up and that in low tariff countries or countries that have no tariff it had remained stationary, I would see the force of his argument. But as the matter stands, I cannot see that it is more than an incident and not the real cause. If you come to consider the conditions in Canada you will find that the high cost of living is largely due to the fact that our consumptive power has increased more rapidly than our productive power. Think that over for a moment and you will see that the demand has increased more rapidly than the supply in the Canadian home market and the effect of course is that products have advanced in price.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): We export a great deal.

Mr. AMES: We export a great deal of raw material. Would the hon. gentleman undertake to curtail the demand and so lessen the Canadian market by bringing in the cheap-made products of elsewhere and then say: as we have lessened the demand the local supply can take care of the balance and consequently prices may be expected to fall? Is not that a pretty dangerous experiment? If we follow a path of that kind may we not find ourselves far worse in the last result than in the first, because we are deliberately introducing a method whereby we are curtailing the purchasing power of a portion of the Canadian people, and once you take that power from them it is difficult to restore it? Let me use an illustration: suppose there is a town in the West with fifty families and there is in the immediate neighbourhood one hundred farmers, who are supplying them with the necessities of life, and prices are fairly normal. But suppose the town rapidly increases from fifty families to two hundred families and the farmers in the immediate neighbourhood have a larger market for their products than before and not enough to supply it, the result would be for the time being that prices would go up and would continue at a high level until the hundred farmers producing became two hundred and the supply and demand were equalized. You will find that is the history of what is working all the time. Prices go up because the demand increases more rapidly than the supply. When the supply overtakes the demand, there is a tendency towards equilibrium. That I think will come here as elsewhere, if we only have patience. To my mind it would not be wise, for the sake of a possible temporary relief, to interfere with that system. If we do that, we would find ourselves cutting off from a large proportion of the Canadian people the purchasing power which it is extremely valuable and necessary for them to have.

I have been wondering whether my hon. friend from Halifax was going to intimate that there might be certain articles, on which taxation is now levied by way of customs duty, that might be put on the free list. Is that his method of reducing taxation? He has not disclosed any method to us. There again let me point out, in order that it may be clearly in our minds, that in the argument raised we are taking what used to be known as 'the vicious circle.' Protection is not justifiable for one unless it is justifiable for all. If it is not justifiable for one, it is not justifiable for all. All of us are producers and consumers alike. You cannot say to one producer: You are not entitled to protection, and then say to another producer: You are entitled to protection. Consequently if protection exists in any country, it must be distributed with fairness and equality to all those industries throughout that country which the Government judge to be entitled to receive it. Suppose you say to an industry: The demand for a reduced rate on the article you produce is so great that we have decided that your industry shall be the victim and that you will hereafter be subject to world-wide competition. Take, for example, an article of which I know nothing, but which I may perhaps use for purposes of illustration, namely: shovels. Suppose the price of a shovel in Canada is claimed to be too high, and you say: The man who uses a shovel must have it at a lower rate. Therefore we will take off the duty on shovels and allow them to come in from the whole world in order that the price may fall. What would be the result? The men in Canada who are making shovels would probably find themselves out of business by reason of ruinous competition. Their employees would find themselves out of employment and would go into other industries at lower wages. They would be discontented. They would say: If the industry which I am accustomed to work at is no longer protected, why should I pay for meat and lamb and dairy products that are raised by protected farmers? I refuse to do so. Suppose his refusal can be put into actual effect, and the farmer finds that his products are to be no longer protected. He will say: Why should I pay protected rates for my coat and hat and boots and shoes and so on? The moment you let in the principle that it is possible to single out one man and say to him that his protection shall cease henceforth, it seems to me you will find no place where you can stop until the whole protection is taken away.

Mr. CARVELL: That is the doctrine.

Mr. AMES: If that is the doctrine which hon. gentlemen opposite wish to adopt, I shall be delighted to deal with it. If the hon. member for Halifax had intimated a list of articles that he would like to see sacrificed and thrown to the wolves, let us say, we would have been delighted to deal with those articles. Striking in the dark as we are at the present time, we can only enunciate the general principle, and intimate that protection, if it is to be maintained, is right for one and right for all, and that consequently an infringement upon it brings danger to all.

There is one point raised by my hon. friend from Halifax, on which I do not altogether agree with him. He intimated that the cost of living advanced more than wages. I do not think that is strictly correct. The cost of living advances usually before wages advance. The cost of living will go up first; wages will follow more slowly, but they usually follow in about the same proportion. What happens? The cost of living, by an equalization of supply and demand, frequently falls, but wages remain where they were. Wages take a long time to come down again, although the cost of living has decreased. Consequently it would not be wise for us, in dealing with the cost of living, to remove from any considerable portion of our community that protection which they now enjoy, and thus lessen their purchasing power as spenders in the Canadian market.

On the whole, taking the Budget Speech—for I have had to deal with it rather than with that of the hon. member for Halifax—I think it discloses great prosperity so far as Canada is concerned. No new policy has been enunciated. There has been no new policy in Canada for a great many years. There was no new policy in 1897, 1898 or 1900, notwithstanding all the promises made before the election of 1896.

Mr. MACDONALD: What did Sir Charles Tupper say about that?

Mr. AMES: I do not care what Sir Charles Tupper said; the facts show that no new policy was enunciated.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the British preference a new policy?

Mr. AMES: The British preference in the form in which it was brought in was a new policy. It is in force to-day. I would like to know from the hon. member for Halifax if on his side of the House they have any changes to offer in reference to the British preference.

Mr. MACLEAN: If your friends are afraid to deal with the tariff, they had better abandon it and let us manage it.

Mr. AMES: What would you do?

Mr. MACLEAN: We would do what is right.

Mr. MACDONALD: What about the adequate protection policy of the hon. member's leader which was to come into effect when the present Government came into power? Are you going to have adequate protection, or is it necessary?

Mr. AMES: I think I have been dealing with that for the last hour. I was in hopes that the hon. member for Halifax would intimate what suggestions were to be offered by the Liberal side of the House on this question.

Mr. MACDONALD: You do not take many suggestions from this side on any question.

Mr. AMES: At present, in view of having nothing controversial to deal with, I have been dealing with what the hon minister said, and I have pointed out the principles which the hon. minister has enunciated in regard to the changes he has made.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Does the hon. member consider himself a fair or logical controversialist when he says in one breath that no new policy was introduced in 1897, and in the next breath that the British preference was a new policy?

Mr. AMES: I had in mind two different things at that time. So far as the policy of protection is concerned, I say there was no new policy introduced in 1897, 1898 or 1900. If you wish to deal with the British preference as affecting protection, that is another question. The British preference as brought in by the Liberal party in 1897 was a new policy.

To sum up what may be characterized as the spirit of the Minister of Finance's speech, I may say that he has indicated plainly to this House, by all the figures he has presented, that Canada of to-day is in a prosperous condition. Canada being healthy, the fewer changes that are made in the conditions that contribute to that health, the better it will be. I do not think that the Minister of Finance, from what I can judge, of his utterances, has any intention or desire to make radical changes in the existing system. I think he is wise. He heeds the warning given on a tombstone in an English churchyard:

I was well;
I wanted to be better;
And here I lie.

Canada to-day is progressing along safe, broad, prosperous lines, and it would be unwise for us to do any experimenting which might tend to less prosperity than we enjoy to-day.

Mr. ALPHONSE VERVILLE (Maisonneuve): In rising to take part in this debate, it is my intention, to resume the remarks I had the honour to make last year on the floor of this House. I do not expect that my remarks will meet with the approval of the other side of the House; but, it is not my intention to either please or displease, for I claim that it is the duty of every member to do all he can according to his knowledge, and to be governed by the best that his conscience dictates, to bring to the knowledge of this Parliament and of the country the effects of some of the economic conditions which exist in some of our large cities, conditions under which the great majority of the citizens of Canada are obliged to live. To follow this course, it will be necessary to present facts and figures on the operation of trusts and mergers, not only from the standpoint of the consumer, but, also from that of the producer.

Too little has been said during the last session, as well as during the present session, to expose the real position of producers of natural products, and their connections with the consumers, and too much effort has been made to conceal the full responsibility of the middleman. I have gathered during the past summer months some figures and data, not from newspapers, but from my own investigations, on the cost of living in some of the largest cities in the United States, which I will read to the House later on.

Anyone who has read the newspapers or responsible magazines must come to the conclusion that the increase in the cost of living is responsible for the current of ill-feeling and discontent that existed last year and that has increased in an alarming proportion in the last few months. Mr. Speaker, in this House and out of it, we hear every day that conditions are changing, and we are wondering as to the future of our people. Conditions have so changed in a very short period, that even this present Government has become alarmed. But to counteract the ill-feeling now existing amongst the people, the great and thoughtful men from Canada, and even from Great Britain, are endeavouring to switch public opinion in another direction by newspaper items, lectures, or otherwise. They believe that an appeal to the loyalty of the true Britisher will smother the just call for immediate changes in economic conditions. To corroborate my statement anyone can take the public press, and read in front pages about pilgrimages to Canada of preachers of the gospel of loyalism. They have travelled and are travelling now, for the purpose of preaching a doctrine of centralization, in sympathy with the views of a few moneyed men and regardless of the conditions under which we have to live.

Was it, or is it, the intention of those noble gentlemen to change public opinion by appealing to sentiments or by the waving of the flag. I will tell them that it has been done once with success, but never again will the masses be led into such a stupidity.

We have heard members throughout the present session, one after another, speaking on the prosperity of Canada. Almost everyone seems to boast about the financial aspect of prosperity; very little has been said about the betterment of economic conditions, although Canada can only be classified as prosperous so long as all classes of her inhabitants are fairly treated. The immediate answer to this proposition is that no classes of citizen have any reason to complain; nevertheless, all the important organs are exposing facts to the contrary, and it may be my privilege to do likewise before I am through.

There is something of the highest importance, it seems, that has been omitted from or forgotten in the speeches on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Like the other members of the House, I have read carefully line by line all the Speech from the Throne contains, and it is surprising to find how little that is definite there is in it. After reading it for the second time, to be sure I had not mistaken any of its meaning, I was astonished for the second time in two sessions to find the labour cause overlooked. From my knowledge and experience in this House, if I am not mistaken, the Government generally assumes the responsibility for the Address. Last session I took advantage of some of the time at my disposition to call the attention of the Government to such an omission, honestly believing that a new party coming into power so unexpectedly could be excused for such an error. The labour men throughout Canada have waited patiently in expectation that at this present session an announcement of some character would be made in that respect, but not a word, good, bad or indifferent. This prosperity we boast of so much—I would ask the Government if the labour men of this country can legitimately claim their part therein? Is there any one in this House who would take the responsibility of saying that he denies them that right? Is there any one who would say that they have not at least contributed to such prosperity? If so, then why, I pray, were they not honoured with some mention?

Of course each and every one can draw his own conclusion, and I for one will expose mine frankly. My firm belief is, that large financial institutions, trusts and mergers, manufacturers' associations, and all large aggregations of capital were not strangers to such omission, and I am induced to so believe by the action of the Government. Has not the present Government indirectly acknowledged that it is hostile to the masses of workmen of the country? I naturally expect some protest from the other side of the House, with the reasons brought forward that present conditions do not warrant such a mention. It is perhaps true regarding the present Government, but nevertheless the impression remains the same; down you are, and down you will stay. It may also perhaps be that the Government honestly believes that present conditions are more than sufficient to bring peace and harmony among the workers; that the cost of living, for example, is such that higher protection should be granted to their kind friends the manufacturers; that the purchasing power of workmen to-day is such that they can live in luxury; that since the pledge of loyalty taken by the people in 1911, joy and happiness now reign in every family. If these were some of the reasons brought forward for omitting the labour clause it would be my duty to protest. Whether it is or not, it is my duty to enlighten the masses of the country and it is fair to believe that this will have the effect of exposing some of the misdoings of some of our business men.

The figures I am about to give and the comparisons I am about to make have not been taken from newspapers, for it has been my privilege to visit during this last summer some of the great American cities where I have gathered my information, by going from store to store in different parts of those cities to ascertain whether our Canadian workmen were on an equal footing in respect of 'cost of living,' with American workingmen.

These comparisons are from June the 15th to July the 20th, 1912, and they are not made from wholesale prices, but from retail—my hon. friend from Wentworth brought them into the House, in his speech on the address, not by the ton, or by large baskets full, but by the smaller quantities purchased by working people. This appears to me to be less than generous on the part of the hon. gentleman, especially when the application of high protection is supposed to be the only plank of salvation designed to better every day conditions of life.

It is not my intention to touch on the tariff question just at present, for I will deal in another way with this very important subject before I resume my seat.

The House will follow me, I hope, the presentation of figures comparing the prices in the markets of New York and Chicago with those of Montreal. It must be borne in mind that the figures I am about to give to the House are the average prices for the commodities mentioned in those American cities, and we will see later on that prices are much lower in the labour residential sections, and the prices for Montreal, which I will also read, apply to districts with a population of ninety per cent of working men, thus increasing the percentage in favour of New York:

	New York.	Montreal.
Fresh eggs, doz	25	32
Butter, per lb..	27	32
Cheese, per lb..	20	20
Flour, 7 lbs..	23	28
Lard, per lb..	18	20
Sugar, per lb..	05¼	06

18 per cent in favour of New York.

Meats.

	New York.	Montreal.
Mutton per quarter, per lb.	08	12
Beef for roast, per lb.	16	18
Steak, per lb..	18 to 20	18 to 22
Ham, raw, per lb..	16	20
Short ribs, per lb..	16	16
Ham, boiled, per lb..	25	35

Meats.

	New York.	Montreal.
Bacon, per lb.	16	20
Lamb, per lb.	16	20
Fowl, per lb.	22	22
Salt pork, per lb	10	15
Pork for roast, per lb.	12½	18

24 per cent in favour of New York.

Vegetables.

	New York.	Montreal.
Onions, red, 3 lbs.	10	30
Onions, yellow, per lb.	05	10
Potatoes, new, bushel	80	$1 75
Radishes, bunch	02½	10
Lettuce, bunch	02½	10
Onions, fresh, bunch	02½	05
Cabbage	08	15
Cucumbers, each	05	15
Tomatoes, per lb.	06	10

130 per cent in favour of New York.

Fruits.

	New York.	Montreal.
Strawberries, 3 boxes	25	60
Peaches, per doz.	25	40
Pears, per doz	25	40

90 per cent in favour of New York.

On the whole the prices were ninety-five per cent dearer in Montreal than in New York.

As the figures which I have just given are for June and July, one might say that a change must have been brought about in the latter part of the season. A change was brought about, and for the benefit of the members of the House and the public I will later on bring before the House prices for the same commodities during the last week of December.

Before reading these figures it is necessary to explain where they were obtained. All the members of the House know, or they should know, that women in the United States have of late taken an active part in bringing to the attention of the public the condition of retail prices on the New York markets respecting foodstuffs. They have in many, if not in all cases, exposed the unfair and exorbitant prices demanded and received by the wholesalers as well as by the retailers, thus exposing the real situation of the consumers. Mrs. Charlotte R. Bangs, the founder of the Home Market Club of New York, in the course of an investigation into the high cost of living relates some facts and figures which are worth mentioning, and these figures can be found in the Evening World of New York in its issue of December 20, 1912. They are as follows:

Eggs, fresh, thirteen to fifteen for 25 cents; eggs, best, 2 cents each; Savoy cabbage, large, 4 cents a head; green peppers, large, 3 cents for two; green peas, good, 12 cents a pound; celery, three stalks, 7 cents; white turnips, 1 cent each; carrots, three in bunch, 1 cent; onions, yellow, three pounds 5 cents; oranges, good, large, 2 cents each; dried prunes, 8 cents pound; nuts, mixed, 12 cents pound; spinach, 5 cents gallon; lettuce, good, 3 cents a head; cabbage, small, 1 cent each; stew lamb, 4 cents pound; calf's liver, 8 cents pound; best bacon, 25 cents a pound; stew beef, 6 cents pound; chops, 9 cents pound; beef to roast, quality good, 12 cents pound.

Take the whole of the articles which I have just cited and you will find a difference of over 100 per cent between New York and Montreal prices. They are over 100 per cent cheaper in New York than in Montreal, and if these prices were compared with the prices of these same commodities in the other cities of Canada, one would find everywhere a big difference in favour of the New York market. Patrick market, where these figures were obtained, is situated in a workingman's residential district of New York, which covers from 99th street to 110th street and Second avenue. There is no doubt that prices vary in different parts of such a large city, but nevertheless according to these figures the facts remain the same. The working classes of New York have the advantage of better and cheaper goods, and they were not and are not now afraid of reciprocity in foodstuffs with Canada. If our Canadian women would only take the trouble of doing as effective work in our home markets as Mrs. Bangs is doing in the United States in connection with the high cost of living, they would also bring to the knowledge of the country some of the misdoings of some of our wholesalers and retailers. I have not heard anyone say that those American ladies have in any way belittled their social position by working for the betterment of mankind. On the contrary they have been worthy of praise. Owing to their democratic sentiments and actions, they have been approved the world over. I hope to see the day when our Canadian women will do likewise, the amount of good they will do then is beyond our imagination. Two things are essential, good will and good substantial democratic principles.

I will now give some figures showing the difference between the prices in the markets of Chicago and Montreal respectively:

	Chicago.	Montreal.
Potatoes, new, bushel	80	$1 75
Tomatoes per pound	08	10
Tomatoes, canned	12½	14
Corn canned	10½	10
Cucumbers	05	15
Celery	08	15
Lettuce	05	10
Cabbage	08	15
Carrots, bunch	05	10
Turnips	04	07
Onions, per bushel	$1 00	$1 60

Eighty per cent in favour of Chicago.

Fruits.

Oranges, per dozen	35	40
Lemons, per dozen	20	20
Raisins, per pound	08	10

Fruits.

	Chicago.	Montreal.
Strawberries, per box..	08	20
Pears, per dozen	30	40
Peaches, per dozen.. ..	30	40
Apples, per bushel.. ..	$1 50	$1 60

Eighteen per cent in favour of Chicago.

We must bear in mind that Chicago is classified as a western city. I have compared Montreal to New York because Montreal is an eastern city. Chicago is classified as a western city on account of the amount of transportation paid on goods. The comparative prices of meats in Montreal and Chicago are as follows:

Meats.

	Chicago.	Montreal.
Beef steak..	20 to 22	20 to 22
Beef for boiling..	10	12
Pork for Roast..	16	18
Mutton..	14	15
Lamb..	18	20
Fowl	19	22
Sausage..	10	12
Bacon..	18	20
Ham, boiled..	30	35
Ham, raw..	16	20

12 per cent. in favour of Chicago.

A difference on the whole of these products of 24 per cent.

For the benefit of the members I wish to put on 'Hansard' the comparative cost of living in two of the larger cities of the Dominion, which, I suppose, will be approved of by hon. gentlemen opposite. A statement of the cost of living in Toronto and in the city of Ottawa may be of service particularly when questions of rate of wages to be paid on Government work may come up for consideration. The figures I shall cite in reference to Toronto were furnished me by the vice-president of the Labour Congress of Canada, Mr. Bancroft, of the Toronto Star. The Toronto list for one year is as follows:

The cost of living in Ottawa is very much the same. The figures I shall quote were furnished a year ago this month and prices have increased since. The following table shows the cost of living for a family of five for one year based on prices prevailing in Ottawa in the month of May, 1912:

Coal, (5 tons at $8)	$40 00
Light wood, (2 cords at $3.50)	7 00
Light and gas for year	25 00
Clothing for man for year:
1 suit	25 00
1 hat	3 00
4 shirts at $1	4 00
6 pairs socks at 25 cents	1 50
Underwear, 2 suits at $2.50	5 00
Clothing for woman for one year	35 00
3 children, $15 each for clothing	45 00
Boots and shoes for family:
3 children at 3 pairs each $1.50	13 50
2 pairs for man at $3.50	7 00
1 pair overshoes	2 00
1 pair rubbers	1 00
1 pair rubbers for woman	75
2 pairs boots for woman at $3.00	6 00
Overshoes for children 1 pair each	3 00
Furniture and household utensils:
4 brooms at 40 cents	1.60
Brushes, &c.	1 50
Gas mantels and lamp glasses	1 00
Stove polish	75
Renewal of household furniture and bedding, &c., for one year	35 00
Bread, 1½ loaves per day at 8c	43 80
Cakes per day 8 cents	29 20

Canned goods:
Fish, 1 can per week at 22c	11 44
Corn, 1 can per week at 10c	5 20
Peas, 1 can per week at 12½c	6 50
Pickles, per week at 10c	5 20
Insurance, fire and life	25 00
Car fare, per week at 25c	13 00
Sundries:—
Pepper 40c. salt $1. mustard 40c	$ 1 80
Matches 50c. vinegar 50c. soap $5	6 00
Evening papers per year	3 00
House rent at $18 per month	216 00
Total cost for one year	$943 42

No allowance has been made for charity, churches, pleasure, sickness, drugs, medical attendance or tobacco. After the figures I have given and comparisons I have made, it is needless to go into statistics regarding the earning power of workmen in these three respective cities, for some can be found in the remarks I made last year. But if we compare the increase in the cost of living in twelve months we come, to our astonishment, to a difference of twenty-two per cent in Montreal alone, and no doubt it has increased in the same proportion in other cities.

The causes for such an increase may be many, or few. Every day we hear of new causes, and all of our great economists do not seem to agree on the real cause of such an alarming increase. Some will say that the production of gold has something to do with it. Others will say that scarcity of grass in our fields is responsible also. Others will say that the cost of transportation is the great plague. The duplication of services in connection with the distribution of goods, which increases more and more every day, is also responsible. By the words 'duplication of service,' I mean the delivery at the consumer's door not only of all that he eats and drinks, but also of every minor article purchased by him at the city or village store. Many other causes too numerous to mention are also assigned for the high cost of living.

It is strange, however, that very few men who make a special study of this great problem have counselled the cutting out of the middleman's profit, and the more we study this great question the more we conclude that the tariff has everything to do with this increase, which has become a plague. Observing conditions from a practical point of view, I have no hesitation in saying that over-capitalization, better known as watered stock, is absolutely responsible for the tariff and therefore responsible for the increased cost of living. This year we can anticipate that no less than two hundred and fifty millions will be paid as interest on watered stock alone. If we compare this enormous interest paid, with the population in Canada at the present time, say, 7,500,000 inhabitants, we find that about $33.30 is imposed on every man, woman and child in the country, or in other words $166.50 per family, and we must not lose sight of the fact that they have no choice as to whether they shall pay or not. I call this highway robbery, for it is impossible under present conditions to prevent this operation and we must accept it.

If we proceed further with our investigation and subtract the number of inbabitants that cannot be called upon to pay this over-tax, it becomes more alarming. About ten per cent of our population come under this category. There are the patients in all of our institutions, the invalids, also a large number who will never work, without mentioning the parasites, who are more dangerous to society than all other classes combined. Deducting the ten per cent I have already mentioned are the population upon which this burden is really imposed is then 6,750,000, and the amount would be $37 on every individual or $185 per family. This is too heavy a tax, especially when it is paid on a fictitious and non-existent value and this situation is responsible for the increased cost of living and it also contributes to the increase of the tariff. In other words, it furnishes arguments for high protectionists in favour of not reducing or abolishing the tariff on first necessities of life.

I would like to read here an expression which appeared in the Monetary Times of October 12, 1912, on this subject, and the expression in such a paper surely will be accepted in this House. This expression although given by an American covers the situation in our own country.

The rise in the cost of living is still a problem on the North American continent. It has increased sharply during the recent year and is still rapidly rising. Mr. J. J. Hill has said that the cost of high living has been an important factor: in other words that extravagance is one of our faults. While there is much truth in that assertion, inquiries prove that, aside from reckless expenditures, the cost of necessaries has risen considerably. In addition, the average income has not increased to a corresponding degree. There has just been completed under the auspices of the United States Labour Bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labour, a survey of retail prices actually paid by consumers of the cities of the country.

The statistics of this survey, when used along with the report of the 1910 census, shows that the average workingman could, in 1909, buy with the results of a day's labour less than nine-tenths of the food he could buy with his day's labour in 1899. By a conservative estimate, he can to-day buy less than four-fifths. Without any indulgence in high living, the cost of duplicating a wholesome weeks regimé in 1899 is to-day fifty-two to seventy-seven per cent higher than it was then, and even if a man gets twenty-five per cent more wages than he got then he is still twenty-one per cent worse off on his bill for meats and groceries.

This is a considerable rise for a period covering ten or a dozen years; but the grade that prices have taken in their upward course is steeper now than it has ever been before in the period. The Government's figures show that, between June 15, 1911, and June 15, 1912, prices of ordinary food increased six to ten per cent.

Undoubtedly similar conditions, generally speaking, prevail in Canada, for it would appear that all employers of labour have not yet shouldered their share of the difficulty. I would like to cite an item that appeared in the Montreal Gazette of November 22, 1912, a newspaper in which members on the other side of the House have absolute confidence. I quote:

A man in Winnipeg the other day bought a barrel of Ontario apples paying therefor $5.25. In it he found a note from the grower of the fruit, which read: 'I got seventy cents for this barrel of apples, what did you pay for it'. . . . The $4.55 difference between the purchaser's price in this case presumably went part to the original buyer as profit, part, possibly almost a dollar, to a railway company for hauling it twelve or fourteen hundred miles, and part as profit to the Winnipeg merchant who sold and delivered it. There is money made somewhere in the handling, if not in the growing of apples.

What is said of this barrel of apples can be said of all commodities and especially of foodstuffs, and the Montreal Gazette simply states the facts. But if we go deeper into this case we can specialize and probably conclude who gets the difference, for the same paper in its issue of November 27, 1912, five days later, published a small article in its editorial columns from the Winnipeg Telegram which reads:

The Winnipeg Telegram is trying to figure out how it is that a barrel of apples for which an Ontario farmer received 70 cents, retails in Winnipeg at $5.25 without somebody or other making enormous profits. The freight is 76 cents per barrel and the barrel itself cost 30 cents, a total cost of $1.76 for the fruit laid down in Winnipeg. This leaves $4.95 for somebody so far unknown. Having failed to locate the whereabouts of the discrepancy the searcher might try something easier. In the case of a potato shipment from Stonewall to Winnipeg, a distance of 20 miles, the farmer it appears got 30 cents a bushel; the freight was 3½ cents a bushel, the potatoes sold at wholesale at 55 cents at Winnipeg, and the local consumer paid 65 cents.

The producer and the railway received practically one half that amount for growing the bushel and carrying it to the market. Who got the rest of the 65 cents?

It seems from these figures that the farmers and the consumers ought to be up in arms against such exploitation. The farmers, the great producers of natural products, should understand that they, as well as the masses in the cities, are the tools of the combines, and that when an open market is offered to them that they should grasp the opportunity to bring about better conditions. It is unfair for the farmer or fruit grower to support those that are responsible for such conditions. The farmers are not getting the full value of their products, and we, in the cities, are paying too much. It is time also that the farmers of the country should understand that they are the consumers of all that is produced in the cities. What has been said of apples or of potatoes can also be said of all other goods they have to purchase.

If the farmers of the country would take the trouble to prepare their budget and classify the different items on which they have to pay exorbitant prices, as well as high tariffs, they would conclude that after allowing a good substantial profit to the manufacturer as well as the wholesaler, retailer, and the transportation companies, they are paying all the way from 22 to 40 per cent higher than they should pay and without a particle of benefit to them.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. VERVILLE: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was trying to show where the interests of the farmers as well as those of the masses of the consumers lay, for the benefit of both, their combination of which should be considered rather than to draw from them all their productive power. It is time that the farming as well as the labour element should unite in a common cause for better markets, free entry for foodstuffs, and should not allow themselves to be blindfolded by all the large monied interests which are dominated at present by the cry of loyalism. If I were asked if we are loyal subjects of His Majesty, I would be tempted to answer thus: Ask the mergers and trusts; as far as we know, we have been forced to take the oath of allegiance to their majesties the trusts, combines and manufacturers.

I made special mention last year in my remarks that, if it was possible to gather information as to the quantities of foodstuffs held in cold storage in our large cities and the manner of their operations, sound thinking members of this House would be scandalized. I have, since the close of last session, been able to gather some information, incomplete but nevertheless enough to set our population thinking. We all agree that cold storage from its inception was organized for a good cause, and especially from a sanitary as well as from a humanitarian standpoint. The system was subsidized in that respect, and everybody admitted that it would mean the furnishing to the consumers of better foodstuffs in the less favourable months of the year. Believing as usual in the reasonableness of the operators, and above all, in their honesty as business men, we all applauded the new system. But what the people thought, as a big child against a small one, turned against them not only as regards the consumers of the cities, but as regards the farmers.

We have seen and we have heard these so-called fathers of society, these benefactors of mankind, making the strongest fight possible against reciprocity in 1911, and why? Because they thought, and rightly so, that natural products entering free would be the means of preventing their nefarious operations in oppressing the masses in their most vitally needed foodstuffs; and the scandalous process has been condemned by all true and law-abiding citizens. It remains to be seen and proved whether they have gained any advantage by the waiving of the flag.

While I am on this waving of the flag system, which is becoming a force in this country at the present time, I would like to read an article that appeared in the Voice of Winnipeg under date of December 28, 1912. The article is entitled:

Reciprocity among Anti-Reciprocity Advocates.

It reads as follows:

'To George H. Bradbury, from the market gardeners of Kildonan, Man., in recognition of your fight against reciprocity, 1911.'

This was the inscription engraved on a gold watch and presented to the member for Selkirk last week by the market gardeners of Kildonan. As stated, the motive that prompted the deed was that Mr. Bradbury fought against the opening of the Canadian markets to the producers south of the line. Patriotism was the cry that was raised by those who opposed reciprocity. It was a holiday time for the flag-waving fiends. Patriotism, as has been said is the last refuge of a scoundrel. Whatever definition may be given to the term 'scoundrel,' it is just as well for the city dweller, who caught the fever and rallied to the salvation of the Empire by voting against reciprocity, to understand that the reason the market gardeners of Kildonan presented Geo. H. Bradbury with a gold watch was not because they loved him, but they wished to show their gratitude for the service rendered to their pockets by being permitted to hold up the people of this province in the matter of purchasing garden truck. Not that reciprocity would have established the long-dreamed-of city of God, but it serves to indicate again how very easy it is to pull the wool over some people's eyes.

I was accused last year on the floor of this House of having brought the figures and the remarks I made on the budget a year too late to the knowledge of the country. I will say that, if the policy then before the country had been adopted, a very slight necessity, if any, would have commended such an exposure; and I will give to the House and the country some figures, before I am through with my remarks, that will prove, beyond a doubt, that the policy of 1911 was to some extent, if not altogether, the most effective remedy for the present oppression. This question of oppression has been taken up by some of our most prominent men. Universities are now introducing special courses, and all of them have concluded that some radical measures should be set in operation to prevent a social cataclysm. Any one to-day who takes the trouble to travel and observe must come to this conclusion. Is is possible to prevent an industrial revolution? This may seem radical and so it is for many; but it is fair to say that, to prevent such, something has to be done to change the ill-feeling of distinction that has of late rooted itself deeply in the minds of members of different classes of society.

I will admit that our country can be advantageously compared with our neighbour, for our vast field of production, with our small population, may have for effect to bring about a substantial economic understanding. But in order to achieve such among men of all classes, justice must prevail. Instead of creating more millionaires at the expense of the community, we should by the power vested in us as legislators, diminish the number and prevent the formation of a larger number.

Common sense teaches every sound-thinking man that, the richer his neighbour gets, in the same proportion does he become poorer; and still his obligations increase constantly, thus depriving him of the absolute necessities of every day life. To-day businessmen, absorbed by their 'Get rich quick' operations, have no time to think of the conditions of those through whose labour they have accumulated immense fortunes. Why change social conditions? I am satisfied; let good enough alone, they say. We have heard such utterances before; boasting in the same form was made in England, Germany, Norway, France, Italy and Portugal, and from the knowledge of the men of our century, the result has not always been so encouraging for them. The United States have given an example lately, for the result of the last election, which brought to power a Democratic party, with the policy of tariff for revenue only, may have for effect to bring into the mind of the present Government a certain remorse over their attitude respecting free entry of food stuffs into this country. We can play with words or diplomatic expressions; but it is my firm belief that, whether the present Government want it or not, they will be forced by circumstances sooner or later, and I hope it will be sooner, to grant this absolute necessity. Call that policy what you wish, clothe it whichever way you like, it matters not, for I am convinced that we shall have it, it is inevitable; the pressure has done already some of its benefactory work, and I would not be surprised to see more of the same medicine applied during the present session.

I shall again weary the House with some figures I have taken from an official report, and the figures I am about to give will comprise the number of pounds of food stuffs that were condemned by the Montreal authorities in a period of nine months, that is from January 1 to October 1, 1912; and also the average for the three months that finish the year. We must not lose sight of the fact that it was thrown in garbage whilst so many are crying for food.

From the statistics for nine months in the official report we find the following food stuff thrown in garbage:

Meat, 473,105 lbs at 10 cts..	$ 47,310 50
From Bakeries, 2,453 lbs. at 20 cts.	590 60
Fruits, 157,679 lbs. at 10 cts..	15,767 90
Vegetables, 36,610 lbs. at 5 cts.. ..	1,830 50
Milk, 760 gals. at 32 cts..	243 20
Total value..	$65,742 70

And we must remember that these figures are official—a large amount of foodstuffs is thrown in garbage with the knowledge only of those closely connected with such establishments.

Taking the figures for the three months based on the official figures for the nine months, we have the following comparison for a year:

Meat for three months..	157,701	lbs. at 10 cents..	$ 15,770 10
Including figures for 9 months..	473,105	" 10 "	47,310 50
Total..	630,806	lbs.	$63,080 60
From bakeries for 3 months.. ..	716	lbs. at 20 cents..	$ 143 20
Including official figures..	2,453	" 20 "	590 60
Total..	3,169	" 20 "	$ 733 80
Fruits for three months, ...	52,557	lbs. at 10 cents..	$ 5,255 70
Official figures..	157,679	" 10 "	15,767 90
Total..	210,236	" 10 "	$21,023 60
Vegetables for three months.. ..	4,067	lbs. at 5 cents..	$ 200 35
Official for 9 months..	36,610	" 5 "	1,830 50
Total..	40,677	" 5 "	$2,030 85
Milk for 3 months..	84	gals. at 32 cents..	$ 26 28
" 9 "	756	" 32 "	241 92
Total..	840	" 32 "	$ 268 20
Total value for market prices			$87,137 05

If we take the official figures of the different items and compare them with the number of families or souls we could have fed, it becomes alarming. There was enough meat thrown away in garbage during those months to feed 876 families, or in other words enough to feed 4,380 souls; enough fruit to feed 2,190 families or 10,950 souls. What has been the cause of the finding of those inspectors? It is because the goods are bought at low prices from the producers, and held in a sort of confinment until such time as the scarcity of foodstuffs has raised prices to such an extent that goods must be sold, whether good or bad.

I will now try to give to the House some figures to show what the farmers have to spend on articles they cannot produce. This may be of some interest, and by bringing the figures before the House it may, in many cases, prove beyond a doubt that the position of the farmers is similar to that of the consumers in the cities in a good many respects.

My calculations show the expenditures of the owners of a farm of eighty acres upon which mixed farming is in operation.

Clothing of family for the year.. ..		$120 00
Food—
Sugar, 200 pounds at 5½.. ..	$11 00
Rice, 40 pounds at 10c..	4 00
Syrup, 20 gallons at $1.. ..	20 00
Raisins, 30 pounds at 10c	3 00
Dried apples, 20 pounds at 12c.	2 40
Tomatoes, canned, 50 boxes at 14c.	7 00
Corn, canned, 50 boxes at 10c..	5 00
Spices, essences, &c..	5 00
Bread, 1,800 pounds at 3c.. ..	54 00
Fish, 100 pounds at 6c.	6 00
		$117 40
Linen..	$25 00
Dishes, breakage..	15 00
Soap, 150 bars at 5c..	7 50

The agricultural implements, machinery and tools used on such a farm cost, let us say, $550. As these implements are supposed to last about fifteen years and then be renewed, it is fair to say that this amount can be divided by fifteen, which would be equal to $36 a year. If we take into consideration the repairs made necessary by accident, wear or otherwise, it is safe to calculate that at an average of $5 per year. This makes a total for this item of $41 a year. The same can be applied to buggies and express carts of all kinds. For their full value when bought $200 is not exaggerated. Suppose they have to be renewed in the same space of time, say fifteen years, it would mean $13 and adding repairs at $5 it would mean $18 a year. A farmer with eighty acres of land must have at least three horses, the shoeing of which is $4 each, $12 a year. Harness of all kinds would cost at least $5 a year. Wear and tear of buildings, repairing, &c., would cost $25 a year. For furniture new and repaired as family progresses $15 a year is little enough.

These figures are for absolute necessities that the farmer does not produce and for which he has to pay good, substantial prices. In many cases the buyer of his farm products is the seller of the goods I have enumerated. There is also another feature which should not be forgotten. Many of our farmers, for one reason or another do not buy for cash. Proprietors of industries through their agents seem to have a weakness to induce some of our good farmers to buy on notes payable in the fall of the year after harvest time. And it is remarkable how well some of the buyers of farm produce are acquainted with the condition that some farmers are in, and too often take advantage of their situation to offer an inferior price, knowing full well that they have obligations to meet and in many cases our good farmers are caught in the trap. We can safely say that they have one buyer and one seller, and they, too, are subjects of their majesties the trusts.

The recapitulation of figures will show where our farmers stand:

Clothing..	$120 00
Food..	117 40
Linen..	25 00
Dishes, breakages..	15 00
Soap..	7 50
		$284 90
Agriculture implements	$41 00
Carts and buggies..	18 00
Horseshoeing..	12 00
Harness..	5 00
Maintenance and repair of buildings..	35 00
Furniture..	15 00
Total..		$390 90

In round figures about $400 a year; and I am sure that the farmers who are sitting in this House will say that this is far below the average. Let every farmer in the country make his budget, and he will see then that his immediate interest like that of the consumer lies in a closer understanding of the economic as well as of the political field. If it ever is understood by these two powerful elements it may be then a sorry day for a few, but one of blessing for the masses.

I will now give to the House some of the figures which I referred to during my remarks on cold storage. In 1911 there were forty-six cold storage plants in Canada with a capacity of 8,186,600 square feet, many more are now being built. These figures were taken from a return of the House laid on the table in 1911:

	Square feet.
Prince Edward Island has 1 with.	225,000
Nova Scotia has 4 with..	174,940
New Brunswick has 2 with.. ..	781,161
Quebec has 6 with..	3,317,307
Ontario has 14 with..	1,486,663
Manitoba has 3 with	800,000
Alberta has 5 with	293,140
British Columbia has 11 with..	1,098,400

I am giving these figures, so that the members of the House will understand more clearly that what I am about to say should be taken into consideration. I am going to speak of the operation of Montreal storages where the five plants now in operation command more than one-third of the floor space of cold storage in all the Dominion. The five plants I have mentioned have a capacity of 3,092,307 square feet of floor space, and presumably they store the most goods. In these plants are not comprised private as well as packing house plants, so a reasonable amount could be added to the figures already given. My observations concerning foodstuffs confiscated are that they are absolutely over and above the amount that has in some cases been thrown away in garbage from some of these institutions, for care is taken to hide a great many of their operations, and, from information I have at my command, I will give to the House an idea of what transpires in Montreal. There were in December last in storage approximately 1,800,000 dozens of eggs which have been bought from farmers or shippers for 18 to 20 cents per dozen. After those eggs have been in storage from six to seven months they are put on the retail market at 35, 40 and as high as 60 cents, according to their quality after classification. The eggs are tested when entering and retested in the fall of the year. The labour upon the two tests amounts to two-thirds of a cent per dozen eggs. The storage for the season is one and one-third cents per dozen, making a total of 22 cents, including insurance. The retailer receives as profits from three to four cents per dozen, making 25 to 26 cents a dozen. The difference between 25 cents and an average of at least 45 cents leaves a net profit of 80 per cent. It may be said that there must be a large number of eggs which are not fit for consumption. It would reasonably appear so, but they have found another way of putting them on the market, and here I will explain their mode of operation. When eggs are tested for the second time, those supposed to be unfit for consumption, and I may say, half rotten, are handled in a very cautious manner. Half of an egg may be very bad and the other half not very good. However, they are broken and scraped, and to whatever extent the sense of smell can stand it, the mixture is put in gallon measures and sold by the gallon at from $1.25 to $1.50 to bakeries, to make the cakes and pies which we are so fond of.

Mr. VERVILLE.

I have said enough about eggs, and I will now speak about butter to show also the prices at which it is bought and sold. The amount of butter in the same cold storage plants in December, 1912, was about 75,000 boxes and tubs, with an average of 60 pounds, making a total of 4,500,000 pounds. This butter in season is bought for 22 to 23 cents per pound. The storage on same is 14 cents per 100 pounds per month. An average of three months would mean 42 cents per 100 pounds, making the butter worth 23 cents and a fraction. Add to this the profit of the retailers, which is only three cents, and we find that the butter costs 26 cents and a fraction per pound. This same butter is sold in December, at an average of 40 cents per pound giving a net profit of about 60 per cent. Certain merchants often announce that, owing to a shortage of butter, some has to be imported from New Zealand.

I will now give some information on another product which is also of great importance. Chickens are bought in the best part of the season from the farmers at 8 to 9 cents, turkeys at 12 to 14 cents, and geese at 7 to 8 cents a pound.

After entering the storage, these products are frozen and kept there at the cost of three-eights of a cent for each subsequent month, the total cost being half a cent. Chickens thus cost say 8½ cents and are sold on the retail market at 18 cents per pound, the profit of the retailer being about 3 cents per pound. This gives to the storage company about 70 per cent net profit.

For turkeys an average price of 13 cents is paid. They go through the same process, and, by allowing 3 cents to the retailer, the net price becomes 16½ cents. They are sold on the markets at 22 cents, making a net profit of 50 per cent. For geese an average price of 7½ cents is paid. They go through the same process, and by allowing 3 cents to the retailer, the net price becomes 11 cents. They are sold on the market at 16 cents, making a net profit of about 50 per cent. It must be borne in mind that the profit here allowed the retailer is generous enough, as it is above 40 per cent; I am sure that there are very few, if any, who are making that much.

I have also been informed that thousands of pounds of these foodstuffs, after having been kept in storage for two or three years, are so unfit for consumption that they have to be thrown away as garbage, and that to the knowledge of the operators alone. We must also remember that if these commodities are kept for that length of time the prices will be increased; that the storage companies by so doing can later on sell at exorbitant prices and make a profit of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty per cent, but in more than one case they have had to throw away products that should have been sold in the proper time, and which would then have been substantial food for the public.

Present economic conditions do not permit the rank and file to buy luxuries in foodstuffs, but instead of giving the people a chance to feed themselves at a reasonable price, these companies prefer to throw this food away. We must also bear in mind that apart from what is thrown away in garbage, there is a certain quantity which, although unfit for consumption, is placed on the market without the knowledge of the authorities, and is sold and consumed.

I would ask the members of this House who belong to the medical profession if it is any wonder that there now and then appear in different forms diseases which our most eminent men are making strong efforts to put down and prevent. I will ask them if many of these diseases are not a direct result of the consumption of the foodstuffs I have just referred to?

There is also another product in regard to which cold storage people take advantage of their position to overcharge the consumers. I speak of the fish industry. There were in Nova Scotia in 1912 four cold storage plants for the storage of fish, with a capacity of 249,940 square feet of floor space, and, if I am not mistaken, there is still another one in Halifax. These plants are operated in the following cities and towns: Port Hawkesbury, capacity, 75,000 square feet; Canso, capacity, 40,000 square feet; Halifax, capacity, 75,000 square feet; Lockeport, capacity, 59,940 square feet; total capacity, 249,940 square feet.

I desire here to give some figures establishing the prices paid to the fishermen by proprietors of cold storage warehouses and the prices paid by the consumers. We will base those comparisons upon the Hailfax market, which is one of the largest in the Maritime provinces, and also one of the best for fishermen. We must admit that prices paid to the producers may vary according to season and supply. Continued rough weather may prevent the fishermen from reaching the fishing grounds, thus creating a shortage in the supply of fresh fish, when the prices to the producer may slightly increase. But if we take the average price paid to the fishermen, we find that they receive 1½ cents per pound with entrails removed. This price is paid for cod, haddock, cusk and hake, which are retailed at 5 cents per pound, a difference of 350 per cent, and steak cut from large fish of the above varieties sells as high as 12½ cents per pound. In the fishing season of 1911, halibut was sold by the fishermen to the dealers at Halifax at prices ranging from 4½ to 8 cents per pound, while the same fish was retailed to the consumers of the cities at from 13 to 15 cents per pound. The average price paid to the fishermen was six cents per pound. The average price paid by the consumers was 14 cents, making a difference of 8 cents per pound to be divided between the wholesaler and the retailer. I am in doubt as to the retailer making more than 2 cents per pound profit. Even at that price the profit of the trust or combine would be 80 per cent, and the difference in cost to producer and price to consumer comes to over 120 per cent. The fishermen receive for fresh herring from 8 to 10 cents per dozen, while the consumers pay at the rate of 25 to 30 cents per dozen for the same fish. The average price received by the fishermen is 9 cents per dozen, and the average price charged to consumers 27½ cents per dozen, a difference of over 200 per cent.

No. 1 fresh mackerel, were bought last summer from the fishermen for 10 cents each, and sold to the consumers for 30 cents, a difference of 200 per cent. There is an apparently well-grounded belief that the combine on fish are establishing prices under which the fishermen have to work, and they have succeeded in keeping the prices paid to the fishermen down to the very lowest standard. Cases have arisen in the past where fishermen, refusing to sell to a dealer on account of low prices offered, met exactly the same conditions in regard to prices elsewhere, and in every case were forced either to sell their fish at the first terms offered or return home with the fish unsold. There is also some kind of uniformity of prices among the retailers, furnishing good grounds for the conclusion that the combination not only affects the fisherman by keeping prices down to a non-living basis, but also affects the consumer by charging him the highest possible price.

Fish is recognized by all medical authorities as being one of the necessities of life, and the oppression brought about by the operation of such institutions is scandalous. The Canadian Government has no right to pay any money from the public treasury in subsidies to any institution which sells these necessities of life at exorbitant prices. I am citing these facts so that the people of Canada may know the manner in which they are treated. We hear every day about the operations of money-making institutions, and many will say another blessing for our country. In the case of the cold storage companies, these operations are not only permitted by law, but they are rewarded by the Government through the payment of subsidies to carry on their nefarious operations. Why this state of affairs is allowed to continue any longer is beyond my comprehension.

Another point I wish to bring to the notice of the House and of the country is the conditions under which men have to labour in those institutions. From all appearances the conditions should be ideal if we consider the large profits made by proprietors of such institutions.

The public has a right to believe that this is the case. The producers themselves, who are contributing to so large an extent to the growing wealth of those mergers, believe that fair conditions exist. Under these circumstances it is fair to expose the real facts and for this reason I shall read to the House a copy of a contract that employees have to sign if they wish to earn their daily bread in those institutions.

I have in my possession three of those contracts, two of which men have signed and worked under. The third I shall read. It is the one that men would not sign this year, this refusal leading to the strike. I shall leave to the members of the House the privilege of drawing their own conclusions:

By these presents, I accept the offer made to me by Messrs.....and consent to remain in their employ and faithfully serve them in all work that may be assigned to me for a period of one year commencing December 1, 1911, doing all the work I can. My salary will be twelve dollars per week. The working hours from seven a.m. to six p.m. I also consent to work overtime when requested at the rate of 25 cents per hour employed. It is further understood by this present agreement that if I remain in the employ of the company for the period of time mentioned, I will be entitled to a 'bonus' of $25 on November the 30th, 1912.

It is furthermore agreed that if Messrs.... .....desire to close their establishment at one p.m. on Saturdays at any time during the year that I will have no obpection, and I will accept my salary at the same rate for time worked as other days of the week.

It is also understood that the present agreement can be annulled by the comapny at all times for bad conduct or disobedience on my part, or if my work does not give satisfaction.

Dated at Montreal, this 30th day of November, 1911.

In view of this arbitrary contract, is it any wonder that the men who were forced to sign it are now asking for an investigation? The time has come when legislation should be introduced to prevent the employment in such establishments of men who are incompetent and who do not safeguard the health and the interest of the public. Legislation should also be introduced to prohibit cold storage plants from keeping foodstuffs for a longer period than ten months, as they have in New York state.

Chapter 335.

An Act to amend the public health law, relating to cold storage and refrigerating warehouses and places, and the sale or disposition of the food kept or preserved therein.

Mr. VERVILLE.

Became a law June 15, 1911, with the approval of the Governor. Passed, three-fifths being present.

The people of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—

Section 1. Chapter forty-nine of the laws of nineteen hundred and nine, entitled 'An Act in relation to the public health constituting chapter forty-five of the consolidated laws,' is hereby amended by adding after article sixteen thereof, a new article, to be article sixteen-a, to read as follows:—

Article 16-A.

Cold Storage.

Section 335. Definitions.
336. Cold storage food to be marked.
337. Time that cold storage food may be kept.
338. Powers of state commissioner of health.
339. Reports of warehousemen.
339-a. Transfers from one warehouse to another.
339-b. Prohibits return of food to cold storage when once released for purpose of placing same on market for sale.
339-c. Prohibits sale of food kept in cold storage without representing said fact.
339-d. Penalties.

335. Definitions. The term food as used in this article shall include any article, except nuts, fruits, cheese and vegetables, used for food by man or animal and every ingredient of such article.

336. Cold storage food to be marked. It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation or corporations, engaged in the business of cold storage warehousemen or in the business of refrigerating to receive any kind of food unless the said food is in an apparently pure and wholesome condition, and the food or the package containing the same is branded, stamped or marked, in some conspicuous place, with the day, month and year, when the same is received in storage or refrigeration.

It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation or corporations, engaged in the business of cold storage warehousemen or in the business of refrigerating to permit any article of any kind whatsoever used for food in the possession of any person or persons, corporation or corporations or refrigerating to be taken from their cold storage warehousemen or refrigerating, to be taken from their possession without first having branded, stamped or marked on said foodstuffs or the package containing same, in a conspicuous place, the day, month and year, when said foodstuffs or package was removed from cold storage or refrigeration.

337. Time that cold storage foods may be kept. It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, corporation or corporations, engaged in the business of cold storage warehousemen or refrigerating to keep in storage for preservation or otherwise any kind of food or any article used for food a longer period than ten calendar months, excepting butter products which may be kept in said cold storage or refrigeration twelve calendar months.

338. Powers of state commissioner of health. The state commissioner of health is hereby vested with full power and authority to inspect and supervise all places in this state now used or hereafter to be used for cold storage or refrigerating purposes; the state commissioner of health or his duly authorized agents or employees shall be permitted access to such place or places and all parts thereof at all times for the purpose of seeing that said place or places are kept and maintained in a clean and sanitary manner, and for the purpose of determining whether or not provisions of this article or any other Act relating to foodstuffs are being complied with. The power of supervision hereby granted shall extend to enable the state commissioner of health to adopt such reasonable rules and regulations as may be determined upon from time to time as essential to the proper protection of the consumer of the commodities kept and preserved in such place or places, and the state commissioner of health may appoint and designate from time to time such person or persons as he deems fit for the purpose of making such inspections.

339. Reports of warehousemen. All persons or corporations engaged in the business of cold storage warehousemen, or in the business of refrigerating, shall submit reports to the state department of health, upon printed forms to be provided by said state department of health, setting forth in itemized particulars the quantity of each and every foodstuff in storage or in the control of said person or persons, corporation or corporations; said reports shall be filed on or before the twenty-fifth day of January, May and September of each year, and reports so rendered shall show conditions existing upon the first day of the month in which said report is filed.

339-a. Transfers from one warehouse to another. The transfer of any food from one cold storage or refrigerating warehouse to another for the purpose of evading any provisions of this article is hereby prohibited.

339-b. Prohibits return of food to cold storage when once released for purpose of placing same on market for sale. When food has been in cold storage or refrigeration and is released therefrom for the purpose of placing the same on the market for sale it shall be a violation of the provisions of this article to again place such food in cold storage or refrigeration.

339-c. Prohibits sale of food kept in cold storage without representing said fact. It shall be a violation of the provisions of this article to sell any article or articles of food that have been kept in cold storage or refrigeration, without representing the same to have been so kept.

339-d. Penalties. Any person or persons corporation or corporations, or officers thereof, violating any of the provisions of this article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. The conviction of any corporation shall not operate to relieve any officer of officers, agents or employees of such corporation from prosecution under the provisions of this article.

2. This act shall take effect immediately.

State of New York. } ss:
Office of the Secretary of State }

I have compared the preceding with the original law on file in this office, and do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original law.

(Sgd.) Edward Lazansky,
Secretary of State.

If a commission were appointed to investigate the real situation of cold storage in respect to the public, it would disclose a system which would be immediately condemned.

I have mentioned New York state. It is perhaps interesting to have some information concerning the cost of standard living in New York city. I have given figures and made comparisons from that city. Let me now compare the standard of living in New York with the standard of living in Montreal, and you will see that the cost is far cheaper in New York than in the Metropolis of Canada. The New York state conference on charities and correction through their investigation, and it was an elaborate one, came to the conclusion that $825 per year was the necessary income to allow a family to maintain a fair and proper standard of living in New York city. If we compare these figures with those I have already given on food stuffs in Montreal and New York the working men of the Canadian Metropolis should receive ninety-five per cent more wages to enable them to balance their budget. The minimum itemized estimate established by that conference is $709.20 for a family of five. The figure I gave last year for Montreal was $746.13, and if we compare the earning power of working men, we find that New York has an advantage of sixty per cent over Montreal. I have not yet found in the labour ranks a mathematician clever enough to solve this problem. This House is composed of members of high standing, many of whom are great financiers and I call upon them to solve it.

The coal famine, if it can be called such, this year furnishes an occasion also for the legislators of the country to take necessary steps to prevent its repetition next year. We are informed, and rightly so, that coal has cost very little more a ton to the operators this year than last year; nevertheless, the coal was sold during the latter part of December, 1912, at $10 per ton. The profit made at $7 and $7.50 per ton was enough to enrich to an alarming proportion operators of mines and also the wholesale dealers. This increase of about forty per cent to those who have revenues enough to buy by the ton and for cash on delivery may not be a burden. What about the amount paid by the largest part of the consumers? With such an exhorbitant price they have to buy in small quantities, by the basket or by the 100 pounds. Has any one in this House ever dreamt what it costs for coal under the present conditions to the poorer classes of people who are in the majority in this country? They have to pay from seventy-five cents to one dollar per one hundred pounds; this would mean $15 to $20 per ton, or in other words, 100 to 155 per cent more than they could buy their coal for last year. Such an exorbitant price this year has forced the masses to buy by the hundred pounds instead of by the ton. Of course, the wholesaler will say that he is not responsible for such a charge, but he has cornered the coal market and has been successful in driving the small coal dealers out of business, thus increasing the power of exploitation of the coal trust.

Some few years ago, the statement was made that the strike of the coal miners was responsible for the increase of coal. Information at my command proves that not more than eight cents per ton has been added to the cost on that account. It is a wonder that the trust this year does not use the same argument, for the coal trust has no more sense of honour than any other institution of the same character. I am informed that coal costs $2.50 per gross ton, free on board, in the cars at the mines. The freight on a car is $2.76 per ton, thus making the value of the coal delivered in Montreal $5.26 per ton. By allowing a reasonable profit to the wholesaler, say, one dollar per ton, and a legitimate profit to the retailer, say, one dollar per ton, the coal can be delivered in every workingman's cellar for $7.26 per ton. The prices charged in December were $10 and $11 per ton. If the prices of last year, $7 and $7.50, were high enough to enrich the operators and wholesalers to an alarming proportion, what about the profits this year?

If we take the population of Montreal, say, 550,000 and divide by 5 as to families, we have then 110,000 families at an average of three tons, which is too little. This makes 440,000 tons of coal for consumption in that city alone and for the winter only. A reasonable average would be 450,000 tons, and by giving a good substantial profit to all those who handle coal we can figure that the trust has pocketed this year at least over and above a legitimate profit $1,125,000, or, at the rate of five tons per family, $1,375,000.

Is this not enough to justify us in asking that such a proceeding should be prevented? Is this not enough to arouse the masses against conditions that permit such exploitation? Is this not enough to cause the rank and file to protest, because after being robbed of their food, they are also robbed of their means of keeping warm in winter. If the members of this House had to submit for a few days to the same privation that a great number of workingmen had to submit to on account of the exorbitant price of coal last winter, I am convinced that Bills would be introduced or the Government would be obliged to legislate for the prevention of such disastrous operations.

While I am on this question I would like to read the report of the commission that was appointed by the Government of the United States last year when it was stated by the coal dealers that a large amount should be added to the price of coal because there was a certain increased amount to be paid to the men in the mines. That commission made a report and a summary of that report appeared in the Montreal Gazette which hon. gentlemen opposite will I am sure be satisfied to take authoritatively, and I may say that the Gazette generally gives a fair report. On March 3, 1913, the Montreal Gazette published the following:

What Coal Companies did. Took $13,450,000 from Consumers to pay $4,000,000 Wages.

Washington, March 1.

Hard coal companies increased the wages of their employees at the rate of $4,000,000, according to a report based on an investigation by the Bureau of Labour submitted to the House to-day.

The report submitted by Secretary Nagel is the result of an investigation concluded in response to a House resolution asking for the 'elements of cost and profit included in the present high price of anthracite.'

An average increase of 26 cents a ton in wholesale coal prices was discovered to have been made since the strike agreement of last May. In spite of the fact that the workers benefitted about $4,000,000 in increased wages during the year, the report adds that 'the recent increases in prices have been more than sufficient to compensate fully those companies whose cost of production have increased most rapidly during recent years, and at the same time have very greatly increased the profits of those companies, of whom there are at least several whose costs of production either decreased or remained stationary during the same period.'

On more than $13,000,000 gained by the operators after the strike agreement, $10,900,000 was derived from general increase in prices and about $2,500,000 from the suspension of April and May discounts, while in addition a limited number of operators are reported to have 'received very large sums through the sale of coal at premiums made possible by the shortage of shipments,' incident to the strike. The discounts of 40 and 50 cents a ton customarily allowed in April and May on domestic size coal were suspended during these months in 1912. As a result the operators not only gained by saving this discount, says the report, but in addition purchasers who were unable to secure their usual supply in those months were forced to buy it during June, July or August, when discount rates were smaller, or in September, and later when full circular prices are charged.

The increase in wages, however, the report adds, represents a raise of only eight to ten cents in the cost of coal production per ton.

I will now take the liberty of reading a passage from an article, in which Mr. LeRoy Beaulieu, the great French economist gives his opinion concerning the cost of living. I presume that this gentleman is known by reputation by many members of this House, as a moderate writer. In L'Economiste Français of Saturday, September 9, 1911, this is what he says:

As a matter of principle, it is not a bad thing for consumers to attempt to defend themselves against the increase of prices.

If the householders of the departments of the North of L'Aisme and others, when clubbing together and making revendications, had contented themselves with boycotting certain traders or certain marketers and had refrained totally or at least partially during a few days from purchasing goods at exorbitant prices, they certainly could not be blamed for doing so; on the contrary, they would have been worthy of praise.

In fact, the consumer must not accept without discussion all the increases in prices decreed by the producer, as these increases are not always justified, at least not to their full extent.

These words written by Mr. LeRoy Beaulieu are significant as proving that the same problem exists in France. It also existed under the Roman Empire and I had occasion to tell this House last year how it was solved by one Emperor. If laws were not then permissible, they are to-day. Why not then take advantage of the power of Parliament and make laws to remedy these conditions?

We have heard much about the German scare. What occupies the mind of the German people in this very same acute question as to the high cost of living. William Hubener, a great economist, has come to the same conclusion: that reduction of tariff on foodstuffs and a return to a more liberal policy is necessary.

The consumers of the cities as well as the rural districts were led to believe in 1911 that if a Conservative Government come to power in Canada all absolute necessities of life would receive a substantial diminution in price. We have had this present Government in power for nearly two years, and instead of the price of those articles diminishing it is increasing, and still we hear the supporters of the present Administration boasting about protection. What kind of protection do we hear so much about? Is it the furnishing of better means to the workers to bring up their families? Is it the furnishing of more work and better wages? Is it the granting of shorter hours of labour so as to enable them to rest and educate their families? Is it the provision of three meals a day and a roof over their heads in their old age? Is it the granting of a substantial pension to widows and orphans so as to enable the widowed mother to remain at home to raise her family, to prevent her from being insulted while performing her duty, and to prevent young boys from being taken to the courts to answer for some of their misdoings? Is it this kind of protection we hear so much about, or is it tariff protection, that the present Government is so anxious to give to their friends? We have been able to judge by the change in economic conditions even in the short period of sixteen months, and true enough, our great manufacturers have reason to be satisfied with their present conditions.

In the name of the workers of the country I ask the Government right here and now: Can we expect a substantial reduction of tariff on the absolute necessities of life? Can we expect some protection for labour as well as for the manufacturers? Mr. Speaker, on this very important question of reduction of tariff I would like to again bring to the knowledge of the House, and to the country, some figures on importation of foodstuffs, for which we are paying enormous sums of money for duty, and also compare the amount paid by each workman's family. To be sure that my calculation will meet with the approval of the House, I will say at the outset that the figures are from the last report of the Departments of Labour and of Customs for the year ending the 31st March, 1912. I have gone carefully over the items of actual necessities of life, and find the amount of foodstuffs remarkably large and also the amount of duty paid on same by the consumers of the country. Hon. gentlemen will see that I am entering on the line which I have not yet covered. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when I am through the hon. Minister of Finance will see his way clear to legislate in favour of a substantial reduction of the tariff, so as to enable the poorest classes to feed themselves in a reasonable way. We have imported in the year 1912 the following articles of food on which we have paid the following duty:

Imports.	Quantity.	Duty.
Butter	3,987,332 lbs	$128,536 14
Cheese	2,426,217 "	27,279 41
Lard	7,960,540 "	158,054 24
Bacon and ham	11,256,684 "	224,899 61
Beef, salted	3,074,684 "	39,538 18
Canned meats and poultry	2,197,762 "	72,339 20
Mutton and lamb, fresh	4,041,263 "	118,520 72
Pork, salted	6,442,838 "	123,805 74
Meats, dryed, smoked, preserved	1,420,461 "	28,518 92
Other meats, fresh	2,339,252 "	68,050 54
		$990,142 70

Vegetables.

Potatoes	494,834 bushels	$ 84,977 11
Tomatoes, fresh	82,613 "	68,474 70
Tomatoes and corn, canned	9,244,307 lbs	132,066 36
Vegetable beans, canned	9,829,594 "	134,139 13
Vegetables, N.O.P.	$1,085,448 value	321,841 05
		$741,498 35
Eggs	7,577,826 dozens	226,567 00
Rice	13,200,390 lbs	82,583 00
Macaroni and vermicelli	6,852,701 "	68,673 00
		$377,823 00

We see by these figures that we have paid in duty enormous sums of money on goods we are producing ourselves.

The importation of butter for example of 3,987,332 pounds, on which we had to pay in tariff alone $128,536, looks ridiculous from the consumer's standpoint. We are producing an enormous quantity of butter in our country; the returns show that we have exported during the year 1912 to all parts of the world 8,844,402 pounds of Canadian butter. This high tariff question is responsible for what we have had to pay, 3 cents per pound more for our butter, to which must be added double transportation charges. In the productive months of the year the great trusts exports all the butter available, thus creating a scarcity for the home market, which has to be met by importation, which adds double profits to the exporter who is also the importer. Where is the benefit to our farmers? Where is the reasonable price which the consumers expect to pay?

The great public is treated in the same way in respect of cheese, for we have exported from Canada in the same year 163,450,684 pounds and we have imported 2,426,217 pounds of cheese, on which we had to pay $27,279 for tariff alone.

If we take the total amount we had to pay for tariff on goods we are producing, we get the following figures:

On cheese, butter and meats	$ 990,138
On vegetables	741,497
On eggs, macaroni and vermicelli	377,823
Making a total on food stuffs	$2,109,458

Now, if we go into details as to the amount of foodstuffs required for one year for a family of five we are astonished as to how families, generally speaking, can meet their obligations. The figures I am going to give are taken from the last report of the Labour Department, which was laid on the table not very long ago. They are as follows:

Meats for the year will cost	$ 91 00
Lard for the year will cost	18 82
Eggs for the year will cost	33 17
Milk for the year will cost	25 89
Butter for the year will cost	48 88
Cheese for the year will cost	21 11
Bread for the year will cost	31 98
Flour for the year will cost	17 10
Rolled oats for the year will cost	11 44
Rice for the year will cost	5 72
Beans for the year will cost	5 72
Apples, evaporated, for the year will cost	7 07
Prunes for the year will cost	6 76
Sugar for the year will cost	19 76
Tea and coffee for the year will cost	12 58
Potatoes	26 83
Total	$381 83

From the items I have just given, we see that many other necessities of life in respect of foodstuffs are omitted. If we were to add those other articles for which $50 would be a moderate figure, we would then have $431.83 for foodstuffs alone. But, adding to this the following, we have:

Fuel	$ 79 34
Laundry	10 00
Rent according to Labour Department	229 34
Lighting	11 80
Clothing, same figures as last year	138 25
School books and taxes	7 00
Street car tickets	24 00
Dishes and breakage	20 00
Linen	25 00
Medical attendance	25 00
Church dues	7 20
Total		576,93
Food stuffs		431 83
Total		$1,008 76

My calculations of last year were far below the present figures, and the hon. Minister of Labour must find another way, to show me that the cost of living has only increased six per cent. These figures shows clearly that the tariff must be lowered, whether the manufacturers like it or not.

I would also like to bring to the knowledge of the members of the House what a workman has to pay in the form of tariff before he and his family eat any of the following articles:

He pays for the year on eggs		$ 3 12
" " butter		6 12
" " lard		2 08
" " fruits		6 00
" " vegetables		6 00
" " potatoes		5 00
" " rolled oats		1 50
" " rice		75
" " apples, evaporated		1 75
" " prunes		1 50
" " cheese		3 12
" " meats		10 40
" " fish		3 65
Total		$ 51 11

This is the amount he has to pay for tariff on the above specified foodstuffs. If we add to this the rental, as per the report of the Department of Labour, we see he has then to pay $280.35; and, as the report goes on to show that the figures given on page 15 are based on an income of $800 a year, or, in other words, $15.60 per week, this poor workman has to work 18 weeks or 108 days of the year to pay that amount. This is a very serious problem, and if the protection to which I have alluded is not soon granted, I shall take the responsibility of telling the Government that my duty as well as that of all the members of this House who have the interest of the country at heart will be to fight to a finish all those who wish to protect the classes to the detriment of the masses. The Government, with its great generosity and its good-fellowship, wishes to help the Mother Country to the extent of thirty-five millions. This may be a mere bagatelle for those who are accustomed to play with millions, and especially when they, by their business transactions, will make sure that the burden will fall on those they have so well learned to exploit. But what about the masses of consumers? If we take, directly or indirectly, thirty-five millions from the public treasury, will this not be an excellent occasion for our great protectionists to demand a higher protective tariff, giving for their reason that the wealth of the country has diminished in that proportion and that in order to administer the public affairs thirty-five millions more must enter the public treasury? It may not be put before the public in that light, but I defy the Government to prove the contrary.

If the announcement could have been made that our surplus this year was not above that of last year, and that the explanation was lower tariffs or the free entry of food stuffs, I claim that we could say that the country is more prosperous, because the difference in the number of millions, whatever it might be, would be in the pocket of the consumers of the country. But under present conditions the contrary exists and instead of having been protected, I claim that the workers of Canada have been deprived and robbed of their most vital needs, viz., foodstuffs.

Is it any wonder that the masses of the consumers of Canada will not stand for all time the conditions I have just described to the House?

I may be accused of arousing the masses against other classes of society. I may be told that instead of preaching peace and harmony amongst men, I wish them divided, and that a war of classes brought about under the present circumstances would be detrimental to our country. My answer is that if such conditions exist, they were created by those who represent large aggregations of capital and their friends, and I warn them now that they will sooner or later assume a terrible responsibility.

We are supposed to live in a world of Christianity and under Christian conditions. Will any one, either on the public platform or on the floor of this House, dare to say that present conditions of society are not absolutely contrary to the true spirit of Christianity? We have asked the masses to reason, to tolerate, to live in faithful hopes of better days and they have done so; but nevertheless the cemeteries in our cities and towns are being rapidly filled with those who carry these hopes to the grave.

Instead of giving away millions, why not spend some of our time and money for the betterment of mankind, by furnishing more work and better conditions, and endeavour to satisfy millions of empty stomaches which are in need of food?

It has been said in England that you cannot teach a child with an empty stomach. Neither can you teach men to love their country and her institutions if they are subjected to starvation conditions. The waving of the flag may have a temporary effect; so may an appeal to their loyalty, but they will soon understand that the greatest object of that cry is to furnish occasion to some great trusts to create more millionaires.

The Parliament of Canada has appointed a commission for the preservation of our forests and everyone admits the necessity of preserving our natural resources. Cannot the masses of consumers of the country expect to be treated at least on an equal footing with these natural resources?

The assets of a country can be estimated only by the machinery that sets them in operation. The biggest asset is surely the population. If so, the people have a right to say that the consumers have been ignored for political as well as anti-economic considerations and that they recommend, like the people of European countries, a return to a more liberal policy. They should not be obliged to petition and pray for their rights. If they only knew their strength and power, they would be the masters of the members of this House, who, after all, are only the servants of the people of Canada.

I hope to see the day, Sir, when the great producers of wealth, the great creators of industries, the great users of natural resources, will understand, will feel more strongly than they do now the constant oppression of high protective tariffs, specially on natural products. I hope to see the day when the masses of the people will understand, that their immediate interest lies with those whom are willing to protect them by the enactment of modern legislation, that will have for effect the diminishing of the burden now imposed on them for the benefit of a few.

I hope that the day of the retribution will soon come, when the masses of consumers, in accordance with the great producers of our country, will demand and will obtain, a diminution in the cost of living. They, too, are anxious to breathe the air of liberty; they too have a right to the rays of sunshine of prosperity; they too have a right to protection in the fullest sense that word to peace, harmony, amongst our fellowmen and nation; and to achieve such, the present Government will be compelled to legislate in the form of a reduction of tariff, at least on first necessities of life. We, as legislators, are confronted with this great problem, and no one in this House has any right to shrink from such a responsibility.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making an appeal to the Government, to all the members of this House, not to ignore any longer those who have built this country. They are hoping for, and expecting to receive, fair treatment in accordance with, and in proportion of their number, their power, their needs and their rights.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford): The hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) has given us a very long discourse presumably in the interest of the labouring classes. I myself represent a labouring constituency and I should be very sorry indeed for the lot of the workingman, if I thought that many of the statements the hon. gentleman has placed on 'Hansard' were in any sense true or could be borne out by facts. The figures that he has quoted with regard to the necessities of life, particularly with regard to fruit, vegetables and dairy products, may apply to some hole or corner in the Dominion of Canada, but in no sense can be said to represent what the average workingman of Canada has to pay for these products. He made the broad statement in the early part of his address that the cost of living in Montreal is practically one hundred per cent higher than in New York. I wonder how many citizens of Canada the hon. gentleman expects to believe such a statement. I believe he said also that Montreal was eighty per cent higher in cost of living than Chicago. The figures he quoted on some ordinary necessaries of life it is unnecessary for me to spend even a moment in recounting, because they bear their refutation on their face; they are absolutely not in accord with the facts well known to the workingmen whom he presumes to represent. The workingmen of Canada are in no such disposition as he has given us to understand. The city from which I come, is not a large city, having a population in round figures of 25,000, of whom 7,000 are classed as workingmen and working in the factories of that city, and before I get through I shall endeavour to show what they are producing and how they are living. But the hon. gentleman has made broad statements and I think it a pity that such statements should go on 'Hansard' uncontradicted, because they are absolutely untrue in regard to the large majority of products which are usually classed as necessities of life. It may be that Ontario differs from Quebec in that respect. The factories of Ontario are located largely in agricultural centres, and it is well known by everyone who frequents the markets of the various towns and cities of Ontario that the prices that obtain there—and I call the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) as a witness—are very moderate indeed, and not more than from twenty-five to fifty per cent of those the hon. member for Maisonneuve has just stated. It was to be expected that when he made the statement that there was great unrest and disquiet in Canada among the workingmen, he would have given a few facts to bear out that statement. I take the ground that the workingmen of Canada are thrifty, prosperous and contented. I think that statement cannot be refuted. In order to prove it let me give a few figures. I take the facts of industrial disputes for 1911, the last year for which I have such figures at hand. In that year there were one hundred industrial disputes in Canada. Of these, forty-two were settled between the parties, two were settled by arbitration and seven by conciliation. In seventeen cases work was resumed on the employers' terms: in ten cases, the strikers places were filled. Of the total, thirty-four ended favourably to the employers, twenty-one favourably to the employees, and there were compromises in twenty-four. That surely does not show great dissatisfaction among the workingmen of Canada; it shows that the workingmen are well satisfied with their lot. Let me give the returns for the past ten years in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to how many industrial disputes we have had, and as to whether or not the workingmen are satisfied with present conditions. The total number of disputes that we have had during the ten year period between 1902 and 1911 was 1,069, nearly all of them in Ontario. Of the 1,069, 394 were settled in favour of the employers, 279 in favour of the employees, and 246 were settled by compromise. Therefore I say that the average lot of the workingmen in Canada is unexcelled in any country in the world. I am sorry that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has just withdrawn from the Chamber, because I was about to compare free trade England with protectionist Canada in that respect.

My hon. friend who has just spoken has attributed many of the disabilities under which the workingmen of Canada labour to the fact that we have a tariff in Canada, and he endeavoured to show that the existence of this tariff was raising the price of goods to the extent of one hundred per cent in Montreal. No free trader, so far as I am aware, has ever made the contention that a tariff can raise the price of goods higher than the amount of the tariff itself. The average tariff on the goods my hon. friend mentions runs from twenty per cent to thirty-five per cent, so that, providing the whole of the duty collected on those items—and it certainly would not be anything like the whole duty—were added to the price of these products, the price could not be more than thirty-five per cent higher than the price in the markets of New York or Chicago. I think, therefore, that the ground upon which the hon. gentleman based his argument is entirely fallacious, and that the workingmen of Canada are well satisfied with their lot. They are receiving good wages; they are living under prosperous conditions, and the fact that labour is so well employed, and employed at satisfactory rates, proves that the conditions existing in Canada so far as labour is concerned are of the best. It is true they may not be ideal, but I repeat that they are of the best. I invite my hon. friend to come to Brantford, and if we cannot show him comfortable, prosperous homes, in which the workingmen are living in content, happiness and peace, then I will admit that something must be done to relieve the workingmen of Canada.

I propose to place upon 'Hansard' the value of the products turned out by fourteen of the principal manufacturing cities of the Dominion. The city of Montreal leads, with a production valued at $115,000,000, in round numbers, showing an increase of one hundred and sixty-eight per cent in twenty years. Toronto comes second with a production of $154,000,000, an increase of two hundred and thirty-four per cent in twenty years. Hamilton takes third place, with a production of $65,000,000. Winnipeg is fourth—a western city, in spite of the fact that it is contended that they do not manufacture anything in the West—with a production of $32,000,000. Ottawa is fifth, $20,000,000; Quebec sixth, $17,000,000; London, seventh, $16,000,000; Brantford, eighth, $15,000,000; Vancouver, ninth, $13,000,000; Halifax, tenth, $12,000,000; St. John, eleventh, $10,000,000; Sydney, twelfth, $9,000,000; Berlin, thirteenth, $9,000,000; Calgary, fourteenth, $7,000,000. So that the manufacturing cities of Canada are turning out a vast amount of manufactured products. I think that the city of Brantford, from which I come, is perhaps a fair indication of what the workingmen are producing in Canada. I presume it is desirable that we should have placed upon the records some indication of the efficiency of the average workingman in the Dominion of Canada. It is said, and I think with some truth, that we are not producing as much goods for export as we should, and I shall deal with that later on. In regard to the city from which I come, which has a population of 25,000, a factory employment of 7,000 and a total production of $15,000,000; if you divide $15,000,000 between 7,000 workmen, you will find that on the average they are producing about $2,000 per man. That, I think, is a very respectable amount for the workingmen to produce, and will probably compare favourably with the work of men in any other calling in life.

Mr. NESBITT: Does my hon. friend know the average wage paid for that production?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I have not before me the average wage paid in the city of Brantford, but, speaking in round figures, I should say that $1.75 a day or seven shillings sterling, is about the average wage of the workingman in that city. Many of them obtain $2.50, $3 and $4, but I think the lowest wage paid for labour in that city is from $1.50 to $1.75. The wage obtained by employees of the railways of Canada might be said to be typical of the average wage paid in the factories of this country. The Canadian railways employ 141,000 men, who are paid an annual wage of $74,000,000. If you divide $74,000,000 by 141,000, you will get an average of $525 per man, or, in round figures, $1.75 a day for every man employed by the railways of Canada. I think that will bear out my assertion that the lot of the workingman in Canada is a fairly satisfactory one, and that the average wage paid in this country will compare favourably with that paid in any other country of the world. That being the case, it appears to me that my hon. friend the member for Maisonneuve has very little ground of complaint with regard to the position of the workingman in Canada. I for one would be sorry if it were otherwise, because I think that there are no persons who are more worthy of consideration by hon. gentlemen of this House than the workingmen of this country.

My hon. friend evidenced a desire to give us to understand that a good deal of unrest was caused in Canada because a large amount of duty was extracted from the workingmen. As my hon. friend the member for Red Deer has now come into the House, I may be pardoned if I draw attention to the labour conditions that have existed in Great Britain during the last year or two. I think I shall not be doing an injustice to the country from which my hon. friend comes if I say that no country in the world has had more industrial unrest within the past two years than has the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. I was in London last year when some of these periods of unrest were in progress; that city was almost threatened with a famine at that time because the workingmen were refusing to unload ships in the docks at London. The coal men and railway men were on strike, so that I may remind my hon. friend who represents labour, that labour conditions in a free trade country are not at all comparable with what they are in a country which has such moderate protection as we have in Canada. I submit that the lot of the workingman in Canada will compare favourably with that of any free trade or protectionist nation in the world. I have seldom listened to two speeches of such length as those of the hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for Maisonneuve which contained so little meat, so little constructive thought and suggestion for improving conditions if conditions are wrong. The hon. member for Halifax laboured close unto three hours and I must say that, following him very closely and making notes at the time, I was unable to detect one single suggestive thought during the whole of the discourse for the improving of existing conditions. That is rather a reflection on the acuteness of the hon. member for Halifax, or else it speaks in very loud tones in favour of the splendid policy being pursued by the Minister of Finance in the direction of our trade, commerce and transportation questions. The fact that the hon. member has nothing to suggest by way of improvement, shows that things must be very nearly right. The hon. member spent considerable time upon the lumber duties. That is an issue that has been fairly well threshed out in this House, and although he referred to this at considerable length, it will not be necessary for me to touch on it further than to say that since this Government came into power the tariff as it exists on the statute book is being enforced and collections are being made in a way that they were not under the late Government. That is rather a serious charge and may reflect on the incumbent in the office under the late Government, a respected and honoured gentleman from my own county whom I have known personally for the past forty years and whom I respect very highly. But in order that it may be seen that I am not making a statement now that he is out of the House, that had not been made when he was in the House, I will refer to an address of my own on March 19, 1908, in which I charged that the then Minister of Customs was not collecting the amounts of duty that the Acts on the Statute book called for, and further than that, I gave him concrete instances and examples that called on him as Minister of Customs to do his duty and cause to be collected in this country duties that were levied according to the statutes he was supposed to administer. But did he do that? No, Sir, in one of the cases to which I referred here in the year 1908, I called his attention to a tunnel that was being constructed under the Detroit river. I distinctly showed him on that occasion that he was not collecting the duty called for under the statute. I said:

I do not think that he has told anything new in regard to that. His own department, it has generally been supported, is purity itself, but I have given the hon. gentleman one case, we know of a few others and we may be able to bring them to his attention before the session closes. I have been informed that in his department there are fraudulent entries and under valuations. I believe that favours are granted to certain ones. We would like to find out why it is in connection with that immense tunnel crossing from Windsor to Detroit everything being brought in from the United States to be used on the Canadian end of it is coming in free of duty under an Order in Council. Was that done in order to benefit some friends of the Government? If so, who are they?

So that on that occasion I pointed out to the Minister of Customs that he was not collecting the duties called for under the Customs Act. I want to bear testimony to the efficiency of the Customs Department as at present administered compared to its condition under the late Government. -I say that the Minister of Finance has been able to show this House that we are collecting in round figures $113,000,000 in customs duties. That is being collected because the department is doing its duty, it is not all owing to increased trade that these duties are being collected. Since the present Minister of Customs has come into that department he has strengthened the staff throughout Canada, he has put competent men in charge of the offices and they are collecting the duty as called for under the statutes. This is one of the main reasons why the buoyancy of our revenue is so apparent to-day, that the duties which should have been collected under the late Government, but were not, are now being collected. In my own city of Brantford the present Government is collecting about 50 per cent more duty than the late Government. That shows that it is not all owing to increased trade, that because the men who are importing into all different parts of Canada are now checked up and examined, an efficient staff is on the job, and if under-valuations are accepted, if imports are being entered below their proper value, if the goods are being taken in in any way contrary to the law, they are detected and the full duty is collected. I say all honour to the gentleman who has brought that about. Owing to the efficiency of the department as at present administered a large amount of duty is now being collected that under the late Government escaped attention altogether. I have under my hand a sample of what was done under the late Government. I brought it to the attention of the House in the same address in 1908. That was the case of Donald Fraser of British Columbia. Most of the citizens of British Columbia are very honest, but the Hon. Mr. Paterson had in his employ a man who systematically for years had been defrauding the Government. An investigation was held and it was settled in quiet for less than one-third the amount that the man himself boasted he had taken from the Government. I brought the matter to the attention of the minister, I gave the name of the man and the amount, and the late minister without saying anything on that occasion, had an inspector verify the truth of my statement and made the man cough up over $6,000 after the case had been settled quietly by the Customs Department. That is one sample that goes to show that the statement I made is correct, that under the late Government things were at loose ends and the customs duties were not collected. Under this Administration they are collected and the result is that we have a buoyant revenue.

The hon. member for Halifax also took exception to the fact that the Government are not going on with the creation of a tariff commission. He seems to be worrying because the Senate killed the Bill and it has not been introduced again this year. I do not know that the member for Halifax should be necessarily very much concerned about the tariff commission. I do not think that he can find very much fault with the present tariff seeing that it is almost identically as it was left by the Government which he supported so valiantly for so many years, and surely within less than two years the tariff they left in force cannot have gone very far wrong, so that there would be a necessity for the very early creation of a board of tariff commissioners. The hon. gentleman went on and dwelt at great length upon the extravagance of the present Government. Extravagance may consist of two things, of a party, a Government or a nation living beyond their means, or it may consist of paying two prices for any given article or any public work. I think that certainly the hon. gentleman will have to say that I have made out a good case in regard to meaning number one, that is that we are now living within our means. I think that the hon. member for Halifax will agree to that because he later on pointed out the fact that we have $55,000,000 of a surplus over and above all our expenses and therefore we are not living nearly as highly as we should be, according to the statement of my hon. friend, because he has told us that the Government has $55,000,000 of a surplus that it might have spent. As far as the first count is concerned it falls to the ground. Did the hon. gentleman point out a single expenditure made so far for which the Government had not received value? Is there one single case that the hon. gentleman has at his disposal which will show that this Government has not received value for the money expended? I think the hon. gentleman will admit that if that is the case now, it was not the case when the late Government was in power. The other day we had placed in 'Hansard' the cost of the Transcontinental railway up to date, and it was given in round figures at $130,000,000. On the construction of the Transcontinental railway, which was estimated by hon. gentlemen opposite to cost all the way from $13,000,000 up to $55,000,000, $130,000,000 has been paid, and it is now thought that before it is completed it will approach $150,000,000 or $175,000,000.

I want to call my hon. friend's attention to one or two reasons why this Government should spend a lot of money now that they are in power. My hon. friend says that we used to criticise the previous Government for spending large amounts of money on wharfs, breakwaters and canals. It is true that we did, and I think upon very good grounds. But the trouble was that in the past much of the money that the Government had to spend went to the province from which my hon. friend comes. These breakwaters and wharfs were placed where they were not wanted, canals were dug where there was no water, both in Nova Scotia and in Ontario, and in many ways the Government which my hon. friend supported was one of gross extravagance. The Government that is extravagant in one part of the country is bound to be economical in another, and that is the reason why the present Government has to make good the deficiencies of the last ten years. For fifteen years the Government had ignored the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Manitoba, and they were absolutely robbed of their legitimate rights in the way of expenditure. That is the reason why the expenditures are high, and they are going to be high.

Look at the city of Toronto, with its post office producing about one-sixth or one-seventh of the whole post office revenue of Canada crowded into a little bit of a box. When the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) visited that office a few months ago he could hardly squeeze into it, his officials were packed into a small space, they had to work with electric light and they were not in a position, for lack of proper accommodation, to perform their duties. My hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) is waking up at that. That took place under his regime.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The post office in Toronto is one of the finest in Canada.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That shows how Toronto was served at that time. What applies to Toronto applies also to a very large portion of the province of Ontario, and that is the reason why the Minister of Public Works comes down with estimates of $28,000,000, which the hon. member for Halifax asserts is an evidence of gross extravagance. We have to make good what we were deprived of during the last fifteen years.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There are a good many constituencies in Ontario.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Yes, and most of them have been robbed by the Government that held the power for fifteen years. They were not given their fair share although we have in Ontario a province that pays one-third of the entire taxation of the Dominion. Under these circumstances I think they are entitled to a fair share of the distribution of public works. The city from which I come, during the time that the late Minister of Customs, Mr. Paterson, held power, got scarcely enough to enable it to eke out a miserable existence in the way of public services, and Brant county, from which my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) comes, was treated in very much the same way. We were robbed in that city and county of our rights for many years, and now that we are restored to power, the Government recognizes the claims of a city like Brantford which is among the large and important cities of Ontario, and we have at last got a little of the public expenditure. British Columbia has received some, Manitoba has received some and it is not all going down to the sea as the hon. member for Halifax would like to have it.

Mr. MACLEAN: Never.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That part of the country got a great deal more than its share and the late Minister of Finance saw to it that his own native province was spoon-fed with a vengeance. Therefore, we had breakwaters, wharfs and other public works placed both in position and out of position, where they were wanted and where they were not wanted—any place to spend money. It is true that we had one or two exceptions in Ontario when useless works were provided. Let me remind my hon. friend of that famous Newmarket canal running through the constituency from which the late Minister of Justice, Sir Allen Aylesworth, came. That is only one out of a good many constituencies that got more than their share possibly during the time of the late Government, but when my hon. friend charges extravagance, I think he will have to wait a considerable time before he will find such a flagrant waste of public money as was exhibited in the construction of the Newmarket canal.

My hon. friend has charged that we are setting out on a most extravagant course and that we are collecting money that should be left in the pockets of the people. These are very fine sounding words, but this money is being collected under the same tariff that existed when the Government that he was supporting was in power. If they were not then exorbitant duties they are not to-day. The taxation of the Dominion increased very largely under the administration of my hon. friend. I have under my hand, but I shall not read them unless the statement is disputed, the figures showing that in 1878, when the national policy was first brought into existence, the taxation per head was less than $4. Before the Conservative Government went out of power in 1896 it was between $4 and $5 per head. Under the late Government it rose to between $11 and $12. When they went out of power they were collecting three times as much duty per head as they were when they assumed office. That was a very fair advance for the time they were at it. If they increased the amount of taxation taken from the people three times over what it was when they assumed office, I think my hon. friend should not begin to grumble because we have such a large surplus as that which is disclosed this year. He says that we have no public uses to which we can apply this money satisfactorily. I take issue with my hon. friend. I think that in a country such as Canada we have now, and we will have for many years, very many public works to construct, very many national necessities in which a large amount of public money can safely be invested. We all know that we must go on constructing railways and canals. We have a very large expenditure to face in this regard and when my hon. friend was looking around for places at which to spend money he must have forgotten that during the present session he has been backing the proposition which calls for a very large amount of money, and further that if the Laurier navy with these two fleet units became a practical fact all of this $55,000,000 would be swallowed up and there might be required a great deal more. Australia has embarked on a policy costing $440,000,000, and surely Canada, with nearly double the population, would not be satisfied with anything which would involve an expenditure less than that of Australia. My hon. friend who thinks the tariff is too high, was ready to join with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), in advocating that a ship-building plant, or plants, with subsidies and tariffs, should be established forthwith. Why? Because they would be down by the sea from whence these hon. gentlemen come and from which I expect some of them will not come if there is a general election. But, however, these hon. gentlemen, when they talk of industries that are going to locate near their own homes, are quite ready to back those enterprises.

They have both hands up for building shipyards and dreadnoughts and entering on such reckless expenditure that even we so-called high tariff men cannot stand for it. These gentlemen opposite are not satisfied with existing industries, but they must embark on dreadnought building, one of the most difficult industries to establish it is possible to conceive, and with failure staring them in the face. In forty years we have built up a manufacturing system in Canada that is second to none in the world. The products of our factories are of such quality, quantity and value as to fully justify the policy of protection. If we are wise and consistent we will stick closely to the tariff as at present we have it. I, who am sometimes accused of being a high tariff protectionist, am making no kick whatever against the tariff the Liberal party left behind them; I say it is a moderate, a wise, and a sane tariff for our purposes at present. There are some anomalies in it and there should be some little pruning here and there, but taking it on the whole it is very satisfactory and it has proved that the Dominion of Canada can prosper under it. I do not, however, give the late Government credit for establishing that tariff; they found it when they came to office mostly as it is to-day and whenever they attempted to change it as they did in some cases they made a mistake.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) : I have heard you complain of it in this House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I complained when the duty was struck off binder twine and when twelve factories were closed in Canada. I complained when the duty was taken off barbed wire and all the barbed wire factories shut down. But these things are gone and I suppose there is no use lamenting them to-day. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that many thousands of farmers in Ontario had considerable sums invested in the manufacture of binder twine and that investment was wiped out when the Liberals undertook to admit binder twine free. I tell these gentlemen further that when they did admit binder twine free they did not succeed in cheapening the price of it to the farmer. Last summer we had a persistent call from the West that all restrictions be now removed from binder twine. Binder twine is absolutely free of duty, but the restrictions they referred to were as to the quality and the weight and the application was that the United States binder twine, which did not come up to the Canadian standard should be admitted, even without inspection. Let my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) take that home and think over it. I say we will do very well if we stick pretty closely to the well beaten path in tariff matters. Canada with its natural advantages is destined to become a great nation, but you cannot have a great nation without a diversity of labour and you cannot have a diversity of labour unless you have manufacturing institutions of all kinds; mercantile, industrial and agricultural. Every man is not cut out for a farmer, and every man is not cut out for an artizan and the man who follows the calling he is best suited for is the man who is best serving the country in which he lives. For the last thirty years under both the Conservative and Liberal governments, the progress in Canadian manufacturing has been most satisfactory. I have figures here which show the total manufacturing product of 1900 as compared with 1910, and they are worthy of being placed on 'Hansard.'

Canada's manufacturing expansion, 1900-1910.

Schedule.	1900.	1910.	Per cent Incr.

That statement will give to the people of Canada a fair idea of the progress of our manufacturing industries and I think that progress will compare very favourably with the progress of any country in the world. Canada to-day occupies the proud position of being at least in the second place, if not the first, in the products of its industries, and there is perhaps no country in the world in which products of a certain class are sold cheaper. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has attributed the cost of living to the tariff, but he failed to tell us that the tariff is also responsible for a large increase in the wages of the workingman. I contend that the wages of the workingmen have advanced, so as to put them in as good, or perhaps a little better position, than if the cost of living had not been increased.

Mr. MACLEAN: I deny that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am speaking of the high cost of living as applied to the necessaries of life. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has in his mind the cost of high living which is a very different thing.

Mr. MACLEAN: Quite different.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The cost of high living is pretty expensive. Where a man fifteen or twenty years ago was content to drive a pony chaise, he now wants a carriage and pair, and the man who had a carriage and pair ten years ago now wants a motor car, and some of them not content with a high-priced car are looking around for aeroplanes.

Mr. COCKSHUTT.

Mr. GRAHAM: Ham and eggs come high.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: They come high because the farmer is getting more for his products; but we are quite content that he should, because bacon and eggs have now become a dish fit for a king. I can assure my hon. friend that living is not so much higher now than it used to be, if people will only live as they used to do. Men are not content to live now as they used to do, when men walked to church on the Sabbath and thought, if they got a new suit of clothes once in two years, they were doing well, even if it did not happen to be cut by a high-class tailor. My hon. friends want to have the best tailor-made clothes, the latest neckties, the best style of hat; that is what increases the cost of living. It is the cost of high living that troubles hon. gentlemen opposite. If we could only simplify our habits and come back to what our forefathers lived upon, we would find a vast shrinkage of the bills of hon. gentlemen opposite and perhaps of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House as well. Our habits have become extravagant. That is one of the features that are not so comforting when we look over the Dominion to-day and see the vast amount of money spent in extravagances. When we say: Money is beginning to be a little tight, we should think of the millions invested in motor cars and other luxuries that were unknown fifteen or twenty years ago. That is only one item of a hundred that might be named when we consider what living is costing. My hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) gave figures showing that it costs a man about $900 a year to live and to bring up his family. I know of families that are living almost in affluence on not much over half that amount; they have comfortable homes of their own; they have well dressed wives and children, and they are able to give their children a first-class education in the public schools, costing ten or fifteen cents a month for each child, so that the workingman of to-day has practically got what the rich man of twenty years ago could not get at any price. That is the reason that conditions in Canada are as good as if not better than conditions in any other country in the world.

My hon. friend spoke at length in regard to extravagant living. Extravagance in any people is not wise. I am free to confess that I would be a good deal better if I ate a little less and worked a little more with my hands; and I think that will apply to hon. gentlemen opposite as well, especially while they are in Ottawa. If we live high and do not take much exercise, the result is not very satisfactory.

Mr. GRAHAM: Back to the soil.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: If we would be content with the simpler modes of life and if only the simpler wants of life were supplied, we would be to-day a better, a more prosperous and a more contented people than we are, because it is a well-known fact that the more a people have the more they become discontented.

Mr. MACLEAN: Put that policy in your platform.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The various expenditures made on our own selfish pleasures often work our own destruction. I think my hon. friend, the member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in his address on war, might also have touched on the extravagance of human nature at the present time, which is costing almost as much as excessive armaments. I said that my hon. friend might have got rid of a considerable amount of this $55,000,000 that he complains of us collecting, if the Laurier navy had become an established fact. Fortunately it has not.

I think he criticised only one other department, the Department of Militia. I have been accused of making a warlike speech in this House during the present session. I do not wish to be misunderstood; I am a man of peace, but I believe in being ready for war. I believe that every Christian city should be able to get along without police, but I have yet to discover a city in the Dominion of Canada that has been able to disband its police force, and to trust to the honesty, integrity and Christian charity of its citizens to enact and to carry out such laws as are for the best interests of the community. If it is a fact that such a condition is obtainable in the most Christian city in this or any other country, you cannot get away from the fact that we must have military and naval defence in this country. My hon. friend has criticised the expenditure of $10,000,000 for the Militia Department. I am no sponsor for the Minister of Militia; he is well able to take care of himself. He is a fighting man. I am not. I do not think $10,000,000 for the Militia Department is too much for this reason: We have in the militia of the Dominion of Canada to-day less than 100,000 men, nearly all volunteers, who are very poorly paid for the few days they put in per annum, and who, at great personal sacrifice, go week in and week out to the armouries and take their drill in the evenings, sacrificing their personal pleasures in order to serve their country. When they go to camp, they get about fifty cents a day. Surely no hon. gentleman would complain that that is excessive. These men, who are in the ranks of the militia of Canada and who are self-sacrificing enough to place their services at the disposal of their country for a mere bagatelle, should be supported in the very best spirit. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say: Oh, they are never going to be required; everything will be peaceable. If you have been reading the papers for the last few days, you will see that they may be wanted very soon.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Germany.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I see my hon. friend who has been to Japan knows that the truth of what I am saying. The United States is full of unrest over the Japanese question. My hon. friend settled that question once off-hand without any force of arms. The next time he is sent on a mission of that kind, he may have to take some force with him to back him up. Suppose the United States and Japan were to go to war in the coming year. What would happen? Canada must remain neutral or be drawn into the fight on one side or the other. What does 'neutral' mean? It means that the whole of our borders from Vancouver to Halifax must be policed. Who will do that? We have no one on whom we can rely except our militia to police that four thousand miles of boundary. If you allow arms, ammunition and men to cross that boundary to go into the fight for the United States against Japan, you have violated the law of nations; you have become a party to the fight and would be subject to attack. I think it ill becomes my hon. friend from Halifax, who looks very thrifty and prosperous himself, to find fault with this expenditure on the Militia Department.

My hon. friend criticised two departments, the Department of Public Works and the Department of Militia. I think I have justified both of them. The thinking people of Canada will agree with me that we, as a people, are the most peaceable on earth to-day, as the hon. member for Norfolk stated a few days ago. The small militia expenditure, which is only a little over a dollar per head for the whole of our population, surely cannot be called excessive. That being the case, I think this House will vote both the appropriations asked for under the Public Works Department and the Militia Department.

I have shown that the Customs Department is collecting the necessary revenues. The Excise Department is also bringing us a very buoyant revenue, and the Post Office Department is following suit. Therefore, in all these avenues of public revenue we find that our coffers are very well filled, and we have a comfortable surplus of $55,000,000 for the present year, with a reduction of public debt of $23,000,000 in a single year. Surely that should be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite. The financial statement given by the hon. Minister of Finance is one that must commend itself to every thoughtful man in the Dominion of Canada. It is the most important business statement made in the Dominion of Canada. It indicates to the country the results of our stock-taking; it tells the country what we have received and what we have spent; it indicates the sources from which we have derived our revenue, and the avenues in which our expenditure has gone, and shows the annual balance, credit or debit, as it may be, at the end of the fiscal year. In a statement of that kind, no one could excel the performance of the Minister of Finance. And he has given a statement of our finances which must be satisfactory and reassuring to every business man who reads it.

There is one feature in the outlook that I myself—and I speak only for myself and do not wish to be misunderstood—do not view with equanimity. I did not view with equanimity a similar condition when I was in opposition, and I wish to be consistent in this respect. The feature to which I refer is the relative amount of our annual exports and imports. Sir, I cannot view with equanimity a policy under which our imports are almost two dollars for every dollar of our exports. That, to my mind, is a state of things that cannot go on perpetually. And, though the Minister of Finance has given us some very good explanation, and though I am willing to give those explanations all the weight to which they are entitled, I must say they are not wholly convincing to my mind, nor do they show us to be in good shape relatively to countries similarly situated with ourselves. To have a total import of nearly $692,000,000, and an export of only $393,000,000, is not, to my mind, a very reassuring sign. It is the one cloud I see upon the horizon, and I think it ultimately must be corrected to a very large extent. I do not see how we can continue, without producing intense stringency, to settle a balance of trade of from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 in cold cash; for, when we have sent all the products of the farm, of the mine, of the forest, of the fishery and of the factory that we have to spare, we have to put our hands in our pockets and pay between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000 in cash to settle the account for the year. We receive in Canada almost half a million people per annum. The Finance Minister's argument is—and it carries weight—that these newcomers bring in in their pockets nearly as much money as will represent this balance of trade against us. That may or may not be the case; I have not the figures by me and am not prepared to dispute the figures given by the Minister of Finance, but on the other hand I am hardly ready to accept them. Countries similarly situated to Canada are in a better position in my judgment than we are in this respect. I wish particularly to call the attention of the House to three of our principal competitors in the markets of the world, two being in the British Empire and the third the Argentine Republic. I have not the very recent figures of the exports per head, but I think I can give them from memory for the year 1909, which will be near enough for practical purposes to show the House the point of my argument. In 1909, Canada exported a little over forty dollars per head of her population. Australia, a country that has practically our own conditions in this respect though it has only about half our size and receives about half as many immigrants as we do, produces enough to export about ninety dollars per head of its population. And New Zealand, which leads the whole world, exported about one hundred and five dollars for every man, woman and child in the islands. Is there any argument that can be advanced with regard to Canada as a new country that cannot be advanced with regard to Australia and New Zealand? If there is, I should very much like to hear it; I have never heard it yet. I visited Australia a few years ago and then got these figures and saw the production, and I know no reason why we in Canada, who are just as thrifty and just as able, who have the appliances that ought to produce as much per man, should have only forty dollars per head to export while Australia had nearly ninety dollars per head, or double ours, and New Zealand about two and a half times ours. And what applies to Australia and New Zealand practically applies to Argentine. Then, the United States has not for many years made up its balance sheet without a large excess of exports over imports. Therefore, there is nothing to my mind that fully explains the discrepancy in our trade figures; and I commend to the Finance Minister close attention to this matter in the coming year to see if he cannot arrive at some explanation or something that will relieve—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why not ask the Finance Minister to wipe it out and be done with the question?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That might not be possible, for the reason that the Finance Minister gave—that the large influx of immigrants bring in settlers' effects which are included among our imports. That accounts for a large part, but it is not convincing to my mind that we are producing as much as we should produce. I trust that whatever is decided upon as the policy of Canada for the future, we shall endeavour to bring close together the totals of our imports and our exports. Of course, the total makes admirable reading if you do not analyse it—a foreign trade of $1,085,000,000 during the past year.

I have occupied pretty close on an hour, to which I desired to confine my remarks, though I have a large number of items I have not yet been able to touch on. But I think I should be frank enough to deal with a question which has been thrust upon me not only by gentlemen opposite but sometimes by my own friends who have asked me to say a word with regard to the particular line of manufacturing in which I am supposed to be most especially interested. I may say frankly that I, for one, would never ask any individual in Canada to suffer any penalizing in the way of duties for my benefit and on my behalf. And while I speak, it may be said, for the moment, as a manufacturer, as a matter of fact I have never followed manufacturing as a business, as everybody knows who knows me. I was brought up a merchant, and for nearly the whole of my business career have been engaged in merchandising. That is why I think I know something about tariffs, as for many years I made my own entries at the customs, and I think I learned a good deal of how things were done in the Customs Department. But that is aside from the question for the moment. I have here a few figures, and I trust I shall not weary the House if I place these where they may be read by the people. I have been asked by many of my friends as well as by hon. gentlemen opposite if the agricultural implement business is not in a position to stand a good substantial cut or, some even go so far as to ask, to have its goods placed upon the free list. I have obtained from the Customs Department a statement showing the value of importations of agricultural implements into Canada during the years, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912 and 1913, respectively, and it is as follows:

—	1909.	1910.	1911.	1912.	1913.
	Value.	Value.	Value.	Value.	Value.
	$	$	$	$	$
Threshing machine separators	362,083	629,799	741,360	1,404,455	2,176,077
Portable engines with boilers in combination, and traction engines for farm purposes	794,854	1,817,209	3,636,392	6,063,960	7,369,219
Mowing machines	61,599	62,978	52,999	79,539	76,662
Reapers	17,009	8,350	60,677	75,455	68,599
Harvesters, self-binding	129,775	166,013	115,794	264,890	215,129
Ploughs	462,184	953,716	1,993,214	1,352,323	1,317,243
Seed-drills	123,542	218,599	355,821	349,499	282,478
Harrows	61,220	114,586	229,911	143,546	176,853
All other agricultural implements and parts	755,491	1,126,111	1,707,729	1,962,427	2,254,520
Totals	$2,767,763	$5,097,361	$8,891,097	$11,696,094	$13,936,781

This will show hon. gentlemen that in five years the importation of agricultural implements and machinery has increased from $3,000,000 to nearly $14,000,000, and that it now amounts to four or five times as much as it did five years ago. That, I think, will indicate to the House that the tariff is not unduly high, and that the importation of farm implements has been very large for a country that manufactures them so well as Canada does. I make the broad statement that no country in the world to-day has cheaper agricultural implements than the Dominion of Canada, excepting, perhaps the United States. The quality of the manufactured goods turned out by Canadian manufacturers is of the best, and the fact that they have competed in the markets of the world against all competitors shows that they are able to compete with the world in quality and in price. I am asked whether agricultural implements should not stand a reduction so that the farmer would get his implements cheaper. I say at once that I believe they would under certain conditions, but if this country should embark upon the conditions which I shall name, I think they would be doing a very unwise thing. To reduce largely the duty on agricultural implements, which is now from fifteen per cent to twenty per cent, would mean that you would hit probably fifty or one hundred subsidiary interests that produce the raw material of which the agricultural implements turned out by these factories are composed. You certainly could not reduce the duty on the implements without reducing the duties on the raw material which enters into their manufacture.

Mr. MACLEAN: Do the manufacturers not get a rebate of ninety-nine per cent?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Only on reapers and mowers. They receive a refund on export of ninety-nine per cent of the duty paid, one per cent being retained for collection and redistribution, but only in the case of mowers and reapers are any concessions made with regard to the raw material that enters into their manufacture. That concession was made because the duty was reduced some two and one-half per cent years ago by the Government of which my hon. friend was then a supporter. So I think that it would only be possible to reduce the duty on agricultural implements if the accessory parts entering into the manufacture of the goods were made subject to the same concession. These materials would include iron and steel goods, bolts, screws, bars, angles, paint, varnishes, and everything entering into the manufacture of that line of goods. Therefore if that reduction were effected, instead of penalizing just a few manufacturers of agricultural machinery, you would hit forty, fifty or one hundred industries which manufacture the various materials entering into the construction of these implements. In my judgment we are not hitting the farmers by the high duty. The implements in Canada to-day are sold as cheaply as in any country in the world, with the exception of the United States. It has been charged that these goods are being sold cheaper in England than they are in Canada, but I have figures to refute that assertion.

Mr. MACLEAN: Why does production cost less in the United States than in Canada?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Where Canada has a million dollars employed in the agricultural implement business, the United States probably has fifteen or twenty millions. The International Harvester Company has probably more capital engaged in the implement manufacturing business than all the implement manufacturers of the Dominion. Their production is enormously large; everyone knows that in order to have goods turned out efficiently and at the lowest possible cost, they must be manufactured in large quantities. Therefore all the small dealers and manufacturers have gone to the wall under recent competition. Hon. gentlemen may say that the manufacturer is making too much money, but the fact remains that all the small men have been driven out of business by the fierceness of home competition. About thirty years ago there were twenty-five different kinds of binders and reapers manufactured in the Province of Ontario alone; how many are there to-day? Three. What has become of the rest? They have all been driven out of business by the fierceness of home competition and by the large production of the few manufacturers who have been enabled, by the use of larger capital, to turn out a thousand machines where the small man turned out only ten. I am not speaking at the instigation of any single manufacturer, but I say that if every branch of industry in Canada were as efficiently managed and turned out goods as cheaply as the implement manufacturers, there would not be much cause for complaint. I say that, knowing it to be absolutely by the book. Although hon. gentlemen opposite may think that we are hard-hearted wretches to pursue those who do not pay up I can tell the country why our goods are not sold even cheaper to-day to Canadians. The terms of credit are entirely out of proportion to what they should be and are probably in excess of almost any country in the world. Six months is considered a very short time. Agricultural goods run from six months to two years credit and this year only about forty per cent of collections have been collected and yet hon. gentlemen think we are hard-hearted because we ask that occasionally these accounts should be paid up.

Mr. NESBITT: The hon. member says that the terms are from six months to two years, after six months the manufacturers charge interest do they not?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: That is altogether by arrangement. If the hon. gentleman is referring to a man who wants to buy at six months credit, the exact price is named at the time of the purchase. Many men want to buy on two to four payments fixed over a period of from six months to two years. Of course, after six months, interest is charged in those cases, but there is a cash price also quoted; if the man wants to buy for cash he gets a liberal discount.

Mr. NESBITT: How much?

Mr. COCKSHUTT: From five per cent to ten per cent on the average and on large orders such as are placed by some farmers in the West who buy in quantities there is a still more liberal discount.

Mr. NESBITT: It is impossible for me to get a better discount than six per cent per annum, no discount of five per cent or ten per cent but a discount of six per cent per annum. That is to say, I can buy a binder to-day dated in October. I can pay for it any time in October, but if I buy if for cash I get a discount of six per cent per annum.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: My hon. friend is speaking from personal experience and I cannot say whether he is correct, but I am speaking of the western trade.

Mr. NESBITT: I am speaking from experience and experience with the Massey Harris Company.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Of course I am not posted as to the terms on which the Massey Harris Company do business and, therefore, cannot say what they allow, but in round figures, I think, I can say five per cent to ten per cent discount can be got from any agricultural implement dealer if a man wishes to pay cash.

Mr. NESBITT: That is all I could get. I offered to pay cash and the only discount I could get was six per cent per annum, and that was not sufficient to induce me to pay cash as I had to pay that for money.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Another reason why implements are higher than some of our friends think they should be is on account of the high cost of transportation. If my friends only knew the cost of getting these goods here out to the West and distributing them into the various business centres they would see that a large part of the cost of machinery is made up of transportation charges. I have in my hand a few of the freight rates charged on a reaper to certain points from Toronto. They are as follows:

Carberry, Manitoba	$12 42
Regina	14 17
Saskatoon	16 29
Red Deer	20 53

The freight from Toronto to Liverpool on the same machines would be $7.16; only one-half as much as to Regina. To London the charge would be $9.59; to Havre, $8.92; to Hamburg, $9.75; to Odessa, $12.84; to Buenos Ayres, $12.83; and to Melbourne, $10. So it costs nearly twice as much to deliver a machine in Red Deer as to deliver the same machine in Melbourne, the most distant part of the earth from Canada. There is one reason why implements are not as cheap as some would like to see them. Speaking for myself and for my own interests, I would be prepared to say that if we got all our raw materials at an equally reduced duty, either no duty or a duty commensurate with the amount knocked off implements, we could afford, there is no question about that, to reduce the duty on agricultural implements; but it would be at the cost of displacing probably one hundred thousand men in the Dominion of Canada in all these implement works and their tributary industries that supply them with raw material. In my judgment, that is too big a price to pay for the small advantage that would be obtained, because, after all, the implements are sold, as I have said, as cheaply as in any country of the earth except the United States and a large part of the difference in that case is caused by the larger transportation charges over which we have no control.

As far as I can see, the present financial outlook of Canada is very reassuring. Whether we look at the position of the agriculturist, the workingman, the lumberman, the miner, all the avenues which supply the lifeblood of our trade and commerce appear to me to be thriving and on the up-grade and that in the face of the fact that the reciprocity Bill to which my hon. friend just referred was not accepted. I think that even he, looking at the prosperity of our country and the high prices which the hon. member for Maisonneuve, has given us, will agree that it is well that we did not go into that deal on the occasion when it was offered to us.

I would say in conclusion that a great deal is being said in the papers to-day about the present position of the United States and their tariff and the proposals of President Wilson now before the House. We are told that the United Stated are going in for a kind of free-trade proposition. But that only applies to a very few items, and I give my opinion that when the United States free trade policy under Mr. Wilson is adopted, it will be found that the duties average higher than they do in the Dominion of Canada to-day without any free trade policy. They have a long way to come before they get down to our level. Their average tariff on dutiable goods is about forty-five per cent, and yet they are able to manufacture many lines against the world, and do so. They manufacture in some lines better than any other nation on earth, and, as a matter of fact, they could do with free trade in some lines better than any nation on earth. Yet, with their forty-five per cent tariff they have a long way to come before they get as low as our tariff. Do not let us shout before they get out of the woods over there. Do not let us be too sure that the propositions that President Wilson has put before Congress and the Senate of the United States will be adopted. , He has troubles ahead of him yet. I think it will be found that the propositions that are made there are not going through as easily as is generally supposed. There will be a tremendous upheaval in the United States and trade conditions will be disorganized if they go into effect. Why do I say that ? Wilson represents only about forty per cent of the voters of the United States and the other sixty per cent voted for Taft and Roosevelt, both of whom stood for a higher tariff than that which Wilson has proposed. He has not at his back nearly half of the people of the United States for his proposition, and if he is a wise man he will go slow.

The cost of living is not going to be materially reduced even if he succeeds in putting his measure through, but he may succeed in injuring labouring conditions and reducing the workingman's wages. It is a serious proposition. It is easy to say that things ought to be better than they are. We are too ambitious to be content with conditions that are good and I say that the conditions in Canada to-day, whether in regard to the workman or the farmer, are probably as good as they are in any country in the world. Why do I say that? Because from all nations, from every sea and with every wind that blows, we find immigrants coming into Canada, so that to-day we are speaking about one hundred languages in this Dominion. We offer a home to the people of all the nations of the earth. Why is that? It is because it is recognized that the conditions in Canada are as good as the best, and there is streaming in from many of the countries of the world, the United States included, a very large influx of people.

That would not obtain unless the conditions in Canada were sound. That is evidence to me that we would be wise in following well beaten paths and not taking up with any fad ideas or any nostrums that may perhaps be put forward as a reason for upsetting conditions as they are. It is a great deal easier to upset conditions that are good than to establish conditions that are better. An examination of the trade statistics and of the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in presenting the budget will convince any man who reads them with a desire to understand things as they are and as they compare with the conditions in any other country in the world, that the conditions that obtain in Canada to-day are unequalled, or at least unexcelled, by those of any other country. That condition has been produced by hard labour, by an immense amount of thought on the part of those who preceded us, by an immense effort on the part of our forefathers who came and hewed out homes for themselves in the province of Ontario under conditions that were perhaps more rugged, more severe, than are exacted from the most distant dwellers in our western or northern country to-day. There are men still living in the province of Ontario who can remember the struggles that were had by those who preceded us in the older counties of that province—how wheat and the products of the farm were taken from fifty to seventy-five miles to the point of shipment. The prices that are obtained in the West to-day are very high as compared with the prices that our forefathers obtained in Ontario fifty or seventy-five years ago.

We have seen great changes, we have seen the farmer develop, we have seen him broaden out, until to-day we see him enjoying a great many of the luxuries of life, driving in his carriage, in some cases in his motor car, and giving evidence to the world that he is an independent man, a man who has money and time to enjoy himself and to live in a prosperous way. That is the condition that obtains to-day and if we pursue a wise and sane policy and do not allow ourselves to be carried away with nostrums that may be proposed by those who think that every experiment would be better than a tried doctrine that has stood the test for twenty-five or thirty years and that has proved itself true and good, we will continue to drain from other countries some of the very best blood and a large amount of capital and we will transfer to Canada some of the brawn and muscle to be found in all the enlightened, and it may be some of the unenlightened, nations of the world.

What is the condition to-day in Canada? We are drawing from the United States 150,000 of its citizens per annum most of whom settle in the West as farmers, some coming to Ontario and Quebec to engage in manufacturing industries and bringing their plants and capital with them. We have invested in manufacturing in Canada to-day $300,000,000 of American capital. Only last year the American Steel Company proposed to spend $20,000,000 upon the erection of a steel plant on the shores of the Detroit river. I do not know whether this enterprise will be proceeded with right away but I think it will. Look at the $20,000,000 of American capital invested in and around the city of Hamilton and you will realize from that how much American enterprise has been transplanted to that city. Similarly, we might go through the Dominion of Canada and we find that the conditions that obtain are tempting men from all the countries of the world, that we are bringing them in here and affording them conditions which enable them to become prosperous and contented citizens. Whether you look to the farm, the factory or the mine you will find in Canada enterprise, a reward for labour, a prosperity, a civilization and a christianity that are equal to those of any country in the world.

Why should we disturb these conditions? Why should we be discontented with conditions that are good and a past that has justified itself? Surely these conditions should not be upset and I trust that we will not have any movement to upset conditions that are sound and true and good and that have given the very best results that the Dominion of Canada has ever experienced.

On motion of Mr. Carvell the debate was adjourned.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS.

On motion of Hon. T. W. White (Minister of Finance), Bill No. 212, respecting certain savings banks in the province of Quebec, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. WHITE: The object of this Bill is to extend for a period of ten years the charters of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank and the Caisse d'Economie de Notre-Dame de Quebec. The capital stock of the City and District Savings Bank is $2,000,000, of which $1,000,000 is paid up; the capital stock of the Caisse d'Economie de Notre-Dame de Quebec is $1,000,000 of which $250,000 is paid up; the total liabilities of the City and District Savings Bank are $30,000,000 and of the Caisse d'Economie $10,000,000; the total assets of the City and District Savings Bank are $32,000,000 and the total assets of the Caisse d'Economie $12,000,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why do these banks not come under the Bank Act?

Mr. WHITE: They have not the same powers as the chartered banks but their charters expire on the same day. They have no right of note issue nor do they do a discount business. They invest in bonds, debentures, and loan upon collateral security.

Mr. NESBITT: Is this Bill based on the Bank Act?

Mr. WHITE: Yes, and that is why I delayed presenting it until it was seen what action this House would take on the Bank Act. The provisions for auditing are very similar.

Mr. MACLEAN: I suppose this Bill has been very carefully considered?

Mr. WHITE: It has. Section 29 is a new clause but it is precisely the same as the clause in the Bank Act. The committee will observe there is a restriction upon the acquisition of real estate to the amount required for the actual use and occupation of the bank.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose they will observe that the same as the bankers observe the Bank Act?

Mr. WHITE: So far as the clause is concerned the restriction is absolute and I do not think it can be made stronger. By section 34 they are allowed to invest in school bonds or debentures in the Dominion of Canada. Formerly it was confined to the province of Quebec and they requested wide powers and I thought they well might be given them.

On section 48—appointment of auditors by shareholders:

Mr WHITE: I think it is advisable that I should make an explanation with regard to this section. Many members will recall that provision is made in the Bank Act for external audit, the auditors to be appointed by the shareholders, but from a list selected by ballot by the general managers of the chartered banks. These two savings banks do not come under the Bank Act, and are not in any way connected with the Canadian Bankers' Association. Therefore we have not put in any provision that the general managers of the banks shall select the auditors from whom the shareholders shall make the appointments. There is this distinction between two classes of banks: the chartered banks are commercial banks, banks of discount; these are savings banks and analagous to loan and trust companies in the province of Ontario. My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) is acquainted with their mode of operation and audit. The provisions for audit here are practically the same as those appearing in the Bank Act at the time that I presented it to the House, without the qualification of auditors subsequently provided for by the committee. A clause has been inserted here analagous to the clause in the Bank Act:

> After the appointment of an auditor or auditors under subsection 1 of this section, shareholders the aggregate of whose paid-up capital stock is equal to at least one-third of the paid-up capital stock of the bank, who in writing under their respective hands allege that they are dissatisfied with the appointment so made, may, in and by the same writing, make application to the minister to have the person or persons so appointed superseded, and the minister may, after such inquiry as he may deem necessary, select an auditor or auditors instead of the auditor or auditors appointed at the annual meeting and the auditors so appointed shall thereupon cease to be the auditors of the bank and the auditors so selected shall be the auditors of the bank until the next annual meeting.

Section agreed to.

On section 49—examination by auditor appointed by minister:

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose that is in harmony with section 48.

Mr. WHITE: That is the same section as appears in the Bank Act, and in substance is to this effect, that the minister may at any time require the auditor appointed by the shareholders, or any other auditor whom he may select, to make inquiry into the affairs or business of the bank. I explained the other day, when the Bank Act was under consideration that, if the Minister of Finance receives notice of any irregularities, at present he has no power to make an inquiry, and he is given such power under the provisions of the new Bank Act and under the provisions of this Act.

Section agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD.

On motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) Bill No. 213, respecting the payment of Bounties on Lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada, was read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair).

On section 2, sub-section 2—bounties on lead refined in Canada; limitation of amount:

Mr. NESBITT: Does this include all that has already been paid?

Mr. WHITE: If the hon. member will look at the preamble he will see that there is unexpended approximately $600,000. Then under this sub-section 2 of section 2, he will see that

> The total amount of bounty payable under the provisions of chapter 31 of the statutes of 1903, chapter 43 of the statutes of 1908 (as amended by chapter 37 of the statutes of 1910), and of this Act, shall not exceed two million four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

That covers all the legislation affecting this matter. My hon. friend was absent when I explained that $2,500,000 was set aside originally, of which about $50,000 was set aside out of that for investigations connected with the zinc industry. Out of the $2,450,000 remaining $1,800,000 was expended on bounties, leaving, as stated, approximately $600,000, which will now be available to pay bounties if required within the period of five years provided by this Bill. The amount to be paid in any one year is not to exceed $250,000. Last year the amount paid was $60,000. At the present prices of lead, no bounty is payable at all.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 22, 1913

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Mr. BURNHAM moved that the third report of the Select Special Committee appointed to inquire into an Old Age Pension System for Canada be adopted.

Mr. BORDEN: What is the effect of this report?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds)

Mr. BURNHAM: The committee present the result of their investigations, the evidence, and the communications sent out by the secretary, and the replies received, and they recommend that these be filed in the usual way and printed.

Mr. JAMESON: As the committee have taken the evidence of a large number of witnesses during this and the preceding sessions, I think it well that the tentative conclusions which have been drawn from the evidence should be placed in 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPEAKER: My attention has been drawn to this report, and I think its adoption would be irregular at this time. The report would involve considerable printing, which can only be done after the report has been referred to the Printing Committee. It would be a violation of the rules to concur in the report in this way. Then, I would say to the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson), that, as this is an interim report of the committee, not a final report, it would scarcely be in order to discuss the whole question which has been referred to the committee. I therefore think that the hon. member would be premature in discussing it now.

Mr. JAMESON: I do not wish to question your ruling, but I had discussed this point with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who is a good parliamentarian, and he entertains the view that the question can be discussed now. If, however, you rule otherwise I shall bow to your ruling, although I think that the question is one that should be discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rule is well known, that it is not in order to discuss work that has been referred to a committee until there is a report from that committee.

Mr. JAMESON: I regret that you think that the discussion should be postponed, but I bow to your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is my ruling. This report had better stand or be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JAMESON: I respectfully request that the motion be allowed to stand for the time being.

Motion stands.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 224, respecting the Western Trust Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill No. 225, respecting the Great West Permanent Loan Company.—Mr. Meighen.

Bill No. 226, respecting the Alberta-Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Meighen.

Bill No. 227, respecting the Western Canada Accident and Guarantee Insurance Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PASPEBIAC WHARF.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Department of Public Works been asked to take over the wharf owned by Robins, Jones and Whitman, at Paspebiac, Quebec?
2. If so, has any decision been reached, and on what conditions is the said wharf to be acquired?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.
2. No.

NOUVELLE RIVER LAND DAMAGES.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Government received any request, and from whom, for a grant to continue the work of protecting the farms, roads and bridges from the damage caused by the Nouvelle River, Bonaventure county?
2. If so, has the Government reached any decision in the matter and what is it?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes; from the municipality of St. Jean l'Evangéliste.
2. Matter under consideration.

DISMISSAL.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has Simon Chapados, wharfinger of the Government wharf at Anse aux Gascons, Bonaventure county, been dismissed and on what grounds?
2. If charges were made against him, what was their nature?
3. Was Chapados informed of them and were they investigated?
4. Who held the investigation, if any was held, and if none was held, why not?
5. If Chapados has been dismissed, who succeeded him, on whose recommendation was he appointed, and at what salary?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. No. Mr. Chapados resigned the position.

2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

5. Mr. S. A. Huard was, on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, appointed to the position. Remuneration twenty-five per cent of the wharfage collections.

TREATMENT OF RUSSIAN IMMIGRANTS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. KNOWLES: I would ask the Prime Minister if he has received from the Trades and Labour Council of Moosejaw a communication with regard to seventeen Russians who, as alleged by the Trades and Labour Council, were improperly imported under the Alien Labour Act, kept in an iron car, improperly housed, and, on their escape, fired on by their guards, and ran away from their employment and have not yet been found. The resolution of the council directs that copies of their report be sent to the Premier of Canada, to the Minister of Justice, to the Minister of the Interior, and to the Minister of Labour. Has the Prime Minister any knowledge of it, and, if not, would he be good enough to give it his attention?

Mr. BORDEN: I never heard of the matter until this moment. If the resolution came to my office, it has not been placed before me. I do not think it could have come, because such matters are invariably placed before me. If the hon. gentleman has a copy of the resolution, and would be good enough to send it to me, I will have the matter inquired into without delay.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am going away today, and I will leave this resolution with the Prime Minister, leaving in his hands the whole matter, which is a very serious one.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Hon. W. T. White, (Minister of Finance), for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, resumed from May 21.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for a very brief period to the important subject under discussion in this debate, probably the most important that can be brought before the House of Commons of Canada to-day. I am aware that the Minister of Finance does not propose any radical changes in the customs tariff. In fact, the changes which he does propose are of so little importance that practically no time has been taken up in discussing them, and the debate has proceeded entirely along the general lines of what the tariff of Canada should be and what it should not be, what we should do and what we should not do, in order to develop trade and industry in the country. Therefore, I shall devote the few moments I wish to take to discussions along the same lines that have been followed by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. We all congratulate the Minister of Finance as well as ourselves on the great prosperity that exists in Canada and that has existed for the last two years, and I sincerely hope that it will continue. It does sound, however, a little strange to hear members like the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Brantford

(Mr. Cockshutt) taking to themselves so much glory for the splendid financial condition of the country. The hon. member for St. Antoine division even went so far as to give the financial returns on certain transactions for ten years prior to 1911 and for two years since 1911, and then to strike an average and say: Behold what this Government hath done. And yet in the same breath he has to admit that this Government has not done anything. If there has been any great advance in our trade in this last two years, certainly my hon. friends cannot take very much credit for it because they have done nothing either for or against it. So I think we may leave that as it is, and thank the legislation which has existed, and thank the Almighty, and thank the business instincts and ability of the people of Canada, and thank the immigrants who are pouring into the country, and thank all those things which make a country great for the splendid financial conditions which exist to-day. The real question to be considered is, what shall we do in the future? Shall our trade relations with the rest of the world remain as they are, or shall they be changed? That is the great question that we have to consider, and that is the question to which I wish to devote my attention for a few moments.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance was, I think, very modest in presenting his budget. He simply gave a statement of the facts as they are. He did not have sufficient egotism to take unto himself any particular glory for the facts as they are, and I give him credit for that. He did not prophesy or promise that he was going to do anything in order to change the conditions very much; but I am sorry to say I cannot give him so much credit for that as I can for the other part of his budget. The Minister of Finance has told us that we have had during the last year a surplus of $55,000,000 over and above the expenditure on consolidated revenue account; and, when he takes into consideration all expenditures, capital as well as revenue, he has reduced the national debt by $23,000,000. That is good so far as it goes. I am not one of those who find fault with the reduction of the national debt when it is done under proper conditions. I believe that a nation should carry on its business in the same way as an individual. If an individual can reduce his debts, he is doing the proper thing, and it is the same with a nation. The only question that arises in the case of a nation is: is it good policy in every respect so to adjust your tariff relations that you will have sufficient money to pay your debts? I think that political economists the world over will admit that in every case it is good policy to reduce your national debt if you can do it without injuring your people; but if, on the other hand, you are injuring your people, making life not as pleasant as it would be otherwise, then I think political economists will admit that it is not good policy to so adjust your tariff that your national debt will be reduced. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance frankly admits that he takes advantage of the condition of affairs which was handed over to him by his predecessor, and which for the last financial year resulted in the splendid surplus of $55,000,000. For the year before, the financial conditions handed over to him by his predecessor produced a surplus of $32,000,000 or $33,000,000, and for the year before that, a surplus of something over $20,000,000. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) last evening went down the list as far as 1900, and gave the results of the financial operations during each year, showing that for the ten years prior to 1911 we produced an average surplus of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000; in one or two years it dropped to the vanishing point, while sometimes it was as much as $15,000,000. But, taking the average, the surplus under the late Government was $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. At the same time we were borrowing money on capital for the construction of the Transcontinental railway and other great works, so that during those ten years the national debt of Canada was increased, though not to a very great extent. Now, if the proper policy of Canada is to go on paying off the national debt, there may be some argument for these surpluses, but I do not think that is the argument put forward by my hon. friends opposite. If I can judge of the intention of the Government from the arguments of their exponents, I do not see any evidence of an intention to pay off the national debt. The sole object of the Government and of their followers seems to be to eat up these surpluses—to get as much money as they possibly can, and to spend it. I think it was my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who stated that during the time the Liberals were in power the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia were starved, and that this Government was going to see that the rights of these three provinces were restored to them. The result was that the Minister of Public Works had in the estimates for this year over $26,000,000 or $27,000,000 for public works, and, according to my hon. friend, he was going to do justice to the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. It is the first time that I have heard that these provinces were ever starved. If my hon. friend will take the different estimates for the last ten years—I have not had time to compare them, and I do not know that any good would be accomplished by comparing them—he will find that these provinces got as much as any of the other provinces, in proportion to their population. The principal ground of complaint on the part of my hon. friend from Brantford, was that the late Liberal Government gave so much to the province of Nova Scotia. While he was speaking I went over the supplementary estimates laid on the table of the House two days ago, and I find there are 125 items for harbour and river improvements in the province of Nova Scotia, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, in addition to, and above and beyond a similar amount in the main estimates.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): There is nothing too good for the Maritime provinces.

Mr. CARVELL: Of course not, but I want to point out that when my hon. friend from Brantford talks about the province of Nova Scotia, he talks without the book.

An hon. MEMBER: He talks through his hat.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not wish to use a slang expression. Either the hon. member has not taken the trouble to look into the estimates, or he is not treating the House fairly. The province of Nova Scotia, never got so much as it is getting this year. Some of my hon. friends from Nova Scotia will see no harm in that. I have no hesitation in admitting what is true, it is patent on the face of it. But if my hon. friend from Brantford makes the argument that we spent money for political purposes, and not for real business purposes, surely we can throw back the argument to him with double energy, and say if we were wrong, you are wrong to double the extent. I am not arguing that there is a public work being advanced in the province of Nova Scotia that is not a necessary public work. I do not think there is a public work in Ontario that is not a necessary work. Unfortunately my hon. friends opposite have talked about everything else during this session except the estimates and business. We have never had a chance to get down to the public works supply, and we do not know what they are asking for. All we know is that they are asking for certain amounts for certain places, but the reasons so far remain blank. My hon. friends seem to be very anxious to draw this session to a close, and it seems to me that their intention, or hope, is to do so without giving us a chance to discuss those estimates to any extent. I am afraid we will not have a chance to discuss them to find out whether the proposed expenditures are fair or unfair. But we will have to do the best we can, and if my hon. friends do not apply the closure to us, I, for one, hope to find out something about the expenditures in the different provinces, and I know my friends around me have the same desire.

But it was not this that I wished to discuss, and therefore, I will make no further reference to it. I do submit, however, that there has been an enormous increase in the expenditures in two years. My hon. friends opposite may be able to justify it, and I hope they will be able to justify it. If they can do so, no fault will be found on this side of the house. But even with the enormous expenditures which they propose during the present year, according to the hypothesis of the Minister of Finance, we will have an enormous surplus of revenue over expenditure. The condition which has existed during the past two years seems to have become almost chronic. It seems that even with the enormous expenditures which my hon. friends opposite are advocating, there is going to be a great surplus. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated time and again yesterday that that surplus would be $80,000,000 or $85,000,000. If that be a fact, and I have no doubt it is, and if my hon. friends opposite, with all their extravagance, cannot find opportunities to expend this enormous surplus, is it just and right that that revenue should be taken from the people's pockets? That I think is the great question we have to consider in this debate. I had always supposed that the true theory of government was that the people should be asked to contribute sufficient money to honestly and efficiently carry on the affairs of the country, to provide for the King's Government, and in Canada to provide for whatever necessary public works should be constructed. I admit that the science or theory of government in Canada is very different from that in Great Britain. In Canada, a new country, it is necessary to develop the country by the construction of public works. It is necessary to assist railway companies, and other transportation companies, to develop our harbours, and to do everything possible to increase the output of the natural resources of the country and of the manufacturing resources as well. That would not be true in Great Britain, because there they have an old established country, transportation facilities are provided by private capital, and the Government are not required to assist. They expend the money which they have over and above what is required for the King's Government on the army and navy, and I am afraid that if my hon. friends opposite are allowed to continue the mad course which they are pursuing to-day we will have the same condition of affairs in Canada. I for one sincerely hope that such a condition of affairs will not develop. I am not going into an analysis of the proposed expenditures of the different departments, but when I find this Government asking for between ten and twelve million dollars for the militia, I say it is a useless and unwarranted waste of public money. When any man tells me it is necessary to spend ten or eleven million dollars on the militia of this country, my answer to him is that it is downright robbery of the people. If the money went to the people I would not care so much about it; but I do not suppose that out of the eleven million dollars, two million dollars will actually go to the men; the rest goes to the dudes and warlords who are running the show. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) justifies this militia expenditure because there might possibly be a war between Japan and the United States, and, if so, we must have our whole 100,000 men along the border line to see that nothing got out of Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And they won't have a navy in Vancouver.

Mr. CARVELL: No. The Minister of Finance wants to build a tariff wall around the country and allow nothing to come in, and the member for Brantford wants to build a militia wall around the border and allow nothing to go out. Well, I don't think that idea is approved of by the ordinary Canadian business man. The Government admits, as they must admit, that under present conditions they are taking from the people of Canada enough to carry on the King's Government, enough to provide for all our public works, enough to provide for subsidies to railways and transportation companies, and fifty or sixty million dollars in addition. The proposition of the member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is, not that we should take from the people sufficient to pay the expenses of Government, but that we should tax them all they can stand. His logic is: are the people taxed more than they can stand? and, in the second place, does the tariff take too much out of our people? Let us see about that. I give the hon. member for St. Antoine credit for being honest in his opinion and for never attempting to deceive the House as to his real views. The same remark will apply to the hon. member for Brantford—and I wish all hon. gentlemen opposite were as honest as they in expressing their thoughts. But the logic of the argument of the hon. member for St. Antoine is: we will so adjust our tariff that we will make the people pay every dollar they can pay and live, and to sustain that theory the hon. member for Brantford comes forward and says: you don't want to let the people have too many privileges, because the more they have the more discontented they become, and so we will take away from them by means of taxation everything except enough to exist on. The hon. gentleman told us that years ago people had but one suit of homespun a year; that they did not go to the theatre; that they did not drive carriages and motor cars, and that they were much happier than they are to-day. His argument is: do not allow the people to have these comforts of life and they will be more contented. That is good Tory doctrine and it is in line with about everything this Government is doing. Then, these hon. gentlemen opposite say: if this tariff is bad it is your tariff and you are responsible for it. But let it be remembered that what was good in 1900 may not be good in 1913. I think it was the hon. member for Brantford who said that the Liberals took the Tory tariff and did not make many changes in it, and the member for St. Antoine sought to prove that the tariff was practically the same as it was in 1896, because he showed that the total percentage of taxation to-day was very little less than then, his claim being that the actual reduction of taxation is on an average three or four per cent on the taxable goods. But these gentlemen opposite are not quite consistent in their statements. Sometimes they will say this is the old national policy of 1878, and if you tell them it is not, they will say it is the Liberal tariff, and if it is bad you must take the blame for it, and then if they are further cornered they will say it is the Tory tariff which the Liberals adopted. In the first place it is not the old tariff of 1878, and possibly when the Liberals came into power in 1896 they did not go as far as they should to reduce the burden upon the people. I am not apologizing for them or attempting to palliate their conduct in any way, but I do say that the Liberal government did something for which they have received credit all around, they introduced the British preference which the first year it was in operation reduced taxation on British goods imported into Canada by twenty-five per cent, and which a few years afterwards reduced that taxation by thirty-three and one-third per cent. That has remained in force to the present day except that in a few cases they took away from the people some of the rights they had obtained by the British preference of earlier years, but on the whole the people of Canada are relieved from one-third of the taxation on British imported goods. The British preference very materially developed the trade between Great Britain and Canada, which went forward with leaps and bounds and which still continues to make marked progress. True, our trade with Great Britain has not grown as rapidly as our trade with the United States, even in the face of a higher tariff, and for the present I will not stop to discuss that, but not only did the preference increase our trade with Great Britain, but it reduced the cost of living to the people of Canada. The preference reduced the cost of living to our people in two ways: it reduced the cost of every article consumed by the people of Canada which came from Great Britain, and in the second place it reduced the cost of similar articles imported from the United States, or produced in Canada. For instance, if you reduce the cost of a yard of cotton manufactured in Great Britain, the American manufacturer when he sends it into this country has to reduce his cost to meet the decreased price of the British article, and so has the Canadian manufacturer of cotton to reduce his price to meet the competition. If a Canadian manufacturer produces cotton, he must sell it at a price not greater than the cost in Great Britain plus the duty under the preferential tariff. Therefore, any man can figure out what the saving to the people of Canada has been during the last thirteen or fourteen years by reason of the British preference. You can take the importations from Great Britain, calculate their value to a dollar, and say that you have saved so many million dollars by reason of the British preference. I do not believe, however, that half as many goods would have been imported from Great Britain if it had not been for the preference. But you cannot figure out how much the people of Canada have saved on the rest of the importations, because millions of dollars worth have been imported from the rest of the world, which have been sold to the people of Canada more cheaply by reason of the British preference. Then you have the third class. Millions and millions of dollars worth of manufactured products have been sold to the people more cheaply by reason of the preference. When my hon. friends opposite say that the Liberal party did nothing to ameliorate the conditions of the people through the tariff, they are not treating us fairly; they are not treating themselves fairly, and they are not stating the facts as they are.

Mr. HENDERSON: The hon. gentleman seems to be very well informed on this question. Can he give us a statement of how much the duties were increased on goods coming from Great Britain before the British preference was applied?

Mr. CARVELL: No, I cannot. It seems to me that a year or two ago my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) had a little altercation with the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) on that question. I think it had reference to rifles.

Mr. HENDERSON: A great many more things.

Mr. CARVELL: There was one instance in the case of rifles, where the general tariff was increased; and the net result was that, after the British preference was applied, it did not make very much difference in the duty paid. The number of rifles we import into this country is a mere bagatelle. A rifle is not something which the ordinary labouring man has to eat or wear; it is something which is used by the sportsman and the man who is able to spend money. If you must raise money by taxation, there is nothing you could tax better than rifles. So far as I am able to remember, that is the only article that is treated in that way.

Mr. HENDERSON: The hon. gentleman knows about the increases on cotton goods and a host of other articles. I am not, however, going to interrupt him in his speech.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. member for Halton is always courteous and well informed, and I hope he will give us the benefit of his great store of information on these important questions before this debate is concluded.

Hon. friends opposite say: When you gave the British preference, you stopped. We did stop for a time; we stopped because it seemed that we required all the money we were taking from the people in order to carry on the affairs of the country. It must be remembered that we were building great public works in those days; we were developing our transportation systems as they had never been developed before; we were building the great National Transcontinental railway which cost a lot of money. My hon. friends say that it cost too much. I do not think so; and I should like to discuss that question with the Minister of Railways, if we ever have an opportunity of considering his estimates. After spending $50,000 in investigation, he has had to admit that it did not cost too much. That is, however, another matter. In 1910 and 1911, we found that we were taking from the people more than was required to carry on the government and the ordinary business affairs of the country. The late Government decided to ameliorate the conditions of the people to some extent by extending our trade and making it freer than it had been before. We went out of power upon that principle. So far as I am concerned, I have not a particle of regret on account of it. I do not mean to say that I would not rather be in power than in opposition, but I would rather be in opposition on a question of principle in reducing the cost of living to the people of this country, than remain on the other side of the House and tax them more than they are entitled to pay and more than is necessary in order to carry on the affairs of the country. My hon. friends know that we were right and they are afraid of the fact to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friends laugh. What was the meaning of that most remarkably patronizing speech made last evening by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames)? He practically said to the hon. Minister of Finance: We do not like you very much; we are afraid you are tinged with low protection ideas. We are afraid you are going to give in to men like the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), who has been very quiet in debates of this character during the last year or two. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) bristled up last night a little when the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) was speaking about agricultural machinery.

Mr. BRADBURY: I have not changed a bit.

Mr. CARVELL: They were afraid that my hon. friend would be affected by the argument of these people. Therefore they say to him: It is all right; we shall not find any fault with you, but you must not lower the tariff; you must leave it where it is. The country was told by the hon. member for St. Antoine: The hon. Minister of Finance will not lower the tariff; we shall see that he does not. My hon. friend has a very close friend, the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, who made a speech in Montreal the other day, sending out a note of warning to the manufacturers, and saying: Remember, we manufacturers must stand together on this matter; I understand there is to be a revision of the tariff; we must see that our rights are protected. That is what my hon. friends are afraid of. We wanted to reduce the cost of living.

Mr. THOBURN: You say that you want to reduce the cost of living. What was the principal plank in the reciprocity platform if it was not that the farmers were to get a better price than they were getting? If so, how to what extent were you going to reduce the cost of living?

Mr. CARVELL: That is a very pertinent question, and I am glad my hon. friend has asked it. I shall try to show him how we were going to do it. So far as I am concerned, I never argued, either in this House or in the country, any other doctrine than that under the reciprocity agreement the farmer would get a better price for his products. I argue that now. I had not the slightest doubt then that I was right, and I believe I am right now. Seeing that the United States Government propose to take the duty off some of these articles, I prophesy that on every one of them the farmer will get a better price than he got before. The United States Government believe that, by remitting the duties on these foodstuffs, they will reduce the cost to the people. If they did not believe that, they would not take off the duty. No one is in a position to tell exactly what will happen. My opinion is that in some cases it will not reduce the cost to the American consumer, and in that case the Canadian producer will get all the benefit. In other cases it will reduce the cost to the American consumer to some extent, and to that extent the Canadian producer will not receive the benefit. It is purely a question of supply and demand. If the Canadian producer can produce enough to overstock the American market, he will put down the price; if he cannot do so, he will not. I believe the Canadian producer, after supplying the home demand, will not have enough to affect materially the price in the United States. If so, he will get the benefit of the tariff. I want my views to be thoroughly understood on this question. While the reciprocity agreement would, to a great extent, have increased the price to the Canadian farmer, that was a very small portion of the benefits which the Canadian farmer would have received by reason of it. He would have had ten times the market for his produce that he has to-day. He would have been able to plant his crop every year with a knowledge that he would have a market for it. It is the same with the manufacturer. If a manufacturer knows he has a market where he can sell 10,000 machines instead of 1,000, according to the evidence of my hon. friend from Brantford last evening, he can produce that machine more cheaply; he will extend his industry, buy more plant, employ more men, do more business and make more money.

Mr. DEVLIN: And he will not be subject to the trusts.

Mr. CARVELL: I can give my hon. friends an illustration from my own constituency. One of the principal industries there is the cultivation of potatoes; in fact, that is the case throughout western and northern New Brunswick, in very many portions of Nova Scotia, in the Gaspé peninsula, and in the eastern portions of the province of Quebec. We produce a better quality of potatoes than is produced elsewhere in Canada or in the United States, except in the northern part of Maine. I believe it is due, to some extent, to the condition of the soil.

Mr. WRIGHT: No.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend says 'no.' I am not here to advertise the industry of my constituents. If my hon. friend will look at the quotations in the Toronto Globe or the Daily Mail and Empire, he will find that New Brunswick potatoes are quoted at ten cents per bag more wholesale than the native potatoes. That is twenty cents a barrel, and therefore they must be of superior quality.

Mr. WRIGHT: As good potatoes can be grown in my section of the country as in New Brunswick.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not want to enter into a controversy with my hon. friend from Muskoka upon the question of potatoes. I simply want to discuss this question from a business standpoint. A New Brunswick farmer does not raise on an average more than five acres of potatoes, the reason simply being that he is compelled to rely upon the Montreal and Toronto markets, which will not absorb more than that amount of potatoes per farm. Last year we could have sold twice as much as we produced, because there was a famine in potatoes on the American continent. The previous year we could have sold more because there was a famine west of lake Superior. In the year 1911, hundreds of carloads of New Brunswick potatoes were transported to Calgary and even into British Columbia. That is not an ordinary condition of affairs. It is not reasonable that the people of that section of the country should be compelled to pay the cost of those potatoes plus the transportation charges. They have the right to get the potatoes at a much cheaper price.

We have a market within four or five hundred miles of the point of production, of probably fifteen or twenty million people. With the American duty on potatoes reduced, I prophesy that the average farmer in the province of New Brunswick during this year will probably have ten acres of potatoes, and next year twenty acres. How do I know that? I know, simply because of what is going on within ten miles of my own home. Right across the American boundary line from where I live, with the same soil, the same transportation conditions and the same market, farmers are raising on an average twenty acres of potatoes, in some cases thirty or forty acres, and are getting rich at it. This year our farmers have been compelled to sell their potatoes for seventy or eighty cents a barrel, that would be thirty-five to forty cents a bag. Why? Because there was a big crop of potatoes in the province of Ontario. The only men in Ontario who buy New Brunswick potatoes to-day are the men who want a superior article. The ordinary man buys an ordinary article. Thousands of bushels of potatoes in the county of Carleton in the province of New Brunswick have been thrown into the dump because the farmers could not get a market for them. At present there is a duty of seventy cents a barrel on potatoes imported into the United States, and there is a big crop in the United States. The price there has been around $1.15 to $1.20 a barrel, which has not been equal to the Canadian price plus the duty.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does the hon. gentleman know that hundreds of carloads of potatoes have been sold at 25 cents a bushel in counties in the United States nearer New York than the hon. gentleman's county is? His confrere, the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) yesterday proved, to his own satisfaction at least, that potatoes were sold eighty or a hundred per cent more cheaply in New York than in eastern Canadian cities.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend from Maisonneuve was speaking about potatoes produced in the month of June and July. We do not produce potatoes in Canada in those months; we import them from the States. That is the reason why they cost more in Montreal than in New York. You do not raise a bushel of potatoes in Canada in June and July.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes, you do.

Mr. CARVELL: No, you do not. My hon. friend (Mr. Wright) asked me if I did not know that hundreds of carloads of potatoes were sold at 25 cents a bushel in counties in the United States nearer to New York than the Maritime provinces are. I do not.

Mr. WRIGHT: I do.

Mr. CARVELL: What is more, I do not believe it, for this reason. If you go to northern Maine, which is the great potato producing country of the eastern portions of the United States, you will find that potatoes are worth to-day $1.25 a barrel, or fifty cents a bushel. They are worth that to the farmers along the line of railway. It is only 500 miles from there to New York. If the farmer in eastern Maine can get fifty cents a bushel for his potatoes, the man who has potatoes of equal quality elsewhere in the United States will not be compelled to sell them at 25 cents a bushel if he is equally near to New York. It is no use trying to get round the facts. If the New York consumer can buy the same quality of potatoes for 25 cents a bushel at points 500 miles west of New York, he will not go to northern Maine and pay fifty cents a bushel. There is no doubt about it, and my friend could argue until he was black in the face and he could not convince me or any other man who knows the transaction to the contrary of what I have said.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am not trying to convince my hon. friend, I am only stating the facts.

Mr. CARVELL: Unless my hon. friend has personal knowledge, I cannot accept the statement he makes as a fact without proof, because I know it cannot be correct. I have given an illustration of what reciprocity would have done in the one item of potatoes. I would not have gone into this had I not been asked to do so by my hon. friend from Muskoka. I do believe that the result of the reciprocity agreement would have been not only to increase the price to the farmer in many cases, but to increase his market, which would have been worth to him ten times the increased price of the article itself.

Mr. THOBURN: The hon. member stated that owing to the good crop of potatoes in the United States last year they were not able to export their potatoes from New Brunswick. To my mind the same thing would apply under reciprocity. It will not be disputed that the United States export almost every article in the shape of farm produce that Canada does, and for that reason will you tell me why there is a market in the United States for Canadian farm products?

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend is trying to draw me from the point. I did not say that you could not send potatoes to the United States, because they had a big crop. I said that the price was so low that you could not do it commercially. I stated that the duty to-day is about sixty-seven cents a barrel, and if you send potatoes to the United States from Canada to-day, you have to pay that duty. That means ruination to the Canadian farmer. But it would be different if that duty were removed, then you would have a splendid price. If the farmers of the Maritime provinces can get $1.25 for their potatoes they will get wealthy; they will ride in automobiles in a few years. That is at the rate of fifty cents a bushel. But I am told: If what you say about the price to the farmer is true, what about the labouring man, what about the consumer? I am willing to admit, and I always did admit in my argument on the reciprocity question, that the consumer would pay more for the particular articles included in that agreement. It would not amount to very much, it would amount in the case of the ordinary household, which I suppose does not use more than three or four barrels of potatoes in a year, to a difference of $2 or $3 a year. It would be the same with a few other items. There is another side to this question that my friends do not take into consideration and that is the advantage that would accrue to the consumer in Canada had the reciprocity agreement become law. I wish to give some of the benefits that would have accrued. I have here the trade and navigations returns for the last year down to and including February, eleven months. I have not been able to procure the full returns, for the year and therefore, any figures that I have along this line will be for eleven months only. It is known by my hon. friends if they have taken the trouble to read the reciprocity agreement—but I am afraid that some of them did not read it very carefully—practically all farm products were to be free. We know that many vegetables and fruits would have come into this country free of duty under the reciprocity agreement. I have here a list of the articles of consumption by the ordinary people of Canada that came into Canada for the first eleven months of the last fiscal year. These articles would have come in free of duty had that arrangement gone through. I will read the list, giving the articles, the value of the imports and the duty paid. The list is as follows:

Vegetables and Fruits.

Articles.	Value.	Duty.
Melons	$113,412	$ 54,543
Potatoes	428,896	92,780
Sweet potatoes	56,248	5,390
Tomatoes	273,617	82,085
Vegetables, N.O.P.	909,079	363,743
Dried apples	16,185	6,474
Green "	751,399	112,325
Blackberries, strawberries, &c.	565,651	138,146
Cherries	102,831	25,707
Cranberries	129,883	32,470
Grapes	279,685	100,833
Peaches	330,585	145,770
Quinces, &c.	372,746	66,937
Plums	266,974	75,650
	$4,811,929	$1,302,841
Eggs, 11,529,686 doz.	2,456,832	345,890
Butter, from all other countries under general tariff	350,145	50,206
Butter, from New Zealand and Great Britain	1,479,189	171,825
	$9,098,095	$1,870,762

In vegetables and fruit alone we imported last year in the eleven months $4,811,929 in value and on this we paid $1,302,341 in duty. In other words, the consumer, the labouring man, the man in the city, village and town, all over the country, would have saved $1,302,000 in duty if that agreement had become law.

Mr. THOBURN: Did the Canadian farmer benefit by that?

Mr. CARVELL: He did not lose to the extent of a dollar, as I shall try to convince my hon. friend. At least what I say will convince any man who wants to be convinced that the farmer did not lose a dollar. Hon. gentlemen may say that the reciprocity agreement is ancient history. It is not ancient history so far as the people of this country are concerned. I am not saying that we will ever get the reciprocity treaty exactly as it was proposed to us, we never will while I live get anything from any country that will be worth as much to Canada as the reciprocity treaty would have been. But the principle for which we fought is not gone, the principle is there to-day as vital as it was two years ago, just as important to the consuming people of Canada as it was two years ago and the people want it and will have it regardless of whether my hon. friends opposite are willing to give it or not. If my hon. friends opposite will not give it to them they will put in power a party that will give it to them, because I tell the manufacturers, the trusts and combines of this country that they cannot bleed the labouring people of Canada any longer, they will demand cheaper living and they will obtain it. It is only part of the story. It is well known that under the construction of our laws and the proposed agreement anything which came in from the States free of duty would also have come in free of duty from Great Britain or from any of the colonies of Great Britain enjoying our preferential tariff. That was not in the agreement, but it is the proper construction and interpretation of that agreement read in connection with our existing laws. That was one of the great arguments used by my hon. friends opposite with the farmers of Canada that, if they adopted reciprocity, butter would come from Australia and New Zealand, or from any part of the British Empire as well as from other nations with which Great Britain had trade treaties. Of butter last year we imported $350,145 from the United States and other countries excepting Great Britain and her colonies, on which we paid $50,260 in duty. We imported from New Zealand and Great Britain $1,479,189 worth of butter, on which we paid $171,825 of duty. That is a total of something like $1,800,000 worth of butter from the whole world and all that with the exception perhaps of $300 or $400 worth came from the United States, New Zealand and Great Britain, and if the reciprocity agreement had gone ino effect every pound of that except a small quantity would have come free of duty and the people of this country would have avoided paying over $200,000 duty which they paid on butter alone in the first eleven months of last year.

Then we come to the question of eggs. It is most remarkable that the Canadian farmer will not produce the eggs which are required in Canada, but he does not. We cannot make him, we have no power over him. I have wondered at this fact many times. I admit that the Agricultural Department has been doing a great deal in trying to influence the farmers to engage more extensively in this business, but they do not become interested and do not produce the eggs. In the first eleven months of last year we imported $2,456,832 worth of eggs and nine-tenths of these eggs came from the United States of America. On these eggs we paid $345,890 in duty. Or, if you take fruit, vegetables, butter and eggs alone, just those four articles, we imported in eleven months $9,098,000 and paid $1,870,762 in duty, and for the twelve months we imported $10,000,000 worth and the people of this country paid $2,000,000 in duty which they need not have paid and would not have paid if reciprocity had gone into effect. I want my hon. friends to state if it would not have been better for the people of this country, if it would not have been of benefit to the man in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa and the manufacturing centres of Ontario, if he could have bought his eggs, butter and fruit and saved that $2,000,000 because, Sir, he is the man who paid it. Out in the farming districts they probably produce enough eggs and butter for themselves; it is the labouring man in the manufacturing centres of Canada who purchases these articles, and who paid the $2,000,000 duty on these ordinary articles of food last year. Would my friend say that would have been of no benefit to him?

Mr. THOBURN: Would my hon. friend give me the privilege of answering that question? That was not the issue in the reciprocity question. You never advocated the cause of the workingman, it was the agricultural classes of the community that you professed to benefit.

Mr. CARVELL: I advocated it, and I went into my own town and met the labouring men and told them and preached to them this doctrine, and I got a bigger majority in my town than ever before in my life. I have had no trouble with the labouring men of my constituency, I have treated them honestly. I have told them that, I tell them that to-day and they stood for it and will stand for it again. I tell my hon. friends opposite that the labouring men all over Canada will respond to the call when it is made.

Mr. THOBURN: Still, the farmers did not respond to the call.

Mr. CARVELL: I am dealing with facts, and my hon. friend can deal with the matter in any way he chooses. The people of Canada did not respond, the people of Canada defeated the Government that proposed reciprocity. I think that everybody in the world who knows anything of Canada knows that. We are not trying to get away from that, but I want my hon. friend now to answer my question. He tried to and did not. Does he think that it would have been any benefit to the labouring man of Canada?

Mr. THOBURN: Reciprocity?

Mr. CARVELL: No, the remission of $2,000,000 of duty.

Mr. THOBURN: Possibly it would be of benefit to the consumer, but not to the agricultural classes. That is my contention.

Mr. CARVELL: Now we have a contribution of some value. We have possibly the greatest apostle of high protection, the man who has grown rich by making the poor little boy who runs in the street pay $35 on every $100 worth of clothing he buys in order to keep from freezing to death, admitting that it would have been some benefit to the labouring man of Canada if he had been remitted that $2,000,000 of duty. That is something we have gained in this debate.

Mr. WRIGHT: I think that is a very unjust statement of the hon. member for Carleton to make.

Mr. CARVELL: I shall stand by it anyway.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Carleton has the floor.

Mr. CARVELL: I have pointed out the other side of this picture. I have not drawn on my imagination, I have not asked anyone to admit my conclusions, but they are based on cold facts taken from the trade and navigation returns of Canada. I have given figures which my hon. friends cannot deny, and I will make the statement here that in my judgment it would have been worth more to the people of Canada than their possible loss by reason of the increased cost of the articles they would have had to buy from the farmers of this country. The farmer would have got more for his produce, the lumberman would have got more for his lumber, the fisherman would have got more for his labours, the consumer would have been in as good a position as before because he would have got his fruits, vegetables, eggs and butter cheaper than he gets them at the present time.

I now come to the broader question asked by my hon. friend: Do I think that the introduction of these articles into this country free of duty would have hurt the Canadian farmer. My answer was: not a dollar; and I stand by that answer, and I will try to prove it to the hon. member. I take, in the first case, melons. We do not produce melons in Canada to any extent.

Mr. BEATTIE: The best melons in the world are produced in Montreal and that neighbourhood.

Mr. CARVELL: But the amount of melons produced in Canada is only a bagatelle. There may be a few fancy gardeners raising them in hot-houses, but that is only insignificant. The fact is that we do not produce melons.

I come next to potatoes. I have discussed potatoes to a considerable extent. I tell my hon. friends opposite that practically all of the potatoes which we imported last year, amounting to $428,000, which came in during the months of April, May and June, 1912, were the new article, the early variety brought into this country before our potatoes were ready for the market. I know that there may be a few instances when potatoes are ready in the month of July. I have known potatoes in New Brunswick to be so advanced that we could dig a few and eat them in July, but we do not produce them in large quantities.

Mr. BLAIN: They do in Ontario.

Mr. CARVELL: They cannot, for Ontario purchases.

Mr. BLAIN: Oh, yes, they do; ask any of your associates.

Mr. CARVELL: They may possibly along in the latter part of July get a few ready for market, but they are very few. I know this business as well as the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. BLAIN: In my own county there are thousands of bags of potatoes produced in July and sent into Toronto, and that applies all over that section of the province of Ontario.

Mr. CARVELL: That is pretty late in July.

Mr. BLAIN: Not late, before the 12th of July.

Mr. CARVELL: In my province, where we produce potatoes on a large scale, we do not have them until the last of July, and that is true also in the province of Quebec. There may be a few places in Ontario where, under special circumstances, they can get a few ready in the latter part of July, but they are very few; it is not a commercial proposition. If my hon. friends will turn to page 280 of the trade and navigation returns for July, they will find there that in the month of July alone we imported from the United States $198,835 worth of potatoes. During the first four months of the fiscal year—April, May, June and July—we imported $287,413 worth, and for the whole year we imported only $428,000 worth, so that more than two-thirds of the potatoes imported into Canada during last year were imported in the first four months of the fiscal year. What does that prove? It proves that in the first four months of the year, when we do not produce those articles in Canada, they are brought in from the United States. It proves that they are brought in at a time when the Canadian farmer cannot produce them, and therefore when they could not hurt him. I got a return from the Customs Department for the months of October, November and December, and during these months only $5,000 worth of potatoes were imported, I think. I have not seen the returns for January, February and March, but they practically amount to nothing. Turn, however, to April, May and June, and you find the potatoes coming into Canada in large quantities, but as I have said, they do not hurt the Canadian farmer because the Canadian farmer has not the potatoes to sell at that time.

Let me take another item, tomatoes, which is the next item. In the eleven months of last year, we imported $273,000 worth of tomatoes, on which we paid $82,000 of duty, and in the first four months of that year, we imported from the United States alone, $226,896 worth. In other words, practically all the tomatoes that were imported last year came in during the first four months of the year. Will any hon. gentleman opposite tell me that we had tomatoes on sale in large quantities in the month of July? No one will say yes to that. We do not produce tomatoes in this country in July, and all the tomatoes that we imported last year came in during the months of May, June and July. Why? Because they have them in the United States at that time, and we do not have them in Canada. We brought them in when we did not have them, and we did not hurt the Canadian producer to the extent of one dollar, because the Canadian producer did not have the article to sell at that time. The result was that the Canadian consumer was compelled to pay duty to the extent of $82,000. That amount went into the coffers of the Government, but no producer was injured, and no consumer was benefited, and the people of Canada had to pay duty on those tomatoes. Then you can take strawberries, or early fruits.

Mr. MUNSON: When did you observe all this?

Mr. CARVELL: I have been looking it up for the last few months.

Mr. MUNSON: Did it never strike you to look it up during the fifteen years when the former Government was in power?

Mr. CARVELL: We did look it up, and we found that this condition existed. We tried to pass a law in 1911, and my hon. friends opposite succeeded in preventing us from doing so. If that is any consolation to my hon. friend he is welcome to it. I give him the facts, and if he can gainsay them I would like him to try.

Mr. MUNSON: I wondered why you did not do so before.

Mr. CARVELL: We tried to do so and failed, but we are going to keep on trying and we are going to succeed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: Do not make any mistake about it. I was going to refer to blackberries, strawberries, cherries, cranberries, peaches and quinces. If my hon. friends will go over the trade returns they will find the same thing in regard to these fruits; they come into Canada very largely during the first three or four months of the year up to July, when we do not have them for sale in large quantities. It is true that Canadian strawberries are on the market by the middle of July, but not before that time, and the fruits mentioned come in before the Canadian article is on the market. In other words, the people of Canada are compelled to pay duty on these articles at a time when the Canadian producer has not them for sale, and when he cannot be injured. By the time our fruits are ready for the market the season in the United States is past, and if reciprocity had gone into effect we would have been able to sell largely in the United States when their supply was gone. I do not believe there is a class of producer in Canada who would have benefited so much as the fruit producer in Ontario. I know they took the opposite view; they were convinced by their friends that they would be injured, but the trade and navigation returns convince me that there is not an industry that would have benefited so much from reciprocity as the fruit industry of Canada. I am satisfied that when these facts are placed before the people of Canada they will see the error of their ways. If the Canadian producer will not see it the Canadian consumer will; no man can read the statements made by my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) last evening without pondering over what the end of this condition of affairs is going to be. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) thought he saw something wrong in the statement of my hon. friend as to the cost of potatoes and other articles of food in Montreal as compared with New York, but he was giving the cost of living in the months of June and July, when all those articles are cheaper in the United States than in Canada. If we made the same comparison in the months of September and October we would find that they were cheaper in Canada than in the United States. Why? Because in the months of May, June and July we do not produce foodstuffs, and in the United States they do, while in the months of September and October we have an abundance of foodstuffs while many classes of foodstuffs are out of season in the United States. It is simply a question of supply and demand, and that is the question that the people of this country have to face and will face. My hon. friends opposite may jeer at reciprocity as much as they like, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance may say that it is dead. I want to tell him that the principles of reciprocity are not dead, the principle of cheaper production, the principle of cheaper cost of living, the principle of ameliorating the conditions of the masses; they are not dead, and they will stare him in the face this year, and next year, and as long as the present conditions exist.

I wish to point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance the logical deduction from the facts I have given to the House. The Americans are taking the duty off many foodstuffs which were included in the reciprocity agreement. So far as the West is concerned, I do not look upon the new American tariff as worth anything at all. They have reduced the duty on wheat from 25 cents to 10 cents a bushel, but that is not going to benefit the western wheat producer, because the spread between the prices in Minneapolis and Winnipeg never exceeds ten cents, and seldom reaches that point; so that a duty of 10 cents per bushel of wheat is just as prohibitory as a duty of 25 cents a bushel. If they reduce the duty on live animals to ten per cent that will be a benefit, but, of course, whether or not the Canadian producer does get the benefit, will depend on the supply and demand. This year, it would be an enormous benefit, because millions of dollars worth of live animals have been taken from Canada into the United States showing the demand, and if the demand still prevails under the reduced duty there will be a benefit to the Canadian producer and possibly to the American consumer as well. I believe the reduction in the United States tariff will help the people of Ontario with respect to their cattle and cheese and I know it will help the people of the Maritime provinces in the matter of potatoes, fish, and lumber which are made free. It will not help the Maritime provinces to a great extent on sheep and lambs, because the proposed reduction is not very great and as to cattle, we do not produce cattle to the extent we ought to in the Maritime provinces. It will help the haygrowers of the province of Quebec, who have been sending millions of dollars worth of hay to the United States on which they have paid four dollars per ton, and which is now reduced to two dollars per ton. Of course that reduction may be divided between the consumer and the producer, but nevertheless it will help. Then, if I am right in my contention, it will increase the price of these articles to the Canadian consumer. If it increases the price to the Canadian consumer on live stock, hay, potatoes, fish and lumber, it will necessarily increase the cost of living in Canada. To the Finance Minister I say: What are you going to do about it? Will you stand still and do nothing? Will you reduce taxation. I believe I have convinced the Minister of Finance, although possibly I have not convinced some of his supporters behind him, that the importation of these articles free of duty would hurt nobody and would relieve the consumers in the large cities to the extent of $2,000,000 a year. Is the minister ready to do that? That is the question which the labouring men of Canada will ask him; it is the question I will ask him every time I get the opportunity; it is the question I hope the Liberal party will ask him. If he will not reduce the duty on foodstuffs, will he reduce the duty on anything else? My hon. friend from St. Antoine will tell him: leave well enough alone; we will keep you where you are, but you must keep your unholy hands off the tariff; it was a bad tariff as long as the Liberals were in power, but now it is a sacred thing. Will the Minister of Finance bow to the dictation of the member for St. Antoine or will he ameliorate the condition of the masses by reducing the duty.

I am now going to deal with a question which is of considerable importance to my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), who seems to take a lively interest in the reciprocity question. I have here some figures regarding woolens which will be of interest to that hon. gentleman. If I have any condemnation to make of my political friends, it is for the manner in which they treated the woolen tariff in 1907 when they practically wiped out a good proportion of the British preference. I say the Liberals were not treating the consumers of this country fairly in doing that, and I blame them for it. When a man tells me it is a good economic principle to tax the poor man from twenty-two per cent to thirty-five per cent for the clothing which he and his family must wear in this rigorous Canadian climate to keep them from freezing to death, I say that it is nothing but legalized robbery and I have no milder term for it. Why should a man have to pay thirty-five per cent duty on a suit of clothes which is required to keep his child from freezing to death. I do not want woolen industries in this country at that price; the labouring people of Canada do not want woolen industries at that price. I will give some facts concerning this iniquitous woolen tariff which is imposed on the people of Canada. I give the following table which will show the total imports of woolens into Canada during the last eleven months; the imports from Great Britain; the imports from all other countries, the value of the goods which came from Great Britain; the duty paid on them; the value of the goods which came from all other countries, and the duty paid on them:

Total duty	$ 4,449,474	$1,654,535

I have estimated the duty on the British goods at twenty-two and a half per cent, which I think is below the actual duty, but not having the complete returns, I could only make an estimate. Therefore, estimating the duty at twenty-two and a half per cent the people of Canada paid in duty on British woollens, $4,449,474, and on the woollens imported from other countries, estimating the duty at thirty-five per cent, the people of Canada paid $1,654,535. The total value of woollens imported in this period was $24,560,396 and the people of Canada were forced to pay on that a duty of $6,124,009. I want to know if even a dyed-in-the-wool protectionist could justify taking out of the people of Canada over six million dollars in duty on this absolute necessity of life. But there is worse than that. I am satisfied that the home production of woollens would probably be nearly as much as the importations, and on every dollar's worth of home production the people of Canada paid a duty just the same as they did on the goods which were imported. That is why the woollen manufacturers vote for protection. They admit they are charging the people the cost in a foreign country plus the duty. My friend from Lanark does not deny that. He may on some lines cut his price one per cent or just enough to get the business, but what he and the other manufacturers do is to charge the people the cost in the foreign country plus the duty, and so the people have virtually to pay the duty on the home product as well as on the imported goods. Therefore, instead of paying $6,000,000 in duty on woollens we pay probably $12,000,000;—twelve millions of dollars on goods which are just as much a necessary of life as fruit or vegetables. And yet our friends opposite say: Keep your unholy hands off this tariff; give those interested a chance to wax fat and grow rich on it. They tell us that these industries cannot remain in business if you take these duties off, that manufacturing business in Canada cannot be carried on with less than twenty-five per cent to thirty-five per cent protection. I simply do not believe it.

If any man in this House contends that this protection is necessary, I want him to give some proof of it. I am open to reason on this subject; I do not want to put my dogmas and ideas against facts and arguments. I have been in this House for a good many years, and have heard the statement made a good many times that if you reduce the duties on woollen goods you will close up the factories. But when a man comes into court and tells me that such and such a thing is true, I do not accept that; I want his reasons, and if those reasons appeal to my judgment, I accept his statement. So, I want the manufacturer of woollen goods to give reasons why he cannot carry on business if these duties are reduced. We know that there are woollen industries in this country that are rich. We know that they grow so large that they have to organize themselves into companies, and then they have to water the stock, and they do water the stock. And hon. gentlemen opposite know it. I do not wish to be personal, but I think I could put my finger on a few people, and that without going more than a couple of rods from where I stand, who have engaged in the woollen industry and who have taken part in companies with watered stock, the stock being watered because they did not wish the people to know what they were making. Why, you see these stocks quoted in the financial papers every day. You find that there are bonds, preferred stock and common stock. The common stock is all water, yet it has a value in the market. And if we were to try to reduce the woollen duties, hundreds of people would come forward and say: I have common stock in the woollen industry and if you reduce the tariff I cannot get dividends on my stock. It is unfortunate for the bona fide holder of stock, but if that stock is all water, if the original holder gave no value for it, is the existence of that stock a reason why every poor man and woman in Canada should be bled white to pay dividends? These are the conditions that stare the people of Canada in the face.

Not only is this true of woollen goods, but it is true of practically every line of manufacture in Canada. The same is true of cotton. I do not know how much the stock of the cotton industry in Canada is watered, but it must be two or three or four times over. And the cry is raised that if the duties are reduced, dividends cannot be paid on the watered stock. Well, why should they? The cotton industry is practically in the hands of one great combine. There was one establishment in New Brunswick which would not join the combine; they simply came down there, closed them up and they had to join. I venture to make the statement here that three quarters of their common stock is water. One of the best evidences that these things are not as they ought to be is seen right in this House.

Last year my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) got the Government to bring in his pet scheme of a Tariff Commission. He told us at the time what kind of men were to be appointed to this commission—they must be protectionists. They put this Bill through this House and then it went to the Senate. The Senate made an amendment which simply provided that if the commission undertook to investigate any particular line of business with a view to increasing or reducing the tariff, they should have the right to investigate the capital account, that it might be known how much of that capital was real money and how much was water. And what did the manufacturers compel their friends here to do? Why, my hon. friend from St. Antoine dropped the thing as if it had been a serpent, and the Government turned from it as they would from a reptile. And from that day until this they have not referred to it. Why do not they introduce it and pass it again? They say their Highways Bill was a good measure and would be of benefit to the people. When the Senate amended it last year, they refused to accept the amendment; but they have this year introduced the Bill again in the same words, and have sent it to the Senate. And they go to the people of the country and say that because the Senate did not pass their Highways Bill the people are without money for their roads and bridges. That is the cry that is raised all over Canada. There is not a general election or a bye-election in which that plea is not put forward. But, how different is their treatment of the Tariff Commission Bill: they are as dumb as oysters about that measure. Why do not they introduce it again, and when they go before the country, tell the people that the wicked Senate has killed the Tariff Commission Bill? Rather than allow the people to have one peep into the inside conditions of these manufacturing concerns, that it may be known how much water is in the stock, they will drop the whole thing, and we shall never hear of it again so long as these people remain in power.

To show what ground the consumers of Canada have to complain against this Government, let me give some facts with regard to cotton. I believe that cottons are quite as much a necessity as are woollens, and I believe there is more water in the stock of the cotton industry than in the stock of the woollen industry—and that is saying a good deal. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: If you reduce the duties on cottons, the industry cannot pay dividends.

But water on which dividends are paid, as I have told you, is just so much found money for the manufacturers. Last year we imported cottons to something like the extent to which we imported woollens, which shows that the cotton trade is very largely in the hands of one huge interest. I have here a statement showing the imports from Great Britain and the imports from other countries. And when I speak of 'other countries' in this connection, I think I am safe in saying that ninety-nine per cent of that business means the United States of America. It is something marvellous, when you look over the trade returns, to find that almost our whole outside trade, besides what we do with Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand and South America, is done with the United States, these people with whom hon. gentlemen opposite told us they wanted no truck or trade.

Cotton Imports for eleven months.

	Great Britain. Value.	All other Countries. Value.
Duck, &c..	$ 205,112	$ 76,751
Cottons, gray, unbleached	536,391	343,864
Cotton, white..	2,011,401	567,396
Fabrics, &c..	4,515,093	1,667,131
Miscellaneous..	5,770,805	7,576,655
Total value.. ..	$13,038,802	$11,021,797
Total duty	2,281,790	2,755,449

Total imports, $24,060,599; total duty, $5,037,229.

These figures represent the foreign trade. And here again the same conditions exist as in the case of the woollens, except that the duty is not more than two-thirds as great on cottons as on woollens, and that is a benefit so far as it goes. I have not the figures of our home production of cotton goods, but I dare say this might be obtained from the census returns if one looked it up. But I find that our raw cotton imports for eleven months were over $7,000,000. I do not know what proportion the value of the raw cotton bears to that of the finished article, but I assume that it cannot be more than half. Therefore, I think I am safe in assuming that we manufacture in Canada about half the cottons we consume. If I am right in that assumption, then the people of this country pay $10,000,000 a year by reason of the cotton duties either to the Government or to the manufacturer. Now, the cotton industry is in the hands of a great combine, one that is rolling in wealth, a combine that has been compelled to water, and water, and water its stock to keep the people from knowing what its profits are. Take a business like this, then, that is in the hands of a combine that practically controls this line of trade for the country, is it fair, in the face of a surplus of $55,000,000 that the poor people of this country should pay $10,000,000, half to the Government and half to the cotton manufacturer? That is something which must make my friends opposite consider. I do not wish to drive the cotton industry out of the country; I desire the cottons to be made here; but I say that a condition of affairs has grown up in this country—and I frankly acknowledge that my own friends may be blamed to some extent; but I do not care who is to blame—I say a condition exists to-day which it is our duty to face, for it is sapping the life-blood out of the labouring people. And these high duties are exacted, not because we need the revenue, but only to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CARVELL: When the House rose at one o'clock, I was pointing out some of the iniquities of the present tariff system under which the people of Canada were compelled to pay more than they should in order to produce a revenue to carry on the business of the country. I referred to the foodstuffs which came into this country, upon which a duty of $2,000,000 was paid, and which would have come in free under the reciprocity agreement. I also referred to the fact that something like $24,000,000 worth of woollen goods, and practically the same amount of cottons, were brought into the country and subjected to an enormous duty. I now wish to discuss very briefly another product which is of as great importance to the people of Canada as foodstuffs, woollens and cottons, and that is farm machinery. Of all the industries in Canada, farm machinery is taxed the least; yet the trade returns for the past year show that the people of Canada are paying more for farm machinery than they should be compelled to pay. I was much impressed last evening with the straightforward manner in which this matter was dealt with by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). He said that we could produce farm machinery in this country of as good a quality and at as low a price as the machinery produced in any country of the world except the United States, although he did not say to what extent the United States can produce farm machinery cheaper than we can in Canada. My hon. friend admitted also that if the duty were entirely removed from the materials entering into the manufacture of farm machinery, the agricultural implement industry could get along with a reduction of duty. He did not say to what extent the duty should be removed, nor did he tell us any of the subsidiary articles the duty upon which would have to be reduced; he mentioned screws, but nothing else. He said that if you reduced the duty on farm machinery, you would probably have to reduce the duty on from fifty to one hundred different articles entering into its manufacture. I have had some personal experience in the manufacture of farm machinery, and I may say that I failed because of the competition which I had to meet on the part of the Massey-Harris Company and the other great concerns to which my hon. friend has referred. The hon. gentleman was honest enough to admit that the small manufacturers had been driven out of business in Canada by the larger concerns, and that the manufacture of agricultural implements was now confined to three great concerns, forming a large combine. This combine is protected by a duty of from 17½ per cent to 25 per cent, and the large manufacturers can and do charge the people of Canada for their machinery an amount equivalent to from 17½ to 25 per cent over and above what the goods would be sold for if the duty were removed. This duty is not and never has been justified by any contention put forward by hon. gentlemen of this House, but it has been proved to be unnecessary and unfair by a number of hon. gentlemen, notably the hon member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) who, I am sorry to say, is not so anxious to ventilate the grievance of his constituents at the present time as he was prior to September 21, 1911. We all have a certain degree of knowledge as to the manufacturing industry of this country. As I have said, I myself lost some money in trying to manufacture farm machinery in competition with an upper Canadian firm. The underselling carried on by that firm was not so serious a matter, as far as we were concerned, as the selling of goods on one, two and three years' time, with interest, and as we did not have sufficient funds to do that, we had to close up our business. My hon. friend has said that you would have to reduce the duty on the materials entering into the manufacture of agricultural implements before you could reduce the duty on the finished article, and as he has also said that if you did reduce or eliminate the duty on these materials, you could reduce the duty on the manufactured article. He even went so far as to intimate, although he did not say so, that the duty could be entirely eliminated. I know something about what enters into the manufacture of farm machinery in Canada, and I submit that ninety-five per cent of the whole cost of farm machinery, so far as material is concerned, is the cost of iron and steel. There is a little wood—a mere bagatelle; there is a little paint, but the expense of the paint is so small compared with the total cost of the article that it is not worth mentioning. The labour of putting on the paint would amount to something, but the cost of the paint itself would not amount to one-quarter of one per cent of the cost of the machinery. I have not time, and this is not the occasion, to enter into an elaborate discussion of the duties on and cost of iron and steel in Canada as compared with the duties on and cost of iron and steel in other parts of the world, but if hon. gentlemen refer to the customs tariff of 1907, and look at the items relating to the very articles which enter into the construction of farm machinery, they will see that the duties are very small. The following item appears under the heading 'Iron':

Rolled iron or steel, in bars, bands, hoop, scroll, strip, sheet or plate, of any size, thickness or width, galvanized or coated with any material or not, and steel blanks for the manufacture of milling cutters, when of greater value than three and one-half cents per pound.

This material is free if it comes from Great Britain, and only five per cent duty is imposed if it is imported from any other country in the world. Some of that material would be used in the manufacture of farm machinery. Steel bars or sheets, to be used exclusively in the manufacture of shovels, when imported by manufacturers of shovels, are subject to a duty of two dollars a ton. A large amount of this material would be used in the manufacture of ordinary farm machinery. Then take these items:

Rolled bar iron or steel, whether in coils, bars, rods or bundles, comprising rounds, ovals, and squares and flats; steel billets, per ton, $4.25.

Rolled iron or steel beams, channels, angles and other rolled shapes of iron or steel, not punched, drilled, or further manufactured than rolled weighing not less than thirty-five pounds per lineal yard, not being flat, oval or round shapes, and not being railway bars or rails, per ton, $2.00.

A large quantity of this material is used in the manufacture of the heavier agricultural implements produced in this country.

Boiler plate of iron or steel, not less than twenty inches in width, &c.

That is used for the manufacture of boilers and goes into farm machinery. So you cannot find in any case that the material of which farm machinery is manufactured pays more than $2 to $4 a ton. How many tons of material go into an ordinary farm implement? Take a plow or a threshing machine or a mowing machine or a rake or a harrow or anything else, unless you go into the high-priced traction engines which I am not discussing, but take the ordinary run of farm machinery and you do not have anything weighing a ton, no, not half a ton. I tell you that the duty would be only from $2 to $4 on all the material entering into the manufacture of a farm machine, and yet my hon. friend says you must have some seventeen per cent to twenty-five per cent duty in order to compensate the manufacturer because he has to pay a duty on raw material, and a little duty on a few cents worth of paint that goes on the outside of an article to cover up the defects. To show the unfairness with which my hon. friend from Brantford treated the House last evening, I will point out that he said you have got to have a duty on plows of twenty per cent in order to manufacture them in Canada. He started in to discuss plows because, as he said, that was a thing about which he knew something. My hon. friend will not be surprised, nor will the Minister of Customs, but there are many members of this House and many people in Canada who will be, when I say that practically all the raw material that goes into a plough comes into this country free of duty. If he will refer to section 444 of the present tariff he will find:

Mould boards or shares, or plough plates, landsides, and other plates for agricultural implements, when cut and shaped from rolled plates of steel, but not moulded, punched, polished or otherwise manufactured.

These are free not only from the British Empire but from the whole world.

Mr. CURRIE: Who made that tariff?

Mr. CARVELL: Why, we did; I am not denying that at all. My hon. friend from Simcoe was not here this morning, or he would have heard what I had to say on that branch of the subject. I am not finding fault with it; I am telling my friends that it may have been necessary to have that tariff five years ago; but, to-day, with a surplus of $55,000,000, it is not necessary to tax the people to that extent; and, if there is an article on which the duty should be reduced or removed, it is ploughs. I do not see why, on the evidence and confessions of the hon. member for Brantford, ploughs should not be put upon the free list because he admits that the only thing you require in Canada in order to put these products on the free list is free raw materials. But he has that now, he can buy his wood surely as cheaply in Canada as any place else in the world. He shakes his head, no, there are a few other things on which he pays duty. He pays on the nuts and bolts he puts into his plough.

Mr. CURRIE: They are made in Canada.

Mr. CARVELL: The man who makes them in Canada charges the consumer in Canada the duty.

Mr. CURRIE: The plates are not made in Canada.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend either brings in or buys from the Canadian manufacturer nuts and bolts and pays duty on them. I want to know how many pounds of nuts and bolts he will have in an ordinary plough? More than half a dozen? I guess not. He will pay duty on a half dozen and what do you suppose that duty comes to? Three-quarters of one cent per pound so he will have to pay about four cents duty on the nuts and bolts he puts into a plough. Yet he must have 20 per cent on the whole finished product in order to pay that four cents duty for nuts and bolts.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Is there no ad valorem duty in addition to the three-quarters of a cent?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, 25 per cent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Oh, yes; 25 per cent.

Mr. CARVELL: But on the little half dozen pounds of nuts and bolts, the 25 per cent is so small it should not be counted.

Mr. STANFIELD: Every little helps.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, every little helps. My hon. friends grab at straws, they cling to any little argument but do not deal with the main issues. Could we reduce the duty on farm machinery? I do not see for the life of me how the Minister of Finance can justify the retention of this duty on farm machinery with a surplus of $55,000,000 and an estimated surplus for the next year of $85,000,000. I cannot understand how it is possible to justify it. There is not a farmer in the Dominion of Canada who is not compelled to buy farm machinery to some extent and he is compelled to pay that duty every time he buys it. There is no use my friend saying it is as cheap in Canada as in the United States. It is not, and the hon. member for Brantford admitted it last night. He admits that farm machinery is cheaper in the United States than in Canada and if you take off three-quarters of the duty you would still have enough left to more than provide for the duty the manufacturer has to pay on his raw material. Last year we imported of farm machinery, including traction engines and ploughing outfits, $13,128,327 worth. Of wagons, &c., we imported $772,035, and of gasoline engines, which have really become an article of farm machinery, $2,864,693, or a total of $16,865,055 upon which we paid a duty of $3,373,000. If that was all, I perhaps would not have as strong a case as I have today. My hon. friend, if I stopped there might say: Well, we cannot compete with the rest of the world; it is true that we have the best article, it is true that we have done all we can do, and yet they bring in $17,000,000 worth over a tariff wall and pay 17 per cent to 25 per cent duty. But let us take the other side of the picture. These same gentlemen who have to have a duty to protect them of from 17 per cent to 25 per cent in order to compete with the American manufacturer, actually last year sold outside of Canada the enormous amount of $5,671,838 worth. Can any reasonable man tell me or try to argue logically with me or anybody else that three firms in Canada who can manufacture and compete with the rest of the world and sell in the markets of the rest of the world $5,671,000 worth of farm machinery need a protection of from 17 per cent to 25 per cent in order to manufacture machinery for the home market and are compelled to charge the home consumers 20 per cent more than he can get the same goods for elsewhere? The thing is not logical or common sense, it simply means that for the benefit of these manufacturers the farmers of Canada are compelled to pay about one-fifth more than they ought to for their farm machinery, and they could reduce the duty on farm machinery one-half, yes, three-quarters, and still these men would not be hurt. They would carry on business just the same, they would not make as much money, I grant you, but they do not deserve to. The farmers of Canada would have a chance, they would have an innings sometime and get that to which they are entitled, which they will get in the end, the agitation for which my hon. friends have not heard the last.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) last night was inclined to differ with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). There was a lively tilt, sub rosa, between them. I would like to hear the hon. member for Selkirk make some remarks on the budget and hear what he has to say about the duty on farm machinery, My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) discreetly keeps out of the Chamber, but I would like to ask him to tell us what he thinks about it. I would also like some of my hon. friends opposite who represent farming constituencies in the province of Ontario to give us their views on this subject.

Mr. BRADBURY: When a motion was made in this House by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie for the reduction of the duty on farm implements, did my hon. friend support it?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think I did. If it was moved, it was moved in a way that would make it a vote of no confidence in the Government, and I would not vote to turn the old Government out of power. Since I have been a member, and I have been here since 1904, the matter has never been brought up on its merits. It is true that when the last tariff was brought down, some Conservative members from the West introduced on the third reading, I think, an amendment that there should be a reduction of the duty on farm machinery, but they took mighty good care not to introduce it at a time when it could be treated on its merits, or otherwise than as a vote of no confidence. But that was six years ago. Things have changed in six years, and there is no use of my hon. friends opposite asking, what did you do when you were in power? We were turned out of power; if we sinned we paid the penalty. The question is what is the Minister of Finance going to do to meet present day conditions under which he has a surplus of $55,000,000. What are the Government going to do about it? That is what we want to know and what the country wants to know. If the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) has any question to ask, let him ask the Minister of Finance what he is going to do about it. But my hon. friend is the very last man in the world to make trouble for the Minister of Finance. If the hon. minister has no more dangerous a man to fear than the hon. member for Selkirk or the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, he is absolutely safe. He can allow the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) to direct his policy. There will not be any trouble, and the Government will not go to pieces because of a vote of no confidence moved by my hon. friend from Selkirk.

Mr. BRADBURY: I may be in the same position as that in which my hon. friend found himself.

Mr. CARVELL: There is another matter which seems to me to require consideration. It does not affect the farmers of Canada to any great extent, but it furnishes an argument along the line I have been following. I refer to an article which is not a necessity to the farmers of the country, but a luxury. Still in my judgment the duty upon it, is far beyond what it ought to be. I refer to the duty on automobiles and motor vehicles of all kinds, a protection of thirty-five per cent. These vehicles are not necessities to the farmer, they are luxuries, but they are becoming a necessity to many of my constituents. The farmers are just as anxious to have an automobile as I am, and they are buying them, and will continue to buy them.

Mr. CURRIE: They are prospering under the national policy.

Mr. CARVELL: To some extent they are prospering. If my hon. friend wants comparisons, however, I can tell him that for every farmer in the county of Carleton who has an automobile, across in the state of Maine, where they have the market of which my hon. friends were afraid, there are five hundred. I could take him to one little township in the state of Maine where they have that market, and where he will find six hundred automobiles in the hands of farmers.

Mr. WHITE: What is the United States tariff on automobiles?

Mr. CARVELL: I cannot tell my hon. friend, but you can buy an automobile in the United States for about two-thirds of what it costs in Canada. An automobile that costs $1,500 in Canada can be bought across the boundary line in the State of Maine for $1,085, and it is exactly the same class of vehicle, manufactured by the same people, and with the same interchangeable parts. I own one of them, and know what I am talking about. I might give a little illustration from my own experience last summer. I was called out into the country to see an old gentleman who was supposed to be in extremis, and who wanted his will drawn. I found a good Conservative doctor attending him. He wanted to know what a certain car was selling there for. I told him $1,500. The doctor had been driving a little runabout, but he had caught the automobile fever and asked what that car would cost over in the state of Maine, the boundary of which was just a mile and a half away. I said $1.050. He said it was highway robbery. I said to him: when you had a chance to vote for it, you voted against it. The boys laughed and the doctor moved on.

Mr. MACDONALD: Did the old man die?

Mr. CARVELL: No, the old man is still alive.

Mr. CURRIE: They have their own market in the United States, and can make their cars cheaper.

Mr. CARVELL: I just mentioned this incident to show that we do not need a protection of thirty-five per cent on automobiles. Personally, I do not care very much about it, because an automobile is something without which the farmer can get along, although he would like very much to have one, and if the duty were reduced, thousands of farmers would be able to purchase automobiles who are not able to do so to-day.

Another phase of the subject is that relating to boots and shoes. I suppose that my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) would feel that I was not treating him with courtesy if I did not refer to that. In looking over the trade returns for the last eleven months, I find that we practically imported no boots and shoes at all. The figures show that $225,000 worth of boots and shoes were imported from the whole world during the last eleven months, showing that the tariff wall is so high that we are compelled to buy our boots and shoes from the home manufacturers. When a man tells me that I can buy boots and shoes as cheaply in Canada as in the United States, I say he does not know what he is talking about. All he has to do is to run a shoe business ten or fifteen miles from the boundary line, anywhere from Ste. Croix to the Pacific ocean, and he will find that while perhaps you can buy heavy shoes fairly cheap in Canada, the moment you want a good article, especially ladies' shoes, to advantage, you have to go to the United States. If a Canadian woman, who I think is a little inclined to smuggle, is within ten miles of the border, she will go to the United States to buy her shoes, because she will get a better article for less money. If the Canadian manufacturer produced as good an article, and sells it as cheaply as the producer in the United States, I ask the Minister of Finance, why does he not take the duty off boots and shoes? The great American Republic is going to be thrown open to our Canadian manufacturers, and if the latter want a larger field, they have 100,000,000 people to whom they can sell boots and shoes. If they can produce these articles as cheaply at home, and I believe they can, then throw down the tariff wall and let the Americans come in here, and we will go over there. As the hon. member for Brantford said, if you have a big market, if you can manufacture those things by the million instead of by the hundred, you can sell them cheaper, and if the American tariff wall is going to be thrown down let us throw down our tariff wall. If we can get a better article cheaper we will get the benefit. If the hon. member for Brantford is right, our people will have a chance to expand their business. But I think I can see the electricity flying around the seat of the hon. member for St. Antoine if the Minister of Finance attempted to touch the sacred duty on boots and shoes. My hon. friend from St. Antoine would not treat the minister in the patronizing manner he did yesterday, and the minister would find the fury of the whole Tory party vented on him if he attempted to touch that sacred subject.

Mr. AMES: Is the hon. member aware that, when the Liberals came into power, the duty on boots and shoes was twenty-five per cent, and that they raised it to thirty per cent?

Mr. CARVELL: I am perfectly aware of it; my hon. friend is not giving me any news. If he had been listening to what I said this forenoon, he would have found that I did not defend my political friends. My political friends listened to him and the likes of him and they got their reward, and in some cases it was a just reward.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): By way of bringing this matter up to date, would the hon. gentleman tell me what it is proposed to do with boots and shoes under President Wilson's tariff?

Mr. CARVELL: It is proposed to make them free.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): That is up to date.

Mr. CARVELL: That is up to date. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) will use the old argument: If you make boots and shoes free, you must make leather free. I admit that. Every man who has protection in Canada charges for his goods the price plus the protection. The man who produces leather enjoys a protection of from twelve to fifteen per cent and he makes the consumer pay that duty every time, but the man who produces boots and shoes has a protection of thirty per cent. Does my hon. friend from St. Antoine wish us to believe we cannot make boots and shoes as cheaply in Canada as they can make them in the United States? Why, it is all the same combine; they all use the same machinery; they get as cheap labour in Canada; they have cheaper power; the people live as cheaply, and he cannot contend that the Canadian workman does not turn out as much in a day as does the American workman. Under these conditions you can make boots and shoes as cheaply in Canada as they can make them in the United States if the raw material costs the same. Why does the maker of boots and shoes have a protection of thirty per cent, when the leather manufacturer has a duty only of from twelve to fifteen per cent and even the leather manufacturer is not entitled to what he is getting because he gets his hides free. Argue it any way you have a mind to, the time has come when we have to face these great problems and we have to face them in a businesslike way so as to reduce the cost of living which has become almost intolerable.

Mr. CURRIE: Does the hon. gentleman think the duty should be taken off leather?

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say so; I said it should be reduced, and that brings me to that branch of the case which my friends opposite expect me to discuss, and that is what I would do about it.

Mr. AMES: Are you speaking for your party?

Mr. CARVELL: No, Sir, I am speaking for myself; I am speaking for what I believe to be the proper policy for Canada, and the policy which I believe my party will adopt, and the policy which my friends opposite would do well to consider. I have shown—

Mr. AMES: Show where your party stands.

Mr. CARVELL: If the hon. gentleman will possess his soul in patience he will find where I stand, and I am only an humble individual member of the party, I have the honesty at least to state what I believe and I am going to state it, and if my hon. friend does not like it he does not have to take it, and if I do not represent my party I do not do him any harm. But what the hon. member is afraid of is that I am representing my party, and I know that I am not only representing a great many in my party but I am representing a great many in his party, and I certainly am representing millions of people in Canada whose views will prevail in the near future. I have shown that we are paying duty on fruits and vegetables which come into this country at a time of the year when our own producers have not these fruits and vegetables, and which if put on the free list it would hurt nobody. I have shown that we paid last year $345,000 duty on eggs which were not produced in Canada at the time of the year they were imported here, and the importation of which free of duty would hurt nobody. For the first four months of the fiscal year, 1912, April, May, June and July, when eggs are being produced in thousands in Canada, we only imported $605,000 worth, but in October, November, December, January, February, when eggs are scarce in Canada, the amount ran up to $2,456,000 worth, or an increase of one and a half million dollars in the last five months of the fiscal year as compared with the previous six months. The importation of eggs when they are not to be had in Canada would, of course, not hurt the Canadian producer. Then, as to butter: in the months of April, May, June, July, August and September, the first six months of the fiscal year, when we were producing butter in this country we only imported $658,000 worth, but in the next five months of the fiscal year we brought in $1,170,000 worth, most of which came from New Zealand. In these months of the year we were not producing butter in Canada, but nevertheless we made the consumers pay the duty on the imported butter they consumed. There is no doubt at all that we had to pay the duty on this butter because we have to compete with the London market which regulates the price of butter for the whole world. You can transport a pound of butter from New Zealand to London a great deal less than you can from New Zealand to Toronto and therefor the Canadian consumer has got to pay the London price plus the duty, because if he did not do so the butter would go to London. The very fact that it comes to Canada is proof that the consumers here pay the duty.

Mr. AMES.

Mr. CURRIE: The hon. gentleman would take the duty off eggs and butter?

Mr. CARVELL: Most certainly I would.

Mr. BENNETT (East Simcoe): Then why do you not move to do it?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, and I represent a constituency of farmers and I am not afraid of my farmers and I am not afraid of the farmers anywhere in Canada when the real facts of the matter are placed before them. Am I to be told that when butter gets up to thirty cents a pound wholesale price, it is necessary to put a duty on it. It is an outrage to do so. How is the poor man earning $1.50 a day to provide butter for his family when he has to pay thirty cents per pound for it wholesale.

Mr. MARCIL: Fresh eggs sold in Montreal last year as high as seventy cents a dozen.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, but that is not the ordinary price, although eggs sold all over Canada at from thirty-five to forty cents a dozen, and in the big cities at from fifty to sixty cents a dozen. Does anyone mean to tell me you should keep a duty on eggs and make the labouring man pay fifty cents a dozen, especially at a season of the year when these eggs are not produced in Canada.

Mr, THOBURN: Would you leave the duty on anything?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, I would. I would give my hon. friend about half the duty on the cheap woollen goods he is producing. I am willing to give the rest of them some protection. My friends opposite ask me what I would do. In the first place, I would make free every article of foodstuffs that we can send free into the United States to-day, because the United States is our great market. Eggs come very largely from the United States.

Mr. THOBURN: Are you sure of that?

Mr. CARVELL: During the first eleven months of the last fiscal year, we imported from Great Britain 6,030 dozens eggs; from the United States we imported 11,529,686 dozen eggs, and from the rest of the world 60,000 dozen. Is my hon. friend satisfied?

Mr. CURRIE: What about butter?

Mr. CARVELL: I think I can convince my hon. friend that there is not very much difference between eggs and butter. He will find the information on page 230 of the unrevised monthly statements of the Trade and Navigation Returns for February. These are the latest figures I have. Last year we imported from Great Britain under the general tariff $8,578 worth; I do not know what 'under the general tariff' means in this case. We imported from the United States $309,857 worth; from Australia, $25,212 worth; from New Zealand, $6,347 worth; from all other countries $951 worth. Under the preferential tariff we imported from Great Britain $151,267 worth, and from New Zealand, $1,327,922 worth. Therefore, the greater portion of all the butter imported into Canada came from Great Britain and New Zealand; but where $1,400,000 worth came in under the preferential tariff, $309,000 worth came from the United States, or over one-fifth as much butter came from the United States under the general tariff as came from the British Empire under the preferential tariff. I hope and pray that this Government will take the duty off all foodstuffs which are allowed to go into the United States free of duty. I would not have the duty taken off foodstuffs which we cannot send into the United States free of duty. We have to sell our surplus products somewhere. The United States is our market. I think this Government ought to increase the British preference, not a nominal increase, but a real, genuine increase.

Some hon. MEMEBRS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: Why do my hon. friends jeer? My friends, who wrap the flag around them and say, We want no truck or trade with the Yankees; my friends, who say, Hold on to the flag and save the Empire—when I say that they ought to increase the British preference, I am the subject of their derisive laughter. I advocated a British preference when addressing this House on the reciprocity question in March, 1911. I advocated it when discussing the Speech from the Throne last November. I advocate it to-day. I want to encourage trade with Great Britain rather than with the United States, disloyal as my hon. friends think I am. I would rather trade with the Old Country than with a foreign nation. I want to see this Empire knit together for the common good, just as much as my hon. friends opposite do, but I do not want to see that done at the cost of almost the heart's blood of the people of Canada. I want to see the British preference increased so that the labouring and consuming people of Canada may have a chance to buy everything which comes from that country at a cheaper rate than they are buying it at to-day. When that happens, they will be able to buy it more cheaply if it comes from any other part of the world, and to buy it more cheaply in some cases if produced in Canada, because the Canadian producer is bound to meet all competition. There is nothing that strikes terror to the hearts of the manufacturers of Canada so much as the word 'British preference.' A proposition was put up to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at their last meeting that they should advocate British preference. They treated the whole matter with scorn and contempt; they made a joke of it and refused to consider the matter.

Mr. THOBURN: Does my hon. friend advocate having a preference in the British market for any article we have to sell, in return for the preference that Canada has on goods coming from Great Britain.

Mr. CARVELL: No loyal Canadian would want to increase the cost of the food that goes into the mouth of the British workman. You cannot give the Canadian producer a preference in the British market without doing that. That was the reason that the policy of tariff reform has been abandoned in the Old Country. It was seen that the people would not stand for it and that it was illogical. If my hon. friends opposite have no more loyalty than to say that they will not allow British produce to come into Canada under the preference until the British people give us the preference in their market, they are not the loyal people they profess to be.

Mr. THOBURN: What would you do?

Mr. CARVELL: I would put those men, that are running little one-horse woollen mills, with antiquated machinery about fifty years old in them, where they would have to put in new machinery and do business on business principles or get out of the business. I would put them where they would not wring money out of the pockets of the people of Canada. You can manufacture woollen goods in Canada almost as cheap as you can in any other country in the world. You have cheap power; your labour is no greater and you can get the machinery practically as cheap, because much of it comes over free of duty. The Canadian producer can turn out as many yards of cloth in a day as the English producer can. So, if you have the same machinery and the same conditions, you can do as good work. But the trouble is that you have 35 per cent duty on woollen goods.

Mr. THOBURN: No, Sir.

Mr. CARVELL: I say, we have. My hon. friend will have a chance to talk if he wants to. We have a duty of thirty-five per cent on goods coming from countries outside the British Empire, and of from twenty-two to twenty-five per cent on goods from within the Empire. And these manufacturers go on with their antiquated machinery and say they have to have big prices or they cannot live. Why, it is absolutely preposterous. I will give an example of one case that came within my own observation. In my own town, eight or nine years ago, we had a little mill such as I have described. Its machinery was thirty or forty years old, and its methods were inefficient. It went to the wall, owing about $8,000 to the bank. The manager of the bank took hold of it. He had no experience and he had machinery about half a century behind the times. But the protection on the goods was so great that in three years he had wiped off the debt and had the property free of all charges and expenses. Is it reasonable to have a tariff which will allow such conditions as that? It can only be done under conditions of law that make the people pay more than they ought to pay for their goods. I do not know how much these duties can be reduced, but I believe the business could stand an enormous cut. And the effect of a cut would be to make these manufacturers employ modern methods and be satisfied with reasonable profits. I do not wish to drive manufacturers out of business; I should be very sorry if a word of mine should drive out of business a single manufacturer; I am as anxious that these people should thrive as is my hon. friend from West Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), and believe just as much as he does that manufacturers are necessary to the country's prosperity. But I believe that the consumer has as good a right to live as the manufacturer has to live and grow rich.

Now, reverting to cottons; they have not so great protection as the woollens. I think the greatest sinners in this matter are the woollen manufacturers. As I said before lunch, the cotton industry is in the hands of one combine whose stock has been watered three or four times. And, in a few years, if we propose to raise the duties, the cry will be raised by innocent purchasers everywhere that they will be wronged if the dividends on stock for which they paid good money are not paid. The cement merger is probably the best example of that kind of operation. Three or four years ago, some financiers bought up practically all the cement plants in Canada, paying for them about $9,000,000 or $10,000,000. They issued bonds and preferred stock to pay for the plant, and then issued $13,000,000 of common stock, which has been sold to innocent purchasers and distributed all over the country. In the course of five years there will be thousands of people holding this stock for which they have paid good money. If, after that time, you propose to reduce the cement duties, these people will come forward with a just grievance. I tell you now is the time we have to grapple with these things. These trusts and combines are the product of only the last four or five years.

An hon. MEMBER: Why did not you grapple with them?

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. CARVELL: Why did not we grapple with them? Why, these trusts and combines are the product of only the last three or four years.

Mr. BRADBURY: The cement merger was created under the Government that the hon. gentleman supported.

Mr. CARVELL: That is exactly what I said—that it was created three or four years ago; the hon. gentleman has simply found a mare's nest. I have not tried to deceive the committee one iota, and where my hon. friends were to blame I have acknowledged it. Some of these hon. gentlemen opposite, including the hon. gentleman who occupies the Chair in this House, were anxious when in opposition to investigate that cement merger, and many of us were anxious to have them investigate it. Now they are in power and have every chance to make an investigation; but if they were in power till doomsday with men like the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) supporting them it would never be investigated. I have mentioned this matter only to show the iniquity which is growing up under our system of high protection. There is no use of hon. gentlemen opposite saying: You are to blame. I admit our share of it. But the conditions have changed within the last three or four years, and are changing very rapidly. There is hardly a big industry in Canada that has not been reorganized, and for every dollar of cash in it a dollar of water has been added. In a few years, that common stock will be in the hands of bona fide holders everywhere; these men who manage these big combines do not keep the common stock themselves; they get the good cash for it. The time to meet this thing is now; you cannot meet it too soon; you cannot too soon reduce duties to prevent the growth of these great mergers in Canada. The condition grows worse every day. You are not only taking from the consumer and the labouring man what you have no right to take from him, but you are creating conditions which it will be almost impossible to meet in five years' time. Innocent people are buying this watered stock, and if a reduction of duty is proposed these people can in all fairness come to Parliament and say: You have no right to interfere with the duties in such a way as to prevent our receiving dividends on which that for which we paid good money.

As to how much the duty could be reduced, I do not know. I have not taken the trouble to investigate that question, and some hon. members might say I have not the ability to do so. But that is the Finance Minister's duty, not mine. If I have depicted a condition of affairs that ought not to exist, it is the duty of the Finance Minister to apply the remedy. It is his duty to get the information—it is his duty to go on with the tariff commission if he thinks that necessary to the purpose, so long as he does not make it a means of preventing us from finding out what water is in the stock of these enterprises—it is his duty to learn the facts and to submit to Parliament some measure that will relieve the people of unjust taxation. He has come before Parliament, and with what result? The mountain in labour brought forth a mouse. He reduces the duty on sugar to the extent of twenty cents per one hundred pounds—I suppose that is about three or four cents on a dollar's worth—and to meet that he has put a duty on cocoa and products thereof which have been free up to the present time; and then he says he has tried to ameliorate the condition of the masses. He has done worse than that, he has made a treaty with the British West India islands for ten years by which he has absolutely precluded himself from putting sugar on the free list, because under all conditions he must retain the duty on sugar coming from all parts of the world except the West India islands only, to the extent of fifteen cents per one hundred pounds. If there is an article of consumption in Canada that ought to be placed upon the free list—something which the poorest man in the country must have for himself and his family—it is sugar; and yet these hon. gentlemen have tied their hands and made it impossible to give this boon to the people for the next ten years. If my hon. friend had reduced the duty on raw sugar to fifteen cents, had then reduced the manufactured article accordingly, it would be something of which he might be proud. But when he comes to this House and says: 'We have reduced the duty on sugar twenty cents a hundred pounds,' I can only say that that means practically nothing. It is true that the sugar magnates, after my hon. friend had delivered his budget speech, said: We have reduced the price of sugar twenty cents a hundred pounds. But the matter is all in the hands of a combine, and the price will rapidly go up, five cents this week and five cents next week, until it will be as high as ever. Hon. gentlemen talk about the reducing of the cost to the consumer because the raw material is reduced twenty cents a hundred pounds. If you went to the Canadian Manufacturers Association with that proposition, they would meet it with the same derision as that with which they met the proposal to increase the British preference. If my hon. friend had reduced the duty on the manufactured article to correspond with the reduction on raw material, he would have given the people some real measure of relief, for the foreign manufacturer could send his sugar into this country that much cheaper.

I do not accept the argument advanced by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) last evening, that the moment you reduce the duty you drive the manufacturer out of business. I have a number of reasons for not accepting that argument. In the first place, I claim to have a little common sense and ordinary intelligence. I have been trying to carry on a manufacturing business in a small way for ten or fifteen years, and I have at least gained some experience which is of value in discussing matters of this kind. No man need tell me you have got to have from twenty-five per cent to thirty-five per cent in order to manufacture goods in Canada; I do not believe it. No man need tell me you have got to have from fifteen per cent to twenty-five per cent protection upon cotton goods in this country; I do not believe it. No man need tell me you have got to have from seventeen and one-half per cent to twenty-five per cent in order to manufacture farm machinery; I know better. It is needless to say that you have got to have protection of thirty per cent duty in order to manufacture boots and shoes, in view of the fact that leather is taxed from twelve per cent to fifteen per cent. The Conservative party have never repeated the wail they sent up when the late Government introduced the British preference in 1897. They said then that the factories would be closed; that there would be smokeless chimneys all over the country, and they preached blue ruin generally. What has been the result? Have the factories closed down? Where there was one factory in Canada in 1897, there were three in 1910. In the face of the British preference, the manufacturers of Canada have never in their history made such strides as they have made during the past ten years. Reduce the duty, and you put the people in a better position to buy; the manufacturers will do a bigger business. They will make as much money as ever, and make it not by means of I might almost say the highway robbery which, so far as the labouring man is concerned, appears to be their practice to-day. The hon. member for North Lanark did not close his shop when the British preference was brought into effect, and knows that he would make more money if the duty were cut in two. There is not a manufacturer in Canada who would close down his factories if a reduction in the duty were made. If the Conservative party will preach to the labouring men of Canada the doctrine I have expounded to-day, my hon. friend the hon. member for North Lanark can post up notices until he is black in the face and he will not convince the people that a reduction of duties will be harmful. The day of high protection is gone. Certain persons have tried to resurrect it in Great Britain, and they have failed; it is receiving its death-blow in the United States, and Canada is the only civilized country in the world to-day in which there is a government that will stand up and openly defend high protection. I hope my hon. friend will take this to heart, and that he will consider the plea I have made to-day on behalf of the farmers, the labouring men and the consumers of Canada. I hope he will bring down a budget speech next year in which he will announce that steps will be taken to alleviate the sufferings of the people to some extent, and if he does he will find at least one member on this side of the House who will say amen to every step in that direction.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I may, I think, very properly offer my congratulations to the hon. the Minister of Finance, as has been done by every speaker who has preceded me in this debate. It must be very pleasing indeed to him to realize that no very serious criticism of his budget speech has been made, and to find that it has been received as it has been by members on both sides of the House. I do not think, however, that any hon. gentleman would expect the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Carvell) to speak for an hour without finding fault. In the earlier part of his address he made a personal attack upon the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn), than whom there is no more highly respected gentleman in this House. And when rebuked for his uncalled for words, by one of the members on this side of the House, he said: 'Well, I stand by them.' These words, and the tone in which they were uttered, were characteristic of the hon. member for Carleton. I think I am correct in saying that he has never been noted in this House, and, I venture to say, out of this House, for any sentiments of generosity towards his political opponents. His largeness of heart will never rupture his wish-bone. The words 'robbery,' 'legalized robbery,' and other kindred terms, fell fluently from his lips during the course of his speech; I think there is no person more qualified to express an opinion upon so delicate a point than is the hon. member for Carleton. I would ask hon. gentlemen not only on this side but on the other side of the House, who have had the privilege of sitting here for a number of years and who have noted the career of the hon. member for Carleton; who have seen him in season and out of season defending saw-dust wharf transactions, land deals, and the like; I would ask hon. gentlemen if there is any person in this House who believes that there could be anything politically so evil and crooked that it would give to the member for Carleton, N.B., the shock of a new experience. For my part, I am of the opinion that you could not discover anything that would impart to the hon. member a shock of that description.

Mr. CARVELL: If the hon. member has any charges to make against me personally for my conduct during all the time I have been in Parliament, in my handling of public affairs, in my dealing with the departments of the Government, I want him to be man enough to make them. I challenge the fullest investigation of my conduct.

Mr. EDWARDS: If I were like the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, I would at once give a kind of contemptuous laugh and say: Oh yes, the shoe must pinch or you would not get up. I was drawing conclusions from my observations of the career of the hon. member since I have been in this House and have had an opportunity of observing it. I knew that he was possessed of very versatile talent, which he has very assiduously cultivated, but I do not think that any member has ever suspected that even the hon. member for Carleton could perform such feats of political gymnastics as he has performed to-day in this House. I think that he has proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that he is entitled to the medal as the champion political acrobat of the Grit party, and in being entitled to that medal he has achieved no small distinction when we consider the number of competitors for that title on the other side of the House. His turnings and twistings on matters of trade and tariff would make a snake turn green with envy. In all the speeches I have heard in this House I have never heard anything so twisty and turny as the speech delivered by the hon. member to-day. In the course of his remarks he gave us the information that the labouring men in the town where he resides were so thoroughly impressed with his arguments in regard to reciprocity that they gave him the largest majority that had ever been given to him in that town. If that is true as regards the labouring men in the town where he resides, it must also be true that of the rural parts of his constituency he did not get a majority because I understand that his total majority was only nine, and I believe that if he had not taken an unworthy advantage of a little technicality and refused to allow a recount, he would have found himself in a minority of sixty or seventy without a seat in this House at all. He said: I always argued that the farmer would get a better price if reciprocity passed. He went on to argue that the price depended upon the relation of supply and demand, a basic principle generally acknowledged. But he said the Canadian produce would not materially affect the price if it went into the United States, because the amount of Canadian produce going over there would be small compared with the total supply and so would not materially affect it. In one breath he is arguing that if reciprocity had passed, the Canadian farmer would have received a better price for his stuff; but he then goes on to prove that the supply would not be materially affected in the United States if our stuff went over there, and consequently there would be no material change in the relations of supply and demand, and no change in the price. Taking his argument in connection with the statements made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) that the prices in Montreal were higher than the prices in New York, I fail to see how he can argue that had reciprocity passed and our goods been admitted in to the United States it would have meant a larger price to the farmer. He argued that if reciprocity had passed there would have been a very largely increased market for Canadian farm produce. If his other argument was correct, that there would be no material advance in price in New York or in the United States, and that the supply over there was sufficient, in fact, so large that what we would send would not materially affect that supply, I ask where would our farmers get the very much enlarged market? If his argument is right it could not be in the United States. A little later he said: I always said that the consumer would pay more on every item in the pact. Yet he supported the pact in this House and before the country.

The hon. gentleman now sheds tears because of the price the consumer is paying for goods. As I said before, he has a most peculiar mode of reasoning. The hon. member referred at some length to the matter of potatoes. I do not think his statements on this subject will be taken very seriously because he did not even seem to know when potatoes are grown, or what time of the year we dig potatoes. He was entirely at sea on that. Let us see what the position is in regard to potatoes. As I understood him, he would allow potatoes to come in free not only from the United States, but from other countries as well. The favoured nations which would have had the right to send their produce to Canada on the same terms as the United States in case the reciprocity pact had passed, export annually nearly twelve million bushels of potatoes, all of which would have had the right to come into Canada in the event of that pact having passed. I am perfectly willing that the hon. gentleman, or other hon. members on that side of the House, should argue in favour of throwing down the bars and allowing all this stuff to come into the country free of duty, but I would not like to see any member on this side of the House argue in that way, and I am confident that this Government will not support any such move. I am confident that the farmers of this country would not like to see the idea thrown out by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., carried into effect. It would be most unfair to them and I really think that in his heart he must see that himself. He refers to the introduction into this country of tomatoes, strawberries, &c., and said that they would have come in free, had reciprocity carried, at a time when our produce was not ready for the market in this country. Is that fair to the producers of fruit in this country? He was arguing, as his party argued in 1911, in favour of allowing the products from the warm country to the south and from other countries to come into Canada and get the cream of the price on all these goods and articles which people want to use. If tomatoes, strawberries and raspberries can be produced on the other side of the line, as they can be, cheaper than here, if they are brought into this country before ours are ready, as they are, who buys them? It is the rich people who are able to pay the high prices for them, and there is no duty in our tariff which we are better justified in collecting than the duty imposed upon these early fruits and vegetables coming into this country and being used by the very wealthy classes who are able to pay the price for them. I am surprised at the hon. member for Carleton—no, I am not surprised at him; I will take that back. I will say that I would have been surprised if any other hon. member had argued in the way he did this afternoon. At one time we have tears and wailing over the price paid by the consumer and the labouring man for his goods; at another time, we find him advocating that these early fruits should be brought in free of duty so that they could be placed on the table of the rich man in this country. The people of this country knew perfectly well what they were doing, and all the sophistry and argument of the hon. member for Carleton, and of other hon. members on that side of the House, cannot convince them to the contrary, because they have common sense, and they used it at the last election. The hon. member for Carleton referred to eggs and butter and meats. I was very much interested in the figures given to the House by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). He said that the prices of various articles of food were higher in Montreal than in New York. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), in his remarks, referred to the very large increase in the price of farm produce in Canada, compared with what it was a number of years ago. Allow me to refer to one or two items alluded to by the hon. member for Carleton. He referred to the eggs, butter and meats imported into this country. I shall not detain the House by going into details, for we can argue the principle without taking up all the articles. Let us see what is the position of affairs. What did my hon. friends opposite propose to do under the reciprocity pact? In regard to butter, they proposed to permit free entry into Canada of over 400,000,000 pounds of butter a year, because the countries, in addition to the United States, which under that pact would have had the right to bring their products free into this country, are annually seeking a market outside of their own country for over 400,000,000 pounds of butter. I need not point out how much more cheaply articles can be carried by water than by rail. Every person is aware of that fact. I need not refer to the fact that eggs and butter and meat in vast quantities can be stored away in very small space. I say it was absolutely unjustifiable to propose that the farmers of this country, living under the climatic conditions which they have, should be forced, as the last Government would have forced them, to compete with the various countries of the world in regard to these articles. In regard to meat, what would it have meant to this country? Over 2,200,000,000 lbs. of meat are exported by those countries which, under the reciprocity pact, would have had the right of free entry into the Canadian market. The United States export over 600,000,000 pounds of meat per annum. Let us see how that affects our own country. In the year ending 31st March, 1912, there were entered in Canada from United States, for home consumption, 23,343,989 pounds of meat. Of that amount, 11,233,000 pounds were bacon. Under the tariff as it exists in this country we permit those meats to come in for a duty of 2 cents per pound. The United States, on the other hand, is charging to-day 5 cents per pound on any meats going into their country. Do our farmers export any meat? Most assuredly they do. The Dominion of Canada has to find a market for 58,351,000 pounds of bacon outside of this country. Let us look at that for a moment. I have denounced the present tariff arrangement regarding bacon as unfair to the farmers. I denounced it when the former Government was in power, I denounced it last session, and I denounce it again to-day as unfair. Under our tariff we permit the American farmer to come into the Dominion of Canada and take possession of our bacon market, and the farmers of Canada are thereby forced to seek a market for their surplus bacon across the sea. I say that that is not as it should be, and I do not care which party is in power, I for one would be in favour of increasing the duty of two cents per pound on bacon coming into this country to four or five cents per pound. Who has a better right to the market in this country than our own farmers? What is the principle of protection? I would ask my hon. friends on the other side of the House who are interested in manufactures, and we have them on both sides, how they would like it if the tariff were so arranged that goods could come into this country from the United States or from other countries, and absolutely displace what they manufactured in this country, forcing them to seek a market for their product in other parts of the world, and denying to them a market at home? How would they like that? How would my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) like that? He would say it was manifestly unjust, and he would be right. In all fairness, the manufacturers of this country should have the first claim on the market of this country, and those who manufacture bacon are just as much entitled to it as those who manufacture anything else. But the hon. member for Carleton argues that we should throw down our bars, and allow the surplus products of all the agricultural countries in the world to come into Canada free of any incumbrance whatever. It is absolutely unfair, just as all the talk of free trade by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), and by the few other converts on the other side of the House, is manifestly unfair. It is not only unfair to talk of free trade in a country like Canada, it is absolutely unreasonable. I maintain that when it comes to the point of a Government fixing a tariff regulating the tariff on goods produced in and coming into a country, in all fairness to the people, the Government should take into consideration the climatic and other conditions pertaining, not only to that country, but to the countries which are competing with it. Why is it that we place a head tax on Chinese coming into this country? Is it merely for social reasons? Do we not recognize, as I am sure the people of British Columbia recognize, that because of their cheap and low way of living they can work for a wage that the white man cannot work for, that those people who are not up to our standard of civilization should not be permitted to come into Canada freely and at their will, and that we should place restrictions with the view of keeping them out of this country, because, if they were allowed to come in freely and to compete in the labour market, the standard of living of the white people would necessarily be reduced? If we are right in placing restrictions on the immigration of Orientals—and I challenge any man in this House, whether on this side or the other, to say that he would set aside the restrictions, and allow free entry of Orientals into this country—is it not logical that we should place restrictions upon the products of that cheap labour coming from China or Japan or any other country? We Canadians are proud of the country we live in; our people will compare more than favourably with the people of any other nation on the face of the earth; we expect our citizens to educate their children; we set up standards of comfort and civilization; we wish our people to live in comfortable homes, and they wish to have their homes decorated with books and musical instruments. Is there a public man who would dare say he would so restrict wages that the workingmen of Canada would not be able to spend money in beautifying their homes and making them comfortable? Is there a public man in Canada who would dare to say that he would so restrict the wages of Canadian labouring men that they could not properly educate their children? And yet that is precisely what hon. gentlemen opposite are arguing. That is what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) argue when they say: Throw the tariff down and force the Canadian labouring man and the Canadian artisan to compete with the cheap labour of several parts of the world. The position of these hon. gentlemen in that respect is absolutely illogical. Is it fair to the farmer of Canada, who has to pay $2 or $2.50 per day, and in some seasons more, to his labourer? Is it fair to the farmer who has to spend thousands of dollars putting up buildings in the winter to house his stock and feed them during the months they are giving no return? Is it fair to tell the Canadian farmer that he should be forced to compete with farmers living in the Argentine and other countries, who because of the climatic conditions they live under are not obliged to house their stocks and erect expensive buildings, and who can get labour for one-fourth or one-fifth what the Canadian farmer has to pay? Well, Sir, that is the kind of thing the Liberal party proposed to the people of Canada in September, 1911, and that is the kind of thing which the people of Canada in their good sense turned down, and that is why they turned the Liberals out.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) did not offer any criticism of the budget speech. He said if there had been an advance in our trade it was due to immigration; it was due to this, that and the other thing, it was due to everything except the Government. The hon. gentleman even went so far as to say that thanks were due to the Almighty, which sounds a little strange from Liberals because I have a very distinct recollection that when the country was prospering, as it did prosper for years under the Laurier government, they very seldom gave Providence credit for anything; they told us the country was prosperous because of Laurier and the Laurier government. Once in a very rare while you would find one of them who would say the prosperity of the country was due to Laurier and the Almighty, but they invariably put the Almighty last, just as the hon. member for Carleton did this afternoon when he was speaking of the prosperity of the country and what it was due to. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) said if the country were prosperous no thanks were due to the Government because no change had been made in the tariff. Summarized, his argument was: the country prospers, no change in tariff; conclusion: change the tariff. That is very remarkable reasoning. His contention is that under the tariff the country is prosperous and therefore you muct change the tariff, and that is about the extent of his logic. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) told us that the expenditure was too high, but he did not say that any of the public works now undertaken are not necessary. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said something like that too. He deplored the high expenditure, and I feel like asking him now if he would object to the $102,870 in the estimates for highway improvement in Nova Scotia—I need not ask him that because he has already objected to it; he does not want Nova Scotia to get that money. But, I notice in the estimates there is $500,000 for the Halifax dry-dock. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) object to that?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think I would, so far as I know.

Mr. EDWARDS: There are several other items in the estimates, to wit: Halifax post office, $4,000; does he object to that; Halifax postal station, north end, $50,000; does he object to that? Halifax customs House, $2,500; Halifax customs examining warehouse, $100,000; Halifax drill hall, for the 63rd Regiment, $45,000; does the hon. gentleman from Halifax object to any of these items I have read?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. EDWARDS: Am I to take his silence as indicating that he does not object?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not object to some of them; some of them I do not know anything about. I do not object to any justifiable and necessary expenditure.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is a very diplomatic and skilful answer, and gives the hon. member a loophole to get through if necessary. But I venture to make the prophecy that when these expenditures come to be criticised in committee, we will find no objection raised by the hon. member for Halifax. I do not believe he will object to a single one of these items, not even the one for the drill hall; and I would not be surprised if he might prevail upon his desk mate (Mr. Carvell) to restrain himself from objecting when that particular item is under our consideration.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) told us that in his judgment his party had not gone as far as it should have gone in lowering the tariff. The judgment of the hon. member has undergone a very sudden change, and one which is apt to have very disastrous effects on him if he is not careful. For fifteen years his judgment did not work along the same lines as it is working on to-day. Now he thinks his party did not go far enough in regard to cutting down the tariff, but he says the Liberals gave the British preference and then they stopped. The reason he gave why they stopped was because the country needed the money; and that may be a very strong reason. He says that in 1910 and 1911 the Liberals found they were taking more from the people than they should take, and so they introduced the reciprocity pact. After fifteen years they found all at once they were taking more from the people than they ought to and they proposed reciprocity. Then, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) told us we should reduce the duties on farm machinery, and he further made the statement that he never had had the opportunity in this House since he entered it in 1904 to vote for a reduction of duty on farm machinery, on its merits. If I am not quoting his words accurately, I wish he would correct me now, but I took them down and I think my record of them is correct. He said: Whenever a motion was made for a reduction of the duty on farm machinery, it was always worked in with a motion of want of confidence or something of that kind. I may not be as well posted on the rules of this House as many other hon. gentlemen are. I think, however, I am right in saying that, when a Bill is in committee, any member may move to change a section in it without being charged with moving a want of confidence motion. What happened? On April 2, 1907, when the House was in Committee on Bill 134, respecting the duties of customs, the hon. Mr. Fielding's Bill, the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), moved a resolution which was in these words:

That the committee reconsider item 445, and that it be amended by striking out the figures 17½ per cent in the general tariff, and inserting in lieu thereof the figures 10 per cent.

Mr. LANCASTER: What did the item relate to?

Mr. EDWARDS: It related to the duty on agricultural implements which Mr. Fielding proposed to reduce from twenty per cent to seventeen and a half per cent. I submit that there was nothing in that resolution, if it had been carried, to indicate a want of confidence in the Government. The Government were in a position to accept that motion, if they felt disposed so to do. I believe the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was in the House at that time, and was one of those who had the untrammeled opportunity to vote for a reduction in the duty on agricultural implements. Not only did he not vote for it, but he recorded his vote straight against it. He did not at that time speak to the resolution. The present hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) and the present hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) spoke against that resolution at that time. Here are some of the statements made. As reported on page 5597 of 'Hansard,' Mr. Knowles said:

I shall give the Government hearty support for I believe that the policy of the Government is in the interest of the country.

As reported at page 5582 of 'Hansard,' the hon. Mr. Paterson used these words:

I do not disguise the fact that we propose to give these people nearly the amount of reduction in duty that has been made. For it must be remembered that 17½ per cent is no more than a revenue tariff.

These are the words of the then Minister of Customs in the late Administration. If he did not disguise that fact, then the hon. member for Carleton knew that it was a bluff. What did the former Government do in regard to agricultural implements? Previous to this change, the duty was twenty per cent, but the value of a binder for duty purposes was $80. Therefore the duty collected at twenty per cent was $16. When these gentlemen made the reduction from twenty per cent to seventeen and a half per cent, what did they do? They said to the manufacturer: You need not be alarmed; we will fix that by simply raising the price on the binders for purposes of duty from $80 to $100, and will collect $17.50 duty on the binder, where formerly under the Conservative tariff $16 was collected. These hon. gentlemen went from one end of the country to the other, appealing to the farmers and saying: See what we are doing; we are reducing the duty on agricultural implements. This is only a step; we intend to go further, but you ought to support us because we have made this reduction. They turned around and winked the other eye to the manufacturers and said: The farmers will not catch on to it; it will be all right. The farmers did not catch on to it at the next election; but they caught on to it at the last election in 1911, and hon. gentlemen are in opposition and they are there to stay. The time has gone by when the Grit party in the Dominion of Canada can hoodwink the people of this country. The farmers are too intelligent a class; they read and think for themselves, and they know just where these hon. gentlemen stand.

There are circumstances which happen in the political world which remind me of nature. The rains descend and the floods come and a good deal of driftwood is carried down the stream. Some of it sticks in the bank until the later current loosens it and carries it out to sea. In the political world, the floods of public opinion descended on hon. gentlemen opposite; and Messrs. Paterson and Fielding, the little pink tea Mackenzie King, Sir Frederick Borden, the Minister of War, and Mr. Fisher, the Minister of Agriculture, who had said that the farmers of this country were a slipshod, lazy and indifferent class of people, were carried away by the current. Some others stuck partly in the oozy bank and partly in the current, waiting the time when the flood would come down on them and carry them out into the sea of political oblivion. At that time one hon. gentleman was carried into the stream, but he was picked out and brought to the shore. I have often wondered about that. It reminds me of a picture of a mother bird feeding a lot of little nestlings. She comes with a little worm, and they all open their mouths and say in bird language: Me, me, give it to me. She cannot give it to all of them; she selects one, her favourite no doubt. That was the case here. They were all drifting down the current, Graham along with the rest, and were shouting to Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the bank: You have a seat down in South Renfrew; me, me, give it to me. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said: I do not want you, Mr. Paterson, or you, Mr. Fielding; you went down to Washington and ran us on the rocks. I do not want you, Sir Frederick Borden; there are certain things in regard to you that require explanation. We do not want you, Mr. Mackenzie King; you are too fond of pink teas; we will let you go by. We do not want you, Mr. Fisher, because you have said that the farmers of this country are slipshod, lazy and indifferent, and they have resented it. Come on, George! So the hand was reached out to George, and he was pulled out of the stream and led to a seat in this House.

Mr. LANCASTER: They let them all into the caucus just the same.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is as far as they got inside of the door of the caucus. I do not know whether they have had entry into the Senate Chamber or not; that remains to be seen.

We were informed by the hon. member for Carleton that trusts and combines only came into being within the last three or four years. I have some recollection of having read somewhere in Grit literature previous to 1896 statements which would indicate that the members of that party in those days were stricken with a sort of political hydrophobia about trusts and combines. But the hon. gentleman says they go back only three or four years. Under what tariff? Under the tariff which they themselves formed. They tell us that we are taking too much from the people in taxation. But under what tariff are we taking it? Under the tariff which they placed on the statute-book. It is true that that tariff does not very materially differ from the tariff enacted under Sir John Macdonald. That tariff they denounced for eighteen years, saying that protection was robbery and everything that was bad. They were going to uproot it, to destroy it utterly. They came into office in 1896, and they let the tariff strictly alone until 1907. Any changes they made outside the British preference were infinitesimal, as I think any honourable man will admit. And in 1907, when they professed to make reductions, they turned around and gave it back in the form of a bounty or some other way. The tariff stood practically as it has stood; and if the country prospered under that tariff, as I admit it did, that is to the credit of that tariff and of the Conservative party that inaugurated it. True, under the reciprocity pact hon. gentlemen opposite proposed to make a few little changes on manufactured articles. They were very much concerned about the interests of the farmer and were going to reduce the duty on agricultural implements by two and a half per cent. But evidently they had listened to such talk as that of the hon. member for Carleton, and they were going to reduce the duty on automobiles by five per cent. That is the way they showed their keen regard for the interests of the farmer.

In what condition did the Liberal party find this country when they came to power in 1896? I must go back a little into history, but I will try to be brief. I make this statement, that in 1889-90 there was a world-wide depression which continued for three or four years. Is it necessary for me to prove that assertion? It may easily be proved by referring to the exports and imports of various countries between 1890 and 1894. The total foreign trade of Great Britain fell off by $295,000,000; that of France by $160,000,000; that of Germany by $90,000,000; that of the United States by $310,000,000; that of Australia by $190,000,000;—an aggregate falling off for these five countries of over one billion dollars. It is true that Canada was affected by that world-wide depression, but it is also true that there was no country in the world that came through that depression as well as Canada did. Her import trade remained about stationary but her exports increased by $17,000,000, her savings by $46,000,000, and her railways by 2,700 miles, while the exports of agricultural products increased 65 per cent. As reference has been made to the reduction of the tariff, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Conservative party at that time of stress—because at that time, I repeat, it was a world-wide depression and was felt in Canada—felt it incumbent on them to reduce the burdens of the people, and in 1890 they granted relief by taking the duty off the common necessaries of life to the extent of half a million dollars. In 1891 they struck the duty off raw sugar and reduced the duty on refined sugar thereby effecting a saving to the people of $17,851,000 in the four years from 1891 to 1895. In 1894 they made a general reduction of a million and a half in taxation. In other words the Conservative party at that time when the people were being affected by a world-wide depression, lessened the taxation to the extent of nearly $22,000,000.

I have already said that Canada came through that period of depression better than any other country in the world. As a result of this, she was in a better position than any other country to avail herself of the rising tide of prosperity which followed that period of depression, as can be proven by the statistics of trade of the various countries to which I have referred. The Northwest had passed through the experimental stage; the Canadian Pacific railway had been in operation for about ten years, and though it passed through hundreds of miles of territory from which it received no revenue, still it had even at that date demonstrated the wisdom of those who proposed it; the early settlers had made a success of their settlement in various parts of the West, particularly in Manitoba, and that was the means of attracting to that country a tide of immigration which taxed the resources of the Government of the day to look after properly. This was the condition of affairs in 1896 when the Liberal party came into power, and no government ever came into power under more favourable auspices than did that government; they came in on a tide of prosperity which they had not created and they swept along on that tide of prosperity which was due to the national policy inaugurated by Sir John Macdonald, and which had done its splendid work for the country notwithstanding all that our political opponents could say against it.

Now, just a word in regard to what hon. gentlemen opposite did when they came into power. They came into power having made certain definite pledges. They pledged themselves to reduce the expenditure. The Conservative party, between 1892 and 1896, spent an average of $42,000,000. Sir Richard Cartwright and other members of the Liberal party denounced an expenditure of $38,000,000 to $40,000,000 as recklessly extravagant, and the right hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition is on record as having said that if his party came into power they could and would reduce that expenditure by two or three millions of dollars per annum. Is there any member of this House who will dispute that statement? And what did they do? In the first five years of their regime, from 1897 to 1901, they had an average expenditure of $50,000,000, or an average of $8,000,000 over the average of the previous five years. For the next five years, their expenditure averaged $29,000,000 over the average of the last five years of Conservative rule. From 1907 to 1911 the average expenditure was $113,500,000, an increase of $71,374,000 over the average amount spent by the Conservative party in the last five years they were in power. And yet, with these facts before us, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, notably the hon. member for Carleton, complain with regard to the increased expenditure. The question is not so much the amount of money which is being spent, as it is whether or not it is spent properly. I was surprised that an hon. gentleman of the intelligence and ability of the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) should make a comparison between the expenditure of Great Britain and the expenditure of Canada. Great Britain is an old and well-established country, and Canada is a young and growing nation, with a rapidly increasing population which is making ever-increasing demands upon the Government. For many years to come I do not see how it will be possible for this or any other Government in Canada to curtail the expenditure to a very great extent. The demands are too great; we must make use of our natural resources; we must improve our transportation facilities, and these things cannot be done in any country so vast in area as Canada is without the expenditure of a large sum of money.

The Liberal party said they would reduce taxation. Our chief source of revenue is that obtained from customs and excise. In 1896 we were receiving only $27,759,000 from both sources, or about $5.46 per head of the population. In 1906, ten years later, this party which had promised to reduce taxation was collecting over $60,000,000, or an average of $10 per head of population, and in 1911 they were collecting nearly $90,000,000, or $12 per head of population. I think it is proper that the question should be asked: Are the people of this country in a position to pay the taxes which they are paying at the present time? If a period of depression should come, such as existed in 1889 and 1890, the Government should, perhaps, take steps to relieve the conditions, but, in a time of general prosperity such as we have at present, and have had for many years, it would not be advisable for us to lessen materially the amount of revenue which we are receiving from various sources.

The Liberal party also promised to eliminate the principle of protection. Is there a man in this country to-day who will say that pledge was kept? Is there a man who will say that the Liberal party did make any serious effort to eliminate the principle of protection? The Liberal party were going to reduce the national debt, but the national debt under their regime was increased by $81,000,000. They were also going to eliminate newspaper and printing patronage. In 1896 newspaper advertising cost the Government $42,000, and printing, $189,000. Ten years later, under Liberal rule, newspaper advertising cost $181,000 and printing $689,000, an increase of three hundred and twenty-four per cent in the one case and two hundred and sixty-three per cent in the other. During their first ten years of office they spent over $5,670,000 on advertising and printing. The Liberal party were going to abolish the bounties. Under the Conservative party the bounties paid on pig iron, puddled iron bars and steel amounted to $169,000. The Liberals extended the bounty and made it applicable to manufacturers of steel and lead, manilla fibre and crude petroleum, and during their regime they paid out about $20,000,000. They promised also that the public lands should be kept for actual settlers. I would ask the hon. gentleman to bear in mind the circumstances connected with the Halifax land deal, by which B. F. Pearson, M.P.P., editor of the Halifax Chronicle and the St. John Sun, bought land for less than $19,000 in April, 1906, and sold it to the Government in June for $45,400. Then there was the Moncton land deal, in which Mr. Matthew Lodge bought a piece of land for $5,075, for which the Government paid him $13,880. These were deals in which the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) was more or less mixed up, to his discredit. Then there was the Robins irrigation deal, by which the Government sold for one dollar an acre, 9,450 acres of grazing lands, giving leases in which the cancellation clause was ommitted. The party to whom these leases were given by the Government sold their rights at a profit of $350,000 and the same men subsequently got 380,000 acres upon which they cleaned up half a million dollars. The Liberal party were also going to elevate the standard of public life and public morals, and purify the electorate. I wonder if any hon. gentleman has ever heard of a man by the name of J. B. Jackson, a man who sought to obtain perjured evidence in order to force from his seat a gentleman who had won it honestly and honourably? Have hon. gentlemen heard of one Philip Wagner? For further particulars apply to the hon. member for Edmonton. This man Wagner was sent to prison, and having served his term, the hon. member for Edmonton, who was then Minister of the Interior, rewarded Wagner by giving him two offices from which he derived a larger salary than he was getting before. Then there was the case of Hug-the-Machine Preston who was rewarded for his rascally work by being given a good position in the old country. Of such men as Jackson and Preston, Sir Richard Cartwright said their only offence was in getting found out. I might refer also to other efforts on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to purify the electorate in the counties of Frontenac and Hastings by means of bogus ballot boxes. I do not wish to go into details, but I would refer any person desiring full particulars to the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) in whose office the bogus ballots, I understand, were printed, and at whose residence these bogus ballot box manipulators were wont to call on their trips between Watertown and Kingston. It was the Laurier Government which a few years ago appointed to a position in Kingston a man who had served one term in Belleville jail, another in the Central prison at Toronto, and who had twenty-three convictions against him in the police court of Kingston at the time he was appointed to guard the convicts in Kingston penitentiary. These are the gentlemen who hold up their hands in horror and who try to make the people believe that, if they had the chance, they would do their utmost to purify political life in Canada. I have no doubt that the intentions of some of these hon. gentlemen are good, but our experience as to the course adopted by them in carrying out their promises is such that we may be excused if we show lack of confidence in their ability to purify the electorate of this country. The Liberal party were going to reform the Senate but, through the lapse of time and the interposition of Providence, the Senate was reformed to their satisfaction, and they let it alone. It remains to be seen whether they have reformed it sufficiently to meet with general approval. I presume we shall know very shortly whether or not we have the proper men in the Senate, and, if it is found that we have not, it may be necessary to effect some further reform.

While the trade of this country has been very large, it does not in every respect meet with my entire approval; it is not exactly what I would like it to be. Our total trade in 1911 amounted to $769,000,000, and in 1913 our total trade amounted to over a billion dollars, of which $691,000,000 were imports and $393,000,000 exports. Of this trade $586,000,000 was with the United States and $316,000,000 with Great Britain. Our trade was therefore very much enhanced both with Great Britain and the United States, but the major part of it was carried on with the republic to the south. Our imports from the United States amounted to $435,000,000 and our exports to the United States to $150,000,000, a balance of trade against Canada of $284,000,000 and this is the part which is not, in my opinion, entirely satisfactory to me as I have studied trade conditions. It may be that under the Wilson tariff we may send a larger quantity of stuff into the United States though we will not do so if the argument of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., is good, that they have such large quantities there now that they are not in need of ours. Our exports to Great Britain amounted to $177,000,000 and our imports from Great Britain to $138,000,000. In other words, we had a balance of trade in our favour of $39,000,000 in our trade with Great Britain. Canada's best customer is Canada itself; Canada's second best customer is Great Britain. This is particularly true so far as the farmers of this country are concerned and when I make that statement I want it to apply just as strongly to the farmers of the Northwest as to the farmers of Ontario, Quebec and the martime provinces. I repeat that the best market for the farmers of Canada is the Canadian market, the market at home, and, Sir, you may go where you will, in Ontario, in Quebec or in the Northwest, and wherever you find a prosperous and growing city you will find among the farming community an ever-increasing and growing sentiment in favour of maintaining manufactures in that city and thus making it a market for the farming population. The farmers are not slow to appreciate the advantage of being near a great city. Suppose you have a farm of one hundred acres five miles from the city of Toronto and I have a farm of one hundred acres five miles from the city of Kingston and that the buildings on those farms and the quality of the land are identical, whic. farm is the more valuable? Anyone will at once say that the farm near Toronto is the more valuable. I ask, why is that the case? Your answer is, because of the difference in the size of those two cities, assuring the farmer near Toronto a very much larger market than the farmer near the smaller city will have. Apply that to the country all over and I say that wherever you find growing cities, in the West or in the East, the farmers living in the neighbourhood of the cities are realizing the advantage of the proximity of the cities and are in favour of adequate and fair protection to build up those cities and maintain their industries. That is why hon. gentlemen opposite will remain on that side as long as they continue to advocate the policy which apparently they are advocating to day.

I want further to point to this fact that our exports of animals and their products to Great Britain in 1912 amounted to nearly $37,000,000 and our exports of agricultural products amounted to $81,000,000, or a total of $118,000,000. In 1912 we sent to the United States nearly $10,000,000 of animals and their products and $11,000,000 of agricultural produce, a total of $21,000,000. Of a total export by the farmers of this country of animals and their products and of agricultural produce of $155,000,000, only $21,000,000 goes to the United States and $134,000,000 is carried across the water. I have a reason for placing these figures before you and it is this: As soon as this matter is placed before the farmers of this country, they will support and support heartily the movement to contribute $35,000,000 to the supremacy of the British navy. There is no class of people in Canada who are more interested in that $35,000,000 grant for those three dreadnoughts than the farmers. $134,000,000 worth of their products out of a total of $155,000,000 exported is carried across the water and depend for a safe conduct to the markets of the world, on what? On the British fleet, towards the supremacy and maintenance of which hon. gentlemen opposite, if given their way, would not give a dollar. I have talked this over with farmers regardless of their politics and I have not a particle of doubt of the correctness of my statement that the farmers of the Dominion of Canada are heartily behind the Conservative party in their policy of granting $35,000,000 for the construction of three dreadnoughts for the strengthening of the British navy, on the supremacy of which the safety of their products depends, and will depend for many years to come. I shall not go into a discussion of the naval policy, but I want to make that statement, representing as I do a farming constituency. I believe that the constituency which I represent is more strictly agricultural than any other constituency in the Dominion of Canada for the reason that I have not within the bounds of my county a single incorporated town or village. That is about as strictly agricultural as you can get it. I move amongst the people of my county and I believe I know their sentiments; and although the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., may refer in jeering tones as he did to the flag and wrapping the flag around us, I want to say that I am a British subject in this House and in this country, not ashamed to wrap that flag around me at any time and in any place. It ill becomes the hon. member for Carleton, or any other member sitting on the other side of the House, or on this side of the House, or anyone in this country, to cast a sneer and a jeer at the British flag, as some in this House and out of it have been guilty of doing time and again. I have heard those men talk derisively about the old man, the old flag, and the old policy, and what did they do? They adopted that policy, because they had not the courage to change it a particle. What about the old flag? Are there any people on the face of the earth who have as great a right as we have to reverence and respect that flag and all that it represents? It is not merely the colours on that flag, it is its glorious history in the past, which is our history, as well as that of the people of Britain. The people of this Dominion should never permit themselves to speak derisively of the old flag, as some hon. members have. Attack your opponents if you will, but leave the flag alone.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am not one of those who say that hon. members opposite are disloyal. I do not say that. The Liberal party contains hundreds and thousands of good loyal men from one end of the Dominion to the other. At the last election, in September, 1911, the Liberals of the Dominion gave evidence of the fact that they were loyal. I do not say that the Liberal party are disloyal, but I do say that if you find a rebel you will find a Grit in politics. I do not say that Grits are rebels, but I do say that if you find a rebel you will find a Grit, because that will be his politics.

The hon. member for Carleton has referred to our trade with the United States. He is on the penitent bench now. There are a number of hon. members opposite working in that direction. They were in office for fifteen years and worked under a protective policy. There is no getting around that fact. Now they are out of power, and I am wondering if they are going to duplicate their political antics of the eighteen years they were out of power before. It will puzzle even them to duplicate the numerous political antics of which they were guilty during the eighteen years they were out of office. They had as many policies as there were elections, unrestricted reciprocity, tariff for revenue only, free trade as we have it in England, and a host of others. They were ready to adopt anything if it would get them into power. Why do they not candidly admit that their whole course as a party in this country has committed them irrevocably to the principle of protection? Why not admit that the principle of protection is the proper principle for a growing country such as Canada is.

I want to say a word in regard to the reference made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the creation of a tariff commission, which was proposed by this Government last session, and which was thrown out by the Senate. I want to repeat here what I said on that occasion, that I believe that the creation of a tariff commission in this country was the most reasonable, the most sensible, and the most logical step ever proposed by a government in this country. When it comes to the discussion of the items of a tariff, whether it be a manufactured article or an article of farm produce, we are bound to depend upon, and to be influenced by the views of men who have special knowledge of these particular items. If it is a manufactured article, the man who is engaged in the manufacture of that article, must, from his experience, have a keener and deeper knowledge of the industry than any other individual. If it is a matter pertaining to a particular branch of farming, any man who is a practical farmer can give information as to that. The idea is to get definite, absolute, and reliable information on which we can all depend. For instance, in figuring out what duty we should place on eggs, or on wheat, or on potatoes, or on any other article which is produced by the farmer, a tariff commission should inquire into the climatic conditions here and in the countries with which the farmer of Canada will have to compete. They should inquire into the rates of wages paid here and in other parts of the world with which the Canadian farmer will have to compete, and then give the Canadian farmer just such a percentage of protection as will place him on a level footing with those other countries. His competitors in those other countries have certain conditions which he cannot enjoy in Canada. Give him fair play. He wants no more than that, but he is entitled to that, and should have it. The same is true in regard to manufactures. I do not care what article of manufacture you take, I say it is the duty of this Government, and it would be the duty of the Tariff Commission, to inquire into the cost of labour in the production of that manufactured article, the cost of living in this country, the cost of transportation, and the cost of materials entering into the manufacture of the article, and to compare them with the conditions in the countries with which the manufacturer here has to compete, and then to give the Canadian manufacturer just such protection as would place him on a level footing with the people of those other countries, and no more. He is not entitled to more than that, and he should not ask for more than that.

In regard to the reduction of the duty on farm implements, I find myself in this position: If I am asked if I favour a reduction of the duty on farm implements I say yes, undoubtedly. Why do I say that? I say that because of the study I have given to the question. It appears to me that a reduction might be made without injuring the manufacturer. But I am in this position in expressing an opinion on that subject, I do so with the knowledge which I have at the present time. It appears to me that a reduction might be made, but I must admit that my knowledge is not perfect in regard to that, and I would like a tariff commission or anything else, which in regard to that matter would give me information which I frankly own I do not at present possess.

I do not propose to detain the House at any greater length; I want simply to add a few words in regard to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Carleton in favour of reciprocity. What would it mean to this country? It would mean not only that the Canadian farmer would have to compete with any surplus production that might exist in the United States, but with the surplus production of many other countries, which production, in many lines, is very great indeed. Is there a market in the United States for many of our products? Let us take a few of them. Take barley. The United States exports about 10,000,000 bushels of barley a year. Take wheat. The average exportation of wheat from the United States in the last five years amounted to over 62,000,000 bushels. Take wheat flour. The average exportation from the United States amounted to 12,000,000 barrels in the last five years. Take bacon. In 1911 they exported 156,000,000 pounds. Take butter. They exported 4,877,000 pounds. Take cheese. They exported over 10,366,000 pounds. Does it look as if they were starving for butter, and bacon, and wheat flour, and barley in that country, when they are sending all that stuff out? If I desired to take up time I could refer to many other things which they are exporting in large quantities, and for which it is claimed we would have a ready market on the other side of the line. Take horses. I find that they exported to Canada 20,000 horses in 1912, and they took from us 1,428. They exported to Canada 192,918 sheep and lambs, and they took from us 16,829 sheep and lambs. And so I might go on and extend the list. I might go on with an extended list which would include the very things the farmer has to sell and which the farmer was told in 1911 he would find a market for on the other side of the line. But the official figures given in the United States returns indicate beyond the shadow of a doubt that of all these things which the Canadian farmer has a surplus of and for which he must find a market, there is an even greater surplus in the United States for which they must find a market. The fact is that the people of the United States are actually seeking markets in other parts of the world for much larger quantities of the very things we were told we would find a ready market for in the United States if reciprocity were adopted, than we ourselves have to sell. If hon. gentlemen opposite are disposed to follow the cue of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), and to advocate for this country free trade with the United States, and the throwing down of the tariff walls between Canada and the United States, then, speaking politically, we on this side of the House have nothing to regret; it is gentlemen opposite who will have to do all the regretting when the elections come. But if they were absolutely sincere in their contention along these lines they would move an amendment to the tariff proposals and I venture to say that not one of them dare do that; not one of them thinks for a moment of doing anything of the kind. Therefore, we can only conclude that they are not sincere in their expressions, but they find the situation as exemplified by the budget speech so entirely satisfactory that being unable to criticise it they must fill in the time talking about reciprocity and other extraneous questions. I thank the House, Mr. Speaker, for the very patient hearing that has been given to me.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): Before dealing with the subject of the budget, I want to make one reference to a remark made by my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards). It is a remark that has been made in this House and in the Conservative press very frequently and has been spread broadcast throughout the country; it is that the Liberal party through the Senate killed the Tariff Commission Bill. I do not know that it is important that that misstatement should be corrected, but I make the correction because of the bearing the question has on the subject now under consideration. The proposal was made by the Minister of Finance last session to provide for the establishment of a tariff commission with certain duties and powers. When that Bill went to the Senate, the Senate saw fit, as it has a right to do, to amend it by requiring that whatever person or interest made application for an increase in the duties, that person or interest would be required to show the profits made and the means by which the profits were made. And because of that amendment put in the Bill by the Senate, the Government refused to present the amended Bill for acceptance by the Commons; and thereby the Government killed the Bill which they introduced into Parliament on the plea—I will not say the pretense—of securing information. They killed the Bill because the Senate made provision that the commission to be appointed should secure information that would be for the protection of the public interest. And because the Bill in the shape in which it came back from the Senate would have effectively protected the public interest, the Government killed it. That gives the standard of the Government's position in regard to all questions of public interest where the tariff is concerned. It has been said that the Government of the day represents the interests rather than the people, and I say that the action of the Government in regard to that measure is all the evidence any unbiased citizen needs to establish the fact that the Government is a government to protect the interests and not the people.

Referring to the budget and to its presentation by the Minister of Finance, there are nothing but expressions of pleasure at the fact that so far as the increase in the revenues indicate a prosperous condition in the country, to that extent the budget statement is very satisfactory. We are glad to know trade has increased to such an extent that our revenue has amounted to many millions more than it ever did before, and we are also glad to know that while expenditures have been liberal, the expenditures have still been less than the revenue, so that there is a substantial surplus in the treasury. While that is of itself a very satisfactory condition, it must also be admitted that the fact that the revenues of Canada are vastly higher than they ever were before; so high that even a lavish expenditure did not catch up to them, in itself indicates a condition which may fairly call for reasonable comment. If the abounding revenue were accompanied by an abounding prosperity on the part of the individual citizen, then we would say that is a very desirable condition. If the prosperity of the revenue were reflected in the prosperity of the individual, there would be nothing but favourable comment to be made on the budget and on the fact that the Government in presenting the budget had not seen fit to make any serious changes in the amounts or methods of taxation.

Looking at the matter from the particular point of view of those who believe in lower taxes, we are very glad to know that the Government, up to date, have not justified our fears of last year. To quote a saying used by the hon. Minister of Finance, I believe, in the election of 1911, we recognize it rather as a respite than as a pardon. We are glad to be free so long, but we still fear what is to come hereafter.

I said, if the condition of the individual was as is the condition of the treasury, it would be entirely satisfactory; but, when we have such remarkable increase in revenue and a financial condition in Canada such as we have not had during the past five years—when we have a condition of money stringency throughout Canada that is felt by all classes—and I have it on the authority of our friends on the other side —when we have a stringency of money and a condition of excessively high cost of living coming together—and I understand that the record for the month of April last is the highest for any month of April in the Dominion in that regard—it seems to be a question of very serious interest if there is not some connection between this enormous revenue, this prosperity of the treasury, and the lack of prosperity amongst the individual citizens of the country. It seems to me that would have been a fair subject for inquiry by the Administration, who are charged with the responsibility of doing the best that can be done for the welfare of the people of Canada as a whole. Finding a condition in which the treasury is abundantly prosperous, a condition in which it costs the individual citizens more to live than it ever did before, and a condition in which the money with which he is able to pay this cost is scarcer than it has been before for many years, the Minister of Finance, before presenting his budget to the House, should have made it his business to look over the field and see first if there was any connection between these situations; and, if there were such a connection, he should have placed such proposals before the House as would tend to relieve the situation for the individual citizen of Canada. I submit that the paramount interest is not what amount of money is in the public treasury, but what is the condition of the people. What are the conditions of business generally? Are those conditions prosperous or are they not? It must be clear, that if there is an excessive revenue, that revenue comes out of the pockets of the people. It must be evident, the more you take out of a pocket, the less there is in it.

Mr. SMYTH: That seems good logic.

Mr. OLIVER: Even my hon. friend from Algoma can understand that. If the Minister of Finance finds that the treasury is full, and the pocket is empty, the treasury being full because the pocket has been emptied, it would seem to be fair and reasonable that his proposal would be, if he has the interest of the individual at heart, to right matters by keeping something out of the treasury and leaving it in the pocket of the individual who needs it, when the treasury does not need it. It is to be regretted that, in the presentation of this budget, the hon. Minister of Finance has not seen fit to provide for that balance or readjustment of conditions that, it seems to me, is desirable and necessary for the well-being of this country.

Although the treasury is overflowing to-day, if the pockets of the people are empty, or comparatively so, the overflow of the treasury will not continue. It seems to me that conditions being as they are admitted to be, it would have been the duty of the Government to relieve the situation by reducing taxation. I am not sure that I gathered it from the hon. minister's address, but it has been stated very freely in the papers that the tariff proposals brought down by the Government do carry a reduction in taxation. Those proposals do not amount to very much, one way or the other. They are not in themselves seriously important; that is to say, they are not important in a positive direction; they are not either going to increase the burden or to lighten the burden of the taxpayer to a serious degree. The objection I take to them is that they do not relieve the burden of the taxpayer as I think they should. If it is shown that under circumstances such as exist at the present time, the minister has brought down proposals which increase the burden rather than decrease it, I think we have established that certainly the Government is not on the side of the people where tariff questions are concerned.

I have studied carefully the figures submitted in connection with the West Indian trade agreement. The House will remember that it was stated by the hon. Minister of Finance that the changes made in the tariff were made chiefly because of that agreement. The general impression was created that, because of this agreement, and these subsequent changes in the tariff, there had been a reduction in taxation to the consumer in Canada. I find however that the West Indian trade agreement provides that certain articles, products of the West Indies, which to-day come in from all the world free of duty, will hereafter carry a duty when coming from any other point than the West Indies.

These articles are not important; but I will mention one, the cocoa bean, formerly free, but now dutiable if coming from any other country than the West Indies. We import only about $600,000 of these cocoabeans, and it does not matter much whether they are dutiable or free. But the changes of the tariff which the Minister of Finance proposes include not only an increase of the duties on cocoa beans, but an increase of the duties on the manufactured articles derived from cocoa beans directly or indirectly. We import about $1,800,000 of these products of cocoa beans. And so the increase works out in this way—we are going to pay increased duties on $1,800,000 worth of finished food products used by the people of Canada, while the only possible benefit to the West Indies will be in regard to a little over $600,000 of their raw products.

Mr. BLAIN: What are the articles?

Mr. OLIVER: The cocoa bean is the only article I desire to deal with.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER: When the House rose at six o'clock I had brought to the attention of the House the fact, as I gathered it from the tariff schedule and the remarks of the Minister of Finance, that, in order to give the people of the West Indies a preference on something under $700,000 worth of cocoa beans, which was the total amount of imports into Canada, we had, in pursuance of our agreement with the West Indies, increased the duties payable by our consumers on cocoa beans and the manufactured products thereof to the amount of a duty on food products valued at $1,800,000. That is to say we had taxed our consumers on $1,800,000 worth of the products that they consumed for the sake of giving the West Indies a preference on one of their products to the amount of something less than $700,000. As to the matter of amount, this item might not be considered as seriously important, but as a matter of principle it is an outstanding feature of this trade agreement, which entitles it to the careful attention of the people of Canada at large, especially in their capacity of consumers, at this time when the cost of living is higher than ever before.

While cocoa is an important product of the West Indies, the great product is sugar, and it is of sugar that Canada uses an amount which makes the question of the readjustment of the sugar duties one not of minor but of major importance.

Mr. BLAIN: Could the hon. gentleman give a list of the manufactured products of which cocoa beans form a part?

Mr. OLIVER: If my hon. friend will refer to 'Hansard,' page 9890, he will find there that items 20a, 22, 23 and 77a deal with the manufactured products into which cocoa enters materially, and upon which the duties have been substantially increased.

Everyone will agree that sugar is not only an important product of the West Indies, but it is one of Canada's most important imports, carries a very large proportion of the taxes in the way of customs revenue, and is consumed by all classes of the people under such circumstances that the tax upon sugar is borne rather by the poor than by the rich. That is to say, the consumption of sugar depends upon the taste of the person rather than upon his wealth. In one of the Ottawa newspapers I find a summarized statement of the tariff changes, published, I presume, on information derived directly from the Minister of Finance, which is as follows:

Raw sugar, under British preference, is reduced to 40¾ cents per 100 pounds as against 52½ cents under old tariff. Intermediate and general schedules are reduced from 83¾ cents to 57½ cents.

On refined sugar British preference remains at 83 cents per 100 pounds and general and intermediate schedules are reduced from $1.24½ to $1.07⅞.

I use this reference in the newspaper because it is, I presume, given with authority, and it conveys the idea better than a reference to the wording of the schedule would. The schedule itself is technical, and is somewhat difficult of understanding by the ordinary person. I deduce the following. On raw sugar there is a reduction under the preference from 52½ cents to 40¾ cents per hundred pounds, a reduction of 11¾ cents per hundred pounds. There is a reduction under the general tariff from 83¾ cents to 57½ cents per hundred pounds, a reduction of 26¼ cents per hundred pounds. We have a reduction in raw sugar which is 26¼ cents under the general tariff and 11¾ cents under the preferential tariff; in other words, we have reduced the general tariff twice as much as we have reduced the preferential tariff. Again, in other words, we have reduced the preference to the West Indian sugar producers to the amount of the difference between 11¾ cents and 26¼ cents per hundred pounds. We have negotiated a trade treaty with the West Indies for the purpose of expanding our mutual trade, and in the effort to do so we have actually reduced the preference formerly given to the West Indies on their principal and most important product.

On refined sugar the general tariff was $1.24½ per hundred pounds, which has been reduced to $1.07⅞ per hundred pounds, a reduction of about 17 cents. The tariff under the preference was 83 cents, and it remains 83 cents. That is to say, we made a reduction on refined sugar, but we made no reduction at all in regard to the sugar imported under the British preference. We import raw sugar from the West Indies and from other parts of the world but we do not import refined sugar to any serious extent. The figures as I make them out are as follows: We imported in 1912 $17,000,000 worth of sugar and molasses. Of this amount $14,500,000 was raw sugar and the reduction in the duty on raw sugar, if we strike an average between the eleven and three-quarters per cent and the twenty-six and a quarter per cent on the general tariff, and say there is an average of seventeen per cent per hundred pounds on the raw sugar under the preference, we find that there is a total reduction in the tariff on raw sugar of nearly $1,000,000. That is a substantial reduction and on the face of it would appear to be a reduction which must necessarily be to the benefit of the consumer. But sugar is not consumed in its raw condition, it is only consumed by the ordinary citizen in its refined condition, and while the duty on sugar has been reduced to a total amount of some $1,000,000 on the actual imports, the refined sugar imported as I read the return amounted in 1912 to only $843,466 worth or a little over three-quarters of a million dollars. There is a reduction of seventeen cents per hundred pounds provided it comes from other countries than Great Britain which would net to the consumer a benefit of $40,000 on the year's operations, provided that every pound of that refined sugar came from some other country than Great Britain. But, as a matter of fact, I take it for granted that every pound of it comes from Great Britain and, therefore, when the British preference on raw sugar is not reduced, and it is not reduced, the consumer gets absolutely not one cent of benefit from this reduction in the duty on raw sugar under the West Indies treaty. If I read the returns correctly, the reduction in the duty on raw sugar is a present of $1,000,000 to the sugar refineries of Canada and is not a relief to the extent of one single cent to the consumer of sugar in Canada. While that is the condition, that is to say that the Canadian consumer does not benefit, the preference to the West India producer, as I have pointed out, is cut in two under this most remarkable trade treaty which proposes to expand trade between Canada and the West Indies by placing taxes upon the Canadian consumer upon products that he formerly secured free of duty or at a lower duty, and by cutting in half the preference that the West Indies formerly enjoyed in the Canadian market on their principal product. If I were to discuss this West Indies trade agreement further I would say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was liable to prosecution for having entered into an agreement in restraint of trade; I would say further that the effort of the Government to improve the trade relations by dealing with the steamship subsidies does not seem to be much more fortunate than their arrangement in regard to trade, inasmuch, if I understand the matter aright, we double the present steamship subsidy and we do not get any improvement in the service. The hand out to the sugar refiners is accompanied by a hand out to the steamship companies and neither the Canadian consumer nor the Canadian producer stands to get any benefit and Canadian taxation is substantially increased.

It is not only in relation to the products of the West Indies that the high cost of living is felt. Let me take one or two articles as an illustration. I maintain that under the conditions of excessively high cost of living and revenue in excess of the country's requirements, it was a time for the minister to look over the field and see where a reduction might be made in the taxation that would be reflected in a lowering of the cost of living. The cost of living has increased. An example of the way in which it has increased is to be found in the prices of canned fruit and vegetables. I am informed that in 1907 the wholesale price for canned tomatoes in Ontario was from seventy-two cents to seventy-five cents per dozen three-pound cans, and that in 1912 the price at the opening of the season was $1.25 per dozen cans, with a subsequent rise to $1.35 and $1.65 per dozen. That is, there was an increase in the five years of not less than seventy per cent in the cost at wholesale points in Ontario of this article which is one of the prime necessities of life in the western country. When we speak of the cost to the consumer, we are frequently reminded that the increased cost to the consumer means a better price to the producer. But this case of canned fruit or tomatoes may be taken as an instance. There is nothing more untrue than that an increase paid by the consumer means a proportionately increased price to the producer. While the price of canned tomatoes to the consumer has increased in five years not less than seventy per cent, I am credibly informed that the price to the producer has increased very little if any. It has increased to such a small extent that it can hardly be reduced to a percentage. This increase of the cost of canned tomatoes comes about by reason of the operation of the canners' combine, the Dominion Canners' Association, which has been successful in absorbing not only a majority but a very large proportion of the fruit canneries in Ontario. Having acquired a large proportion of these canneries, they are in a position to dictate terms to the wholesale dealers, and the terms which they dictate are along these lines. The wholesaler who desires to buy canned fruit or vegetables in Ontario must, if his order is large, go to the Dominion Association, sign an agreement that he will not buy from any other supply house.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal): Like the American tobacco combine.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER: The price is fixed at the beginning of the season, and he sells to his retail dealers on that price. At the end of the year his accounts are settled. If he is able to prove, and he has to prove it, that he has not bought from anyone else than the Dominion Canners' Association, he gets ten per cent rebate, and that is his profit. The facts being as they are, the price to the consumer having been increased abnormally in the past five years by the artificial means, which I have laid before the House, and which no one will pretend to deny, and the price to the producer not having been correspondingly increased, I submit that the Minister of Finance has not given due attention to the conditions pressing upon the consumers and taxpayers of this country when, in framing his readjustment of the tariff which he has recently placed before the House, he did not take cognizance of the conditions in regard to canned fruit and vegetables. I may correct myself: in regard to vegetables, the rebate is ten per cent, and in regard to fruit twelve and one-half per cent. In regard to the balance between what the producer gets and the consumer pays, I may mention the case of corn. I am credibly informed that corn nets the producer $7.50 per ton, and costs the consumer $150 a ton under the beneficient operations of the canners' combine.

Not to delay the House, but to step outside of the question of food and deal with wearing apparel for a moment, I have had figures brought to my attention on the subject of woollen goods. Industrial Canada, the organ of the Manufacturers' Association states that the wool imports into Canada amount to $33,000,000 a year, that the woollen manufacturers in Canada are carried on by 4,700 employees, and that the average wage of these employees is $325 a year. If these figures are correct, the wages bill of the woollen industry in Canada amounts to $1,527,500 a year, while the people of Canada pay in duty on the woollen goods imported $10,000,000. Further, I am credibly informed that while the investment in the woollen industry in Canada in 1901 amounted to $10,587,808, in 1911 it amounted to $8,539,305. That is to say, that although we have been giving this enormous protection to the woollen industry of Canada, that industry represents a smaller investment of capital to-day than it did five years ago, and the committee will surely admit that the average wage paid to the employees in that industry is not such as to warrant the amount of protection that that industry receives at the hands of the taxpayers of this country. I submit again that, under the existing conditions, with a revenue such as we have never had, with a surplus such as we have never had, and with the cost of living as it never was before, the minister was derelict in his duty when he did not take up these questions, and deal with them in the presentation of his budget to the House.

There is an article that can be neither eaten nor worn, but which is still an article of prime necessity to the people of Canada, and particularly of western Canada. I refer to cement. I find that the duty on cement has been reduced from twelve and one-half cents per one hundred pounds to ten cents per one hundred pounds. That is to say there has been a reduction of two and one-half cents per one hundred pounds, or eight and three-quarter cents per barrel of three hundred and fifty pounds. I am not able to give authentically the actual cost of cement, but assuming it to be two dollars a barrel, we have a reduction of duty of something less than five per cent. Now it will be remembered that we have already had some discussion in Parliament with regard to the reduction of cement duty, and the Minister of Finance is my authority for believing that the cement duty is so high as to constitute a serious burden upon the industries and the conditions of life in Canada that call for the use of cement in large quantities. I have the authority of the minister for believing that it was a right and proper thing in the interests, not only of the consumers of cement in western Canada, but of Canada at large, and of good government, that the duty on cement should have been cut in half last July and allowed to remain during four or five months. That is to say: I have his authority for believing that under the circumstances then existing the cement duty should be reduced from twelve and a half cents to six and a quarter cents per hundred pounds, or from forty-three and three-quarters cents per barrel to say twenty-two cents per barrel. During the discussion we had in the House some time in the early part of the session the facts were placed before the House and the country as to the amount of cement that was used, as to the necessity of its use, as to the burdensome character of the rate of duty prevailing and as to the propriety of reducing that duty, and I then had the honour to say to the minister, and I hope he will remember it, that what I wanted was that he should permanently reduce the duty down to six and a quarter cents, and that if he did so he would have support. I am sorry the Minister of Finance did not consider my support sufficiently valuable to warrant him in following the suggestion I made, but I ask him and I ask those members of the House who supported him in that reduction of the duty at that time, who asserted loudly that it was a proper and a necessary thing to do; I ask him and I ask them what they have to say to-day in defence of a reduction of only two and a half cents per hundred pounds. The Minister of Finance was seriously offended at the suggestion made, that the reduction in duty at that time was because of the probable effect it might have on the Saskatchewan elections, and not because of any desire to benefit the people of the West. Now, I ask him, what has he to say in the light of his own statement then and his own action now. What has he to say now with reference to that suggestion which he repelled so very earnestly at that time? I do not wish to make any accusation, but the Minister of Finance must surely see that the circumstantial evidence is absolutely against him.

There is another article that is neither cement nor clothing nor food, I speak of steel rails. If there is one need in the western country more than another, it is the construction of railroads, and the cost of the rails enters largely into the cost of railroad construction. I do not think I need take time to suggest to the House that the welfare of Canada depends upon railway lines being pushed throughout that great producing country as rapidly as possible; because even to-day, although great work has been done, there are still thousands and tens of thousands of men, who either have to get railway connection within a year or two or be at such loss as will discourage them very seriously in their efforts. And, it was with a full appreciation of that condition that my hon. friend made provision sometime last summer for the admission of steel rails free of duty. He did well; it was a good thing to do. But I am afraid in view of the fact that while the need is greater than ever because of the financial stringency that prevails, the Minister of Finance in the preparation of his budget absolutely forgot about the interests of the country in regard to lower cost of the construction of railroads, and there is no mention of any reduction of duty on steel rails in the budget speech.

I am afraid the suggestion that has been made, that the Government of the day has deliberately juggled with the tariff for political purposes and for private ends, will have to absolutely stand now that the budget has been brought down and the readjustment of the tariff has been placed before the House. I am all the more at a loss to understand how it is that this condition which exists in this country to-day did not claim the attention of the Minister of Finance, because I find that in the United States—I hope the Minister of Finance will pardon me for alluding to the United States and will revise any suggestion that may arise in his mind at the moment that because I allude to the United States I therefore am disloyal to Great Britain—in the United States that country to which the high protectionists of Canada have looked during so many years for guidance, direction and example, they have seen the necessity for reducing their tariff and readjusting it with special regard to the cost of living. I find that they propose to make cocoa free, whereas for the first time we in Canada are putting a tax on cocoa. Then, the United States proposes to make free of duty, fresh fish, fruits, fresh beef and mutton, bacon and ham, milk and cream, potatoes, salt, coffee, tea, and last but not least on my list, steel rails. Then, the United States proposes to bring down the duties on cement to five per cent, on cattle to ten per cent, on sheep to ten per cent, on other live animals to ten per cent, on barley to fifteen, on oats to ten, wheat to ten, cheese to twenty, eggs two cents per dozen, hay two dollars per ton, cotton goods of cheap quality seven and a half per cent, and wool fifteen per cent. The United States is facing the condition of high cost of living as we are in this country, but according to the evidence placed before this House yesterday by the member for Maisonneuve the cost of living in the United States is not as high as it is in Canada, and the Government of the United States takes the opportunity to make substantial reductions in the cost of living in that country. But at the very same time, this party in Canada which has looked to the United States for guidance and example in matters of tariff up to the present time, is now increasing the duty while the United States is reducing it. I would suggest to our hon. friends that, having followed the example or guidance of the United States during so many years, they would do well to follow it just a little further; and, when the taxes are not needed by the treasury and when they are needed by the people, they should give us in this country relief from taxation similar to that which is being given by the Government of the United States to the people of that country.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is my hon. friend aware that, if the proposition before Congress should go through as introduced, it will still leave their tariff as high as ours?

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know that that has anything to do with the case. I am glad to know that my hon. friend is following the tariff situation in the United States. What does he think of the wisdom or folly of the proposed reductions in the United States tariff?

Mr. WRIGHT: I think that is a matter entirely for our American friends.

Mr. OLIVER: I think so too. Our friends on the other side were following the policy of the United States as long as the latter were putting their tariff up. As soon as the United States lower their tariff, our friends forget all about following their example. That reminds me that, in the elections of 1911, the policy of our friends on the other side was: No truck or trade with the Yankees. I remember hearing of an election procession through the streets of Ottawa of about a dozen automobiles labelled: No truck or trade with the Yankees. Every automobile in that procession was made in the United States. I may also mention that, throughout the Dominion of Canada, of all the newspapers which voiced that sentiment, there was not a press upon which those papers were printed that was not built in the United States. I think our friends were not in good faith in making that plea; or, if they were in good faith then, they have discredited themselves to-day. Our trade with the United States depends somewhat upon the tariff. We have had a readjustment of the tariff at the hands of the Minister of Finance. On looking over the trade returns, we find that not only has our trade with the United States not decreased under the administration of these gentlemen, but it has increased enormously; further, it has increased enormously in proportion to our trade with Great Britain; not only that, but our imports from the United States have increased enormously in comparison with our exports. In other words, much as we were buying from the United States, and little as we were selling them in 1911, we are now buying more from them in proportion to what we are selling them. We are buying more from the United States to-day in proportion to what we are buying from Great Britain. Yet my hon. friend (Mr. White) has not a word to say about it in the tariff. That is sufficient evidence that our hon. friends either were not in good faith in 1911, or are not in good faith to-day. If they want to do what they said in 1911 ought to be done, the time to do it was when the hon. Minister of Finance brought down his budget and his tariff schedule. When he did not do so, we assume that he did not mean what he said. I believe there was no member of Parliament or of the Government on that side of the House who was more emphatic and possibly more efficient in declaring the principle which I voiced to the House to-night than my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the election of 1911.

The following information is taken from the hon. minister's statement: The total imports into Canada in 1913 were $692,000,000. Of this we imported from the United Kingdom, $139,000,000, and from the United States, $436,000,000. Our imports from the United States more than doubled in six years; our exports to the United States did not double in that period. Our imports from the United Kingdom did not double in six years, while our exports to the United Kingdom increased one-third in that period. In 1908 our exports to the United States were nearly half of our imports. In 1913 our exports to the United States are slightly over one-third of our imports. Yet our hon. friends have no suggestion to make as to how that condition can be remedied. They do not even suggest that it ought to be remedied. They boast of the amount of revenue they are collecting on this enormously increased importation from the United States. I do not know what they would say to-day if the suggestion were again brought forward of securing a reduction in the United States duty upon farm products, whereby it might be expected that the balance of trade could be measurably redressed. If such a suggestion were made to-day, would they say, as they said less than two years ago, that such a proposal meant the annexation of Canada to the United States commercial and political? It appears to me that a condition, in which Canada finds herself compelled to increase her buying from the United States in proportion to her selling to the United States, brings Canada very much more closely to a condition of commercial dependence upon the United States than if Canada were able to pay for what she bought with what she sold. An arrangement whereby Canada could sell to the United States as much as she bought from them would place Canada in a position of commercial independence, in comparison with her present position.

And what suggestion has the Government to make to redress the balance of trade, so to speak, with Great Britain? Our buying from Great Britain does not increase as does our buying from the United States. It is true, as my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) mentioned, that we are proposing to present, $35,000,000, or loan $35,000,000, to Great Britain for the construction of three dreadnoughts. But I fancy that the businessmen of England would be better pleased if we would do with Great Britain such a proportion of trade as we do to-day with the United States, for then they could buy their dreadnoughts out of their profits, and we should be better off. But our friends opposite have no suggestion with regard to that. They are prepared to shout 'loyalty,' but they are not prepared to reduce the tariff which now protects their manufacturing friends. Their loyalty goes so far as to shout 'disloyalty' against their opponents in politics, but it does not go so far as to reduce the duties on woollen goods, or even on cotton goods, more than they were reduced by those disloyal Grits fifteen years ago.

Mr. THOBURN: Why woollen and cotton goods? Is there nothing else?

Mr. OLIVER: For this reason, since my hon. friend has mentioned it: Woollens are a special necessity in this country of Canada with its cold winter; woollen goods are manufactured in England cheaper and better than anywhere else in the world. We are paying, as I have already said, an enormous protection to an insignificant woollen industry in Canada, and it is not sound economics to do so. It would be cheaper and better for the people of Canada to pension my hon. friend and his employees and let the woollens in free. The people of Canada would make millions of dollars a year by doing that very thing.

Mr. THOBURN: A few moments ago the hon. gentleman stated that though there was an increased cost to the consumer, the producer did not get a corresponding benefit.

Mr. OLIVER: In many cases.

Mr. THOBURN: Now, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would apply that to the woollen manufacturer. I do not think he would. But I wish to state for the information of that hon. gentleman and others here to-night that perhaps they are not aware of the small cost of making a suit of clothes, that is the small cost of Canadian manufacture. I will make this assertion and I can prove it: There is not a suit of clothes on any hon. gentleman in this Chamber to-night—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes, there is.

Other hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. THOBURN: Listen to what I have to say, and you can make your comments afterwards. On a suit of clothes that will average $30, which is a fair average price, the textile manufacturer does not receive more than $5. Now, where is the $25 gone?

Mr. OLIVER: I cannot answer that question. I am prepared to admit that there is similar leakage between the manufacturer of woollens and the consumer that there is between the grower of wheat and the buyer of flour. But that does not come into this question at the present time. The point is that we pay to-day a protective tax of $10,000,000 a year for the maintenance of our woollen industry and on the figures as they have been given to me, which I believe to be correct, the industry is not worth the money. I do not want to be understood as making any attack upon the manufacturing industry. The manufacturing industry is just as legitimate as any other industry, but it is no more legitimate. It is entitled to a square deal, and it is entitled to no more. If it cannot stand on fair terms, it has no business to stand at all. If there is an industry in Canada that cannot stand while receiving the protection of a fair revenue tariff, then I say that industry on the face of it, is not suitable to Canada and is costing Canada more than it is worth. I am speaking on behalf of an industry which—in the nature of things, I will admit—gets no protection; which, in the nature of things, can get no protection, and therefore those who are dependent upon it and connected with it, naturally are not in sympathy with the argument that this, that or the other industry should be maintained by a process of protection. I have heard some hon. members here today speak of the 'unreasonableness of free trade'. We are not arguing for free trade; we are arguing for a fair deal. As long as we are dependent upon a tariff for our revenue there is incidental protection, and nobody is suggesting anything else. But it is not that kind of a tariff that our friends on the other side believe in or that they support, or that they propose to force on this country whenever they are able to do so. We are not now asking for free trade; we are asking for freer trade; we are asking for lower taxes and freer trade; and we believe this is now an especial time, when, no matter what the principles of the Government may be, taxation should be reduced wherever it can be reduced, and particularly upon the necessities of life.

Now, I am speaking of course for the production of wheat—that is the great product of the western country. Owing to circumstances, some of which could be controlled and some of which not, during this past year the value of wheat, oats and flax to the farmer of the West has been considerably, materially and seriously below the price of the previous year, and below the price he expected to receive for these products. As a matter of fact, in an enormous number of cases the profit of the farmer of the West has been wiped out by the depression in the price of wheat and other grains. Roughly speaking, the price of wheat to the farmer this year is ten cents a bushel less than it was last year, and the price of oats is as much or nearly as much less. Here is a condition where the profits of a tremendous industry, employing thousands of people and producing the great source of the original wealth of this country, is largely wiped out by a depression in prices. At the moment we are not blaming anybody for that, but it is not satisfying to us to tell us that some other industry is entitled to protection at our expense when we cannot get protection in return. The price of wheat to the farmer this year is ten cents less than it was last year; is the price of bread to the consumer of eastern Canada less than it was last year? I saw in the papers since this session commenced that the price of bread had risen materially in eastern Canada. Let this be established beyond question: that under our present conditions the price received by the producer is not governed by the price paid by the consumer, nor is the price paid by the consumer governed by the price received by the producer. The conditions with regard to, wheat, flour and bread, the great and most important products of the country, is the evidence on that point. Taking the estimate of the Government as to the production of wheat, oats, barley and flax in the prairie provinces, we find a total of 426,000,000 bushels, and estimating a difference of ten cents a bushel between this year's price and last, we find a loss to the farmers of the prairie provinces of $42,000,000. In the face of that my hon. friend brings in a budget in which he glories, because he has taken $168,000,000 in taxes from the people, and he offers practically no relief in his adjustment of the tariff.

I do not know that it would be out of place, in this connection, when we are speaking of our overflowing treasury, to point out that during the second week of May the bank clearances in the various cities of Canada showed a decrease, as compared with the same week of the previous year. Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Calgary, Ottawa, Victoria, and others showed a decrease; the only large city showing an increase is Edmonton. I maintain again that the minister should have considered those conditions and should have dealt with them in his tariff schedule.

The minister dealt with the subject of immigration. I will not delay the House at any length, but there are certain important points in this connection, which, I think should have attention. I find that the immigration in 1911 was 311,000, in 1912, 354,000 and in 1913, 402,000, an increase of immigration in the three years of 100,000, which, as everybody will agree, is a very satisfactory increase. But I find in looking at the returns of the Department of the Interior that the homestead entries in 1911 were 44,479, in 1912, 39,151 and in 1913, 34,500, a decrease in the three years of 10,000 homestead entries. I want to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that while we have been getting an increase of 100,000 emigrants, in the three years, there has been a decrease of 10,000 homesteads in the three years. I do not elaborate on that point, but I think it will be evident that we are not getting people who are going on the land to the same degree that we were getting them in former years.

I desire to mention another point in connection with the matter of immigration. In 1911 we received from the United States nearly as many people as we received from Great Britain, and we received from countries other than the United States or Great Britain a third as many as from Great Britain. In 1912 again we received nearly the same number from the United States as from Great Britain, and over half as many from countries other than the United States or Great Britain. In 1913 we again received nearly as many from the United States as from Great Britain, but from other countries we received four-fifths as many as from Great Britain. Let me draw the attention of the Government to the important fact that while our total immigration has been increasing our immigration from continental Europe has increased much more rapidly than our immigration from Great Britain. I would argue that it is important that the Government should have a knowledge of these facts and should bend their energies more strongly than they are doing to-day to the securing of immigration from Great Britain, if we are to maintain the predominance of the British character of the people of this country.

My hon. friend's strong point was our great revenue: $168,000,000, $35,000,000 more than last year; an expenditure of $133,000,000, a surplus of $55,000,000, and a net surplus of $23,000,000. This is a magnificient statement looked at from a national standpoint, if the individual standpoint in any degree corresponds. But I notice that for the year that is now current my hon. friend has brought down main estimates of $179,000,000 and supplementary estimates of $23,500,000, a total estimate on the table at the present time of $202,000,000 as against the revenue last year of $168,000,000. As compared with the estimates of last year there is an increase in the main estimates of this year of $10,000,000 and with the supplementaries of $23,500,000 an increase over the estimates of last year of $33,500,000. Then with $10,000,000 more which will probably be taken for the construction of dreadnoughts in England and, say, $12,000,000 for railway subsidies, there will be an increase in our estimates of this year of $55,000,000 over those of last year.

Mr. WHITE: That would nearly wipe out the surplus would it not?

Mr. OLIVER: An increase of 25 per cent over the estimates of last year. We have had a long era of prosperity, we have had a swelling revenue. Our returns during the past year have been magnificent; but in view of the facts which are within the knowledge of the minister and of the Government,—with the statement of the bank clearings, with the knowledge of the money stringency, with the knowledge of lower prices for farm products, with all this knowledge, I ask my hon. friend how he justifies estimates which not only wipe out the surplus of the present year, but go far beyond any reasonable expectation of revenue of the current year. My hon. friend or the Government of which he is a distinguished member appear to me, as far as I can judge from the budget that he has presented, from the consideration I have been able to give it, to consider that the function of government is simply that of a tax gatherer and a spender—that so long as the money comes in there is nothing to be done except get rid of it. There is no recognition of the conditions under which this revenue has been derived or the conditions under which revenues will be derived during the coming year. I say that the time was ripe for recognition of those conditions in the tariff that was brought down. My hon. friend has not seen fit to recognize those conditions, and while it is true that he has not at the moment saddled us with increased taxation such as we certainly feared, and we are glad of that, we can only assume that he is prepared to take that course at the first favourable opportunity. He ignores the conditions which to-day demand a lowering of the rate of taxation, which demand a fair measure looking to the expansion of our trade, he boasts of the amount of money that he has been able to collect and he takes measures to increase rather than decrease the collections, while taking care of special friends in the meantime.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if no other member desires to engage in the discussion, I would like now to conclude the debate. We have had some interesting criticisms of the budget. Some very valuable information has been placed before the House and upon 'Hansard,' and some interesting arguments have been advanced. The tone of the debate has been fair, moderate and temperate, and in my reply I shall endeavour to emulate that spirit and tone. I followed each of the speakers with a great deal of interest and if the hour were not so late I should like to reply at considerable length; but as the debate has been somewhat protracted and as we are all desirous of bringing the session to an end at as early a date as possible and of concluding the legislation now before the House, I shall occupy but a small space in my reply. The Government has been charged, as was to be expected, with extravagance. An opposition, if it is an orthodox opposition, always accuses the Government of extravagance. I could hardly imagine an opposition thinking that it was discharging its whole duty to the country unless it charged the Government with extravagance and so I have no particular exception to take to the charge—

Mr. OLIVER: Is it not true?

Mr. WHITE:—which, however, I desire to confute. The hon. member for Halifax

(Mr. Maclean) followed by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and of course, the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has denounced the extravagance of the Government. But I observe that the denunciation was in very general terms. The main estimates have been before the House for some considerable time and the supplementaries were brought down before this debate commenced and yet I have not heard any criticism of the details of the estimates. I have not heard my hon. friend from Halifax condemn any of the large expenditures which we propose to make in his native city of Halifax. I should imagine that my hon. friend would be pleased at the expenditures which the Government is making this year in the city of Halifax. For example, the main estimates contain $2,500,000 for terminal facilities for the Intercolonial railway. I have heard no criticism or denunciation of that item on the part of my hon. friend. In the same way, the hon. member for Carleton denounced in a general way the extravagance of the Government, and when I said that nothing was too good for the Maritime provinces, he at once concurred and admitted that nothing was too good for the Maritime provinces.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not participate myself in any of these expenditures.

Mr. WHITE: I did not hear my hon. friend raise any exception to the large expenditures in the city of St. John which will inure to the benefit of the entire province of New Brunswick and the constituency of my hon. friend will derive its proportion of the advantage, and so I say that the denunciation has been very general in its character. When I was listening to it I could not but think of the lines of the late James Russell Lowell in the Bigelow papers.

> I do believe in freedom's cause,
> As far away as Paris is:
> I like to see her stick her claws,
> In them infernal Pharises.

As I have said, the criticism of the extravagances of the Government has been in the most general terms imaginable, and no hon. gentleman opposite had the temerity to come out and criticise any of the large items of expenditure which appear in the estimates. That has been noticeable in the discussion to which we have listened with so much interest during the past couple of days. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out that our expenditures are the largest in the history of Canada. I should expect that they would be. Canada is now larger than ever before, she has a greater population, greater trade, greater business, she is greater in every way than ever before. Why should not our expenditure be greater than ever before in the history of Canada? My hon. friend has pointed out that our estimates will reach one-fifth of the estimates of the United Kingdom. Well, our population is nearly one-fifth of the population of the United Kingdom, and our trade is about one-fifth of the total trade of the United Kingdom; so that as a matter of fact our trade and our estimates are keeping pace proportionately with the trade and the estimates of the United Kingdom.

My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) expressed his alarm at our expenditures, and put forward the opinion that we should curtail them this year. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has also expressed alarm. He asks how can we justify these expenditures in view of the financial stringency? My hon. friend from Halifax called attention to the fact that we should likely have reduced revenues on account of the financial stringency. Possibly, that may be, but I do not think so. To me, a most hopeful sign, a very hopeful sign indeed, is that notwithstanding the financial depression of the past year our revenues have kept up so well and are still increasing over those of last year. And we shall emerge in time from the financial depression. It is never well to be over timid about these matters, it is never well to be over cautious, especially in time of stringency. My hon. friend from Halifax said he thought that the immediate future was not roseate, and he referred to certain land speculations throughout Canada. While he stated that he was not pessimistic, the tone of his speech seemed to me to be decidedly pessimistic. Let me say to my hon. friend that I do not believe in the Government curtailing expenditure simply because it appears that, on account of financial depression, there might be a limitation of trade. My view is that that is the time to maintain your expenditure, because, by curtailing your expenditure, you aggravate the very condition that exists. The Government of Canada, with its surplus of the past year, and with its splendid financial position, would have no justification whatever for unduly limiting its expenditure, simply because we happen to be passing through a temporary period of financial depression, and even of diminished trade, although I am sure we shall not have a period of diminished trade, even if, on account of the financial stringency, we do not proceed at the same proportionate rate of increase over last year, as last year showed over the preceding year. I remembered a saying, I think it was by the late J. Pierpont Morgan, that a man should never be a bear in the United States. I say the same thing with regard to Canada, a man should never be a bear in Canada. There is only one spirit for Canada, and that is a spirit of unquenchable optimism. There is no other spirit possible in this country, having regard to our resources, to which I will refer at greater length a little later, and to the quality of the people who are our fellow citizens. We often hear that Canada will have a temporary setback. I confess that I see no signs of it at the present time and it is my belief that even if there should be a temporary cessation of trade activity, having regard to five year periods, or decades, there is only one future possible for Canada. We have a population to-day of 8,000,000, and it will soon be 10,000,000, 15,000,000, 25,000,000. The future can hold only one destiny for Canada, and that is continuous progress. I think we are all assured of that, and therefore to curtail our expenditure simply because we happen to have had a financial depression, which is world-wide, would seem to me to be an utterly unsound policy. So far as I can see, there is nothing to occasion undue caution, and, as I stated before, such a policy would aggravate the very condition which we seek to avoid.

My hon. friend from Halifax has contended for a reduction in taxation. He says that we should borrow for capital expenditure, and that we are taking too much money from the people of Canada. He also referred to the increased cost of living, and I shall briefly address myself to these two topics. My own view is that in times of abounding prosperity, it is well that the Government should pay its way, if possible. It will not always be able to do so. As I stated in my budget speech, it is not to be expected that Canada will be able to pay from her revenues her current expenditure, and also that expenditure which is properly chargeable to capital account, that expenditure which is made on those national undertakings that become part of the assets or plant of the people of Canada. But I think it is well, especially in times of prosperity, to aim to establish an equilibrium between income and outgo, and therefore I do not agree with my hon. friend that, in times such as these, we should adopt a policy of borrowing largely to meet our capital expenditures. We may have to borrow, I understand that we shall, but I think that as far as we can, we should aim at paying as we go. My hon. friend stated, and truly stated, that there is a distinction between current expenditure and capital expenditure. There is no doubt about that. That is a distinction which is observed, not only in connection with governmental finance, but in other finance. It is a well recognized principle, and I do not dissent from his view as to that. But I would say this, that if we preserve our credit in times of prosperity, and are able from time to time to reduce our national debt, if by any chance we should have a period of adversity, that would be the time to use our credit, to borrow, and to proceed with national expenditures which would innure to the benefit of the entire community upon national plant. Expenditure of that kind is fruitful expenditure; it is expenditure which will provide additional facilities for the carrying on of the business of the country. The estimates show that we shall require the revenues of 1913 and 1914.

A plea has been made that we should reduce the taxation, that we should return to the people a part of this large surplus, that we should substantially cut down the taxation. There are just a few observations that I have to make as to that. In the first place this is a low tariff country. The tariff of the United States, which has commanded the admiration of my hon. friend from Edmonton, is almost double our tariff.

Mr. OLIVER: I beg my hon. friend's pardon, the United States tariff does not command my admiration.

Mr. WHITE: I understood my hon. friend to speak just a few moments ago in terms of unqualified admiration of the tariff of the United States.

Mr. OLIVER: I was speaking in favour of the reductions in the United States tariff, not in favour of the tariff.

Mr. WHITE: I do not know whether the reductions have yet been made, but I understood my hon. friend to speak with admiration of the tariff of the United States, and to commend it to myself. I intended to ask him whether he would like me to adopt the United States tariff, even with the reductions. I do not think he would.

Mr. OLIVER: I was trying to say that my hon. friend and his friends had borrowed the example and the leadership of the Government of the United States in tariff matters, and I suggested that they should still continue to follow them, now that a reduction was being made.

Mr. WHITE: I do not see in what we could have followed the example of the United States in its tariff legislation, because the average tariff of the United States is forty-five per cent, while ours is only twenty-five per cent, and if the hon. gentleman will take our entire imports of dutiable and free goods he will find that our average tariff is only fifteen per cent, which shows that Canada is a very low tariff country as compared with the United States. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) would become a very hostile critic if I suggested we should adopt the tariff of the United States even if it should be lowered as proposed to Congress. We have presented estimates exceeding two hundred millions, and in addition to that there are railway subsidies, and we have to provide twelve million dollars for the purchase of Grand Trunk Pacific bonds, one million dollars a month during the year, on account of the so-called implementing judgment. We have a very large programme before us, not too large having regard to the requirements of the public and the necessities of the public service, but still large and comprehensive. It seems to me that unless our revenues are increased beyond what we anticipate, if we attempted to reduce the taxation to such an extent as has been suggested, Canada would enter upon a period of deficits which would come in for the most earnest condemnation of hon. gentlemen opposite who now suggest this course.

This country is growing. My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) spoke about the expenditure the old Government had made and of the large national undertakings they had in hand. Does he think the country is going to stand still simply because the Liberal Government went out of power and the Conservative Government came into power? There are other great national undertakings under way and there are still others which will be carrired out in the future, and this Government must provide the revenues to carry them to a successful conclusion unless it is derelict in its duty to the Canadian people. Hon. gentlemen opposite must not lose confidence in the country simply because they are in opposition. The country is growing; our trade is increasing; our population will be ten millions, fifteen millions, twenty-five millions, and we must look to the future and provide for carrying on the nation's business. Railways must be constructed, canals must be built, navigation must be improved, harbours must be deepened, docks must be built on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and the public service must be efficiently maintained. So far as I can see this country will need large revenues for years to come. The people of Canada realize that; they know that expenditure must be made and they are quite content that expenditure should be made, provided it is made honestly and for the purpose of providing national facilities for the carrying on of the business of the country. I think it was my predecessor who said that wise expenditure was true economy; it is not a question as to the amount of the expenditure, but as to whether that expenditure is justified and honestly made, and the people of Canada will find no fault with any government which keeps these things in view.

Among other things, we are building the Hudson Bay railway this year, and in the supplementary estimates we have placed four million dollars for the erection of terminal elevators throughout the West. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) raised no objection to that. His criticism of our extravagance, as he calls it, has been most general in character. I think he would hesitate to rise in his place and criticise any of the items in the estimates relating to the prairie provinces. If we look at the criticism launched against the budget we find it is not well founded; it is just the stock orthodox criticism of all oppositions. It seems natural for an opposition to adopt a pessimistic tone, but for the Government of Canada there is only one outlook and that is of optimism. We must be optimistic in regard to the future of this great country if we discharge our duties to the people who have placed us in office. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said that when you had an excessive surplus, you were apt to have expenditure which was unwise, unproductive, and corrupt, and in the same breath he mentioned the subsidy we had given to the province of Manitoba. I need not say that the increased subsidy to Manitoba was abundantly justified. The boundaries of Manitoba were extended and Manitoba was simply put in the position of her sister provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta. It was but a simple act of justice to a great province; there was nothing unwise, unproductive or corrupt about it.

We are making other expenditures; we are providing to expend ten million dollars over a period of ten years for the improvement of agriculture, and I think every one will say that is a wise expenditure. And, on highways, if hon. gentlemen opposite will let us do it, we are prepared to spend one-half million dollars a year. All this expenditure, I believe, will meet with the approval of the Canadian people.

Let me deal for a few moments with the cost of living, which has been discussed at very great length during the last couple of days by my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) and by my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell). There is no doubt the cost of living is a live question in the world to-day. It is not confined to Canada; the cost of living has increased all over the world, and it is a phenomenon which is not confined to this continent. It may be interesting, in view of the discussion, to examine briefly some of the causes which have been alleged for the increase in prices. In the first place, it has been stated that the increased gold production has had something to do with it. My own view is that is not nearly as important a cause as some seem to think. It is true the gold production has greatly increased during the past few years. Between 1871 and 1875 the average annual gold production was $115,000,000; from 1891 to 1895 it was $163,000,000; and it is now $500,000,000. That is a very large increase, and the argument has been that as gold is the standard of value, you may either measure commodities in terms of gold or gold in terms of commodities, and as gold has become cheap, commodities become dear. Those who put forward that argument lose sight of the fact that the commercial transactions of the world are carried on not so much upon gold as upon credit, and that the amount of gold which is used in connection with payments is very small indeed. Gold is not only the standard of value but an article of commerce. Of the production of gold every year a very large amount is used in commerce and finds its way into the several arts. Of the balance a very considerable amount forms part of the bankers' reserves. In addition to that, a great deal of gold is hoarded, I think, particularly in India. During the war in the Balkan peninsula, a great deal of gold has been hoarded in Europe.

It is a curious fact that, notwithstanding the increase in the production of gold, credit has not been cheapened. On the contrary, the price of money has been going up during the past fifteen years. There are very many causes for that. In the first place many new sections of the world have been opened up and are being developed. In Japan, China, India, Egypt, South America, Canada, in fact, in all parts of the world there has been a great period of development and of increased commerce and trade. Good times have prevailed for ten or fifteen years. As a result, rates of interest have been high. That, of course, has had its effect upon the cost of commodities. Speaking for myself, I do not believe that the increased production of gold has been a very important factor in the increase in cost of commodities.

Passing over rapidly the other factors which have been referred to, namely: the increase in urban population, which has been very considerable, and the profits of the middleman, I should like to deal for a moment with the Canadian situation so far as it relates to the increased cost of living. We must bear in mind that, in this country during the past few years, we have been engaged in the construction of enormous national undertakings. Three transcontinental railways traverse our part of this continent. The railway construction has been on a vast scale. Other constructions have been on a proportionate scale, so that our consuming population has been greatly increased, while our production has not correspondingly increased. The result is that in Canada the demands of the home market have been greatly enlarged over those of previous years. Therefore I think we can find an explanation for the falling off in our exports of certain of our agricultural products such as animals and their products, to which I referred in my budget.

The House is familiar with the method of determining the index number of a particular year. I understand that, in Canada, we take the period of ten years between 1890 and 1899, and some 200 commodities. We represent that period by 100. Then, by taking the average price of the same commodities in any particular year, we relate that to the 100 and determine what the index number for that particular year is. Following that method, I understand that the cost of living has increased in Canada about 37 per cent. The cost of living, having regard to those staple commodities, is between 35 and 40 per cent higher than it was between the years 1890 and 1899.

I wish to put forward a theory, which is not mine, but which appeals to me more than any other theory, in explanation of the phenomenon of the high cost of living. I found it interesting and I hope the House will not find it otherwise. It is that the chief factor in the high cost of living throughout the world is war and the cost of armanents. It is a very curious thing that the cost of living from 1867 to 1872 was higher, in Great Britain at least—I am not sure as to this continent—than almost at any period since. The period between 1890 and 1899 has, I have pointed out, a very low index number. Let us see what happened. The period in the early seventies succeeded the American war, the Franco-Prussian war and the war between Germany and Austria. After the war between Turkey and Russia, there was a long period of peace in the eighties and the nineties. The index number went down and the cost of living was lower then than at almost any other period preceding or succeeding. Then we come to 1898, when the Spanish-American war broke out. After that, we have the Boer war, and after that the great war between Russia and Japan. It is estimated that in these wars no less a sum than $5,000,000,000 was expended. Following that, we have the war between Greece and Turkey, and now the Balkan war. These wars have used up an enormous amount of the fruit of human industry, because money spent unproductively is just as much lost as if it had been cast into the sea. That money has been withdrawn from the capital of the world available for the development of agricutural districts, and for the opening up and settlement of new countries. These wars have withdrawn a very large number of men from productive employment, and have interrupted the occupations of millions more. The result has been a profound effect upon the economy of the world. I put the view forward, not as original, but as appealing to me more than any other that I have read, as being the cause of the world-wide phenomenon of the high cost of living. In addition to the actual amount expended in these wars, the increasing cost of armaments for similar reasons is having its effect also.

Therefore, so far as tariffs are concerned, while tariffs have an important influence upon the cost of living, I do not believe our tariff has a very serious effect upon the cost of living in this country. In the first place, it is a low tariff, not a high tariff, and this is an agricultural country; we produce the necessities of life. In time I have no doubt that the evil will cure itself. There is no reason why, with the influx of immigration and improved methods of farming, products should not greatly increase and the cost of living should not be materially decreased.

My hon. friend from Carleton touched on a subject which I do not propose to go into to-night; that is reciprocity. If we all started to discuss reciprocity and re-hashed the arguments of the 1911 campaign, we would be here all summer. But to my hon. friend it seems to be a Banquo's ghost, it will not down. He rehearses the arguments which are familiar to us about these benefits as giving a higher price to the farmer and at the same time reducing the price to the consumer. I would point out to him that, while that argument may avail in the province of New Brunswick it did not avail in the province of Ontario. The people of Ontario could not understand how a farmer with a farm on the confines of a town could get more for his butter and eggs, and at the same time the people of the town be able to get their butter and eggs at a less price. I do not know whether they are as intellectual as the people of my hon. friend's constituency, I think they are both intellectual peoples. But in Ontario they could not be made to understand that, and I doubt if they can ever be made to understand it. My hon. friend says he is going to hope on, hope ever, with regard to reciprocity. Well,

> Hope springs eternal in the human breast;
> Man never is, but always to be, blest.

So we will leave it at that.

Some discussion has taken place of a more or less desultory character with regard to our tariff. I am not going to discuss that now. I said in my budget that it seemed to me a sound policy that there should be a revision of the tariff of a general character from time to time, and that in the intervening periods tariff modifications should be very sparingly made if at all. And I still believe that that is a sound policy. I do not like to refer to the policy of our neighbours to the south, but I may say in a general way that I have been told by business men there that the continuous tariff interference, usually called tariff tinkering, has a very bad effect upon business, and that at the present time it is having quite an unsettling effect; however, I pass no opinion on that. I simply desire to say that our tariff, presenting as it does, many anomalies, should be revised at certain intervals, and that in the meantime changes should be made sparingly, if at all.

My hon. friend from Edmonton touched upon the sugar question, and he was in pretty deep waters. The sugar question is one of the most complicated that we have to deal with, as I pointed out before. My hon. friend has found out that we presented two and a half million dollars to the sugar refineries. Well, I never knew a journalist who was good at figures, and I think the hon. gentleman is no exception to that rule.

Mr. OLIVER: I understand that my hon. friend is a journalist also.

Mr. WHITE: Well, I never was good at figures.

Mr. OLIVER: If so, the hon. gentleman may easily be wrong now.

Mr. WHITE: When the hon. gentleman took his pen in hand this time, he got into very deep waters indeed. I would point out that nearly all the refined sugar consumed in Canada is manufactured in our own refineries. The amount that comes in except from Great Britain is almost negligible, and I think that fully ninety-five per cent of the whole consumption is manufactured in Canada. How the hon. gentleman makes out that two and a half million dollars was presented to the sugar refiners passes my comprehension. I think he chose $2,500,000 as being a good round sum, and he introduced it as helping to give plausibility to his criticism of our tariff changes.

Mr. OLIVER: I said the hon. gentleman had reduced the duty on raw sugar and had not reduced it on the refined, and the refiner got the benefit.

Mr. WHITE: The hon. gentleman is an economist of the Liberal school. Suppose the sugar comes in at a low duty, why should not the public get the benefit? Why should not the manufacturer turn out the goods more cheaply?

Mr. OLIVER: He could, but he will not.

Mr. WHITE: Then, the hon. gentleman's contention with regard to the tariff changes falls to the ground.

Mr. OLIVER: If my hon. friend had reduced the duty on refined to correspond with the raw sugar, the consumer would have got the benefit.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend does not realise that the duty on refined sugar under the preferential tariff remains precisely where it was.

Mr. OLIVER: That is precisely what I do know.

Mr. WHITE: It remains at 83, while the other was cut down from 53 to 40. And I pointed out that we had taken from the sugar refiners the benefit given them by my predecessor of importing free foreign raw sugar to the extent of twenty per cent of their production. I also quoted on the occasion of my budget speech, and the hon. gentleman must have heard it, the opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Fielding, that he aimed to give a protection of one half cent a pound. We give less than that. My hon. friend is really criticising my predecessor, his own colleague. He does not realise what an intricate question this sugar question is. I do not blame him, because I have put in a good deal of time trying to understand it. The modifications of the tariff with regard to sugar were given the most careful consideration. The sugar refiners are not in any better position than they were in before, and there has been a reduction in the price of sugar to the consumer.

Mr. OLIVER: I must say that what aroused my interest was that the sugar refiners approved strongly of the reduction. I thought it was worth looking into.

Mr. WHITE: I understand that my hon. friend approves of reduction in the tariff. The price of sugar came down correspondingly immediately after the announcement was made. I stated that we did not desire to make any sweeping reductions that would cause substantial loss of revenue on sugar.

Mr. CARVELL: Would the Minister like to guarantee that the price will remain down?

Mr. WHITE: I would not; but I think it will remain down. I think competition applies with regard to sugar.

Mr. OLIVER: Not in Canada.

Mr. WHITE: I think so. The modifications have not only been carefully considered but they are modifications that had to be made to the terms of the agreement. The hon. member complains that we cut down the preference to the West India grower. But he knows that that course was recommended by the imperial commission of which Mr. Fielding was a member, and the report of that commission was the very basis of our action. They suggested that the preference of 31 cents might be reduced to 15 cents, in order to prevent the grower from taking the whole of the British preference to the disadvantage of the Canadian sugar refiner; and the West India grower desired to obtain an exclusive preference of the Canadian product and insisted that the twenty-per-cent privilege should be abolished. We have abolished it and have endeavoured to put our refiners in the position they were in before. They are in no better position. That twenty-per-cent privilege was very valuable to them. I do not believe they are in as good a position as they were before. So, when the hon. gentleman says we have presented $2,500,000 to the Canadian sugar refiners, he is simply out in his arithmetic.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend is a journalist and I am afraid he is out. May I ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE: Might I suggest that it would be well to wait until we get into Committee and have the special items under discussion. The hon. gentleman has also referred to the cement reduction. In the debate on the Address, my hon. friend apparently acquiesced in and approved of the cut we made temporarily in the cement duty, but said our motive was wrong. He would rather not have the cut because it happened to be made just before the Saskatchewan elections, but the very paper of which my hon. friend is proprietor—and I suppose he sometimes has time to write editorials—the Edmonton Bulletin, clamoured for the reduction for weeks before we made it. Yet my hon. friend has the temerity to get up in this House and criticise the Government for taking a course which was advocated by his paper in the strongest possible manner.

Mr. OLIVER: Will my hon. friend tell the House why he does not continue that reduction?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend promised me his support if I would do a certain thing; fancy this Government being supported by my hon. friend. I do not believe, however, that he would be a very permanent prop; I think he would not be likely to remain very long. However we did reduce the rate from 12½ cents to 10 cents. My hon. friend, I have heard, approved the reciprocity agreement. If my hon. friend were in his seat now, I would ask him what the extent of the cut was under that agreement. I think he is aware of the fact that the duty was reduced to eleven cents; we reduced it to ten cents.

Mr. OLIVER: It was one and a half cents under reciprocity and two and a half cents under your arrangement.

Mr. WHITE: Under the reciprocity agreement it was standing at eleven cents; under our arrangement it stands at ten cents, and yet my hon. friend gets up and criticises. We are all anxious to please our loving friends on both sides of the House, and yet no matter what we do, even if we cut the duty on cement below the reciprocity figure, my hon. friend is not satisfied. My hon. friend speaks about wheat. I desire to quote from the Toronto Globe, a journal of repute—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. WHITE: Some of my hon. friends deny that, but certainly it is in sympathy with the opinions of the hon. member for Edmonton. Speaking about the United States tariff revision, the article says:

The reduction proposed in the duty on wheat will affect the Canadian producer very little now. The United States is producing too much surplus wheat in these days to afford us a profitable market there. With reserves on March 31 amounting to about 156,000,000 bushels and a new winter crop coming in about the 1st of July which promises to greatly exceed that of a year ago, the United States is a huge exporter yet. With her new irrigation methods there are large wheat areas yet untouched. There is promise that she will be a large exporter for many years to come.

To show how unreasonable my hon. friend is in his criticism, I may say that he criticised me for not lowering the duty upon steel rails. He called attention to the fact that we had remitted the duty upon rails. He called attention to the fact that we had remitted the duty upon steel rails, and he approved of that. His hon. leader got up in this House and criticised the Government very severely for remitting that duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not exactly that: the method by which it was done.

Mr. WHITE: My right hon. friend was, then, satisfied with the remission of duty, but not with the method by which it was done. The hon. member for Edmonton expressed no dissatisfaction at all; he approved of what was done. So that my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Edmonton apparently do not see eye to eye in regard to this matter.

I have taken up a good deal of time replying to the criticism which has been made of the budget speech, and I just desire to say this in conclusion. We shall have in this country, a large revenue, and we shall have large expenditures to make. I think there is, as I have said before, only one spirit for Canada, and that is the spirit of optimism. We can look forward to a great future in this country, a future of which, I am sure, we shall all be proud. We have here, a dominion in area the size of Europe; I sometimes think we do not fully realize what a vast heritage has been handed down to us. We have not only the historical maritime provinces and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario but we have the three great prairie provinces, each one the size of modern Germany, and we have the great province of British Columbia, potentially one of the richest, if not the richest, province in the confederation. Great responsibilities devolve upon the Government of this country. We must have a vision for the future; we must not be timid with regard to making expenditures, if those expenditures can be justified from a national standpoint. As I say, confederation in this country is only possible when we have the freest intercourse between the several provinces. We shall have our transportation problems, and the matter of transportation is the most important question in Canada to-day. We must be prepared to assist railway development in Canada; we must be prepared to build and deepen our canals, improve our navigation, and construct docks and other facilities for our shipping on both coasts. We must be prepared to maintain our public service. All this will require a vast expenditure, but, as I said a little while ago, the people of Canada will approve of any expenditure on the part of the Government, no matter how large it may be, if it is reasonably within our revenues or our borrowing powers—if they are capital expenditures—and provided they are required by the country and are honestly made. I have to thank hon. gentlemen opposite for the very temperate and moderate tone in which the debate upon the budget speech has been conducted; I think it has been well received. It bears all the evidences of the prosperity which this country is now enjoying, and, notwithstanding the financial stringency to which attention has been drawn, I think we may look forward with confidence to increasing trade and increasing prosperity. Personally, I always feel optimistic with regard to Canada's future; I do not think there is any room for the pessimist in this country. In making generous provision, therefore, for the public services in a growing period such as we are now passing through, we feel that we can abundantly justify our proposed expenditures before the people of Canada.

Motion (Mr. White) agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

20. Cocoa paste or liquor and chocolate paste or liquor not sweetened, in blocks or cakes per pound: British preferential tariff, 3½ cents; intermediate, 4 cents; general, 4 cents.

Mr. WHITE: The old rates were two and a half cents, three cents and three cents. There has been an increase of one cent a pound. The reason for the change is the duty placed on cocoa beans under schedule C of the West Indies agreement. My hon. friend will recall that cocoa beans are placed on the free list so far as the West Indies are concerned, but that there is a duty as against foreign countries. The average quantity of chocolate paste obtained from one hundred pounds of cocoa beans is seventy-five pounds. The tariff of the United Kingdom, based on the principle of furnishing no protection to the manufacturer, is as follows: On raw cocoa, the cocoa bean, one penny per pound; on cocoa or chocolate, ground, prepared or in any way manufactured, two pence per pound. That is a difference of one penny per pound. Our manufacturers will not be able to obtain all their cocoa from the West Indies, although the production from the West Indies would, so far as amount is concerned, be adequate. They require to use certain blends, different colours in their products, and, after giving the matter very careful considerasideration, the experts of my department and of the Customs Department came to the conclusion that one cent should be added.

20a. Butter produced from the cocoa bean, per pound: British preference, 1½ cents; intermediate, 2 cents; general, 2 cents.

Mr. White: The old rates were two and a half cents, three cents and three cents.

21. Cocoa paste or liquor and chocolate paste, per pound: British preference, 3½ cents; intermediate, 4 cents; general, 4 cents.

Mr. WHITE: The old rate was two and three-quarters cents, and the new rate is three and a half cents under the preference. The reason for this change is the duty placed on raw cocoa under schedule C. There is an increase of three-quarters of a cent under the British preference.

22. Preparations of cocoa or chocolate on powder form: British preference 20 p. c.; intermediate, 25 p. c.; general, 25 p. c.

Mr. WHITE: It was fifteen per cent under the old tariff under the preference, the intermediate twenty per cent, and the general twenty per cent.

23. Preparations of cocoa and chocolate in powder form: British preferenc , ½ cent per pound and 22½ per cent; intermediate, ½ cent per pound and 35 per cent; general, ½ cent per pound and 35 per cent.

Mr. WHITE: One-half cent a pound has been added there under all three rates. The reason is the change made in the duty on cocoa beans under schedule C.

Mr. CARVELL: That was an ad valorem before ?

Mr. WHITE: It is retained ad volorem plus one-half cent a pound. There is a combination tariff there now.

Mr. CARVELL: That is a pretty severe tax, is it not ?

Mr. WHITE: No, I think not; at all events, it is rendered necessary by the agreement.

39a. Rice flour, sago flour, cassava flour, tapioca flour and rice meal: British preference, ¾ cent per pound; intermediate tariff, 1 cent per pound; general tariff, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. WHITE: The reason for inserting this item here is that cassava flour has been introduced. The rate is exactly the same.

39b. Arrowroot, per pound: British preference, ½ cent; intermediate, 1 cent; general, 1 cent.

Mr. WHITE: The old rate was fifteen per cent, seventeen and a half per cent, and seventeen and a half per cent.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): How will that work out ad valorem ?

Mr. WHITE: The agreement calls for one-half cent preference. The reduction in revenue is about two hundred dollars.

63a. Rice bran: British preference, 12½ per cent; intermediate, 17½ per cent; general, 17½ per cent.

Mr. WHITE: There is a reduction from fifteen per cent to twelve and a half per cent; a reduction of two and a half per cent on the British preference.

69a. Cattle food containing molasses: British preference, 15 per cent; intermediate, 20 per cent; general, 20 per cent.

Mr. NESBITT: What is the difference there ?

Mr. WHITE: The general tariff is increased two and a half per cent there. The reason for that change is to be found in section 2 of the agreement. The preference is the same, fifteen per cent.

77. Beans, tonquin and vanilla, crude only: free.

Mr. WHITE: There is no change in the duty there, they are all on the free list. Cocoa beans are left out, as they are especially dealt with under the agreement, and therefore the words 'cocoa beans' have been eliminated from this particular item.

77a. Cocoa, beans, not roasted, crushed or ground, per 100 pounds: British preference, free; intermediate, 75 cents; general, 75 cents.

Mr. WHITE: This change is made to comply with the agreement.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): How would that tariff work out in ad valorem rates, seventy-five cents per hundred pounds, at present cost?

Mr. WHITE: About six per cent.

101. Oranges, shaddocks or grape fruit, and lemons: free.

Mr. WHITE: The word 'limes' is eliminated from this item. That is the reason the item is inserted here.

101a. Limes: British preferential, free; intermediate, 10 per cent; general, ten per cent.

Mr. CARVELL: What are limes to be now?

Mr. WHITE: Ten per cent in the general tariff.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Do we import limes from any other country? Will there be any competition?

Mr. WHITE: I think not. We import lemons, but not limes. We import a number of lemons from Italy, I think.

Mr. NESBITT: Do we not get limes from the South?

Mr. WHITE: Practically none, I am told.

109. Nuts of all kinds, n.o.p., including shelled peanuts, per pound: British preference, 1 cent; intermediate, 2 cents; general, 2 cents.

Mr. CARVELL: Is that an increase?

Mr. WHITE: The new rates are three-quarters of a cent less on the British preferential tariff, and the same on the general tariff.

111. Cocoanuts, when imported from the place of growth, by ship, direct to a Canadian port, per one hundred: British preference, free; intermediate, 50 cents; general, 50 cents.

Mr. CARVELL: Is that a reduction?

Mr. WHITE: This is free. The old rate was thirty cents per one hundred in the British preferential tariff and the same in the general tariff, and the intermediate has been made the same as the general.

134. All sugar above number sixteen Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, testing not more than eighty-eight degrees by the polariscope, per one hundred pounds: British preference, 72 cents; intermediate, 93 cents; general, 93 cents.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would like to call the attention of the minister to a matter in connection with the sugar tariff. My attention has been called to the fact that the dumping clause is applied against importations of American granulated sugar purchased at the market price, because the United States Government make a rebate of five per cent of the duty paid on raw sugar when it is exported as refined. Perhaps it will make my point clear if I read a short extract from a letter I have received from an importer of sugar. Upon the point I have just mentioned, he says:

What we would like to see done for the protection of the consumer in Canada is to have the dumping clause as applied to sugar cancelled. As you of course are aware, the object of this dumping clause was to prevent goods being sold in Canada at a lower price than they were sold for home consumption in the country they were manufactured. Now, in buying American granulated sugar, one has to buy at the ruling market price in New York, Boston, or Philadelphia; and when that sugar is exported, the seller secures from the United States Government a drawback of a certain proportion of the duty paid on the raw sugar from which the refined is manufactured. This we are sure you will agree with us, is not a case of selling at a lower price for export than for home consumption; but, ever since the dumping clause came into effect in Canada, the customs officials have insisted that the dumping clause should be applied for this reason, which on American granulated sugar increased the duty to about $1.95 per 100 pounds.

I refer to this for the purpose of calling the minister's attention to it. It strikes me that it is worth investigation. The objection seems to me rather substantial. It is hardly a case where the dumping clause should be applied.

Mr. WHITE: I am not quite sure that I understood my hon. friend. He is no doubt aware that the dumping clause does not apply to sugar refined in the United Kingdom, but does apply to sugar refined in the United States.

Mr. MACLEAN: When sold below the market price there.

Mr. WHITE: Yes, when sold below the market price there. But the United Kingdom is especially excepted from its provisions. I am not quite sure whether the point my hon. friend was making is that the Department of Customs is, or is not, enforcing it.

Mr. MACLEAN: They are enforcing it against American refined sugar imported. I assume the customs officials take the ground that although American sugar may be bought by Canadian buyers at the ruling market price, because the exporter or the American seller secures a rebate of five per cent on account of that sugar being exported, there has been a sale below the market price. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend having called my attention to the matter, I shall be glad to look into it. I am not in a position to discuss it at present. I am told by my officer here that the dumping clause would apply under such circumstances.

Mr. MACLEAN: I am instructed that it is applied, and the Canadian importers object to that. They say that the only reason that it is applied is because the American exporter secures a refund of five per cent upon his raw sugar when the refined sugar is exported, but the Canadian buyer of that sugar does not receive any advantage from the refund of duty. He buys apparently at the market rate, but because the seller secures a refund, the customs officials rule that it is a sale below the current market price.

Mr. WHITE: I am glad to have had my attention directed to that.

Mr. NESBITT: The minister stated the other night in his speech that the provision, allowing the beet sugar factories here to bring in sugar at a certain price while their factories were not running, so as to keep them employed, expires in 1914. I would like to say for the beet sugar refiners, and the only beet sugar refiners I know in Canada that do a large business are those at Wallaceburg and Berlin, that they have been in the habit of selling direct to the retailer. I suppose my hon. friend knows that the other large sugar refiners throughout the country sell to the wholesaler, and the price is arranged as between the refiner and the wholesaler. These beet sugar people have been in the habit of selling direct to the retailer throughout the province of Ontario, and as far west as Winnipeg, to my certain knowledge, and I know that the retail people throughout the country think it is a benefit, not only to themselves but to their customers, because they are able by selling direct to sell more closely to their customers than they would otherwise be able to do. I understand that the arrangement does not expire till 1914, and perhaps it is rather early to bring it up now, but I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact, which I think is worth while considering in the interests of the public.

Mr. WHITE: I am glad to have that information.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like to get a little better understanding of the situation with regard to sugar.

Mr. WHITE: We estimate there will be a reduction in revenue of $622,000 by virtue of this change.

Mr. OLIVER: Our importations of raw sugar for the last year were fourteen and one half million pounds.

Mr. WHITE: Yes, about that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How much do you import from Germany and how much from Great Britain?

Mr. WHITE: Raw sugar, 1912, imported under the general tariff, 204,000,000 pounds; under the preferential tariff, 358,000,000 pounds.

Mr. CARVELL: Then if the manufacturer does not reduce the price of his manufactured article to the consumer, he benefits entirely to the extent of the $622,000; is that correct?

Mr. WHITE: No, the key of this tariff modification we are making is the twenty per cent privilege that the sugar refiner had which enabled him to import twenty per cent of his product of foreign raw sugar at preferential rates. We have set off this further reduction as against the taking away of that privilege.

Mr. CARVELL: How much does that figure out?

Mr. WHITE: It is a set-off for the abolition of that privilege. It is of course absolutely impossible to precisely set the one off against the other. My statement to the House was that it would give rise to a slight reduction in the price of sugar. The thing I had in mind was that the price of sugar should not be increased but rather reduced.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Since the tariff was announced has there been a reduction in the price of sugar to the consumer?

Mr. WHITE: Yes, I am told it has been reduced by twenty cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister sees the manufacturer will have to pay in the end the same price for his sugar, because while he receives fifty per cent on the West India product he has to pay twenty per cent more to the foreigner.

Mr. WHITE: No, we have reduced the rate from fifty-three to forty.

Mr. CARVELL: If the manufacturer gives the consumer a square deal, the consumer will get a reduction of twenty cents on the hundred pounds. If the manufacturer does not give this fair deal to the consumer, we have no way of getting at him because he still has the same protection on the finished product. Why did not the minister reduce the duty on the finished product the same as he did on the raw sugar?

Mr. WHITE: There is a reduction in the general tariff of seventeen cents on refined sugar.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any refined sugar imported under the general tariff?

Mr. WHITE: Under the general tariff we imported 4,000,000 pounds value $154,000; under the preferential 18,000,000 pounds, value $650,000; total quantity 23,000,000 pounds valued at $814,000. Under the general tariff there comes in about one-fourth of that which comes in under the preferential. There is a reduction on refined sugar of seventeen cents per hundred pounds under the general tariff. The preferential tariff on refined sugar remains the same. We have reduced the British preference from fifty-three to forty on raw sugar and the change that is made is a set-off, so far as the manufacturer is concerned, against the privilege he lost.

Mr. CARVELL: There is no reduction in the British preferential on the refined product.

Mr. WHITE: No.

Mr. CARVELL: Then if there is no reduction in the preferential, nothing is done for the consumer because the man who imports under the general tariff has to meet the competition of the importation under the preferential tariff.

Mr. WHITE: We have cut the general down from $1.24 to $1.07.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, but the price of sugar is governed by the preferential rate. The man whom the Canadian refiner fears is the man on the Clyde. He does not fear the man in Germany. The only way in which my hon. friend can reduce the cost of sugar to the consumer in Canada is to reduce the preferential tariff. If he cuts the preferential tariff down twenty cents a hundred pounds, the Clyde manufacturer will send it in that much cheaper and the Canadian refiner will have to meet that competition.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend knows that the British manufacturer is supposed to get the advantage of the British preference. He may not get it all, but the idea is that he shall get it all.

Mr. CARVELL: Certainly.

Mr. WHITE: Therefore the general tariff is the tariff that determines the rate. The preferential tariff is for the purpose of giving the British manufacturer a preference in the Canadian market. Take the case of the Greenock refiner. He does not pay any duty upon his raw sugar, whereas the Canadian refiner pays forty cents on his raw sugar from the West Indies; and, if it comes in from any other place, he pays fifty-seven cents. That is his disadvantage. That is due to the fact that we derive a revenue upon sugar; we impose a tariff upon it. It is perfectly obvious that, if some advantage were not given to the Canadian manufacturer to off-set this disadvantage, he would go out of business. Therefore the tariff is amended accordingly.

Mr. CARVELL: If you made raw sugar free in Canada, you would put the Canadian refiner in a position to compete with the Greenock refiner. My hon. friend has prevented himself from doing that, because he has stated that for the next ten years we must give fifteen per cent protection.

Mr. WHITE: You can make raw sugar free.

Mr. CARVELL: You have to give the West Indian producer a twenty per cent preference. You cannot make raw sugar free by reason of the West Indian Trade Agreement, but you can make it as free as possible by getting the duty down to fifteen cents per hundred pounds. Then you could get the manufactured article down to a correspondingly low figure. My hon. friend makes a slight reduction in the general tariff. I understand that means that there will be a proportionate reduction in the preferential tariff. He makes a reduction of only seventeen and one-half cents in the general tariff; that means only five and one-half cents reduction in the British preference which is a mere nothing. You are only giving the consumer a benefit of about five cents a hundred pounds. I contend that you should make the raw sugar as nearly free as you can; let the West Indian Trade Agreement remain as it is, and then reduce the duty on the refined article proportionately. You will then be doing something for the Canadian consumer. We should not be compelled to pay four or five million dollars duty on sugar when we have $55,000,000 of a surplus.

Mr. WHITE: As I pointed out before, the ex-Minister of Finance went into this matter—

Mr. CARVELL: The ex-minister of Finance is out of office and has been out for two years. We want the present Minister of Finance to consider things as they are.

Mr. WHITE: I submit that Mr. Fielding's finding as to the protection that should be afforded to sugar refiners in Canada, having regard to the fact that the British refiner buys in a free market and that the Canadian manufacturer buys subject to a duty, is worthy of respect. His opinion is that the protection should be half a cent a pound or fifty cents a hundred pounds. We have made it forty cents, that is to say, ten cents less a hundred pounds than, in Mr. Fielding's opinion, would constitute a proper protection.

My hon. friend has referred to the fact that we have deprived ourselves of the position of being able to put raw sugar on the free list. That is true so far as foreign raw sugar is concerned. It is not with regard to the British West Indies, from which 70 per cent of our importations of raw sugar come. If you decide to put raw sugar on the free list, only the other thirty per cent of raw sugar coming from foreign countries will be affected. So far as the agreement is concerned, it would not be a very serious matter if Canada decided to put raw sugar on the free list. We have decided not to do so for the reason that we need the revenue.

Mr. OLIVER: Need the revenue?

Mr. WHITE: Half a million dollars.

Mr. OLIVER: That is exactly our point. We claim that under present conditions we do not need the revenue. That is where the difference exists between present conditions and conditions under Mr. Fielding. He needed the revenue; we do not.

Mr. WHITE: I thought I converted my hon. friend a little while ago in regard to the fact that we need the revenue. My hon. friend pointed out that our expenditure is running over $200,000,000; that we are extravagant, and I suppose he is wondering whether or not we will have a deficit. Of course we need the revenue. That is the point I am making. If we had decided to cut off what my hon. friend never thought of doing when he was in office, that is to say, the duty on sugar, of course we could have it except in so far as foreign raw sugar is concerned.

Mr. OLIVER: I understood my hon. friend to say that he had in some way reduced the protection to the refiners by putting the duty on raw sugar at 40 cents a hundred.

Mr. WHITE: Instead of 53.

Mr. OLIVER: He had reduced the protection to the refiner, by giving him raw sugar at forty cents instead of at 53 cents?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend, in order to ascertain the protection, must take into consideration the duty on raw sugar; and the duty on refined sugar. The difference is 42 cents in the preferential tariff, which is really the important figure, and 50½ cents in the general.

Mr. OLIVER: I thought my hon. friend was speaking of the duties. He is speaking of the difference between the duties on the raw and the refined.

Mr. WHITE: Yes, there is forty cents of a difference.

Mr. OLIVER: What I say here is that, whereas the refiners formerly paid a duty of 52½ cents on his raw sugar, he will now pay a duty of 40¾ cents. He has the same protection as he had before, namely 83 cents per hundred pounds on his refined sugar, because it is the preference that governs in the case of sugar, just as it is the preference that governs in the case of woollens, because Great Britain is the supplier of that article. In the same way the British preference on agricultural implements does not amount to anything, because we get our implements from the United States. The general tariff in regard to sugar, which we do not get from any other country except the West Indies, does not govern; it is the preferential rate that governs. We have reduced the raw sugar to the refiners and we have not reduced the protection to the refiners. We are benefiting the refiner in that case. If he likes to hand on the benefit to the consumer, well and good. He may have done so for the purpose of making an argument for this West Indian treaty. I would be willing to grant that it will not be long until the price is back to what it was before, unless the duty on refined sugar is reduced in proportion to the duty on raw sugar. If my hon. friend innocently imagines that there is a free market in refined sugar in Canada—well, I cannot imagine that he imagines such a thing. He knows that there is a hard and fast combine among the makers of refined sugar in Canada.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend's acquaintance with combines is much better than mine. I have heard it stated that there is a combine, but I do not know it.

Mr. OLIVER: But the hon. gentleman has heard it stated.

Mr. WHITE: I have heard it stated in this House. I think the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) stated it. My hon. friend from Edmonton has not correctly stated the position. The preferential rate of duty on raw sugar has been reduced from fifty-three to forty, and the preferential duty on refined remains at eighty-three. But my hon. friend has omitted to mention what I have again and again referred to, and which must be taken into consideration—the twenty-per-cent privilege enjoyed by refiners which is now taken away. The reduction of fifty-three to forty is an offset to the withdrawal of that advantage. The figures have been arrived at with a view to leaving the matter as nearly as we could where it was, except to make a slight reduction in sugar.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If it is correct that the preferential duty remains the same as before, the protection to the refiner is the same as it was before. Why then does the refiner make any reduction?

Mr. WHITE: I think it is not exactly the same as before. My hon. friend knows that it is very difficult to estimate what was the value to the refiners of the twenty-per-cent privilege.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That does not matter; that is a question relating to the raw sugar, which is a matter of interest to the refiner. But that concession was taken away from him and another concern is given in place of it. It may be a matter of book-keeping with him; but he had a certain protection before, and he has got it yet. That would enable him to keep his sugar at exactly the same price as he sold it at before, if he takes advantage of that protection. Apparently he has not done so. Can the minister explain why the refiner has reduced his price when he did not need to do so?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has overlooked the fact that we have reduced the duty on refined sugar under the general tariff by seventeen cents.

Mr. NESBITT: How much is brought in under the general tariff?

Mr. WHITE: I gave that a little while ago. It is a substantial amount. Then there was the twenty-per-cent privilege which was a valuable one, and shown to be a valuable one by the attitude towards it of the British West India representatives when they were here. They made it a condition precedent that that concession should be abolished, because they wanted an exclusive preference in our market. It is impossible to ascertain mathematically what that privilege was worth. It enabled the refiners to buy at certain times to prevent the British West India planter from taking the full benefit of the preference. It had been found by the commission that the West India planter did take the entire preference at some certain times of the year and a very substantial part of it at other times. Mr. Fielding gave the refiners this twenty per cent privilege to meet the situation. Taking away that privilege, we sought to make a readjustment which would compensate the refiner for that privilege, and, not being able to determine mathematically what that compensation should be, I wished the adjustment to be such that, if the price of sugar were affected at all, there should be a reduction. In other words, I would not like to see the price of sugar increase, but preferred a decrease. I said it would decrease, and it has.

Mr. CARVELL: I like to see it decrease too. But I submit that the Minister should have taken means in this budget, while dealing with the sugar duty, to give the people a chance to get their sugar cheaply. The hon. gentleman says he does not know that combines exist neither do I know it; but I have a shrewd suspicion that they do exist. I will tell the hon. gentleman something which was given to me by a very responsible member of this House—and he gave me permission to use it if I chose to do so. That hon. gentleman has in his possession what was originally a $500 stock certificate in a sugar refinery in this country. Within the last few years that has increased by bonus addition to $1,500, and he is drawing figures eight per cent on that $1,500. And this year, they are going to have it doubled again and still get the big dividends on the amount. I will give the hon. minister the name of that member of the House and of the sugar refining company in confidence, if he wishes. He can investigate the matter and see whether, in view of evidence like this, something should not be done by amendment of the sugar duties to take away the enormous profits that refiners are making; and give the people a fair deal in the matter of sugar.

Mr. WHITE: If the sugar comes in to all the sugar refineries in Canada on the same terms, it is only the existence of a combine that would prevent the free play of the law of supply. I understand the hon. gentleman to suggest that there are combines and that the manufacturers are making undue profits.

Mr. CARVELL: Of course.

Mr. WHITE: They could do that if the raw sugar came in free.

Mr. CARVELL: Reduce the duty on the manufactured article.

Mr. OLIVER: What we are asking for is a reduction in the duty on the manufactured article corresponding to that made on the raw sugar. We complain that that has not been done.

Mr. WHITE: I do not want to employ the tu quoque argument, but my hon. friend might have thought of that a good while ago.

Mr. OLIVER: No, that is no good. There never was a surplus of $55,000,000 before; we never before saw the time when the Government had so much money it did not know how to spend, which is the condition to-day. The hon. gentleman never expected to have the revenue he has or he would have made provision last year to spend it, as he is now providently making in order to be sure that he will not have it again.

Mr. WHITE: But my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said there never were such expenditures in the estimates before.

Mr. OLIVER: And there never were.

Mr. WHITE: That is the situation; it is a record revenue and a record expenditure required by the needs of the country.

Mr. DOUGLAS: What will be the effect of these changes on the Hawaiian sugar coming in through British Columbian ports?

Mr. WHITE: The British Columbia situation has been kept in mind as well as the other. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has in mind the interest of the manufacturer or whether he was thinking of it from another standpoint. At all events, that question had to be carefully considered.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I was speakng from the standpoint of the consumer. The British Columbia refiners provide refined sugar for the whole of the western provinces as far east as Brandon, where the Montreal refiners meet them in competition. What I want to know is if this West Indian treaty is going to affect the supply of raw material to the British Columbia refineries to the extent that it may increase the cost of sugar in western Canada.

Mr. WHITE: We have control of the tariff; we could reduce it from forty cents to anything we liked on raw sugar under the British preference, but we would have to give the West Indies a fifteen cents per hundred preference.

290. Cement, Portland, and hydraulic or water lime, in barrels, bags, or casks, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.... per one hundred pounds: British preference, 7 cents; intermediate, 10 cents; general, 10 cents.

Mr. OLIVER: Is the weight of the package included in the duty, as it has been?

Mr. WHITE: Yes.

447a. Traction ditching machines (not being ploughs) adapted for tile drainage on farms, valued by retail at not more than three thousand dollars each: free.

Mr. NESBITT: I understand that these $3,000 traction ditchers are capable of digging a trench only a foot wide and four feet deep. That is all right, as a rule, for a private individual, but in the section of the country which is supposed to benefit from the use of these machines, the farming localities, where the land is low-lying, the individual farmer does not do the ditching himself; he has to have the assistance of his neighbours in putting down a large ditch or drain. In Ontario that is done under the Drainage Act, which gives authority to the municipalities or to any individual in the municipality, when draining is required, to call in the engineer. The engineer is authorized under the Drainage Act to assess, upon the various farms that are improved or interested, the cost of the drain. The municipalities are then authorized to issue debentures running over a period of years for the putting down of this main drain, and that main drain often takes eighteen or twenty-four inch tile, which would not be covered by this $3,000 ditcher. Not one farmer in 500 or one in 1,000 will bring in ditching machines, even at $2,500, but a number of farmers will join together, and therefore, if the hon. minister's object is to benefit the farmers, and I think it is, he could do so to a much greater extent by increasing the value mentioned in this item to $5,000. If he is going to benefit the farmers individually, surely he can have no objection to benefiting them collectively, and he can only do so by increasing this amount to $5,000, thus allowing the farmers to sink this main drain into which they can drain their land through smaller trenches. It has been said that this will be a benefit to the contractor. That might be true, but the contractors for the digging of these main municipal drains are ordinary farmers. In former times these drains were nearly all open ditches, but the farmers found that in two or three years they filled up, and had to be constantly cleaned This has cost a lot of money, and the consequence has been that nearly all open ditches have been converted into tile drains, and those now being put in are nearly all tile drains. To make a long story short, it is impossible for them to tile-drain those main drains with this class of traction ditcher. Therefore I ask the minister to increase the amount fixed to $5,000, and by that means assist the the farmers to put down those drains collectively as they do now through their Municipal Drainage Act in Ontario, and I suppose it is Ontario largely that this is intended to benefit. At least that is where they do most of this draining, and I hope that the minister can see his way clear to increase that limit because as it is now it is not anything like the benefit it would be if the limit was increased to $5,000.

Mr. WHITE: I am sorry to be unable to comply with the request of my hon. friend. After he brought the matter to my attention on the day of the budget I had it inquired into very carefully, and I find that the $3,000 limit will meet the case of all individual farmers. The $3,000 machine will dig a trench twenty inches wide by five and a half feet deep. The reason I cannot comply with the request to raise the limit to $5,000 is on account of dredges used by contractors for digging sewers and drains in connection with railway construction, &c. I have given it great attention and it would give me pleasure on personal grounds to comply with my hon. friend's request, but I am satisfied that the $3,000 will meet all the requirements of those who made the request of us that these machines should be placed on the free list, and to extend it to $5,000 would mean that contractors would bring in ditchers for use in contracting work free of duty, and we are not prepared to permit that at present.

Mr. NESBITT: What harm would that do?

Mr. WHITE: I suppose a great number of things would not do any harm, but it is not our policy to carry it further than to serve the needs of the farmers at present. It may some day be done.

Mr. NESBITT: Any of my hon. friends opposite or on this side of the House who know anything about this kind of farming know that twenty inches wide and five and a half feet deep would not meet the case, because you have to put in drains very frequently more than five and a half feet deep. There might be a little rise to get through and there your ditching machine stops, so far as that part is concerned, and it certainly will not ditch the main drains that I speak of.

Mr. PARDEE: Is there any intention or could anything be put in the schedule that would allow the duty to be remitted on machines of this kind which have been imported within the last month or two months in ignorance of the approaching reduction in duty? It would appear to me to be only fair, nobody is prejudiced by it, but I think some provision might be made along those lines.

Mr. WHITE: Remission of duty could be granted by the Treasury Board or by Order in Council, but I doubt the expediency of doing so. Whenever changes are made in the tariff, such cases as this must arise and it would be difficult to deal with them.

535. Cotton sewing thread in hanks: British preference, 7½ per cent; intermediate, 10 per cent; general, 10 per cent.

Mr. WHITE: That is a reduction. I explained it.

Mr. NESBITT: My hon. friend said the other night that there was confusion in the ports of entry, that some officers did not know the difference between twisted thread and yarn. I am told that anybody who had once been shown the difference could not possibly make a mistake between the two, that there is no likeness between them and for that reason, while my hon. friend says there is a reduction, as a matter of fact there is an increase in so far as twisted yarn is concerned, because twisted yarn came in free before and twisted thread did not come in free, that is number forty and finer. Twisted thread is used very largely by the manufacturer of cotton underwear and, therefore, this will increase the prices of that cotton underwear that is made of thread forty and finer. I am told on the very best authority that there should be no difficulty in distinguishing between twisted thread and twisted yarn.

Mr. WHITE: I desire to say that there is no mistake about it at all. It was looked into very carefully and we had down here not only the parties interested in retaining the duties, that is to say the thread manufacturers of Montreal, but the representatives of the T. Eaton Company and the representatives of the Hamilton and other concerns engaged in spooling this twisted yarn or thread, forty or finer. They all agreed that it is thread, and there is no question that it is thread. That has been coming in under the item by virtue of which yarns are admitted free and, therefore, these manufacturers outside of Montreal—

Mr. NESBITT: Of thread?

Mr. WHITE: Manufacturers engaged in the winding and spooling of thread. It was to their interest to get this in free and they had been getting it in free. On the other hand, in Montreal a duty was charged because yarn forty and finer is classified as thread. That being so, the Customs Department had to enforce the law. The law was that the British preference was ten per cent, the intermediate twelve and one-half per cent, and the general tariff fifteen per cent. Having regard to the whole situation and the misunderstanding that had been growing up, we decided to reduce the tariff to seven and one-half per cent and ten per cent instead of ten per cent and fifteen per cent.

Mr. NESBITT: My hon. friend did not have any manufacturers of knitted goods tell him that there could be any mistake in telling the difference between thread and yarn. He says that the spoolers were in favour of this. I have not the slightest doubt they were in favour of it, because they wanted to maintain the duty so as to keep the manufacturers of knitted goods from getting these goods in free. I have no doubt they wanted it, not the slightest.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend, I think, is entirely wrong about that. Cotton sewing thread in hanks under the present item is ten per cent; twelve and one-half per cent and fifteen per cent. The particular goods to which I refer undoubtedly are cotton sewing thread in hanks. This had been admitted free notwithstanding the tariff item, improperly admitted.

Mr. NESBITT: Quite right, improperly admitted free.

Mr. WHITE: The spoolers were interested in the continuance of that improper admission free because it is their raw material, they were in competition with the Coates people in Montreal. In other words the western people were interested in having the Customs Department continue to admit this free while the Coates people were interested in having the duty imposed. What we did was to reduce the duty to seven and one-half per cent and ten per cent as a sort of happy way out of it.

Mr. NESBITT: The Coates people were anxious to have the duty put on and the other people who were bringing in this thread and winding it in competition with the Coates people were anxious to have it as it was.

Mr. WHITE: But they admitted it was thread.

Mr. NESBITT: That was thread; but the knitting people also bring in twisted yarn and were allowed to bring it in free and by that means were not forced to buy from the Coates people and their competitors.

Mr. WHITE: They get it free now, if it is yarn it comes in free.

Mr. SINCLAIR: On behalf of the fishermen of the Maritime provinces I wish to express my very deep regret that the Minister of Finance has not seen fit to pay any attention to the promise made by the Minister of Customs last year that the question of lobster twine would be dealt with at the first consideration of the tariff. I drew the attention of the Minister of Customs on more than one occasion last year to the fact that the particular kind of twine that is used in the manufacture of traps with which the lobsters are caught on the coast of Canada, is taxable to the extent of 25 per cent. That is a very heavy tax upon the fishermen. There was a theory in the province from which I come that twine used in connection with the fisheries was free. A good many people thought so, but it is not free. There is a kind that is free; that is barked marline. If my hon. friend will refer to item 682 of the tariff he will find that—

Barked marline, and net norsels of cotton, hemp or flax; and fishing nets or seines, when used exclusively for the fisheries——

—is free. But that kind of marline is not used, or scarcely used at all in the making of lobster traps. The minister could do what I am asking for by striking out the word 'barked' and leaving the word 'marline.' Then the marline used for the fisheries would be free. As it is at present, only the barked marline is free, and as I have said, it is very little used in connection with the fishery trade. When this question was up last year, I read a letter from one of the largest firms in Yarmouth, Parker, Eakins and Company, who are dealers in twine. and who know perhaps more about this question than anybody else in the Maritime provinces, and they explained it in this way:

The only other twine, which pays a duty under the tariff, is made from manilla and sold under the name of 'marline.' It appears that this may be entered free only when it is barked (dyed with extract of hemlock), but as in actual practice the fisherman uses it mostly in its white, unbarked condition, dealers have to buy it from the Consumers Cordage Company, Halifax, and pay a price equivalent to the American article laid down duty paid. There does not seem to be any reason why barked marline should be free, and marline not barked dutiable, particularly as it is the intention and desire of the Government to put all these necessary supplies of the fishermen on the free list. The elimination of the word 'barked' from this tariff item would settle the whole matter.

I read that letter to the Minister of Customs last year, and after considerable discussion, in which everybody admitted that the change ought to be made, he used the following language:

I should be pleased to lay this matter before the tariff commission to be appointed and have them take the matter up, and the Government will be pleased to consider the subject before introducing any change in the tariff next session.

As there is no tariff commission, I could not expect the Minister of Customs to lay this matter before it, but he said that the Government would take it up and deal with it before any changes were made in the tariff. Now changes are proposed in the tariff, and this matter has not been dealt with. I expected the Minister of Customs to keep his word, and to give to the fishermen of the Maritime provinces the benefit of this reduction this session. I am very much surprised that he has forgotten his promise to the House, and to the people of this country last session, and I hope that he is prepared to deal with it now by amending item 682 and striking uot the word 'barked.'

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): I am sorry I was not able to carry out my promise, but I do not think it was through any fault of mine. If the Senate had not killed the Bill that was put through this House to appoint a tariff commission there would not have been any trouble about carrying out my word.

Mr. GRAHAM: It does not need a commission to do that.

Mr. REID: I promised I would lay it before the Tariff Commission.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If he looks at what I read he will see that he said:

And the Government will be pleased to consider the subject before introducing any changes in the tariff next session.

That was a distinct and positive statement that the Government would consider this matter when they introduced any changes in the tariff.

Mr. REID: I have not heard any serious complaints on this matter. I think item 682 really covers all the twine and materials of that kind required for the fishing industry.

Mr. LOGGIE: There is a large quantity of manilla marline used in the lobster fishing business. As the hon. member for Guysborough tells us, the manufacturers in this country include the duty in the price which they charged to those engaged in the fishing industry. To all intents and purposes, it is as if the marline were manufactured in the United States and brought into this country and the duty paid. The price of lobster rope is less by about two cents per pound than the larger size, because the larger size is dutiable, although manufactured in Canada. The duty is put on the price because the price is somewhat dearer by two cents per pound than the size used in the lobster business, and the same remark applies to the manilla marline used in the lobster business. The price is greater by reason of the duty, although the rope is manufactured in Canada.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am very much disappointed at the way the Minister of Customs has met my request. I feel certain that he raised the hopes of the fishermen by the statement he made last year, and there is really no good reason why this request should not be granted. If my hon. friend is afraid of the Consumers Cordage Company, he had better say so, but there is no reason in the world, excepting the personal interest of that firm, why the fishermen of the Maritime provinces, and of the rest of Canada, should not have the benefit of this reduction, especially when this twine is used for fishing purposes. Can the minister state any reason why barked marline should be free, and marline should be taxed twenty-five per cent? Is there any logical reason for that? There is one. It is no concession to the fishermen to make the kind of twine that they do not use free, and to tax to the extent of twenty-five per cent the twine that they do use. I am not certain whether I am in order or not, but I would like to move that item 682 be amended by striking out the word 'barked.'

Mr. WHITE: The amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) is out of order, but I will say to him that the representations he has made, as well as any others he may have to make, shall be most carefully considered by me. However, nothing can be done at the present time.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I understood the Minister of Customs to say he had representations made to him but he did not think my request was important enough to be granted. I would like to know whether the Minister of Customs is in sympathy with this proposal, because it appears to me that he is not. If I can get a positive statement from the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs that they intend to deal with this question before the close of the session, I will be satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member can not move an amendment, as the item to which he refers is not before the committee; his motion is out of order.

Mr. KYTE: The imposition of a duty upon this twine is the result of a new interpretation placed on the tariff since the present Government came into power. For many years rope and twine used by fishermen were admitted free of duty, and when the Hon. Mr. Paterson had charge of the department an interpretation was placed upon the tariff which gave free entry into Canada for this particular twine. Twine used by farmers is free of duty, and it is evident that the imposition of a duty on marline was an oversight, as a result of which the present Minister of Customs is able to give an interpretation of the tariff unfavourable to the fishermen. Last year a discussion arose in this House as to a new interpretation placed by the present Minister of Customs upon the tariff affecting rough lumber, and the Minister of Customs was very emphatic in his statement that the late Minister of Customs was improperly admitting rough lumber into Canada free of duty, and he imposed a duty of two dollars a thousand on that class of lumber. On appeal to the Supreme Court it was decided that the Minister of Customs was wrong in interpreting the tariff so as to impose a duty upon that lumber. I have no doubt that if the fishermen of the Maritime provinces were sufficiently wealthy to take a test case to the courts, a similar decision would be given as respects the interpretation put by the Minister of Customs as to the tariff on twine used by lobster fishermen. In view of the experience the Minister of Customs has had with respect to his interpretation of the tariff on rough lumber he might save the fishermen of the Maritime provinces the cost of going into the courts to get the interpretation of the tariff, which has been acted upon for the last eight or nine years, and under which the lobster fishermen of the Maritime provinces got their twine in free of duty.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would like to know whether the Minister of Finance intends to deal with this.

Mr. WHITE: I cannot make a change in the tariff this year. Tariff changes are made only in connection with the budget; it is not usual to make them at any othe time, and the budget is now down. I would be quite impossible to comply wit the request of my hon. friend at th present time. I have not looked into th matter, and many considerations arise in connection with the proposed tariff changes. I shall be very glad to give th matter consideration, but whether I shal be able to give it favourable consideration or not, I cannot say. I think it is strictly in accordance with the practice that no changes can be made in the tariff other than those proposed.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): In the meantime, why cannot the Minister of Customs return to the former practice of the department in interpreting this tariff item.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): There never was any such practice in the Customs Department that I ever heard of.

Mr. MACLEAN: In September of last year, notice was sent by the Customs Department to the customs officers throughtout the country saying that this particular article, though it had heretofore been admitted free, was dutiable at twenty-five per cent.

Mr. REID: An appraiser in the department sent through mistake a letter to the collector at Charlottetown, but the mistake was immediately rectified. All that was explained last session.

Mr. MACLEAN: Am I to understand that this twine has always been dutiable?

Mr. REID: Marline has always been dutiable and I have no information that it ever was let in free.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The Minister of Finance says it is a new matter to him, but I brought it to the attention of the Minister of Customs a year ago. Is the Minister of Customs in favour of making this twine free?

Mr. REID: This item in the tariff has been there since the tariff was made in 1907.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I understand that.

Mr. REID: I am informed by the department that there has been no serious complaint of any kind during all these years about this item. The fishermen seem to have been satisfied with it and I do not think the hon. member or any of the members of the lower provinces made any complaint, either to the department or in the House, until the question was brought up last year. I am in favour of doing everything necessary to assist the fishermen, but I do not see that there is any emergency to justify bringing the matter up at the present session.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The Minister of Customs is mistaken if he thinks there has been no complaint, because, as a matter of fact, there have been urgent appeals to him in regard to this matter. I do not wish that statement to go on 'Hansard' without protest. There is a complaint and there is a general feeling on the coast against this unjust tax. It is believed that this twine was intended to be let in free but that through some mistake or bungling, a duty was placed upon it.

Mr. WHITE: Does my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) state that the duty was not collected during the years 1909, 1910, 1911 upon this particular twine?

Mr. SINCLAIR: No.

Mr. WHITE: Well that had better be settled; there seems to be some dispute as to that.

Mr. LOGGIE: Net ropes come in free. The clause mentions head ropes but the tarred marline is used for the foot rope of the net and on the net it comes free. So far as I am concerned, I am under the impression that it comes in free as a rope for a net, because, when it is on the net, it is clearly free. I am not sure but what the hon. minister could bring it under the item:

Cod, pollack and mackerel fish lines; and mackerel, herring, salmon, seal, seine, mullet, net and trawl twine in hanks, or coils, barked or not.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is for nets, and this is not a net.

Mr. LOGGIE: When it is used in the fishing business, it seems that under this item it should come in free. If you could omit the word 'barked' further on in the clause, the meaning would be quite clear. As it is, without changing the wording of the item at all, I cannot see why the minister cannot place these marlines under twine in hanks, or coils, barked or not, for it is not very much larger than twine.

Mr. KYTE: The hon. Minister of Customs asked if any complaint is being made with respect to the imposition of this duty. Very serious complaint has been made. I had letters from several firms in the city of Halifax a year ago, in which they complained that the circular sent out by the Customs Department in December, 1911, had the result of imposing a duty upon this class of marlines, which, up to this time, had been admitted free under the interpretation placed on the tariff item read by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) respecting twines used by fishermen. The hon. Minister of Finance, before he brought down his amendment to the tariff, discovered that some injustice was being done to the manufacturers of thread in the city of Hamilton on account of the interpretation that was placed on that tariff item, and he took the opportunity of correcting the error. The hon. Minister of Customs was aware that this anomaly existed with regard to twine. It was brought to the attention of the House a year ago. I regret exceedingly that, when the hon. Minister of Finance undertook to correct the error which existed in the tariff with respect to threads used by the wholesale manufacturers in the city of Hamilton, he did not go a little further and correct the anomaly that has the effect of imposing an undue tax upon the fishermen of the Maritime provinces.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. WHITE thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 231, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 36, respecting Banks and Banking.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) spoke to me about this Bill, and I think he wanted to make some remarks upon it. But I saw him in company with the Minister of Finance, and perhaps he may have spoken to that hon. gentleman about it.

Mr. WHITE: The hon. member for Westmorland told me he would like to make some remarks on the Bill, but I understood that he would be back later. Afterwards I discussed the matter with some hon. members opposite, and they thought it would be best to go on. I would like, if possible, to send this Bill up to the Senate.

Mr. F. B. McCURDY (Shelburne and Queens): Before the Bill is read the third time, I wish to draw the attention of the House to some of the amendments which I moved and which were negatived in the Banking and Commerce Committee, and to add a few observations. The first amendment to which I will refer was to 'schedule D' of the Bill. In items, 6, 15 and 17 under 'assets,' the amendment being to strike out the words 'elsewhere than in Canada,' and substitute 'in Great Britain, in the British colonies, in the United States and in other foreign countries.'

The purpose of this amendment was to provide that an intelligent opinion could be formed of the activities of Canadian banks in foreign countries. Under the provisions of the Act as it exists at present, the guide we have, to indicate the nature of a bank's operations in foreign countries, or rather the essential item which is of use to us, is the balance due the banks by their agencies in foreign countries, which is not at all, I think, sufficient.

Canadian banks were, of course, organized primarily to carry on Canadian business. It was natural that, in the course of their development, they should establish branches at their reserve centres, London and New York; but an entirely new development has taken place of recent years, namely the opening up of branches in Mexico, American cities, the West Indies, Central America, Newfoundland, &c., &c. No doubt these banks are doing a flourishing business in these countries, but it is doubtless on account of the credit which they have established in Canada and the volume of business carried on by them here which gives them a prestige enabling them to hold up large operations in those countries. The development of their businesses there should be carefully watched, and I proposed in the Banking and Commerce Committee that columns be provided in the monthly returns to the Government, schedule 'D,' so that the development of business in these foreign countries can be closely scanned. I would say that on the whole, more capital appears, from an examination of the Government bank statements, to be at present received on deposit by these branches in foreign countries than is loaned there, but such a position may some day be reversed. An examination of value regarding this matter cannot, however, be made from the returns at hand under the Bill as printed, and these particulars are essential to an intelligent study of operations in foreign countries. No particulars of cash carried at foreign agencies are available.

There has been some questioning by members of the House of the advisability of granting charters to Canadian banks to do business outside Canada. If the Act were being drafted for the first time, such a restriction might be considered. But in view of the vested interests already created and existing, I would at the present time, in the absence of any indication that banks with a foreign business are not doing their duty by the banking necessities of Canada, be opposed to considering any such action.

I think, however, that the Canadian public are entitled to know what use is being made of the privilege granted to Canadian banks of doing business in foreign countries, and I therefore suggested that the monthly statement to the Government be amplified by giving information as to deposits, loans, &c., in Great Britain, British colonies, United States, and other foreign countries.

The second amendment to which I will refer—also opposed in the committee and not accepted—was to add the following paragraph after line six on page 79 of the Bill as printed:

Aggregate amount of loans to joint stock companies in which directors of the bank hold a majority of the issued shares.

The existing Act calls for a monthly statement of the aggregate amount of loans to directors of the bank or firms of which they are partners. It has been found possible, where it was considered advisable that such loans be not shown, for the director to take advantage of the Joint Stock Companies' Act, incorporate his business as a joint stock company, issue all but the qualifying shares to himself, and thus be immune from the requirements of the Act. It is only to cope with such cases that this amendment is proposed, viz., the companies which are 'creatures,' of the directors.

I am unable to understand why any objection to this amendment moved in committee, should be made. The fact that objections are offered invite us to further investigate the condition of directors' loans even as at present shown in the monthly bank statement. I am opposed, as I have before pointed out, to the concentration of loans, and further opposed when such concentration is in the accounts of directors, and for obvious reasons.

I believe, so far as possible, provision should be made, so that every borrower shall have a 'square deal' that enterprising young men wishing to engage in business should be encouraged.

I wish to draw your attention to the government bank statements for some months of 1907, as appearing in the Canadian Gazette. As you are all aware, in the early months of 1907, say in March of that year, signs of a financial panic began to make their presence known in the United States. Owing to the close financial connection between that country and Canada, no unsettlement takes place there that is not reflected here. This panic, as I say, began in March, 1907, although it did not reach its culmination until the autumn. During the summer, the financial conditions were plainly seen and appreciated by leading Canadian bankers.

Business men remember the feverish expansion of 1906—the steady advance in the prices of goods, the insatiable demand for money and the high rates of interest prevailing everywhere until the end of that year. To the average man, it seemed a period of boundless and endless prosperity. Railroads had not cars enough to haul the freight offered them and could not get them made fast enough. Manufacturers in the United States and in Canada had withdrawn their travelling salesmen, because they already had orders for a year and a half ahead. In the United States, a few leaders of finance and industry sounded a note of warning, but most men were too busy to hear it. In Canada, however, it was clearly anticipated as I have said, by bankers. In their annual reports to shareholders early in 1907, bank presidents and general managers had given notice that phenomenal profits in business of the few preceding years could not be expected to continue much longer. To quote from the annual address by the general manager of one of the largest banks, dated January 8, 1907:

There are signs about us of a strain which must bring trouble to those who disregard it. We are passing through a dangerous period just now happily without a general breakdown but unless we mend our ways we are not likely to escape a similar or worse condition next autumn, which may wreck our fair prosperity. As for those who are plunging into real estate at inflated prices, nothing we presume, but the inevitable collapse which follows these seasons of mania would do any good.

As I have stated, this dangerous condition was understood by bankers, and they proceeded to prepare during 1907 for the strain that was expected in the autumn when the crop-moving period began. It was impossible to reduce loans immediately, but turning to the bank statement at the end of the summer, say at August 31st, we find the following:

Call loans, August, $47,765,531; time loans, $580,075,932; total, $627,841,463. Call loans, October, $46,843,488; time loans, $579,860,498; total, $626,703,986. To directors, August, $11,717,200, October, $12,318,811.

You will remember that the panic in New York reached its height on October 26th. Cash payments were suspended that day and credit was in a state of collapse, but for months previous Canadian banks had been straining every effort to curtail and reduce loans. The net result was that in the sixty-one days from August 31st to October 31st, loans to Canadian borrowers were reduced $1,137,477, or really they were reduced $1,739,088. But another set of borrowers appeared, namely Canadian bank directors, and in the period from August 31 to October 31st, loans in this class, actually increased $601,611. As I have said, the New York panic culminated on October 26th with the failure of the Knickerbocker Trust Co., the suspension of cash payments by New York banks, and the general collapse of credit and the lowest prices were recorded in the New-York exchange, but at any rate, the effect was that Canadian bank directors had, at the time when every other borrower was being severely pressed, increased their borrowings from the banks by $600,000.

This matter caused some discussion in the Banking and Commerce Committee, and the minister asked Sir Edmund Walker, as reported on page 22, of the Committee Reports of April 17:

Is it an object to the banks from a business standpoint to have directors who are prominent in the business community?

To which the reply was made:

Yes, men in the active time of life.

The obvious inference being that being in the active time of life, they were apt to be large borrowers.

In view of this statement, an inquiry into the average ages of bank directors is of interest. According to the last available lists, there are twenty-three banks with head offices in Canada. These banks are directed by 211 directors. Reference to 'who's who,' and other similar sources of information in Canada shows that the names of 84 of these do not appear in 'Who's Who,' and other similar books of reference, but the combined ages of the 127 directors mentioned therein is 84,201 years, or an average of 66.3 years. Of those mentioned, the oldest is 93, and the youngest 29. One bank, and that is the one which on February 28, had the largest amount of loans to directors, shows an average age of directors of 72 .8 years.

The third amendment to which I wish to refer was one which suggested the amendment of the Bill by adding after line 5 on page 25 the words:

The statement shall be accompanied by a memorandum giving a full and complete list of all bonds, debentures, stocks and other like investments owned by the bank together with the present book value.

A good deal of criticism has been heard during the discussion of this Act, regarding the large amounts of money which are loaned by the banks on call in New York. Much of this criticism is ill-founded. The New York loans represent partially such assets as would otherwise, to a large extent, be kept unproductive, in the shape of specie on hand. It is a secondary reserve, but it also represents money which is not required for reserve, but is put out in New York, waiting for an opening to loan it at a higher rate of interest in Canada. In the nature of things, I presume we shall continue thus to add largely to New York's supply of cheap money.

As a reserve in case of need, however, its virtue is often overstated. We have found by experience that at the time of the greatest stress, it cannot always be immediately recalled, and that, of course, is the time when it is most needed. The experience of Canadian banks in trying to get this money in the panic of 1907, has demonstrated that it is not what it is supposed to be, namely, a loan which can be converted into gold and made available in Canada within twenty-four hours.

But there is another class of Canadian investment in the States, which has, curiously enough, escaped criticism, and which does not, to my mind, have as much need for existence as do the New York call loans. I have in my hand the annual statement of the Bank of Nova Scotia for the year 1909. Mr. H. C. McLeod, the then general manager of the bank, believed in the policy not only of external bank examination, but of a certain degree of publicity regarding the business of the bank. In 1909 he published a list of the permanent investments of his bank, a procedure which, I regret to say, has not been followed by the general managers of other banks. At the same time, I believe it to be a step in the right direction, and as he published it from choice, I presume there cannot be much objection from the standpoint of the banker. It is also in the direction of publicity, the great corrective of all evils. I do not favour prohibiting our banks from investing their funds at their discretion, they should be perfectly free to do that, but the very fullest information regarding the operation of their property should be available to shareholders. This, to my mind, would give to the shareholders an indication of the class of business being done by the particular banks, and I cannot see where any harm would result. It would not be advisable, of course, to limit the class of securities in which the bank might invest; they might still, as they do to-day, go to the United States, Japan, the West Indies, Germany or South America, but it seems to me it would be entirely in the public interest and in the interest of the shareholders that at least a partial disclosure of assets in that regard should be made for the benefit of the shareholders.

The next amendment to which I wish to refer this evening was that the Bill be amended by adding after line 6 on page 79 the words:

Aggregate amount of loans to joint stock companies of which a director of the bank is a director.

That amendment did not find much favour with the majority of the witnesses who came before the Banking and Commerce Committee. The banks, while they occupy the banking field and exercise their franchise, must accept the responsibility of providing as efficient banking facilities as they possibly can furnish. I think our people are probably more interested in banking than the people of any English-speaking country, because under our system the use made of the bank by the people per capita of population is larger than any other country in the world. No one, I am sure, banker or otherwise, will dissent from the view that in supplying public requirements for banking, the loans should be diffused over the widest possible area. It is not only good banking, but it is advisable that such a condition of affairs should exist. Concentration of loans is unwise, and it is not good banking.

The tendency of business in Canada, as well as in the United States, is towards what is called 'big business.' Large concerns, as the member for Edmonton would say, trusts, mergers and combines, seek to control their respective lines of business. They, in turn, are often controlled by small groups of capitalists who in turn are generally bank directors. The tendency among banks is to lend to the large concern. If one or more directors of that concern are directors of the bank, this human element furnishes another inducement why the corporation should be a favoured customer.

I am not in favour of limiting a bank's loans to such customers. I am not in favour, as I have before stated in the House, of placing restrictions on banks; but, on the other hand, I cannot see any good reason why the total loans of banks to companies in which their directors are also directors, should not be shown. It would have a repressive influence on the temptation to make excessively large loans in such quarters, and the result of that would be that money would be more available to the ordinary independent seeker after credit, the young man of capacity seeking to make his way in business would have a better chance to obtain credit than he now has.

Another amendment which came up in committee and about which there was considerable controversy, was to add to section 20 the following:

No paid executive official of the bank shall be elected a director.

In theory, the general manager as chief of the bank's executive is supreme. Above him in authority, under the law, are the directors, presided over, of course, by the president and representing the stockholders. The president of a Canadian bank is the chairman of the board of directors. At the meetings of the board, the general manager reports on the business which has come before the bank, and which requires the approval of the board.

Our general managers are, without exception, men who have been in the business since boyhood. They have worked their way up through all the grades of employment, by the force of brains, industry and character. They hold their positions because they have proved their efficiency. At the same time, they are paid executive officers of the banks, and should be, in fact, as they are in theory, subject to the direction of the board of directors, as representing the shareholders. Under the old Act and under this Bill—as at present drafted, one man might occupy the dual position of president and general manager. Surely this is an anomaly. Our banks have boards of directors of from ten to twenty-five members, and it should be possible to find among that number one man qualified to act as president without having to go to the executive staff to secure a president. Such a concentration of power is, I think, unwise. In case it became necessary for the central manager to be disciplined, that duty would naturally fall upon the president of the bank, and how could the president proceed to discipline the general manager, if he were one and the same person?

Of the witnesses examined by this committee only one was asked for an opinion on this matter, and this was his evidence:

Committee report No. 21, April 18:

Q. Are you in favour of having the paid officials of a bank as members of the board of directors?

A. Oh, no. A general manager is worth three directors by himself. If you put him on the board, he is worth the whole five. I do not believe a general manager should be a director.

It is quite apparent, from the manner in which the public has followed the course of the discussion of the Bank Act in the Banking and Commerce Committee, that there is an extraordinary amount of interest in this measure. Naturally this is so, for under our conditions and banking practice, the amount of banking done by the Canadian public is larger per capita than that done by other people.

A great many amendments of various kinds, of more or less value, were moved in the Banking and Commerce Committee, and some improvements adopted, but I am quite within the mark in saying that no 'fundamental' of the Bank Act has been changed in any way in the committee from the Bill as first printed.

During the committee stage, we were favoured with the views of many experienced financiers, and as far as my memory carries me, none of these active bankers suggested any change or improvement from the Bill as printed. I was rather struck with this, as I had not theretofore been of the opinion that the Act was a perfect one.

Whatever may be the judgment of the bankers, the Bank Act is not working out to the satisfaction of the ordinary citizen of Canada—let there be no mistake about that.

I think the free discussion of the Act which we have had will do no harm. It may do good. But I wish to again point out to the House that the fundamentals of the Act have remained untouched. The following very important sections were either not fully considered, or were passed by without amendment:

1. Double liability.
2. Note circulation.
3. Over lending.
4. Excessive concentration of loans.
5. Concentration of control of capital and credit in a few hands.
6. Real estate loans.
7. Slender cash reserves.

I am conscious of difficulty in dealing with the Act by way of improving it in the committee, and am disposed to think that a small commission would by its constitution be better qualified to deal with the question.

If any person will carefully examine the annual statements published by the banks he must come to the conclusion that they are operating on too slender cash reserves. The present scale of cash reserves is, I am satisfied, inadequate to meet conditions of the country and is small compared with the gigantic liabilities incurred. In times of crisis reserves are essential, and it is of supreme importance that banks at the moment when a crisis comes should be able to afford relief to their customers rather than, at that very moment, curtail the assistance which they ordinarily give. It is all very well for banks to give facilities in good times, but the customer looks for facilities when the pinch comes and if, when the pinch comes, the bank itself is obliged to draw in its resources from those to whom it ordinarily lends, it disrupts all the arrangement of the business world and such a bank, in reality, ceases to meet the needs of the country.

I had thought to move in the House the amendments covering the before-mentioned points, as I had already moved and supported them in the more informal Banking and Commerce Committee, but in view of the fact that present business conditions render the present an inopportune time to initiate far-reaching reform, perhaps the further improvements can better be left over until another session of the House.

In the meantime, such abuses as exist may possibly be eradicated.

Mr. J. H. RAINVILLE (Chambly and Verchères): I wish to say in the beginning that our country is indebted to the Minister of Finance and to the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) for the great energy and the extensive knowledge and ability which they have displayed in the making up of this most important measure. This new Bill will be a great credit to this Government and goes to show that the right hon. the Prime Minister was well inspired when, in forming his Cabinet, he gave the portfolio of Finance to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. White) who has shown himself to be a worthy successor of the worthy statesmen our country has had since Confederation.

The Montreal Gazette, in reporting the proceedings of the Banking Committee, on the 23rd of April last says:

Mr. J. H. Rainville, member for Chambly-Verchères, supported the grievance aired by Major Sharpe. If there had been an inspection of the St. Hyacinthe bank when the association asked the directors to close its doors, the bank would be still alive, he declared.

Hon. Mr. White: do you mean to say as a matter of fact that the association compelled the directors to close their doors?

Mr. Rainville: If you would allow me to bring three witnesses here, I would prove by correspondence and witnesses that the Bankers' Association closed the doors of that bank when the bank had one hundred cents in the dollar.

The Finance Minister: If anyone will make a definite charge to me by which the Canadian Bankers' Association has violated in any way its powers statutory or otherwise, I will promise to bring the matter up with them and see if we can prevent a repetition of such an occurrence; but I want the charge made to be investigated thoroughly.

On the next day or so, I made a charge to the hon. Minister of Finance as follows:

Dear Sir:

I am creditably informed and believe that, on June 22, 1908, one of the officers of the Bankers' Association, viz, Mr. Knight, arrived at St. Hyacinthe about 9 o'clock in the evening and convened a special session of the directors of the St. Hyacinthe Bank. At that meeting he disclosed the object of his visit and made known the will of the Bankers' Association which was that they, the directors of the St. Hyacinthe Bank, should vote immediately a resolution for the immediate suspension of their payments. The directors being opposed to this drastic and high-handed procedure, discussed the attitude assumed by the Bankers' Association and revolted against the ultimatum of the association. In reply, the agent of the Bankers' Association said in effect: 'Very well, gentlemen, you will have to close your doors, anyway, and unless this be done to-night, your paper will be refused to-morrow by all the banks.

The directors, in view of this pressure, and in order to avoid the possibility of a run on the bank and its consequences, did not open the doors of the bank next morning and the Bank was thus forced into liquidation.

This was on June 23, 1908. Two days afterwards the Bank of Montreal had its signs on the door and its paper printed 'Bank of Montreal, St. Hyacinthe.'

This is an instance where the Bankers' Association through its officers compelled a solvent bank to liquidate and go out of business in the interest of the larger banks.

The Minister of Finance sent my charge to the Bankers' Association, and on May 3, he received from Toronto a letter from Mr. Wilkie, president of the Association, which read as follows:

Canadian Bankers' Association.
Toronto, May 3, 1913.

Dear Mr. White:

In continuation of my letters of 28th and 29th April, I beg to state that I have had a thorough examination made of the condition of affairs at the time of the suspension of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, and enclose herewith, Mr. Knight's statement, which appears to me to be thorough and full, and I would further beg to draw your attention to the following facts:

(a) Mr. Knight only acted in this matter under the directions of Sir Edward Clouston, as president of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

(b) The statement made by Mr. Rainville, M.P., appears to have been founded upon a misapprehension of the facts.

(c) It is true that the creditors of the bank eventually were paid in full, but this was only owing to a realization of assets that at the time of the suspension were not available or collectible, in fact their very existence was in dispute; but also it became necessary, later on, to call up the unpaid capital of the bank, as well as to call upon the shareholders for their double liability. The sums collected from the claims in dispute, some four or five years after the suspension, amounted to $390,000; the amount paid in on account of the unpaid capital was $66,795.52; the amount paid in on the double liability was $156,051.10; the total liabilities of the bank at the time of the suspension amounted to $1,181,362.74; and from the schedule it would appear that Sir Edward Clouston's judgment was absolutely sound, that it was hopeless for the bank to attempt to go on, and his action probably saved a loss to the creditors.

It is perfectly apparent that at the time of Sir Edward Clouston's action the capital of the bank was wholly gone, and apparently this was admitted by all parties interested.

(d) The Bankers' Association were not interested in the action of the Bank of Montreal, and it is also apparent that that was done not for the benefit of the Bank of Montreal, but at the solicitation of residents of St. Hyacinthe.

Sincerely yours,
(Sgd.) D. R. Wilkie,
President Bankers' Association.

The Honourable W. T. White, M.P., Minister of Finance,
Ottawa.

Mr. Knight sent a letter to the hon. Minister of Finance dated Montreal, May 3 1913, as follows:

Secretary Treasurer's Office.
Bank of Montreal Building,
Montreal, May 3, 1913.
La Banque de St. Hyacinthe.

Sir:

I have the honour to knowledge the receipt of a copy of a letter from Mr. J. H. Rainville, M.P., in reference to the action of the association in connection with the suspension of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, and I make the following statement of fact in connection therewith:

The Banque de St. Jean suspended on the 20th April, 1908, and the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, which was not strong in liquid assets, began to suffer from the disastrous failure of that bank. This was known to all bankers.

The subscribed capital stock of the bank was $504,600, of which $331,235 was paid up. The total deposits at the end of the month of May, 1908, as compared with the preceding month, showed a decline, as stated in the Government returns, of some $75,000.

By reason of the knowledge that the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, the late Sir Edward Clouston, had as to the situation, I was asked to request the cashier of the bank to come to Montreal. Mr. L. F. Philie, the cashier, accordingly came to Montreal on the 22nd June, 1908. After a conversation with him, I came to the conclusion that it was necessary to have a further examination of the condition of the bank, and so reported to the president of the association. Mr. Philie was of opinion that the financial condition of the bank was serious.

At my request, Mr. Philie returned to St. Hyacinthe to make up, as accurately as possible, a valuation of the assets, and report the result to me as soon as possible. I explained to him that this was necessary because, if the Canadian Bankers' Association could render any assistance to the bank, it would gladly do so, but that it would be necessary to have a statement of its assets.

Mr. Philie, the next day, brought back the statement, which is shown as Exhibit A.

I discussed with him the various items in this statement, as on its face, it showed that the whole of the paid up capital of the Bank was gone. The chief asset was a doubtful claim against the Quebec Southern railway, which was then being wound up as insolvent, by proceedings in the Exchequer Court, at the instance of the Minister of Railways and Canals. The total claim of the bank, which was filed in 1906, was $612,000. The total assets at the time, as represented in the Government returns, was $1,580,097.84. I did not place as high a valuation upon the claim against the Quebec Southern railway as did Mr. Philie, and my judgment in this regard is justified by the result, as, after four and a half years' litigation, at heavy expenses to the bank, the amount realized was $381,000, which sum was paid to the liquidator of the bank in two amounts, on 13th October, 1911, and 2nd January, 1913.

May I refer to the report of the action the Minister of Railways and Canals against the Quebec Southern railway, in re Bank de St. Hyacinthe (claimant) in Vol. 12, Canada, Exchequer reports, p. 61, for a fuller disclosure of the difficulties surrounding the collection of this large claim of the bank.

Another asset I criticised was the item marked 'Debentures.' These were issued on the security of an aqueduct in St. Hyacinthe, and were valued at $33,000, but realized only $9,000.

Mr. Philie also advised me that a claim by L. F. Morrison against the bank for $93,146 was then in litigation.

The criticism of the assets was accurate, as shown by the following:

L. F. Philie's (the cashier valuation.. .. .. $1,190,556 00
Total collected by the liquidator. 1,043,435 30

Further, I was advised by Mr. Philie, at our first interview, that the Eastern Townships bank, the agent for clearing house purpose in Montreal, then had over $15,000 of the bank's notes on hand. They were holding these over to give the bank a chance to secure funds to redeem them, and, in addition, Mr. Philie advised me that, in order to secure money to pay the demands upon the bank, he was forced to rediscount the best paper in his portfolio, and had at that time rediscounted with the Eastern Townships bank $26,493 of current paper.

As soon as I ascertained these facts, and examined the statement, exhibit A, I consulted with the president of the association, and the conclusion arrived at was that, in the interests of the creditors, the only honest thing to do was to recommend the bank to suspend payment.

I accompanied Mr. Philie to St. Hyacinthe the night of the 23rd June, and a meeting of the board was called, at which five of the directors were present. Two of the directors were not available, as they lived outside of St. Hyacinthe; Mr. Philie was present during the conference. I pointed out to the board that the statement of affairs as exhibited, which had their approval before it was submitted to the association, showed that the entire capital of the bank was lost and that possibly their deposits were impaired. The statement of the assets was conceded to be correct by everyone present, and the only objection that the board made to my criticism was that I was placing a lower valuation upon the claim against the Quebec Southern than the board was disposed to do.

At no time during this conference did I say—

It was the will of the Bankers' Association that they, the directors of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, should vote immediately a resolution for the immediate suspension of their payments.

I never used any language to the effect—

Very well, gentlemen, you will have to close your doors anyway, and unless this be done to-night, your paper will be refused to-morrow by all the banks.

During the discussion, two of the directors were anxious that the bank should not suspend payment until they had an opportunity to go to Ottawa and lay the position of the bank before the Government and seek its assistance. These two directors suggested delay in taking action.

There was a large gathering of citizens outside the bank building while the conference was going on, and it was quite apparent that there was knowledge in the town that the bank was in difficulties and there would be a run on the bank the next morning.

I explained to the directors that the association had no power to order the suspension of the bank, but, if they did not suspend, I would report to the minister in the morning that the bank was insolvent, and I explained to them that in my judgment, it would not be honest to the depositors to open in the morning.

After the fullest possible discussion, a unanimous resolution of the directors, copy of which is marked exhibit B, was passed, and Mr. Philie, the cashier, was left in charge and was instructed to advise the branches of the bank that it had suspended payment.

I beg to append herewith a statement, exhibit C, being the return made by the bank to the association, on the 23rd June, the day it suspended.

Mr. Philie was appointed Curator by the Canadian Bankers' Association on 24th day of June, 1908, and later was appointed liquidator, and had the carriage of the winding up proceedings.

For your information, I beg leave to submit, as exhibit D, a statement of the receipts and disbursements of the liquidator, up to the 7th February, 1913.

Since the 7th February, 1913, a final dividend has been paid to the creditors of the bank with two one-tenths per cent interest on their respective claims.

Mr. RAINVILLE.

With reference to the paragraph in Mr. Rainville's statement that two days afterwards, the bank of Montreal opened a branch at St. Hyacinthe, may I add that three of the directors of the bank of St. Hyacinthe came with me to the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association when I made my report to him the day the bank suspended. After full discussion with the president, he approved of the course that had been taken by the directors on my recommendation that the bank suspend payment.

The president of the bank of St. Hyacinthe expressed the greatest possible concern for the depositors of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, and told Sir Edward Clouston that very many of them would be seriously inconvenienced by the bank suspending payment and was anxious that something be done to relieve the hardship of their situation. Sir Edward said that the bank of Montreal would immediately open a branch and that whoever was placed in charge would be instructed to do everything possible to help out depositors and others who would be embarrassed by the suspension of the bank.

In a formal report as to the reasons of the association for recommending the directors of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe to suspend payment, the fact that the bank of Montreal opened immediately after may not be any concern of the association; but, as the matter is dealt with by Mr. Rainville in his letter, I wish to add that, in my opinion, Sir Edward Clouston opened a branch of the bank of Montreal in St. Hyacinthe for the purpose of doing what he could to mitigate, in some measure, the hardship that would inevitably follow the suspension of the bank.

You will allow me to say in conclusion—

1. That at the time the Bankers' Association began its investigation into the affairs of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, there were well founded rumours as to its condition to warrant them in making inquiries.

2. That the statement as discussed by the bank showed that its capital was lost and that this was admitted by the directors.

3. That the associations' recommendation to the directors to suspend payment was the proper one to make.

4. That the result justifies the recommendation and that the creditors have been paid their claims, without the full amount for interest, only after the liquidator called up the unpaid capital and had recourse to the full amount of the double liability.

If I can furnish any further information in reference to the matter, I will be pleased to do so.

I have, &c.,
(Sgd.) John Knight,
Secretary.

Hon. W. T. White.

I do not think, Sir, that the Bankers' Association should exercise a supervision over the operation of banks on the strength of rumours. Their action, founded on rumours, seems to have taken no account of the real situation and their assertion was contrary to the facts. To give strength to his assertion of alleged rumours, Mr. Knight says that there was a great crowd around the bank when the meeting of Directors took place at St. Hyacinthe. That assertion is denied completely by all the directors I have seen personally, and it is denied most emphatically by the liquidator of the bank of St. Hyacinthe. He passed along the street near the bank about 11 o'clock at night, while the meeting was being held, and he did not even notice that a meeting was being held in the bank. The rumors referred to were so little known that two days before the bank closed two of the directors made very substantial deposits in the bank. When the emergency meeting was called by Mr. Knight at 11 o'clock some of the directors, who were in bed, got up and went to the meeting without even knowing what was in question, or what the meet had been called for. Mr. Knight made it known that he was there to close the bank and the directors revolted. The proof of this is found in Mr. Knight's own letter in which he admits having said that if they would not close their doors he would write to the hon. Minister of Finance and tell him that the bank was in an insolvent state. According to the statement of the directors of the bank, he said, if you do not close your doors to-morrow, all the banks will refuse your paper, and that meant that the bank had to go into liquidation, because I do not think there is a single bank in Canada that would stand under such circumstances. Rumor forsooth, the Bankers Association had known of the condition of that bank for five or six years. They had even helped the Banque de St. Hyacinthe in 1903, although I would not affirm so, but I know that big banks do help the smaller banks when runs have occurred on account of the tightness of money. The Banque de St. Hyacinthe was in better condition in 1908 than it was in 1903. In view of the conservative and careful conduct of the manager and board of directors, the bank, as I say, was stronger in 1908 than in 1903, and the Bankers' Association knew about it and the public knew about it, and confidence had been renewed amongst the public and the deposits were good at that time. If rumours occurred it would be very interesting to find what kind of diplomacy, some would say what kind of conspiracy, was engaged in to get the clientele of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe at St. Césaire where the bank had $160,000 on deposit with practically no discount at all. It would be very interesting to find how it was that the Bank of St. Hyacinthe closed its doors on the 23rd of June, 1908, when the association knew that the said bank had obtained judgment in the Exchequer Court for $331,000, privileged, and that $1,051,000 was deposited by the railroad company, against which the bank had obtained judgment, in the Bank of Montreal at Ottawa, for the purpose of paying the debts of the railroad. This morning I looked into the Exchequer Court Reports, and I find that the date of the judgment obtained by the Banque de St. Hyacinthe was the 25th of May, 1908. That means that one month after, yes, scarcely one month after, the judgement was rendered in favor of the Bank of St. Hyacinthe, the Bankers' Association knowing that fact, knowing that the Bank could get $331,000 and knowing at the same time that that bank had appealed from that judgment because they were claiming over $600,000; one month after that judgment was rendered, the association went to the Banque de St. Hyacinthe and they forced it to close its doors in the manner I have described. It would be very interesting, and people should know, that the very next day after the Banque de St. Hyacinthe was closed the Bank of Montreal opened in the very premises occupied the day before by the Bank of St. Hyacinthe. And it may be noted that papers, books, stamps, all with the name: Bank of Montreal, St. Hyacinthe, were in readiness, mark you, the very day after the Bank of St. Hyacinthe was closed, the Bank of Montreal was ready to do business. It would be interesting to learn from Mr. Knight, the secretary of the Bankers' Asociation, why two days after the suspension of payment orders were given and carried out to destroy by fire three or four full baskets of Banque de St. Hyacinthe bills, moneys, papers, blank checks, blank notes, notwithstanding that the ninety days had not elapsed as provided by the law which is the same for rich and poor alike. It was the wolf devouring the rabbit, after waiting five or six years until its prey might be in proper condition.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When do you say they destroyed all these papers?

Mr. RAINVILLE: Before the ninety days had expired, within which time the Banque de St. Hyacinthe had a chance of obtaining the privileges of the law.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Was that in evidence before the committee?

Mr. RAINVILLE: There was no evidence before the committee on that point, but I state this from information I have obtained from very reliable sources. It seems strange that the cashier of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe was called to Montreal to report to the Bankers' Association without having the manager of the bank know about it, and on the request of the same Mr. Knight. Since when should an employee be asked to go and discuss the financial position of his employers, without their knowledge. The address of the president and manager of the Banque de St. Hyacinthe was well known; he is a man of high reputation; he is Senator Dessaules. Why did he not call upon the president of this bank to discuss this matter instead of calling an employee, and on what terms was it done? Mr. Knight explains that himself. I explained, said Mr. Knight, to him, that such a course was necessary; that if the Bankers' Association could help the Banque de St. Hyacinthe it would do so with pleasure, but it was necessary to have a statement of its assets. What do you think, Mr. Speaker, of offering help to one of the employees instead of to the president of the bank. It was known very well that very little help would have tided the bank over its difficulties during the time of the appeal from the judgment against the railway company, and money for the payment of which judgment had been already deposited in the Bank of Montreal. I am sure $50,000 advance would have saved the Banque de St. Hyacinthe, and even without any money three weeks' time would have saved it. But due to the drastic manner in which they acted the Banque de St. Hyacinthe had to close its doors. The statement of Mr. Knight was that the report of the bank showed that the paid-up capital had been lost, and that such was admitted by the directors. Such an assertion is certainly strange in face of the opposition raised against the order of Mr. Knight by the directors and in face of the position of the bank. The paid-up capital which Mr. Knight claimed was lost amounted to $331,235. To balance that, there was the judgment, which I mentioned a few minutes ago, against the Quebec Southern Railway Company, of $331,000. The bank, however, on the advice of Senator Beique and Mr. Lafleur, had appealed to the Privy Council. I have more confidence in the judgment on a point of law in Senator Beique, who is a good lawyer, and in Mr. Lafleur, who is one of the best lawyers in Montreal, than I could have in Mr. Knight, the secretary of the Bankers' Association.

Mr. LEMIEUX: They are the two leading lawyers of our province.

Mr. RAINVILLE: One bank at Montreal, knowing the situation of the Bank of St. Hyacinthe, offered to the Government that, out of the deposits of $1,051,000 for the payment of all the debts of the railroad, if the Government would place with them a deposit of $400,000, they would advance $200,000 to the Bank of St. Hyacinthe. That was much more than was needed to meet all the liabilities that could arise from any source. If Mr. Knight had been really willing at that time to do something in behalf of the Bank of St. Hyacinthe, I think he had sufficient influence with the Bank of Montreal to say: You have over a million dollars here on deposit, on which you are drawing profits; you should advance this bank $200,000, not a gift, but money that will hold until they receive a final judgment which might be greater than $331,000. Instead of offering that help, they simply came to St. Hyacinthe and closed the bank.

Mr. Knight made a statement in his report on the Bank of St. Hyacinthe to show that the assets of the bank were not collectable. I have a word to say on that item of $33,000, which was a debenture on an aqueduct. It was sold about $9,000 in liquidation; but the man who borrowed the money, although he made no repairs and did no new work on it, would not sell it for $30,000 because it is paying about $3,000 per annum. The man who bought it was a director of the bank and knew the value of that aqueduct. We know very well that, when a property is sold through liquidation, it has to be sold at a big sacrifice.

The third conclusion of Mr. Knight's report is:

> That the association's recommendation to the directors to suspend payment was the proper one to make.

If there is anything in the law to meet such circumstances, we must abide by the law. Section 39 of the Bank Act reads as follows:

> If any part of the paid-up capital is lost the directors shall, if all the subscribed stock is not paid up, forthwith make call upon the shareholders to an amount equivalent to the loss: Provided that all net profits shall be applied to make good such loss.
> 2. Any such loss of capital and the calls, if any made in respect thereof, shall be mentioned in the next return made by the bank to the minister.

The law is clear. Was there any capital which was not paid? Yes, to the amount of $173,565. That is a fairly large amount. If the directors had known two days before that the Association was coming up to close their doors, I am sure they would have immediately called in the capital which was not paid. The law provides for that. The law is made for the Bankers' Association just as much as for the small bank. Before touching the business of the Bank, they should have taken the step first to call in the unpaid capital, $173,565. With the amount of the judgment from which they could get $331,000 if they had given up their appeal to the Privy Council, plus $75,000 which the liquidation of the bank cost and plus a few more thousand dollars on that question of the corset company and others, would have amounted to the sum of about $600,000, and the bank would not have closed its doors. Mr. Knight said in conclusion:

> That the result justifies that recommendation and that the creditors have been paid their claims, without the full amount for interest, only after the liquidator called up the unpaid capital and had recourse to the full amount of the double liability.

This argument will certainly seem extraordinary coming from a banker, who more than anyone knows what considerable loss there is whenever a forced liquidation occurs.

Mr. Knight, I repeat, was not asked to give evidence as to the consequences of the intervention of the Bankers' Association, but to answer as to that very intervention itself—the way he intervened. On the 23rd of June, 1908, I think I can safely say, the affairs of the Bank of St. Hyacinthe were in a better position than they were before. And the situation in 1903 was perfectly known to the Bankers' Association. There have been many failures among banks in recent years, and I do not think there has been a single case in which the bank was able to pay one hundred per cent of its deposits. Take la Banque du Peuple, which everybody says should never have closed its doors; that bank did not pay more than seventy-five per cent of its deposits. Other banks, like the Bank Ville Marie, la Banque de St. Jean, and the Farmers' Bank did not pay a cent of deposits. The Sovereign Bank and the Ontario Bank did not actually fail but were taken over, but I venture to say they would not have been able to pay one hundred per cent of their deposits had they been wound up in the way the Banque de St. Hyacinthe was. La Banque de St. Hyacinthe paid not only one hundred per cent of its deposits but two and a half per cent interest, though there were large losses brought about by the very fact of the liquidation of the bank.

There was something else. If the directors had known what was coming they could have sold their assets, and those assets were of quite large value. They had a minimum circulation of $200,000 which they had loaned at seven per cent, bringing an income of $14,000 a year. They had deposits of $850,000 on which they paid three and a half per cent, and which they loaned on an average of seven per cent, bringing $39,750. This made a total income of $43,750. The cost of administration of the bank was only $16,000. That would leave more than $27,000 a year. So, even if all the capital was gone, they could pay a little over five per cent on that capital which had disappeared.

I think I can say, in conclusion, that the drastic and arbitrary manner in which the Bankers' Association attempted to dictate to the directors, coercing them into closing their doors, was the sole excuse of the failure of this bank. The directors were the proper parties to judge of the course to be taken, free from the dictation of the Bankers' Asssociation. And, if I rise on the third reading of this Bill to give, as well as I can, an answer to the two letters addressed to the hon. Minister of Finance by the Bankers' Association, it is only to prevent other such cases arising in the future. The reputation of the businessmen who were directors of La Banque St. Hyacinthe, a reputation which they still hold, could be no better. Those directors were, Senator J. C. Dessaules, Joseph Morin, provincial auditor of Quebec; L. P. Morin, a big trader of St. Hyacinthe; Dr. Emile Ostigny, a millionaire from Montreal, V. B. Sicotte; Mr. Archambault and Mr. Brillon. These gentlemen, as I have said, had a high reputation amongst all classes of good people. They are good businessmen, honest men. I am sure that the disappearance of La Banque St. Hyacinthe will be forever a black spot in their business life. But that failure was not their fault. It was the fault of one man in the Bankers' Association; not Sir Edward Clouston, who is dead, but Mr. Knight, the secretary of that association. I am bound to say that I am confident that if an inquiry were given we should find that the main responsibility for the disappearance of that bank lay with him.

I have detained the House long enough, I resume my seat with an expression of thanks for the attention with which I have been heard and with the hope that the Minister of Finance will make a careful investigation into this whole matter.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland): I regret very much indeed that at this hour of the morning I feel constrained to make some observations with regard to the Bill under discussion. I cannot refrain from calling attention to the fact that there is a very great contrast between the entrance of the Bill on its second reading in this Chamber and its exit when it is about to receive its third reading. Its entrance was like, if not a February blizzard, at least a March gale, but it seems to be going out like a summer breeze. I do not wish to complain, but it seems to me that the Government in forcing us to discuss this matter at this hour of the morning, imposes a strain upon the endurance, upon the physical endurance, of hon. members. I have no desire to do other than expedite the business of the House, but still there are limitations, and I think the Government would be better advised if they would give us a more opportune moment for considering the Bill.

We must remember that the banking conditions in Canada have not had and do not now have the confidence of the people of Canada. Rightly or wrongly, there are suspicions with respect to the conditions which prevail in connection with the banking institutions, not as regards their stability; not, indeed, as regards their good faith, but with respect to the great powers which they have as a monopoly in this country. The Banking Bill was introduced into this House under such conditions that the people of Canada are doubtful, suspicious, not fully understanding with regard to the matter. What have we done to establish their confidence and their good faith in respect to these financial institutions? I am not a rebel as against the banking institutions of Canada. I am not in any way in antagonism to those institutions or to the management of the banks in Canada, but I do say that the banking institutions of this country owed it to themselves and owed it to the people of Canada that there should have been a full and complete inquiry into the conditions which prevail and which have prevailed in Canada. This Bill on its second reading did receive a good deal of marked and emphatic criticism. There were many hon. members on both sides of the House who felt that they were voicing the sentiments of the people of the country when they criticised the Bill and criticised existing conditions; I have no doubt that they felt that in so doing, they were but discharging the obligations which they owed to their constituents. I had supposed, as a result of that criticism, that when the Bill was considered in the Banking and Commerce Committee the facts and the conditions would have been fully inquired into, and that there would have been a complete exposé with respect to the circumstances surrounding the management of the banking institutions, but I am bound to say that the inquiry was not full, was not complete, was not adequate. I made the statement on the second reading that there was a money trust in Canada, and that linked and associated with that trust were the financial and great banking institutions; that there had been merger after merger, combination after combination, until we had reached a period in the financial history of this country when there were to be found some two dozen men who, by reason of interlocking directorates, controlled the financial institutions of Canada. I repeat that assertion; I made it on the floor of this House with due regard for my responsibility as a member. I have felt that there should have been a full and complete inquiry with respect to that phase of the matter, but there has been no such inquiry. I have no right nor do I wish in any way to criticise the conduct of the Banking and Commerce Committee; far be it from me to take any such step. But let me recall the facts. The Banking and Commerce Committee called and examined witnesses, and their statements and utterances are referred to as evidence. Were any of the witnesses called before the committee sworn? It is the usual practice in the committees of this House to swear the witnesses who are called to give evidence. As an illustration of that fact I may say that during the past week a committee has been inquiring into the pollution of the navigable streams of Canada. Every witness called before that committee, whether expert or otherwise, was sworn. I am not going to call into question the statements given by any of the witnesses who were examined before the Banking and Commerce Committee. They are reputable gentlemen of high financial standing, and they hold positions of trust in Canada, but they are as much entitled to be called upon to give their evidence upon the Holy Evangelists as are the witnesses who may be called before other committees. This was not done; I know not for what reason, but when hon. members refer to the evidence that was given—and it was voluminous—I say it is a misnomer. You have a mass of statements; you have a mass of not merely viva voce statements, but of written statements handed in. For what purpose? For the purpose of placing before the committee the opinions of men who are supposed, and I do not question the supposition, to be authorities. Yet, Sir, why should they be permitted to depart from the usual practice in connection with evidence taken before the committees of this House?

Mr. FOSTER (Kings): Did the hon. gentleman as a member of that committee suggest that any such witnesses be sworn?

Mr. EMMERSON: I was a member of that committee; I venture to say I attended as regularly as any member of it, but I am bound to say that the evidence was almost wholly in before it came to my knowledge that the usual practice with regard to the swearing of the witnesses was not being followed. I naturally expected that the usual practice and custom of this House that has been followed for years was being followed with respect to that committee. I am not questioning the good faith or the bona fides of any hon. gentlemen who may have contributed to the testimony, so-called which was placed before the committee, and which has been reported to this House, but I do say that it is a remarkable fact that in dealing with this matter, having regard to the questionings throughout the country; having regard to the fact that there are doubts in the minds of the people generally in regard to the management of the banking institutions, I say it was ill-advised on the part of the committee, or whoever was responsible for it, to have the evidence given and taken in that way. If it is right for that committee and if it is right for the great finance magnates of Canada who come forward and make their statements before committees of this House without being sworn, surely we are not treating the other committees or the gentlemen who appear before other committees with the same respect. I attended as far as I could the meetings of that committee. I did it with the view of informing myself in the first instance but I soon learned to see the trend of events and I observed the way the wind blew; I am not making any charge of a political character or nature in giving utterance to these sentiments, I am simply presenting the bald, bare facts as they existed and have existed during the past few weeks. The committee was very fully attended by members of this House, who seemed to take great interest in sustaining the Bill as it was presented before that committee. Early in the history of the committee I made a motion to the effect that there should be counsel employed to represent the general interest, the public interest of the country. That did not go to a vote it is true but for a very good reason, because, Sir, it was soon seen that the very mention of the idea was received with an impatience that could not be misunderstood. Remember that the Banking Association had as its representative before this committee, perhaps the most eminent counsel in the Dominion of Canada, and associated with him, representing the banking interests of Canada, were very able counsel, who were on hand on all occasions ready, when any motion was made, if there happened to be any doubt with regard to its fate, to see that the vacancies were filled and that the ranks were placed so that there could be no question of the result. I think that I am speaking what is known to every hon. member of that committee, what will be admitted by every member of that committee as the solemn truth, that there was, in the minds of the committee, the idea that there was a steam roller process going on, that any amendment that might be proposed which seemingly was at all antagonistic to the money interests or to the banking interests, would be frowned down. The committee proceeded with its work. The Bill has emerged from that committee. Can any hon. member say that there has been a change in any substantial manner antagonistic to the interests of the banks? They have been represented by eminent and able counsel. On the other hand, there were no counsel to present the interests of the people at large as against the moneyed class.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings): Does the hon. member not consider that the eminent lawyers who were the representatives of the people on the Banking and Commerce Committee were quite able to take the part of the common people in the matter of the discussion of the Banking Act?

Mr. EMMERSON: It is a very harmless inquiry that my hon. friend makes. I am not questioning the ability of the members of the committee but I am speaking of the counsel outside of the committee. There were none to represent the people's interest, there were a number representing the banking interest.

There was one feature of the inquiry that was never delved into, I had not the opportunity on all occasions to be present, especially during the period when witnesses were being called. I did my duty as best I could in attending the meetings. The proceedings before the committee suggested to the mind of every responsible man in this country one important question: is there a money trust in Canada, and how far are the directors of banks in Canada mixed up in the great corporations of Canada who are utilizing and using the funds of the banks of Canada? It must be a matter of concern to every man whether the banking institutions of Canada, empowered and given privileges as they are by the Parliament of Canada, are controlled by a very few individuals, and whether by reason of the interlocking directorates there is banded together a great and huge money trust. I know that when I was at the committee and any question was asked with respect to the directorate and how far the funds of banking institutions were being loaned either to individual directors or to companies in which individual directors were interested, the witnesses, not the sworn witnesses, but the gentlemen who were simply making their statements, backed away from the inquiry and it was treated as a matter of little concern, as if the committee were not obliged to make inquiry in that channel. I can speak to the credit of some hon. members of the committee, and I can say that my hon. friend from Queens and Shelburne was certainly faithful in that regard. I am pleased and proud to be able to pay this tribute to my hon. friend's endeavour to prove the use of banking funds by banking directors or by companies in which bank directors are interested. That phase of the inquiry was not entered upon as it should have been. I take my share of the responsibility in not being able to have that full probing. Had the suggestion which I made to the committee to have counsel employed been acted upon, that could have been done. We must recognize the circumstances under which this inquiry was made. We must remember that during the meetings of that committee there was before this House some very important questions that demanded, and I think, received the attention of many hon. members of the committee. It was quite impossible for individual members of the committee to give attention to that phase of the question which it demanded. Had the suggestion which I made been acted upon there could not have been any complaint as regards either the attitude of the committee or its action. But no inquiry has been made as to whether there is a money trust. Questions were asked of one witness, I think it was Mr. Forgan from Chicago, with respect to a money trust in the United States. He said very distinctly that he knew there was, or believed there was, a money trust, but nothing was proved as to that, and men high up in the banking institutions were impatient when any questions were put, were supercilious towards the members of the committee attempting to prove or inquire into that phase of the question. Those gentlemen swept aside almost with a sneer the idea that there was a combination or money trust. That question was not gone into. It was not fully inquired into, and to-day the people of Canada are as ignorant with respect to it as if the committee had never met, and as if a bank Bill had never received the consideration of the House of Commons of Canada.

It is because of these facts, and these conditions and circumstances that I feel called upon to bring to the notice of this House just where we stand with respect to the Bank Bill as it emerges from this chamber into the other chamber of this Parliament. The inquiry before that committee was entirely unsatisfactory. It was not full, it was not complete, and I think the discussion in this House in Committee yesterday fully illustrated the fact. Wherein have there been any material or substantial changes? From every standpoint, the interests of the banks have been protected. There is not a member of that committee but who will concur with me in that regard. Take the question of audit and inspection. Take the question of interest and exchange charges. Take the question as to the right of holding, owning, occupying and utilizing real estate. In all these respects, the banks are to-day in just as good a position as they were when this Bank Bill was first introduced. In no sense has any advance been made in the interests of the people as against the banking institutions. I would like to have had an inquiry into the banking conditions of Australia. There they have a Commonwealth bank. Was there any attempt to show the conditions existing in that Commonwealth, in regard to the conducting of a state bank? There was none, and yet from the distant Pacific to the shores of the Atlantic there is a feeling of distrust on the part of the people with regard to the conditions which prevailed. Rightly or wrongly, Sir, the people have an idea that they are not receiving a fair deal, and I make that statement not from the standpoint of a partisan or of one who is associated with one political party. I am speaking from the standpoint of the people's interests and from that standpoint alone. I would ask this House to calmly reflect when this Bill takes its flight from this chamber to the other, to calmly deliberate as to what has been accomplished after all with regard to the banking system of Canada. Has there been any step forward? Have any advances been made? I see the Minister of Finance is seated beside me. I am glad to have his inspiration. I am glad to know that he has been faithful, I will say that to his credit. He attended every meeting of the committee, and he tried to stem the tide. In some instances he got into the eddies, but in many respects he contributed to whatever improvement was made in the Act. I would have liked this Bill to stand until to-morrow morning, but he was adamant, and I propose to impose upon him the penalty of his resistance. My hon. friend (Mr. Rainville) has given a splendid illustration of the monopoly of the Canadian Bankers' Association. It is a huge monopoly, it has not a parallel on this continent as a monopolistic concern. They control every bank; they can ruin any bank. We have not in any way curbed their power in this Bill or limited their authority. They are licensed by the Parliament of Canada to exercise their authority and Parliament has delegated to them powers which it should have retained to itself.

Mr. FOSTER: In what respect?

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not propose to go into details at this hour, but I might remark that the food mentioned in scripture as a food for babes would be applicable to my hon. friend from Kings; I am not dealing with the question of food that is suitable to his infancy. My hon. friend the Finance Minister has been kind enough to come over and sit beside me as my deskmate, and I feel that he is now penitent enough for having resisted my request to defer the further consideration of this Bill until the next sitting of the House. I have a great deal of human sympathy, and I shall therefore, not impose further upon the members of the House, and least of all upon my esteemed friend the Minister of Finance, who has done me the honour to come and sit beside me while I am making this plea for what I consider the betterment of the conditions under which banking and commerce are conducted in this country.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 1.40 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 23, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Supplement to the Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, respecting the Indians of Canada.—Mr. Hazen.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Mr. BURNHAM: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), in view of your ruling of yesterday in regard to the report of the Old Age Pensions Committee, has suggested that this report be referred back to the committee. Therefore it is moved by Mr. Macdonald, seconded by myself, that the report of the Old Age Pensions Committee be referred back to the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been looking into this matter, and I find that the report which was presented to the House has already been dealt with. The only recommendation in the report for which, I think, concurrence was desired, was with regard to printing, which would necessarily require to go to the Printing Committee. After the report was presented to this House, it was submitted to and was dealt with by the Printing Committee; therefore it could not be referred back.

Mr. MACDONALD: The circumstances with regard to the report were these: A sub-committee of the regular committee was appointed for the purpose of drafting a report. That committee did not meet, and the report as presented to the House, though assented to hurriedly by the different members, was not a full expression of the desires of the Committee. I submit that the opportunity to place properly before the House the findings and recommendations of the committee ought not to be barred by the assumption of authority on the part of any other committee of the House. In order that the matter might come before the House in proper shape, and that the views and opinions of the members of the committee might find proper expression, I suggested that the motion which has been stated by the hon. member for West Peterborough, should be made. In order that everything may be regular, and that the report of the committee may be made in proper shape, I would suggest that the consent of the House be given that the report be referred back to the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the House had a right to assume that the report as presented by the chairman of the committee was a correct and regular report. As a portion of the report refers to printing, it was, by what authority I do not know, referred to the Printing Committee. The Printing Committee having dealt with it, the House assumes that it was a proper report, and, in my judgment, it could not now be referred back.

Mr. MACDONALD: Except by consent of the House. Perhaps I may be permitted again to point out, with all due deference, that the control of the House over the report of any one of its committees is an absolute control, which cannot be abridged at any time by the assumption of authority on the part of any other committee. There is no great principle involved in the matter, except that the record may be proper; there is no political issue involved in it, and I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, with a view to straightening the matter out, that he would consent to the passing of the motion.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN: I am not thoroughly familiar with the various phases of the situation, and, if the hon. gentleman will let the matter remain until Monday, I will confer with His Honour the Speaker, and members of the committee, and see what can be done.

Mr. SPEAKER: From my knowledge of the situation, as the committee has not yet dissolved, I think that if they desire to give any further consideration to the subject matter which was referred to them, it would be quite in order for them to do so.

Motion stands.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 228, to incorporate the Pointe aux Trembles Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 229, for the relief of Albert Britnell.—Mr. Sharpe (North Ontario).

Bill No. 230, respecting certain Patents of Otto R. Barnett.—Mr. Bennett (East Simcoe).

H. M. C. S. RAINBOW.

Mr. EMMERSON: I observed in the papers last night a despatch to the effect that the Rainbow was being dismantled and the men dismissed. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Naval Service if there is any truth in that report.

Mr. HAZEN: I think there is no truth whatever in the report.

BOUNTY FOR MISS HUTCHINSON.

On motion of Hon. T. W. Crothers (Minister of Labour), the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of the Interior to issue a Military Bounty Land Certificate to Miss Lois B. Hutchinson, as the sole heir and personal representative of her deceased father, James Hutchinson, entitling her, or her substitute, to obtain, free of charge, an entry for a homestead of two adjoining quarter-sections of Dominion lands, and to receive letters patent therefor, provided that such entry is made and obtained on or before December 31, 1913.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Explain.

Mr. CROTHERS: The facts in connection with this matter have been pretty fully set forth in the recital. They are as follows: The father of this young lady, the late James Hutchinson, was killed at Fish Creek in the year 1885. The same year a statute was passed providing for the issue of the military bounty certificate from the Militia Department for the conferring on men who were engaged in that outbreak two quarter-sections; the party in whose favour such warrant issued was entitled to locate two quarter-sections. The original Act provided that these locations should be made not later, I think, than some day in the month of August, 1886. The time for locating was from time to time extended, the last extension being made, I think, in 1906, until the 31st of December of that year. A warrant was issued in favour of the late James Hutchinson, but his daughter never located the scrip. At the time of her father's death she was a child in arms, her mother has since died, and she is the sole representative and heiress of her late father. It is thought well to grant her now what she would have been entitled to prior to 1908 if she had not overlooked the locating of it. Of course it may be regarded as un undesirable precedent to pass such a Bill, but I am told by one of the officers of my department, Mr. Côté, that there is no other similar case before the department. I understand that when my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was Minister of the Interior, he considered the circumstances of this case and was in favour of introducing a Bill such as I am proposing to found on this resolution. I think this is a case where we should render this young woman the special privilege that is proposed under this resolution and the accompanying Bill.

Mr. OLIVER: As my hon. friend has said, this matter was brought to my attention when I was Minister of the Interior, and I was entirely favourably impressed with the righteousness of the claim made by the young woman. I think a Bill was prepared for introduction to Parliament, but the Government changed, and of course the Bill dropped. I know it is objectionable to revive old claims, but, whatever might be said of the general principle, this is such a very exceptional case, that I think Parliament will do itself credit to pass the legislation which is proposed by the minister. As my hon. friend has said, the father of the applicant was killed in battle. He was entitled, or his heirs were entitled, to this consideration. A scrip was issued, but there was no person to take it up at the time. The father was dead, the mother died, the child had not come to years of knowledge, and consequently the right lapsed. Now the young woman, having become of age, desires to assert her claim, which I would consider her right, to the property earned by the sacrifice of her father's life.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. CROTHERS thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 232, to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the Militia Force on active service in the Northwest.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA.

The House proceeded to consider the Senate amendments to Bill No. 187, to incorporate the National Gallery of Canada. —Mr. Rogers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the nature of those amendments?

Mr. ROGERS: They propose an amendment to clause 4 which clause reads as follows:

The Board shall be composed of not less than three and not more than seven members.

That was the clause as it passed this House. The Senate propose that the Board shall be composed of not less than three members and not more than five. A further amendment is made in the eighth line of clause 3, in which are contained the words 'the custody and preservation of works of art contributed'; they suggest the addition of the words 'and to be contributed.'

Mr. LEMIEUX: I hope my hon. friend will give way to the desire which has been expressed not only in this Chamber, but, as I see by reading the debates, in the other Chamber, that the museum should be open on Saturday afternoon and Sunday. There is a prevailing feeling in favour of that, at least in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. ROGERS: That matter has not been considered. As I told my hon. friend the other day, I am entirely in favour of keeping it open on Sunday, and I will do all I can to that end.

Amendments read the second time, and agreed to.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

The House proceeded to consider the Senate amendment to Bill No. 180, to amend the Supreme Court Act. — Mr. Doherty.

Mr. DOHERTY: The amendment made by the Senate is to the last clause of the Bill as it passed this House, amending sec. 49 of the Supreme Court Act. That is the sec. dealing with appeals from Ontario. The amendment of the Senate provides that:

Where the right to appeal depends upon the amount or value of the matter in controversy, and no specific sum is claimed, the amount or value of the matter in controversy may be proved by affidavit or affidavits.

That amendment was made by the bill as it passed this House to section 49 of the Act which deals with appeals from Ontario. The preceding section, which deals with Quebec, also makes appeals in certain cases dependent upon the amount in issue and contained precisely the same provision that the amount demanded or the value should be a certain sum to entitle a party to appeal. Amending section 49 made the amending provision applicable only to appeals from Ontario, whereas, the provision, if desirable, should be equally applicable in both cases. The amendment consists in making provision generally that where the right to appeal depends upon the value in controversy and no specific sum is claimed the value may be proved by affidavit or affidavits.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does that apply to every appeal in any part of Canada?

Mr. DOHERTY: Wherever there would be a section providing that the right to appeal depended on the amount in issue and no demand was made of a specific sum so that on the face of the record the value of the matter in issue did not appear, it would apply.

Mr. McKENZIE: It applies to any of the other provinces?

Mr. DOHERTY: To any provinces where the right of appeal depends on the value in issue and the amount does not appear on the record.

Amendment read the second time and agreed to.

SUPPLY.

On the order for Committee of Supply:

Mr. SPEAKER: With regard to this motion to go into Committee of Supply, I am not sure how it stands under the new rules, under which on Thursdays and Fridays the Speaker leaves the Chair without any motion being put; but only those estimates which have been taken up on some other day than Thursday or Friday can be considered, except with the consent of the House. I take it that with the consent of the House we follow the rule, and the Speaker leaves the Chair without motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know whether I understand the rules rightly or not. My interpretation of the motion is that on Thursday and Friday the Speaker leaves the Chair without motion, automatically; but on that day no estimates can be taken up except those which have previously been considered.

Mr. BORDEN: That is quite right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker can leave the Chair without any motion, but the Government cannot take up any estimates except those which have been taken up already, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not stated which estimates are to be taken up, and I have not a record of what have already been dealt with.

Mr. BORDEN: We intend to take up the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. For this purpose I am willing to admit that the estimates of that Department have not been taken up before within the meaning of the rule, and I agree that they be taken up with the unanimous consent of the House, which I understand to be given.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know if I understand correctly. Mr. Speaker seems to be under the impression that he must know what estimates are to be taken up. Automatically the Speaker leaves the Chair, but then the Government are required to take up estimates which have been previously considered.

Mr. CARVELL: It seems to me that this question does not arise at the present time, because the estimates of every department have already been considered during this session. We have passed one-sixth of all the estimates of all the departments. While we may not actually have discussed them, in what you might call a debate, we have certainly considered them.

Mr. EMMERSON: That was before the new rules.

Mr. CARVELL: That makes no difference. It has been done during this session.

Mr. BORDEN: That would be a very strict interpretation of the rule, and I should not insist upon it.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Rules are technical things.

The House then went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—civil government, $246,200.

Mr. HAZEN: My civil government estimates are practically the same as those of last year, with certain statutory increases.

Mr. KYTE: Would the hon. minister indicate the promotions that have taken place in his department in the last year and the additions to salaries?

Mr. HAZEN: There are practically no additions to salaries beyond the statutory increases. The salary of the Deputy Minister is the same. In the first division, subdivision A, the salary of the assistant Deputy Minister is the same; of the Chief Engineer, the same; of Professor Prince, Inspector of Fisheries, the same; Mr. Doutre, Purchasing Agent, statutory increase; Mr. Fraser, Assistant Chief Engineer, statutory increase; Mr. Boyle, Accountant, statutory increase; Mr. McPhail, statutory increase; Mr. Boyle, Accountant, statutory increase; Mr. Found, statutory increase; Mr. Lindsay, statutory increase. There was a vacancy in the position of Chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspection. The salary of the Chairman is $2,800. That vacancy was caused by the retirement of Mr. Adams and has been filled by the promotion of Mr. Ferguson, who has been stationed at Quebec. Then there is the salary of Mr. Halkett, $2,800.

In the first division, subdivision B, the salaries last year were $41,650; this year they are $45,100, being the same as last year with the statutory additions.

In the second division, subdivision A, the salaries last year were $49,600; this year they are $55,850. There are thirty-two positions provided for, an increase of three over last year. It is proposed to appoint a fog alarm inspector, a mechanical engineer and an inspecting engineer, whose services are found necessary in the work of the department. As regards the salaries paid to the different officials, there is a full list here if any hon. gentleman desires to see it. In reference to the appointment of a mechanical engineer, the department has been without the services of such an engineer since Mr. Macdonnell was transferred some years ago to the Steamboat Inspection branch, which takes up the whole of his time. He used to be able to give us his assistance when the services of a mechanical engineer were required. The mechanical engineering branch is constantly engaged in the design, manufacture and repair of fog alarm and other apparatus of all kinds, including numerous kinds of buoys. The opinion of the head of the branch is that the services of a fully qualified mechanical engineer are absolutely essential. With regard to the Fog Alarm Inspector, Mr. Macdonnell has performed this work for a number of years. Since his transfer, the Commissioner of Lights, Mr. McPhail, has carried on the work as best as he could. He has not found it possible, along with the general work of his office, to give this inspection the attention it requires. It is therefore necessary to provide for a third position in subdivision A at $1,600.

In the second division, subdivision B, there are thirty-four positions provided for, an increase of seven over last year. The salaries last year were $32,550; this year they are $38,050. These seven new places will be filled by appointing clerks in the various branches, some at $800 and some at $850 a year.

With regard to naval architects at $1,200 a year, the work of designing and preparing plans for all steamers that are constructed by the Government is done by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The head of the branch, the chief architect, is Mr. Duguid. It is found that we cannot keep up with the work, as Mr. Duguid has to be away from the office so much of his time inspecting vessels that are in course of construction. It is necessary therefore, to give him assistance in his work.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Does the minister think that we can secure the services of a good naval architect for $1,200 a year?

Mr. HAZEN: These are only draughtsmen and assistants. We have I believe, a first-class naval architect in Mr. Duguid, a gentleman who, some years ago, I understand, was recommended by Lord Strathcona who had been applied to to assist in securing the services of such a man. The assistants will be young men of experience as draughtsmen and who will no doubt develop. They will be in the class whose salaries begin at $1,200, and go on by annual increments to $1,600.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will they be subject to examination?

Mr. HAZEN: These men will be chosen through the Civil Service Commission, who no doubt, will advertise for applicants and make the choice in the ordinary way.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This is a matter of very great importance. I have heard it stated by those engaged in ship-building that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has not been able to supply the information on which a tender should be made. I am informed that in many cases the Department ask the builder who is tendering to submit his own plans.

Mr. HAZEN: That has been done.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is a very awkward and unbusiness like way to deal with the matter. The department should know what kind of ship they require and should be able to give the builders, especially the builders in Canada who have not yet had great experience, full details to form the basis of a tender.

Mr. HAZEN : That is exactly the reason we are trying to increase this organization. Formerly description was given in a general way of the kind of ship wanted, and the builders were asked to tender submitting their own designs and plans. I do not see how it was possible to come to a fair conclusion as to whom the contract should be given to. I found that state of affairs when I entered the department and discussed the subject with the officials. Hereafter, when we ask for tenders we expect to give plans and full details. When all tenderers base their offers on the same plans, we can then judge whose tender is the lowest and most advantageous. But, until we complete the organization, we cannot follow that method.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How many officers has the minister appointed in the inside, and how many in the outside service, since the present Administration came into office?

Mr. HAZEN : Very few in the inside service, in the higher positions; nearly all minor clerkships. There have been some in the outside service in connection with the lighthouse service and that sort of thing. I cannot give figures at the moment, but will be able to give them later on. Passing from that, we come to the third division subdivision (A). Last year the amount was $35,050, and this year $40,800. There is no change in the number of clerks—there are thirty-eight—and the increase is made up of the statutory increases alone.

Mr. KYTE : Do statutory increases depend upon the recommendation of any officials in the department?

Mr. HAZEN: Upon that of the deputy Minister. If the Deputy recommends the official as worthy of the increase he gets it, but if the official's work has not been satisfactory and the Deputy-Minister so reports, he does not get it. Coming down to the third division subdivision (B), last year the amount was $20,900, this year it is $17,850. We are providing for twenty-nine positions as against twenty-four. The clerks to be appointed numbered five, at $500 a year each, the very lowest class—they are stenographers. There are but two permanent stenographers for the fisheries correspondence proper. They have been unable to cope with the work and it has been necessary to employ temporary clerks almost continuously throughout the year. There will be an additional one also in the Commissioner of Lights' branch. This was made necessary by the fact that Miss Percival was transferred to the Accountants' branch and to fill the position Miss Hill was employed temporarily. That position must be filled permanently. These are all positions which it is absolutely necessary to fill that the work in the department may be carried on. I am told by men in the department who have been there for years, that the work in the department increases every year and has increased very rapidly in the last few years. This is due in part to the greater volume of business in connection with the fisheries of British Columbia, where there has been a tremendous development. Then, for messengers, the amount provided last year was $5,500, and this year $6,700. This increase provides for the statutory increases and also for two additional messengers. The Department of Marine and Fisheries is scattered almost all over town. There is not only the main office in the western block, but there we have an office on Sparks street, one on Wellington street, and the branch in the Corry building and others. An increase in the staff of messengers is absolutely necessary, as papers have to be constantly carried by messengers from one branch of the department to another. That covers the different items which make up the civil government estimates

Mr. SINCLAIR: How many dismissals have been made for political partisanship in the department of the minister since he took charge?

Mr. HAZEN. So far as the inside service is concerned, I do not think there have been any dismissals for political partisanship. In the outside service there have been quite a number of dismissals. I have not a statement before me, but I will have it made out for my hon. friend if he so desires.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The feeling in my constituency and along the coast of Nova Scotia in regard to the Marine and Fishery Department is that the minister has been very reckless indeed so far as dismissals are concerned. He has resorted to the spoils system, pure and simple, showing very little regard for the rights of the officers and not extending to them an opportunity for a fair and proper investigation of their cases. I would have expected that the minister, coming from the maritime provinces, knowing the hardships endured and the small salaries received by the lighthouse keepers on the coast, would have had some consideration for them, and, at all events, would have given them a fair trial, but so far as the action of his department in this regard has come under my own observation, I cannot say that he has done so. There have been a very large number of dismissals in my constituency, and in many cases trials have been conducted, in a star-chamber way, in the bedrooms of hotels, garrets and places of that kind. Witnesses have been examined in some cases in the absence of the person accused. Most of the marine officers on the coast of my constituency have been dismissed, with the exception of a few lighthouse keepers. The greatest sinners in this regard are the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). There is a very striking passage in one of the minor prophets of the Old Testament in which a scourge of insects or grubs is described in this way: What the locust left, the canker-worm ate; what the canker-worm left, the caterpiller ate, and when the caterpiller got through there was not anything left. That very fairly indicates the conditions connected with the dismissal of Liberal officials employed on the coast of my constituency. What the Minister of Customs left, the Postmaster General devoured, what the Postmaster General left, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries devoured, and when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries got through there was scarcely a single Liberal officer left in the fish hatcheries and lifeboat stations on the one hundred and fifty miles of the coast of my constituency.

The case to which I wish to refer specially is that of W. L. Munro, who was lightkeeper on an island known as Three Top Island in the harbour of Whitehead. He was appointed to the position in 1879 by the Conservative administration, and served in the capacity of lightkeeper for 32 years. The island is an unsheltered rock off Whitehead, exposed to all the storms of the Atlantic; in winter time it is very difficult to reach the shore at all, and the keeper is often imprisoned for weeks at a time. Mr. Munro was appointed under the old system under which light keepers, after serving a certain number of years reaching a certain age, were entitled to be retired under pension. Mr. Munro claims that he was entitled to receive a pension after being thirty-two years in the service, but his dismissal has been used as a reason why he should not receive a pension. This man is a sailor, and somewhat excitable, and while a Conservative in his early days, he later acquired an admiration for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. At the close of a meeting in the schoolhouse in his district he is said to have proposed three cheers for Sir Wilfrid, and I understand that that is one of the chief reasons why this man, who served for thirty-two years in the capacity of lighthouse keeper, and who was entitled to a pension, was discharged from the service and refused a pension.

The charges against this lighthouse keeper were first made in February, 1912, and there was a lengthy correspondence between him and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, part of which I wish to put on record. The minister delayed action for a long time and finally threw Munro to the wolves and denied him his position and the pension to which he claimed to be entitled.

His case is a hard one. He has a family, and is now well up in years. He opened his heart to the minister, approaching him personally by writing a letter of which he sent me a copy. In February, 1912, Mr. Munro wrote the following letter to the minister:

Whitehead, N.S., February 8, 1912.

To the Honourable, Minister Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

My Honourable Sir,—I presume among others, you have me slated for my dismissal. And whether I am right in doing so, I thought I would drop you a line regarding it. I trust, honourable Sir, as I have been keeper of this station for thirty-two years and some months, that if I am dismissed, that you will see that I get a superannuation, as of course, after twenty years of any man's life there is not much strength left in him for hard toil and dragging. I am now sixty years of age past, and still burdened with the care of three grandchildren after raising a family of my own, ten children, and among them only one boy and what help I had it was always hired help; and the small salary I always got which of course was a help, I always had to work hard in order to make ends meet.

I am not ashamed to say I was appointed in 1879, and up to 1896 I always voted Conservative, but as the latter Government was good enough to let me hold my job, I thought it my duty to vote for them, and as far as votes goes we are square; however, you will, I trust, honourable Sir, allow me your sincere consideration, and have me granted a superannuation if I am dismissed. I trust you won't have it done this winter while so rough and boisterous.

I am dear honourable Sir,
Your very obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. L. Munro.

Mr. Munro also wrote a little sketch of his life, setting forth some feats of bravery he had performed while residing on this island. This he handed to the press for publication, sending me a copy as well. It is a very interesting story; it discloses the hardships suffered by and the heroic conduct of this man while he was in the service of the department. I submitted this statement of Munro to the minister prior to his dismissal, so that the minister would not have the excuse that he was not familiar with all the details with regard to this man's service and his merits. In sending this sketch to the minister, I wrote him as follows:

February 13, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.
Re proposed dismissal of W. L. Munro.

Dear Mr. Hazen—Referring to this case, I am enclosing a letter written by Mr. Munro himself to the press, some time ago, relating some of the feats that he performed in saving life, during his long service as light keeper at White Head.

I submit that these matters ought to be considered in connection with the action of the department at present. It would be quite satisfactory to Mr. Munro and his many friends there on both sides of politics, if he received his pension under the original arrangement in force at the time that he entered the service.

You will notice by his answer which you have on your file, when asked to select between his pension and the payment of his money back, that instead, that he gave a sort of indefinite reply by saying that he would 'vote for this.'

There is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Munro intended to retain his pension. At all events, even if the other view is taken, it is very clear that if the matter was fully explained to him, he would never have selected to take back the money paid in instead of his retiring allowance. I understand that his retiring allowance for two years would amount to more than the cash to which he would be entitled.

I trust, therefore, that you can see your way clear either to leave this light in his possession or grant him his pension.

I remain,

Yours truly,

J. H. Sinclair.

I want to read to the Committee the statement given by Mr. Munro to the public and to the minister with regard to the services that he performed. Told in his own simple, sailor fashion, it contains some real touches of nature, and ought to have reached the heart of the minister:

Allow me space please in your valuable paper to insert a sketch of my past thirty-two years as lighthouse keeper on what is known as or called by mariners, Three Top Island. which lies at west entrance of White Head harbour, one mile from the mainland being W.N.W. from White Head light, distance one mile. The light is called a harbour light by many, but not like many harbour lights on the coast, whereas most such lights are situated on the mainland.

This island takes its name by having three hills as nature formed it, each hill or peak, as we wish to call it, running eighty to a hundred feet, horizontally, with no real landing place, such as a beach but is iron bound, so to speak, all around, with a boat slip running down a steep embankment where with block and tackle attached to a capstan that is fixed in a boat-house on the side of the cliff, we haul our boat to safety, which by times, when there is a heavy sea on, is a pretty risky piece of business. Many times I have had my boat filled in effecting a landing.

Well, Mr. Editor, the life of a light keeper is a dreary one, watching the storm tossed seas that I have witnessed time and again caused by heavy winter gales on the southern coast of our province, facing the Atlantic ocean.

I remember one storm in particular about eighteen years ago in February. The sea in one of its fierce rushes burst in our door at ten o'clock at night and flooded our floors to a depth of six inches of water. My wife and the children screamed, thinking they were doomed. I got them gathered to a window, there to make our exit and flee to one of the highest peaks, but in this case Providence favoured us by the gale moderating, and, the sea falling some, did not cause us to face such an ordeal in a wintr's hurricane on a naked cliff.

Also, Mr. Editor, I could relate several cases in sheltering shipwrecked crews since my abode as lightkeeper, if space could afford. One case in particular I must relate. It was on a Christmas eve about 16 years ago, if I remember right. There was a heavy gale raging from the northeast with snow and the temperature was at zero. My three eldest daughters were on the mainland at the time attending a concert at the Methodist church that they were taking part in. The small children had retired early in the evening as usual. My wife and I went to bed about half past ten o'clock, after seeing that Santa Claus was to visit the island, and I suppose we had been retired about 20 minutes, I had about fallen to sleep, when my wife aroused me by telling me that she heard a horn blowing. I told her she was dreaming, to go to sleep; but to please her I got up and went to the door to investigate. I found to my horror, that she was right, for there on the reef that extends southeast away from the mainland about two hundred yards, lay a stranded vessel, and they were blowing horns and shouting for their lives for the keeper to save them, as they thought from the way their ship was pounding, she would break up, and certainly they would be doomed under such circumstances. Well, my man being ashore to spend his holidays of course left me alone. I dressed and went to the cliff, as near as I could venture, and shouted as loud as I could not to attempt it until daylight. Well, I do not suppose they could hear me, but their wailings were terrible to hear on such a night. And again I went and shouted to them to take their own boat and I would guide them by a torch. Well, again they could not hear me, as they kept up their wailings. I could hear the wind whistling in the wreck, but I leave that to one's imagination, what it sounded like together with their shouting to save them. Well, I went to the house and told my wife that in God's name I would try and launch a boat and go off to the wreck, and, of course, as usual with women, my wife crying and begging me not to dare such a thing on such an awful night, and the children awakened by the tumult to make matters worse, joined their mother in begging me not to go, and I was pretty near abandoning the idea altogether until daylight. Well, I went out of doors and down to the cliff, and by the way their shouting seemed to me, I imagined there were at least, some of them in the water and perhaps drowning. And then I said to myself, I am going to try it anyway and if I get lost it will be in a good cause trying to save my fellow men. Well, I lit a pine torch, or flare up, as some call them, and my wife following me, I went to the slip and let the boat down, as far as I dared, the sea coming up by times half way to the slip. As the gale was blowing fair on it was so much the worse to get clear. Well, as I went to run down and after lowering her and did unhook the boat there came a heavy sea and swept the boat clear of me just as I was in the act of leaping into her, she turned completely bottom up. Well that pretty near discouraged me. However, I had another boat in store that I had stowed away since the past summer not intending to launch her until spring lobster fishing. To her I ran and got her on the slip but having only one pair of oars left it was risky, losing two pairs in the first boat. However, I let the boat down part way this time, put my oars in her, unhooked my tackle and sprung into the boat, taking chances going down the slip equal to 'loop the loop' and landed safe in the boiling water made by the gale. Well, I grabbed my oars and as skillfully as I could managed my boat until I got out to the wreck, which I found to be the George P. Trigg, from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, bound to Boston, loaded with several thousand bushels of oats. She was trying to make the harbour to clear the storm when stranded. They had lowered the boat when first she struck the ledge and lost the boat in the sea. I found the men very much frightened. They all wanted to get in my small boat at once, but I told them to do as I told them and I would try and land them. So I took three men at a time getting to the Island. My wife held the torch and that was a great help to me. I backed the boat stern first as near to the surf as I dared, and told the men to leap which they did and landed safe, and then I began another struggle for the wreck, which I gained after a hard fight and got the captain, mate and the remaining one of the crew. Of course I dare not allow any one to touch my oars but myself as I had only one pair and to break one we were doomed. However, I reached the Island and landed safely, thank God, where we were all housed at 3 o'clock in the morning of Christmas day. The wreck presented a gloomy looking sight in the morning. The top of the hull which was above water, was a mass of ice, where no one could go near her for a couple of days. I can vouch also, for keeping five wrecked crews for over a week at a time. All for which I have never received one cent. Although I billed parties, I was never recognized after.

My family consists of ten children, seven girls and three boys, of which two died young and one girl died also. After reaching womanhood four reside at Somerville, Mass., the eldest, Mary, marrying Mr. J. D. McLean, a contractor in the steamfitting business, the next, Alice, a music teacher, lives with her sister, also, Edith, lives with her sister, and their next youngest sister is attending high school at Somerville.

I want to say Mr. Editor, that my family were all born on this island, and the seven that are living are in good health to-day. The one living son and the baby girl are home yet with us. The fourth girl, Maud, married at home to Mr. Alden Munro. They reside at White Head. I came here in the year of our Lord, 1879, which year the light was built, after being married two years and am here yet. My salary has been very small. After paying a man a year and feeding him at the high cost of living, three hundred dollars does not go far.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will conclude by saying, To give me justice don't you think that I am worthy of a superannuation fund when I leave this island which I suppose will be very soon now?

Well, I will leave that part of the programme to be judged by my superior, as it would be a help to us in our older days.

Thanking you kindly Mr. Editor for your space allotted.

Yours truly,
W. L. Munro,
Lightkeeper.

The Editor published the above, and added:

Of course Mr. Munro will be superannuated. The Dominion of Canada cannot afford to do its housekeeping by turning off old servants who have served it so gallantly for so many years, without anything to live upon so far as the country is concerned.—Editor, Eastern Chronicle.

The minister promptly replied to that letter which I sent to him, enclosing that statement. He said:

I am in receipt of your favour of 12th instant inclosing a letter from Mr. Munro, of Whitehead, N.S., and wish to assure you that it will have my very careful consideration.

Yours very truly,
J. D. Hazen.

I had a reply also from the Deputy Minister to the same effect. You will notice that three months before he took action to dismiss Mr. Munro the minister was familiar with all the details of this case. He was aware of the fact that Mr. Munro was an old and faithful servant appointed by the Conservative government a long time ago. He was aware that he had spent 32 years on the Island, and that there was no legitimate complaint against him. He was aware of the fact that he had served for a mere pittance, receiving only about $300 a year. He was also informed that this man claimed a pension, and that under the law. as it existed at the time of his appointment, there was no doubt at all that he was entitled to a pension. The next letter I have here is an intimation from the department that this man had been dismissed. It is a letter from Mr. Staton:

I have to inform you that by Order in Council of the 4th April, 1912, your services as keeper of the light at Three Top Island, N.S., have been dispensed with owing to political partisanship, and that Mr. Howard S. Munro has been appointed temporarily keeper of the light, to whom I have to request you to give up possession of the light and of all Government supplies pertaining thereto when required.

Mr CARVELL: What was the charge of partisanship?

Mr. SINCLAIR: It appears that there was an investigation, but it also appears that it was a very one sided and unfair investigation. The commissioner who conducted this sham investigation disregarded the law altogether, and declined to allow Mr. Munro to be represented by counsel.

The committee can understand how helpless a man of this character would be in a court of that kind without any one to assist him, or to place his case before the court.

Mr. MACDONALD: Was Duchemin the examiner?

Mr. SINCLAIR: He was the examiner.

Mr. MACDONALD: Did he decline to permit Mr. Munro to have counsel?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Yes. The declaration is as follows:

Dominion of Canada, county of Guysborough.
In the matter of the conduct of H. P. Duchemin at an investigation in the case of W. L. Munro, held at White Head on the 13th of March, A.D. 1912.
I, W. L. Munro, of White Head, in the county of Guysborough, province of Nova Scotia, do solemnly declare:—
That I appeared before H. P. Duchemin, commissioner, on the 13th day of March, 1912, at the hour and place indicated in my notice and asked the said Duchemin if he would be kind enough to allow me to have a counsel to act for me and cross-examine witnesses at the said investigation. The said Duchemin refused to permit me to have a counsel and stated that he himself was all the counsel that I would require in that investigation.
And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

W. L. Munro.

Declared before me at White Head, in the the county of Guysborough, province of Nova Scotia, this 30th day of December, A.D. 1912.

W. S. Harris.

A justice of the peace in and for the county of Guysborough.

I have already drawn the attention of the House and of the minister to the statute that was passed last year, in which it is distinctly stated that the commissioner may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under the Act, and shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of investigation, to be represented by counsel.

Mr. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman is aware that the premier, some weeks ago, stated, while discussing that law, that he was clearly of opinion that every man was entitled to counsel and that it would be an injustice if counsel were not permitted to him.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am quite well aware that the Premier took the ground that without a statute at all, every man accused of any irregularity of this kind was entitled to counsel, but there is not much use of statements of that kind being made by the Prime Minister from his place in this House if they are to be disregarded by his officers throughout the country. This man, Duchemin, has been disregarding this provision for several months and has been doing so with the full knowledge of the Government. It has been drawn to the attention of the Prime Minister and various members of the Government, over and over again, and he is still travelling as a scourge around the coast carrying on this same kind of work, holding these same sham investigations, dismissing honest men without proper evidence and there is nothing done by the Government, or any department of the Government, to prevent it. A few days ago a return was brought down showing that this man had received a very large sum of money from various departments of the Government. The figure, including his living and travelling expenses, amounts to something over $6,000 at the present time. I do not know whether that brings his salary up to date, but it strikes me that it is a very great farce that we should have a man like that employed at such work, travelling around, disregarding the law, committing acts of injustice day after day and being paid a very large sum of money for doing so.

Mr. MARCIL: Would it not be better to have a permanent executioner employed?

Mr. SINCLAIR: It would be much better if the Government would take the reponsibility of saying: We are going to adopt the spoils system, we are going to dismiss every man who is a Liberal, and are going to put one of our own men in his place. If they took that ground we could understand it, but sending a man of this character along the coast pretending to hold investigations and refusing the right to be represented by counsel to persons against whom charges are made, is an intolerable thing in a free country. After I had received the facts in reference to the dismissal of Mr. Munroe, I brought the question of his right to superannuation allowance to the attention of the minister in a letter dated the 16th of May, 1912, and which is as follows:

May 16, 1912.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Hazen,—
I have been informed by W. L. Munro, lightkeeper at Three Top Island, White Head, N.S., that he has been dismissed from the service.
This man's case has been before your department for some time and if you can find time to deal with it I should be obliged. He appears to me to be entitled to a pension. He has served, I understand, over thirty-two years. At the time of the change in the law he signed some document which was indefinite in language and which he says was misunderstood by him, but which might be construed to mean that he would accept a return of his money with interest in lieu of his pension, to which he was clearly entitled.

I feel sure he never intended this result, and if you have not the proof at hand I could furnish an affidavit by himself. The matter has been drifting along without any decision being given, but now, on account of his dismissal, it should be adjusted. I will, therefore, thank you to deal with the matter at your earliest convenience.

You will also note that Mr. Munroe is entitled to a proportional amount of his salary for one month and fourteen days up to the date of his dismissal.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) J. H. Sinclair.

The minister was kind enough to reply to my letter but the reply was very unsatisfactory to me. He says:

23rd May, 1912.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 16th inst., with respect to the case of Mr. Munro, and his request for superannuation.

In connection with this matter I beg to advise you that inasmuch as Mr. Munro was dismissed from the service, he would not be entitled to superannuation in any case. He will, however, be entitled to a refund of the money which stands to his credit in the retirement fund.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) J. D. Hazen.

These are the facts of the case as briefly as I can give them to you. I thought it was important that I should put the documents on record for reference later on. The case is simply this, that Mr. Munro was dismissed on very slight evidence indeed as far as I can learn. The evidence I have not yet received. It is also the custom of this man, Duchemin, not to return the evidence given by witnesses. He returns what he calls a report, and, as far as I can learn, in many cases the report is not borne out by the evidence. We have been unable to get the exact evidence given by witnesses, but from the statement made to me by Mr. Munro himself, there were various trifling charges brought against him. The principal one was the fact that he gave three cheers, or proposed three cheers, for Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the school house at a political meeting. That, he gives me as precisely the reason why a man who had served the country for thirty-two years should be deprived of his position and also deprived of the pension to which he was entitled. You will note that the minister gives no other reason for depriving this man of his life pension except that he has been dismissed from the service. He was dismissed from the service for this partisan reason and dismissed by a commissioner who refused to give him a fair trial and refused to allow him to be represented by counsel. The minister had not very much at stake in this matter. but Mr. Munro had a great deal. He had spent his whole lifetime on that island and his future was involved in the decision that the minister gave. I submit that thirty-two years of faithful service ought to have had a better reward. The minister, before he arrived at his decision, ought to have made himself very certain that there was a clear case against Mr. Munro, and that Mr. Munro had obtained a fair trial. That is the least that the Minister ought to have done when we consider the fact that this man had so much at stake. During these 32 years he thought he was earning a retiring allowance, living on that bleak island, keeping the lamps trimmed and the lights burning over those rough waters and performing acts of bravery for which he was never rewarded. This is a case in which it will be very difficult for my hon. friend to satisfy the country, and especially the people who know Mr. Munro, that his action is justifiable.

It is an outrage to my mind that a man charged with a trifling political irregularity should be refused the right to be represented by counsel. A man charged with the vilest crime is represented by counsel, and in our courts, if he does not employ counsel himself, the judge sees that counsel is nominated and appointed so that the man is bound to have a fair trial in every British court. It is only in this court, and at this trial, held by my hon. friend and his colleagues week after week in Nova Scotia, that these common, ordinary rights of a British subject are denied. This is a very serious matter for Mr. Munro. I do not know what recompense the minister can give, but he certainly ought to give some. What he ought to do would be to restore Mr. Munro to his position, to take him back and give him his retiring allowance. That is the only thing I can suggest that would appear to me to do the case justice.

Mr. HAZEN: As I said a few moments ago before my hon. friend commenced to speak, I appreciate very much his courtesy in telling me that he intended to bring this matter to the attention of the House, and his having notified me of the fact enables me to lay before the committee today all the facts as they appear in connection with this matter from the official files of the department, and, when I say as they appear from the official files of the department, I mean as they appear from the correspondence and the information which the department has, or which I, as minister, have, with regard to the matter. I shall first refer to what my hon. friend said about this gentleman being refused his superannuation.

Mr. Munro was appointed keeper of the light at Three Top Island, Whitehead, by Order in Council of the 31st October, 1879, his appointment to date from the 1st September of that year.

From the records it does not appear that Mr. Munro's performance of the duties of his office was always satisfactory to the department. In the month of June, 1898, the then member for the constituency, the late Hon. D. C. Fraser, was advised by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies, that it was found necessary to censure Mr. Munro for absenting himself without leave.

This dissatisfaction appears to have continued, for, in a letter addressed by the deputy minister to the agent at Halifax on the 27th September, 1901, the following extract appears:

With reference to the dissatisfaction of Supt. Hutchins with the manner in which this light is attended to, I have to direct you to communicate with the keeper, and intimate that you have been instructed by the department to censure him for inattention to his duties as keeper, and that in future he must see that his station is kept in good order, as in the event of any further complaint reaching the department it will be necessary to take steps to dispense with his services as lightkeeper.

About the same time, Mr. Munro's request that he be supplied with fuel for his light station was answered by the deputy minister of that day, who pointed out that, as all the reports to the department with respect to the lightkeeper were unfavourable, his request would not be entertained.

On the 29th March, 1906, a letter was received at the department from Mr. J. H. Sinclair, M.P., intimating that Mr. Munro's health was failing and that he desired to be superannuated. Mr. Sinclair asked whether he was entitled to superannuation.

On the 4th April, 1906, Mr. Sinclair was advised that Mr. Munro had contributed to the superannuation tax from the date of his appointment up to the 1st December, 1898, when he elected to come under the Retirement Act from the 1st January, 1899. He was further advised that, if Mr. Munro retired, as he appeared to think of doing on the ground of ill-health, the amount to his credit in the Retirement Fund, with interest, would be paid to him, but that he would not be superannuated.

On the 4th April, 1906, Mr. Sinclair inquired as to the amount that Mr. Munro would be entitled to if he resigned. He was advised on the 24th April that the amount to which Mr. Munro would be entitled on retiring would be $268.84.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What is the hon. minister reading from?

Mr. HAZEN: I am reading from a letter addressed to you on the 24th April from the department.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the hon. minister read the whole letter?

Mr. HAZEN: I shall be glad to get it and read it to my hon. friend.

On the 29th January, 1910, Mr. Sinclair again directed the attention of the department to the matter of superannuation for Mr. Munro. On the 7th February, 1910, Mr. Sinclair was advised in reply that Mr. Munro was not entitled to superannuation. It was pointed out to Mr. Sinclair that Mr. Munro had elected to come under the new Act from the 1st January, 1899.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If the hon. minister will permit me, the whole of his argument is based on the alleged answer that Mr. Munro gave to the department at the time he was asked to elect. Mr. Munro has never admitted that he made that answer. His case was in dispute under the former minister and is still in dispute under the present minister. Unless the hon. minister can give us the paper under which it is alleged that Mr. Munro elected to come under the new Act, he has no basis on which to found his argument.

Mr. HAZEN: If my hon. friend will have patience I shall come to that later. I am reading this to the House to show that, while the hon. gentleman accused me of being hard-hearted and cruel, he went time and again to his own political friends when they were in office; and the hon. minister, whom he was supporting in this House, would not agree to superannuate Mr. Munro and gave it as the ruling of the department that he was not entitled to superannuation.

On the 26th January, 1911, Mr. Sinclair again brought——

Mr. SINCLAIR: I object to having extracts from letters read; I should like to have the whole letter read.

Mr. HAZEN: On the 26th January, 1911, Mr. Sinclair again brought the question of Mr. Munro's superannuation to the notice of the then minister. Mr. Sinclair pointed out to the minister, Mr. Brodeur, that Mr. Munro alleged that he did not understand that the document which he had signed some years previously was one that precluded him from being eligible for superannuation.

The copy of the circular forwarded to Mr. Munro as lightkeeper is as follows:

Circular.

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, July 12, 1898.

Sir,—I enclose herewith copy of the Act passed at last session of Parliament, providing for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and as you will observe by reference to the second section that the Act applies to every person now in the Civil Service, who before the 1st of January next, with the consent of the Governor in Council, elects to accept its provisions in lieu of those of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, I have to request you to inform me as soon as possible as to whether you wish to come under this Act and to avail yourself of its provisions.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) F. Gourdeau,

Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. Munro's reply is dated 6th September, 1898, and is to the following effect:

The circular sent me concerning the Retirement Fund, I have received and considered it and have to inform you that I will give my vote for it.

Mr. Sinclair was advised, in reply to his letter of the 26th January, 1911, that the situation had not changed since the department's decision was communicated to him on the 7th February of the previous year.

I am just reading the information that was before the department when this decision was given on three or four separate occasions when the attention of the department was called to it by my hon. friend long before the present Government came into office, and when the department was under the administration of gentlemen who belong to a different political party. My hon. friend, when insinuating that I was hard-hearted, ought, in fairness, to have stated these facts to the House. I do not think it was quite candid and disingenuous of him not to do so. I came into the department and find the case decided.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It was not settled until the question was raised. This correspondence was preliminary. I admit the decision of the department was not to allow superannuation, but the question could not arise for settlement until the man retired from his position.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think that argument is creditable to the intelligence of my hon. friend. He wrote the department and asked whether, in the event of this man retiring, he could be superannuated; and the reply of the department, which must be regarded as a decision, was that he could not be superannuated, as he had elected to come under the Retirement Fund Act. When I came into office on the 3rd of February, 1912, my hon. friend wrote me directing my attention to the manner in which Mr. Munro had signed away his right, and alleging that he had done so in ignorance of what it really meant. On the 13th of February, 1912, he addressed a letter to me enclosing a copy of the communication addressed by Mr. Munro to the press. The facts are as I have stated them. My hon. friend finds fault because I have not reversed a decision that was given by my predecessor, who was appealed to on the subject on three or four occasions, who, no doubt, gave it most careful consideration, and stated most emphatically that this lighthouse keeper was not entitled to the benefit of the Superannuation Act, as he had elected to come under the Retirement Act. He said: 'I have received and considered it—' evidently according to my hon. friend he is a most intelligent man; he knows what he is doing—'I have to inform you that I will give my vote for it,' —that is, for the retirement. However, it is unnecessary to argue that here. It was decided by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries long before I came into office, and now the hon. gentleman wants me to sit as a court of review and to reverse the decision given by the minister whom he supported.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It could not be decided until it came up for decision.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman can say that if he chooses, but I submit that there was a decision given. As to the dismissal, I submit the facts to the judgment of the committee. I followed the rule laid down in this House several years ago with regard to officials not taking part in political matters. On the 20th of January, 1912, Mr. G. A. R. Rowlings, the candidate of the Conservative party in the last election against my hon. friend, forwarded to the department a statement addressed to him by Mr. J. S. Wells of Whitehead, a man of ability and standing, a former member. I believe of the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia, charging Mr. Munro with political partisanship. The charge was referred to Mr. Duchemin for investigation. I will read Mr. Duchemin's report:

Sydney, N.S., March 21, 1912.

Re Wm. N. Munro, lighthouse keeper, Whitehead, Guysborough county.

I conducted an inquiry into the case of William L. Munro, lighthouse keeper, at Whitehead, N.S. The hearing took place at Whitehead, and the following named witnesses gave evidences under oath: O. Edward Pietzch, merchant, of Yankee Cove; Arthur L. Munro, Lower Whitehaven, fisherman; Matthew Munro, fisherman; Alfred T. Munro, fisherman; and Usaac Grover.

Mr. Pietzch testified that Mr. William Munro had requested him to act as agent for Mr. J. H. Sinclair, the Liberal candidate, in the booth at Whitehead on election day, September 21 last. Mr. Pietzch replied that he would not care to undertake the work of agent, and was then told by Mr. Munro, that if he took the job he would get paid for it. Mr. Munro also instructed Mr. Pietzch as to the kind of work he would be expected to do in the booth, pointing out that it was comparatively easy, consisting mainly of checking off the names of the electors as they came into the booth to vote.

Arthur M. Munro testified that Mr. William L. Munro was not in the lighthouse on elecday or on the evening of election day.

Matthew Munro gave evidence to the effect that he attended a meeting at Lower Whitehead, held in the interests of the Liberal party and addressed by Mr. J. H. Sinclair, the Liberal candidate for Guysborough. Mr.

William L. Munro was present at this meeting, and acted as spokesman in having the meeting constituted. He moved that one Lévi Munro should act as chairman for the evening. The motion was put to the meeting and carried, and Mr. Levi Munro presided over the meeting during Mr. Sinclair's address. On the conclusion of the speech-making, Mr. William L. Munro proposed that the audience give three cheers for Mr. Sinclair, the Liberal candidate.

My hon. friend was too modest to mention the fact.

The cheers were accordingly given.

I have no doubt they were very hearty cheers indeed, and I have no doubt he deserved them.

Mr. Munro then proposed that cheers be similarly given for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. This was a Liberal meeting, and Mr. William L. Munro was apparently the most active one of the local residents in taking part in it.

Alfred T. Munro, gave testimony to the same effect. He was present at the meeting referred to. It was held in the school house at Lower Whitehead. He testified that Mr. William L. Munro moved the appointment, and on the conclusion of Mr. Sinclair's speech proposed cheers for the candidate and Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

I think Grover is employed by William L. Munro, as assistant lighthouse keeper. Grover is a man who claims to be about sixty years of age, but apears to be very much older. He has been assistant for the last six years, and testified that during these three months William L. Munro, the keeper, had not been in the lighthouse at any time at night.

This indicates why dissatisfaction arose with the way he was discharging the duties of his light.

Mr. KYTE: Was Wm. L. Munro charged with inattention to duty?

Mr. HAZEN: He was charged with offensive partisanship, and it was proved up to the hilt. But if we had been aware that he had been neglecting his duties as lightkeeper, it would have been the duty of the department to have dismissed him for that reason, entirely apart from the matter of political partisanship. The report goes on to say:

The witness said that Wm. L. Munro had been there in the day time—perhaps about twice a month during that time. On these visits he stayed a very short time—sometimes half a day altogether, according to the weather, as witness put it. Witness concluded: 'At present I do all the work in connection with the lighthouse.' It is evident from the statement made by this witness that this is a case where the lighthouse keeper is practically farming out his work. Mr. Wm. L. Munro declined to go on the stand, or to make any statement in his own defence.

My hon. friend says Munro was refused counsel. Without intending to show the slightest disrespect for my hon. friend or questioning his sincerity in making that assertion, permit me to say that I do not believe it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I read an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. HAZEN: No such affidavit or communication was received by the department after this investigation took place. If Munro had been refused counsel, the first thing he would have done would be to make a complaint in that regard. I say I do not believe it for the further reason that Mr. Duchemin at my direction was instructed by the deputy minister to allow witnesses to be represented by counsel at any time the privilege was requested. We gave that instruction because it was reported to us that there were occasions upon which Mr. Duchemin had refused to allow counsel to appear on behalf of the accused. My opinion is that it was before the investigation of the Munro matter that these instructions were given to Mr. Duchemin. Here we have the statement that Munro was present, that he had an opportunity of going on the stand and contradicting the statements made, but he absolutely declined to do so. I do not feel called upon to defend Mr. Duchemin's conduct, which has been condemned by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House from the province of Nova Scotia. It has been just as warmly commended by hon. gentleman from Nova Scotia on this side of the House, who speak in the highest terms—

Mr. KYTE: Who do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. HAZEN: That, of course, is a very cheap remark, and one which is easy to make. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, I say, speak in the highest terms of Mr. Duchemin's conduct as a professional man. I might refer to the fact that Mr. George W. Murray, the chairman of Maintenance and Ways of the Brotherhood of Railway Locomotive Engineers at Truro, has made the statement that he had been present at some investigations conducted by Mr. Duchemin, and that he was entirely satisfied with the fair-minded way in which Mr. Duchemin conducted them. I may say further that Rev. D. L. Macdonald, the parish priest at Arisaig, was present at an investigation held there and expressed himself as being thoroughly satisfied with the fairness and impartiality with which Mr. Duchemin conducted the investigation. In view of the fact that the government which the hon. gentleman supported, although he broached the matter on four different occasions, held to the view that Mr. Munro was not entitled to superannuation and that they regarded him as an unsatisfactory official. I think I am not open to censure because I did not superannuate him.

In view of the evidence submitted to me by Mr. Duchemin, and in view of the fact that Mr. Munro, after the evidence had been taken, declined to go on the stand and say one word in his own defence or in contradiction of the testimony given by the witnesses, I think I cannot be held as having acted improperly because I dismissed Mr. Munro from the position he held.

At one o'clock, House resumed, and then took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock and again went into Committee of Supply. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. SINCLAIR: I note that the minister did not produce the evidence. He read from the report by his commissioner but he failed to produce the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial. From my experience in examining the work of this commission I would advise the minister, if he wants to come to a correct conclusion in regard to these matters, to read the evidence for himself and not depend upon any construction put upon it by Mr. Duchemin. I would point out to the minister a case in which Mr. Duchemin has deceived not his own department but the Department of Railways and Canals, where it was his duty to make a fair report and in which case he did not make a fair report but concealed a very material point which ought to have been disclosed by him in connection with the case. The minister had to go back over twenty years in order to get a complaint against W. L. Munro, that would appear to be a fair one in connection with the discharge of his duty. I wish to point out to the minister that the charge that was made against this man twenty-one years ago was a very slight one indeed. It is well known to everyone who resides on the coast that it is impossible for a lightkeeper always to remain on his station and if he should come ashore, leaving a responsible man in his place to look after the light so that the light is always tended, that is considered sufficient. Sometimes meddlesome people complain about these things but in the practical management of the lighthouse it is almost impossible to avoid it and it is the most innocent kind of an accusation that could be made against a lighthouse keeper that he had come ashore, leaving a responsible man in charge of the light. I wish also to point out the difference in the treatment of this man by the late Government and by this Government. When the late Government came into power they found this man in office. He had occupied the position then for fifteen years. He had been appointed by a Conservative Administration and he says himself that he voted for the Conservative party during the whole fifteen years but that when he was allowed to retain his position by the Liberal party he changed his politics and supported the Liberal party. That is the statement made in his account of his stewardship which I have read to the minister. You will note what a striking difference there is in the treatment accorded to this man by the late Administration and by my hon. friend. The late Administration knew that he had performed heroic services in the saving of life, had been a good officer, was working for a small salary and they considered these things and when an accusation was made against him they overlooked it and continued him in office for fifteen years longer. That was the way that W. L. Munro was treated by the late Government but my hon. friend goes back of the record, searches back twenty years for a trifling accusation against him in order to avoid taking the responsibility of dismissing him for a trifling political offence with which he was charged. These trials are altogether unfair. The man is summoned to appear before a commission and does not know what accusation is to be made against him. If he had known what was coming up before the commissioners he might have had some witnesses there to clear himself. He might have been able to show that this man was not true. But the man is put in this position, he is denied the right of counsel to represent him. He has no notice of the accusation to be brought against him, he is rushed through a sham trial; the whole trial is one-sided and a one-sided verdict is given. On evidence like that, after a trial of that character, I submit that it was not fair to deprive this man of his position as lightkeeper and also of his right to his retiring allowance, for there is no other reason given by my hon. friend in regard to the retiring allowance. He does not seem to have considered it at all and rests his decision altogether on the decision of some official of the department who gave an ex parte opinion about it some years ago. At that time this question was not up for decision. Mr. Munro at that time wished to know what his position was and if he was in a position to retire from service and receive his pension as he had served thirty years and it was incidentally in that way that this question came up. The decision was never accepted by him and from the showing of the minister himself it would not appear to any reasonable man that he did make a choice of a cash allowance in place of his pension. He is asked to make a choice between two things, a retiring pension for his life and a refund of the money he had paid in. Would you suppose that any man would voluntarily under such circumstances choose the cash? It would always be so much better to get the retiring allowance than the amount he had paid in.

Mr. HAZEN: A large number accepted the other.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is a most extraordinary choice for a man to make. If you look at the language used in the letter from which the minister read an extract, he is asked to choose between these two things and he says: I vote for this. It is impossible to say which of the things he voted for and the man himself says he intended to vote for the superannuation. That is what he says and I believe it; I have no doubt that is what he intended. Is it fair with a doubtful answer like that, in a doubtful document, to decide a question that involves so much for this man? Of course it does not mean very much to the minister. It is easy for the minister to dash off a decision in his cushioned chair, in his luxurious office, surrounded by electric lights and in the presence of his big salaried officials saying: I beg to advise in reply to the appeal of this man to have his case considered, that, inasmuch as Munro was dismissed from the service, he would not be entitled to superannuation in any case. He did not even look into his case or consider it at all. That is the kind of decision the minister gives, although he occupies a responsible position and should act as judge between man and man. I say it is not creditable to the department or to the head of the department that he should not have given his serious consideration to a matter of this kind and have had a careful investigation before depriving the man of rights which he had earned during the last thirty years.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.): Does the law provide that lighthouse keepers shall receive superannuation in any case?

Mr. SINCLAIR: The original law which was in force when this man was appointed provided that if he serves a certain number of years and paid in a certain amount each year he would be entitled to a retiring allowance for life, but the law was changed fifteen years ago and at that time a letter was written to Munro in which he was asked to make choice as to whether he would take back the cash he had paid in or his pension for life. He said: I vote for this. I say that his answer was so uncertain and so doubtful that the minister should not have taken that as a decision, but should have inquired into it and found out what the man really meant by the language and given a judicial decision as to whether he was entitled to a pension or not.

Mr. BRADBURY: Did he get the money?

Mr. SINCLAIR: He took the money because he could not help himself, he had no choice. The minister dismissed him and said: Inasmuch as Munro was dismissed he had no right to superannuation and he took back his money. What else could he do? The minister made a statement that he did not admit that his commissioner, Duchemin, had refused counsel. I read the affidavit of Munro, a respectable man who will be believed in Whitehead, where he is known, much more readily than Mr. Duchemin will, and Mr. Munro swore that he asked the commissioner if he would be entitled to have a solicitor represent him at the trial and the commissioner refused. If the minister has any doubt about that I can prove it from the mouth of Mr. Duchemin. Perhaps that will satisfy him if he will not believe the affidavit of Munro. This question has been up before. Mr. Duchemin made a report to the Post Office Department in regard to the charge made against him that he was not allowing counsel to act for those parties in the investigation. This is an extract from a report of Mr. Duchemin, the commissioner, addressed to the Postmaster General. It is dated April 16, 1912, and relates to the dismissal of one Parker Sangster. This is what he says:

> In view of his own sworn statement at the hearing, it is difficult to understand how he (Sangster) could have bettered his position, if I had changed my position and admitted counsel at this inquiry, while excluding it from every other one.
> As a matter of fact, however, Mr. Sangster is incorrect in saying that Mr. Floyd asked that counsel be allowed to represent him in this case. Mr. Floyd asked that counsel be admitted to represent J. W. Davis, whose inquiry was being conducted under the Marine Department. I declined to allow counsel to appear on either side, therein following the procedure which I had invariably adopted since the beginning of my work.

This man had been working from January to April, holding inquiries all over the country, and refusing the parties the right to be represented by counsel. He says so himself, and yet the minister comes to this committee and says he does not believe Mr. Munro when he says that Mr. Duchemin denied to him the right to be represented by counsel. Mr. Duchemin goes on to say:

> If you think it well to have counsel admitted for complainant and accused, at these hearings, and instruct me accordingly, I will be careful to observe your instructions in all cases arising in the future. Thus far but one of the departments has given me such instructions, that of the Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HAZEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. SINCLAIR: But this case is in the Marine and Fisheries Department. He goes on:

One department has definitely instructed me not to admit counsel,—that while I have not been specially advised on this point by any of the other ministers, and have excluded counsel to economize time.

I do not know what department that is to which he refers; perhaps my hon. friend will tell me.

Mr. HAZEN: I can only speak for my own department.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This is a star chamber proceeding for a department of the Government to take, to instruct their commissioner that no counsel was to be present at these investigations. The commissioner himself says so in his report to the Postmaster General. Then I have here the affidavit of Mr. Floyd, of Guysborough, a respectable barrister who attended for a number of those parties at one investigation and asked in a very polite and gentlemanly way to be allowed to represent them, and he was refused by this man. His declaration is as follows:

Canada, province of Nova Scotia, county of Guysborough.

I, D. P. Floyd, of Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, and province of Nova Scotia, solemnly declare as follows:—

I remember the fifteenth day of March, A.D. 1912. On the morning of that day, Mr. Archibald Barss and Mr. Parker Sangster, both of New Harbour, in the county of Guysborough, called at my office in Guysborough, and stated that Mr. Duchemin had summoned them to Guysborough to attend an investigation into their official conduct in relation to offensive political partisanship. They retained me to act for them at such investigation, and at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, the hour set in Mr. Duchemin's notice, I went with the said Archibald Barss and Parker Sangster to Mr. John S. McDonald's boarding house, where Mr. Duchemin's notice required appearance. We were taken into the office (so-called) of the said boarding house where eight or ten persons, including the said Mr. Duchemin, the commissioner, were seated. At ten o'clock Mr. Duchemin announced when the various cases would be heard. At the close of this announcement, I introduced myself to Mr. Duchemin and as courteously as possible stated that I had been retained to cross-examine witnesses, whereupon Mr. Duchemin said: 'No, any questioning that is to be done to-day, I will do myself,' and turned away. This remark was made by Mr. Duchemin in an offensive tone of voice. After saying this, he stated to those assembled that the investigation would be held in his room, and he said only two persons were allowed in his room at once, namely, the person who laid the information and the accused. Calling the first two persons by name he left for his room, leaving the others waiting in the said office.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, and as of the same force and effect as if made under oath, in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act.

D. P. Floyd.

Declared before me this 10th day of December, A.D. 1912, at Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough.

Thomas Davis,
A commissioner of the Supreme Court in in and for the county of Guysborough.

On the same day, another gentleman asked leave to represent one of the men who were being prosecuted before that commissioner. This gentleman was Mr. Thomas Davis, who requested the right to enter this court room and to cross-examine witnesses to assist the man against whom a complaint had been made, and he was refused that right by Mr. Duchemin. This is what he says in his declaration:

Dominion of Canada, county of Guysborough.

In the matter of the conduct of H. P. Duchemin, at an investigation in the case of John W. Davis, held at Guysborough, March 15, 1912.

I, Thomas Davis, of Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, and province of Nova Scotia, prothonotary of the Supreme Court, do solemnly declare:—

I was requested by the above named John W. Davis to attend an investigation held at McDonald's boarding house in the town of Guysborough, on the 15th day of March last, to cross-examine witnesses and otherwise act on behalf of the said John W. Davis at such investigation. In pursuance of such request by the said John W. Davis I asked Mr. Duchemin to be permitted to attend and question witnesses and otherwise act in behalf of the said John W. Davis, but the said H. P. Duchemin refused such permission and excluded me from such investigation.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

(Sgd.) Thomas Davis.

Declared before me at Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, and province of Nova Scotia, this 13th day of December, A.D. 1912.

(Sgd.) D. P. Floyd,
A commissioner of the Supreme Court in and for the county of Guysborough.

I could produce other evidence if it were necessary, but I have read three affiidavits of responsible parties swearing that this man Duchemin refused the right to parties to be represented by counsel. I have read his own report to the Postmaster General in which he stated that he refused everybody counsel for the first three or four months, during which he acted as commissioner. I do not know what has been taking place since that date, but it is an extraordinary thing that the minister at this late date, after the matter has been before the House for so long, and after so much evidence has been produced, should tell the committee to-day that he does not believe that Mr. Duchemin acted in this way. My only excuse for dealing with this matter s fully is that it is a matter of fair play and justice. Justice is the most important thing we have in this country. It is important that we should get through with our business, but it is much more important that we should do what is right and see that fair play and justice are given to the people of this country. I submit that the minister who has conducted the investigations in my constituency has not done justice to those people, that his commissioner has held hole and corner meetings, a sort of star chamber court, that men have been refused the right to be represented by counsel, and that the trials have been so unfair that it is impossible for any minister to give a verdict on such evidence as he has had before him.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski): (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the session our opponents have not ceased complaining about dismissals of public employees, and I see that the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) is one of the most fervid in raising those questions.

Really, our opponents should keep silent, because whenever such complaints are made, they are dealt with by the newspapers, and the question being brought into light again, our own friends find that, instead of being too severe, we have not been severe enough.

I am particularly surprised to see the hon. member cast his blame upon the hon. Minister of Marine, a man endowed with the truest spirit of justice, a man who has treated our opponents with the most complete impartiality, if not with all the lenience possible.

In my county a great number of our opponents have been active partisans. I could almost say that all the employees of the Department of Marine, in the county of Rimouski, have been avowed opponents of the Conservative party; yet, the hon. minister has dismissed but two, and they had fully deserved it. The others are yet holding the positions which they held under the Liberal régime, and I do not know that we are trying to disturb them. If I had an advice to give my opponents I would say to them: Do not raise that question too often, because it is of such a nature as to hurt you whenever you do raise it.

A discussion went on during two hours and a half, before the committee, to-day, about a charge which the hon. minister has proved to be perfectly ungrounded. He proved that an inquiry had been held, he even established—and the member for Guysborough admits it—that, during the meeting which he held, the famous Munro had acted as an active partisan: that he had gone so far as to invite the audience to cry out cheers in favour of the Liberal party. It follows that a man who takes part in a political meeting and shows his preference in that way, should be considered as an active partisan; if not, I fail to understand what is an active partisan.

In the second place, the hon. member has blamed the Minister of Marine for not settling this question by superannuating that man Munro, and he admits, himself, that he had tried to have the matter settled by his own party, which refused to do so because it was impossible for them so to do. How can he reasonably hope that his opponents will do any more? I know that the Conservative party is actuated by good intentions, and that the hon. member may perhaps expect more justice from this party than from his own friends; but it is rather awkward that what he was not able to get from the Liberal party, he should ask from his opponents, when it is contrary to the present law to grant it, and especially when the man he would like to protect makes an admission to the effect that he has accepted the conditions which were made to him in 1898.

The hon. member for Guysborough has complained of the partiality of the commissioner in charge of those inquiries, and the hon. Minister of Marine has shown clearly, by written documents, that Mr. Duchemin, the commissioner, is impartial and just, and that he has given full satisfaction. The hon. member has, then, no reason to accuse that commissioner and say that he acted unjustly, when it is so easy to prove the contrary. In fact, if I had to reproach the hon. Minister of Marine with anything, I would say that he is too accommodating towards his opponents; this entails very much trouble for us in our counties, because our own friends blame us ourselves for such extreme goodness towards opponents who have never treated us with regard.

Our opponents should not raise that question of dismissals, for the more they shall raise it, the more they shall hurt themselves and their own friends. Let me quote, at this point, the case of a man in my county, who has been a Government employee for thirty-six years and who has admitted, at the minister's own office, that he had always fought against the Conservative party. Notwithstanding that fact, just one-half of his position was taken away from him, the Government being good enough to leave him the other half. Is not this instance sufficient to show with what generosity, with what spirit of justice the Government does treat the Liberal employees who are guilty, while they prove to be relentless opponents? This same man whom I have alluded to had organized almost a riot during the election of 1904, in order to beat to death the then Conservative candidate, who was Mr. Price. That fact is known to everybody, and yet, this relentless opponent has been left at the Government's service.

The Government, far from being too rigid towards our opponents, should rather be accused of treating them with too much goodness.

There are, in my county, many employees belonging to the Marine Department, who have been left undisturbed, which shows clearly how obliging the hon. Minister has been.

I hope that our opponents will not think of dealing any further with that question which caused us a useless loss of time. The session has been so protracted, we have been here for such a long time that we should soon put an end to our work. Really it is ridiculous to talk uselessly as did the hon. member for Guysborough, who has kept sifting that question before us here during two hours and a half.

Department of Militia and Defence— contingencies, $36,000.

Mr. HAZEN: That is exactly the same as it was last year, and it is for printing, sundries, clerical and other assistance.

Mr. LAW: Has the minister considered the question that I asked last year in reference to the payment of certain grocers and butchers in Yarmouth, who supplied Dominion Government boats and charged the accounts to the stewards of these boats who decamped and never paid the bills?

Mr. HAZEN: If the hon. gentleman had been in the House at the time the supplementary estimates for last year were under consideration he would have known that the amount was put in the estimates for the purpose of paying these bills, or rather, acting on the advice of the permanent officers of the department, paying seventy-five per cent of the amounts that were contracted for by the stewards of these boats. There was no legal obligation on the Government, but it was thought that these people had sold to the stewards, believing that the Government was responsible. The condition attached is that these persons who supplied the goods will have to make a declaration to the effect that they believed at the time that the Government was liable for the payment of the accounts. These are all being dealt with by the purchasing agent of the department, and I fancy that the greater number of the cases in Yarmouth will have been dealt with.

Mr. LAW: No, they have not.

Mr. HAZEN: Well, they are being dealt with by the purchasing agent, and if my hon. friend will come over to the department, I will get all the information for him with reference to the matter. The matter was dealt with in the supplementary estimates for last year.

Mr. LAW: I did not notice it, and the people of Yarmouth are not aware of it either, because I had correspondence a little while ago from them, and I was waiting for an opportunity to bring the matter up.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister thought it proper to launch off upon a side track, and to talk about this official of his. I would like to get a little further information. I would like to ask the minister if these investigating officers are appointed separately for each department, or are they appointed under one Order in Council?

Mr. HAZEN: Each department appoints its own. The man investigating matters in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department is appointed by the department and a special commission is issued to him.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have the Order in Council here:

Certified copy of a Report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General on the 3rd June, 1912.

The Committee of the Privy Council have under consideration the question as to the rate of remuneration which would be allowed commissioners appointed or to be appointed to hold inquiries or investigations under the Inquiries Act, chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1908.

The committee advise that, except in cases otherwise provided for by Order in Council, the fees allowable to a commissioner appointed under the authority of the above mentioned Act shall not in any case exceed $15 for each full day's attendance or occupation in connection with the work of the commission, exclusive of the reasonable moving and living expenses of the commissioner to be allowed where he has to travel for the purpose of executing the commission; and that the said per diem allowance shall be deemed to cover letters and interviews on other days as well as on the day for which the commissioner is entitled to such per diem allowance; and that no further charge be allowed for such letters and interviews; and that a professional man shall not be entiteld to any fees or allowances as commissioner to which other commissioners are not entitled as aforesaid.

The committee advise that a copy of the minute be sent to every commissioner hereafter to be appointed, with his commission, or the notification of his appointment and that such commissioner be at the same time informed that the provisions of this Order in Council will be strictly followed in ascertaining the amount to which he may be entitled for his services as commissioner.

The committee further advise that the Order in Council, (P.C. 2648) of the 21st September, 1897, fixing the rate of remuneration of commissioners appointed to hold inquiries into public matters or departmental business, be cancelled.

All which is respectfully submitted for approval.

(Sgd.) F. K. Bennetts,
Assistant clerk of the Privy Council.

I would like to ask the minister if that law, as made by Order in Council,: applies to all the commissioners?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: Then I would gather from the meaning of this Order in Council that if the commissioner goes to a certain place and holds an inquiry into two, three or four cases on the one day, he is only entitled to the sum of $15?

Mr. HAZEN: That is entirely a matter for the Auditor General. When we receive an account we certify that the order was issued for the holding of the inquiry, that the inquiry was held, and it then goes to the department of the Auditor General, who sees that the terms of that resolution are carried out.

Mr. McKENZIE: I think the minister has a duty to discharge to the committee and to all of us as to how he understands this Order in Council.

Mr. HAZEN: That is the way it is done. It is more a matter for the Finance Department. I think that the Minister of Finance speaks for the Auditor General in this House. I certainly have no authority to speak for him. I think that the language of the order is pretty plain. We are simply responsible for certifying that the order issued for holding the inquiry, that the inquiry was held and then it is for the Auditor General's Department to see whether the number of days charged for is correct or not. The account is not paid until he certifies to it.

Mr. McKENZIE: The question of the continuing in office or not of the commissioner is a matter not for the Auditor General but for the minister. The question as to how the commissioner conducts himself and how he comports in his conduct with the order appointing him is a matter for the minister. If the commissioner does not comply with the law I should think that it would be a matter for the head of the department to enquire into and not the Auditor General.

Mr. HAZEN: The Auditor General could refuse to pay him.

Mr. McKENZIE: He could refuse to pay him? The minister says that it is the same kind of law for all the departments, that it covers them all.

Mr. HAZEN: I will read the Order in Council under which my authority comes:

The Committee of the Privy Council advises that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries be authorized to appoint, in accordance with the provisions of part 2 of the Inquiries Act, a commissioner, or commissioners for the province of New Brunswick—

I am just taking this one, but it is the same for Nova Scotia.

—to enquire into and report upon any charges of political partisanship which may be preferred against any officer, clerk or employee in the outside service of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in that province.

I have nothing to do with the payment. That is a matter that rests entirely with the Department of Finance, subject to the audit of the Auditor General.

Mr. McKENZIE: I want to know from the hon. minister if this order which I have just read is the law or regulation governing the Auditor General in making this payment?

Mr. HAZEN: I would say it undoubtedly is.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is no authority which governs him in ascertaining how much is due to any commissioner, except this order?

Mr. HAZEN: Not so far as I know.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not anxious to go after any personage in particular, but we are told by the hon. minister to-day that he does not believe our statements—

Mr. HAZEN: No, I did not say that.

Mr. McKENZIE: —as against this commissioner. I want to tell the minister that on the 6th day of September, 1912, this commissioner, Mr. Duchemin held six investigations between three o'clock in the afternoon and six o'clock in the evening in a house at New Campbellton or Big Bras D'Or in my county. He examined six individuals; and for his work he sent in six separate and distinct bills, amounting to something over a hundred dollars for about three hours' work. These bills are on file. They are probably paid, and paid under the terms of this authorization. Unless there is some clear, distinct and satisfactory explanation from this commissioner, I think that moneys are paid out of the funds of this county which are not earned. I submit that any work that a commissioner can do in half an afternoon is paid for by the $15 and other incidentals. I mention this simply in order to show that the minister should not be so particularly strong in flaunting the word of this gentleman in our face, when I am prepared to prove to the hilt that this is the way in which things are done, so far as the money end of it is concerned. When it comes to a matter of getting the hard cash of the Government without earning it and in direct violation of the order appointing a commission in the service of the Government, I should hesitate a little, if I were in the position of the hon. minister, to tell hon. gentlemen that I did not believe sworn affidavits which differed from his statements of fact. One irregularity may cause another. If I find a man getting money which he has no business to get, and making false returns for the purpose of getting it, I would have some hesitancy in accepting his statement as fact.

Mr. HAZEN: Does the hon. gentleman say that these investigations were all held on the same day?

Mr. McKENZIE: The same day between three o'clock in the afternoon and six o'clock in the evening.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman knows that of his own knowledge?

Mr. McKENZIE: The returns show it.

Mr. HAZEN: They are all dated on the same day. Does it follow that they were all held on the same day?

Mr. McKENZIE: I have a letter here from one of those whose cases were investigated.

Mr. HAZEN: The matter is one that the Auditor General is responsible for. Is that in the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. McKENZIE: No, it is in the Department of Customs.

I see my hon. friend from Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) smiling broadly and laughing over the fact that this irregularity was in the Customs Department, and therefore it does not matter at all. There is only one Auditor General in this country, who pays the money. The money comes out of the same fund, the money of the people. My hon. friend from Rimouski need not laugh if he finds irregularity in the Customs Department. I have observed from the returns that his dealings are with the Department of Railways and Canals, for ties and things of that sort.

Mr. CARROLL: When a charge of this nature is made to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, do I understand him to say that the only recourse is that the Auditor General shall not pay the bill? Does he not think it up to him to have had this matter taken up by counsel and had the man dismissed from his position?

Mr. HAZEN: If any charge had been made to me, I would certainly have had it investigated. No such charge has been made to me, and no such charge would be made to me, because it was not in my department that this occurred. It is the duty of the Auditor General, when these accounts come in, to order payment if they are correct. If they are not correct, he should not order payment. If he refused to order payment on the ground that there was dishonesty, the matter would be brought to the notice of the Government and the facts ascertained. So far as I am concerned, the incident referred to by the hon member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has no relation to my department at all.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I think we can show similar instances in the department of my hon. friend. He cannot escape responsibility by any reference to the Auditor General. My hon. friend sends these bills to the Auditor General. It is his duty to send nothing to the Auditor General unless it is right and should be paid. It is for my hon. friend to investigate these matters and to see whether his commissioner is charging too much or not. If he will investigate matters, he will find conditions of this nature. It is impossible for anyone to understand accounts sent in by Mr. Duchemin. It is impossible to say how many days he took in these different places. He does not give the time that he spent in any one particular place, but he rambles from one place to another and combines three or four of these places together, which may be many miles apart. Then he sends in a bill for so many days. It is the duty of the hon. minister to get clear and distinct accounts from this commissioner as to how many hours he spent in each particular place and on what particular days he conducted any investigation.

I have a letter on my desk from the department of my hon friend which requires some explanation. I asked the following questions a few days ago, and the following answers were given:

Q. 1. What is the date of the appointment of H P. Duchemin, investigating commissioner for eastern Nova Scotia?—A. So far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries is concerned, 5th January, 1912.

Q. 2. How many days has he been employed by the Government since his appointment?—A. 73¾ days.

Q. 3. What is gross amount paid to Mr. Duchemin as an allowance for his services, excluding travelling expenses or other outlays?—A. $1,121.25.

Q. 4. How much has been paid to Mr. Duchemin to date for travelling expenses, living expenses, witness fees, and other sundry expenses, respectively?—A. Travelling expenses, $76.28; living expenses, $193.75; witness fees, $26.70; sundry, $273.12.

What is this 'sundries' of $273.12 made up of?

Mr. HAZEN: It is a pretty long statement including a great many small items of telegrams, postage, fees for serving witnesses, and one item of $2 for the use of a hall in which to hold an investigation.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The hon. gentleman might leave that statement with the clerk.

Mr. HAZEN: I shall be glad to do so. Now, with regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton North (Mr. McKenzie) about the way these accounts are dealt with in the department, I find on the file a memorandum of May 8, 1912, by the deputy minister to the chief accountant, as follows:

I am unable to find on the files any reference to the arrangement concluded between the Auditor General and yourself, respecting the payment of accounts rendered by the various commissioners inquiring into charges of political partisanship against employees of this department.

A. Johnston.

And there is the reply of the accountant to the deputy minister:

Referring to arrangements verbally made, with the Auditor General in regard to accounts rendered by the commissioners appointed to inquire into and report on any charges of political partisanship preferred against civil servants, I beg to report as follows:—

When the Order in Council of the 20th December last approving of appointments of commissioners was received in the department, it was noticed that there was the vote out of which the expenses incurred on account of such investigations were to be paid.

I, therefore, went to see the Deputy Minister of the Finance Department to see what arrangements could be made, as commissioner L. C. Beaubien was then pressing for payment of his accounts for investigations. I was informed that these expenses were to be paid out of contingencies (Finance Department), and that the Auditor General would examine the accounts and authorize the issue of the cheques in payment thereof.

Later I interviewed the Auditor General, and it was agreed that, when accounts were rendered by commissioners in connection with investigations, this department would certify that said investigations had been authorized and reported on. The accounts were then to be forwarded to the Auditor General to be examined and checked in accordance with the provisions of the Order in Council of the 3rd January last.

None of these accounts came under my notice; they were dealt with in the department by the accountant and the deputy minister in the usual way.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How many commissioners has the minister employed in the whole of Canada to investigate?

Mr. HAZEN: In Nova Scotia, there were Mr. Duchemin, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Lane. I think that Mr. Macdonald has not done any work for some time. In New Brunswick there were Mr. Knowles and Mr. Legere. In Quebec there were Mr. Bergeron, Mr. Beaubien and Mr. Shurtliff and Mr. Flynn. In Prince Edward Island there was Mr. Heath Strong.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Government steamers and ice-breakers, $1,000,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the hon. minister please explain this item?

Mr. HAZEN: This is the usual vote which has been passed for years—and it is the same amount as last year—for the maintenance and repair of government steamers and ice-breakers. I have here the details of expenditure of all the vessels we have in commission, including salaries, fuel, board, repairs, etc. The list would be lengthy to read, but if there is any special information desired I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Are there any new ships?

Mr. HAZEN: There is the Estevan, which was under construction at Collingwood when I came into office. She was finished this spring and has gone around to British Columbia—has arrived there. She will be employed in the buoy service in British Columbia. The Dollard was under construction also at Collingwood, and it is expected that she will be completed and put in commission very soon. The Dollard will take the place of the Shamrock, which was used up. It will be remembered that there was an explosion on board the Shamrock some years ago. We have twenty-seven vessels, of which twelve are in commission during the whole year, and fifteen are in commission during a part of the year. There are all sorts of boats including the Earl Grey and the Minto which run between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, the Lansdowne, the Aberdeen, La Canadienne and the others.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Dollard was the one we saw at Kingston?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, with the Bellechase; they were both there at that time.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Princess is still on the Baie des Chaleurs route?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Always under the command of Commander Wakeham?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am bound to say that Commander Wakeham has always given satisfaction to the people in that district.

Mr. HAZEN: I wish I had more officers like him.

Mr. CARROLL: Were there any ice-breakers in commission in the province of Nova Scotia last year? I have special reference to the service in Sydney harbour.

Mr. HAZEN: We had no ice-breaker available among our boats to do work in Sydney harbour last year. At the time the ice-breaker was required at that port, the Stanley, which has been doing the work in that district, had met with an accident and was laid up for repairs. There was a requisition made for the services of an ice-breaker, and it was a matter of regret to us that we could not comply with it.

Mr. LAW: Has the department any boats under construction at the present time?

Mr. HAZEN: In the Marine and Fisheries Department the Dollard is the only boat under construction at the present time. There are two dredges for the St. Lawrence ship channel under construction at Collingwood, and some vessels are under construction for the fishery protection service in British Columbia; these come under the Department of Naval Service. Contracts have also been awarded for the construction of some small gasoline boats for the fishery patrol service on the British Columbia coast.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Are these boats equipped with Marconi wireless telegraph system?

Mr. HAZEN: Some of them are. All those that do ocean work are equipped with wireless—boats like the Aberdeen, Stanley, Montcalm and Minto.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I think the captains of the Government boats should have entire control of the selection of officers and men. When I represented the county of Gaspé, I gave Commander Wakeham a free hand in respect of the selection of his men, and I think that accounts for the excellent service we have had. I have often compared the crews on La Canadienne and the Princess, which were under his command, with those of some other boats in the river St. Lawrence upon which the selection of the men was made rather by members of the House than by the captains of the ships. I think, therefore, that the minister should give his captains a free hand in the selection of the ships' crew, for I am sure he would get a better service in that way.

Mr. HAZEN: As far as Commander Wakeham's boat is concerned, the system to which my hon. friend has referred has been continued. His is the only boat in the service upon which that system has prevailed absolutely. I agree with what my hon. friend says in regard to this matter, but there are certain difficulties in the way of carrying out his suggestion. As far as the officers on all these boats are concerned, our endeavour is, when a vacancy occurs, to promote a man already in the service, provided he is competent.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has the hon. minister given an increase to the captains this year? I remember that during the few days I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I received a petition signed by nearly all the captains and officers of the various government steamers, asking for an increase. I had it in mind to give them a legitimate increase, but unfortunately the people of this country deprived me of the opportunity of carrying out my good intentions in that respect. I hope my hon. friend has complied with this request which was made by the officers of the staff. The salaries have not been revised for many years, and the officers, of course, like others, feel the burden of the high cost of living.

Mr. HAZEN: There have been certain increases made for the purpose of equalizing the salaries, but that does not altogether fill the bill. The officers of the department are at the present time preparing a schedule, so that when a man is appointed to a position in the service he will know what his increase and maximum will be. This schedule, which will certainly give an increase to these officers, will, I think, be ready for my approval in a very short time.

Mr. LAW: Does the department intend to build any new boats within the coming year besides those mentioned by the hon. minister? If so, I would like to say that we have in Yarmouth a ship-building plant that could construct the small steamers necessary for the service of the department.

Mr. HAZEN: In the future, so far as my department is concerned—and I hope the same system will be adopted by the Government generally—I think it would be fair, in asking for tenders, to stipulate that the boats shall be constructed in Canada. I may say frankly that one difficulty experienced in the contracts we have made in the past for the building of boats in Canadian shipyards, is that they are never delivered at the time they are undertaken to be completed, and other difficulties are experienced which are not met with when the contracts are taken by firms of established repute on the other side of the water. The tenders offered by firms on the other side are very much lower than those of the Canadian shipbuilder, and it is impossible for the Canadian shipbuilder to compete, but in calling for tenders for these ships I think it would be fair, as a matter of policy, to ask that they be built in Canada. The result of that would be, I think, that the shipbuilders on the other side would establish plants in Canada, and do the work here, employing the labour of our own people. I may say in passing that if there is at Yarmouth a ship-building establishment which can compete successfully for the building of vessels, I would be glad indeed to see them get the contract. We have in the estimates a provision for a first-class ice-breaker for the river St. Lawrence. The ice-breaking on the river St Lawrence is done at the present time by the Montcalm and the Lady Grey. These are boats that do ice breaking in certain portions of the year and at other times are used for general work in the rivers in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department. That is not found altogether satisfactory. The work of breaking ice is of a very heavy character, and is very hard on the boats. They have to be equipped with a great deal of power, and this makes them very expensive to use in the summer for the general purposes of the department on the river. We are asking in this vote for a sum that will enable us to purchase a modern, up-to-date ice breaker for the St. Lawrence river. I consider the ice-breaking on the river of very great importance. If it is not broken at the proper time there are great floods, with consequent inconvenience and damage, and the result of the breaking of the ice has been to open navigation to Montreal at a very considerably earlier date. That is the one boat which I contemplate asking for this year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will this boat be built in Canada?

Mr. HAZEN: I hope to be able to get it built in Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am glad that the minister contemplates adding to the flotilla of ice breakers. As my hon. friend knows, there was a great deal of prejudice in and around Quebec city against this ice breaking at Cap a la Roche. When I was a minister, delegation after delegation from Quebec came to me protesting against the use of those steamers, under the pretext that the ice breaking at Cap a la Roche was jamming the harbour in front of Quebec and preventing the ferries from performing their service. There was a certain element of truth in that; but, as a matter of fact, the floating ice, although it seriously hampered the boats, never actually prevented them from carrying on the service. But, as my hon. friend says, even if we were not to consider the immensity of the service rendered to navigation by opening it at least three weeks before the ordinary time, the presence of those ice breakers and the work performed by them prevents the flooding of immense areas on both sides of the river St. Lawrence from Cap à la Roche up to Three Rivers and lake St. Peter. My predecessor, Mr. Justice Brodeur, and his predecessor, the late Hon. Mr. Prefontaine, are entitled to great credit for the work they did in that connection. For several winters they had engineers on both sides of the river watching very closely the movements of the ice and tides. It was noted that as soon as the ice breakers began to perform their work at Cap a la Roche, practically all the floods ceased in the upper district. As regards the trade of the country, it is, as my hon. friend says, of immense value commercially, financially and economically, and three boats are not too much for that work. The number of boats plying between Canada and Europe is increasing every year, and the sooner you get the channel open in the spring the better for the trade of this country. I sincerely congratulate the department on acquiring the new boat, and I hope it will be built in Canada. My hon. friend visited with me last year the shipyards at Kingston, where we saw the Dollard and the Bellechasse. The Montmagny was built in Canada, at Sorel. It may have cost more than it could have been purchased for in England, but if you want to have shipbuilding encouraged in this country you must not be afraid at first to pay a little more than you would have to pay in Great Britain. There is a beginning to everything. I daresay that the first icebreaker built in Russia, the famous Ermaak, cost a considerable amount; but since that time Russia has been building icebreakers for other countries, and, by encouraging that shipbuilding industry, it has created one of the greatest industries in the world. If my hon. friend would take as his motto Canada for the Canadians, and encourage exclusively our shipbuilding yards, he would be entitled to great credit. I read the other day in a paper that a Canadian shipbuilding firm at Collingwood had been awarded the contract for building the largest steam vessel afloat on the great lakes. Surely if a Canadian firm at Collingwood, with its men, equipment and material, can built the largest vessel for the lake service, the Department of Marine and Fisheries can afford to assemble at Sorel or at Kingston or in the maritime provinces the material and the men necessary to build his flotilla of steamers. If I mistake not, a delegation came here during this session and interviewed my hon. friend and the Prime Minister asking that the Government encourage shipbuilding in Canada. This is an excellent occasion for doing this. If we are not able to do all of the work of building those ships, we have only to import from Great Britain the men who are able to direct our own people. Take, for example, what the firm of Vickers, Limited have done in Montreal. It is true that this immense floating dock has been imported from Great Britain, but Vickers have agreed to have that floating dock in Montreal and to erect immense sheds on both sides of the dock for ships to do the repairing of vessels, general chandlery work; and at the same time the firm is ready to build in Canada ships of a certain tonnage. It is a British firm, but it becomes Canadian, and because the firm is Canadian it remains British. If Vickers, Limited, are encouraged at Maisonneuve, I am quite sure that within a very short space of time we shall have an immense shipbuilding industry in the immediate vicinity of the city of Montreal. I would ask my hon. friend not to be too chary in the amount which he will be prepared to pay in Canada for the building of his steamers. It might be fifteen per cent or twenty per cent more, but the people will not begrudge the payment of that slight increase in the price, as compared with the English price because, after all, you are building up a Canadian industry, and are ensuring for the future work which will be to the credit of Canada.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The minister could scarcely expect the work to be done with the same speed as it can be done in the better equipped yards of the old country. If you give a Canadian ship-builder the opportunity to build one of those vessels, after he gets a plan and understands what is required, he will have to order a good deal of material from the other side. He has to send his specification over, and it takes sometimes weeks or perhaps months to get it filled. Allowance must be made for that, if the Canadian shipbuilder is to have a chance. The minister must remember that a good many articles which enter into the construction of steamships are heavily taxed. He cannot expect ships to be built at the same price as in a free trade country like England.

Mr. HAZEN: The principal difference is in wages.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I do not think so.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, I have had the figures furnished to me by ship-building firms in this country, and according to them, the principal difference is in regard to wages; it is a difference of forty-five per cent.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If the minister inquires among the ship-building yards in Canada, he will find that they do not look upon wages as the most important item.

Mr. HAZEN: That is what I inquired of them, and I got that statement.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is contended that Canadian workmen can do more work in a day than British workmen, that they can turn their hands to so many different classes of work that they are more profitable than the workmen employed in the British yards. Then the cost of material is a very important item. Some few years ago I had occasion to investigate this matter, and I visited the yards at Collingwood and Toronto, and collected information which I can give to the minister. From the inquiries I made it appeared that it cost something like six dollars a ton more to build in Canada than to build in England, that is without allowing for any profit. The additional expense was something like six dollars for each ton of the ship that was constructed in Canada. The minister will have to make allowances for these important phases of the business, if he expects the Canadians to have a chance at all. Delays also occur in the department. We are now well on in the Spring, whereas, if the minister had brought down his estimates four or five months ago, had secured his money, and had had his plans ready, the Canadian builders would have had a chance months ago to send their specifications across, and would have had a much better opportunity to do the work, if he expects to get it done this year. However, I am much pleased that the minister assures us that his policy is to build those vessels in Canada if it is possible to do so.

Mr. MARCIL: I am glad to have the opportunity of corroborating what has been said by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) so far as Commander Wakeham, of the Princess, is concerned. I have had the pleasure of seeing him at work in the gulf of St. Lawrence for twenty years or more, and no more efficient officer is to be found in the service of the department. It is generally hoped in the district that he will continue long in the service of the department. I was glad to hear that Commander Wakeham had been given a free hand in the choice of his boat. I would like to be informed whether the same principle will apply to the other Government boats in the gulf and river St. Lawrence, or whether the patronage system will be applied.

Mr. HAZEN: We are following practically the same system that has been followed for a number of years. Commander Wakeham is the only one who has an absolutely free hand. We try to promote officers when vacancies occur.

Mr. MARCIL: I have had complaints of men employed on Government boats on the St. Lawrence being summarily dismissed on the change of Government.

Mr. HAZEN: Not on these boats.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister any idea of the number of men who were dismissed from the Government boats on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. HAZEN: No. I think there were very few. They are men who are shipped for the season. They sign articles for the season, and very frequently do not go back. There are changes going on every year.

Mr. MARCIL: When vacancies have to be filled are the appointments left to the members of the various constituencies?

Mr. HAZEN: If there are vacancies.

Mr. LAW: Are lightships included in this vote?

Mr. HAZEN: No. They are under a different vote.

Mr. McKENZIE: In Nova Scotia and in the maritime provinces, we recognize the great importance of the river St. Lawrence, the great artery of commerce of Canada. But there are seasons of the year when ice-breaking is of no avail in the river St. Lawrence, when it cannot be done, and we have in the harbour of Sydney a place where ice-breaking will be of benefit when it is of no avail on the river St. Lawrence. I have had in view the proposition to utilize the cable boat during the winter time. The cable boat made the harbour of North Sydney her home for a year or so, and the proposition was that it could be converted into an ice-breaker in winter. She has nothing else to do during that season, for she is laid up.

Mr. HAZEN: To whom does it belong?

Mr. McKENZIE: The Department of Public Works. The cable boat has been removed from North Sydney, and it is most desirable that we should have an ice-breaker there during the three or four months of the year. The ice-breaker required to do the work there need not necessarily be of a very powerful type, because the ice that comes to the mouth of the Sidney harbour is never very heavy. I wish to point out to the minister the great importance of keeping a track open for about five miles from the mouth of the harbour up to North Sydney, or perhaps four miles farther up to the pier. We have at that harbour that tremendous plant of which we are all so proud, not only in Nova Scotia but in the whole of Canada—the plant of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company representing from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 of money—coal and steel combined under one control and management. They could send their product out of the harbour all the year round if it were kept open. But, perhaps more important than sending their products out is that their material is brought in from Newfoundland. Their ore is brought in from Newfoundland and I understand that they are now starting to bring their limestone from there. The bringing in of ore and the taking out of steel are also equally important in connection with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company. On that account I submit to the minister that this question—if I could get the attention of the minister—

Mr. HAZEN: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McKENZIE: I submit that this question is sufficiently important for my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) to permit the minister to listen to me for a moment. I am talking about two of the biggest industries in Canada, industries in connection with the Dominion Steel and Coal Company and in connection with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, I am talking upon a subject that is of vital importance to these two concerns and I am suggesting that something should be done to keep Sydney harbour open all the year round. The minister and the hon. member for Halton both know the harbour of Sydney.

Mr. HENDERSON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I did not just catch what he said.

Mr. McKENZIE: I said that the minister and my hon. friend from Halton know Sydney harbour well.

Mr. HENDERSON: Oh, yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: And they know its grandeur, its magnificence and its beauty.

Mr. HENDERSON: I was there once.

Mr. McKENZIE: They will understand what an important thing it is to provide for keeping it open if it can be done by ordinary expenditure. There is no present means of keeping it open and I was pointing out to the minister that our coal, our steel rails and all the products of the steel works could go out all the year round if about four miles of ice were kept open. Not only would these products go out but the iron ore for the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company and for the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, could come in from Newfoundland if they could get in with their steamers. As it is now they have to rush things during the summer and, at great expense, to pile up this ore and store it, whereas, if they had the opportunity of bringing the ore during all the year, it would greatly facilitate the operations of these large concerns. Limestone is now about to be brought in by the Dominion Steel Company from Newfoundland and it is highly important that communication be kept open all the year round for the bringing in of this commodity as well as the sending out of the coal and the products of the steel companies.

North Sydney is the Atlantic terminus of the Intercolonial railway, and from that terminus we have connection with the island of Newfoundland. The trade has developed enormously during the last ten years. Ten years ago there was no communication at all. Since that, instead of one boat, there are two boats and instead of a few passengers there is a tremendous traffic, an enormous trade, ten times, aye, one hundred times, greater than it was ten years ago; it is continuously increasing. The Reid Newfoundland Company are battling with the ice and doing the best they can to keep their boat on every day during the winter. They are doing very well, missing only a few trips, and I submit to the minister that in view of the abundance of the surplus and the money which the Government have, and in view of their desire to develop every industry and assist transportation everywhere, it would be a very justifiable and legitimate expenditure to provide for placing in the harbour of Sydney this cable boat that I speak of, convert it into an ice-breaker, or build an ice-breaker for the purpose, which would be kept at Sydney harbour all the time. It would be through with Sydney harbour before it would be required on the St. Lawrence where I understand ice-breaking is required to be done in the early spring and therefore, after the ice-breaker had done all the work necessary at Sydney, it could be taken to the St. Lawrence. I can assure the minister that he could not possibly use the money that would be necessary in a better way in the general interests of the country. I am not talking politics. I am not trying to make votes or trying to deceive him in any way; I am talking about a big proposition with respect to Dominion industries which are of importance to every part of Canada and I am suggesting something that would contribute to the expansion of those great plants.

Mr. HAZEN: I appreciate the importance of the matter to which my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) has referred and the desirability of having Sydney harbour kept open during the winter months so that vessels could come and go. With the building of the new ice-breaker for the river St. Lawrence I think there will be no difficulty at all in meeting the position of affairs. In the first place, it will relieve the Montcalm, which, I think, can then be brought down during the winter season to Sydney and in addition, with the building of the car ferry across the straits of Northumberland connecting the island system of railways with the mainland, there will be two boats which will be available as ice-breakers—the Earl Grey and the Minto. In the course of a couple of years I think we will have plenty of ice-breakers to look after the harbours on the Atlantic coast as well as those of the St. Lawrence and others to which our attention has been called. In previous years we were able to do something at Sydney with the Stanley, but unfortunately this year the Stanley met with an accident and she had to be laid up just at the time her services were required.

Mr. MARCIL: I might call the attention of the minister to the fact that there are ports on the Baie des Chaleurs in which these ice-breakers might be used to advantage. The navigation of the Baie des Chaleurs is held up very often because the ports of Dalhousie and Gaspé are closed with ice. An ice-breaker could be very well employed there.

Mr. LAW: How many boats has the department employed in the buoy service in Nova Scotia?

Mr. HAZEN: There are two in Nova Scotia, the Lady Laurier and the Stanley; there are two in New Brunswick, the Aberdeen and the Lansdowne. During the winter season the Montmagny is used there.

Mr. LAW: It has been thought for some years that the department has not steamers enough to look after the buoy service properly. Of course, the minister knows that the coast of Nova Scotia is the roughest coast, I suppose in the world, and the hardest place to keep buoys in position. I have noticed for several years that during the winter season a large number of these buoys are adrift and, the department not having a boat near Yarmouth, the buoys that go adrift have to wait until the steamer comes from St. John to get them. If the department made an arrangement, at a reasonable price, with a firm in Yarmouth to look after these buoys when they go adrift, I think it would be a good thing for the department and also for the safety of navigation. The boats running between Yarmouth and Boston make better time than the railway trains do. When these buoys are out of position, hundreds of lives may be in danger, and it is very important indeed that they should be replaced as quickly as possible. The hon. minister understands that, when a buoy goes adrift, it probably takes twenty-four or forty-eight hours for the matter to be reported, and a couple of days for the steamer to get from St. John to the vicinity of Yarmouth; or, if she engaged in some other business, it may be several days before she can hunt for that buoy and find it. If the hon. minister made an arrangement with the regular boat people in Yarmouth or somebody else there, I have no doubt that a lot of time would be saved, and the safety of the mariners, who have to visit that very rough coast during the winter time, would be much greater than it is at present.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Can the hon. minister tell us how the supplies for these boats are obtained? Are they offered for tender?

Mr. HAZEN: I suppose the hon. gentleman means the food that is furnished. Contracts are entered into with the stewards on board the boats, at an amount fixed by the department, and the stewards supply the food. That system was adopted a few years ago. Before that, the stewards used to buy the provisions and charge them to the Government. That system was not found satisfactory. The opinion of the department is that the present system is much more in the interests of the department and the public service than the old system was. The stewards enter into a contract to feed the men at so much a day, and the officers at so much a day.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the steward free to go to any merchant?

Mr. HAZEN: Absolutely free.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There are no parties recommended as people from whom he should purchase?

Mr. HAZEN: None.

Mr. LAW: In case the stewards do not pay the bills, does the minister have them under bond?

Mr. HAZEN: We have them under bond. The bonds are personal bonds, because we could not get a bond company to guarantee the stewards. We have public notices in the press in the different localities to which these ships go, informing the people that the Government are not liable for these stewards. We are holding them as far as we can by these personal bonds, but, no matter what care the purchasing agent may exercise, some of these bonds cannot be recovered. As a matter of fact, some stewards have resigned because they have been unable to furnish any bonds at all. Every effort was made by Mr. Doutre and the deputy minister to get bonds that would be approved of by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How is the coal supplied?

Mr. HAZEN: By tender and contract.

Mr. LAW: The arrangement made between the stewards and the department may be a very good one; but it is hardly fair for the butchers, grocers and others who supply these stewards from time to time, when they cannot get their bills paid. These boats go into small places; a steward, with a gold band on his cap, goes into a butcher shop or a grocery store; the man gives him the goods and charges them, supposing that the Government will pay the bill.

Mr. HAZEN: We are spreading the information as much as possible that the Government is not liable.

Mr. LAW: I think some percentage should be kept back from each man so as to guarantee that those who furnish supplies and provisions for the Government boats will be paid.

Examination of master and mates, $16,500.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where is your board of examiners—at Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: The list of examiners is: Charles Eddy, William Lugar—I see by the newspapers that Mr. Lugar is dead,—Captain H. W. King, Alexander Cameron, John E. Murphy, James Sutherland, A. J. Wolf, James Gaudin, George C. Coles, M. Thodarson, Angus Grant, G. Hallett. The amount was $5,000 for last year; the additional $5,000 is for contemplated extension of the service. Very great complaint has been made to us in regard to the inconvenience masters on the great lakes are put to in attending these examinations.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where have they to sit—in Ottawa?

Mr. HAZEN: No, in different places. Captain King is in Toronto.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Whom have you in Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain Lachance. The additional $5,000 is for contemplated extensions of the service as follows: Examiner at Toronto, $1,800; examiner at Quebec, $600; Captain Lachance also receives pay for conducting a marine school; his total salary is $2,400. Examiner at St. John, $600; office rent, $500; extension of service, Quebec and Ontario, $1,000; examinations in Yukon, $500. In addition to their duties as examiners of masters and mates, the above officers are required to conduct preliminary investigations into wrecks, to deliver lectures in marine schools, and to do other work that the department may assign to them.

Mr. LAW: I noticed in the press that the department was taking into consideration the changing of the examination centres for masters and mates, and of having one head centre in the maritime provinces. Is this so?

Mr. HAZEN: We have had Captain Lugar, who has been chief examiner of masters and mates in Nova Scotia; then there are local examiners in addition to him.

Mr. LAW: Masters and mates are still examined at the port of Yarmouth by Captain John E. Murphy ?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LAW: Is it proposed to make any change ?

Mr. HAZEN: No. Rewards for saving life, including life-saving stations, amount to $110,000. There is an increase caused on account of new stations at Long Point, Point Pelee on Lake Erie, Bay View, Digby, Toronto, Cheticamp and Richibucto.

Mr. LAW: Is there anything in the estimates for a life-saving station at Mud Island ?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Objection is taken to the way in which the minister has dealt with the life-saving stations since he came into office. I was much surprised to learn, in answer to a question asked in the House, of the large number of coxswains and crews of life-saving stations who had been dismissed, many of them without investigation. The life-boat service was always supposed to be free from political bias; this service was not looked upon—at any rate in the part of the country from which I come—as a political matter. It was the custom for one of the best men in the harbour to take charge of the life-boat and he selected his own crew, taking the best oarsmen and the most athletic young fellows in the harbour. It was a great surprise to the House and the country to find that even this service does not escape the spoils system that the minister has established. In answer to the question I have referred to, the statement was made that there are nineteen life-saving stations on the coast, and the officers of twelve of these have been dismissed, seven of them without investigation. One of those dismissed is a man in my own constituency who has done good work in this service in the past.

Mr. HAZEN: How many stations did the hon. gentleman say there were?

Mr. SINCLAIR: The answer I have here is that there are nineteen. This was when the hon. gentleman became Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes; there are twenty-seven now.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I, for one, enter my strong protest against dealing with the life-saving service in the manner I have indicated. The men who have charge of these stations undergo great risk and hardship, and those composing the crew are generally the best oarsmen in the harbour. In my own constituency the Government dismissed Mr. Hugh P. Munro without any investigation whatever and appointed a man in his place who was away from the district at the time. The whole life-boat service of that coast was demoralized for several weeks on account of the change that took place. This was done without excuse. At least, I have never been able to get any excuse from the minister, and if he has any now to give, I should like to hear what it is. I was surprised to find that a man who had served in the department so well as Mr. Munro for so many years had been dismissed. I think he was in office nearly as long as the other Mr. Munro to whose case I drew attention this session. He was appointed if I remember well, by the Conservative party before the change of Government in 1896. The Liberal Government did not dismiss the life-boat coxswains along the coast so far as I can learn, at all events they did not do so in the part of Nova Scotia from which I come. Mr. Munro as I understand, occupied his position from 1896 and held office all through the regime of the late Administration. He did his work well, and certificates have been filed with the department approving of things done by him and his crew on more than one occasion. I have on my desk a statement of Lloyd's agent and others stating that they were a very capable and satisfactory crew. Before this man was dismissed, I wrote the minister that certain people were endeavouring to obtain his dismissal and asking him to give Mr. Munro a fair trial if complaints were made against him. I have the reply of the minister dated the 22nd of December 1911, which says:

> Before final action is taken in the way of dispensing with Mr. Munro's services, he will be given an opportunity to be heard in his own defence.

But he was not given an opportunity to be heard in his own defence; for the next letter on the file is one from Commander Thompson that his services have been dispensed with and asking him to hand over the key to the boat-house and all the property under his control to the man appointed to take his place. That is a case in my own constituency, and there were in all 12 dismissals along the coast, seven of them being without investigation.

Mr. LAW: I would call attention also to the dismissal of the captain of the life-boat service at Yarmouth. I asked the minister some time ago if any dismissals had taken place, and understood him to say that so far as he knew they had not. I had heard rumours of the dismissal of Captain Albert Caines, but after the minister's answer, I rested easy, until I went home a short time since and found that his dismissal had taken place without investigation, and there was no notice of dismissal until word came from the department. I agree with the hon. member for Guysborough that petty politics have got down in this country to a point where members of life-boat crews are dismissed, because they happen to be Liberals or Tories, and the sooner it is done away with the better for the people whose life, when in danger, these crews are established to save. Captain Caines has been a faithful and efficient officer. He was one of our most respected ship officers at Yarmouth for many years, a man of ability and he lived near the life station. To dismiss such a man without investigation, I say, not wishing to use any stronger language, is a very small piece of business.

Mr. HAZEN: Captain Albert Caines was dismissed on the advice of the officers of the department on account of his age, he being over 72 years of age.

Mr. LAW: I have seen men of the age of seventy-two years who are far more active than the hon. member for Annapolis, (Mr. Davidson), who is applauding so loudly. Captain Caines was a capable officer; he was as competent to take charge of a life-boat as any man I know, and the assertion that he was dismissed from office because of his age is a very paltry excuse. I would have respected the hon. minister more if he had said that he turned the man out because he had been a life-long Liberal. I still insist that his dismissal under those conditions is a small business, and does not add to the dignity of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Might I ask the minister whether a new life-saving station has been built at Point Prim, Digby county?

Mr. HAZEN: There is a new station at Bay View, Digby.

Mr. LAW: Was it built by tender and contract?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LAW: Who were the tenderers?

Mr. HAZEN: I have not that information before me, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend at any time. The files of the Department are always open for his inspection.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): Has the station at Cheticamp been opened?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Who is the coxswain there?

Mr. HAZEN: Michael Maillet. He was appointed on October 15, 1912, when the station was opened.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Was he the first man recommended for the position?

Mr. HAZEN: So far as I know, he was.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I recommended for appointment a man by the name of Doucette. Does my hon. friend know whether his name is in the department?

Mr. HAZEN: I have not his name here.

Mr. CHISHOLM: He was recommended for the position; I understood that he was appointed.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think that any appointment was made before the one I have mentioned, although I do not speak positively on the matter, because I have not the information here. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman wrote a letter to the department recommending for appointment the gentleman mentioned by him, and that letter will be found on the files of the department. I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman any information he desires on the matter.

Mr. MARCIL: Are there any life-saving stations in the province of Quebec? I think that enough wrecks take place in the lower St. Lawrence to justify the establishment of a life-saving station.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to corroborate what my hon. friend the member for Bonaventure says. Either at Gaspé or Paspebiac there should be a life-saving station. On the portion of the peninsula which faces the Atlantic ocean, the coast is very often swept by terrific storms, especially during the months of September, October and November, and during the last ten or fifteen years great losses have occurred, in vessels as well as lives. I think my hon. friend should consider the advisability of establishing a life-saving station in that neighbourhood.

Mr. MARCIL: There might be two or three life-saving stations along the coast of Gaspé.

Mr. HAZEN: It is an extraordinary thing that there are no life-saving stations in that district, and I will certainly give attention to the matter.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The minister has given us no explanation of the fact that he wrote me stating that Mr. Hugh P. Munro would have an opportunity of being heard before his dismissal, and that he then declined to give him that opportunity, and dismissed him without an investigation. It is an extraordinary thing for the minister to do, and if he has an excuse, I think it would be polite for him to say so.

Mr. HAZEN: When I wrote that letter I presumed my hon. friend had reference to charges that had been made against Munro in connection with political partisanship. But Commander Thompson reported to the department that Munro was seventy years of age, and that he was entirely too old to be entrusted with the charge of a life-saving station.

Mr. SINCLAIR: If Commander Thompson made such a report, I wish to say that the minister will find by reference to his files that he recently made another report contradicting the previous report. Complaint was made against this man prior to the defeat of the late government by certain persons who wished to obtain his position, and Commander Thompson was sent to White Head to investigate the case. After making a very thorough investigation, Commander Thompson reported to the department that Mr. Munro, although seventy years of age, was a very active man and quite able to carry on his work as coxswain of the life-boat crew. If Commander Thompson made a report contradicting his former report it simply shows that Commander Thompson was not allowed to have a free hand in regard to the matter, but that he had to do what he was told.

Mr. HAZEN: Is Munro alive now?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Certainly. He is a very energetic man; there is no finer physique to be found on the coast of eastern Canada. He is erect, tall and athletic, and Commander Thompson personally informed me that he was surprised to find a man of seventy years of age so strong and active. He reported to the department that the attempt to have Munro dismissed on account of his age was altogether improper, and that he was well able to carry on his work as coxswain of the life-saving crew. I would ask the minister to produce the second report which is said to have been made by Commander Thompson, so that the committee may see how he has dealt with the matter.

Mr. HAZEN: I have not that information here but I shall be glad to find out what it is. On general principles I think that no man of 70 ought to be a member of a life saving crew. I think it is absurd to say that a man of 70 can go out in the heavy storms and do the work necessary in order to rescue people on a ship in distress.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not admit that at all.

Mr. HAZEN: My right hon. friend, perhaps, is trying to rescue a ship in distress now.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): How many officers are at Cheticamp station?

Mr. HAZEN: A cockswain and a crew of seven. The cockswain receiving $75 a year and the crew smaller amounts.

Investigations into wrecks, $18,400.

Mr. LAW How is this amount expended?

Mr. HAZEN.

Mr. HAZEN: This is exactly the same amount as last year. It is expended as follows: Travelling expenses of the chief wreck commissioner, $3,500; travelling expenses of the wreck commissioner of British Columbia, $1,000; travelling expenses of witnesses, $1,000; salary of the British Columbia wreck commissioner, $1,000; stenographers' fees, $3,000; legal services, $2,000; services of nautical overseers, $1,500; services of interpreters, $200; reporting and typewriting, $200; printing and unforeseen incidentals, $1,000; expenses of preliminary enquiries, $2,000. This does not include fees which may be granted to acting wreck commissioners for which an additional sum of $1,500 may be added.

Mr. LAW: Is there a wreck commissioner for the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. HAZEN: There is no wreck commissioner for Nova Scotia. The chief examiner of masters and mates acts on preliminary enquiries and also as wreck commissioner at times. When Captain Lindsay cannot act, the chief examiner of masters and mates is called on to act without additional salary.

Mr. LAW: It seems to me there should be a commissioner in an important province like Nova Scotia. It is well known to the minister that Nova Scotia has a very rough coast, and there are many wrecks on that coast.

Mr. HAZEN: We do not seem to be crowded at all with the present staff, they are able to take care of it. I suppose that is largely because, owing to the lights and aids to navigation that have been placed there, the coast is so safe to navigation that there are very few wrecks.

Mr. LAW: I have no doubt that is the case, that after fifteen years of Liberal administration, owing to the improvements in the buoy service, wrecks have been minimized.

Expenses of schools of navigation, $8,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where have you those schools?

Mr. HAZEN: At present there are schools at Yarmouth, N.S., North Sydney, Quebec, Collingwood and Victoria. Last year the vote was the same, and our expenditure was only $970. The officer who has charge of this matter recommends that we adopt a different policy from that which has prevailed in the past. Hitherto we have depended largely on a system of lectures. But the officer reports that while that system may have a tendency to stimulate increase among fishermen and seafaring men it is almost worthless as a means of preparing seafaring men to take their certificates as masters and mates of vessels. The suggestion now is to discontinue the lecturing system and to establish schools of navigation where these men will receive such instruction in seamanship and navigation as will prepare them to qualify for masters and mates. It is also proposed to assist private navigation schools if necessary.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is the minister providing for any additional schools?

Mr. HAZEN: We are prepared, whenever it is made apparent to the department that a necessity exists for the establishment of these schools, to assist them.

Mr. SINCLAIR: But what would have to be done?

Mr. HAZEN: At Collingwood there is a gentleman who established a school himself. He says to the people: You want instruction in navigation, I am here for that purpose. He gets some assistance from the department, an annual amount to help him with his school. At Halifax, Captain Lugar, a paid official of the department, who receives a salary of $1,800, has conducted a school without any additional salary.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I suppose no successor has been appointed to Captain Lugar?

Mr. HAZEN: No. I do not think we have yet received official notice of his death, although we have seen it in the newspapers.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What steps would need to be taken to secure the establishment of a school in a small town like Canso, where there are some two thousand seafaring and fishermen engaged in the fisheries in the summer, but not very busy for a couple of months in the most severe part of the winter. They could very well attend a school if one were established in that town. I have no doubt that the minister could co-operate with the school board and the town authorities in order to get the use of the school room and such facilities. If the people there knew what was necessary to be done I have no doubt there are many places in Nova Scotia where advantage would be taken of this vote. The great trouble would be to find a properly qualified instructor. I would be glad if the department would let it be known in these little towns where they are anxious to have schools of navigation that assistance will be given by the department

Mr. HAZEN: We are trying to work out some better system than that which exists at the present time. We have officers directing their attention along that line. If in any of those towns there were a reasonable number of young men who wished to get instruction so that they could qualify for masters' or mates' certificates, we would be very glad indeed to give generous assistance. The officers of the department tell me that in the past applications have been made for the establishment of schools, and that the department helped in such cases, but they did not prove successful. A few years ago they were asked to provide an instructor for a school in Montreal. They were told that a large number of students would attend, and an instructor, a very competent man, familiar with both languages, was appointed. A good many students attended the first night, but on the third night there was not a student present, and the results were very disappointing. It is only men who have made up their mind to follow a seafaring life who attend these schools, but if in some of the small towns of Nova Scotia there were eight or ten young men who wanted instruction to enable them to follow a seafaring life, I have no doubt that out of this vote we could give assistance, and if there were co-operation with the school board, if we could get accommodation in the schools, it would help very much. We would be prepared to entertain any application along that line, and give it the most sympathetic consideration.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Would the technical school at Halifax be at liberty to apply for some assistance in the way of establishing a branch?

Mr. HAZEN: There has been correspondence with both the Prime Minister and his colleague from Halifax, I think, about the matter. We have had communications from them, and the matter is now receiving the attention of the officers of the department.

Mr. SINCLAIR: With reference to young men not attending those schools, I may say that my experience is quite different from that of the department. In Canso, a few years ago, a school was established for one winter, the head teacher of the public school being in charge of it. He was a man who knew something about navigation and could teach the theory of navigation, and the school was attended by a large number of young men during the winter months. It was very successful indeed. But the teacher removed from the place, and the instruction ceased. I suppose that the next teacher was not capable, or perhaps he did not care to take up the work. The main trouble I think is to find a suitable man to give the lessons. If the minister could discover some suitable man to go from place to place on the coast and spend a few weeks with the young fellows desirous of getting lessons on navigation he would assist greatly. Those young men cannot go to Halifax. It is impossible for them to take long journeys and to live in those expensive places, but if the instruction were brought to them it would be of great importance.

Mr. JAMESON: I entirely agree with my hon. friend from Guysborough when he says that the young men who are interested in the matter should receive some assistance in maritime instruction. As he says, they cannot afford to attend a central school at Halifax. I entirely agree with his views, and I may say that I have made representations to the minister along the same lines. I trust that the department will be able to work out some system that will be more satisfactory than the one heretofore in vogue whereby these young men in the different parts of the maritime provinces would have an opportunity of acquiring an education along the lines suggested.

Registration of shipping, $1,500.

Mr. LAW: What is that?

Mr. HAZEN: This is to cover the expense of the registration of shipping. After a careful estimate of the probable items of expenditure, such as the purchase of a new register, books, forms, certificates of registry, the officers are of opinion that $1,500 would be ample for this branch of the service this year.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $20,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The removal of an obstruction is at the risk of the party responsible for it, is it not?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that in some cases where the party has failed to remove the obstruction, the department is in duty bound to clear the channel. I suppose this vote is to provide for such contingencies.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have a case in mind. Last year on the river St. Lawrence, not far from Montreal, there was a wreck of a steamer plying between Montreal and Valleyfield, and I understand that the wreck remained in the channel for some time. Several persons perished, and the captain was practically ruined. I suppose that in a case like that the department would have to remove the obstruction?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. In that case we were unable to have the wreck removed before the close of navigation. We got into communication with people at Kingston who have a wrecking plant, but they were unable to get the plant into operation in time, and the wreck had to remain until this year. If the people responsible are not financially able to remove the obstruction, the department undertakes the removal. Twenty thousand dollars is practically the same amount as last year. Last year the total amount expended was about $11,000. There were some cases where the work was very heavy, but in those cases the parties who owned the boats were able to bear the burden.

Winter mail service, $11,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is that?

Mr. HAZEN: It is for the letter mail service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I think my hon. friend has had the pleasure of crossing over there in an open boat. There are some winters when the ice becomes so heavy that it is impossible even for the ice-breakers to get through, and people have to cross in open boats. This vote is for that service. The boats are kept in repair to convey people across, and to take the mails in the event of that condition prevailing. Of late years the expenditure on the service has been light, because the Earl Grey and the Minto are both very good ice-breakers, and have been able to maintain a service during the winter. During last winter I do not think that these small boats were required at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like the minister to consider the advisability of utilizing one of the boats, say on five or six occasions during the winter season, for the purposes of a mail service to the Magdalen islands. As he knows, the last mail packet from Pictou leaves at the end of November, or the beginning of December. I am informed by people of the Magdalen islands that at least three or four, and sometimes five trips can be made during the winter between the mainland and the islands. From December until April they are closed in, and get only such news as can be transmitted by cable, or by the Marconi wireless system. That is not satisfactory at all, when a boat could easily be sent from Georgetown to Sydney. I had occasion some years ago to speak to the captain of the Stanley and, as regards the practicability of it, he saw no item of chance at all; he said that he could make the trip very easily at certain periods of the winter. But there were strong objections taken by the department, although the captain, himself, had none. Of course, he had to obey orders. I think that my hon. friend this year, or last year, overlooked the hesitation of the department and managed to send a boat once or twice, much to the benefit of the islanders. I would like him to consider this as a permanent affair for future years.

I beg to make the same request for the people of Anticosti. I do not think you can make five or six trips, but you can make two trips there during the winter. There is a boat at present subsidized by the Post Office Department which makes one or two trips to Labrador. I would not risk that boat about Anticosti, but your ice-breakers could certainly be sent to the island. Anticosti has been settled of late by Mr. Menier, a very wealthy Frenchman, who has acquired that island. There is a population of nearly eight hundred very thrifty and industrious people. The island is like a European park. There is at Ellis bay, a beautiful castle, the residence of Mr. Menier himself. He has established splendid roads all through the island. There is a magnificent lobster and salmon canning industry and he is exploiting the lumber on a scientific basis as they do in France and Germany. The settlers are all Canadians, they are not foreigners. He has built a handsome cottage for each family. There is also a savings bank, a church and an hospital with the most modern equipment, which I visited some years ago. In fact, it is an ideal life for the settlers who are there. Quebec has become quite a feeder for Anticosti. The traffic between Quebec and Anticosti has increased by leaps and bounds during the last ten years. Therefore, Mr. Menier is entitled to fair and generous treatment from our Government. He has established a small Decauville railway on the island and he has built, at his own expense, large deep-water piers which are utilized by the Government steamers free of any charge.

Mr. MARCIL: One mile long.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He has provided a number of lighthouses, in fact he is a public benefactor and I am told that he has offered the Government of Canada the opportunity of fortifying some points on the island. There were fears expressed some years ago that such a large portion of our territory might pass to a foreign power, but Lord Grey, our former Governor General, visited the island, was received by Mr. Menier, and after that he was very well pleased with the genial foreigner. Under these circumstances, I would like my hon. friend to consider the possibility of sending twice during the winter at least one of the Government steamers for the carrying of the mails. It is an important point in the river St. Lawrence and one which has attracted the attention of Europeans of late years. Mr. Menier has brought very many of his friends from Europe and, coming to Anticosti they have been struck with our country—some have already invested a good deal of money in western Canada. As you know, Mr. Menier is the 'chocolate king,' he is one of the wealthiest men in Europe. A brother of his is one of the most influential public men in France, and the Dominion Government would be doing good business by encouraging him in the work which he is carrying on at Anticosti. Canada needs such good friends in Europe and France particularly.

Mr. MARCIL: I am very glad to be able to substantiate what my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has said regarding the importance of Anticosti island. It is largely peopled by settlers from the Gaspésian peninsula, Chicoutimi and Saguenay. The Montreal Board of Trade, realizing the importance of the island are to visit it in June next when a large excursion party is going down on one of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company's boats. There is no regular boat calling at the island. There is no difficulty in carrying out the suggestion of my hon. friend from Rouville, as the service could be performed by the ice-breakers which go to Seven islands, only a few miles from Anticosti. I would be glad if some measures were taken to bring Anticosti more into touch with the political life of Canada. Mr. Menier is a great Frenchman, he has also big ideas and he is the benefactor of those who come in contact with him. The island, though belonging to the constituency of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, has remained somewhat out of the political life of the province. I understand that a poll is hardly ever opened there. Surely it would be possible for the minister to make an arrangement, either in connection with the lighthouse service or in connection with the subsidized steamers calling on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, for a limited service connecting with the island of Anticosti. One of the most notable things that Mr. Menier did in the early days of his occupation of the island of Anticosti was to abolish the mosquito. Mosquitoes in the earlier days infested the island to a great extent. He drained out the swamps, took the gravel excavated from those drains and built a magnificent system of macadamized roads all over the island, and at the same time did away with the mosquitoes. He erected just next to his magnificent residence, a statute to Gamache, one of the earlier smugglers on the lower St. Lawrence, about whom a great many folk lore stories have been told. The island ,of Anticosti is a very interesting place, and I am sure that the Government would be well advised if they brought the island into closer touch with the people of the St. Lawrence and of Canada generally. Mr. Menier has shown himself well disposed to submit to our laws. There is a customs agent on the island. Mr. Menier has telephone and telegraphic services. He has always been glad to entertain the Governor General and ministers who have gone down to see him. No British fleet ever passes without visiting the island. Admiral Blake, some years ago, went there to inquire into the story published by the New York Herald that Anticosti had been acquired by France for the purpose of fortifying it and making it a stronghold to be used for the recovery of Quebec. Admiral Blake went over and found that what was supposed to be the magazine was full of potatoes. On the square that Mr. Menier had opened in the middle of the town, he found one of the old guns which had been put into proper shape. The island is a most interesting place, and I am sure that the minister would be doing a public service if he could assist Mr. Menier in bringing the people of the island into more general touch with the people of the St. Lawrence and of Canada generally.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In the cellar of the Gouverneur—really the superintendent—my hon. friend will find excellent French wines; but, of course, he is not interested in that if he is a teetotaler.

Mr. HAZEN: Last winter we sent the Montcalm twice to Anticosti. In regard to the Magdalen Islands, during the winter of 1911-12, we were able to send the Stanley there on two occasions. Last year we were able to send her only once, because she was laid up a long time for repairs. When we have Canadians living under such conditions as they do in Anticosti and the Magdalen Islands, we ought to do all we can to make their lives endurable and to keep them in touch with the outside world. With the boats we have available at present, it is impossible to say whether we can have regular trips during the summer months. As soon as the car ferry is established between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, with the Lady Grey and the Minto, we hope to be able to give better service to Anticosti and the Magdalen Islands than we have been able to do in the past. My hon. friends, the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) and the member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), have drawn such alluring pictures of Anticosti that I think I shall have to take a trip there during the coming summer.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I shall give you the name of the gouverneur of Anticosti. The word gouverneur has not the same meaning as governor. Gouverneur in the present instance means the superintendent. The name has caused some people to think that Anticosti is held by the French. The name of the gouverneur is Mr. Martin Zédé. He is a most charming official; all his friends are Canadians, and my hon. friend will enjoy true French hospitality if he goes to Anticosti.

Inspection of live stock shipment, $5,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Does that come under the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. HAZEN: The duties of these inspectors are to inspect the cattle ships for the purpose of seeing that they are fit for the shipment of cattle and that the cattle have sufficient accommodation.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Where is the inspecting done?

Mr. HAZEN: Almost entirely at Montreal. It used to be done at St. John, but there is hardly any necessity for inspection there now.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does my hon. friend expect that Canadian cattle will ever pass at Liverpool without the stigma which England has put upon them? I have a motion on the Order Paper which unfortunately has not been reached, asking for the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle. Now that the Government is generous by voting $35,000,000 to the Admiralty, do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that my good friend should ask the British authorities to remove the embargo on our cattle? It is admitted by everyone—and by no better authority than Sir Charles Tupper—that this is a libel against Canadian cattle.

Mr. HAZEN: I think the embargo is only a measure of protection. The matter, however, is one which is under the Department of Agriculture. When the estimates of that department are taken up, my hon. friend will get more satisfaction than I am able to give him.

To continue the subsidy for wrecking plants in Quebec, Maritime provinces and British Columbia, $45,000.

Mr. LAW: Would the minister give us a memorandum of those?

Mr. HAZEN: Up to the past year this vote was always $30,000—$10,000 for wrecking plants in British Columbia, $10,000 for wrecking plants with headquarters at Quebec, and $10,000 for wrecking plants in the maritime provinces. These wrecking plants have been owned by the Dominion Coal Company at Sydney. Last year Mr. Davy, who had the contract at Quebec, refused to renew it, stating that, even with the subsidy of $10,000, he was losing money, because there had been so few wrecks on the St. Lawrence river for the past three or four years. He had to keep a tug boat equipped with pumps and wrecking apparatus, with its fires constantly banked, a large schooner and men to man them. The shipping interests felt that there must be a wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence. Therefore a company was formed by the different steamship interests with whom we made a contract. They bound themselves to equip their tug boat with wireless telegraphy, as had not been the case with Davy. In consideration of their doing that, it was agreed that they should be allowed, within a certain limit of space on the river, to do certain work in the way of towing of ships, because, with their wireless apparatus, if a wreck occurred, they could be notified and get to the scene of the wreck almost as quickly as if they were lying at Quebec. They refused to take up the work at $10,000, and we agreed to give them $25,000. There was an agreement in the contract that, after they paid on their equipment a valuation that was fixed—I think it was six per cent—the balance of the profits, if they had any, were to be divided between the Government and the company. Last year, as hon. gentlemen know, there were a number of wrecks; and the result is that, while we paid the company $25,000, there had been paid back into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada about $12,500 as the share of the Government in the partnership into which they entered. The arrangement will work out very well. Everyone will admit the necessity of having a wrecking plant, and it seems impossible to have a wrecking plant without aid from the Government.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is recommended by the shipping interests?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. They realize they must have a wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. LAW: I have no objection to the vote, but I think the western part of Nova Scotia should have one of those plants.

Mr. HAZEN: It has been put forward every now and then that the wrecking plant ought to be in the Maritime provinces, so far as the winter months are concerned, at some point nearer to the bay of Fundy and the south shore of Nova Scotia.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Somewhere around St. John.

Mr. HAZEN: No, I think the matter can be met by the arrangement that will be made for this year by having that plant remain at Sydney during the Summer months, and then they are going to have some of their plant at Halifax or some point west of there, where they will be available near the bay of Fundy during the winter.

Mr. LAW: Are the parties having the contract allowed to charge anything for salvage?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. If they were not allowed to do that, the amount the department would have to pay would be increased. The rates are of course subject to our approval.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Before my hon. friend proceeds to another item, I should like to speak about a matter which perhaps is not germane to this. This patrol which was organized in the north Atlantic was with a view to preventing wrecks and accidents?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Could the hon. minister enlighten me? I saw in the London Times and the London Daily Chronicle the statement that something had been deficient about this patrol in the Atlantic. Was the deficiency in the Canadian Government or the British Government?

Mr. HAZEN: In the British Government.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was it, in two words?

Mr. HAZEN: The difficulty, I think, was that the boat sent out by the British Board of Trade had aboard a Marconi apparatus whose range was not sufficient.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And so, it could not communicate with the other vessels?

Mr. HAZEN: That was the trouble.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As I recollect it, there was a tripartite partnership among the Canadian Government, the British Government and the United States Government, each having a boat; was that it?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Then, each had a zone to patrol?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The British Government had a zone, and I think the American Government and the Canadian Government each had its zone.

Mr. HAZEN: No. We had no arrangement with the United States Government at all. I know nothing about that except what appeared in the newspapers. We undertook a zone as far as Cape Race. We will get the information from there.

Mr. BOULAY: (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I fully concur in the remarks just made by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), with respect to establishing salvage stations in the region of the gulf, in order to bring efficient relief to ships in peril. Those stations should be established at Gaspé or at Rimouski. Either of those two ports would be a good centre where to establish one of those stations which could send out some help to ships in distress.

I think this matter has been too much neglected in the past and that the Government should do something in this direction.

As to the remarks made by the hon. member for Rouville with respect to carrying the mails over to Magdelen Islands, I think that they are very appropriate. Those people are deprived of means to communicate with the mainland during all the winter and the Government would be doing good work by granting them a better service with respect to carrying the mails.

As far as naval schools are concerned, I am glad to hear from the minister himself that he is ready to help some of the students who would like to become conversant with matters pertaining to navigation. In our counties which are located along the sea, like Rimouski, Gaspé and Bonaventure, we have numbers of fishermen, of excellent seamen, and what they lack and what they want in order to improve in their art is naval schools.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have before me now the London Times, which says that the Scotia, the ship selected by the Merchant Shipping Advisory Committee, was too slow, and was not provided with a Marconi apparatus.

Ocean and river service—unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was this for?

Mr. HAZEN: This is always voted. Now and then something arises in the department not covered by any other vote, and this money is to provide in such cases. Last year the total expenditure under this vote was only $175.

Mr. KYTE: I request the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to bring this evening the papers in connection with the cases of Michael O'Brien, keeper of light at Bear Island; William A. Duan, keeper of light at Green Island; Marin Burke, keeper of light at River Bourgeois; Bartholomew Boudrot, keeper of light at Poulamand; all in Richmond county. I desire to say a few words with respect to these cases when the committee resumes.

Mr. HAZEN: We will go on with this at eight o'clock.

Mr. KYTE: The lighthouse service?

Mr. HAZEN: No, we will continue right along down the page taking the items one by one. There are only three items between the one we shall next take up and the one to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish): When the salaries of fishery officers are under discussion, I wish to have the minister ready if I decide to bring up the case of A. R. McAdam, fishery officer at Malignant Cove. I am not sure, having heard the minister's explanations—or rather refusals of explanations—of dismissals, that I shall go on with this case. I have about come to the conclusion that the political virtue I have ascribed to hon. gentleman, which I thought existed in this benevolent-looking man and smooth-talking minister, as a matter of fact does not exist in him. It comes down to this—he has made up his mind that he will be like his associates and will fire any Grit who is in office. On that account, I may not bring the matter up at all.

Mr. HAZEN: I am sorry to have disappointed my hon. friend.

Mr. LAW: I expect to call the attention of the minister to the dismissal of Captain Norman L. Trefry, shipmaster at Yarmouth, and Dr. Carl A. Webster, Port Physician at Yarmouth.

Mr. HENDERSON: Before the committee rises for the six o'clock recess, I wish to say a word. I have been absolutely disgusted with the corruption that goes on in Nova Scotia and the call there has been for so many dismissals. What kind of people are they? In my county there has not been a dismissal of an officer for fifteen or twenty years. We observe the law there in election time; we do what is right; there is no cause for dismissals. I cannot but think that if hon. gentlemen would serve their constituents fairly, they would not air their grievances as much as they have been doing. The reputation of the whole province of Nova Scotia is being destroyed. I had the idea that Nova Scotians were respectable people, law-abiding people. But it turns out, from one thing after another, that there is hardly a man in the province but is guilty of something in connection with elections. I really think that hon. gentlemen would be doing a favour to their province if they would drop this miserable talk about dismissals and bringing to the notice of the whole country the actions of the people of that province. On the whole, however, I cannot believe the people are half as bad as they are represented. I have too much respect for them to think otherwise. To my mind the time has come when this talk about dismissals can very well be dropped, at anyrate for this session.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he make that suggestion to the minister.

At six o'clock, House resumed and then took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GLENGARRY AND STORMONT RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 197, to incorporate the Glengarry and Stormont

Railway Company.—Mr. Alguire. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 10—hotels and parks:

Mr. LANCASTER: There is a slight amendment to section 10. As the Bill came from the Senate, this section was not the standard clause for the purpose, and we have amended it by inserting a few words to make it the model clause for the purpose intended.

On section 15—agreements with other companies:

Mr. LANCASTER: There is an amendment to this section which is of no serious significance. It simply allows the company to amalgamate with the two other railway lines mentioned, the Canadian Northern Ontario, and the Canadian Northern Quebec.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

BURRARD, WESTMINSTER BOUNDARY RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION. COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 203, respecting the Burrard, Westminster Boundary Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. Taylor. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 1—extension of time:

Mr. LANCASTER: There are several amendments to the Bill. Section 1 was defective in improperly stating that the company were to commence the construction of railways authorized by three statutes, whilst the last-named statute is merely a renewal of the other two. We struck out of section 1 of the Bill, after the figures 1909, in line 10, the words: 'In chapter 50 of the statutes of 1911,' because that statute does not confer any authority upon the railways; it is simply a formal extension of time.

On section 3—increase of issue of securities.

Mr. LANCASTER: We insert after clause 3 this section as section 4:

Section 3 of chapter 56 of the statutes of 1909 is amended by inserting after '1907' in line 2 thereof, the words 'and amendments thereto.'

By section 3, as it came from the Senate, it will be observed that the statute was amended by substituting as a limitation of the issue of securities, the word 'forty' for the word 'thirty.' We found that the statutes of 1909, applying to an additional part of their road, needed to be amended so as to make the Act uniform throughout. The promoters of the Bill seemed to think that by keeping the Bill in its original form the words of the section would cover the whole line. That, however, would be a matter of doubtful expression, and to make it clear we added the section I have quoted.

On section 5—chap. 68, statutes of 1907 amended:

Mr. LANCASTER: We added section 5 to the Bill, which is in these words:

Paragraph 'e' of section 12 of chapter 68 of the statutes of 1907 is amended by inserting after 'grounds' on line 1 thereof the words 'with the approval expressed by by-law, of the municipality having jurisdiction over the place in which such parks and pleasure grounds are situated and upon terms to be agreed upon with such municipality.'

In 1907 a clause was inserted in the statute which is not the present policy of this Parliament; it did not restrict the company to getting the consent of the municipality to use its parks and pleasure grounds. As they are asking for an extension of time, we have adopted our usual rule this year, providing that they must obtain the consent of the municipalities, as any incorporated company would be obliged to do.

On section 6—electric power:

Mr. LANCASTER: This is a new section, as follows:

In so far as the company has the right to acquire electric or other power or energy which may be transmitted and delivered to any place in the municipalities through which the railway or works have been constructed, and to receive, transform, transmit, distribute and supply such electric power or energy in any form and to dispose of the surplus thereof, and to collect rates and charges therefor, the company may, subject to the provisions of section 247 of the Railway Act, continue to so acquire such electric power or energy, but not by expropriation; but no such rate or charge shall be demanded or taken for such electric power or energy until the same has been approved of by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, which may also revise such rates and charges.

On section 7—chapter 68, statutes of 1907 amended:

Mr. LANCASTER: The present rights of the company with regard to telegraph poles, electric power, and so on, along the railways, does not contain a limitation as to selling and disposing of them for use within the municipality without the consent expressed by by-law, of such municipality. We have inserted this section in order to make the required provision in this regard.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

WINNIPEG WATER SUPPLY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 220, to enable the city of Winnipeg to get water outside the province of Manitoba.—Mr. Bradbury. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 1—power to get water outside of Manitoba:

Mr. ROGERS: This is a Bill prepared by Judge Robson, now Utilities Commissioner for the province of Manitoba, for the purpose of taking the water from Shoal lake, a portion of which is within the province of Manitoba and a portion of which is within the province of Ontario. By reason of the fact that the lake is situated in both provinces it was found necessary to have this Bill. A similar Bill relating to the city of Ottawa was passed by this House the other day. The Bill has been very carefully prepared, it was presented to the Senate by Senator Young and passed by that House. It has passed the Private Bills Committee of this House. The city of Winnipeg has obtained its domestic water supply from artesian wells, but these have not been found sufficient for a great and growing city and it is now desired to bring water from this lake. There is no objection from the Government of Ontario.

On section 7—application of sections of Railway Act:

Mr. OLIVER: What are these provisions of the Railway Act?

Mr. AIKINS: They relate to the expropriation of land through which the conduit may be carried. The purpose is to modify the Railway Act to such an extent as to make it applicable. So instead of Minister of Railways it says Minister of Public Works. The expropriation which is provided for of course calls for compensation.

Mr. OLIVER: It would seem to me that the legislation of this Parliament would hardly be sufficient under the circumstances.

Mr. AIKINS: Under the British North America Act any work extending from one province into another or connecting two provinces necessarily comes within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. The works authorized by this Act refer specifically to taking water from Ontario.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is not the kind of work that is contemplated by the British North America Act. I am not objecting to the Bill, but merely pointing out that this is a case where we may be taking the property which belongs to the province of Ontario, or the property of some individual. I submit that the Government of the province of Ontario should be consulted in some way as to this Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. ROGERS: The province of Ontario had due notice of this Bill, and it has been before the Senate and advertised in a public way for some weeks. I know that the Government of the province of Ontario have had full knowledge of it, and there is no objection from any quarter. This lake is in an outlying district, and the Bill cannot affect or disturb anybody.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister's statement does not cure the point of law I am making. I do not know what view the Government or the people of Ontario may take of it, but the water of that lake is as much the property of Ontario as part of a forest or a deposit of minerals would be.

Mr. BRADBURY: There seems to be some misunderstanding. This Bill does not provide for the taking of water from any special place. It provides for getting water from waters that are under the control of the Parliament of Canada. It does not provide for going into Ontario or any other province. If they do go into Ontario and take water, they will certainly have to make an arrangement with the Ontario Government. This Bill is only to give the city of Winnipeg power to take such waters as are under the control of the Parliament of Canada; it does not specify any lake.

Mr. CARVELL: Does it provide for expropriation?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 202, respecting the Toronto Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Currie.

Bill No. 166, for the relief of Archie Blaustein.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 205, for the relief of Mary Arabella Young.—Mr. Schaffner.

METROPOLITAN MORTGAGE AND LOAN CORPORATION.

Consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 92, to incorporate the Metropolitan Mortgage and Loan Corporation—Mr. Meighen.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the amendment?

Mr. SPEAKER: Clause 32 was struck out of the Bill:

The company may have agencies in any places outside of Canada for the registration and transfer of debentures or other stock and for the transaction of any other business of the company.

And the following was substituted:

32. Tranfers of debenture stock may be left with such agent or agents in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or elsewhere, as the company appoints for that purpose, for transmission to the company's head office for registration.

Amendment read the second time and agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 214, respecting the Hudson Bay Insurance Company—Mr. Knowles.

Bill No. 215, to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Mackenzie—Mr. Proulx.

Bill No. 216, to incorporate the Ruthenian Greek Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Canada—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 218, respecting the Empire Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 217, to incorporate The Canadian Northwestern Railway Company—Mr. McKay.

Bill No. 219, respecting the Casualty Company of Canada—Sir Edmund Osler.

Bill No. 223, to vest in the Van Buren Bridge Company the charter rights of the Restigouche and Western Railway Company, to construct and maintain a railway bridge over the St. John river—Mr. Carvell.

Bill No. 227, respecting the Western Canada Accident and Guarantee Insurance Company—Mr. Macdonell.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

River St. Lawrence ship channel, $894,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Please explain this item.

Mr. HAZEN: This item is for the maintenance and operating of the dredging fleet. It is made up as follows:

6 elevator dredges with tugs at $45,000..	$270,000
1 new steel elevator rock dredge or tug	45,000
1 new steel elevator rock dredge with tug under construction (expected to be ready for next season)	45,000
1 new self-propelling steel elevator dredge with tug (being built by contract) half season..	25,000
1 hydraulic dredge with two tugs	118,000
2 suction hopper dredges, 1 tug and 1 self-propelling hopper barge.... ..	150,000
2 dipper dredges with tugs at $40,000..	80,000
2 inspection and sweeping tugs at $18,000..	36,000
2 stone lifters and 1 floating shop.. ..	15,000
1 rock cutter..	10,000
Fleet generally: Amount for outfitting, docking and providing of extra parts for dredging fleet, including the necessary improvements to fleet..	100,000

The increases over last year art accounted for by the fact that we expect there will be two more tugs in commission.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is this under the direction of the department or of the harbour commission?

Mr. HAZEN: It is under the direction of the department. The engineer in charge is Mr. Forneret.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I should like my hon. friend to give me some data as regards the dredging in the sections between Montreal and Quebec and below Quebec.

Mr. HAZEN: It is estimated that the total number of cubic yards to be removed in the north channel below Quebec, to obtain a channel thirty-five feet in depth at extreme low tide and 1,000 feet in width, amounts to 16,153,173 cubic yards. Of this amount 2,211,000 cubic yards have been dredged up to September 28, 1912, there remaining 13,942,173 cubic yards yet to be dredged. With the present plant consisting of the dredges, Beaujeau (No. 8) and Galveston (No. 9), it will take about eight months more to complete the work. As the shipping interests are very anxious that the work should be completed in a shorter time, it will be necessary to acquire an additional powerful dredge to expedite the work. We are asking for an appropriation for one.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As long as my hon. friend gets the valuable services of Mr. Forneret, the country is safe in his hands. He is well informed and he gives general satisfaction to the public. In connection with this channel below Quebec, do the Government intend to dredge what is called the north channel? There is the usual channel which is followed by the pilots at present, but for many years I have heard from captains and pilots that the north channel along the north coast of the river St. Lawrence is much preferable to the other.

Mr. HAZEN: We intend to dredge that and we are dredging it. We have heard from shipping people, from our engineers and others, that the right thing is to dredge that north channel, because it makes a much safer approach. It is the north channel down to Quebec and along the north shore of Grosse Isle. Some 2,000,000 odd cubic yards have been removed, and about fourteen million cubic yards remain to be dredged. That is what the extra dredge is required for.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about the Traverse? Is there anything new this year?

Mr. HAZEN: We have a new light ship at Traverse, which is one of the most dangerous spots in the river below Quebec.

Lighthouse and coast service— salaries and allowance to lightkeepers, $450,000.

Mr. KYTE: I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to certain dismissals in the lighthouse service made in the county of Richmond during the last year. Mr. Duchemin, the gentleman entrusted with making recommendations for dismissals, has become emboldened no doubt by the encouragement he receives from the minister. From time to time during the present session, as well as during the last session the attention of the House has been called to the absolutely unfair and unjustifiable recommendations which have been made by Mr. Duchemin for the dismissal of public officers throughout the province of Nova Scotia. As I have said, owing to the defence made for him on the floor of this House by the ministers and their supporters, he is keeping the even tenor of his way, and is becoming less and less disposed to observe the ordinary rules and principles of fair play which characterizes the lowest and most inferior courts in the land. I have here the papers with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Michael O'Brien, keeper of the light at Bear island. Mr. O'Brien received notice to appear before Mr. Duchemin to answer to the charge of political partisanship, and that notice is as follows:

Mr. Michael O'Brien,
Bear Island, N.S.

I beg to notify you that I have been instructed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to investigate the charge of political partisanship, that has been preferred against you, for acts committed while you were in the employ of the Dominion Government, in the capacity of lightkeeper.

The investigation will be held in Edward Malcolm's house, at Port Malcolm, N.S., on Thursday the 20th day of February, 1912, at two o'clock in the afternoon, when you are requested to be present, and to have any witnesses there who can testify in your behalf.

Dated, Sydney, N.S., the 17th day of February, 1913.

H. P. Duchemin.
Commissioner of Inquiry.

This notice, it will be observed, requested the attendance of Mr. O'Brien at Port Malcolm for the purpose of answering the charge. But instead of Mr. Duchemin holding the court at Port Malcolm upon the day fixed by him, he held court eight miles away in another county, and of the holding of that court Mr. O'Brien had no notice. Yet Mr. Duchemin proceeded to investigate the charges as if Mr. O'Brien had been properly summoned before him. I have here the affidavit of Mr. O'Brien setting forth the facts:

I, Michael O'Brien, of Bear Island, in the county of Richmond, and province of Nova Scotia, lightkeeper, do solemnly declare that:

1. The paper writing hereto annexed marked 'A' was not received by me until about the hour of four o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday the 22nd day of February, 1913——

That is the notice calling upon Mr. O'Brien to appear before the commissioner for investigation:

——and this was the first and only notice I ever received that any charge of political partisanship had been preferred against me, or that any investigation would be held in Edward Malcolm's house at Port Malcolm or elsewhere at which I was requested to be present or in which I was interested; but about two o'clock on Saturday afternoon of the 22nd day of February 1913, I heard it rumoured at Port Malcolm that such an investigation was being held that afternoon at the Farquhar house in Port Hawkesbury, but I had no official notice or information at any time that such investigation was being held at said Farquhar house, it was impossible for me to get there in time to defend myself against the charge.

2. On Saturday the first day of March, 1913, I was told that there had been an investigation held or some evidence taken against me by Mr. Duchemin on the 27th day of February, 1913, at the Farquhar House in Port Hawkesbury; but I had no official notice or information at any time previous to said first day of March, 1913, that such investigation would be held or evidence would be taken on said 27th day of February, 1913, or at any time.

3. Since my appointment as lightkeeper I have not committed any act of political partisanship; and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidenec Act, 1893.

Michael O'Brien.

Declared before me at Port Hawkesbury, in the county of Inverness and province of Nova Scotia this 12th day of March, A.D. 1913.

G. Ormond Forsyth, a notary public in and for the province of Nova Scotia.

I have here the record of the hearing and dismissal which I obtained from the Marine and Fisheries Department. On the file there are letters as follows:

Port Malcolm,
January 12, 1912.

Hon. F. D. Monk.—

Dear Sir:—

As I am an old Tory for the last thirty years and I have stood by the party when they have lost and when they have won, and I think that the party that I have stood by should help me out, so I would like for you to use your influence in my behalf in procuring me the keeping of the lighthouse on Bear Island Point, now kept by a young man by the name of Michael O'Brien a strong Liberal as he worked hard for his party at the last election. I applied for the lighthouse when it was under construction some six years ago but as I was not of the party my application was not looked at. Hoping you will do the best you can for me, and that you are enjoying good health and that you may enjoy a prosperous New Year, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) W. J. Malcolm,
Port Malcolm, Richmond Co., C.B.

Ottawa, January 23, 1913.

Dear Sir:—

Your undated letter addressed to the Hon. Mr. Monk, asking that you be given the office of keeping the lighthouse at Bear Island Point, has been transferred to me by the Minister of Public Works.

In reply I beg to say I am not aware of a vacancy existing at this Point at the present time, nor have any charges been preferred against the present keeper. I will, however, have your name noted for further consideration.

Yours truly,

W. J. Malcolm, Esq.,
Port Malcolm,
Richmond, Co., C.B.

Then follows another letter from Mr. Malcolm:

Port Malcolm, Jan. 29, 1912.

J. D. Hazen.

Honourable Sir,—Your letter of January 23 is at hand, with the thanks for recognizing my application. I beg to say that the present lightkeeper is a young unmarried man and a strong supporter of the Laurier Government as he worked hard for that party on the 21st of September and, as you are aware, Hon. G. W. Kyte was elected, and it was through his influence that he got the keeping of the light. And, as I am the oldest Tory in this end of the section and have never voted any other way, nor my father before me, and my left arm is disabled, I concluded to make an application to the department for the office, for I feel convinced that the Conservatives will be in power for quite a number of years. Hoping that you may enjoy a properous New Year and many of them.

I remain, Hon. Sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. J. Malcolm,
Port Malcolm, Richmond county, Cape Breton.

Mr. Malcolm is entirely mistaken as to the time Mr. O'Brien was appointed lightkeeper. He was not appointed on my recommendation, but was given the light several years before I became the representative of the county. Here is a letter from Mr. Gillies:

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—A complaint has been lodged with me against Michael O'Brien the keeper of the Bear Island lighthouse for political partizanship at the recent election. The complainants are Mr. W. J. Malcolm and Michael Morgan both living near Bear Island and who state that they are prepared to fully prove the charges. Besides themselves they give the names of other witnesses and I would respectfully ask that this matter be immediately referred to Commissioner Duchemin for investigation.

Yours very truly,
J. A. Gillies.

To that letter the following reply was sent:

30th December, 1912.

Sir,—I enclose copy of a letter from Mr. J. A. Gillies, barrister, Sydney, N.S., addressed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in which charges of political partisanship are preferred against Michael O'Brien, keeper of the light on Bear Island, Richmond county, N.S.

I have to request you to inquire into this matter and report thereon for the information of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) A. Johnston.

This is a letter from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to Mr. Gillies, dated December 30, 1912:

30th December, 1912.

Dear Sir,—I have yours of the 21st instant, in which charges of political partisanship are preferred against Michael O'Brien, keeper of the light on Bear Island, Richmond county, N.S.

This matter has been referred to commissioner Duchemin for investigation.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) J. D. Hazen.

I pointed out that Mr. O'Brien was summoned to appear before Mr .Duchemin to answer to the charge of political partisanship at Port Malcolm, in the county of Richmond, on February 20, 1913. Mr. O'Brien did not receive his notice until February 22, 1913, and, in addition to his not receiving notice in time to appear before Mr. Duchemin, the extraordinary feature of the matter is that Mr. Duchemin changed the place where the investigation was to have been held, and where O'Brien was notified to appear, to Port Hawkesbury, a point eight miles distant from Port Malcolm, and the investigation was there held by Mr. Duchemin without giving O'Brien an opportunity to appear, because O'Brien received no notice to appear at that place. I have before me the report which was sent by Mr. Duchemin to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, upon which Mr. O'Brien was dismissed. In the earlier period of Mr. Duchemin's investigation of these charges, he always forwarded a copy of the evidence which was taken before him to the several departments which had instructed him to hold the investigations, and when the papers were moved for, not only Mr. Duchemin's report, but the whole of the evidence was available. It would appear, however, that Mr. Duchemin has profited by experience, and he is not now forwarding copies of the evidence upon which he bases his report for dismissals. It would be perfectly obvious, upon a comparison of Mr. Duchemin's findings with the evidence upon which he based them, that his recommendations had not been justified by the evidence. Mr. Duchemin, therefore, has not recently been forwarding the evidence at all, so that persons interested in ascertaining whether or not the dismissals are justified by the evidence have to be satisfied with Mr. Duchemin's report and his summary of the evidence. Here is a copy of Mr. Duchemin's report with regard to this inquiry:

Sydney, March 3, 1913.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, M.P.,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Re Michael O'Brien, lightkeeper, Bear Island, Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir,—On the 22nd ult., I took evidence at Port Hawkesbury in the matter of the charges of partisanship against Michael O'Brien, lightkeeper of Bear Island, in the county of Richmond, N.S.

It must be borne in mind that O'Brien was summoned to appear before Duchemin at Port Malcolm, and Mr. Duchemin commences his report by stating that he held the investigation at Port Hawkesbury. He says:

Mr. O'Brien was duly notified of the time and place of his investigation, but he did not appear thereat.

If the notice had been lost, or if Mr. O'Brien had been unable to produce it, I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen sitting on the other side of the House would be fortified with a declaration from Duchemin or from somebody else that Mr. O'Brien had been summoned to appear before him at Port Hawkesbury, but in view of the original notice signed by Mr. Duchemin, which I have read to the committee, the proof is here that O'Brien had been notified to appear at Port Malcolm. He says further:

Michael Morgan, who is a fisherman and farmer living at Bear Island, testified that he has known Michael O'Brien for the past thirty-three years. He stated that in the Dominion election of 1908, on nomination day, Mr. O'Brien took the only boat there was belonging to the lighthouse at Bear Island, and went to Arichat to attend nomination proceedings. Witness stated that he was away for the day, and night, and was unduly detained by a gale of wind which prevented him from returning in the boat which he had taken with him. He returned to Bear Island by the steamer Percy Cann. Witness was with Mr. O'Brien during the period referred to. In the provincial elections in June, 1911, witness was agent in the poll at Port Malcolm for Mr. McVicar, one of the Conservative candidates for Richmond county. Mr. O'Brien was a voter in that poll. Witness stated that he voted in the poll, and gave the following account of Mr. O'Brien's conduct on that occasion: 'He came into the booth, and it was very evident from the way he acted that he was angry. He stood up by the presiding officer, and told him he was one of the officials in the Government employ, and that he wanted the presiding officer to mark his ballot for him, and he openly called out the name of the candidate he wished to vote for. Mr. O'Brien can read and write. Robert Malcolm was poll clerk, and he made an entry in the book of how Mr. O'Brien voted. Robert Proctor was presiding officer. He did not want to mark the ballot for Mr. O'Brien, as he did not think it was legal. Mr. O'Brien insisted, and at last the presiding officer marked the ballot for him, and the entry was made in the poll book by the clerk.

Margaret Malcolm testified that on the day of the provincial election in June, 1911, Michael O'Brien passed along the road, opposite her house, going towards the polling booth at Robt. Proctor's. One Alex. Malcolm, a neighbour of Mrs. Malcolm's, went to his gate, and asked Mr. O'Brien how the election was going. Mr. O'Brien thereupon used some strong language with regard to the Conservatives. He said: 'When the Tories were in before, they did us no good, and if they get in now they'll ruin us. Certainly the Liberals will go in.'

From the evidence given by the witnesses above referred to, I beg to submit the following findings:

It is significant that in his report Mr. Duchemin does not furnish the evidence, but he leaves it to be inferred, from the language of his report, that the words used by O'Brien justified his dismissal.

According to witness, he said. When the Tories were in before, they did us no good, and if they get in now they'll ruin us. Certainly the Liberals will go in.

From the evidence given by the witnesses above referred to, I beg to submit the following findings.

There you have the whole of the evidence, according to Mr. Duchemin's report. He says that O'Brien went to the nomination proceedings at Arichat, in common with a great many other people on both sides of politics. He says that O'Brien went to the polling booth to vote, and asked the presiding officer to mark his ballot, and that he stated that the Liberals would get in. Upon this report, Mr. Duchemin finds as follows:

1. Michael O'Brien left Bear Island and took away the only boat belonging to the lighthouse, and went down to Arichat and attended nomination proceedings, being absent for a day and night from his lighthouse.

2. On the day of the provincial election, held in June 1911, Mr. O'Brien, although a perfectly literate voter, called out in the polling booth the name of the candidate for whom he intended to vote, and insisted upon the presiding officer openly marking his ballot for him, stating that he was claiming to have this done, because he was a Government official.

3. Mr. O'Brien used offensive partisan language on election day in the presence of Mr. Alex Malcolm, a voter at Port Malcolm.

4. Mr. O'Brien has thus offended against the rule of the department prohibiting employees from taking part in elections, and has also been guilty of offensive partisanship.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. P. Duchemin,
Commissioner of Inquiry.

Upon that report, the following Order in Council was passed:

Certified copy of a report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Royal Highness the Governor General on the 19th March, 1913.

The Committee of the Privy Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, advise that the Order in Council of 7th December, 1906, appointed Michael O'Brien keeper of the light on Bear Island, Nova Scotia, be cancelled and the services of Mr. O'Brien dispensed with owing to political partisanship, to take effect from the time he is relieved from duty.

(Sgd.) Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The following letter was written by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to Mr. J. A. Gillies.

March 25, 1913.

Dear Sir:—

Referring to charges of political partisanship made against Mr. Michael O'Brien, lightkeeper, Bear Island, I beg to inform you that I find that these charges have been sustained.

Would you please be good enough to forward me the name of a suitable successor to Mr. O'Brien, having him fill in and supply the certificates required by the attached form.

The salary allowed at this station is $320. per annum, rising by annual increments of $15 to a maximum of $380 with an allowance of $25 per annum for the operation of a hand fog horn.

For your information I may state that one, Mr. W. J. Malcolm, Port Malcolm, Richmond county, has applied for the keepership of this light.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) J. D. Hazen.

J. A. Gillies, Esq.,
Barrister, etc.,
Sydney, N.S.

Mr. W. J. Malcolm was thereupon appointed keeper of the light. Apart altogether from the circumstance as to whether or not the evidence given by the witnesses at the investigation was sufficient to justify Mr. O'Brien's removal from office, there is the fact that Mr. O'Brien had no notice whatever of any charges having been made against him or of any intended investigation until two days after the date of that inquiry. There is the second fact that Mr. Duchemin changed the place where the inquiry was to be held and held it at a point eight miles distant from Port Malcolm. So that Mr. O'Brien had not the slightest notice and he could not possibly have been there even if the notice had been received in time. From this it is perfectly evident that Mr. Duchemin has one object only in holding these inquiries and that is to secure the dismissal of the official charged. I would submit that it would be very much better if the Minister of Marine would take the responsibility of dismissing these men from office the moment a heeler of his own party applied for the position and thus save the country the expense which is being incurred from day to day by Mr. Duchemin in holding these farcical investigations. It was disclosed by the hon. member for Guysborough this afternoon that up to the present time Mr. Duchemin has received over $6,000 for his services as commissioner to investigate these charges of political partisanship. I say that expenditure is a gross and indefensible waste of public money. No matter what evidence may be given, no matter how innocent a person may be who is charged with the offence, he is going to be dismissed anyway, and if the Minister of Marine thinks he is relieving himself from responsibility by sheltering himself behind the report of Mr. Duchemin when he makes these dismissals he is making a great mistake. I have heard unfavourable criticsm made of the Postmaster General in respect of the dismissals he has been making in Nova Scotia. I say that many of the dismissals made by the Postmaster General are absolutely indefensible, but I admire the courage of the Postmaster General in taking the responsibility for his conduct. Whenever a charge of partisanship is made the Postmaster General takes the responsibility of making the dismissal and in so doing, at all events, he does not put the country to the unnecessary, useless expense of paying for a commissioner to investigate the charges. I think that the Minister of Marine, during the whole record of gruesome and blood-thirsty dismissals which have taken place in Canada in the last eighteen months, has been the worst offender in the Government. I do not desire to be offensive to the minister, and I have no doubt the minister rather rejoices in the fact that he has brought about more dismissals in certain parts of Nova Scotia than any of his colleagues, but I say that, notwithstanding the attitude of apparent fairness and desire to be impartial which he assumes in this House, he is more deserving of censure on account of indefensible dismissals brought about in his department than any other minister. If these investigations are to be of any value, if the country is to receive any value for money which is being paid to Mr. Duchemin, surely it is only by reason of the investigations being fair, of there being some attempt to be decent and to allay public suspicion that Mr. Duchemin is only a tool, an instrument for the purpose of bringing about dismissals which are bound to come anyway.

There is no circumstances in connection with this dismissal of Mr. O'Brien that can be justified for a moment. Mr. O'Brien did not receive a notice of the investigation until two days after the date of the investigation; the investigation was held at a place eight miles distant from the place where he was summoned to appear and therefore he had no opportunity whatever of appearing before the commissioner.

It has been disputed by hon. gentlemen opposite as to whether the statement which has been made by hon. gentlemen on this side is correct that Mr. Duchemin is not allowing counsel to be heard on behalf of persons charged. That is a small matter, grave as it is, compared with the fact that men are taken unawares, are sent notices which are absolutely deceptive, are given notices which are intended to deceive them and to render it absolutely impossible for them to be present at the inquiry. If Mr. O'Brien had been present at that inquiry, although I submit it would not have availed in the mind of Mr. Duchemin, he would have had the satisfaction of going upon the witness stand and pointing out the respects in which the evidence adduced against him was absolutely without foundation. As a matter of fact, Mr. O'Brien was not the agent of the Liberal candidate in the last provincial election. He has not been an agent for any candidate either before or since his appointment to office, so far as I am aware. The fact that Mr. O'Brien went into the poll on election day and asked the presiding officer to mark his ballot would no doubt have been explained had an opportunity of appearing before Mr. Duchemin been given him. So I say, in view of all the circumstances, that Mr. O'Brien's dismissal is one of the most dastardly and indefensible dismissals in the province of Nova Scotia in eighteen months—and there has been a record in Nova Scotia of which neither Mr. Duchemin nor the Minister of Marine ought to be proud.

What is my object in bringing this matter before the committee? I certainly do not expect that the minister will reinstate Mr. O'Brien. Should the minister grant another inquiry, and give Mr. O'Brien another opportunity to appear before Mr. Duchemin, the commissioner would no doubt so garble the testimony as to make an apparent justification for his dismissal and the only result would be that another $30 or $40 of Government money would find its way into his pocket. My purpose in bringing this matter before this committee is to give publicity to the infamous manner in which these investigations are being held. For fifteen years the Liberals were in power in this country and only in two cases were there dismissals for political partisanship in the county of Richmond and these dismissals were made after inquiry, not by a political partisan but, as is well remembered, by a commissioner appointed by the late Government to make inquiries into political partisanship in Nova Scotia, a gentleman who held a high position in the public service of this country, who had had very long experience in holding judicial inquiries. I refer to the late Captain Douglas. No one would dare to attempt to influence Captain Douglas as to the decision he ought to give to any inquiry before him and, as a matter of fact, I know many instances where inquiries were held before him and he dismissed the charges of partisanship alleged against the official. Never in the history of Canada have there been so many dismissals as have been made in all the departments of this Government since they came into power. This afternoon the hon. member for Halton proceeded to read a lecture to members from Nova Scotia for the time they were taking up in discussing the matter of dismissals in that province. He said it was a disgrace to the province of Nova Scotia. I quite concede it is a disgrace to the province of Nova Scotia, a bitter disgrace to the Government which the hon. member supports so loyally. If there is any person disgraced and degraded before the country in respect of these dismissals it is not the unfortunate office-holder who has been hounded to death since the change of Government in order that his position might be given to a partisan; the disgrace lies at the doors of the members of this Government who countenance these unfair dismissals and will resort to the subterfuges to which they do resort in order to bring them about. On another occasion, when discussing the question of dismissals in this House during the present session, I read the declarations of the Prime Minister as to what the rights of an official were with regard to participating in public discussions. The right hon. gentleman stated that public officials had the right not only to attend public meetings but to speak at public meetings provided they did not give offence to any person in the community. But, like every other principle which the right hon. gentleman espoused when he was in office, it has been cast to the winds, and, with every colleague he has in the Government, he has degenerated to the very lowest depths to accomplish the ruin of officials who have been public servants during the last fifteen years. On other occasions during this session, we have had cries of sympathy from hon. gentlemen opposite. When complaint was made in this House that a man named Andrew Landry had been improperly released from jail in order that he might enjoy the emoluments of public office, the defence was that he had a large family, and that it was a most cruel thing for him to be kept in jail. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Justice both declaimed against hon. gentlemen on this side of the House on the ground of their hard-heartedness in seeking to have this man Landry kept in jail to serve out his sentence, when a family depended on him. But 75 per cent of the men who have been ruthlessly driven from office have large families depending on them. They are men who gave up whatever employment they previously had to accept employment under the Government, and they have been turned out of public office without any means of livelihood. The sympathy and charity of hon. gentlemen opposite are only to be extended to Tories who are seeking office, or who are seeking liberty from the public jails. There is no sympathy to be shown for the official who happens to have been appointed by a Liberal, but if he has been guilty of voting for or has been suspected of voting for a liberal candidate, he must be cast to the winds, and their own heelers must be given the position. I am anxious to hear what defence the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has for the dismissal of Mr. O'Brien, in view of the circumstances which I have stated, and in order to give the minister an opportunity of making a defence I shall give the floor to him, and continue my remarks later on.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend has worked himself into a fine state of frenzy over this matter. He has used a wonderful vocabulary of adjectives. 'Gruesome,' 'blood-thirsty,' and other adjectives of the most extraordinary character have been indulged in by the hon. gentleman—adjectives which I think are entirely misplaced. What are the facts in connection with this matter? The facts are that charges were made to the Marine and Fisheries Department to the effect that this man occupying a Government position, had been an active partisan in recent elections in the province of Nova Scotia. Mr. Duchemin, who was the commissioner appointed to investigate charges of that sort in the eastern part of the province of Nova Scotia, had this matter referred to him for inquiry. Mr. Duchemin, after inquiry, submitted his report to the department, and in that report, which is the only matter we have on record with regard to it, Mr. Duchemin states that Mr. O'Brien was duly notified of the time and place of examination, but that he did not appear thereat. That is the only statement we have with regard to the investigation. It is the statement of the commissioner appointed and sworn to do his duty, and that commissioner states most emphatically that Mr. O'Brien was notified of the time and place of investigation, but that he did not appear thereat. Now, it is a very strange thing to me, if that investigation was held, as it was held away back in the month of February last, that no communication of any sort was ever addressed to the department by Mr. O'Brien, or by anybody acting on his behalf, stating that he was not notified of the time and place of examination and had no opportunity of attending, if such were the case.

Mr. KYTE: Mr. O'Brien immediately sent me a copy of his declaration, and I moved for the papers, and I got them only a short time ago.

Mr. HAZEN: That is no answer to the statement I made. I say it was a surprising thing, if my hon. friend is correct in saying that O'Brien was not properly notified of the time and place of investigation, as Mr. Duchemin says he was, that after all these months had elapsed, no communication was addressed to the department stating that he had not been notified.

Mr. KYTE: Does the minister say that O'Brien committed perjury when he made this declaration ?

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend had better not get excited.

Mr. KYTE: I am not excited at all.

Mr. HAZEN: He is the most excited man I have seen in the House this year ?

Mr. KYTE: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. HAZEN: I repeat to my hon. friend that it is a most extraordinary thing—I repeat it for the third time—if that statement of Mr. Duchemin's that O'Brien had been notified of the time and place of examination, is not true, and Mr. O'Brien was not notified of the time and place of examination, that all those months should have elapsed without any representation having been made to that effect to the department. My hon. friend says he moved for the papers. That is no answer to what I have said. He moved for the papers which were in the department, and they were brought down. Every paper bearing on the matter was brought down, and there is nothing in those papers showing that any complaint was ever lodged with the department claiming that Duchemin's statement that he had notified O'Brien of the time and place of examination was an untrue statement, or declaring that O'Brien had not been so notified. I agree at once that if he was not notified, it was a most improper proceeding, and I further say that if he was not notified, and if in that report, Mr. Duchemin was stating what was untrue, and deceiving the department, it was a most improper proceeding, and one not worthy of an official occupying the position of commissioner under the Act. But all that we have on our official record is that statement of Duchemin that O'Brien was notified of the time and place of the investigation, and until there is satisfactory evidence to show that that statement is not correct, I think it is my duty to stand by that statement made by Mr. Duchemin in the official report which he made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I must accept and stand by this man who was appointed by the department to act as commissioner until the contrary is shown, as I shall stand by any official of the department until it is shown that he is not worthy of confidence. The investigation was held, and it was shown that O'Brien was a lighthouse keeper who was interested in an election, that he attended the nomination meeting, that he was away all day and night, and did not return to his lighthouse until the following day. That is stated in the evidence by a man named Morgan, a fisherman-farmer living at Bear Island. It is further shown that Mr. O'Brien was a voter in the provincial election of 1911, and under the rule laid down by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, interference in a provincial election is just as much a cause for dismissal as interference in a Dominion election. It is shown that in the provincial election of 1911, after the Dominion election, O'Brien went to vote, and that although he was able to read and write he insisted on having his ballot marked by the returning officer. What could his purpose be in doing that? He wanted to show his zeal on behalf of the cause of the party he was supporting, what a keen and active partisan he was, and what a keen part he was taking in the elections. Then we have the further statement, that he also talked in strong language in regard to the Conservatives. According to one witness, he said: 'When the Tories were in power they did us no good, and, if they got in now they will ruin us. Certainly the Liberals will get in.' The one statement may have been correct from a certain standpoint, but he was not a good prophet with regard to the other. If that statement is correct, and Duchemin says that is the evidence before him, I ask any hon. gentleman if that is not sufficient to justify O'Brien's dismissal on the ground of offensive partisanship. No hon. gentleman will contend that it is not, and having that report made by an official appointed for the purpose of investigating this matter, and no report having been made to the department that there was anything wrong with regard to it, I was amply justified in taking the course I did, in recommending O'Brien's dismissal. My hon. friend has referred to the fact that in the province of Nova Scotia under Liberal rule men were not turned out of office in this way. In the county of Queens and Shelburne, far more Dominion officials were dismissed from office after the election of 1896 than have been dismissed since the election of 1911, although there were not so many officials in the county at that time. My hon. friend from Richmond further referred to the fact that the Liberals appointed an official to hold these investigations—Mr. Bloomfield Douglas. In the province of New Brunswick they did not appoint an official; they appointed a lawyer in the city of St. John, a gentleman, I suppose, having a standing at the bar similar to that of Mr. Duchemin, or Mr. Knowles, or the other gentleman who have been conducting investigations of this kind. Mr. Bloomfield Douglas may have held some investigations but he was not the only commissioner in the province of Nova Scotia appointed for that purpose. I have been informed that in the province of Nova Scotia two other gentlemen, Mr. Bill and Mr. Ross, lawyers practising in the city of Halifax, were appointed to hold investigations and did hold investigations in the province of Nova Scotia. So, my hon. friend is not correct when he says that these investigations were held by officials of the Government because others were appointed just as Mr. McAlpine was appointed in New Brunswick and as other gentlemen were appointed in other parts of the province. All I can say is that I accept the statement of Mr. Duchemin as a correct report of what occurred until the contrary is shown. The hon. gentleman makes the statement on the authority of a man who has been removed from office. I do not wish to say that that man is not telling the truth, but I will say that he is not an unprejudiced witness and that my duty is to accept the statement that Mr. Duchemin has made to the department without one word to the contrary until months have intervened and with no statement being made to the effect that the man was not properly notified until it is made by my hon. friend to the committee to-night.

Mr. KYTE: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is inclined to set aside the statement of Mr. O'Brien as to the facts because he says he is not an unprejudiced witness. Very good, but I will remind him that in nine cases out of ten, where he instituted inquiries into charges of partisanship against officials, the witnesses were the men who were looking for their jobs and trying to bring about their dismissal. Will the minister say that these were unprejudiced witnesses?

Mr. HAZEN: I will say that the statement that in nine cases out of ten the men who gave evidence were looking for their jobs is without foundation.

Mr. KYTE: I will say, speaking for my own county, that in nine cases out of ten the men who appeared as witnesses against officials charged with partisanship were the men who were seeking the offices held by these men and who got the offices afterwards. In seventy-five per cent of the cases the only witnesses called to give testimony were the men who were looking for the offices and who got the offices afterwards. If the evidence of Mr. O'Brien ought to be without weight in the opinion of the minister because he was a prejudiced witness, I ask the minister why he and his colleagues have been dismissing men from office on charges of partisanship when the only witnesses to appear against them were the men who were looking for their places?

Mr. HAZEN: I have not the evidence of O'Brien before me. I have no evidence of O'Brien, he gave no evidence and all we have is the ex parte statement which has been made by the hon. gentleman. All the witnesses who appeared before Mr. Duchemin were examined under oath.

Mr. KYTE: Why has not the minister the evidence?—because Mr. O'Brien was misled into going to a place eight miles away from where the inquiry was held, and yet the minister endeavours to make a point that he has not the evidence of O'Brien before him. How could he have the evidence of Mr. O'Brien when this fair-minded, non-partisan and highly-respected commissioner of his sent him off on a fool's errand eight miles away from where the court was being held? That is the reason why the evidence is not before the minister. It was absolutely impossible to get the evidence, and Mr. Duchemin well knew that when he sent O'Brien away on a fool's errand. W. J. Malcolm said: 'I have been a Tory for thirty years and I want a public office.' The minister, in view of the report of the dismissal of O'Brien, makes a statement which is tantamount to the well known declaration of the politician in the United States some years ago, that to the victors belong the spoils. That is the position of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; we might as well understand it and the taxpayers of Canada might as well be saved the cost of paying Mr. Duchemin for any further investigations which he may be making. The minister says to the committee that there was evidence that this man used offensive language on the street to a voter. Who gave the evidence? It was the wife of the man who is now the lightkeeper. The two points upon which evidence has been given and which the minister seems to think is a justification for the dismissal could no doubt have been explained by O'Brien had he had an opportunity of appearing before the commissioner. Mr. O'Brien having voted openly, could have been explained, no doubt. I am not complaining so much about the dismissal of O'Brien but I am complaining of the farcical character of the investigation. Mr. Duchemin's conduct in holding investigations in Richmond county, and my experience is not limited to this case, has been such as to cast discredit upon any finding which he may make, and before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gets his estimates through he will have more instances of the character of the inquiries which have been held. Then the minister endeavours to minimize the effect of the statement I made here to-night by stating that he has not the sworn testimony of O'Brien, whereas we have the solemn declaration of O'Brien, deposed to before a commissioner of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, to which is attached the original notice sent by Mr. Duchemin to Mr. O'Brien notifying him to attend for investigation at Port Malcolm on the 20th of February. Yet the minister says there is no evidence that Mr. O'Brien was not summoned to appear before the commissioner at Port Hawkesbury. I have sometimes admired the ingenuous manner the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has of getting around difficult points in the matter of the conduct of Mr. Duchemin, but it is apparent to the committee that the minister is driven to the last ditch in his effort to find an explanation for the report which Mr. Duchemin has made in this instance.

Mr. SINCLAIR: My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte), has been pointing out a case in which a lighthouse keeper was dismissed on very slight evidence and a dispute has been going on between him and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to whether the evidence was sufficient or not. I can cite a case to my hon. friend where there was no evidence at all excepting a letter from the man who wanted to get the job. It is the case of the dismissal of Stephen C. Richards, of Charlos' Cove, in the county of Guysborough. Mr. Richards was a good officer, no complaint against him, and he was not a partisan in so far as I know. A letter was written by Mr. Alex. Richard, who wished to obtain the position held by Mr. Stephen Richards, to Mr. Rowlings, the defeated candidate in Guysborough, and Mr. Rowlings forwarded the letter of Mr. Richard to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The letter is as follows:

Mr. G. A. Rowlings,
Sydney, N.S.

Sir,—I beg to report that Mr. Stephen C. Richards now holding the office of lightkeeper of range lights at Charlos' Cove, county of Guysborough, N.S. has been an active Liberal partisan and was a worker for the Liberal candidate at the recent election in September, 1911, and I hereby request that he be immediately dismissed.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) Alex. Richard,
per W. J. Murphy.

An illiterate man who is not able to sign his own name makes application through another man of the name of Mr. Murphy, and states that Mr. Stephen C. Richards is a partisan. The letter was sent to Mr. Rowlings, and Mr. Rowlings sent the letter to the minister. Mr. Rowlings' letter is as follows:

Hon. J. D. Hazen, M.P.,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear sir,—Referring to the above I beg to say that I am satisfied from inquiries that I have made that Mr. Stephen C. Richards, the present holder of this position, as stated by Mr. Murphy, is an active Liberal partisan and took an active part in the recent election. I would therefore recommend that the above request be granted and that Mr. Alexander Richard of Charlos' Cove, N.S., be appointed to the said position.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) G. A. R. Rowlings.

The minister will see that the sole evidence on which he dismissed this official was a letter from a man who was expecting to get the appointment, and this letter was forwarded by the defeated candidate. In his letter, Mr. Rowlings recommends Mr. Alex. Richard, the man who makes the complaint, for the position. Then we have the reply of the minister to Mr. Rowlings as follows:

G. A. R. Rowlings, Esq.,
Sydney, N.S.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of yours covering recommendation of Alexander Richard that Stephen C. Richards now holding office of lightkeeper of range lights at Charlos' Cove, county of Guysborough, be removed from office.

I note your recommendation that Alexander Richard be appointed to the position. In view of your statement that you are satisfied from inquiries you have made that Mr. S. C. Richards is an active Liberal partisan, who took an active part in the recent election I will recommend that the change desired be made.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) J. D. Hazen.

There is no necessity for the committee to listen to disputes as to whether evidence has been taken or not, because there is no evidence here except a letter written by the man who wants to get the appointment himself. If a man can be dismissed on evidence like that, I submit to the committee that it is a farce to call these proceedings an investigation. Will the minister explain why he dismissed the lighthouse keeper at Charlos' Cove without any evidence whatever, and appointed in his place the man who complained against him?

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. G. A. R. Rowlings, who was a candidate in the county of Guysborough at the last election, enclose to the department a communication he had received from Mr. Alex. Richard, stating that Mr. Stephen Richards had been an active partisan and was working for the Liberal candidate during the recent election. Mr. Rowlings stated that he had investigated the matter carefully and was satisfied that the information was correct. On his statement, the order was issued a little later on to remove Mr. Stephen Richards from his position. I received a letter from my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) stating that he thought this was a mistake, and requesting that an investigation be held. At the request of my hon. friend, I ordered that investigation to be held. The investigation was not held as promptly as it should have been. My hon. friend, I think, early in the session, called my attention to the fact that I had given him my promise that an investigation would be held. I looked up the file and found that the department had instructed Mr. Duchemin to hold an investigation; I think that was towards the end of January last; but up to that time no report had been received. We instantly communicated with Mr. Duchemin; called his attention to the fact that orders had been issued by the department to hold an investigation, and asked him why he had not done so. We also ordered him to proceed to do so at once, if he had not already done so. I have under my hand the report of Mr. Duchemin which has been handed to me just now by the deputy minister. I did not see it before I came into the House and before two minutes ago, when my hon. friend commenced to speak. The report is as follows:

Sydney, N.S., May 15, 1913.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Re Stephen Richards, formerly lightkeeper, Charlos' Cove, Guysborough county, N.S.

Dear Sir,—

On the 13th instant, I conducted an inquiry into the complaints of political partisanship which resulted in the removal of Stephen Richards from the position of lightkeeper at Charlos' Cove, in the county of Guysborough, N.S.

The inquiry took place at Larry's River, Guysborough county, a short distance from the home of Mr. Richards. Due notice had been sent to Mr. Richards, of the date and place of the hearing, and he was present throughout the hearing.

Alexander Richard, of Charlos' Cove, testified that he had been a voter in that place for 30 or 35 years, and had known Stephen Richard ever since he was a child. This witness described Stephen Richard as having been a strong party man and a worker on his side of politics, for many years past. Witness stated that he remembered the last Dominion election, and that on that occasion Stephen Richard spent a very considerable part of the day around about the polling booth at Charlos' Cove. He spent the day—or a considerable part of it—meeting and talking with voters as they came up to the poll to vote. Witness estimated that Mr. Richard was at least two or three hours outside the booth, occupied in the manner described. Witness was there for two or three hours himself, and saw Mr. Richard so occupied, and stated that when he (witness) left the poll, Stephen Richard was still on the ground, occupied in the same manner. Witness further went on to say that on provincial election day, he had known Stephen Richard to spend the day in the same manner outside the polling booth, interviewing and talking with voters, as they came up to poll their votes. He explained that on every election day for years past, it has been the practice of the workers on both sides of politics to station themselves outside and near the polling booth. Last election day, for instance, witness was present among the Conservative workers, and he stated that Stephen Richard was associated with the Liberal workers outside the booth. Witness further alleged that it was the custom for Stephen Richard to spend election day in the manner described—either at the poll at Charlos' Cove, or the poll at Larry's River—some two or three miles distant. Witness also stated that it is a custom in this district for both political parties to endeavour to have as many as possible of their supporters stationed outside the booth on election day, for election purposes.

On the conclusion of this witness' testimony, I asked Stephen Richard, who was present, if he wished to submit or suggest questions by way of cross-examination. He then asked witness if he knew of his having paid moneys for votes on any occasion. Witness replied that he did not.

Stephen Richard then gave testimony in his own behalf. After having been duly sworn as a witness, he admitted that he was around the poll at Charlos' Cove, but was inclined to question the statement of the witness that he had been there for upwards of three hours. In this connection, Mr. Richard said: I admit that I was around the poll at Charlos' Cove, but I don't think I was there for three hours. I don't think I was there more than two hours. Joe Hatch Richard gave me a drink of rum outside the booth—about a quarter of a mile from the booth, the afternoon of election day, I don't know whether that was election rum or not.

While witness claimed that he had not done any definite canvassing outside the booth on the occasion referred to, he did acknowledge that he had participated in political discussion outside the door of the booth, and that he had spoken up in the interests of the Liberals. As witness put it: I talked up my side outside the booth, but did not ask anyone to vote Grit last election day. Witness also admitted that he was outside the same booth last local election day, and that he had 'talked up his side,' outside the booth on that occasion. He would not state definitely that he did not canvass anyone, but stated that he 'did not remember asking anyone to vote for the Grit side.' Witness did not question the statement of Alexander Richard that it has been his custom for years past, to spend election day outside the booth in the manner described.

In the circumstances I do not think that there can be any question that Mr. Richard violated the rule of the department, prohibiting employees from taking part in elections. It has evidently been his custom for years past to leave the light and spend all, or a considerable part of election day, outside the polling booth at either Charlos' Cove or Larry's River, discussing politics and arguing from the point of view of the Liberal party. This is certainly improper conduct on the part of a public official, and in the circumstances I think amply warranted the action of the department in dispensing with Mr. Richard's services as keeper of the light, at Charlos' Cove.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. P. Duchemin,
Commissioner of Inquiry.

I may say to my hon. friend that I would have sent to him a copy of this at once, but I only received it now for the first time.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What does the hon. minister think of it?

Mr. HAZEN: It seems to me, if he admitted himself that his habit was to stand outside the polling booth on election day, discussing the elections and 'talking up,' as he put it, the Liberal party, that he must have been there for the purpose of helping the Liberal party and that he is a partisan.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Not at all. In a little village of that kind they all sit outside the polling booth on election day. My hon. friend knows very well how these elections are conducted. Surely it is not a political crime for a man to chat with his neighbours about the elections, when sitting outside the poll on a fine day. It is a little fishing village, and the day is a holiday for the people. Mr. Richards is an honest man; he tells the truth; he says they are talking about the election. He also says that he was not canvassing anybody.

Mr. HAZEN: He does not say that. He says: 'I talked up my side outside the poll.' What does that mean? I suppose that 'talking up my side' meant giving arguments why one should vote for 'my side.'

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. minister is not so innocent that he does not know what 'talking up my side' means. He has been long enough around polling booths to know all about it. In a country village, you have fifty or sixty neighbours who have come to the poll. Of course, they are talking election—what are they there for if not for that? And because an official goes to the poll and meets his neighbours, and they get into discussion about an election and the official says: I believe my side is right, is that any reason why the man should be dismissed? We are getting some light on this question to-night. I am very glad indeed to have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries give his answers as plainly as he has done. I have never taken a hand in this question of dismissals except a little talk with the Postmaster General very early in the last session. I am safe in saying that three-quarters of the officials in my constituency have been removed from office. I believe that every postmaster of an office with a salary of more than $100 a year has been dismissed, and I am safe in saying that all the customs officers except two or three have suffered the same fate. In one particular case, I got the evidence. I would like to say to the credit of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—because he has been getting so many hard truths to-night that it would not do him any harm to give him a word of commendation—that in our province he has appointed a gentleman to hold these investigations. In my judgment his principal trouble in Nova Scotia comes from the character of the man—I will not call him a gentleman—who has been carrying on these investigations. If he had appointed a gentleman of the qualifications of Mr. Knowles who acted in New Bruswick he would not have had these difficulties, he would not have had member after member standing up and giving him statements which must shame him until he does not know what to do. I do not think the minister would want to justify such conduct as he has been compelled to justify here to-day. He has not been compelled to justify such conduct in his own province. There is not an instance brought up within the last two sessions in which we have been compelled to put my hon. friend in a position which he has been obliged, as he has been to-night, to defend conduct of this kind. I have referred to one case in which a man in my own constituency was removed from office. But the man had counsel; he was treated like a British subtish; every opportunity was given him to defend himself. The principal evidence against the man was that he was at the polling booth on election day. He was collector of customs, and his office was not more than five or six rods from the polling booth—just across the street. He was on the street and was seen speaking to myself.

Mr. HAZEN: That was suspicious.

Mr. CARVELL: Evidently it was regarded as worse than that—it was sufficient to remove him from office. But I want to say for Mr. Knowles, that he did not recommend the dismissal; he simply took the evidence and referred it to the department and the department made the dismissal. But in Nova Scotia, Mr. Duchemin seems to be the whole department, and not only the whole department but the whole Government. When they want a man dismissed they simply hand him over to Mr. Duchemin, and he does the job. If he cannot succeed by a fair trial, why he changes the trial place to ten miles away—anyhow, certainly, Mr. Duchemin does the job. I am not going to take any further part in this discussion of dismissals, but I would like to say to the minister that if he wants to play the man, and if he wants the people to believe that he is playing the man—get rid of Duchemin.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings, N.S.): I want to say just a word in reply to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). There is very little to reply to in what has been submitted by the hon. member for Richmond and the hon. member for Guysborough.

Mr. KYTE: Well, well.

Mr. FOSTER: I think the judgment of the House will support me in that statement. The hon. member for Richmond is even louder in his exclamations than the Toronto Globe described me as being on an occasion when I spoke, certainly very moderately, the other evening. All we hear from the hon. member is a loud, round and echoing noise.

Mr. GAUVREAU: And sensible, too.

Mr. FOSTER: I do not know what the remark of my hon. friend from Temiscouata may mean; I ignore his statement. With regard to Mr. Duchemin, the hon. member for Carleton said he would call him a man, but not a gentleman. In the province of Nova Scotia, and especially in the eastern part of it where he is best known, among the members of the Bar and the people generally, Mr. Duchemin stands as high in respect of all classes as does the hon. member for Carleton among any people in New Brunswick or elsewhere. When a member of Parliament rises in this House and, behind a man's back, makes an assertion of that kind that he is not a gentleman, it is a pretty small piece of business and shows better than any argument the character of the member who makes it. We have heard of members of Parliament making statements across the floor of this house, and when given the opportunity to repeat them outside where the honourable laws of this Chamber do not interfere with the due appreciation of a statement of that kind, we have found them shirking the responsibility of their words. I need not refer to any particular hon. gentleman; the House is in possession of the facts in this regard. The hon. member for Richmond says that the witnesses were interested parties, and therefore their evidence should not be taken.

Mr. KYTE: The minister says that.

Mr. FOSTER: The minister stated that O'Brien was an interested witness. The member for Richmond said that O'Brien gave an affidavit that he was not a partisan. Did anybody ever hear of an investigation in any part of this Dominion where a man came up and admitted that he was a partisan? Did anyone ever hear of an investigation in which the man did not deny it and try to get round it in every way? In my own county, a man insulted me right on the street with regard to the elections, yet he pretended he was not a partisan. He attended a meeting, joined in it, cursed everybody almost on the other side of politics—yet he is not a partisan. In the name of common sense, it would be enlightening to the House to know what definition these gentlemen have of partisanship. A man goes to the poll and stands outside and talks up his own side, tells the people to vote for a certain candidate. Do you suppose he is asking the people to vote Tory? What the law requires an office holder to do, if he wishes to vote, is to go to the poll, cast his vote and go home and mind his business. But in the counties of Guysborough, Richmond and Pictou—and I will not confine it to these counties—the whole political machinery of the Grit party was in the hands of people in the receipt of emoluments either from the provincial or Dominion Government. And that statement stands true to-day. The result is that when an investigation is ordered or a charge preferred against a man in office, it is a safe bet, that if he was appointed to office under the late Government, Dominion or provincial, he is a partisan, and a safe bet also that he will deny it immediately the charge is preferred. Hon. gentlemen have raised a great howl with regard to dismissals, but I venture to say they have not won a single vote on the discussion of dismissals, because public opinion knows well the effect of evidence that has been brought to light in Guysborough county for example. It is realized that the men who were there holding office, held office on condition that they worked for the hon. member for Guysborough and his party. That has been shown from evidence time and time again. The hon. member travels around with an employee of the Government, the employee of the Government solicits support from men whom he meets and the member for Guysborough is there. Yet according to the hon. member for Guysborough that man is not a partisan. The hon. member for Guysborough is personally a very honest and reputable man when he is not engaged in political conversations and arguments, then he loses all the fairness and honesty of which he has an appreciation in private conversation, and immediately discards the whole evidence except that which will help to substantiate his cause. We had evidence here that a man goes to a public meeting in Guysborough and speaks at it, and then proposes three cheers for the member and three cheers for the then Prime Minister, now the right hon. leader of the Opposition; and yet he is not a partisan. In the name of common sense will somebody say what a partisan is in the conception of hon. gentlemen opposite? The country is entitled to know. But that is not all that took place in the county of Guysborough. A man comes up and gives his evidence under oath that such and such a man, we will say, promised him a pair of boots if he would vote for the hon. member for Guysborough, and the case results in the dismissal of the officer making the canvass. Immediately after, whether on the advice of the hon. member for Guysborough I will not assume the responsibility of saying, but in one case at least a charge of perjury is brought against the witness who testifies as to what he knows and was promised, namely this pair of boots for voting for the hon. member for Guysborough. The charge of perjury is brought in an attempt to intimidate witnesses, to lock them up and put them in jail in order to keep them from testifying in investigations. That actually happened in Guysborough. When the case was submitted to the jury, the jury very promptly acquitted the man of perjury, and it was established beyond peradventure that not only was he offered the boots, but that he went to the neighbour's house and got the boots and got a drink besides. It reminds me of the fellow in the prayer service who was promised a pair of boots if he would keep from saying 'amen.' He got so worked up, like the hon. member for Richmond this afternoon, that he said: 'Boots or no boots, I will say amen.'

Mr. GAUVREAU: Where is the wit in it?

Mr FOSTER: I cannot find wit, humour and brains too for the honorable member for Temiscouata. I might go on and point out a great many cases in which the evidence was overwhelmingly in favour of the reports that have been made by Mr. Duchemin. In this particular instance the hon. member for Richmond said that he preferred to believe the ex parte statement of Mr. O'Brien as against the report of a commissioner of Mr. Duchemin's standing and, without casting any serious reflections, let me say that the standing of Mr. Duchemin at the bar of Nova Scotia is every bit as good as the standing of the hon. member for Richmond at the bar of Nova Scotia. That question is not debatable at all. I think the hon. member will agree in that himself and when, under the privilege of this House, he casts insinuations and slurs and denunciations and says that this man is unworthy of the respect of people, I will venture this remark that he would not dare say that to Mr. Duchemin outside of this House. You may search the records of Nova Scotia, but I do not think that you will find that Mr. Duchemin was ever haled before a Supreme Court and judgment given against him disfranchising him for seven years as has been alleged in the case of the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I do not think you will find Mr. Duchemin in that position. Yet we have the hon. member for Richmond denouncing him in the strongest terms and taking the affidavit of a man who when notified that the court was to be held at a certain place does not appear to give evidence in his own behalf, but gets hold of the hon. member for Richmond, who is his father confessor in every particular with regard to politics and says: Here, I will give you my affidavit—and as far as we on this side of the House are concerned we do not know whether the affidavit was ever sworn to before a commissioner or not. We presume it was because the hon. member has read it in the House and we are bound to take his statement, but the fact remains that the House has to judge between a reputable man at the bar who has given his testimony which is on file here as against an ex parte statement of an interested party, Mr. O'Brien, who is, from the evidence submitted, at least a partisan in the estimation of this House.

Mr. McKENZIE: I thought there might have been some doubt and some hesitancy on both sides of the House as to the real facts, commonsense and law on this question before the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Foster) spoke, but I knew when I saw him get on his feet that a Daniel had come to judgment and that the whole thing would be cleared up and that we would know all about it. I invite hon. gentlemen from both sides of the House to notice the striking searchlight that he has brought to bear on this question. You could pick up pins on the street, on the floor, anywhere from the light that emanated from this thing that he calls brain. When he talks about brain he reminds me of the little boy who was asked to make a picture of a horse on a slate. He made the picture and brought it back to the teacher and wrote the word 'horse' under it. Of course were it not for the word 'horse' under the picture on the slate it would never have suggested to anybody that it was a horse. In the same way about the brains of my hon. friend, he must be telling us that it is brains or we would forget that it is the product of that most useful commodity. I invite the hon. member for Kings to devote himself to a night school or somewhere where they might give him some instruction as to brains and not be misleading himself into the idea that he is talking the product of brains when he might as well be talking about the shelling of lobsters or something else. He has an idea, wherever on earth he got an idea, that talking around, beating about the bush and never coming to the point, if he is capable of conceiving a point, is clever. Let him talk as much as possible, let him keep away from the subject, let him say nothing but take up the time and play the cuttlefish, that is the idea my friend from Kings has of playing the smart man and answering an argument. The serious question before you, Mr. Chairman, is whether O'Brien was properly tried or not. I cannot hope to retain or hold the attention of the minister but I hope that possibly somebody in the country may take notice of this O'Brien case. For that reason I propose to inquire into it a little closely. The Minister of Marine is a minister of the Crown and I am not going to read a lecture to him or to any other minister, but I submit to this Parliament that the man who occupies that position of minister of the Crown represents the Crown to subjects in this country and that it is not a light matter, in dealing with the rights of the individual, for a minister of the Crown to act carelessly and ruthlessly and indifferently. I submit to the minister and to you that this election on the 21st of September, 1911, according to the present Prime Minister, was not a party victory. What did he say at the great civic reception which was given to him in the city of Ottawa? He spoke with his laurels fresh from victory and he thanked the hundreds of thousands of Liberals of Canada who had come to his rescue and to the rescue of the country. He said that this was not a party victory but a national victory. That is the position he took on that occasion, the Liberals were to rejoice with him as well as the Conservatives on this national victory. A few weeks afterwards he was banquetted at Halifax. The Minister of Marine was present at the banquet. The Prime Minister repeated the sentiments he had expressed at Ottawa. I would think that the results of a national victory would be treated as a national question, in keeping with the conduct we would expect from a man who had won a national victory. In view of that position I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the treatment of this man O'Brien has been simply scandalous if we are to believe the facts as presented, and I submit that I must believe O'Brien's statement where there is nothing to the contrary. The Minister of Marine has been Attorney General for many years of the province of New Brunswick and he knows the law. He knows that this Commissioner Duchemin derived his authority from and must act in accordance with the statute passed by this House, a statute passed not by the late Government but by the present Government. It is well-known that in any court of justice the court does not become seized of jurisdiction over an individual until it is proven to the court that the notice was properly served. The first thing that the minister should look for when he gets a report from a commissioner is to see if the commissioner became seized of jurisdiction and if the notice was served. The last chapter of this statute says:

> No report shall be made against any person until reasonable notice shall have been given to him of the charge of misconduct alleged against him and he shall have been allowed full opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel.

Where is the proof that O'Brien was served with notice? There is not any. Where is the proof that the charge was served upon him? There is not any, and we have the oath of Mr. O'Brien that not only was he not served but he was served at a false date and put upon a false scent. He was served with notice after the inquiry, and for a day, not the day on which the investigation was to be held at all. He received the notice two days after the investigation was held.

Mr. FOSTER: Where is the proof of that?

Mr. McKENZIE: The notice itself is here. If my friend from Kings can put this and that together, if he is capable of adding two and two together, and I take it for granted that he is, we have the notice of Mr. Duchemin with his signature attached to it, naming a day on which the investigation was to take place at Port Malcolm. We have the report of Mr. Duchemin over his own signature saying that he held the investigation on a different day altogether and in a different place. Surely it is clear even to the intellect of my hon. friend that there was no notice at all for the day on which the investigation was held, and no notice for the place in which it was held. That being the case, I think my hon. friend, while he would possibly have dismissed this man in any case, in view of the statute which he passed himself and which is binding on himself and his officials, will see that it is up to him to put this man O'Brien back in the lighthouse and dismiss the man who was put falsely in that position. Let him begin this thing over again for the credit of the King whom he represents, for the credit of the department over which he presides, for the credit of the people of this country and of the investigations which are being held under the statute. Begin over again and if Mr. O'Brien is found to deserve dismissal after having been properly dealt with and the law complied with, dismiss him. Do not let us have this disgrace upon the King. Do not let us have a commissioner of the King throwing men and their children on the street without giving the slightest semblance of defence. I ask the Prime Minister, or any other lawyer, if this had been a proceeding in which Mr. Duchemin was a court, and he had given a decision, as he gave here, which would infringe upon the liberties of this man O'Brien, and the man had been arrested and put in jail by virtue of this trial, what would have happened if habeas corpus or certiorari proceedings had been taken? The moment it was shown that there had been no service, away would go the decision, and the incarceration would cease, and there would be an action in the civil courts for false imprisonment. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Minister of Justice, and everyone concerned in this matter are sheltering themselves behind a proceeding taken in the name of the King and under the King's commission, and in every step the commissioner has falsified the authority and power given to him to deal with the matter. I submit that there is no defence for the action of the commissioner. If the facts, as set forth by Mr. Duchemin himself in his report are correct, there is nothing left, if we are to be decent and respectable and are to maintain the dignity of this Government and of this Parliament, but to begin de novo, and have the matter sifted to the bottom. If Mr. O'Brien is guilty of partisanship let him be dismissed, but when the name of the King is introduced into the proceedings, let us see that the subject gets fair-play and justice, and let us have no mock investigations.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings, N.S.): I would like to say a word or two with regard to what my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has said in reference to myself. He referred in a slighting manner to my lack of brains. As a matter of fact, I never laid very great stress upon the brains I may possess, and I have never endeavoured to advertise the claim that I had abnormal qualifications in that respect. But this House has been treated on more than one occasion to what the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria would be pleased to call the product of the brains in that wonderful dome of thought of his, and when a remark that does not seem to suit him is addressed to him across the floor of this House by any hon. gentleman on this side, he comes across the floor and begs that the remark be not placed on 'Hansard' in order that the people may not know of it.

Mr. McKENZIE: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. FOWLER: Take your medicine.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am quite willing to take anything that is coming to me properly; I do not make statements behind covers. I ask my hon. friend to name the occasion when I asked for any favours in matters of that kind, and the party from whom I asked them.

Mr. FOSTER: I am delighted to respond to the hon. gentleman's request. On the occasion of a debate in this House between the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) asked by what kind of reckoning the hon. member for Cumberland with the brains he had, had arrived at the conclusion he was submitting to the House. The hon. member for Cumberland replied and used words I have quoted with regard to the hon. gentleman's polished dome of thought, and forthwith my hon. friend begged the hon. member for Cumberland not to have the remark inserted in 'Hansard.

Mr. McKENZIE: I did nothing of the kind. I notice that the hon. member for Cumberland is not here; I should be very glad to leave him to tell the House what took place. I can assure my hon. friend that he would not be backed up by the hon. member for Cumberland in the reflections he is trying to make. The occasion referred to when there was a somewhat heated discussion in which the hon. member for Cumberland and the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens (Mr. McCurdy) and myself took part. The hon. member for Cumberland is a friend of mine, and I did not think it was creditable to either of us that the remarks should appear, and we quietly agreed that they should not appear on the record. That is all there was to it. My hon. friend's statement shows the measure of the man.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the discussion is drifting on to personal matters.

Mr. FOSTER: I am perfectly willing to come back to the item, but I take notice that the hon. member does not deny what I said. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the hon. member for Cumberland or to the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens who will substantiate what I have said.

Mr. CARVELL: Let us hear about Duchemin.

Mr. FOSTER: If my hon. friend would like to hear from Mr. Duchemin, we might arrange a meeting with my hon. friend. My hon. friend from North Cape Breton accused me of wandering around the subject, and yet for ten minutes he talked of a national victory in the last election. I would like to know what that has to do with the item under discussion. He went round that point for four or five minutes and finally came to the question of the statute. I have already pointed out that on every occasion when the hon. gentleman addresses this House, he proceeds to divulge the little he learned when he was a county court judge in the province of Nova Scotia. He must always rise and interpret what is plain to the ordinary layman, and what are fundamental principles of law. My hon. friend has a wonderful capacity. When he was upon the bench he was noted for his fairness, for the consideration he gave to lawyers and clients on both sides, but in the eastern part of the province of Nova Scotia it was almost impossible to get a case for a Conservative lawyer when the hon. gentleman was upon the bench. Perhaps the hon. member will deny that.

Mr. McKENZIE: Absolutely.

Mr. FOSTER: That is the feeling that prevails in the eastern part of the province of Nova Scotia with regard to the hon. gentleman, and more than one lawyer could substantiate what I have said. He assumes an attitude of fairness in this House, but when he gets where the people cannot see him, he can say the meanest and most despicable things.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER: I am pleased to withdraw the remark.

An hon. MEMBER: Let him chew his potatoes.

Mr. FOSTER: With regard to chewing potatoes, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and the hon. member for North Cape Breton can chew, not only potatoes, but buckwheat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: What about the estimates?

Mr. FOSTER: Hon. gentleman have not been so very anxious about getting the estimates through when they have spent three or four hours this afternoon in discussing dismissals. But when an hon. member on this side of the House tries to say something which is not what they want to hear, they become very eager to have the estimates go through. I am perfectly willing to stay here all summer if necessary.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hon. gentleman has nothing else to do, but some of us have.

Mr. FOSTER: More evidence of the smartness of my hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER: He has something to do; he has to go down home and pay that two hundred dollar bill which his partner incurred for rum at the last election. I have no doubt it will take him some little time to earn money enough to pay the election bills that he ran last time. If the hon. gentleman wants to prolong—

Mr. McKENZIE: That was paid for long ago.

Mr. FOSTER : Of course, but he denied it the other day.

Mr. CARVELL: No, he says that it is paid for.

Mr. FOSTER: No, he does not deny it and it worries him a little. He is a man of the style of Dr. Rhindress and Mr. N. A. McMillan, both pure-minded men, men who are not partisans! He has no partisans in his riding, every person is perfectly righteous and fair-minded and I suppose that all belong to the same church as he does.

Mr. KYTE: I desire to make an observation or two inasmuch as the hon. member for Kings said something that was probably intended to have reference to myself. The hon. gentleman speaks of the high standing of Mr. Duchemin at the Bar of Nova Scotia. As the hon. gentleman is not a member of the professional Bar, I presume he had reference to the other bar, and before his judgment in that regard I bow without the slightest hesitation.

Mr. FOSTER: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman insinuates something with reference to my judgment and experience concerning a bar other than the professional Bar. Of course, I know exactly what he is driving at, and I will tell him that, in regard to any other bar other than the legal Bar, I am not in the habit of frequenting places of that sort, and therefore, the hon. gentleman is absolutely wrong. When he insinuates anything with regard to a bar, not meaning the legal Bar, I wish to tell him that I have no interest in, and am not in the habit of frequenting a bar, saloon, or anything of that sort.

Mr. KYTE: If any misunderstanding has arisen the hon. gentleman must concede that he is entirely to blame for it, because he is not a member of the professional Bar and therefore not in a position to pass judgment upon the standing of a gentleman occupying a position in that very distinguished and honourable profession. The hon. gentleman endeavoured to make some comparison between Mr. Duchemin and myself as regards our relative standing at the professional Bar. I am not like the hon. member for Kings who does not appear to suffer from any undue depreciation of his own talents. Therefore, I hesitate before expressing any opinion as to the standing I enjoy in the profession in the province of Nova Scotia. Suffice it to say that I am well content with the success that has come to me in the practice of my profession in Nova Scotia, and I hope that the hon. member for Kings will have similar satisfaction when he is as old as I am.

There is one other matter that I wish to refer to, and it is a personal reflection which the hon. member for Kings made I am not like the hon. member for Kings referred to the fact that some person was disqualified in Nova Scotia and deprived of the right of voting. If the hon. gentleman referred to me I think it is only right to myself and to hon. members that I should place the facts before the committee. Away back in 1894, nearly twenty years ago, the Conservative party in my county was particularly active, as it has always been within my recollection. I was then a young man just starting out to enjoy the advantages of my profession. As I was attached to the Liberal party, the Conservatives in the county did me the honour of paying some attention to me. They thought I was a young man that they ought to watch, and if there was any way by which my character could be besmirched so that I would become less useful to the Liberal party, they were willing to resort to any means to bring that about. As base and diabolical a conspiracy as was ever conceived in the corrupted and perverted mind of man was hatched by the Conservative party to that end. The provincial elections took place in 1894, and after the elections were over prosecutions were instituted against several prominent Liberals in the county for violations of the election law, and I was singled out for their attention. A prosecution was instituted against me, different forms of corrupt acts were charged, but when the matter came to a trial every charge was dismissed by the judge. There was one case, however, in which another species of infraction of the law was involved. There is a canal in my county upon which there are employed several men. In 1874 the provincial legislature passed a law which disfranchised all employees of the Department of Railways and Canals and prevented them from voting in provincial elections. In the local election of 1894 I was the agent for the Liberal candidate at the poll when one of these men presented himself and asked for a ballot. I pointed out that employees of the Department of Railways were not entitled to vote in provincial elections and that, inasmuch as canals was a branch of the Department of Railways, employees on these canals were not entitled to vote. The argument I addressed to the presiding officer resulted in the employee of the canal refusing to take the ballot and he did not vote. That matter came up in the court. The judge held that, inasmuch as at the time the provincial statute was passed in 1874 there was no subdepartment of canals, the statute could not have applied to the men employed upon this canal and that I had committed a technical offense in having addressed an argument to the presiding officer which resulted in the employee not taking the ballot and not exercising his franchise, and in that respect I had been guilty of intimidation. That was in 1894, nearly twenty years ago. If the hon. member for Kings were a member of the profession, of which he speaks and of which he professes to be a judge, he would have known that there is a statute of limitations which ought to prevent him making any reference to a matter that occurred so long ago. But in 1895 the Legislature of Nova Scotia elected me to a responsible position in that body. I was elected to the responsible position of clerk assistant of the Legislature of Nova Scotia by the unanimous vote of both parties. One would think that if the offence that I am alleged to have committed was any reflection upon my character or standing as a man and a citizen, the Conservative Opposition in the Legislature would have protested against my appointment. But, almost immediately after the trial, with all the facts known to both political parties, they elected me to the responsible position of assistant clerk of the legislature, and in that election I received the support of every Conservative in the House. I was re-appointed in 1898, re-appointed again in 1901, and in 1903 I was elected to the position of chief clerk of the legislature, a responsible and dignified position, which I enjoyed up to the time I resigned for the purpose of becoming a candidate for the House of Commons in the county of Richmond, on which occasion I was elected.

Needless to say, I offered myself to the electors of the county of Richmond in the election of 1911, and I was re-elected.

In order further to show to the House the manner in which this particular matter referred to by the hon. member for Kings, (Mr. Foster), has been regarded in the county of Richmond, I shall refer to one more circumstance. There was a newspaper owned by the Conservative party, published in my town in 1897. On one occasion, a Conservative enthusiast, who had about the same breadth of view that the hon. member for Kings possesses, thought the time was opportune to make a charge against my character in respect of that election. As soon as the charge was made, I notified the owners of the paper that, unless they withdrew the charge and apologized to me, an action would be brought against them for damages. This is the result. In a copy of that paper dated July 7, 1897, there is the following editorial reference.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the name of the paper?

Mr. KYTE: The Bras d'Or Gazette, now the Sydney Post. It is headed:

We would do justice to Mr. Kyte.

The article is as follows:

In the December, February and May issues of the Bras d'Or Gazette, there appeared several articles that reflected on Mr. G. W. Kyte, barrister, of this town, as regards his character both as a professional man, as well as a private citizen. That these unprovoked and unjustifiable attacks, should have been made upon Mr. Kyte, we deeply regret. We know him to be an upright, honourable and progressive citizen, and in the practice of his profession, he has earned for himself a reputation for honesty and industry that any young man would do well to emulate. In making this apology, we do so in order to do justice to this gentleman, as well as to assure the public that we deprecate the spirit and tone of the articles above referred to; and we desire to give the further assurance that these articles are not attributable in any manner to those whose money and enterprise started this paper.

That was the apology made to me in respect to the same insinuations on January 7, 1897. From that hour to this, not a single suggestion has ever been made by any Conservative, be he prominent or not in the county of Richmond, or in the province of Nova Scotia, so far as I am aware, having reference to the particular matter to which my hon. friend from Kings refers. If he wants to dive into the private history of men connected with infractions of the election law, I would ask him to look around him, and, usually occupying a seat not far removed from the hon. member for Kings, he can find a member of the Conservative party of the province of Ontario, who not only committed a criminal act, in respect of the election law, but was convicted of it and for which he served a sentence. I know it is not regarded as being to his discredit, because I understand at this moment he is designated by his leader for high judicial honours. I trust the committee will pardon me for having made this reference to a personal matter.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Make him withdraw.

Mr. DAVIDSON : Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. CARVELL: Give the hon. member for Kings a chance to apologize.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Mr. Chairman, I am very reluctant to prolong this debate. I am deeply devoted to my constituents, and I am anxious to get home. Sometimes I think that the other side stands in terror of their constituents, and resort to these tactics in order to delay the time when they have to meet them, and that they are deliberately occupying the time of the House in order to postpone the time when they will have to go back to their constituents and give an account of the most remarkable conduct of which they have been guilty during this session of parliament.

It is not agreeable to me to go into the personal conduct of members of this House. I must admit that I hardly approved of the reference which the hon. member for Kings made to the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), for I know how sensitive the hon. member for North Cape Breton is in reference to his personal appearance. I know that the hon. gentleman at election time, when he wants to represent himself to his constituents, does not use a photograph of recent times, but brings into commission an old photograph taken when he wore the locks of an Absalom. I thought under the circumstances the hon. gentleman's remarks were a trifle unkind.

Mr. McKENZIE: Where would my hon. friend go for a good-looking picture?

Mr. DAVIDSON: I hope my hon. friend did not think I intended to state that the picture of himself which appeared was a good-looking one. If the House has got that impression, I wish to set hon. members right in that regard.

The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) referred to a matter in his own history, where the courts of his native province decreed him guilty of a certain offence. He seemed to take it amiss that the hon. member for Kings should have brought this matter up after twenty years. He reminded the hon. member for Kings that the offence of which he was guilty at that time was beyond the statutes, and therefore that technically he should not be blamed. Perhaps we might be inclined to look upon it in that way if the hon. gentleman showed any indication of having repented of the sins of his former days. It seems to me, from the speech which the hon. gentleman has made this evening, that he does not appreciate the enormity of his offence. It is perhaps only right that this House should be advised as to the facts in this particular case. I would not have brought this matter up except that the hon. member himself saw fit to bring these facts before the House, and to make it appear that his record in the past was absolutely clean and straight, and that he was in a perfectly suitable position to criticise such gentlemen as Mr. Duchemin. Inasmuch as he has done this, perhaps I may read certain extracts from the decision of the trial judge on that occasion. The trial judge, who handed out that decision, was one who has a reputation in the province of Nova Scotia for very great leniency. A few weeks ago, the hon. member (Mr. Kyte), in discusssing the case of one of his constituents who had been convicted of an offence, dwelt on the fact that the judge, who had convicted him was one who was particularly charitable in his judgments, who was very lenient, and who probably had a reputation for greater leniency than any other judge of the province of Nova Scotia. The fact is that it was the same judge that found the hon. gentleman guilty. There were four distinct charges against the hon. gentleman on this occasion—three of having deliberately bought the electors of Richmond county, and one of having intimidated an elector of that county. In three cases there did not appear to be any corroboration. Witnesses swore positively that the hon. gentleman had given them money for their votes. Unfortunately for the prosecution, in each case there was only one witness and this evidence was not corroborated in any one of these cases. The hon. gentleman went on the stand and gave his denial in each case, and Mr. Justice Graham, being a very lenient and moderate judge, acquitted the hon. gentleman on that evidence. But, in respect of the charge of intimidation, the judge, in his ruling, after going elaborately into the facts, used these words:

> I cannot believe that the defendant has a bona fide belief that perjury would be committed if the man took the oath. It seems to me no argument can be made about the matter.
> The defendant is not only a barrister but says he studied three years in a college, and he could not help knowing that his contention which I have already quoted had not even the appearence of an argument. I cannot give him credit for good faith the moment he states what his contention was.

Now, this gentleman to whom the very lenient judge in the province of Nova Scotia could not attribute good faith is the hon. gentleman who comes into this House to-night and upon his bare statement wishes us to condemn a very reputable member of the Bar of Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman contends that he has been acquitted of these crimes because the legislature of Nova Scotia appointed him to an important position. I would point out to the House and to the hon. member that the reason for giving up this office, which I understand is not a very important or very remunerative one, was on account of the services he had rendered to his party by just such acts as that for which his lordship Justice Graham had taken away his right to vote. For five years in Nova Scotia, the hon. member for Richmond did not enjoy the privileges of a British citizen.

Mr. KYTE: That is untrue.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind hon. members that the discussion is wandering from the subject into personal matters that are not relevant.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am quite aware of that, Mr. Chairman, but I think that—

Mr. MARCIL: I rise to a point of order, though I am sorry to do so. We want to get through this session some time.

The CHAIRMAN: I must rule, as the hon. member is aware, that the discussion is out of order.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am willing to abide by your ruling. As I understand, the hon. gentleman opposite introduced this matter.

Mr. KYTE: The hon. member for Kings introduced it.

Mr. DAVIDSON: The hon. member for Richmond, as I understand, introduced the matter, and I thought it was only right that this House should be possessed of the facts. I have only a word or two more. The point which I wish to make is that this House should not attach too much importance to the statement of an hon. gentleman who, as he admits himself, was placed in a position where he could be deprived of his rights of citizenship.

Mr. KYTE: That is untrue.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am bound to accept the statement of my hon. friend, but I cannot forget what the law of the province of Nova Scotia said.

Mr. KYTE: You don't know the law.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot allow the hon. member to go into this subject.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I just wish to point out that according to the laws of the province of Nova Scotia, when a person is convicted of an offence against the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act, he is liable to be disfranchised merely upon an order which could be obtained ex parte from a judge.

Mr. KYTE: The order never was obtained; they knew they could not get it.

Mr. DAVIDSON: It could have been obtained, and it was only on account of leniency that it was not taken out, a leniency the hon. gentleman does not seem willing to show to his political opponents in the county of Richmond.

Mr. KYTE: Judge Graham said the order could not be granted because the charge did not involve disqualification.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I have the decision here. If I were permitted to place it on 'Hansard,' it would show that my hon. friend is absolutely in error in that regard. But I do not propose further to take up the time of the House more than to say that on several occasions when charges against officials have been inquired into in the county of Richmond before Duchemin, the hon. member for Richmond has insisted on appearing before the commissioner and acting in behalf of the accused person. On one or two occasions Mr. Duchemin has asked the person accused if the hon. member for Richmond acted for him, and the person so accused repudiated the hon. member.

Mr. KYTE: That is absolutely false. I am not much concerned about what the hon. gentleman says generally, but I will not allow such a statement to pass, and I insist on his withdrawing it. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to insist on the hon. member withdrawing his statement.

The CHAIRMAN: I hope the hon. gentleman will accept the word of the hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am bound to accept the statement of my hon. friend, being perhaps a little more free in that regard than the judges of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. I would like to read an extract from the evidence taken, not in one of the cases under consideration, but in another case.

Mr. McKENZIE: I rise to a point of order. Are we ever to get to an end of this?

Mr. DAVIDSON: The hon. gentleman knows how comfortable it is for hon. members on this side to listen to his own tiresome repetition.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have risen to a point of order, and if the hon. gentleman knows his place he will wait until we get a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that the item under discussion is, lighthouses, salaries and allowances of lightkeepers. I am afraid that both sides have wandered from the subject of discussion. It is hard for me to restrain hon. members from wandering when a discussion has been opened. But, I hope that hon. members will agree that the discussion has continued long enough.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hon. member for Annapolis does not seem to have any terminal facilities at all.

Mr. DAVIDSON: The hon. member for Cape Breton North has a very polished terminal. In the few further remarks I have to make, I will apply myself absolutely to the question under discussion. I understand that the conduct of Mr. Duchemin as commissioner is the matter under discussion by the committee. I wish to show the kind of commissioner Mr. Duchemin is, and, for that purpose, to read a few words from the report he has made which bears upon what I said a few minutes ago:

I now want to refer to an experience that I had with Mr. G. W. Kyte, the opposition member for Richmond county. On the 26th of September, I took two investigations at St. Peters; the accused parties were two postmasters, Chas. J. Lafford, Grand Grève, and Ewan P. McLeod, Louis Cove Road. Mr. Kyte presented himself with the accused the morning of the hearing, and stated that he was going to act as counsel for them. I advised him that in view of the fact that there was no counsel on the other side, I would manage the investigation without the assistance of counsel. He then declared: 'Oh, but you must admit counsel.' To which I replied as before—That I would not admit counsel, but would conduct the investigation without any such assistance. Mr. Kyte then became extremely offensive, and turbulent, interrupting the investigation at different stages. I was obliged to tell him that unless he would maintain order, he would have to leave. He replied that I was not able to put him out, &c., &c. When he became extremely objectionable, I asked Mr. Lafford, the accused, if he was responsible for Mr. Kyte's presence at the investigation, and he replied that he was not. I accordingly went on with the investigation, and ignored Mr. Kyte.

Considering the fact that Dr. Bissett, a very reputable gentleman, a member of the local legislature and of the party to which my hon. friend belongs, spoke in this way, and the fact that the hon. member for Cape Breton North, when I appealed to him some weeks ago for an opinion on the character of Mr. Duchemin, was not prepared to state that he was in any way biased or unfair, this committee must realize that the charges which have been made here to-night in a violent and irresponsible manner are very unsubstantial indeed. In 1896, when the Liberal Government sent a commissioner to the part of Nova Scotia in which I live to investigate these charges, it was a very exceptional matter when that commissioner found an accused person innocent, but I am aware that Mr. Duchemin on very many occasions has found Liberal office holders who were accused of offensive conduct not guilty and they have been allowed to retain their positions by reason of his decision. I think that, considering these facts, it ill becomes gentlemen who do not occupy positions at the Bar comparable at all with that of Mr. Duchemin to come here, twelve hundred miles away from Mr. Duchemin, and make these absolutely groundless charges and aspersions against his character.

Mr. KYTE: There is not much that requires an answer from me in the speech of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson), but I would say to him that when his own political friends pay him as high a compliment as my political opponents paid me in the apology which I have just read from their own newspaper, he may then consider himself worthy to associate with an assembly of gentlemen. With regard to the statement made in respect to Dr. Bissett, it happens that I am beginning to know my hon. friend, so I am usually prepared for him. I have here an affidavit from Dr. Bissett in which he refers to the circumstances dealt with in the statement of Mr. Duchemin. That affidavit is as follows:

I, Charles P. Bissett, of St. Peter's in the county of Richmond, medical doctor, do solemnly declare that I was not present at the investigation held by H. P. Duchemin, commissioner into charges of political partizanship against Ewan McLeod, postmaster at Lewis Cove Road, in the county of Richmond, held at St. Peter's in the month of September last, except for a few moments; nor was I present at the investigation of the charges against Charles J. Lafford, postmaster at Grand Grève, before Mr. Duchemin at the same place and on the same date, except for a short time.

I entered the room where the investigations were being held, shortly before they were closed, but the evidence had practically been all taken. I stated to Mr. Duchemin that so far as I saw I was satisfied with the fairness with which he conducted the investigation. At the time I made this statement to Mr. Duchemin I was not aware that at the beginning of the investigation Mr. G. W. Kyte, M.P., had asked Mr. Duchemin for the privilege of representing Mr. McLeod at the investigation. I had not been informed of the insolent and offensive language used by Mr. Duchemin towards Mr. Kyte and his refusal to permit Mr. Kyte to examine the witnesses and his threat to remove Mr. Kyte from the room.

I learned these facts afterwards, and the next day I met Mr. Duchemin and I told him what I thought of his conduct. I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and knowing it to be of the same effect as if taken under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

C. P. Bissett,
Nova Scotia.

Taken and declared at St. Peters in the county of Richmond, N.S., this 14th day of December, A.D. 1912. Before me.

Angus J. MacCuish,
A commissioner for taking affidavits, in the county of Richmond.

It goes to show how necessary it is to be fortified for the hon. member for Annapolis who reads the reckless statement placed in his hand by Mr. Duchemin. This proves how reckless a character Mr. Duchemin is and I think there has been evidence adduced to-day to show how unreliable is any ex parte statement from that quarter. The hon. member for Annapolis in December and again about a month ago in this House, stated over and over that Mr. Duchemin never refused counsel at his investigations.

Mr. DAVIDSON: Excuse me, I never made any such statement.

Mr. KYTE: The hon. gentleman's statements are on record.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I desire to state in the most emphatic way that the hon. gentleman is absolutely in error.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must accept the statement.

Mr. KYTE: The hon. member for Cumberland made reference to the same thing.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I ask a ruling.

Mr. KYTE: If the hon. member states that he did not say so, I accept his statement, and refer hon. gentlemen to the report of the debates.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I am not satisfied with that retraction. I did not make any such statement, and I ask the hon. gentleman to take it back unequivocally.

Mr. KYTE: I accept the denial and refer hon. members to the report of debates.

Mr. DAVIDSON: That is absolutely satisfactory.

Mr. KYTE: Here is a statement of Mr. Duchemin in which in at least two instances he admits he did not permit counsel. He says inasmuch as the prosecution had no counsel, he would not permit me to represent the accused. Therefore, all the furore raised about the fairness of Mr. Duchemin and his conforming to the provisions of the Act falls to the ground and we have from his own mouth, as re-echoed by the hon. member for Annapolis, that the charges are true, that he has violated the Inquiries Act and has not permitted counsel to be heard. There is one statement which I have to make further, that is that the hon. member for Annapolis seems to have special interest in the county of Richmond and to represent to this House certain matters relating to that county. There was a time when the hon. member for Annapolis did visit Richmond; there was a time when he did spend some days in the town in which I live. The last time he visited there, so far as I know, his removal from the town synchronized with the unexpected arrival of an irate husband.

Mr. HAZEN: I suggest to the members of the committee that it is getting late in the evening, and as we want to make some progress we might go on and take up the items, and then, if hon. gentlemen wish to resume the question of dismissals afterwards, we will hold one item with the understanding that any matter can be discussed on it that has any relation whatever to the Marine and Fisheries Department. By that means we shall get ahead and no man will be shut off.

Mr. LAW: I do not think the request is fair. This whole discussion was brought on by the hon. member for Kings, and we have wasted some hours on the subject. I would say to the hon. member for Kings that whenever he rises to address the House he reminds me of the little boy who got into his neighbour's orchard and had eaten more green apples than were good for him—

The CHAIRMAN: Of course the hon. member is aware that nothing offensive is in order.

Mr. LAW: I was stating a fact, and I submit that if this House does not prorogue by the middle of June hon. members opposite cannot blame members on this side. That is sure. I have one or two complaints of which I gave notice, there is one to which I would call attention of the minister if he has the papers here, but if he insists on not hearing it to-night I will bring it up some other time.

Mr. HAZEN: Go on, if you want to sit all night, go on.

Mr. LAW: I would like to bring up the dismissal of the port physician at Yarmouth. This is a matter which will reflect no credit on the minister. The dismissal of Dr. C. A. Webster will certainly not add lustre to the minister, but place him before the committee and the people in a most unenviable position. I put two questions on the Order Paper some little time ago in reference to this dismissal.

Mr. Webster had been acting in the position of port physician for a number of years to the entire satisfaction of the department, and of the mariners who were confined in the marine hospital in Yarmouth, and gave every satisfaction to all parties concerned. He was going away to take a post graduate course in London. Dr. Webster wrote to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the 22nd of January and asked him for three months' leave of absence to go to London, in order to take a post graduate course. I have before me a letter from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, dated January 30, 1912, as follows:

30th January, 1912.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant, applying for three months' leave of absence in order to attend a post-graduate course in England.

In reply, I have to inform you that the desired leave has been granted.

Please report when you return to duty.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) C. Stanton,
Assistant Deputy Minister.

Dr. C. A. Webster,
Medical Superintendent Marine Hospital,
Yarmouth, N.S.

On receipt of this document, Dr. Webster proceeded to London to take his post graduate course, taking it for granted that when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the officials of his department gave him leave of absence for three months he could depend upon their word. But what do we find? On March 9 a letter was sent to Dr. Webster which he did not receive until sometime after his arrival in London, and you will note that March 9 was only ten days after the Department of Marine and Fisheries had given him leave of absence. Mr. Stanton, the assistant deputy minister, wrote to Dr. Webster at Yarmouth this letter:

Sir, I have to inform you that as it is your intention to be absent from Yarmouth for some time.

And I wish to draw attention to the way that letter is worded.

As it is your intention to be absent from Yarmouth for some time, the department has decided to discontinue your services as Port Physician at that port to attend to sick seamen entitled to relief under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, and to appoint in your room and stead Dr. S. W. Williamson. The Collector of Customs at Yarmouth has been so advised, and directed to send all sick seamen to Dr. Williamson entitled to the relief above mentioned.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) C. Stanton.

Dr. C. A. Webster,
Yarmouth, N.S.,

I asked some questions in the House on February 24, which were answered as follows:

Monday, February, 24, 1913.

Mr. Law:—

No. 14.

1. Why was Dr. C. A. Webster dismissed from the position of Port Physician at Yarmouth, N.S.?

2. Where any requests made for his dismissal? If so, by whom?

3. If any requests were made, were they verbal or in wrting?

4. If any charges were made against Dr. Webster, were said charges investigated? If not why not?

Mr. Hazen:—

1. The services of Dr. Webster were discontinued in the interest of the public service.

2. Yes, by persons enjoying the confidence of the minister.

3. Verbal.

4. The facts were sufficiently established not to warrant the expense of an investigation.

I criticize the action of the minister in connection with the discharge of Dr. Webster as one of the meanest and most contemptible acts that was ever performed by any minister occupying a seat in this House. Dr. Webster went away with the distinct understanding, with a letter from the Department of Marine, giving him three months' leave of absence; but ten days after he left to go to London the department coolly dismissed him and the minister cannot say he had nothing to do with it because on the 9th of February, only eighteen days after Dr. Webster had asked for leave of absence, and only ten days after he had been granted leave this letter was sent to Mr. Knowles E. Crosby:

February 9, 1912.

My Dear Sir,—

With reference to the matter of appointing a Port Physician at Yarmouth, will you please forward to me a recommendation for this position, such recommendation to be signed by yourself and three members of the committee.

Your early attention to this matter will oblige.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) J. D. Hazen.

Knowles E. Crosby, K.C.
Hebron, N.S.

In the documents which were presented to the House in answer to the motion which I made, there is not one single word of complaint against Dr. Webster. In fact I am confident that no word of complaint could be made against him. He is one of the most successful and most respected physicians in the town of Yarmouth, a man who is absolutely non-partisan. In order to prove that assertion I will state that during the last summer a gentleman who has been doing business in the near vicinity of Dr. Webster's office asked me whether Dr. Webster was a Liberal or a Conservative. I do not think a man could have any better recommendation as to his non-partisan feelings than this statement. I understand, of course, that the gentleman who now occupies the position was given it on account of having run in the election in Yarmouth in 1908. Of course he was defeated, and I suppose that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries felt very kindly towards him for allowing himself to be made a sacrifice for the party and desired to give him some important position, for this position is worth $400 per year. I wish to refer to a letter which Mr. Crosby sent to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Hebron, N.S., February 13th, 1912.
Hon J. D. Hazen, K.C., M.P.,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
Ottawa.

Dear Sir.—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 9th inst regarding the appointment of Port Physician at Yarmouth, and that I forward you at once a recommendation for this office.

In compliance with your request and with the wish of the conservative party in this county, I beg to place before you the name of S. W. Williamson, M.D., who will fill the duties of that office to the entire satisfaction of your department.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) Knowles E. Crosby.

But there seems to have been some little hitch in connection with the matter. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not seem to be inclined to take the word of Knowles E. Crosby, and he was asked to send another letter signed by the whole patronage committee in the town of Yarmouth. That letter is dated February 26th, 1912:

Hebron, N.S., Feb. 26, 1912.
Hon. J. D. Hazen, K.C., M.P.,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Owing to the fact that my request that S. W. Williamson, M.D., receive the appointment to the position of port physician for Yarmouth, went forward without the signatures of my advisory committee, through error, several days since, and as we here are very anxious that this appointment should be made at once, I am inclosing herewith another request, signed by said committee.

I trust you will be able to accede to our request and fill this apointment as soon as possible.

I am, yours most respectfully,
(Sgd.) Knowles E. Crosby,
Howard W. Corning, M.L.A.,
Robert Binguy,
R. S. Eakins.

I just wish to say that when Dr. Webster left Yarmouth for London, he recommended Dr. Perrin for the position, a gentleman respected in the town of Yarmouth who occupies a high position in his profession, and who has been a strong tory all his life. I do not think he was ever guilty of giving a liberal vote. However, he is none the worse for that; I respect him for it. Dr. Perrin was appointed, and if rumours are true, and I think I am not far astray, a couple of conservative doctors met in some office in the Department of Marine and Fisheries in Ottawa, and almost came to blows. However, Dr. Williamson was a lucky man to get the plunder. I desire to say again that the position in which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has placed himself before the House and the country in connection with this matter is a very poor one. When an hon. gentleman occupying the position that he does gives his word to an official of his department that he is entitled to three months' leave of absence, and in an underhand way appoints another man to the position within ten days of leave of absence being granted, the hon. minister is entitled in my mind to the censure of this committee and of the House. Dr. Webster was a valuable man in the position which he occupied, and if there ever was a man who could be said to be non-partisan, he is that man. I desire to place upon record my entire disapproval of the whole proceeding. If Dr. Webster had been a partisan and had attended political meetings, if he had ever spoken at a political meeting, or had acted as agent at any polling place for any Liberal candidate, even then I would have expected that he would be granted an investigation. I have no regard for the man who, without any provocation whatever, endeavours to rob another man of the position, which he has filled to the satisfaction of the department and of the public. I say it is a mean and contemptible action.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend says that this does not meet with his approval. I am afraid it would be rather difficult to say or do anything on this side of the House that would not meet with his disapproval. I am not at all astonished at the violent and extraordinary language which the hon. gentleman has used. Let me point out the facts in regard to this matter. I think Dr. Webster is the last man in the world who has any right to find fault because he has been removed from office. My hon. friend speaks of the contempt he has for the man who seeks to deprive another man of his position. Let us see whether he will have the same contempt for the man who took office from another man who had been removed without the slightest justification. What are the facts? The facts are that Dr. Perrin was appointed port physician in 1879. The appointment is not a permanent one, it is not made by Order in Council, it is of a temporary character, and is made by departmental letter. On the 13th of December, 1896, seventeen years after Dr. Perrin had been appointed, and shortly after the elcetions of 1896 when the liberal party came into power, Dr. Perrin wrote to the department stating that he had heard he was to be removed from office and asking to be given a fair hearing. On the 22nd of January, 1897, not more than three weeks afterwards, the then minister in a letter to Mr. Flint, the member for Yarmouth, stated that he deemed it advisable in the public interest to dispense with the office of port physician at Yarmouth, and asked for the name of a suitable doctor to attend sick seamen when required. He dismissed the port physician and got the name of another doctor to attend to sick seamen when required, the other physician to be paid for the work he did. That was a very easy way of getting rid of Dr. Perrin, against whom no charge was made, and of appointing Dr. Webster to the position. That is how it was done. They did not dismiss Dr. Perrin. They said they did not need his services, and they dispensed with his services and appointed Dr. Charles A. Webster to do exactly the same work. Not a single charge of partisanship or of anything else is on record against Dr. Perrin. He was advised in January, 1897, that his services were no longer required. The collector of customs was instructed to employ Dr. Webster, and in about a year and a half, in November, 1899, the department which had said there was no need for a port physician, appointed by departmental letter Dr. Webster at a salary of $250 and on the 1st of July, 1898, they increased that amount to $400. When my hon. friend has such a contempt for the man who will take another's position, what does he think of Dr. Webster taking that position away from Dr. Perrin, when there was not a single charge against Dr. Perrin, and when the department had to resort to the subterfuge of pretending that they were going to abolish the office. These are the facts. Dr. Webster has no ground of complaint. The appointment is not permanent, it is not made by Order in Council, and in the circumstances the Government were justified in making the appointment of Dr. Williamson.

Mr. LAW: What has the hon. minister to say as to the granting of leave of absence to Dr. Webster.

Mr. HAZEN: What has that got to do with it? What difference would it have made if leave of absence had not been granted. It does not affect the merits of the case one way or the other. If hon. members have a contempt for Dr. Williamson, what do they think of the man who took the position in the circumstances under which Dr. Webster took it from Dr. Perrin in 1897?

Mr. LAW: The two cases are not analagous. Dr. Perrin is a strong conservative and I respect him for it.

Mr. HAZEN: And so you got rid of him.

Mr. LAW: I had nothing to do with it. Dr. Perrin was a strong partisan, a strong worker for his party while he held that office, and when the change of government took place he deserved to be dismissed for his connection with the elections that had just taken place. Dr. Perrin was not disappointed in that connection. On the other hand, I do not believe that Dr. Webster ever attended a political meeting in his life, and I doubt whether nine-tenths of the people of Yarmouth know which side of politics Dr. Webster is on. The minister may shirk the proposition as much as he likes, but when he pledges the word of his department that he should have three months' leave of absence, and, within ten days, writes to the tory patronage committee asking them to name his successor—if he can defend an action like that, then any criminal can defend his action if he breaks into a man's henyard and steals his hens.

Agencies, rents and contingencies, $125,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is an increase.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, there is an increase of $8,000. This is the vote for the purpose of carrying on the work of the agencies throughout the country. We have agencies at Halifax, St. John, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Montreal, Parry Sound, Victoria, British Columbia, and Prince Rupert and sub-agencies at Sydney and Pictou. The increases are in these offices: Nova Scotia, $1,600; New Brunswick, $550; Prince Edward Island, $450; Montreal, $350; Parry Sound, $450; Victoria, $500; Quebec, $2,050.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to ask my hon. friend if he is satisfied with the way in which the agency at Quebec is run. I understand that Mr. Beland, who was appointed some years ago as agent there, is giving his whole time and attention to the agency, and that the public is very well satisfied with his work. I would like to know if what I hear is true that Mr. Beland gives general satisfaction to the department.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not know whether it was said he gave general satisfaction or not. Of course at the time he was appointed, he was absolutely inexperienced. There has been some very serious—I would rather tell my hon. friend privately than put it on 'Hansard.'

Mr LEMIEUX: What about the agency in Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN: There were some charges made against the gentleman who is the agent there and who was previously my hon. friend's private secretary or the private secretary for Mr. Brodeur. We have had the charges investigated and in so far as the investigation has gone the charges have not been sustained. The investigation has not been completed, but I do not know that the charges will be sustained.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that you have moved the agency from the building where it used to be located to the Montreal Post Office?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You occupy one of the upper storeys?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. CARROLL: What is the salary of the sub-agent at Sydney and what are his duties?

Mr. HAZEN: His salary is $1,500 and in addition to doing the work that the marine agent usually has to do, in so far as buoys and matters of that kind are concerned, the agent inspects the coal that is purchased at Sydney for the department. My report from the deputy minister is that we have saved the salary of the agent several times over in connection with the work that he does in connection with the inspection of coal.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $700,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is this the same amount?

Mr. HAZEN: The same as last year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Repairs are carried on at the various agencies and you have a steamer which goes to the lighthouses with workmen on board?

Mr. HAZEN: That is so where the lighthouses are out on islands and places like that. There are some cases where lighthouses are on shore and it is more convenient to have the supplies conveyed by vehicles. With regard to building lighthouses, we ask for tenders in every case where it is possible to do so. We have asked for tenders in some cases and have had no tenders submitted for the reason that the isolated position of the site is such that no contractor cares to go there and do the work. Then we build the lighthouse under the direction of one of our inspectors.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where do you get your lights now?

Mr. HAZEN: We get them still in England but we intend to enlarge the depot at Prescott and manufacture them there. Our advices are that we cannot only give employment to many of our people but that we can make a considerable saving.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I see a report in the press that it is the intention to move the Sorel yards to Prescott.

Mr. HAZEN: There is not the slightest foundation for that. On the contrary, we are making arrangements to do more work at Sorel than ever before. We now have three tug boats under construction to be used in connection with the dredges on the St. Lawrence. Some months ago the department asked for tenders for a boat to be used on lake Winnipeg to take the place of the steamer Lady of the Lake which has been condemned. We did not get a tender from any shipbuilding firm in Canada. We were told that it was an out of the way place and that the boat would practically have to be constructed here, taken up there and put together. We decided to build the boat at Sorel under the direction of the foreman of the shipyard. We sent him up to lake Winnipeg to inspect the conditions there and we are going to have the boat built during this summer, which will also give considerable employment.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What is the character of the factory that the Minister is establishing at Prescott? It is to manufacture lights, I understand?

Mr. HAZEN: It cannot be spoken of as "establishing"; it is the enlargement of what is going on at Prescott now. We have a depot at Prescott where we do a lot of work in connection with the lights. We have lights constructed and repaired there and it is found that we can, by enlarging the plant, manufacture the lights of a high grade description which we are now compelled to buy in England.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You mean that you can make the lens?

Mr. HAZEN: We cannot make the lens.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What do you make?

Mr. HAZEN: We get the lens, manufacture the frame and put the lens in.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): Who is the lighthouse keeper at Port Hood?

Mr. HAZEN: Ronald Macdonald.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Why was his predecessor dismissed? His predecessor is a very strong supporter of the party in power. He is a brother of the Hon. Senator Macdonald in the other House.

Mr. HAZEN: What is his name?

Mr. CHISHOLM: Macdonald—I have forgotten his first name.

Mr. HAZEN: I have no information on the subject here.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Will the minister be good enough to bring me some information about the matter? He is the lighthouse keeper at Port Hood. I am very anxious to know why this gentleman was dismissed, inasmuch as the liberal party never saw fit to dismiss him. He was a very efficient officer. He is a brother of Senator Macdonald. I would like to know what the qualifications are of the man who succeeded him.

Mr. HAZEN: I shall be glad to get all the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The minister has now got into the habit of dismissing, and he is consenting to dismiss his own friends.

Mr. HAZEN: I suppose if I did, there would be no objection on the part of my hon. friends opposite.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, $1,000,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: When this item was under discussion last year, the hon. minister will remember that I brought to his attention the necessity of having two small lighthouses on the Bras d'Or lakes, one at Ellis Point and the other at Big Harbour. The minister was good enough to tell me that the matter would receive consideration.

Mr. HAZEN: My recollection of the matter is that I referred it to the lighthouse board. The hon. gentleman knows that all matters in regard to the erection of lighthouses or placing of buoys are referred to that board. I invariably act on their recommendation.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it the same board?

Mr. HAZEN: Well, there are certain officials on it. The president of the Marine Association is on the board, the president of the Shipping Federation. The deputy minister, the chief engineer and the superintendent of lighthouses of the department are on the board. Therefore, the personnel changes as the officials change. I think the lighthouse board were not favourably disposed to it. If my hon. friend believes that they are necessary, I would be very glad if he would attend a meeting of the lighthouse board. We shall probably have one in a few days and he can place before them the reasons why these lighthouses are desirable.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As regards buoys, acetylene gas buoys have been quite successful on the river St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. What number of buoys have you now?

Mr. HAZEN: The total number of gas buoys here is 281. Of that there would be 181 acetylene gas buoys. This is the last report of the department.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister inform me if there is any land to place a signal station on at a point called White Point on the coast of my constituency? It is a very dangerous point, where a number of wrecks have taken place. The late Administration had laid plans to place a signal station of some kind at that point.

Mr. HAZEN: If it is White Head the hon. member means, the work is under construction now. We are speaking of it as White Head.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Probably it is the same place.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): The minister has in his possession a couple of petitions from the fishermen's union of Port Hood asking for the placing of buoys at the northern entrance of Port Hood harbour. I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity for the placing of buoys there. I know personally that a large number of wrecks have occurred there, and I would ask the minister to consider the matter.

Mr. HAZEN: As I pointed out to my hon. friend, that is a matter entirely to be dealt with by the lighthouse board and those petitions have been referred to them for consideration. I shall draw their attention to what my hon. friend has said about the matter.

Mr. LAW: I understand there was a delegation from Yarmouth representing the board of trade and the town council. Among other matters they asked for some buoys or lights near the entrance of Yarmouth harbour. Is it the intention of the minister to grant their request?

Mr. HAZEN: The matter was referred to the lighthouse board. I believe they did not grant all the delegates asked for, but they granted a portion of their requests. I do not know what portion.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay and lake Superior and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $30,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is in order to facilitate the shipping of grain by tender.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. We make a contract, but up in that district we have found that there is only one gentleman who really is equipped to do the work. That is, Mr. James Whalen.

Mr. CARROLL: I would like to say a word with reference to ice-breaking in the harbour of Sydney. I understand from parties there, who are interested in having that harbour opened up early in the spring, that requisitions were made last year for ice-breakers. Those requisitions could not be granted owing to the shortage in the ice-breaking boats. It is just as important to have the ice broken early in Sydney harbour as it is to keep the river St. Lawrence open, because perhaps there are no other two points where there is so much coal carrying trade as between Sydney and Montreal. Last spring the Stanley was in Sydney and did very good work there in the way of ice-breaking between the mouth of the harbour and the shipping pier of the Dominion Coal Company. It is true she became disabled there, but she became disabled at other points also. I have it from the Dominion Coal Company's engineers that it is quite practicable to have the harbour of Sydney open very early in the month of March. It is proved that it is possible to keep the harbour open practically all winter between the shipping pier of the Dominion Coal Company and the mouth of the harbour. I am only too glad to give my support to the passing of this item, provided that other places besides the St. Lawrence river, and Thunder bay are given some consideration. I maintain that it is just as important to the whole of Canada to have Sydney harbour open early in the year as any other point; for, if a shortage of coal takes place in Montreal in the spring, it is quite practicable to ship coal from Sydney harbour to Montreal in March, provided proper attention is given to icebreaking in Sydney harbour. Many imagine that Sydney harbour is frozen over for seven months in the year. As a matter of fact, there are some winter seasons when it is open all through. It is open all year round between the mouth of the harbour and North Sydney, and it is only a matter, I should say, of a little ice breaking to have navigation open all the year round to the Atlantic, and so to the Atlantic ports. I take it that it is important to Canada that the great centres, Montreal and Quebec, should have coal. I would like to impress on the minister that next spring he should have icebreaking apparatus in Sydney harbour.

Mr. HAZEN: We had a little discussion on this subject this afternoon, when it was referred to by the hon. member for North Cape Breton. We have done all we could do with the equipment at our command, and will do what we can in the future. In the spring of 1912, we were able to do a great deal more than we did this year, when the Stanley met with an accident and was laid up for repairs. We have no icebreakers down there except the Stanley and the boats that run across the Northumberland straits. In about a year and a half we shall have icebreakers available, as we are going to have new icebreakers in the St. Lawrence, which will free the Montcalm for work along the gulf; and when the car ferry is put on between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, there will be no further use on that route for the Earl Grey and the Minto, both icebreakers. There are demands from other places, such as Dalhousie and Gaspé. No doubt icebreakers will open the harbours earlier, and so will help the Dominion generally.

Mr. NESBITT: How long were the Government able to keep the harbour open at Thunder Bay ?

Mr. HAZEN: Until the 10th of January, and this year we got it open earlier than usual. The result was to prevent the congestion of grain on the railway in the Northwest. The grain people tell us that it was of the greatest possible advantage. Probably from 13,000,000 to 14,000,000 bushels of grain were taken off the railway and put into ships, and the congestion of the winter before last did not exist last winter.

To provide for the administration of pilotage and the maintenance and repair of the steamer Eureka, $36,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Where is the Eureka?

Mr. HAZEN: At Father Point. She takes the pilots to and from the vessels as they come up the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CARROLL: Has the minister any control over pilotage commissions such as we have in Cape Breton ?

Mr. HAZEN: There is a pilotage commission who have direct control; they are appointed by Order in Council. If the pilots do not discharge their duty satisfactorily they can be removed by Order in Council.

Mr. CARROLL: Old and reliable pilots have been dismissed from the service at Sydney harbour and others have been suspended. They tell me it was for political reasons. As to that, I do not know. I know the minister or the department is not responsible for that, but the commission is responsible. One of the most reliable pilots we have on the coast of Sydney harbour, resident at Low Point, was dismissed a year and a half ago, and his place was filled with an inexperienced man. Many of the mariners who come there have complained to the Pilotage Commission of the appointment of an inexperineced man. It may be that these gentlemen do not see eye to eye with the commission in the matter of politics. But if there is one thing more than another in which a man's politics should not interfere with his job, it is pilotage. A pilot must be an experienced man. He does not get his position, nor his pay from the Government; his pay comes out of the fees the pilots themselves earn. It seems to me unfair to dismiss a man from such a position even for partisanship. I am not finding fault with the minister, because I know he has no control over that. But I suggest that he point out to the commission that it is more important to have reliable and experienced men to look after the ships coming into our harbours than to have men belonging to one particular party. I know that political friends of the minister of Marine and Fisheries have regretted the dismissal of these men without his knowledge and authority. Steps should be taken so that men who have been engaged in the pilotage business for years should not be disturbed.

Mr. McKENZIE: I brought this matter to the notice of the commission before, but there is a little history about it that the minister should know. I have known Sydney harbour intimately for thirty years. For the first ten years of that time there was no such thing as the board of commissioners, and a man went piloting as he went fishing. If he got a steamer to bring in, he got his fee. There was very often a battle royal as to who should reach the vessel first. So the men got together and organized—grit and tory. There was no talk of politics; they were simply a body of men engaged in business. Everybody joined the organization, and, so far as I know, no politics entered into it until this Government came into power. In the fifteen years of liberal rule only one was suspended, and that was on the ground that he sold liquor while a pilot, and the board themselves agreed to his dismissal. But twenty-five per cent, perhaps thirty per cent of the pilots have been dismissed since this Government came into power. A man is given to understand that if he is not a tory he is not needed in the pilot business. That is high-handed, it may have been a miner or fisherman who gave up all his time to pilotage twenty-five years ago.

Mr. HAZEN: Do they want apprentices there?

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes, and everyone of the apprentices have been dismissed as well as the pilots and the authorities had to go out to the ordinary rank and file to get men to put in their places. Five years of apprenticeship is supposed to qualify a man to be a pilot. They had to go out to the farmers and miners and people along the shore and pick up pilots and put them in charge of ships of enormous value to bring them into that harbour. That is not business and there is no justification for it.

Mr. HAZEN: We have no knowledge of the matter in the department; I shall make inquiry about it. Speaking without having the facts all before me it seems to me a most unwise thing to dismiss the apprentices who would be pilots in the future. Of course, it may be that there are men acting as pilots who from infirmity of hearing or eyesight are no longer fit for the position. In Quebec they have to undergo an examination in this respect every year and usually a certain number have to drop out.

Pensions of $300 each to pilots, $6,300.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I should like to know if the department intends to act on the report of the Pilotage Commission?

Mr. HAZEN: We are already acting on it so far as the recommendations for the Montreal district are concerned. We are practically able to act on the recommendations without legislation. In the Montreal district, one of the recommendations is to give larger remuneration to the pilots. We are doing that. Another is that the Montreal office in Quebec should be placed in a different position. There are some regulations about the employment of pilots for special lines. If a man is employed for a special line of ships his name is taken off the tour de role. It was recommended that a pilot would not have to be taken off the tour de role if a line had a vessel coming up only once a month. There is a provision that two lines having two ships coming once a month will get the services of the same pilot. There are a number of regulations of that sort. The pilotage service of the Montreal district seems to the commission to be very satisfactory and the changes are not drastic or important. With regard to the Quebec district, the changes recommended are more important and it may be that we shall have to have some legislation at another session with regard to that. While the Minister of Marine has nominally authority over the pilotage, as a matter of fact, he has little authority over the Quebec pilots, what is called the corporation of pilots has power to appoint pilots and arrange everything. The recommendation is that that corporation shall be abolished and the control placed directly in the minister. Then there is a recommendation that the present system of pooling the earnings of all the pilots shall be abolished. It is thought that this system discourages individual effort on the part of the pilots. They also recommend a change with regard to the system at Father Point by which pilots are placed upon the ships. In the old days the pilots had sailing boats that used to sail up and down the river and they made their farthest point down the river west of Father Point. By arrangement with the Marine Department they agreed to give up the sailing boats and the Department of Marine and Fisheries provided a steamer that would always be at Father Point to take a pilot out to the vessel. This steamer is the Eureka. The pilots go down and lives in boarding houses and wait until the ship comes, and they are taken on the Eureka to the ship. They say that it is a bad system, that these men are loafing about boarding houses for hours at a time, and they practically put it that there is a danger of their drinking, and that a pilot in this condition is not fit to pilot a ship. They recommend that a steamer be purchased that will be large enough to afford accommodation for the pilots so that they can go down and remain on the ship, under the supervision of an official of the department who will preserve order, and stay on the boat until their services are required.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I thank the minister for his clear explanation. Too much care cannot be taken in connection with the organization on a sound basis of the pilotage system. My hon. friend knows that the St. Lawrence, especially last year, has been most unfortunate in view of the numerous accidents that have taken place. We speak very often about the high insurance rates. The rates have gone up of late years on account of such accidents and certainly any action of my right hon. friend to place matters in a proper position is to be highly commended. The Shipping Federation in Montreal and the business community are waiting with anxiety the outcome of this pilotage question which has been a vexed question for many years.

Telephonic reporting stations along the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, $30,000.

Mr. HAZEN: The increase of $6,000 includes $3,000 for the salaries of additional clerks, one extra clerk for the Montreal office, a temporary clerk for the Quebec office when occasion demands and an extra night operator on the river will probably be required. It makes allowance also for certain increases of salary to some officers.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is a very useful organization in case of fogs.

Mr. HAZEN: We could not give it up. The shipping people would rebel if we proposed to do so. As a matter of fact, I think it should be extended.

Marine hospitals, $68,000.

Mr. LAW: Is it the intention of the department to close the marine hospital at Yarmouth?

Mr. HAZEN: The policy of the government has been to close these marine hospitals in towns where there are public hospitals. For instance in St. John there was a very fine marine hospital. Some years ago it was closed and an arrangement was made with the commissioners of the public hospital to take all sailors. We paid so much per day or per week, and it has been found much cheaper for the country and also, with a really good and well equipped hospital, the men got better treatment and care than in a marine hospital. The sailors prefer it. If there is in the town of Yarmouth a thoroughly equipped hospital of that sort to which sailors could be sent it would be in the public interest that an arrangement should be made in Yarmouth similar to that in other cities.

Mr. LAW: The Government owns a nice property there, the hospital was built only a few years ago and it seems too bad too throw the whole thing away. Does the port physician attend to sick sailors in the public hospital if they are sent there?

Mr. HAZEN: I believe in some cases he does and in others he does not. In some cases they are attended by the regular physician at the hospital. Then the Government pays a larger fee than where their own physician attends the sailors. My hon. friend referred to the building. There was a very nice building in St. John, which was abandoned fifteen or sixteen years ago. The Government leased it at a nominal rent to a public institution, a home for incurables, and if a similar step were taken in Yarmouth there is probably some public purpose for which the building could be used and the Government, I am sure, would be willing to rent it for such a purpose on almost nominal terms.

Mr. LAW: I understand that it has been decided to abandon the hospital?

Mr. HAZEN: It is under consideration, it has not been decided.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I have on a number of occasions brought to the attention of the department the question of establishing a marine hospital at Canso.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there no public hospital there to which the sailors could be conveniently sent?

Mr. SINCLAIR: No, there is no public hospital at Canso, and a great many ships come there during the run of the season, especially fishing vessels. It is a port of call for sailing vessels and sometimes there is quite a fleet in the harbour. Sailors become sick and have to be sent to some boarding house and the chances of recovery are very poor indeed with the attendance that they can get in one of these sailors' boarding houses. A great many ships from Lunenburg call at Canso for bait and shelter and are there occasionally while fishing on the banks. A former member for Lunenburg joined with me the request that something be done in regard to the matter. I regard it as very important.

Mr. HAZEN: I think there is merit in what the hon. gentleman says. The matter was discussed at the last meeting of the Fisheries Board, and the officials of the department are getting information together now as to the number of sailors to be treated and so on.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Has the minister given any further consideration to my proposal of last year to have a ship cruise around the banks among the fishery vessels and give the fiishermen medical aid in cases of illness?

Mr. HAZEN: That question of medical aid to the fishermen has been engaging the attention of the department. I hope to have a scheme to lay before Parliament before the close of the session.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): It appears to me rather strange that seamen must leave the province before they are entitled to treatment under the law. If a ship goes from Margaree to the Magdalen islands, the sailors on board are entitled to participate in the Sick Mariners' Fund, but if the ship goes to Halifax, they are not qualified to participate in the fund.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman is correct in stating what the law is. It has been the law for a number of years.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I would expect that the sailors on board a ship going to the the port of Halifax, would be entitled to the same privileges as the sailors on board a ship that goes ten miles. I do not regard it as a just law.

Mr. HAZEN: It is the law, but perhaps some scheme might be worked out interprovincially.

Mr. LOGGIE: Might I draw the minister's attention to the salary paid to the keepers at the marine hospitals? We have a keeper in charge of the marine hospital at Douglastown, who is alleged to be receiving starvation wages. His wage has not been increased for the last fifteen or twenty years. I have no authority to speak on behalf of the keeper of this hospital; I take it upon myself to draw the attention of the minister to his case, and I know he will give it the consideration it deserves.

Mr. HAZEN: I will certainly pay as great attention to this suggestion as I would to any that comes from my hon. friend. But would it not be a better policy to close the hospital at Douglastown, and to send the sailors to Chatham, only a few miles away. There is a wonderfully good hospital which is managed by the Sisters of Charity there, and which gets a grant from the province. It might be more in the interests of the sailors to do that.

Mr. LOGGIE: That suggestion was placed before the public four or five years ago, and the people on the Miramichi resented very much the idea of closing that old institution. The sailors that go there are well attended, and the keeper is a good man, while the hospital is centrally situated. The shipping interests and timber merchants are very strongly in favour of retaining the old hospital.

Salaries and imbursements of fishery officers, $230,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: We will leave the first item, and pass the other. I understand that some hon. members would like to discuss some matters.

Mr. HAZEN: Very good, let the first item stand.

Mr. CARROLL: Have the fishery officers for eastern Nova Scotia been appointed?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. CARROLL: Has there been any increase in the number?

Mr. HAZEN: Practically no increase this year.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): Any decrease?

Mr. HAZEN: No, I think the number is the same.

Mr. LAW: Has the minister increased the salaries of all the fisheries inspectors?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Oyster culture, $6,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): What is being done in regard to oyster culture?

Mr. HAZEN: Oyster culture to-day, under the agreement that we have made, is largely being carried on by the provinces. In Prince Edward Island the Government have gone to work on a most extensive and progressive scale. They have granted leases for 5,000 acres of barren oyster beds, the people who have leased the beds are planting them with new oysters and it is expected that the oyster industry in a few years in Prince Edward Island will be restored to what it was before it was depleted, and will be a valuable asset to the province. I understand that a similar course is being adopted in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I do not think that in New Brunswick they have gone ahead as fast as they have in Prince Edward Island. In Nova Scotia we have also entered into the same arrangement with the provincial government which practically gives them the control. Following the amendment of the Fisheries Act of last session enabling agreements to be entered into with the provincial governments whereby they would take up the leasing of areas on which to carry on artificial culture and cultivation of oysters, agreements ere entered into with the Maritime provinces and British Columbia. The work carried on by the federal government will be limited. An experimental oyster bed was, two years ago, laid out in Richmond bay, Prince Edward Island, and the following year in Caribou harbour, Pictou county. Last year an experimental bed was started in Bay du Vin, but was not finished. It will be completed during the coming year and the oyster expert will therefore devote his time to the cleaning and improving of the public beds.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How long does it take an oyster to grow up?

Mr. HAZEN: It takes him from three to four years. If my hon. friend wants to hear about oysters he will learn all about them if he runs up against the Premier of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I thought that Prince Edward Island was taken up with foxes just now.

Mr. HAZEN: Oysters and foxes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The best advertisement of Canadian oysters is that which they have received from Lord Strathcona. He has planted a bed of Prince Edward Island oysters about the island at the north of Scotland where he has his castle. The plantation has been a great success.

Fisheries patrol service, $120,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): What is the explanation of the increase of $45,000?

Mr. HAZEN: The reason of that is that we have five new patrol boats on the Atlantic coast in commission this year as compared with last year and also an extra one on the Pacific coast.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Are these boats built by tender and contract?

Mr. HAZEN: In all cases by tender and contract.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): A few days ago I asked for a return relative to the production of the dog fish plant at Clarke's harbour. Possibly that cannot be brought down while Parliament is in session and if not, I would request that the minister when it is completed, send it to me at Halifax.

Mr. HAZEN: Certainly.

To provide for an exhibit of fresh and cured food fish at the Toronto annual exhibition, $10,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: I would like to ask the minister on what terms the dog fish plant at Shippegan is to be operated this year?

Mr. HAZEN: I regret to say that we have been unable to make a lease there. We thought we had one made but the gentleman with whom we were dealing backed out.

Mr. SINCLAIR: This seems to be a new item in regard to the exhibit of fresh fish at Toronto. I suggest to the minister that they establish a fish kitchen at the exhibition, have some fresh fish cooked in a nice way, sold cheaply and served to the people of Ontario so that they will get a taste of the good fish we have on the Atlantic coast. I am quite sure that if you once give them a taste of it they will not eat any more lake fish but will want our fish all the time. I think if that is carried out it will be a very good idea.

Mr. HAZEN: I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that because that is exactly what the department is arranging to do in addition to making the exhibit. We were approached over a year ago by the directors of the exhibition. They wanted us to make an exhibit at the fair last year. We felt that we could not, in the time at our disposal, make an exhibit that would be a credit to the department, so declined to undertake it. After talking it over we came to the conclusion that it would be good for the exhibition and a good advertisement of our good fish as well if we had at the Toronto exhibition, which is the largest annual exhibition held on the continent of North America, a first-class exhibition of the food fishes of the country arranged in an attractive manner. It would also introduce Atlantic food fishes into the West. The officials of the department who are working out the plan have made a recommendation along the line which has been suggested by my hon. friend from Guysborough.

Salaries, building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments, $400,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): There is a large amount of money expended on this particular work, not too large, I admit, and I would like to ask if careful attention is paid to the appointment of officers in charge of these establishments. I have in mind a particular hatchery in Nova Scotia where the department appointed a man as superintendent two years ago. I cannot conceive of this man being a proper person for the position inasmuch as he is seventy years old. I would expect a man filling a position of such importance to have at least reasonable youth to his credit.

Mr. HAZEN: My officials tell me they pay as careful attention as they can, but no doubt mistakes are made at times. A trouble does exist, I think, with regard to fish hatcheries in the fact that we have not in Canada enough men trained in that branch of science. Within the last few months the departmental officers have arranged—and I have approved of a schedule that has been prepared, arranging for the officers in the different fish hatcheries, what pay they shall receive when appointed, what the increases, and what the maximum shall be. We are trying to work out a system under which we can get better-trained officials than we have at the present time. The work has gone on very rapidly in the past two years, almost too rapidly. There have been splendid results from the salmon hatcheries, but it is doubtful if there have been any results at all from the lobster hatcheries. There are white-fish, pickerel, and salmon hatcheries which have given good results. The demand for these hatcheries is becoming greater all the time in places where streams and lakes are getting less full of fish. On Lake Erie, where there are hatcheries, there is no doubt that the supply of whitefish has been pretty well kept up; whereas in some of the other great lakes where there are no hatcheries the supply of whitefish has very largely decreased.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The salmon hatchery at Gaspé is quite a success.

Mr. HAZEN: The salmon fishers around that coast tell me there are more salmon there than there were ten or fifteen years ago. They attribute it to that hatchery. Some of it may be due to the protection being better than it was twenty or twenty-five years ago. The number of shad was becoming less, and last year we established shad hatcheries. A shad hatchery cannot be made like other hatcheries in a fixed place; it has to be removed from place to place because the shad is such a delicate fish. You cannot take it out like a salmon, and strip it; you have to get it over the spawning bed when it is quite ripe. If you do not do that, you loose the shads and spawn and everything else. At the first hatchery of the kind in the Dominion last year, they got about 5,000,000 eggs that were deposited. This year they expect to do very much better. As to what the result will be, we cannot tell for perhaps three or four years. I have great hopes that it will increase the number of shads.

Mr. NESBITT: Is the hon. minister going to ask for tenders for a boat on Lake Winnipeg?

Mr. HAZEN: We asked for tenders. It is to take the place of a boat called the Lady of the Lake, which has been the Marine and Fisheries boat there. Not a single firm tendered. They considered that Lake Winnipeg was an out-of-the-way place, and they would have to build the boat largely here and set it up when they got it to the lake. Therefore we decided to build the boat ourselves in the Government yards at Sorel.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Whilst I was reading the Star to-night I found what I wanted to quote this afternoon about ship construction in Canada. It is as follows:

> Collingwood, Ont., May 23.—The steel freighter, James Carruthers, claimed to be the largest of its kind ever constructed in the British Empire, was successfully launched yesterday at the yards of the Collingwood Ship-building Company.
> The new vessel was christened by Miss Lillian A. Wright, daughter of Mr. A. A. Wright, general manager of the St. Lawrence and Chicago Navigation Company, under whose colours the James Carruthers will ply on the upper lakes.
> The vessel is 550 feet long, 38 feet beam, and 30 feet deep, and has a carrying capacity of 375,000 bushels of wheat, or 600,000 bushels of oats, and about 11,000 tons of coal.

I submit that to my hon. friend for his consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): How is the Advisory Fishery Board getting on?

Mr. HAZEN: We have it organized this year. There are three divisions, an eastern division, a Pacific division and a prairie division, the prairie division being the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta where conditions are different. There have been two meetings of the Atlantic division here, and one meeting of the Pacific division. I think there is to be a meeting of the prairie division in June. The officials of the department believe it will be a great help.

Mr. SINCLAIR: My hon. friend suggests that lobster hatcheries are not doing good work. There is evidence to the contrary in some places. The hatchery that was established in Pictou a number of years ago has increased the crop of lobsters in that vicinity. The same thing prevails at Canso, but the Canso hatchery has not been operated so long as the one at Pictou. After his experts have been experimenting for some ten or fifteen years it is humiliating that the minister has to come before the committee and say he does not know. If his experts on this question were as they ought to be, they would follow up the spawn they put in the sea and be able to tell the minister whether any of them thrive or not.

Mr. LAW: Are any new lobster ponds to to be bought this year?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Mr. LAW: There is a natural lobster pond at West Pubnico, Yarmouth county. An official of the department has inspected that pond three times, and I understand he had made a favourable report. The pond can be got for a very reasonable price. There is an increase in this vote of $77,700. That pond, I imagine could be bought for $1,000. I see that last year the minister purchased a lot in Digby for $10,000, which has been assessed for the last three or four years for $300 to $350. If the money is as plentiful as that with the Marine and Fisheries Department it is only fair they should purchase this pond at West Pubnico which will be of benefit to the fisherman of that county as well as of Shelbourne. It is a natural pond and the water flows into it and out of it as the tide moves, and no fresh water goes into it.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman knows that the value of a property cannot be determined by the assessment. I am prepared to justify the purchase of that property and amount paid. It was reported upon by the officers of the department and every precaution taken. The matter of Pubnico has been before the department and I believe that the officers think it a good site, but we have decided not to extend the lobster ponds this year.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What did the minister get in this purchase?

Mr. HAZEN: The area is nineteen acres. A dam has been built and a pond constructed. To go back to the other matter, what strikes me as a non-expert is that more information ought to be had along the line referred to by the hon. member for Guysboro. We do not know whether the lobsters which are hatched out and put in the ocean are devoured by the other fish or what becomes of them. I do not think anything is known to prove that the lobster hatchery has been productive of very good results. I am glad to hear what the hon. gentleman says about Pictou and Canso. But should not we keep the lobsters after they are hatched out in the pond, place them in favourable locations where they could not be preyed upon, and so make sure that a fair proportion of them reach maturity. I think the investigation should take place, and the proper body to make it would be the biological board. This is without casting reflections on the officers of the department who are capable and zealous men. But we have not at this time such information as I speak of.

Mr. SINCLAIR

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Have the lobsters been placed in the pond in Digby?

Mr. HAZEN: They are being placed there.

Mr. MACLEAN: I have heard it stated that fresh water flows into this pond.

Mr. HAZEN: No, that has been diverted.

Mr. McKENZIE: Have we one Fishery Board for the whole of Canada?

Mr. HAZEN: One board divided into three sections; Atlantic, Pacific and prairie sections.

Mr. McKENZIE: Who composes the Atlantic section?

Mr. HAZEN: It is composed of three members from Nova Scotia, three from New Brunswick, one from Prince Edward Island, and a representative from the Gulf of St. Lawrence—from the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. MACLEAN: The hon. member for Yarmouth asked for a return. Will the hon minister expedite that?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: And will he expedite the return respecting the expenses of Commissioner Duchemin which I asked for two months ago—the expenses of Commissioner Duchemin in connection with investigations in Guysborough county, giving the names. A large number of people were beheaded in that county.

Mr. HAZEN: Does that refer to the Department of Marine alone?

Mr. SINCLAIR: To all the departments.

Mr. HAZEN: Then that will be in the hands of the Secretary of State.

Mr. LOGGIE: I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that Miramichi is a district in which a large quantity of shad are caught, and perhaps he would consider adding to the hatchery on the North West Miramichi, a branch of the shad hatchery in connection with the salmon hatchery.

Mr. HAZEN: I was under the impression that the shad fishery of Miramichi was a small one.

Mr. LOGGIE: No, it is a large fishery.

Mr. HAZEN: I have been resting under a mistake.

Mr. CARVELL: A moment before the committee rises—I mentioned earlier in the afternoon about the licenses in the Bay of Fundy—I think a return was moved for by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) regarding the correspondence. If the minister would have it brought down when the committee meets next time, I should like it.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. member for St. John called my attention to the matter On inquiry I found that the return will cover over a thousand pages. It is almost ready and probably will be brought down next week.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Hazen, the House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 26, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 233, for the relief of Frank William Meek.—Mr. Pardee.

PATENT OF COMMERCIAL ACETYLENE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 207, respecting a patent of the Commercial Acetylene Company of New Jersey.—Mr. Maclean (South York). (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. NESBITT: This Bill was up on Friday night, but the Chairman of the Private Bills Committee was not present, and no one could tell us why this company wanted its patent extended. The Bill does not say anything about it. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to patents being extended without some reasonable ground being given.

Progress reported.

PATENT OF MAURICE DELVIGNE.

House in Committee on Bill No. 208, respecting the patent of Maurice Delvigne.—Mr. Barker. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. NESBITT: This Bill was in exactly the same position; nobody could tell us anything about it on Friday night.

Progress reported.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 229, for the relief of Albert Britnell.—Mr. Sharpe (Ontario).

Bill No. 224, respecting the Western Trust Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill No. 225, respecting the Great West Permanent Loan Company.—Mr. Meighen.

On motion of Mr. Meighen for second reading of Bill No. 226, respecting the Alberta-Saskatchewan Life Insurance Company.

Mr. CARROLL: When was this company incorporated ?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just before the hon. gentleman rose, I was complaining that the appearance of my name in connection with this Bill was unauthorized. I can recall nothing whatever in connection with it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RIGAUD POST OFFICE.

On what date did Messrs. Archer Macdonald and Elzear Montpetit, each write to the Government asking for the opening of the new post office at Rigaud?

Mr. ROGERS: No such communications received by the Department of Public Works.

SENATE REFORM.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

With reference to a certain manifesto issued by the right hon. Prime Minister to the people of Canada, containing, among other things, the following language:—

'We declare for such reforms in the mode of selecting future members of the Senate as will make that Chamber a more useful and representative legislative body.'

Does the Government purpose introducing legislation to carry out this pledge? If so, when?

Mr. BORDEN: The subject alluded to in this question is under consideration, and any announcement that may be necessary will be made at a later date.

CHAMBLY CANAL SUPERINTENDENT.

*Mr. KYTE:

1. Has the Minister of Railways and Canals authorized the superintendent of the Chambly canal to use paint, the property of the department, for his residence?

2. Has he also authorized said superintendent to employ any of the canal staff for work about his premises?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No.
2. No.

Mr. CROTHERS.

GENERAL MACKENZIE'S RESIGNATION.

*Mr. MACDONALD:

1. When was General Mackenzie appointed to his present position?
2. Was the War Office consulted as to the appointment?
3. Was any recommendation made of General Mackenzie for the appointment by Imperial authorities?
4. What is his rank and status in the Imperial service?
5. When did General Mackenzie resign?
6. What reason did he give for his resignation?
7. What were the terms of the document?
8. Was the resignation accepted and when?
9. Was any communication had by the minister with the Imperial authorities previous to accepting the resignation? If so, what was the nature of the communication?
10. When does the resignation take effect?
11. Has any successor been appointed to General Mackenzie? If so, who was appointed or selected?

KITSILANO INDIAN RESERVE.

On the motion of Right Hon. R. L. Borden for Committee of Supply:

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): I desire to draw attention to the Kitsilano Indian Reserve, which was the subject of discussion on the 24th of April, and upon which further light was thrown by a return brought down dated the 23rd of May. I will read from this return the report of the inspector of Indian agencies which will place the case before the House briefly and clearly, and with more effect than I could. The report is dated, Victoria, April 26, 1913, addressed to the secretary of the Department of Indian Affairs, and reads:

With further reference to my letter of the 11th instant dealing with the reported surrender of the False Creek Reserve at Vancouver by certain Indians of the Squamish tribe to the provincial government, I beg to state that I have just returned from Vancouver, and wish to confirm the statement contained in the press despatch enclosed with my letter of the 11th instant, in so far as the Indians giving their consent to the sale and receiving the money.

The negotiations with the Indians were carried on by H. O. Alexander, Esq., stipendiary magistrate of Vancouver, on behalf of the Government of British Columbia. The amount paid to the Indians was $219,750. Nineteen heads of families received $11,250 each and one received only $5,000, making twenty families in all. The Indians were also paid $1,000 for the removal of the dead bodies from the graveyard. Upon the Indians signing the agreement and receiving their money their effects were placed on a scow and towed up the Squamish river to one of the reserves, to which place most of the Indians also went. The expenses in this connection were borne by the British Government.

Mr. Alexander has informed me that he worked on a list which he made up himself, but it does not correspond with the Indian agent's census of this band, for it appears that money was paid to Indians who were not members of the band, while there were members who did not receive compensation. I visited the reserve and found that all the Indians had left. Their houses had been pulled down and burned; The last house on the water front portion of the reserve was being torn down while I was there on Tuesday, the 22nd, And the workmen informed me that they were working under the instructions of the provincial government, who also have a policeman on the reserve.

This is one of the Indian reserves set aside prior to Confederation, and consisted at that time of 37.45 acres; in 1876 (according to the Journal of the Indian Reserve Commission), the Joint Reserve Commission increased the size of the reserve to 80 acres. Since that time 10.52 acres have been sold to the Canadian Pacific railway and the Vancouver and Luou Island railway for railroad purposes. The Harrison Mills Timber and Trading Company also have a lease of 11.16 acres of the reserve.

The amount paid to the Indians in consideration of their giving up this reserve ($219,750) appears to be extremely small, so far as land values in that portion of the city of Vancouver are concerned; but at present, without going into the matter very fully, it is impossible to state definitely as to the true value of the reserve. However, it would not be very wide of the mark to say that it is worth at least ten times the amount paid to the Indians.

It appears from the return that not only did the British Columbia Government remove the Indians from the reserve, burn or pull down their buildings, and establish police authority upon the reserve, but they publicly advertised the jurisdiction of the British Columbia Government over the reserve by notice in the British Columbia Gazette, as follows:

Mr. OLIVER

Department of Lands,
Notice of Reserve.

Notice is hereby given that the certain portion of land officially known as Burrard Inlet Reserve No. 6, and commonly called Kitsilano or False Creek reserve, situated on the south side of the entrance to False Creek and arm or Burrard Inlet, and containing 80 acres, more or less, is reserved from any entry or alienation under the Mineral Act, the Placer-Mining Act, the Coal and Petroleum Act, or the Land Act.

Robert A. Renwick,
Deputy Commissioner of Lands,

Department of Lands,
Victoria, B.C., April 11, 1913.

It will be observed that the Indians left the reserve on April 9, and, on April 11, the British Columbia Government gazetted its assertion of authority over the property rights within the reserve. I brought this transaction to the attention of the House and the answer to my question is dated Monday, April 21, 1913. My question was as follows:

Is the Government aware of steps being taken, as alleged, to acquire from the Indians of the Kitsilano reserve, Vancouver, B.C., their rights to the land of the reserve by the provincial government of British Columbia, or by other parties or interests?

The answer to that question was: 'No.'

Mr. CROTHERS: I think my hon. friend is wrong as to the date. If I remember rightly, it was the 16th of April.

Mr. OLIVER. It appeared in 'Hansard' on April 21. In that connection I find a report here from the Indian agent, dated from the office at New Westminster, B.C., April 16, 1913. This writing does not give the name of the agent or of the inspector of agencies, but the official documents will give it. The report is as follows:

March 18, 1913.

Hon. Robert Rogers,
Ottawa.

Sir,—On invitation of provincial Government, attended them re (False Creek) Kitsilano Indian reserve, and upon explanation of terms, consider amount offered Kitsilano Indian band for their individual holding and rights fully adequate.

That is, if this document is correctly transcribed, the Minister of Public Works had knowledge on or about March 18 that the provincial government of British Columbia were negotiating with these Indians assumedly for the purpose of that reserve. On April 21, the acting Superintendent General of Indian Affairs gives this House an official answer that the Government have no knowledge of approach being made by the Government of British Columbia to these Indians for the purchase of the reserve. The report continues:

With reference to the above telegram—

It will be observed that only one telegram is contained in this return.

—and subsequent events in connection with the (False Creek) Kitsilano Indians, I beg to report as follows:

The provincial Government in explanation of the terms, gave me to understand that the amount agreed on with the Indians was paid to them for leaving (False Creek) Kitsilano Indian reserve, and that the transaction and the question of the land value of the aforesaid reserve would be adjusted between the provincial Government and the Department of Indian Affairs.

Since that time I am informed by the Indians that the members of (False Creek) Kitsilano band by having received from the provincial Government the sum of $219,750, which amount has been distributed amongst them as follows: Ninteen members have received $11,250, and one got $5,000. They have all left (False Creek) Kitsilano reserve, most of them going to reserves at Squamish river, where for many years they have lived during the summer months, while a few of the old people have gone to live with their children at Musquaam, Coquitlam, and Capilano.

On several occasions I advised these Indians, as well as others of the Squamish river band, not to discuss with any person the sale of the Indian reserve, or to make any bargain in regard to same with any person whatever, and I was greatly surprised indeed when I was informed by the provincial Government that the Indians had fixed a price and signed an agreement to that effect.

In conclusion I may say that I held a meeting of the Squamish Indians recently, at which representatives of all their various tribes were present, and the Indians expressed themselves as being very well satisfied with the agreement made between the (False Creek) Kitsilano people and the provincial Government.

I want to draw special attention to this sentence:

Owing to the impression conveyed that negotiations in regard to this matter were being carried on directly with the department, I delayed my report until this date.

Your obedient servant,
Indian Agent.

The Secretary,
Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa.

That is to say, this report shows that there were communications with the Government, which gave the Government knowledge of the fact that negotiations had been opened between the provincial government and the Indians, and that this officer of the Government was under the impression that these negotiations were being carried on with the knowledge and consent, and, it is to be presumed, with the approval of this Government.

As to the question of value of this land, I find a letter which gives notice of a telegram having been sent. That letter is as follows:

Vancouver, B.C.,
March, 20, 1913.

To the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Department of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir:—

I hereby beg to confirm telegram of this date:

'I wish to purchase the Indian reserve at Vancouver, B.C., on the south side of English bay, and known as the Kitsilano reserve, now occupied by the Squamish Indians, and said to contain seventy-seven acres.

I have taken the matter up with these Indians and they have signified to me their willingness to sell, and I have told them that I will pay the price they are asking. I expect to pay the full value of the property in question, and am willing and financially able to pay the full purchase price in cash, upon the completion of the necessary proceedings, and I now make application to your department for the purchase of the said reserve, and request that you advise me in detail of the steps which it will be necessary for me to take to this end.'

Meanwhile will you kindly file this letter as an application to purchase in this behalf.

Very truly yours.
C. A. Calkins.

The price is not mentioned in the letter, but I find the following lettergram of later date:

Vancouver, B.C., 30th April.

Superintendent General Indian Affairs:—

Referring to telegram, March 20, from C. A. Calkins re Kitsilano Indian reserve in which he applied to purchase same and to your reply of March 22, Mr. Calkins represented an American railroad company and instructs us to make a definite offer on behalf of railroad company to purchase Kitsilano Indian reserve, Vancouver, B.C., for two million dollars as per telegram to Mr. Stevens below. Will you kindly place this application on file, acknowledge and advise us when next step should be taken. Mr. H. H. Stevens, member for Vancouver, advised by telegram on April 9, as follows: 'Am prepared to pay and have offered the Indians two million dollars for Kitsilano Indian reserve at Vancouver. Money will be paid on receipt of title. Property to be used for railway terminal and docks, subject to such reasonable restrictions, reservants and requirements of proposed harbour developments as Dominion Government may impose.

Deacon, Deacon and Wilson.

It appears also from this return that the Minister of Public Works had in mind the securing of certain portions of this reserve—

Said site for construction of additional wharfage facilities in Vanvouver harbour.

The inter-departmental communications are dated 12th March, and there is a description attached of the land the Department of Public Works desired to secure on this reserve. There is a letter here from Simon G. Pierre, secretary and interpreter for the Indian reserve in that vicinity, to the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, in which he says:

The Kitsilano Indians are being agitated by some white men of their reserve. The white men want to buy that reserve and offered them $10,000 for each living family. Now, they want to know, are they allowed to sell that tract of land while the land question is unsettled. There are some other white men that offer a great deal more than the other party. Shall they sell to the highest offers or shall they sell to special party only? Or shall they wait until the land question is settled?

Kindly advise.
I am, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
Simon C. Pierre,
Secretary and Interpreter,
Keatzie Indian reserve
Port Hammond, B.C.

It is evident, therefore, that the Government had knowledge of this transaction being in progress and that they took no measure to prevent its being carried forward. So far as we are aware, they have taken no measures to readjust the conditions since the arrangement between the British Columbia Government and the Indians was made; and I submit that the condition is such as to call for a very full explanation from the Government of its position and intentions in the matter.

This document also discloses that a part of this reserve, some thirty-seven acres, was set apart by Governor Sir James Douglas, acting as the direct representative of the British Crown while administering the affairs of what is now British Columbia as a Crown colony. Therefore, there can be no question as to the proprietary rights on the part of this band of Indians to that much of their reserve in any case. In the remarks I had the honour to make some time ago in this connection, I pointed out that the responsibility and control of Indian Affairs was a trust transferred from the Imperial authorities to this Dominion Government, and that there was no means whereby they could properly divest themselves of that responsibility. There is some question raised by the British Columbia Government in regard to proprietary rights of the Indians in the class of reserve more recently set apart, but there can be no valid contention made against the absolute right of the Indians to the thirty-seven acres of this reserve received by direct title from the Imperial Government, nor can there be any question of the responsibility of this Government to absolutely protect the Indians in the full enjoyment of their rights in that portion of the reserve, and equally in their right to secure full value for the land should the transfer of that land be made.

This case is the more remarkable because there is an arrangement between the Government of British Columbia and this Government for the settlement of the questions at issue between these Governments in regard to Indian reserves. The basis of agreement has been arrived at and a commission has been appointed. Under that arrangement and by the work of that commission, this particular reserve would undoubtedly have been dealt with, and the Government of British Columbia would have been maintained in whatever right it had according to the arrangement arrived at.

Apparently the Government of British Columbia, whether with or without the consent and knowledge of this Government, have seen fit to enter upon this property and assert the right of that Government, irrespective of this agreement. That is to say, they have made an agreement with the Dominion Government, and before that agreement becomes effective they take measures, aside from the agreement, to establish a property right which, in my estimation, they have not at all and would not have under the terms of this agreement.

The Dominion Government, charged with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the Indians, both as to their property and as to their persons, having made an agreement with the Government of British Columbia for the proper adjustment of all these rights according to their judgment, permit the Government of British Columbia to go outside of that agreement, to deal with those Indians in a manner absolutely contrary to the law, to remove them from the reserve, to destroy their property upon the reserve, to assert the authority of the provincial Government in regard to that reserve, and that on a payment of money that is stated even by the officer of this Government to be less than one-tenth of the actual value of the land. I submit that the Government are deserving of censure and of serious censure, unless they can give some better explanation of the case than they gave on the former occasion.

Coming now to the discussion of the arrangement between the Government of the province and the Government of the Dominion; the provincial Government claims that the Indians do not own this land, that it belongs to the provincial Government, that the Indians have only a right of occupation, and that when the Indians leave the land, the title of the British Columbia Government to that land at once accrues. As I have already said, it was not possible for the Dominion Government to agree to that proposition, and the late Government had arrived at an agreement with the British Columbia Government to submit the question, as a legal case, to the judgment of the Privy Council. Later on the British Columbia Government refused to go on with that agreement. Still later this Government took the matter up and arrived at an amicable arrangement with the British Columbia Government; and as soon as the agreement was arrived at the British Columbia Government proceeds forthwith to set it aside; they take action independently; and this Government, so far as our returns show, has done absolutely nothing to protect the rights of the Indians in the matter.

In regard to the merits of the arrangement made between the Dominion and the province for the disposition of the rights of the Indians, I can only say that in my humble judgment it is an agreement which is intended to make peace between the province and the Dominion at the expense of the Indians. Under this arrangement the right of the province is admitted wherever the Indians have vacated their reserve or a portion of their reserve. That is to say, the province claims that wherever the Indians have vacated their reserve the land belongs to the province and not to the remainder of the Indians, and this Government by its arrangement concedes that subject to sale and equal division of the proceeds between the province and the Dominion. The British Columbia Government has secured the vacation of this reserve by payment to the Indians of a quarter of a million dollars, and claim the absolute ownership of the property. I assume it is in that view that the British Columbia Government have acted.

As to the fairness or reasonableness of such an agreement being entered into whereby the two Governments undertake to dispose of the rights of the Indians without considering what those rights are, without having those rights decided by that authority which is and ought to be the final court of appeal in regard to all such cases, it is a departure from precedent as to the proper discharge of the responsibilities of the Government of Canada in regard to the Indian tribes. It is disregarding the trust that has been placed on this Government by the Imperial authorities in regard to the rights of the Indians, and is not such an arrangement as can be considered to be fair and reasonable or in consonance with the dignity of the Government of Canada or the responsibilities that properly rest on that Government.

The question of the price of this land is not a serious matter. The serious matter is that this Government has seen fit—and I am bound to say, on the evidence of this return, that they have seen fit with knowledge—to forego their responsibility of protecting the rights of those Indians in regard to that land. They have done it without reason, because there is legislation on the Statute Book which can be brought into play that would effectually protect both the rights of the Indians and the rights of the people of Vancouver. They have not seen fit to bring that legislation into action. They have seen fit to allow an unwarranted assertion of authority by the British Columbia Government which is neither more nor less than piracy, in taking these Indians off their land, burning their houses, in establishing control and asserting ownership of this land, without, so far as this return shows, ever referring the matter to this Government, although it is also shown that this Government had knowledge of the transaction. These are serious matters. When it is established, as it is established, that the Indians have been paid a quarter of a million dollars for land that is worth ten times as much, surely that concrete fact will appeal very strongly to the people of Canada as establishing the failure of the Government to exercise their proper responsibilty in protecting the rights of those Indians. They have made an agreement with the British Columbia Government. It is an unfair agreement; but if that agreement was being carried out there might be some justification. What has been done has been done in defiance of that agreement, without regard to it, that is, without regard to its letter; and, so far as we are aware, this Government has taken no means, directly or indirectly, either to protect the rights of the Indians in the first place or to restore those rights now that they have so far been taken away from them. They have taken no means to bring into play the legislation of this Parliament, that was provided particularly and especially for meeting just such cases in a fair and equitable manner.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): My hon. friend has traversed a good deal of the ground which he went over at very considerable length about a month ago. I am not aware that he has brought to the attention of the House any material circumstances that were not made known then. As he has stated, there is a commission which is investigating the whole question of Indian affairs in the province of British Columbia, and, having been Minister of the Interior for a number of years, he knows, or ought to know, that the rights of the Indians in respect to their lands in the province of British Columbia, or anywhere else, can only be interfered with under the law of this country, and there are two statutes which are available for that purpose. My hon. friend says that there has been an agreement between this Government and the province of British Columbia by which this Government would undertake to do anything that the British Columbia Government might find satisfactory to the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER: I have mis-stated my position if my right hon. friend thinks that is it.

Mr. BORDEN: What is your position?

Mr. OLIVER: This Government has made an agreement with the British Columbia Government whereby, whenever an Indian reserve is partially or wholly vacated, the contention of the British Columbia Government is accepted.

Mr. BORDEN: Where is that agreement to be found?

Mr. OLIVER: Within the agreement I have here.

Mr. BORDEN: You mean the agreement for the appointment of the commission?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. BORDEN: The terms of that agreement are very well known. As a matter of fact, it is a commission which is not in the nature of an arbitration. The commission was appointed under the Inquiries Act, and its report is subject to the consideration of the Governor in Council. My hon. friend seems to think it is an arbitration. It is not an arbitration; it is purely an inquiry under the Inquiries Act.

Mr. OLIVER: My right hon. friend remembers that there is set out in this return a specific memorandum of agreement.

Mr. BORDEN: Here is what I refer to, and my hon. friend apparently has entirely overlooked it. The question was submitted to the Minister of Justice, who reported in this way:

> The Minister of Justice, therefore, advises that the approval of the agreement should be subject to a further provision which should be accepted by the Government of British Columbia before the agreement can become effective, providing that notwithstanding anything in the agreement contained the acts and proceedings of the commission shall be subject to the approval of the two governments, and that the governments agree to consider favourably the reports, whether final or interim, of the commission, with a view to give effect, as far as reasonably may be, to the acts, proceedings and recommendations of the commission, and to take all such steps and proceedings as may be reasonably necessary with the object of carrying into execution the settlement provided for by the agreement in accordance with its true intent and purpose.

The agreement had been made by Mr. McKenna, but after it became a question for inquiry under the Inquiries Act, the Minister of Justice reported, and his report was embodied in the Order in Council to the effect that, notwithstanding anything in the agreement contained, the acts and proceedings of the commission should be subject to the approval of the two governments. Therefore, being subject to the approval of the two governments it is necessarily subject to the approval of this Government in respect to anything carried out under the inquiry entered into by reason of the agreement effected by Mr. McKenna, as officer of the Department of the Interior. Now, so far as the whole question is concerned, as I pointed out to the hon. gentleman before, these are matters which are regulated by statute. It is undoubtedly true, and I believe from information given to him that the hon. gentleman himself was convinced, that it was very much in the interests of those Indians that they should be removed from that portion of Vancouver which they occupied, and the object to be carried out was to remove them under such terms and conditions as would be just to them and as would make a disposition of the land such as would enable it to be utilized to the greatest possible extent in the public interest. Even if the supposed arrangement were carried out, as my hon. friend suggests, the net result would be that the property having been vested in the Crown for the benefit and advantage of the Indians, who live upon this reserve, would in the future be vested in the province of British Columbia, for the advantage and benefit of the people of that province. It was not to go to real estate speculators; it was to remain vested in the Crown for the advantage of all the people of British Columbia, provision of a just character having been made for the Indians in another manner. That is all the transaction would amount to, if it were such as my hon. friend suggests. But I have already pointed out, in the first place, that these matters are regulated by statute, and in the second place this will be a proper subject for consideration by the commission which is now engaged in that work in the province of British Columbia. I would point out further, inasmuch as my hon. friend used some strong language in dealing with this subject, that his own attitude in 1910, a little more than two years ago, was that any arrangement made by the province of British Columbia, that was satisfactory to the Indians, would be acceptable to him. He left it almost entirely in the hands of the Government of the province of British Columbia. Here is a telegram from the then Prime Minister of British Columbia:

> Have consulted with the Minister of the Interior and any arrangement satisfactory to the Indians will be quite acceptable to us.

But my hon. friend now tears his hair with despair at the idea of any such arrangement as that being carried out. He seems to have altered his point of view very much since that date. The telegram went on:

> Would only suggest that as we are the guardians of Indians it would be advisable that department be party to arrangement and that same be made under Indian Act. We intend introducing legislation this session in connection with similar questions.

So long as it was under the Indian Act, and so long as the department was a party to the arrangement, any agreement whatever which the British Columbia Government made with the Indians would be acceptable to the hon. gentleman. I would like to know if this is his view-point to-day, or whether he considers that some other policy ought to be considered in the interests of the Indians and in the interests of the people of this country. If what he laid down as a proper policy in 1910 is correct, it would afford a very easy solution of the question, and would remove a great deal of responsibility that might otherwise be cast on the Government. We have thought that perhaps some further considerations ought to be taken into account in a matter of this kind. But as I have already said, the whole question is regulated by statute, and the representations of the Indians in connection with this and similar matters are under consideration by the commission which has been appointed for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My right hon. friend has not at all submitted to the House the point at issue. It is quite true that the relations of the Indian with the white man are regulated by those statutes; but on the present occasion the point is that neither statute has been followed; both have been ignored. Neither the general statute for the surrender of reserves nor the Indian Act has been followed. It was only two or three years ago that a Bill was introduced in this House to meet a case similar to the present one. That was the case of the Songhees Indians of Victoria. By experience we know that Indian reserves in the vicinity of growing cities are a detriment, not only to the growing cities, but to the Indians themselves, and it is in their own interests that they should be removed from those cities, or their immediate neighbourhood. At the present time the Indians can surrender their rights under the Indian Act; but this requires their consent, and there have been cases in which the Indians have not been willing to give their consent. That was the case of the Songhees Indians at Victoria. The matter had been under discussion between the authorities of Victoria and the Indians, and the Indians always refused to agree to the surrender. At last the Government of British Columbia took the matter up and obtained the consent of the Indians. That was the occasion upon which I sent the telegram, which was quoted some time ago by my hon. friend, and which has been quoted again to-day, to Sir Richard McBride, stating that the price and conditions, if acceptable to the Indians, would be acceptable to us. The matter had been considered for some years, and the only point was to obtain the consent of the Indians. The conditions that were offered by the Government of British Columbia on behalf of the city of Victoria were acceptable and reasonably fair. We knew that the Government of British Columbia were anxious to have the consent of the Indians, we were willing and anxious to have their consent, and we advised the Government of British Columbia that we would be willing to agree to those conditions. But there is a difference between the Songhees case and this.

In order that the House may understand this question, let me point out that the Indians may surrender their rights; but if they do so, it must be done with the consent and approval of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. If the Indians, although they are so advised by him, will not surrender their rights, then the authorities who want the surrender can apply to the Court of Exchequer and obtain judgment of the court as to whether the Indians shall be removed or dispossessed. We thought it would not be fair to dispossess the Indians, even though we thought it was in their own interests, unless we had judicial authority for so doing. We wanted to preserve the sacredness of the trust which has been imposed upon us, as upon all British governments, with reference to the interior races before dispossessing them of their land. But if the Indians are willing to surrender their reserve, as was the case with the False Creek reserve, you must have the consent of three parties: first, the purchaser—in this case the Government of British Columbia; next, the Indians; and next, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. In this case the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs did not participate in the negotiations at all. There was the consent of the Indians and the consent of the British Columbia Government; but it appears that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs simply surrendered his rights altogether. The correspondence shows that the Superintendent knew that negotiations were going on, but did not interfere at all. My hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) may shake his head, but I would be very glad to have his explanation upon this point.

My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) presented the case to the House fairly and moderately, and his conclusion is that, if the facts are as they have been presented, the Government are censurable. But he says: I do not want to ask for the censure of the Government to-day; I want the explanation of the Government. If the facts are as disclosed by my hon. friend from Edmonton, and if this transaction has taken place with the consent of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, then he has been imprudent in his conduct; but if he has not given his consent to this transaction, the Government are certainly highly censurable, because they have been altogether recreant to the duty imposed upon them by the law for the protection of the Indians. As we know, the Indian is the ward of the nation; he is treated as an Indian; he cannot sell a pelt unless he has the consent of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, through the agent; and shall it be said on this occasion that the Indians can sell their rights to the land which they occupy without the consent of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs? That is the charge which was made by my hon. friend, and upon which he desires information.

The question as to the general right of the government of a province with reference to the lands now in possession of the Indians is a very large one, and I shall not enter upon the discussion of it at the present moment. But that is not a matter in issue at the present time. The question is whether the sale was authorized by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. If not, the whole transaction is null and void, and there is no title conveyed to anybody. Do I understand that these men, without the consent of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, paid $200,000 for this property, when there was another party ready to offer $2,000,000? Do I understand that, as alleged, the Government allowed these Indians to be deprived of their rights?—because the British Columbia Government have no rights to these lands, unless they have the signature of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Do I understand that without having that authority they have dispossessed the Indians, burned their homes over their heads, and forced them to leave and settle elsewhere? That is the point upon which we must have some information so as to ascertain exactly what has been the conduct of the Government in the matter.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Acting Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, this matter was before the House about a month ago, and there was an answer given at that time to some observations made by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and also to some made by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). In face of the explanations that were then given, my right hon. friend asks the question now as to whether the Government were consulted as to this surrender. Did they agree that these Indians should be paid a quarter of a million for property that is worth $2,000,000? All that was answered a month ago, but I do not mind repeating it now; it will not take very much time. I told my right hon. friend then that we had not been communicated with at all in respect to this matter. I told him then that we had not given our consent and I can only repeat that now. I quite agree with him that the Indians have no right to dispose of their interests without the consent of the Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: How is it that their homes were burned over their heads?

Mr. CROTHERS: Not over their heads. They went to another reserve. I do not know whether their homes were burnt over their heads.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is said in the report.

Mr. CROTHERS: The Government did not consent in this matter. The whole question will be taken up by the commission which has been appointed to investigate. They were instructed to investigate this whole matter and report. What is the use of asking these questions again, and charging the Government with wrongdoing when we have appointed a commission to inquire into the facts?

Sir WILFRIED LAURIER: Do I understand that the Government are proposing to fold their arms, that they do not know whether the Indians have been dispossessed or not, that they do not recognize that they have any duty towards these Indians?

Mr. CROTHERS: Those questions will arise when we know what the facts are.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There are the facts reported by the commissioner.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of Public Works): I would like to say a word or two in connection with some of the statements that have been made. The right hon. leader of the Opposition would seek to leave the impression that the Government are blameable for not having taken certain action. He undertakes to point out to the House that before this transaction could be carried out there must be consent on the part of the Government of British Columbia, on the part of the Indians and on the part of the Indian Department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS: The fact is that the Indian Department have not dealt with this matter, if I understand it, in any particular, and my right hon. friend and the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) apparently seek to present, even in the vague manner in which they have done so, to this House and the country, that the Indian Department have been responsible or negligent in the discharge of the sacred trust that is imposed upon them in dealing with the Indians. That is a statement to which I wish to direct a few observations. We absolutely deny negligence in respect to this Indian reserve or to any other Indian reserve in Canada. The acting Minister of the Interior has made clear that no consent has been given by his department, and that consent will not be given until we have the report of the commission now sitting in British Columbia to investigate the Indian titles in that province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In the meantime the Indians have been dispossessed.

Mr. ROGERS: What, apparently is true, is, that the British Columbia Government have followed the example of the manner in which they were able to deal with the Indian trust under the administration of my right hon. friend. The Prime Minister made it clear that in 1910, when the Songhees reserve was being similarly dealt with, the position taken by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, then Prime Minister, was: well, if the Indians are satisfied we are satisfied and we will carry it out under the Indian Act.

Mr. OLIVER: I draw attention to the fact that the arrangement in regard to the Songhees reserve was brought down to Parliament for the sanction of Parliament.

Mr. ROGERS: It was made in the first place without any sanction of Parliament. According to a telegram from Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the Premier of British Columbia, the arrangement was made in the first place and probably the British Columbia Government have gone on thinking that the same manner of treatment of the Indians would be allowed to-day. But the acting minister has made it clear that this Government is not doing business as did the late Government in connection with the sacred trust of the guardianship of the Indians. We will protect that sacred trust. I protest against the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) making the implied insinuations they do. It ill becomes the hon. member for Edmonton and members on that side of the House to talk of the sacred trust of the Indians and the manner in which the Indians are being dealt with to-day, in view of the manner in which they dealt with that sacred trust when they were in power. How did the late Government deal with that sacred trust in western Canada when the hon. gentleman was Minister of the Interior? He dealt with it by peddling the Indian lands out to the liberal organizers and his liberal friends in Saskatchewan. The public records show that contrary to the Indian Act, contrary to the practice, the lands that were surrendered by the Indians on the specific terms that these lands should be sold by public auction were sold by private sale and peddled out to liberal organizers and the liberal presidents and their friends in Saskatchewan, in defiance of the terms of surrender made by the Indians themselves. That was the manner in which the Indian sacred trust was dealt with while the liberals were in power. To give you an idea of how the sacred trust was regarded by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), let me read this extract from a letter:

Yorkton, Sask., July 29, 1910.

Frank Pedley, Esq.,
Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Ottawa, Can.

My Dear Mr. Pedley,—

I am enclosing some correspondence re a portion of the surrendered portion of the Coté Indian reserve.

Some of our friends at Kamsack, together with myself, are very anxious to obtain some of this land for the Dixon families. There are quite a number of them, all good farmers, fairly well to do, possessed of families, and friends of ours, and it seems a shame that outside parties are capable of having this land held up, thus preventing settlement and getting desirable parties to improve and settle on these lands.

That letter is signed by Dr. Cash. Here is another letter which I may read:

Yorkton, July, 27, 1910.

Frank Pedley, Esq.,
Deputy Superintendent General, Indian Affairs, Ottawa, Ont.

My Dear Pedley,—

I herewith enclose to you a letter and draft for $96,000. The enclosed letter will tell you what I want, and I certainly think you should make an effort to let Mr. Dixon have this land, as he will be a benefit to the country. There are quite a number of them, and they therefore would also be a benefit to us in the future.

I think if Mr. McBrady has only made application and not paid for this land, the enclosed application should be considered. Kindly let me hear from you at your earliest convenience, and ablige.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) E. L. Cash.

According to the memorandum of the department, Dr. Cash had something like over one hundred quarter sections of this kind at his disposal to peddle out by private sale to his friends in that portion of the territories, notwithstanding that these gentlemen to-day talk about the sacred trust of the Indians. That was the manner in which the Indian trust was being dealt with by hon. gentlemen opposite and they undertake now to try by implication to reflect discredit upon the management of the Indian Department under the present Administration. It ill becomes hon. gentlemen opposite to make any reflection upon the manner in which the Indian Department is being carried on by the present Administration. I might follow this up further, but I do not propose to do so to-day, and I might show from the records of this House that even hon. gentlemen who sit upon that side of the House have been peddling these quarter sections themselves, in order that they might make profit, in defiance of the surrender as made by the Indians stipulating that the lands should be sold by public auction. And yet these gentlemen stand up to-day and talk about the sacredness of the trust of the Indians, and make implied insinuations that something has been wrong in connection with this particular reserve. The Prime Minister and the acting Minister of the Interior have made plain the position the Government occupies in this matter. We have given no consent; we purpose giving no consent until the commission now in British Columbia has properly investigated this matter, and we will see that the sacred rights of the Indians are protected in this particular Indian reserve, as in all other reserves in every part of the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. member (Mr. Rogers) made a very special reference to my administration, and I wish to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no motion before the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER: I have only a word to say; it is not controversial.

Mr. BORDEN: All right, go ahead.

Mr. OLIVER: The lands my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) spoke about had been offered for sale at an upset price. The auction did not yield the upset price. The lands, therefore, remained in the hands of the Government, and were sold afterwards by private sale at the upset price.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Railways and Canals, chargeable to capital —Intercolonial railway—air brakes, to improve triple valves of, $7,150.

Mr. CARVELL: Would the minister say on what principle the improvement of air brake valves is chargeable to capital? I do not wish to be discourteous nor do I wish to limit the minister in his answer, but I would rather he would not tell me that the old Government did the same as this. I know that. I am asking for information, and I would like to know on what ground or principle the previous Government and governments before that and the present Government have charged these things to capital. It seems to me it would be a great consolation to the people of Canada if they really could know what is the condition of the Intercolonial railway. The minister comes down to the House and says: I have a surplus of $500,000; or he comes down and says there is a deficit of $300,000 or $400,000. During the last three or four years there have been what are called surpluses. But we know that there has been no surplus in fact. If all were charged up that ought to be charged up against income, there would be a deficit, as a matter of fact. The minister may say that other roads keep their books in the same way. That may be true. But I would like to know on what principle such expenses as these are charged to capital. If he would tell us that, we should have a better chance to judge of what is the real position with regard to the Intercolonial railway. It will not make any difference to the people; they have to pay it anyhow, whatever it is; and if they could know what the actual position is, it would be so much the better. In many cases it is claimed they are not paying high enough rates on the Intercolonial railway. I think that that is not true. But it seems to me it would be better to understand the basis of these so-called surpluses, and if the minister would give us this information it would help.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not here the amount charged to capital.

Mr. CARVELL: That does not matter—say four and a half millions.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will have the figures later. The same system is adopted on the Intercolonial railway as is adopted on other roads in America—in the United States under the Interstate Commerce law. Nothing is charged to capital on the Intercolonial railway that would not be charged to capital on other roads. As to the bookkeeping, I suppose the surplus is ascertained by deducting the expenses and cost of upkeep from the income. I think that anybody can see the results from the figures of income and expense year by year.

Mr. CARVELL: I know that.

Mr. COCHRANE: What more can I give?

Mr. CARVELL: The minister says that they charge up running expenses and upkeep. If they did that, it seems to me that we should have different returns from what we have.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. We charge to capital just what others would charge—the Canadian Pacific railway, for instance. They charge their running expenses just as we do; they are compelled to do so under the law

Mr. CARVELL: I admit that. But I want the minister to tell me on what principle the Government charges to capital sums that are spent in the running and upkeep of the road.

Mr. COCHRANE: We do not.

Mr. CARVELL: Let us see. Here in the next item you have an estimate for the strengthening of bridges. Is not that keeping up the road?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. CARVELL: What is it for, then? If I have a farm and have to build a road through one portion of it, that is to keep up my farm is it not? And if I have a plough and mowing machine that wear out and have to buy new ones, that is keeping up the farm, is it not?

Mr. COCHRANE: But if you have a bridge that is sufficient for the small engines and trains of twenty years ago and you want to strengthen it and improve it to suit modern traffic, that means that your road is that much better. With the expenditure the hon. gentleman speaks of, his farm would be worth more on capital account, would it not?

Mr. CARVELL: As the hon. gentleman asks me the question, I can only say that his answer is not a proper one, according to my view of the case. While it is true my farm is worth more, yet I make the expenditure because it is necessary to carry on my farm. If I keep charging up to capital all that I put into the farm, I shall soon find myself bankrupt, although every year my bookkeeping may have shown a surplus. I do not want the minister to think I am finding fault with him. He is doing what other Governments have done. But I want to know the principle upon which it is done. I would like to have it so arranged that the showing of a surplus on the Intercolonial railway would mean that the people of Canada are getting back some return on the money they invested in the road. But we know that to-day that is not the fact. I suppose that in the last ten years the road has, every year been behind from a million to seven or eight million dollars, if you charge to upkeep what you ought to charge. But the supporters and newspapers of the Minister of Railways come out with the bold statement—just as did the supporters and newspapers of his predecessors—that owing to the splendid management there is a surplus on the road. But on what principle is this kind of bookkeeping carried on?

Mr. COCHRANE: Would it not be a proper charge against capital, if you had a bridge that cost $100,000, and you were going to strengthen and improve it to carry heavier trains?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think so. If the conditions of traffic change so that the strengthening of that bridge becomes necessary, it seems to me that the road ought to be in a position to make that change without a charge against capital. But under our present system that is charged up to capital, and a surplus is shown where there is really a deficit.

Any farmer, merchant or businessman could show surpluses in the same way. But if any such man attempts to fool himself, he is going to be undeceived before very long.

Mr. COCHRANE: What would the hon. gentleman allow to be charged to capital? Would he allow the original cost of the road?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes. And if the minister were to build a mile or two of railway extra, I would charge that to capital. But I think it requires a great stretch of imagination to think that such work as the strengthening of a bridge or improvement of cars should be charged to capital.

Bridges, to strengthen, $190,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is this for strengthening the bridges on some of the branch lines?

Mr. COCHRANE: One of the heaviest expenditures under the item is on the West river bridge at Antigonish, which costs $65,000. Then, there are the bridges at Keenans and at Nashwaak river on the Canada Eastern, the last $59,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is at Fredericton.

Mr. COCHRANE: The Canada Eastern goes down to Fredericton.

Mr. GRAHAM: An answer was given by a very prominent railway man to the question of what ought to be charged to capital. He said: 'Anything that adds to value ought to be charged to capital.' If a nail driven into a piece of property increases the value of that property, the cost of the nail can be charged to capital. That is the definition given, I think, in connection with the Interstate Commerce laws. It is rather difficult, however, to carry it out. In the United States the law is framed so as to prevent railway companies from charging things to revenue. The reason for that is that the shareholders of the companies might never get any dividends if everything was charged to revenue. On the Intercolonial we thought we had the matter worked out pretty well along the lines of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The law is made in the interests of the shareholders as well as in the interests of the directors or the managers. It is necessary under that law that certain things should be charged to capital, and the Interstate Commerce Commission go a long way in order to protect the shareholder and to see that he gets his profits.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) could get the rates by taking what is charged to capital and computing the interest from that. He rightly says there has never been a proper surplus on the Intercolonial. It has always been computed on expenditure and receipts. The capital of the Intercolonial, I think, is now about $90,000,000, so that he can easily form his conclusions by adding three per cent, or whatever interest he choses to add to that, and then he gets the surplus or deficit.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister ought to give us a proper statement. He is asking for $7,239,000 for the Intercolonial this year to be charged to capital. I quite appreciate that, under the ordinary acceptance of the the term a portion of that vote could be charged to capital. For instance, he proposes to build the Chatham, $128,000. That is a new line and I think any business man would charge that to capital. The same as the case with dividing the line to Nelson and Derby Junction. While I have some doubt about the wisdom of the move, if it is done, I think it ought to be charged to capital. Among the items, however, I find safety appliances for equipment. Then I find rolling stock, a million dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE: I wish it were three million dollars.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. minister will tell us when we come to that point whether that means entirely new stock. Take an illustration. I can understand that, when a road has first been put in operation, it would be fair to charge the rolling stock to capital account, because it is as necessary for the operation of that road as is the roadbed. Let us say the hon. minister buys an engine for $10,000 or $15,000. He runs that engine for ten or fifteen years, and keeps repairing it from time to time. At the end of fifteen years it is like the one-horse shay: it is practically gone. That engine has contributed to the money which the minister says he has received on account of revenue. Without that engine he could never have operated his road. He has made big profits from it. When that engine is worn out, it has answered its purpose in making money for the minister; he buys a new engine and charges that up to capital. That is my point.

Mr. COCHRANE: When we come to that item, I shall discuss it.

Mr. CARVELL: The same thing with cars and so on. I judge from the way my hon. friend looks that he is going to explain that. I wonder what becomes of all the repairs and replacing of cars and engines, if they are not charged up to capital account. I hope my hon. friend will give an explanation. I am not asking these questions with any party or fault-finding spirit. I always felt we ought to have a detailed financial statement as to the operation of the Intercolonial. We ought to know exactly what it is costing us to carry on our road. If we are not making a profit, we ought to adjust the business of the road, so as to do so.

Mr. COCHRANE: I shall be glad to give the explanation desired.

Fredericton—to increase accommodation, $20,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Would my hon. friend tell me what has been done in Fredericton? If I remember correctly, a new station was being erected and a general improvement made in the yards. There was an attempt made at one time to make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific railway by which one joint station might be used in that town, but I think my efforts were a failure in that regard.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. member let the contract for the new station. We hope to make arrangements on behalf of the St. John Valley road to run not only into their station but through the town on their lines, and save expropriation.

Mr. GRAHAM: You are going to operate the St. John road anyway?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, and we shall try to interchange traffic there.

Mr. CARVELL: Has the minister abandoned any hope of having a union station at Fredericton?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have as far as the Intercolonial proper is concerned, but we have made application on behalf of the St. John Valley road. I think now when we have our own station we might better leave it as it is. It requires only $20,000 to finish up the whole business as far as the Intercolonial is concerned, and we hope to have an interchange station with the St. John Valley road.

At one o'clock, House resumed, and then took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock, and again went into Committee of Supply.

Chatham, diversion of line and branch to wharf, $128,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How far is the diversion towards completion?

Mr. COCHRANE: It just requires the filling to Walsh's Cove to complete the work.

Mr. LOGGIE: This vote of $128,000 will complete the work?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Diversion line betwen Nelson and Derby Junction, $128,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: I would like to explain to the House the situation in respect to this vote. It is rather an unusual thing for a member representing a county not to support a resolution granting an expenditure of money in his county, but my reasons for opposing this vote are as follows: Some thirty-five years ago there was a move on foot to build a railway between Fredericton and end at or near Derby Junction. It seemed to be a difficult proposition to get a company to undertake this work. A charter was obtained from the local government, and a subsidy was promised by the Dominion Government, as well as by the local government. After the charter had been obtained, it was thought advisable in the interests of the county generally, and of the district to build the road to connect with what was then known as the Chatham branch railway. That branch railway was owned by the late Governor Snowball, who with others, interested himself in the construction of the line between Fredericton and eastwards through Northumberland county. He received the consent of the local government to build the line, according to the routing, as far as Blackville, and then to follow the southwest branch of the Miramichi and connect at Chatham Junction, thus giving a through line between Chatham and Fredericton. As soon as this became known, friction seemed to arise on the part of the residents of Newcastle on the other side of the river, and through our late respected member of Parliament, the Hon. Peter Mitchell, application was made to the Government to build a branch line on the opposite side of the river, on the north side of the Miramichi. This was agreed to, but the Dominion Government refused to give a subsidy for the line on the south side of the river between Blackville and Chatham Junction for the reason that they themselves were building a line on the other side of the river. That line for which the subsidy was refused was constructed by the company who had received the charter and the local subsidy, and the line on the opposite side of the river was built by the Dominion Government, and operated, I think, for about fifteen miles between Derby Junction and a point known as Indiantown. The Dominion Government compelled the Canada Eastern to build a connection between Blackville and Indiantown, a distance of about six miles. This, however, was not operated, and the line lay dormant for some fifteen or twenty years. About the time I became member for the county of Northumberland, the Dominion Government decided to take over the line known as the Canada Eastern railway, built by Mr. Snowball and others, under the circumstances I have just mentioned. In taking over the line between Fredericton and Loggieville, they also took over the piece of line on the opposite side of the river between Blackville and Indiantown, a distance of about five or six miles, which, as I have said, had laid dormant for a great number of years. On behalf of the people of Newcastle, and especially on behalf of the people of Blackville and Millerton, where the Government branch line was, I applied to the Minister of Railways to put in operation the connecting link of five miles, and the Government did so. So that for the last three years the line has been operated between Newcastle and Blackville, a distance of about twenty-five miles.

Now, the facts are that the people on the south side of the river, had, as I have explained, a railway for some thirty-five years, built under a charter granted by the local government. Some seven or eight years ago, the Dominion bought that line, paying the Alexander Gibson Railway Company $750,000 for the property. We have put the connecting link in good condition, and we are now operating a daily train between Blackville and Newcastle direct. The line bought by the Dominion Government is operated regularly, there being an express train each way daily between Loggieville and Fredericton via Chatham Junction. I understand that this vote of $128,000 is for the purpose of conecting Nelson, which is now on the route of the main line, between Fredericton and Loggieville, with Derby Junction. It is alleged that the Government propose taking up the rails on the south side of the river between Nelson and Blackville. For a portion of the distance, 26 miles, the Government granted a subsidy, but for another portion there was no Dominion subsidy granted at all. The road has been operated during the last thirty-five years and the residents of the district feel that they have a vested right. About three miles from Nelson there is a village, the post office at which place is known as Reynolds, and you will find passengers getting on nearly every train at Chatham or Nelson and getting off at Reynold's or at what is known as Ivory's Crossing. Then the railway follows up the south side of the river via Chatham Junction until it arrives at Blackville. En route there are several quite large settlements but the country is not thickly populated at all. Chelmsford is perhaps the principal village between Chelmsford Junction and Blackville on the south side of the river. I am speaking for the people of Chelmsford, because to all intents and purposes, I live at Chelmsford. I do not actually live there, but as far as representing that district is concerned, I live at Chelmsford, and I feel that the people of Chelmsford have good cause for complaint if they are deprived of railway privileges that they have enjoyed for the last thirty or forty years. Looking at it from the economic standpoint, from the amount of money that would be involved, I do not think it is a very important consideration. I have no doubt that when the minister replies to me he will tell me that he is going to give us a better service than that which we at present have on the south side of the river. But that is not an answer to me or to the people on the south side of the river, if you remove the rails which have afforded the facilities for the last thirty-five or forty years. At the present time there are two railway bridges which it would probably cost to rebuild anew of concrete, about $200,000. That, I think, is all the expenditure which would be necessary if you continue following the lines on each side of the river. I am not an engineer, nor do I profess to be, but I have no doubt that $200,000 would be eaten up in providing the necessary terminal facilities at Derby junction. There is $128,000 in the estimates for the purpose of providing for the construction of a line between Nelson and Derby Junction, a distance of about two and a half miles. The Government propose building a line of two and a half miles and doing away with the line of 26 miles, if I understand. Of course, this is surmise on my part, because I have no authority to say, except that I can only read between the lines, what this $128,000 is for.

I would like the committee to consider the situation as if they lived along the south side of the southwest branch of the Miramichi river, as if they had enjoyed railway privileges for many years and as if they had given their lands as a right of way at a nominal sum. Now they have not even bridge connection across the river, and it is not possible to get across the river for about 15 miles, perhaps 18, between Nelson and what is known as Indiantown. I think the minister ought to weigh the matter well in the interest of all concerned and especially in the interest of the settlement known as Reynolds, between Nelson and Chatham junction and the settlements of Chelmsford and Kirk's between Chatham junction and Blackville. I do not think that money considerations ought to enter into the question at all because the difference in cost will not be very great. I assume that there would be a saving in the cost of upkeep. The minister would tell me probably that he will save the upkeep of twenty-six miles as against the upkeep of three miles. That, I have no doubt, would be some saving, but even considering all the circumstances from an economic standpoint, I do not think the minister should undertake to remove the rails of these twenty-six miles and to give us a new line of three miles without giving the people who will be affected thereby some consideration. I know that it has been suggested that bridges would be constructed opposite to most of the populous settlements on the south side of the river and that the people could get rail connection on the other side of the river. That has been alleged, but even so, I find that the residents of that portion of the country are very strongly opposed to the Government removing the rails. They have had public meetings, they have made public representations to the Board of Trade of Chatham, and the Board of Trade has forwarded these representations to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and I have no doubt they have received his favourable consideration. I do not know what his decision is, but it has been suggested that the minister may not go on with this, that possibly the money may be voted and the work not actually performed. But, I think it my duty representing the residents on the south side of the river, to protest in their name against the Government taking away privileges that they have enjoyed for so many years. The Government own a piece of railway on the north side of the river, they bought the railway on the south side of the river and it seems to me that this is a very strong reason why they should continue to operate the line on the south side.

I want to point out what, to some extent, has caused this friction. The minister, and especially the deputy minister, very well knows that the line between Chatham junction and Fredericton is operated westward for the reason that the trains connect with the maritime mail trains. A train leaving Montreal this morning will reach Chatham junction early to-morrow morning and will connect with the train for Fredericton. That means that the residents of the county of Northumberland can go to Fredericton, spend four or five hours in the city and come back the same night. Those who live near the western border of the county complain that they have not the necessary railway connection between Newcastle and Chatham on the east, and Boiestown and Blackville on the west. If a merchant living at Boiestown or Doaktown wishes to go to Chatham to do business he cannot get into Chatham and back the same day but he must go down on the train which arrives in Chatham about five o'clock, or on the express which arrives at about eleven o'clock. If he wishes to do any business, he has to remain all night in Chatham, all the next day and all the next night and go up the following morning because there are no trains going west after bank hours. The people of the county have requested, they have petitioned, they have prayed, that the Government give them a train starting at Boiestown, or, better still, at Fredericton, to leave Boiestown in the morning and return in the evening. The Government, with good reason, I suppose, have not acceded, saying that there is not sufficient business for it. The trains do run the other way, for the reason that they must be run to make connection with the express and mails for and from Fredericton via Chatham Junction. But, if the Government were disposed to be liberal, surely one additional train could be put on. There is a surplus, and surely this railway is not to be run as if it were a private concern and make everything pay that we do. I think the Government should undertake to have a train leaving the western side of the county in the morning and returning at night. The people of Newcastle claim they have not sufficient railway accommodation. Many times, I have asked the Government if they could not start an express train at Boiestown in the morning to go as far as Newcastle and Chatham on alternate days. It would probably mean that they would have to put in a freight train between Millerton and Newcastle, especially owing to the increase of traffic at Millerton, where lately a new pulp mill has been established. I am as anxious as the people of Newcastle or of Chatham that we should have the necessary railway facilities at each of these two towns, but in order to get the necessary facilities at either place, I do not see why we should take away from certain sections of the community facilities which they already enjoy, and which they have enjoyed for so many years.

Mr. COCHRANE: This is to continue the direct line, which the hon. member knows was built within the last few years from Chatham down to Nelson, and two miles more will take it to the main line. This is a burning question to some of the people there, as it stands, but when you take into consideration that we will have to extend the service notwithstanding that it is running at a loss, it becomes pretty serious. The bridge on this line that we did propose to take up at Blackville and Barnaby river will cost, I think, $152,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: That is, the two bridges.

Mr. COCHRANE: It will cost that to rebuild them. I do not think that the hon. gentleman will contend that there is enough traffic to warrant the Government expending that amount of money as well as running the train at a loss. The biggest settlement in the district of which the hon. gentleman speaks is at Chelmsford, which is only a mile and a half from the other road. He says there is no bridge. Well, that is a matter for the province. Surely, they could bridge there to take them across. The furthest the lines are apart is three and a half miles. There is not only that saving, but there is the saving on the materials of $120,000 or more that we would take credit for against this building of $138,000, materials to the value, and the actual cost of maintaining that nineteen miles of road running through would be $14,000. I am sure the hon. member would agree that there is not enough traffic to yield $14,000 for the year. In reference to giving the same to the western part of the country and going to Chatham or to Newcastle, he went on and explained very fairly that it was necessary, because of the mails, to run the other way, and we must be guided largely by the service given as to what is required by the number of people that will be served and the amount of revenue we shall receive. Of course, if we were going to run a service to each town irrespective of its cost, and if the people of Canada are willing, I should have no objection. But I do not see that it is a business proposition. While the matter is not wholly decided, as I want to go over the line before I decide on it, I want to vote this money first and settle the matter afterwards. But I feel that as a business proposition, and the matter of doing justice to the people, we should not continue that service or go to the expense of building the new as well as maintaining the road.

Mr. LOGGIE: But the hon. gentleman should not forget that this matter of building the bridges is offset by the extra expense of entering Nelson or Derby Junction.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, there is the capital charge of $132,369. That is more than we are asking to build the two miles from Derby Junction to the main line.

Mr. LOGGIE: What capital charge?

Mr. COCHRANE: The charge for two bridges, $122,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: You did not need this $122,000 to build the two bridges.

Mr. COCHRANE: But you want the $13,500 or $14,000 a year. And you get nothing in return.

Mr. LOGGIE: That I admit; but it is the only point I admit. There is this mileage.

Mr. COCHRANE: But do not forget that from the mileage we take up we would realize $120,000, and that practically pays for the two miles we want to build.

Mr. LOGGIE: So far as I am concerned, I cannot see that that is a good reason for the Government taking up a piece of property they bought and impliedly undertook to operate. They bought it from the Alexander Gibson road. Merely because you need a road on the other side, and to operate more economically on the other side, that is no reason why the Government should destroy an existing road. How much will it cost to make the improved facilities at Derby Junction? It would be necessary, I fancy, to have a station on the south side of the river at the bridge.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is all included in the $128,000.

Mr. LOGGIE: But you will still have to have two station agents.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, we would move the junction down, and would not have the extra agent.

Mr. LOGGIE: You will have to have a station agent on the south side of the river.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know, but we would move Chatham Junction down to it.

Mr. LOGGIE: You are going to move that to Derby Junction, are you not?

Mr. COCHRANE: No; down to where the branch line would strike.

Mr. LOGGIE: There is another thing I want to point out. There is a lumber mill on the road which is enjoying privileges and is shipping one or two million feet a year.

Mr. COCHRANE: By water?

Mr. LOGGIE: No, they are using the Canadian market very largely. I understand they are arranging to place their output in the Montreal market.

Mr. COCHRANE: We can only judge them by the past. My deputy says they have shipped by water in the past.

Mr. CARVELL: I have no personal interest in this matter, but I feel I should be lacking in my duty if I did not rise to substantiate and support the statement of my hon. friend. (Mr. Loggie.) The minister may say it would cost $122,000, but suppose it does, it is only a bagatelle to what he is spending on other parts of the system. You are taking away from people a right they have enjoyed for forty years and which they are entitled to enjoy in the future. It is not fair for the minister to say that he will not give a certain locality railway facilities because it does not pay. There is not a railway on earth that you cannot pick a piece out of which does not pay, and there are a great many spots on the Intercolonial railway that do not pay, but the minister does not take up the rails.

Mr. COCHRANE: The stations are only a mile and a half apart.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, but you have a river half a mile wide between them. The minister says: let the province look after a bridge across there, but I may tell him that the province of New Brunswick is not wealthy enough to build bridges to accommodate the Intercolonial railway. We have only 370,000 people; our revenues are small, and I see no possibility of increasing them to any great extent unless we resort to direct taxation. We are probably in a more unfortunate position in that respect than any other province in Canada; we have valuable timber lands, but in the last five, yes, in the last ten years, with respect to these timber lands we have been eating up our capital upon which the province depends for revenue. If the province of New Brunswick had $2,000,000 to-day it could spend it on necessary roads and bridges and then it would not have met all the wants of the people. It is all very well for the minister to say that the province should build a bridge, costing perhaps $150,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, no, the railway bridge only costs about $54,000.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister will find that $54,000 would not build the piers alone, and even if the cost were to be only $60,000 the province of New Brunswick has not got $60,000 to devote towards giving privileges to the people which the federal Government is taking away from them. We are suffering in New Brunswick for roads and bridges. I do not want to advertise my province as being in a poor condition, but I do say that in common with the rest of Canada we could spend a good deal of money on roads and bridges with advantage to the people. If the minister takes up these rails these people must have railway communication, and the minister should hesitate before he pursues that course.

Mr. COCHRANE: How many people in that section of the country?

Mr. LOGGIE: About 140 families.

Mr. CARVELL: If there were only one hundred people it is taking away from them rights which ought not to be taken and which must be supplied by someone else. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) was too modest to state the real reason for this: I have a suspicion there is a little jealousy in this district between the two towns down there and possibly there has been some wire-pulling between Newcastle and Chatham, and for that reason alone the minister ought not to allow this thing to take place. The minister knows that railway companies operate trains which do not pay. He need not shake his head; I can give illustrations in New Brunswick where the Canadian Pacific railway put on train after train on which they lose money, but they do so in order to cater to public sentiment. The Canadian Pacific railway is running a second train between my town and Fredericton, six-two miles, and they admit they are losing money, but they are doing it because the people of Fredericton demanded it. Newcastle is the shire town and Chatham is the business town and these people have to go to both towns, and the minister is cutting off their facilities for reaching both Chatham and Newcastle. The minister is putting a great burden on the people, by compelling them to remain over a day in order to make a trip to the shire town of Newcastle or to the business town of Chatham. But that is not half as bad as taking away from one hundred and forty families a privilege they enjoyed for thirty or forty years.

Mr. LOGGIE: Would the minister bear in mind that if this was a branch line then, under the policy of the Department of Railways, the Government would consider taking over this branch line and paying interest on it. They have already taken over this line and paid money for it.

Mr. COCHRANE: If it only paid running expenses I would be glad to give you a train; I would not want any profit on it.

Mr. LOGGIE: A branch line of itself may not even pay operating expenses, but if it brings a large amount of traffic to the main line and gives a long haul, it helps out the earnings of the road as a whole. The policy to-day is to endeavour to control and operate the branch lines, even if they do not pay. In the long run they will pay because they encourage business on the branch lines and make increased business for the main line. When this matter was brought up a few weeks ago, I suggested that I could give good reasons why this vote should not pass and why I should move to strike the item out. If I move to do so, I suppose my motion will be voted down. I would rather put the responsibility on the minister, as he has said that he has not finally decided, and promises he will look into the matter by visiting the settlements himself before he takes further action. The people whom I would like consulted particularly are those living at what is known as Ivory Crossing, between Nelson and Chatham Junction. That section formerly enjoyed railway facilities. The road received Dominion subsidies; then the Government bought the road from the Gibson Railway Company and have continued the railway privileges to that settlement. If the rails are removed, that section will be without any railway facilities whatever. They are not in contact with the river at all, but are two or three miles back from it at Nelson. It is a rather serious matter to take away the privileges which they have enjoyed for thirty-five or forty years. I have travelled in that train, and there are nearly always passengers for Ivory Crossing.

Mr. COCHRANE: Is that a village?

Mr. LOGGIE: Yes, there is quite a village there.

Mr. COCHRANE: Are there any industries there?

Mr. LOGGIE: No, there are no industries. It is a farming community, and large quantities of wood are shipped to the pulp mills and to the towns.

In regard to the other sections, namely, Chelmsford and Kirks, I must protest vigorously against the minister undertaking to remove the rails from there, and especially so until arrangements are made for bridges. I do not think anything should be done until arrangements are made, by the local government if you like, to construct two or three bridges. There should be a bridge at Derby Junction. There was one there, but it is beyond repair. The substructure is in places, but the superstructure is gone. The local government is building a new bridge between Nelson and Newcastle at a cost of about half a million dollars. They are not contemplating rebuilding the bridge at Derby Junction, and the only way passengers can get across is to walk along the railway bridge, which is contrary to law. Until that bridge is repaired and a bridge is built at Derby Junction, another at Chelmsford, and another possibly farther up the river, the Government should not undertake to remove these rails. Even if the bridges are to be built I protest against the removal of privileges enjoyed so long. The hon. minister will remember that, during the last two months, at the time of the freshets, the bridge at Blackville became in such a bad condition that it was not safe to run trains over it. It was necessary to run the train down the opposite side of the river and then back on the Intercolonial railway to Chatham Junction. In order to give necessary accommodation for freight, the hon. minister had to put on a train between Chatham Junction and Blackville. The minister cannot make the matter satisfactory to the people living at Ivory Crossing, because there is no possible way of giving them railway facilities in place of what he is taking away from them. In this matter

I am representing the settlements at Ivory Crossing, Chelmsford, Kirks, upper Nelson and Coughlans.

There is another district called Grey Rapids. I have in my desk a letter from the hon. John. O Birchill, protesting against these rails being taken up. He has lumber land near Grey Rapids, and it is impossible to take the lumber off these lands except by the railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: We should be glad to make a contract with him, if he would go at it.

Mr. LOGGIE: I presume he will be glad to do so. He did not know it was contemplated to take the rails up. When he heard of it he wrote me. He proposes to have the lumber cut along the railway, and to use the railway in order to carry it to market.

To increase accommodation at Fredericton, $20,000.

Mr. CARVELL: Do I understand the hon. minister to say that it is the intention that the St. John Valley railway shall use the new station at Fredericton in connection with their road?

Mr. COCHRANE: The arrangement is not completed, but is under consideration. We hope to have it completed so that they will use the Canadian Pacific railway station at Fredericton and use part of their track.

Mr. CARVELL: Are the Government building the Intercolonial railway station on the site of the old one, that is at the west side of Queen street?

Mr. COCHRANE: Very near it. The building is practically completed.

Mr. CARVELL: That will be half a mile up the line of the new St. John Valley road?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, but we propose running it to Fredericton on the Canadian Pacific railway track with the St. John Valley railway, but not with the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. CARVELL: I think it is a pity they have not been able to make one union station.

Mr. COCHRANE: Unfortunately it was under contract before I came into this office.

Mr. LOGGIE: I understood the minister to say that it was not intended to do away with either of the stations regarding the diversion of the line I had referred to before.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not.

Mr. LOGGIE: So that there will still be a Chatham station and a Derby Junction station?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: In his branch line policy, my hon. friend the minister will probably be compelled to take over lines that will not be any better from the standpoint of traffic than this one which he is giving up, and he will not be able to follow the principle that a line must pay. He will have to have one other idea in his mind besides that of paying, and that is the idea of giving facilities to the people. In New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and portions of the province of Quebec they were for a great many years without transportation facilities, but at last they got a certain kind in the way of branch lines that have not paid the companies to operate. My hon. friend should go slowly in taking away any advantages that the people have enjoyed. It is a serious wrench to people who have had accommodation for many years to have it taken away, even if it does not pay.

Mr. BOULAY (Rimouski): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways if, in the item we are now discussing, there is a vote affected to the construction of a viaduct at Petit-Métis? I have asked the same thing last year, and I was answered in the affirmative and nothing was done. I would like to know if the Minister of Railways intends to build that viaduct this year.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. gentleman can say what he wants in English.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is not fair to the hon. member. He can put his question in French, and my hon. friend can answer him in English, if he wants to.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think the hon. minister can compel the hon. gentleman to talk in English. If he desires to speak in French, it is his privilege. You, Mr. Chairman, might have to help the minister out in his reply. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boulay) can make himself better understood in the French language than in English.

Mr. COCHRANE: If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain the estimates, I think that what he wants is included.

Mr. BOULAY: I do not want this item carried before I get an explanation. I will try to explain what I want in English. I want to know if there is an amount of money in this vote to cover the expense of constructing subways at Macnider. Last year I put the same question and was told that the work would be done, but it has not been done. I would like to know if it is going to be done this year, and if there is an amount included in this item to cover the cost.

Mr. COCHRANE: The only subway for which we have provided in the hon. gentleman's constituency is a little west of Little Metis.

Mr. BOULAY: That is the one.

We complained some time ago to the Intercolonial railway. On a distance of 120 miles, since a few years, in the county of Rimouski, there are 500 or 600 men employed by the Intercolonial who have not received from their superior—I mean Mr. Brady—all the justice which they had a right to expect from him. The same complaints are also heard from the commercial public of my county who sees its business dwindling away.

I say that the men on the Intercolonial have not received justice. They have even been used roughly by the superintendent, Brady, and I will give the proof of that right now, so that this House may judge if my remarks are well grounded. I have here no bitterness nor rancour towards any one; all I want is to make known a few facts which will prove conclusively the lack of judgment, if not the malice and the evident incapacity of that man.

In several circumstances, last year, I have had to make myself heard through the newspapers, and I will read two letters which I sent to the Progrès du Golfe, in which I had laid a complaint against Mr. Brady, who is still the superintendent of the Intercolonial.

Following an incident which happened at Notre Dame du Sacré-Cœur last year, Mr. Brady had ordered the dismissal of seven or eight men from the service.

After taking communication of the facts, I have come—I am myself an old employee of the railway—to the conclusion that the punishment inflicted by Mr. Brady on those men was altogether unfair and to a certain extent had not been deserved. I have taken in hand the case of those men, I have written to Mr. Brady, and when I saw that we could not get justice I wrote the following article to the above mentioned paper. But before going any further I must say that Mr. Brady, before hearing the evidence of those men, and when he should have been present at the inquiry as a judge, saw fit to pronounce his judgment before even hearing what those men had to say. It is customary to hear at first the evidence before pronouncing the judgment, but not so with Mr. Brady; he passes condemnation before hearing those men, and he even goes so far as to say that they have perjured themselves. Here is the article I have sent:

To the Potentate Mr. Brady.

At the inquiry instituted to get at the causes and establish the responsibilities of the accident of Notre Dame du Sacré-Cœur, Mr. Brady, instead of acting as a wise, prudent and impartial judge, you have said before the inquiry was opened that the trainmen were the guilty ones and that there would be perjurers at that inquiry.

On what ground, Mr. Brady, could you possibly say such a thing?

More than that, during the inquiry, you went so far as to intimidate those poor fellows who were already sorry enough about the accident which had happened them, by hurling to their face the accusation that they were perjuring themselves.

Why were you saying that, Mr. Brady, if you are an intelligent man, if you have an elementary conception of the duties which pertain to you as a commissary of the Intercolonial? And, lastly, what were your reasons for throwing such despisable insults at some brave employees who, so far as honour and respectability are concerned, are certainly the equal of any commissaries on the Intercolonial?

Why! we have here seven or eight men swearing positively that the semaphore was down when their train passed, while two or three others from the outside swear the contrary, and that was enough for you to say that the first ones were perjuring themselves. But then you are not reasoning at all, Mr. Brady. Or, rather, you are reasoning contrary to the very evidence that was laid before you.

Mr. Brady, if you knew anything about a railway, you might have said to yourself that, in fact, a half minute before the train passed, it could have happened that the semaphore was up, but that through some inadvertance or oversight it might have been lowered for a few minutes and afterwards raised at the very moment that the train had passed, and that it was at that moment that some people from outside have seen that in reality the semaphore was up and that the train had passed.

Instead of dismissing the eight men you have thus brutally fired, without mercy and without any cause whatever, if you had acted as an impartial judge, your duty was then to give them the benefit of the doubt and to act colonial?

There is still more than that, Mr. Brady. You went so far as to tell them: 'If you do not speak English, we have no use for you on the Intercolonial.'

Is it true, Mr. Brady, that you have had the imprudence to say such a thing?

If, as some honourable people have told me, you have expressed yourself in the above terms, you do not deserve to be allowed to move about a single instant in the province of Quebec, because a gross insulter as you are has no right to occupy a position which puts him in daily contact with French Canadians.

On what right, Mr. Brady, you who do not speak French, could you reproach to a man not to speak English perfectly? You ought to know that indeed every one of those employees has more instruction than you have, in this sense that they all read and understand English, although they may perhaps not all speak it as fluently as if they had been born on the banks of the Thames.

That was obviously no obstacle to the fulfilment of their duties, and it was not necessary to speak English in order to ensure some politeness.

Happily, all the English people in this country are not of your opinion, Mr. Brady. But the reason you try to avenge yourself on the French Canadians is perhaps because you have not the honour to belong to the noble Anglo-Saxon race.

In conclusion, Mr. Brady, I must urgently ask you to give us an account of your conduct as regards the above-mentioned facts. It would indeed be preferable for you to give us immediately an answer to each accusation which public indignation has forced me to lay at your door. With the conscience of my duty as a representative of the people, I will go to the end of it without fear. You may take that as meaning that I have a good deal more in store for you, because your record is heavily laden.

H. Boulay.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Has Mr. Brady answered that letter?

Mr. BOULAY: No, I never got an answer. What happened at Sacré-Cœur was an accident. There was some fog at the time, and all the train men swore that the semaphore was down, while the agent has sworn that it was up. In face of the only evidence of the agent, and without having any regard to the oaths of the employees, Mr. Brady has dismissed every one of those men.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many?

Mr. BOULAY: Seven or eight. The least he could have done would have been to give the benefit of the doubt to those poor people?

After I had written the above article, the Society of Railway Employees took the case in hand and remonstrated with Mr. Brady. Three or four months after, those employees were taken back. If they were not guilty, why should seven or eight fathers of families have been suspended and suffer great losses, and then admit that a mistake had been made? If they were guilty, why have they been taken back? By so doing, Mr. Brady has admitted that he had been in the wrong, and he cannot escape from that.

A little later, I was a personal witness of another accident which happened at Sayabec.

I was at the station, and I saw conductor Deschamplain at the agent's office. He was then at his post, awaiting orders. Mr. Deschamplain's train was on the side track. That special train, which was stationing on the side track, backed up and struck the Ocean Limited, on a signal given by one of the brakemen or by the engineer to move that train on the main track. At that moment, conductor Deschamplain was on the station platform.

Was it the fault of the conductor if one of the brakemen made a mistake? Who was the one who should have been punished for the order given to back up the train? Was it the conductor or the brakeman? The conductor was then at his post, and he was the one who had the punishment.

Mr. PAQUET: Was there any inquiry?

Mr. BOULAY: There was no inquiry, and the very one who was guilty has not been suspended for a single day.

That happened in full daylight, in summer, and in the presence of every one who was on the train at the station.

I seized the opportunity to write another article, denouncing those facts to Mr. Brady. This is what I wrote:

Mr. Brady Judged by his Misdeeds.

Some time ago, Mr. Brady, a slight accident happened at Sayabec, at about 7 o'clock in the morning. I was at the station, and I saw conductor Deschamplain in the office, at his post, and waiting for the Ocean Limited to pass. Conductor Deschamplain's train was on the side track.

I had barely got on board the Ocean Limited, when we felt a great shock and I heard the breaking of glass. Promptly alighting I saw that the special train had backed up and struck the Ocean Limited on a signal given by one of the brakemen or the engineer in order to have that train moved on the main track. At that moment Conductor Deschamplain was on the station platform.

Was it his fault, Mr. Brady, if one of the brakemen made a mistake? And who was the one to be punished in the circumstance: the conductor who was at his post, waiting for the orders which were to be given to him, or the brakeman who made a mistake and who was the primary cause of the accident?

If the same question was put to a child who could have witnessed the accident, I am sure, Mr. Brady, that the answer of that child would be a good deal more logical than your own could be, since in the lofty heights in which you soar and in your much vaunted wisdom, the best you have been able to do was to hold that poor conductor responsible for the accident.

You suspend him for a month, depriving him of his salary during that time, or rather robbing him of his due, while the true author of the accident has not been suspended for a single day, and could then claim the right to indulge again in the same nonsense on the next day.

Do you know, Mr. Brady, that a man who does not show better judgment than that and who indulges in such foolish mistakes might just as well affirm that two and two make three and might turn a railway topsy-turvey inside of six months? You keep piling on injustices and tyrannies on your employees, you even dismiss those who fulfil their duty and you pretend to be in the right?

The Canadian Pacific saw fit to dispense with your services a few years ago, and I have learned that it could not have been without reason. You ought to learn how to be logical, Mr. Brady, and to reason before pronouncing a judgment. You should never forget that, in depriving of his salary that poor father of a family, you thereby take the bread out of the mouth of his children, and that the little ones with their mother in tears, are crying for vengeance against you.

The Government, and especially the hon. Minister of Railways ought to put an end to your exactions with the least possible delay, because the times of Nero are now gone forever, when that potentate used to show his cruelty in lighting Rome with living torches. While you are moving about, or rather 'winding along,' on the Intercolonial, in a luxurious private car put to your disposition by the people, you have become the terror of your employees who hold you in execration more than they dread you, you may be sure of it.

And the Intercolonial is not better managed than it was at the time of old Mr. Pottinger, who had alike the respect of the public and of his employees, whom he treated as men and not as brutes, that is with kindness and justice.

Now the game is up to you, Mr. Brady. You must defend yourself, if you are able to do it and if you have that audacity, against the accusations I have laid against you. You must show that you have acted in the right way in dismissing mercilessly Mr. Deschamplain for an accident of which he was in no way responsible. If you are able to do that, the public will decide who was right and will see if you have any brain left in your silly head.

Do not forget, Mr. Brady, that you owe to the public without delay, a frank and clean explanation of all the misdeeds I have laid against you. Should you persist in keeping, as usual, a prudent silence, I will be obliged to ask for an explanation of your conduct on the very floor of the House of Commons.

N. Boulay,
Member of Parliament.

Some time after that, I had another dispute with the same man, with regard to another affair, just as ridiculous as the above. It was on account of the lowering of the floor of the freight sheds, that is those that were to be built. As a rule, the floor of those sheds is on a level with the platform of the passenger station. This makes the handling of freight more easy. By lowering the level, you have an idea of the trouble to which the men are put who have to handle the freight. It naturally follows that those men experience much difficulty in passing from one floor to the other. There may not be any trouble with light freight, but when it comes to heavy loads of 1,500 or 2,000 lbs., it is another affair. When it comes, for instance, to handling a barrel of molasses or a steam engine, weighing often more than 2,000 lbs., you can see at once that the difference in the levels of the floor increases considerably the work of the men, and that those poor people are thus very often liable to accidents. Indeed, accidents are generally the rule, and any one can see at a glance that there is no common sense in that.

I have had to fight that during the whole summer, last year, and I was even forced on that account to come to Ottawa on two occasions. The Deputy Minister of Railways, who is a practical man, has given me justice. He took in the whole situation at a glance, and he admitted that such a scheme was ridiculous. Orders were immediately given to remedy that.

I have still another case to relate, so as to show the incompetence of Mr. Brady, whom they persist in keeping at the administration of the Intercolonial. We had on the railway a conductor named Audette. He was one of the best conductors on that railway, and the travelling public of the province of Quebec had come to know him very well.

That man has been doing service on the Intercolonial during over thirty years. He has been superannuated, although he should still be on active service. But Mr. Brady took into his head that he should be put on the superannuation list. On a certain winter day, when Mr. Audette had presented himself for duty, Mr. Brady did not find that he was sufficiently dressed to meet his tastes, and so, forthwith, and without inquiring about the physical capacities of Audette, he gave him the necessary orders to the superintendent to have the man put on the superannuated list. All the other employees objected to such a proceeding, because they were forced to pay the man a pension under the general fund kept up by those same employees, and that during 10 or 15 years, without any necessity whatever, because Mr. Audette is still able to work during all those years.

But Mr. Brady was not the one who could admit he had made a mistake. He maintained his decision and Mr. Audette was put on the superannuation list. Mr. Audette draws to-day a pension. He is an insurance agent, and, as evidence that he is still to-day quite able to work, he is able to earn a salary equal to the amount of his pension. He is still more able and stronger than any other employee to be met with on that railway.

There is another case I may cite, and which is, so to say, worse than all the others, to show the lack of judgment of that Mr. Brady. What I will relate has happened on the 2nd of February last. A train came into collision with another train at St. Moïse. Conductor Smith had orders to run ahead of train No. 99, which had left Campbellton and was going to St. Flavie. When he left Sayabec station, he saw that there was a train in rear, but nobody told him that it was No. 99, and he kept on towards St. Moïse, which is the next station. Train No. 99, which was really the one arriving at Sayabec when Smith was leaving that station, was obliged to wait about ten minutes so as to leave the necessary interval between two trains following each other.

Now, engineer Matheson was on train No. 99, and he knew very well that Smith could not be very far, because he was kept at Sayabec so as to give Smith sufficient time to get away, and his duty was to slacken speed so as to prevent an accident. Between Sayabec and St. Moïse there is an ascent of five miles, followed by a descent of three miles, when coming to St. Moïse. As Smith's train was coming into St. Moïse at a speed of ten miles an hour, he saw coming towards him in the rear, at great speed, train No. 99. As his orders were to meet train No. 76 at St. Moïse, and in order to avoid an accident with the train which should be in front of the station, he was forced to slacken the speed of his own train to ten miles an hour, thereby acting in the way of prudence and acting according to the rules. He has been censured for not having properly protected his train, but he could not do that, because there is no necessity to protect a train under way, especially when running at ten miles an hour.

As a sequence to the inquiry, the only man suspended was Smith, who was not guilty. I will read some parts of the evidence heard at the inquiry, so that you may better understand all tne facts:

Mr. Brady wrote to Mr. Price as follows:

Moncton, N.B., Feb. 22, 1913.

E. Price, Esq.,
Superintendent,
Campbellton, N.B.

Dear Sir,—Referring to yours of the 12th February, relative to the pitch-in at St. Moise on the 2nd February, Conductor Smith and his rear brakeman are at fault for not properly protecting their train. You will suspend the conductor three months and reduce him to a brakeman for six months, and if he does not act as a brakeman for six months he is to remain suspended for six months, and you will suspend the brakeman, Dubé, for three months for violation of the rules regarding rear end protection. You will reprimand Engineer Matheson for not using better judgment in approaching St. Moise station on this occasion. Mr. Matheson admits himself that he could see the van lights of the train ahead of him for sixteen or seventeen telegraph poles.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. P. Brady,
General Superintendent.

This same engineer, only three weeks before, lost his train and ran seventeen miles into a station without discovering that his train had parted. He was recommended by the superintendent to be suspended for two weeks, but has not been suspended, and on this poor fellow, Conductor Smith, has been placed the whole responsibility for the accident. Matheson admits himself that he could see the van light of the train ahead of him for fifteen or sixteen telegraph poles.

Mr. BOULAY.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What do you mean by saying he lost his train?

Mr. BOULAY: There was a cut-off between the train and the engine, and he went on without noticing that he had lost his train until he got to the station. He had left his train seventeen miles behind. That is the same man to whom the accident happened about three weeks afterwards. In the investigation held into the second accident, the one which occurred between No. 99 and Conductor Smith's train, he admitted that he could see Smith's van fifteen or sixteen telegraph poles ahead of him and he had only fifteen cars on his train then.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Did you ever have any opportunity to complain of this to the minister or why did you wait so long to bring it up here?

Mr. BOULAY: I will give you the answer in a moment. When this was reported to me, I went to the deputy minister's office and explained the whole thing. I will read what Mr. Campbell writes on the matter. He wrote this letter to Mr. Brady:

Friday, April 11, 1913.

Dear Sir,—I return herewith the inclosure received with your letter of the 28th ultimo, your file B2/9286, re collision between No. 99 train and Smith's west-bound special near St. Moise on Febraury 2 last.

I have gone carefully over the evidence brought forth at the investigation into this accident, and from what I can gather from this evidence I am unable to understand the discipline which you have meted out to those responsible.

In the first place, from Conductor Smith's evidence it would appear that his train was running at about the rate of 10 miles per hour when struck by No. 99, so that I am unable to undertsand what further protection he could have given his train than he did by having his brakeman jump from the rear of the train to stop No. 99 before that should strike Smith's special.

On the other hand, Engineer Matheson of No. 99 train, knowing that Smith's special was only a very short distance in front of him, as No. 99 train had to be held 10 minutes at Sayabec to permit Smith's special to get away, should have had his train under control so that it could have been stopped within the length of his vision. This was not the case, as he stated he saw the rear of Smith's train when within about six telegraph poles from it. In his report of the matter Superintendent Price recommends the suspension of Conductor Smith and Brakeman Dubé for two months, for not protecting properly the rear of their train, and suspension of Engineer Matheson for two weeks, for not having his train under proper control.

However, in your letter of February 22 to Superintendent Price, you increase the discipline of Conductor Smith from two months suspension, suggested by Superintendent Price, to three months suspension, with reduction to brakeman for six months, and if he does not act as brakeman for six months he is to remain suspended for six months; you also increase the proposed two months suspension of Brakeman Dubé to three months suspension. On the other hand, you reduce the discipline of Engineer Matheson from two weeks suspension, as recommended by Superintendent Price, to a reprimand for not using better judgment in approaching St. Moise station, although you add 'Mr. Matheson admits himself that he could see the van lights of the train ahead of him for sixteen or seventeen telegraph poles.' In his evidence he states that he was about six telegraph poles from the rear of Smith's special when he first saw it. It would appear, as suggested by Superintendent Price, that Engineer Matheson should be disciplined, and while conductor Smith might have given further protection by the use of fusees and torpedoes, yet he and his brakeman were on the lookout and his brakeman, in order to flag No. 99, jumped from the train while it was running ten miles an hour. Doesn't it appear as if Engineer Matheson seeing Smith's train six or seven telegraph poles ahead, should have so controlled his train as to have avoided this accident. Doesn't it also appear as if Matheson was exceedingly reckless in running into Smith's train while the latter was still moving at ten miles an hour? There is strong exception taken to the discipline meted out to Smith and Dubé, especially in view of Matheson being allowed to go free.

I wish you would look over the evidence again, particularly with reference to the points which are referred to in this letter, and let us have your further views as to why Matheson should not be punished.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. W. Campbell.

This letter was written to Brady on April 11, 1913. This was a very sensible letter according to the evidence and what is said there is according to the best judgment of the deputy minister. Certainly between April 11 and this date Brady should have found his way to correct himself in justice to these poor people who were badly treated, but still it is only lately that he has found a way to repair the michief he has done. I shall read his letter later on. He replied to Mr. Campbell on April 16, 1913, as follows:

A. W. Campbell,
Chairman Government Railway, Management Board, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your communication of the 11th instant, with reference to the pitch-in between No. 99 train and Smith's west-bound special at St. Moise on February 2 last. I have noted the contents.

Conductor Smith did not put on his protection quick enough. He might just as well under the circumstances not have put it out at all. He could at any point have dropped off a fusee, which is furnished him for this particular purpose without it being necessary for him to have jumped from the train. This he did not do, and the circumstances show clearly that neither he nor his brakeman jumped from the train until they saw No. 99 coming into them.

Engineer Matheson was within his rights. I know of no rule or custom that requires a regular train to run at a rate of speed to enable them to stop within their vision, and if such a rule existed we would never get our regular trains over the road. Matheson claims he had his train under control so that he could have stopped before passing the semaphore if it had stood at danger and the small amount of damage done sustains him in this. On account of frost in the air he was unable to see the semaphore until about the time he saw the tail lights. This accident was due entirely to the fact that the conductor did not protect his train as quick as he ought to have done and as he could have done without any inconvenienec to himself or his brakemen and they are both responsible.

The punishment meted out to these men is similar to the punishment laid down by the hon. the minister in the Sacré Cœur accident; which is similar in all respects.

The great majority of the accidents we have had this winter of this nature was caused either through slowness on the part of the men who should have protected or entire failure to protect.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. P. Brady.

I made some further representations, and Mr. Campbell wrote again to Mr. Brady. When I saw that I could not get justice from Brady, Conductor Dubé and I went and had an interview with the minister and a letter was written on the 16th April by Mr. Campbell to Mr. Brady. I have not the letter which was written by Mr. Campbell nor have I the reply. These two letters have apparently gone astray. Anyway they were in much the same terms as the letters which I have just read, Mr. Brady taking the ground that he could not do anything.

Now, I will give some particulars from the evidence in this case. I have given a summary of the evidence and I have no doubt that my statement of the case will be understood by most hon. members who are conversant with the running of trains. Smith's train had an order from the despatcher to run ahead of train No. 99, which was two hours late. After he had started he found that there was another special running ahead of No. 99. He ran ahead of this special train all the time. His order was to run to Ste. Flavie. The order said: Run ahead of No. 99 until overtaken, which means until the train comes near enough to pass you. When he was leaving Sayabec, Smith saw a train behind him which he thought was the special, but which was No. 99. Nobody told him about that train. The despatcher should have advised him that this train was the one which should have gone ahead of him, but for some reason he was not so advised and when Smith was leaving Sayabec train No. 99 was entering the station yard. According to the rule in force on the railway no train may leave a station until ten minutes has elapsed after the departure of the preceding train, and under this rule the agent at Sayabec should not have permitted No. 99 to depart before that time. The train of which Matheson was driver should have waited for seven or eight minutes at Sayabec to allow the ten minutes to elapse and as it did not do this the engineer knew very well that the other train was not very far ahead of him. He knew very well that he was running too fast. There is an upgrade from Sayabec for about five miles and then there is a down grade of about three miles to St. Moise. He had a lighter train than that which was ahead of him. Still he left Sayabec after the expiry of the time, went up the grade, and then struck the three mile down grade leading to St. Moise. He could not have been looking out for the train ahead of him. Conductor Smith had an order to cross another train at St. Moise and the rule says that when a train has an order to cross another at a certain point it must approach the station slowly. Conductor Smith's train was running at a rate of about ten miles an hour approaching the station at St. Moise where he was obliged to go slow in order to avoid a collision with the train he expected to meet at that station. Still, although running at the rate of ten miles an hour, he was struck by the other train coming behind him. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Brady says that the man ahead must be punished for not getting out of the way of the other fellow. Now, I propose to read some of the evidence.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will the hon. gentleman tell me who the train despatcher was who gave the orders?

Mr. BOULAY: I could not tell that.

Mr. MACDONALD: Is he not the man who is responsible?

Mr. BOULAY: I think the despatcher should have advised the agent at Sayabec that train No. 99 was close enough to the special ahead to allow it to pass.

Mr. MACDONALD: Have you made inquiry who was the despatcher there?

Mr. BOULAY: No, I did not inquire. This was not done, but the driver knowing the facts, he should have been more careful and he is the man who should have been punished and not Smith.

Mr. MACDONALD: Who is the superintendent of the division?

Mr. BOULAY: Mr. Price. Here is the evidence of Conductor Smith at the investigation:

Statement of conductor E. Smith, before assistant superintendent L. S. Brown, present; chief despatcher H. H. Bray.

Q. Dou you remember what orders you had leaving Sayabec?—A. I got an order at Matapedia to run ahead of No. 99 until overtaken, and held an order to cross No. 76 at St. Moise.

Q. What time did you leave Sayabec?—A. 5.30—K.

Q. Was No. 99 train at Sayabec when you left Sayabec?—A. No. 99 train was about the east semaphore at Sayabec when I left there, but I did not know it was No. 99 train as Raymond's special was following me at Causapscal ahead of No. 99.

Q. What kind of a night was it? —A. It was a cold night, but the lights could be seen distinctly.

There are two lights on the rear of every special train showing all the time.

Q. How far away was No. 99 train when your train was near the semaphore?—A. About eight or ten telegraph poles from the rear of my train.

Q. Could you notice that they were coming fast?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not think it necessary to put out a signal?—A. I ordered brakeman Dubé to put out a signal, he took his lamp and jumped from the train, the red light went out; he had the white light and gave them a signal to stop; he went back about a telegraph pole and was all the time he had. I was on the rear step of the van and could see him giving the stop signal; I was also giving the stop signal. My reason for not knowing it was No. 99 train following the train order I held read as follows: No. 76 will cross Smith and Raymond at St. Moise; No. 99 train was not mentioned.

The driver on Smith's train deposes as follows:

Q. Did you stop at the east semaphore at St. Moise?—A. I did not. St. Moise is a bad place to cross and I was approaching the semaphore carefully. As soon as I saw that the semaphore was all right I released the brake and was running at about ten miles per hour.

This corroborates the evidence given by the conductor plainly that they were running ten miles an hour. Then the evidence of Driver Matheson is:

Q. How far would you be from the rear of his train when you first saw it?—A. I would judge about six telegraph poles.

This man deposed that he saw the train for about six telegraph posts, and any man who has a knowledge of railroading knows that a train of fifteen cars, if equipped with air brakes, if the brakes are in good working order, can stop that train inside of five telegraph poles, even though it were running twenty miles an hour. This man admits in his evidence that he saw the train at six telegraph poles from him. He also deposes in his evidence that he could have seen a train sixteen or seventeen telegraph posts ahead. But, strange to say, after the evidence given in this case, and after the facts elicited, and after representation of the superintendent that Smith be suspended only for two months, Mr. Brady comes and says: I suspend him for three months and I give him six more months braking, and I give no punishment of any kind to Matheson. A man who has no more judgment than Brady and who does such a thing to poor people who depend on him for their livelihood, should not be any longer retained in the public service.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, during the years 1903-4, the liberal government, which was then at the head of public affairs, had on the Intercolonial a deficit of $900,000. In 1904-5, that deficit had increased to $1,725,000. In face of these deficits accruing every year the liberal government had established a commission entrusted with the administration of the Intercolonial, and the results obtained show a notable improvement. And so, under the conservative administration, the surplus have kept increasing considerably.

The hon. member has mentioned Mr. Brady. That gentleman is certainly not endowed with all perfections; but in my county I believe he has given justice, because I can say that in every case the decisions he has rendered have been strictly in accordance with the evidence. At all events, under his administration, and from the information gathered, the results have certainly been better than those of former times. We must, of course, attribute a large part of those results to the prudence and ability of the hon. Minister of Railways and of his officers at Ottawa.

I am not prepared to assume the responsibility of all that my hon. friend from Rimouski has seen fit to say about Mr. Brady.

Quite lately the Government has given a strong and energical impulsion to the administration of the affairs of that railway by entrusting it to a man of great competence.

Before concluding those remarks, I would have a favour to ask of the hon. Minister of Railways, and that is to appoint a French-speaking counsel to whom would be entrusted the examination and settlement of all claims in our province. He will certainly not refuse to do that act of justice to the province of Quebec.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Why did you not keep the one that you had? That was certainly the time for the member for L'Islet to have shown himself.

Mr. PAQUET: I will say this to the hon. member for Temiscouata. A few years ago, I rose in this House to ask for the appointment of a French Canadian as member of the Intercolonial Commission. My adversary in the elections of 1908 was chosen by the liberal government and was appointed general counsel and member of that commission. On account of my relations with Mr. Caron I did not want to mention him in this House, but I believe that we could easily know why that counsel has deserved the fate that has happened to him. I may say that having written to that gentleman in order to obtain justice in my county, Mr. Caron gave me to understand in his answer that, as a commissioner, his influence did not amount to much in the commission.

I am asking the hon. Minister of Railways to appoint a general counsel to hear the claims of the French Canadians along the Intercolonial. He should appoint a barrister of some eminence who would be entrusted with the settlement of those claims and who would render justice to whomsoever it is due.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Why have you not kept Mr. Caron, who was the only French Canadian, and who has just been dismissed? It was then that you should have shown yourself the great defender of the French Canadians.

Mr. LEMIEUX (Rouville): Mr. Chairman, as I have been sitting during many years with Mr. Caron, who was then the member for Ottawa, and as I have protested the other day against his dismissal, I believe it is my duty to answer to the somewhat harsh observations which have just been made by the hon. member for L'Islet.

Mr. PAQUET: I have been led into speaking of Mr. Caron by the remarks of the member for Temiscouata.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Obviously the hon. member for L'Islet has not forgotten the contest in which Mr. Caron was engaged with him, in 1908, in the county of L'Islet. He ought to keep in mind the famous retort of a King of France who was saying: 'The King of France has not avenged the insults made to the Duke of Orleans.'

Mr. Caron has been during many years a barister practicing his profession in the province of Ontario, among the French population. He is known for his competency, and also for being a man open to conciliation. I may say that if he has been appointed a member of the Intercolonial by the Laurier Government, it was especially due to the fact that he was eminently a conciliating man.

We had been asking since many years for the appointment of one of our own countrymen to hear the claims of the farmers along the Intercolonial. I am happy to say that the ex-Minister of Railways, the member for Renfrew, acceded gracefully to our request, and then appointed Mr. Caron.

That appointment was approved by all the French Canadians, without distinction of parties, and I never heard that there had been a complaint against Mr. Caron's manner of filling his duties.

Mr. Caron had a very lucrative practice in Ottawa, among the French people of the province of Ontario.

To comply with the law, Mr. Caron had to take up his abode in Moncton, far away from his friends and his family.

Since having been appointed a commissioner, and I have had the proof of it every day, he has rendered justice to the Government and to those who had claims against the Intercolonial. He has that great advantage to speak with equal fluency the two languages, and he is thus able to hear complaints from whichever side they come.

He has now been dismissed. I have just heard the remarks made by the hon. member for Rimouski. He complains of Mr. Brady and of his injustices. I am not familiar with the questions which have been submitted to the consideration of this Committee this afternoon by the member for Rimouski; but I must affirm that those difficulties will come back again and will be more numerous than ever if the Minister of Railways does not return Mr. Caron to the position which has been taken away from him in such an arbitrary manner, or if his place is not filled up in the commission by one who speaks our language.

I do not understand the attitude of the member for L'Islet. During many years he has posed in the province of Quebec as the apostle of national revendications. To his mind, the French Canadian members of the House of Commons, and especially those who were in the Laurier cabinet, were traitors to their race, traitors to the French language, and he denounced them vehemently. Now the hon. member, with all his party, has passed to the right of the Speaker, and the dismissals, I regret to have to say so, have been especially numerous among those who speak the language and who profess the faith of the hon. member for L'Islet. Among those who have thus guillotined the French Canadians, we see, in the first ranks, the hon. member for L'Islet, the hon. Postmaster General, Mr. Pelletier; the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. Nantel, and all those apostles of Nationalism of the years dating before the contest of 1910-11, all those intransigents who used to say: We must have all or nothing, and now the very ones who are most eager in their work of dismissing their countrymen from public offices.

Mr. Caron is a victim of the system which has been inaugurated when the conservative party came to power in 1911. And whatever might say the hon. member for L'Islet, it is not true that Mr. Caron has had no influence in the commission. Here is probably what has happened: The hon. member for L'Islet and some of his friends must have asked Mr. Caron to commit injustices. He has not seen fit to grant them what they were asking, and so he was put in a bad posture.

Mr. PAQUET: Can the hon. member show any proof of that?

Mr. GAUVREAU: Did you show yourself any proofs against Mr. Caron, a moment ago?

Mr. LEMIEUX: This is what happened. So as to put an end to those absolutely unfair demands which were made to him by the member for L'Islet and his friends of the same kind, Mr Caron must have answered that he had not the necessary influence, but every one knows that he was a conciliating man, that he had the confidence of his colleagues, that he was upright and that he would have never submitted to be a party to an injustice. They have taken advantage that the conservative party was in power to dismiss him. I have no hesitation to say that such an act is one more nasty trick added to the long list of those already committed by the tory party since they have assumed power.

How do you justify the dismissals, in the Yukon, of Notary Gosselin and of Mr. Laliberté? How can you justify the dismissal, in Paris, of Mr. Poindron, who was the commercial agent of Canada? How do you explain that hon. Mr. Parent, instead of being superseded by a citizen of the province of Quebec, and his place filled by Major Leonard? I do not question the competency of Mr. Leonard, and I simply want to show this: and it is that in spite of his violent declamations, in spite of all that outward show of intransignificance, in spite of all his St. Jean Baptiste speeches, and all that about everything and about nothing, the member for L'Islet has been largely instrumental in having the province of Quebec lose the influence which it had under the old regime.

When I see him approving the dismissal of Mr. Caron, who has given up a lucrative practice in order to take up his abode in Moncton, and whose strong health is now to-day impaired; when I see him rejoice at that dismissal for which there was no cause nor any ground whatever, I say that the member for L'Islet is a false patriot, and that the sooner the electors of Quebec will know it the better it will be for the province and for the county of L'Islet.

Mr. COCHRANE: I may say to the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) that all the men on the Intercolonial railway belong to organizations—the trainmen, enginemen, trackmen, and so on. When any punishment that is unfair is meted out to any of them, the organization is soon after the management to see that the matter is put right. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the organizations to say whether pustice has been done or not, because we have no word from them, although the accidents happened some time ago. When men get careless, lives are lost, and punishment must be meted out. If we let them go without punishment, the travelling public and the men themselves would not be protected. In reference to the doing away with the management board and Mr. Caron, the appointment of a French-speaking lawyer at Montreal or some other place on the road will take place very shortly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What will be the functions of that official ?

Mr. COCHRANE: He will do any legal work that is required in the province of Quebec.

Mr. PROULX: How many lawyers are there to be ?

Mr. COCHRANE: One is enough in the province of Quebec. We could have another in the other provinces.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Was any charge made against Mr. Caron ?

Mr. COCHRANE: No charge at all was made against the commission. The commission was done away with, not Mr. Caron.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If there was no charge against Mr. Caron, I appeal to the sense of justice and fairness of the hon. minister. Mr. Caron was a member of this House for several years. He was a practising lawyer in the city of Ottawa, and had quite a lucrative practice in this district.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not suppose he practices in Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX: No, not in Quebec; in Ottawa. He was appointed by the former Minister of Railways and Canals. I presume that the salary paid by the department was about equal to the amount he received from his practice in Ottawa. The fact that he left the city of Ottawa ought to be considered. He has been in office for three years and has taken up his residence at Moncton. He has been dismissed —there is no other word for it. If my hon. friend is going to appoint a gentleman who speaks the French language to settle the claims that are so numerous in the province of Quebec on the Intercolonial railway, he might just as well appoint Mr. Caron for these duties.

Mr. COCHRANE: He is not qualified to practice in the province of Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is not necessary that he should practice before the Quebec courts. His duty was to go about and find out what were the claims and to report to the department whether or not the claims should be settled. If the claims are referred to the Exchequer Court, it does not matter whether the lawyer belongs to the Bar of the province of Quebec or to that of the province of Ontario. Mr. Caron has lost enormously over this. He has lost his legal practice. After three years he has been recalled from Moncton to Ottawa, and he has to start afresh in life. My hon. friend says the commission was dismissed. That may be true in one sense, but it is not true in the other. Mr. Brady and Mr. Tiffin are retained under Mr. Gutelius, and Mr. Caron is the only one who is left out.

Mr. COCHRANE: What about Mr. Pottinger ?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Mr. Pottinger has been in the service for forty years and is pensioned. I regret the fact that Mr. Pottinger is pensioned, because he is to-day one of the leading authorities on railways in North America. At all events, he is provided for, while Mr. Caron is literally thrown on the streets, although there is no charge against him. I appeal to my hon. friend's sense of fair play and justice, and I ask him to reconsider the decision which has been arrived at by the Department of Railways and Canals. Mr. Caron was a good official; he was popular on the line with both parties. He may not have been popular with the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet), but this gentleman is not the only pebble on the beach. Let my hon. friend ask the other members who happen to belong to the conservative party. They will tell him that Mr. Caron was a fair-minded man, very accessible, very genial, and really was a credit to the Board of the Intercolonial railway and to the public service. I understand from what the hon. gentleman has said that the man who has chopped off his head is the hon. member for L'Islet, and not the hon. minister.

Mr. COCHRANE: He never had anything to do with it.

Mr. PAQUET: Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, when I have done.

Mr. GAUVREAU: That may have been the price of his treachery.

Mr. PAQUET: Mr. Speaker, I must ask the hon. member for Temiscouata to withdraw his words.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I have no need for your intervention, Mr. Chairman; I am conscious of having gone beyond the rules of the House; I withdraw those words, we will settle that by and by.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If that is so, then the real author of the dismissal of Mr. Caron is the member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet).

Mr. COCHRANE: That is absolutely untrue. The hon. member for L'Islet could not have anything to do with it.

Mr. MACDONALD: He wanted to have it done.

Mr. COCHRANE: He did not.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The hon. minister says that there is no charge against Mr. Caron, and that he was a good officer. He says at the same time that Mr. Brady and Mr. Tiffin will remain in the service. Therefore I say there is something mysterious about Mr. Caron's dismissal. If there is no charge against him, do the right thing by him. Do not treat him so severely. Consider that he has lost some of his former good health, and that he has taken up his abode in New Brunswick. Consider also that he has lost his practice as a barrister in the city of Ottawa. And if the hon. gentleman has any sense of fair play and British justice he will see that Mr. Caron is treated loyally.

Mr. PAQUET: I had no intention to prolong this discussion, but I must protest energetically against the language of the hon. member for Rouville. I must say to the hon. member that I have laid no charge neither directly nor indirectly against the commissioner of the Intercolonial, Mr. J. B. T. Caron. I must say that my relations with him have been friendly, and that I have nothing whatever to say against the manner with which I have been treated in my official relations.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Why then should not the hon. member have him appointed counsel for the Intercolonial?

Mr. PAQUET: I have said a moment ago that I had no intention to introduce the name of Mr. Caron in this discussion, but I have been led to do it owing to the harsh observations made by the hon. member for Temiscouata.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I must say to the hon. member that if I have mentioned Mr. Caron's name, it was because he had asked the Minister of Railways to have his place filled by another French-Canadian.

Mr. PAQUET: I believe that the hon. member for Temiscouata lends himself to being carried away by his violence every time I speak in this House. Indeed, I have never asked the hon. Minister of Railways to put another man in Mr. Caron's place, neither did I ask for his dismissal, and if the hon. Minister of Railways appoints him again to the same place, the member for l'Islet will have no cause of complaint against him.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will you recommend him? If the hon. member recommends him to the minister, then I am ready to retract everything I have said against him.

Mr. PAQUET: I am ready to recommend him if it can be shown to me that the members of the commission deserve to occupy the position which they had before their dismissal.

I believe my words must be clear enough. The hon. member for Rouville has accused me of having been the means of lowering the influence of my race because I had claimed the rights of the French language. I will say this: If in asking that a French-Canadian should be appointed general counsel for the protection of the French-Canadian interests along the Intercolonial, I have committed a crime, then I declare myself guilty; if by so doing I have betrayed the rights of the French language, I am willing to continue to do so in the future as I have done in the past.

Mr. MACDONALD: Mr. Caron was a member of this House and was known to quite a number who are still members. When he retired and accepted a public office, it was under such conditions that everyone felt that he deserved the position which he was given. I am able to say that, so far as the people along the line of the Intercolonial railway are concerned, they found in Mr. Caron a very satisfactory official. He was popular with both sides of politics and there was no element of partyism evident in any part of his administration. It has long been an unwritten rule of this country that when a man in public life retires and accepts a position in the public service, some exceptional recognition should be given to the fact that he has devoted his life to the public welfare. There are few if any cases in which such men in office, no matter by which side they have been appointed, have been retired.

Mr. COCHRANE: Why was not the commission made permanent then?

Mr. MACDONALD: The minister has not answered my point. What I say is that the history of this country would be searched in vain for many cases—I doubt that there is one before this of Mr. Caron—in which a member of this House retiring and accepting a public office has had that office taken from him. Such a man, retiring, knows what his rights are and what his limitations are and how far he can and should go, and I am sure that in the eastern provinces there will not be found a man who will say that Mr. Caron did anything in a political way or did anything at all but fulfil the duties of his office in a most satisfactory manner. Therefore, he had special claims upon the Minister of Railways and Canals. To other hon. members of this House the time will come sooner or later when they will wish to retire. There are members on on that side who are already looking for opportunity to retire in some public office. And also the time will come inevitably when their party will be out of power and their opponents will be in office. Do they want the rule which has always been exercised, a sort of free masonry, to be violated, and the consideration which has always been regarded as due to men in their circumstances forgotten? The minister tells us that the member for L'Islet did not want Mr. Caron removed. Well, the member for L'Islet did not do very much to keep him there. He did not go to the minister and ask him to leave Mr. Caron who was a French representative on the Board of Railway Commissioners. He did not tell him: In the readjustment, whatever you do, do not take Mr. Caron away. In his heart, he wanted Mr. Caron removed, because Mr. Caron had been an opponent of his. The fact that the hon. member for L'Islet made such a tremendous somersault on the naval question furnishes some explanation why Mr. Caron was dismissed, and that seems to me a very reasonable explanation. The hon. member for L'Islet, at any rate, is not urging very strongly upon the minister to keep this ex-member of Parliament in office. In fact he is trying to get some other gentleman to fill the place. Do not let us have any misunderstanding about this thing —that is where the hon. member for L'Islet stands, and the minister too. The minister says that the commission was abolished and he had to dismiss Mr. Caron. Well, while Mr. Caron was a member of the commission his duties were well defined. He was dealing with the legal questions that came up in connection with the administration of the railway. But the minister let Mr. Caron go, and is going to proceed next week to appoint another gentleman simply because he is a French-Canadian, probably a Nationalist out of a job, wanting to hang on to the coat-tails of this Government, fearing that they will soon be out of power and the Nationalist wing will be left out altogether. Mr. Caron, a former member of this House, a man of integrity and ability, is being treated in this very shabby way—no mincing matters, that is where we stand.

I have heard the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) discuss railway questions. It was not very clear what his opinion of the administration of the Intercolonial railway really was. Does he think that administration is good, wise and efficient? Surely he did not take up the time of the committee merely to tell us that here was a man who had committed a wrong, and, instead of getting three months' suspension he should have only got two. Is that the complaint he is making, or is that the reason he is taking the position he does in this House? What does the hon. member really think about the administration of the Intercolonial since the change of Government? I would like to hear what he has to say about it.

Mr. BOULAY: Mr. Chairman, in answer to—

Mr. MACDONALD: Let us have it in English, so we shall understand what you are saying.

Mr. BOULAY: I can not offer an opinion on the management of the Intercolonial. I see there has recently been a change, but I make it a practice to judge every one by their own acts; therefore I must wait for a while yet. I think I have said enough to express my opinion on Mr. Brady's management. The hon. Minister of Railways told us that the employees of that railway had associations to protect themselves. I know that such associations are in existence, but it is very well known what a costly experiment it is to bring them into action. The president of the Brotherhood lives in the United States and it takes month after month before you can reach him; and during that time the unfortunate heads of large families are kept out of work waiting for the association to deal with the question. Moreover, it is very important to have as managers of the railway, men who can settle such questions without waiting for the interference of the association.

For the last thirty-five years we have had a man who was general manager of the Intercolonial. I am referring to Mr. Pottinger. His management met with the approval of both French and English Canadians. I, myself, have had occasion to meet him frequently and I have always found him a perfect gentleman, very agreeable in his dealings with all.

He would receive us in his office like gentlemen, and although we did not always get satisfaction, although we sometimes failed to get what we asked for, we left him happy and contented, because we had the answer of a fair and clever man. I am sorry to see such a man leaving the service of the Intercolonial while such a man as Mr. Brady is being kept on. Mr. Pottinger is still in full possession of his mental and physical strength. He knows the Intercolonial from the first mile to the last; he is friendly with everybody in the maritime provinces as well as in the province of Quebec. I have known him since 1875, and I am sorry to see him retired. I hope he asked to be retired, but I cannot believe it unless I am told so by himself. We will never have a more devoted servant of the country than he was.

It is said that since Mr. Brady has been appointed Chairman of the Board there is no more deficit. That is true, but it must be borne in mind that Mr. Pottinger was there when the road was created. The fact is that he built and equipped the road. There was a surplus then, but everything was to be done. He must have had to submit to political influences and must have had to do things that he would not have done had he been left to himself. With Mr. Brady it is quite the reverse. When he was given the management of the road he was also given leave to do as he liked. He has cut heads off; he has cut down everywhere and he has increased the freight rates. Moreover, the traffic has increased largely. It was there the same as elsewhere. Twenty years ago the revenue of the country hardly reached 35 millions; to-day it is 160 millions. Everything has increased in proportion and the revenue of the Intercolonial like the rest. And still we are told that the surplus is due to Mr. Brady's management. It seems to me that is not fair.

During my long experience on the Intercolonial I have not known of one single employee who has ever criticized the decisions of Mr. Pottinger, even when he was not satisfied. I must give him that credit publicly. He deserves it.

As to Mr. Caron, whose dismissal is deplored, I would certainly prefer to see him remain at his post, to having nobody put in his place. Mr. Brady should make room for a French Canadian.

There is another anomoly of which I have to complain. For a few years back, the travelling public observes that the Pullman employees are all or nearly all English-speaking people. I have asked the House for a statement of the Pullman car employees travelling between Montreal and Halifax. From that statement it appears that there are 26 conductors in all, 21 of whom are English-speaking and 5 French-speaking people. From a table showing the dining-cars, which are very numerous, we find there are 120 employees, conductors, cooks, table waiters, &c. Of the 15 conductors not one is French speaking. To summarize, out of that number of employees there are only 10 French Canadians, which show that the proportion is not fairly kept.

In 1911, I complained of all these facts, at the management office, which is under the charge of Mr. Archibald at Halifax. I also complained to Mr. Tiffin. I have received from these two gentlemen answers which failed to convince me. One of these letters mentions the fact that the bill of fare is in French. I have no ojection to leaving aside the bill of fare question, although, for my part, I do not understand, neither in dining-cars nor hotels, the bills of fare written in English. Many travellers, ladies especially, abstain from going in to take their meals because they could not get the servants to understand them.

I believe it would be in the interest of the railway to have at least table waiters who could understand French. It is not an absolute obligation, as Mr. Tiffin put it, but it would be more profitable to the railway.

I think I have said enough on this point, and I think it will be admitted on both sides of the House that, up to the present time, on this last item we are not having a fair deal; out of 120 employees only 10 are French-speaking people; and especially when the others do not speak French, we are not having the proportion we ought to have and the travelling public is not having satisfaction. One-half of the Intercolonial is situated in the province of Quebec, a large portion of its revenue is drawn from that province and we are entitled to a greater degree of consideration.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Before the hon. member gets through with his speech, I would like to know what he thinks of the appointment of ticket collectors on board the trains of the Intercolonial in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BOULAY: I am just explaining this thing, and before the railway estimates are voted, I will have the opportunity of dealing with this question.

Mr. MACDONALD: I have been endeavouring to ascertain what my hon. friend was really saying. I think it is unfair to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that he did not speak in English, and that his eloquence was confined to his own particular language. I heard him speak in English earlier in the day and he seemed to speak it quite glibly.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He says the Intercolonial railway is very badly managed.

Mr. MACDONALD: Everybody knows that the hon. member for Rimouski has been going about the House complaining of the way he has been treated by the present Minister of Railways, and by the present Administration, and I was wondering if he had the pluck to say in the House what he was saying outside. I am disappointed that he spoke in French.

Mr. BOULAY: So far as the new administration of the Intercolonial is concerned, I have nothing to say, because we have to wait before we can pronounce our decision upon their acts. I think I have said enough for the present about Mr. Brady. I did not complain of the minister, or of the deputy minister. These gentlemen have always been very courteous to me. I have discussed lots of complaints with the deputy minister, and have always found him a true gentleman in all respects. What I said was against Mr. Brady, and I think I said enough to show that I was not satisfied. As for the future, I am going to wait and see the results.

Mr. TURGEON: My hon. friend from Rimouski has diverted from the question of the dismissal of Mr. Caron. Representing a maritime province constituency, I deem it my duty to pay a tribute to the services of Mr. Caron during the few years that he held the position of legal adviser to the commission of the Intercolonial. Personally I had very few dealings with Mr. Caron during the time he held that office, but along the north shore of New Brunswick, from Moncton to Campbellton, I have never heard a word of dissatisfaction, either from conservatives or liberals, as to the branch of administration with which Mr. Caron was connected. As the French member of the commission, speaking both languages, he was legal adviser to the commission for the whole railway, from Montreal to Halifax and Sydney. He not only represented the province of Quebec, and the French element, but, as master of both languages, discharged his functions with satisfaction to all, English and French alike. I understand that Mr. Caron, a French-Canadian, is to be replaced by another French representative on the commission, but, as I understand the hon. Minister of Railways, his successor will represent only the province of Quebec. Therefore there will be another legal adviser to the commission for the maritime provinces. If I were the hon. member for Rimouski, I would consider that the French representative of the commission is intended to occupy an inferior position to that which Mr. Caron occupied. He will not be a legal adviser for a commissioner, such as Mr. Caron was. If I represented a county in Quebec, I would not be satisfied to have the French representative occupy such an inferior position. I appeal to the minister, if he wants to give justice to the people, not only of Quebec, but of the maritime provinces, to appoint a French commissioner who would occupy the position which Mr. Caron held.

Mr. LEMIEUX: They should reappoint Mr. Caron.

Mr. TURGEON: They should reappoint Mr. Caron who as I have said gave satisfaction all along the road, to the English as well as to the French. With regard to Mr. Pottinger, while I am willing to admit that the new commissioner, Mr. Gutelius, may be a man of great railway experience and fine qualities, it will take him many years to acquire the knowledge and experience of actual railway matters possessed by Mr. Pottinger, whom I consider one of the best railway men, not only in Canada, but in North America. While Mr. Pottinger has reached advanced years, his mental faculties are in no way diminished; he is as bright and active to-day as he was years ago. Therefore with all respect to the railway ability of the new man, if I were the Minister of Railways, and wanted to appoint one commissioner for the Government railways, Mr. Pottinger would be the man I would select.

Mr. GRAHAM: Everybody has been out of order all afternoon. What we have been discussing chiefly is the operation of the Intercolonial railway instead of the capital account. With reference to the new arrangement, the situation is that Mr. Gutelius is not a commissioner, as I understand it, he is general manager. The old arrangement is reverted to, namely, that of having one general manager, the only difference being that Mr. Gutelius is that officer instead of Mr. Pottinger. An error is often made in calling the board, which has been in operation for some years, a commission. A commission was in the platform announced by the right hon. the Prime Minister. He was to have a board of commissioners to manage the Intercolonial. I think that was in his Halifax platform. Some fault was found with the administration of the late Government because the board was not made a commission. The difference between a managing board and a commission in brief is that a commission would be responsible to Parliament while a board is responsible to the minister. I prefer the board idea to the commission idea, because I do not believe that even by engaging a general manager the minister can get away from responsibility for whatever is done on the Intercolonial railway. The idea of that board is based on what is done by several of the leading railway companies. They have a board that meets regularly. It is made up of the heads of the different departments, and these plan the policy, and carry it out. On my recommendation, the late Government tried that experiment in connection with the management of the Intercolonial railway. It had its weaknesses, but I maintain that a vast improvement was made in the administration of the Intercolonial under the board on which each department had its head. In the working out of the scheme a weakness was found, which was that we had no man on the board to handle the legal end of the business. Hon. members of this House who were then members will recollect that a Bill was introduced giving to the local courts in the various provinces through which the Intercolonial runs power to try suits against the Intercolonial up to a stated amount. That was an advanced step. Before the Act was passed, no matter how small the claim a man residing along the Intercolonial might have against the railway, it was a claim against the Government, and the Government could only be sued in the Exchequer Court, and then only if a fiat had been issued. So the modus operandi of a man bringing suit against the Government railways was expensive and tedious, and as a result there was a great deal of complaint amongst those who had sustained losses. An Act was passed placing the trial of these small cases within the jurisdiction of the local courts. That necessitated a legal man on this board. I looked about for a man who was not only a man of good legal attainments, but I thought it was essential that he ought to be able to speak both languages, and Mr. Caron filled the bill in both respects. I admit that, having served in Parliament for a number of years, I have a tendency to giving the preference to one who has been an associate in parliament, because the great majority of members of parliament, notwithstanding anything that is said to the contrary, make sacrifices for the country and, everything being equal, it is not unjust that they should be given the preference in a matter of this kind. Mr. Caron was given the position with the approval, I think, of every member of the House at the time, because I cannot recollect one objection being taken to his appointment. I think that the press on both sides endorsed his selection.

In dismissing Mr. Caron and appointing a man in the city of Montreal the minister does not meet the difficulty with which he is confronted. The difficulty is that the Intercolonial railway cannot have, with the consent of the Justice Department, a man in the city of Moncton to handle all the legal cases. Some adjustment ought to be made by which one legal gentleman would be able to handle the legal business of the Government railways without all these cases coming to the city of Ottawa for adjustment. From the practical railway standpoint there should be a legal head at the head office of the Government railways, just as there is a legal head at the head office of the private railways. Until this is done there will not be satisfaction in the settlement of claims against the Intercolonial railway. The Justice Department ought to work out a scheme by which all Intercolonial legal business shall be handled by the legal head at the headquarters of the railway. This business should not go through the Justice Department except in some particular cases. That being so, the appointment of one man to look after this business is a necessity, and I do not know of any man better fitted for the position than Mr. Caron. The appointment of a man in the city of Montreal will only mean that he will attend to the cases around the city, and the cases fifty miles away from Montreal will be sent to local legal men by the Department of Justice. If there are half a dozen cases coming on in any one district how is a man in Montreal going to attend to them all? He will send these cases to a man in the locality in which they arise and that, no doubt, is a better way to do it. But the only way to have them settled properly is to have a man at the head office of the Government railways with full power to handle the legal business of these railways and let him select, just as the Justice Department does now, if a case is to be tried in Montreal or at some point where he cannot attend, or is not expected to attend, a representative to look after it. That is the only possibly solution of the question.

If my hon. friend undertakes to handle the legal business of the Intercolonial railway through the Department of Justice there will not be satisfaction. As it is the Justice Department is overburdened with work. We have had a new department added to it recently, and a portion of the money might better have been devoted to the establishment of a legal department for the Government railways. If the minister will work out the scheme along that line he will find a satisfactory solution. One reason why the Government is troubled with all these claims is that there is no man in Moncton who has power to settle them. Even Mr. Caron had not power to settle them. But he did a lot of good work along the line of settling claims without allowing them to come to trial. The legal department might be more usefully employed in settling than in defending suits. There should be some centre of legal authority on the line of the railway so that the public would not have to appeal to the Department of Justice and go through all the red tape in order to secure the settlement of the case. If you had a legal department you could perhaps reach a settlement in twenty-four hours in the case of a man who might otherwise become a litigant, and the only way to accomplish this is to have a legal department established at Moncton. The Department of Justice is not in favour of this because it is contended, and perhaps with some reason, that the Department of Justice is responsible, that it represents the Crown, that this being a Government railway, it is the Crown's, and that, consequently, the legal business cannot go through any person else. I will admit that the Justice Department is in a measure responsible, but it might have a man at Moncton with power to settle all these claims. I believe that the legal department, the railway department and perhaps the Prime Minister could get together and work out a scheme by which the legal business of the Intercolonial railway could be handed over to a man competent to take charge of it at Moncton, and who would be empowered to settle all claims that came in. I submit that Mr. Caron would be a good man to put in that position because he has had a great deal of experience in that particular line of work. I think that if the minister takes this up with the Justice Department he will find that the proper solution of the problem is to work out a scheme with their consent whereby a legal department will be established at the head office at Moncton with full powers to act and to settle all claims.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not wish to prolong this discussion more than is necessary, but I feel that the Minister of Railways would not wish to do an injustice to Mr. Caron. That is the reason why I insist on his reconsidering his decision. I appeal first, to his good judgment, and second to his sense of justice. I suppose the hon. member for L'Islet will say in private what he has just stated in the House publicly this afternoon: that he would raise no objection to the reappointment of Mr. Caron in the capacity of legal adviser to the board at Moncton. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) also said a good word for Mr. Caron, although in former years Mr. Caron was a political opponent. There are things I would not care to mention in this House; anyway, I would not give names; but it is within my knowledge that some years ago a gentleman who had been for many years a prominent conservative member of this House, found himself in pretty difficult circumstances, and someone made an appeal to the then Government, and he was appointed to a position which gave him the necessaries of life. Not many years ago another gentleman who had been a very prominent man in the province of Quebec against the liberal government, was defeated; he had been a member of the House for nearly a quarter of a century; he appealed, and not in vain, to the Government of the day. We found for him a good position as counsel, not in the Civil Service, I admit, but through the influence of the Government, in a large corporation. I say this only to confirm what the ex-Minister of Railways has stated, that old members of Parliament who have received Government appointments should be protected and not be made the victims of party exigencies. In view of the fact that those who may have made complaints against Mr. Caron admit publicly that they would raise no objection to his reappointment and in view of the fact that he has now the experience which is so necessary in the management of the railway, it seems to me that Mr. Caron should get the benefit of the new appointment which the minister is about to make.

The House having resumed at six o'clock:

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a statement in the Montreal Gazette of this day. In a despatch from Ottawa to that journal, I read:

> There was a sensational story current about the capital to-day to the effect that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had flatly told the Liberal leaders in the Senate that if they did not kill the Naval Bill, he would at once resign the Liberal leadership in the House of Commons.

I avail myself of this the earliest opportunity at my disposal to say there is not the slightest foundation for this statement. I do not know the gentleman who wrote it, nor do I know where he got this information, but I state that there is not the semblance of truth in it.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

SUPPLY

The House resumed at eight o'clock, and again went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BOULAY: Mr. Chairman, I have but a few remarks to make. My hon. friend from L'Islet spoke in favour of Mr. Brady. I am not surprised of it, because his position is very different from mine as far as the Intercolonial is concerned. That railway only runs through his constituency for 15 or 20 miles at most, and there is but a score of employees. Things are very different in Rimouski, where there is a dual divisional point. Trains run from Ste. Flavie in both directions, east and west. There are more than 600 employees and naturally I had more dealings with the general manager, Mr. Brady; that is why I have more cause of complaint than hon. member from L'Islet.

Those are the few remarks I had to offer.

General protection of highways, $65,000.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not wish to detain the minister long, but I would like to give him my opinion for what it may be worth that he would be well guided if he would retain the services of Mr. Caron, or, if he is not satisfied with him, appoint some other man; at any rate, place the whole question of accidents and small claims in the hands of some one man, and not divide the work as he purposes doing. The next important thing is to give power to his representative in claims. I have some experience in this, and I think I know what I am talking about. There may be a small claim, the killing of a lamb, the burning of an acre of land or a few rods of fence. Up to the present the method has been to send a claims agent to get the particulars and report back to Ottawa. The effect of the procedure is to exasperate the officials of the department who seem to think the whole idea is to prevent the farmers from getting his claim, and, what is worse, it is exasperating to the claimant who thinks he has a good claim against the road. The minister may say that if he hands over power to the claims agent, he is giving power which may be improperly used—the claims agent may be too generous. But all the claims on the Intercolonial railway put altogether would not amount to the aries of half a dozen of his highly-paid officials. Especially, you take the small claims under $100 or something like that. I believe that if the minister could do it, it would increase the popularity of his department if he would place the power in the hands of some person in whom he has confidence, with the right to go to these people and settle the claims in a reasonable time. I do not mean to give every man what he desires—that would be unreasonable. But he must know of some man in whose judgment as to law and as to fact he has confidence. Let him appoint this man to go to the locality in such instances and look the matter over and settle with the farmer. The member himself must have more trouble and annoyance, and I know the farmers along the line of railway have more trouble and annoyance over these subjects than over all the bigger matters put together. The minister might even take a leaf out of the book of the company roads. It may be said, perhaps, that they do not pay anything they can get out of paying, but the point is that you can get a settlement with them. I have done so in hundreds of cases; sometimes I go to the claims agent or perhaps to the head office in Montreal. The matter is threshed out as a matter of business, and we settle it almost always. But it is practically impossible to do anything with the Intercolonial railway. There is so much red tape that by the time you do get a settlement, the people concerned have almost forgotten what they were talking about. There seems to be a disposition on the part of the officials—I do not know why—to act as though the organization were there to prevent the settlement of these cases. You will never succeed in obtaining a settlement of these claims on a reasonable basis until you have a claims agent or a claims solicitor—if the minister would rather leave it in the hands of a solicitor—but whether a claims agent or a claims solicitor, he ought to be a man in whom some power is vested. Heretofore, all the man could do who went down to investigate was to report. Sometimes he gets the facts and sometimes he does not. He has no power, he has no ambition; he knows that his report is of no value. The officers of the department will not take the opinion of the claims agents, and if he was rash enough to give an opinion, they seem to learn that opinion only to oppose it. If it is possible to take a different course from that recommended they will take that course. The main difference between the claims agent and the officials is that the claims agent has been on the ground and the officials have not. The claims agent may have collected information that he cannot put on paper. He has seen the situation and has formed an opinion whether the road is in the wrong or not. But when the matter comes to the Department, the Department will not pay anything unless it is proven, beyond a doubt that the man has a legal claim. They put the burden on the farmer or local man to prove to their satisfaction that he has a legal right, and in the majority of cases, even when proven, it is not admitted. I know the minister would save himself a lot of worry and trouble, and would make the road more popular, if he would appoint to this position some one who knows what he is doing and big enough to do it. If the minister does not choose one of the officials then let him choose some one else; but let him give the man who is appointed power to settle claims.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not know we had been so dilatory in the past. I will look into the matter as soon as the House closes, and see if some remedy can be found.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like the minister to say a good word for Mr. Caron. Let the minister say he will consider his case.

Mr. COCHRANE: I said I would consider it, but that does not satisfy my hon. friend.

Docks and wharfs at Halifax, $400,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is this for the completion of pier No. 2?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. The contract was let about two years ago. It has not gone on as fast as I should like, but they promise without fail to have it ready in October.

Mr. MACLEAN: Does the minister purpose going on with the other new pier projected at the same time that No. 2 was projected?

Mr. COCHRANE: No tenders were called for. That was for pier No. 5, I think,

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not recall it by number. Does the department intend calling for tenders for that pier or is that to be abandoned?

Mr. COCHRANE: For the present. We are going on with the new scheme.

Mr. GRAHAM: How much does this dock cost?

Mr. COCHRANE: The contract is for $900,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: But it will cost more than that, I suppose?

Mr. COCHRANE: They have not asked for any more yet.

To increase accomomdation and provide machinery at Halifax, $111,500.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What is that for?

Mr. COCHRANE: This amount is asked for remodelling Richmond yards and purchase of machinery; extension of pier No. 7, $26,000; bridge to pier No. 8, $10,000; engineering, inspection, advertising and contingencies, $10,000; one forty-two-inch car wheel lathe with motor and hoist for the roundhouse there; one forty-two-inch car wheel borer, one double axle lathe, one forty-eight-inch car wheel press, tracks, trucks, cranes, &c.

Mr. MACLEAN: This is simply a revote.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

New terminal facilities at Halifax, $2,500,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I wish to say a few words upon this item. On the occasion, nearly two months ago, when Parliament was asked to vote one-sixth of this amount, I addressed myself briefly to the committee upon the same matter. At that time I said to the hon. minister and to the Government that I strongly protested against the manner in which the announcement of this proposed expenditure for terminals was made at Halifax, in October last. As I remarked on that occasion, possibly the minister himself was not altogether to blame. It was, however, made the occasion of more or less political jubilation on the part of his friends in that city. This project involved a very considerable expenditure and was an important undertaking, and the announcement, I submit, should have been first made to Parliament, or, failing that, to the public interested, in a frank, comprehensive and businesslike manner, which I claim was not done. The announcement was premature, and clearly for political effect. Concurrently with the ministerial announcement to which I refer, appeared a statement made by the Halifax Herald, a paper friendly to the Administration, that the total expenditure contemplated for the Halifax terminals would amount to $35,000,000. This estimated expenditure was never contradicted or qualified by anybody speaking on behalf of the Department of Railways. The citizens of Halifax consequently considered that this amount would be expended for steamship and railway terminals at Halifax. This statement of the amount to be expended by a newspaper believed to be speaking for the Government naturally had an effect upon the public. Naturally the proposal to expend such a large sum of money for terminals was gratifying to the people of Halifax and it apparently had the effect of suppressing for a time, any general criticism of the details of the project, although considerable unexpressed doubt existed in the minds of many as to such details. I fear that many persons honestly concluded, that any criticism of the scheme would be construed into opposition, and they preferred for a time, silence to misconstruction. Opposition to the mode of affording the port of Halifax the terminals required, gradually developed, until now I am advised and believe it is quite substantial. This, I venture to say, might have been largely obviated, or would have culminated more quickly, which would perhaps have been to the advantage of the Department of Railways had the minister taken the public more largely into his confidence, and have afforded them the reasons for the adoption of the terminal scheme as announced. These reasons were apparently given to no person who could or did transmit them to the public. From the standpoint of the Railway Department this was a mistake; for, in any projected railway location or re-location and construction which affects to any great degree any city or town, it is only fair that they should have an opportunity of expressing their opinion as to the details of the project. In a projected work involving such conspicuous changes, as in the city of Halifax, it was only fair that the citizens should have had the most ample opportunity of considering the plans and the project generally, so that they might be able to submit their judgment and views upon the matter to the minister for his consideration. The reason why I make that statement is this, that it has transpired that a very strong opposition has developed in the city of Halifax to the proposed location of the projected terminals and this dissentient opinion has never had an opportunity of expressing itself. I am not approaching this matter in a partisan spirit. I have no political interest to serve in doing so. Politics is not the source of the opposition I refer to. I am not even asserting positively that this opposition is well founded. I merely say it deserves consideration and attention. I say that in a matter involving as it does the elimination of so much property for residential and business purposes upon a peninsula, now quite restricted for such purposes; involving as it does the creation of a new railway and shipping terminal district in another part of the city, which has for a century been used entirely for other purposes; involving as it does the question of the practicability of the ocean terminals at the point selected by the department; for these and many other considerations which have, I know, been brought to the minister's attention before this, I do wish to submit to the minister that before making a final determination, further consideration should be given to this matter. A great number of citizens of Halifax, and with some warrant I submit, cannot quite understand why sufficient and efficient terminal accommodation might not have been obtained in that part of the city where the railways and principle shipping terminals are now located, or elsewhere on Halifax harbour. It may be that a proper and wise selection has been made, it may be that it would have been impossible to obtain as suitable and efficient terminals in that portion of the city where the present terminals are now located or elsewhere. That may all be true; but I do say this should have and could have been made clear to the public. If the city of Halifax could be even yet assured that the best selection was made, that the only suitable, efficient and comprehensive system of railway and shipping terminals was obtainable only at this particular point, then I think any opposition would be largely immediately withdrawn and the minister would hear nothing further about it. My purpose in taking up the time of the committee in relation to this particular matter is to enable me to impress on the minister that there is a very strong desire on the part of a large proportion of the citizens of Halifax that before tenders are asked for and construction of these terminals is commenced, the project as laid out by the engineers of the department should be made the subject of review by other engineers, particularly of terminal engineers of experience. Some doubt has been expressed as to the experience of the engineers employed by the department on this work.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. MACLEAN: At least respecting some of them. I do not approach this question in a partisan way, I have nothing to gain from discussing the matter in that spirit. I have avoided a partisan consideration of the matter at all times. I would certainly very much prefer that there was entire unanimity in Halifax upon the subject, I congratulate the Government upon their decision to make the expenditure of money they contemplate for this purpose. I think it was absolutely necessary that an expenditure of this nature should be made in the interest of the port of Halifax, and in order to meet its growing business. I am, of course, speaking generally, and without reference to the specific location of the terminals, and the particular mode of execution. I am not endeavouring particularly to express my own personal views upon this matter, but am rather trying to reflect what I believe to be the opinion of a very considerable proportion of the citizens of Halifax who are entirely in accord with the wishes of the Government to give that port modern and efficient terminals, but who differ just as to the location of the projected terminals, and I therefore feel that I am justified in asking the minister if he does not think that before proceeding to construct these works he should reconsider the matter of the location of the proposed terminals and have the whole project passed under the review of the very best men he can obtain in the world. I think this a fair and reasonable request. Perhaps an alternative scheme is possible, and which might be better in every respect. I do not think it will take a great deal of time to do this, and the amount of money involved for such a purpose would be inconsequential. In any event a reconsideration of the question will be reassuring and can do no harm. Having put the matter in this way before the minister, I hope he will consider that I have done it in a reasonable way, because I have no desire to do anything to delay or postpone unduly the construction of the needed terminal facilities at the port of Halifax. I have occupied the time of the committee only because I feel that I owe a duty to many at least of the constituents whom I represent; and finally because I think I am voicing what is the apparent opinion of a very considerable number of the citizens of Halifax, namely, that the departmental terminal scheme be reconsidered and reviewed by the best port terminal experts available. If they approve of the present government plan and present their reasoned opinions therefor, in preference to any other possible scheme or plan, then I am sure the citizens of Halifax generally will accept the same. They require however some further evidence as to the necessity and advisability of the present plan.

Mr. COCHRANE: I beg to say that I had absolutely nothing to do about the luncheon that was given at the time I made the announcement at Halifax. It was a non-partisan luncheon, got up by the board of trade, and the president of the board of trade presided, I think a leading liberal there, before that meeting the plans were submitted to them as far as they were completed at that time, so that they could get an idea of what the Government proposed, and I am sorry that I have not with me the telegram that ten leading men of Halifax sent to the Government in appreciation of it. They were five liberals and five conservatives. I have absolutely tried to keep it free of politics altogether. I do not think there has been a great deal of feeling since the announcement was made. Unfortunately, we took options on an old property where we proposed to have this, and on the day of the announcement, people went in to see the options and tore them up, so hostile were they then, because they felt they had lost considerably in giving options on their property before they knew that it was a Government proposition. I do not think that I should be censured for that kind of thing. I feel that we did what was right in the interests, not only of Halifax, but of the whole country.

In reference to the plans, I think I have one of the most competent harbour engineers that there is on the continent. I understand that a few years ago when the harbour board advertised for plans for Montreal harbour—I think it was at the time when the board which has now gone out of existence was appointed—the competition was open to everybody, and Mr. Cowie, the engineer who is the adviser of the Government in this case, superintended the whole thing. His plans were accepted in that competition, and I feel satisfied that he is right in this matter. So far as location is concerned, he spent some time down there and looked over the place. He had able engineers there, and they all decided that, unless the Government proposed to expropriate all the wharfs now being used, this was the most feasible and the best plan for the city of Halifax. If we had taken the course suggested and continued down, it would have interfered with the trade of Halifax to such an extent that matters would have been worse than they are today.

With reference to spoiling the residential portion of the city, I stated when I was there that I would endeavour to do as little damage as possible. It is said that electricity and coke and gasoline have done much in connection with terminals to remove nuisances, and it has been inferred that I would take steps to prevent, as far as possible, nuisance in that section of the country. I propose to act along that line. In reference to the engineering department, I do not think that any greater engineering feat or more scientific proposition is involved in this than was involved in No. 2 pier which is there now, and I do not think any expert was engaged by my predecessor in planning that out, or in letting the contract. I do not think he made any mistake. There has been a good deal of talk in reference to using cement piles. It has been said that a big ship coming up against them would so jar them as to break them off. Sir John Jackson, who has had considerable experience in these matters, and who has used a considerable number of those piles in building docks, told me that we need not be alarmed, that we are absolutely safe. Therefore, I feel I am going ahead in the right direction, in the interests not only of the people of Halifax, but of the whole country, because this is not a Halifax proposition only, but a Canadian proposition.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have been informed, and I assume correctly, that some time ago the minister had requests from influential people in Halifax asking for a review of the location and of the project generally as framed by his engineers, and that he gave the matter due consideration and decided to adhere to the present plan, and still adheres to the project as now outlined. In other words, does he decline to reconsider the present plan?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: Has the minister decided how to proceed with the construction of these terminals? I was informed some weeks ago by the minister that so far as the railway part of it was concerned, he proposed asking for tenders, and that he would construct under the tender and contract system. At that time, however, he had not made up his mind as to how the wharfs and piers would be constructed. I was informed that he had under consideration the idea of constructing them by day's work under Government supervision. Will the minister kindly inform us if he has reached any decision on that point?

Mr. COCHRANE: We propose taking tenders for the piers, and if they come under the engineer's estimate of what they can be constructed for we will accept them; if not, we will do the other thing.

Mr. MACLEAN: What about the railway station? Is the minister proposing to ask for tenders for the railway station at the same time?

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: In proceeding down the northwest arm of the Halifax peninsula, in getting to the site of the so called terminals, the minister will necessarily interfere very greatly with the sewage and water systems; at least I would think so.

Mr. COCHRANE: We will have to take care of that.

Mr. MACLEAN: So that ultimately it will not be an expense upon the city, is that the idea?

Mr. COCHRANE: Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose we may take it for granted that this large amount of money for the terminals at Halifax is meant to include accommodation for the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern railway, the Intercolonial railway and the Halifax and Southwestern.

Mr. HENDERSON: And any other railroad.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Canadian Pacific railway is there now in a way, with certain rights on the Intercolonial, and the Grand Trunk Pacific has in its contract a clause giving it running rights under terms and conditions to be arranged between it and the Government. The Canadian Northern railway will eventually get there in some way. If the minister knows how, I do not, but they are bound to get to Halifax and St. John before very long. The only excuse for this very large outlay would be that it includes accommodation for that traffic. The minister might tell us if it includes accommodation for that traffic. The minister might tell us if it is true that he has arranged to take over the Halifax and Southwestern railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not heard of it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have a good deal of sympathy with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax. I am not conversant with the difficulties of locating the line running through the residential property and cannot speak as to them, but this is to be a very large undertaking. It is a national undertaking, and its object must be borne in mind as the construction goes on. Maybe it is necessary to do what the Government are doing, but what I want to urge upon the minister is that, notwithstanding the ability of Mr. Cowie, and I admit all that the minister says, and in consideration of the fact that this is a national work intended to meet the necessities of the rapidly growing commerce of Canada, it would be a wise precaution to at least submit the plans to some authority which Mr. Cowie might himself suggest. There is never a man so great who might not be helped out a little by another view. In the case of the Welland canal, my hon. friend is following that course. I understand he is submitting the plans to Mr. Noble of New York.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is a bigger undertaking, a different thing.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a different thing, and it is a different engineer to whom he has submitted his plans. Mr. Noble is a good man, and I think the minister is doing right in that respect. He is only following the precedent which was set in constructing the Welland canal in the first place, and also in the reconstruction. I admit there are difficulties surrounding the construction of the Welland canal that do not appear in this undertaking. I visited the Kiel canal, of great celebrity in Germany, and I consider that the construction of the Welland canal is more intricate in some respects than the construction of the Kiel canal. I am not sure but that in some points it rivals the Panama canal in difficulties of construction. Notwithstanding that, I approve of what the minister has done there. I think it would be a wise precaution to submit the plans of the harbour part of the work, which would include the terminals, to an expert with ability equal to that of Mr. Cowie, and if these two agreed there could be no question raised. If the other expert disagreed with respect to some details of the work, perhaps he and Mr. Cowie could come to an understanding, because it might be that Mr. Cowie would agree to what might be an improvement of his plans. It would be a wise precaution for the minister to take, and especially a wise precaution in view of the fact that this is a great work designed to serve the commerce of Canada for years to come.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will certainly consult with Mr. Cowie about it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): How long will it take to complete the railway from Fairview on Bedford basin down to Point Pleasant? Can you have it finished this year?

Lévis to St. Romuald—double-tracking line, $173,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How long is that and what is it for?

Mr. COCHRANE: This does not appear correctly in the estimates. It should be from Chaudiere Junction to St. Romuald. You know the congested condition there? We are doing this much this year and we hope to continue it to Levis gradually.

Mr. GRAHAM: And its being in there is an intimation of what is going to happen eventually?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, but it is not intended to be in there.

Mr. GRAHAM: How long is the line?

Mr. COCHRANE: Three and a half miles.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is as expensive as the Transcontinental.

Mr. COCHRANE: Well, it is pretty expensive ground there, and this amount includes the purchase price. I can give the items: 10,500 cubic yards solid rock excavation; 5,000 cubic yards loose rock; 25,000 cubic yards common excavation; 16,000 cubic yards burrow; 1,400 cubic yards foundation excavation; 2,100 cubic yards stone-masonry and bridges; 600 cubic yards stone filling behind abutments; 500 cubic yards hand-laid rip-rap; 10,000 feet of 2-inch tongue and groove forms, spruce; 1,000 lineal feet old rails in culvert stop; 20,000 cubic yards ballast; 5 miles track-laying; 20,000 track ties; 600 tons 5-inch steel rails.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the weight of the rails?

Mr. COCHRANE: Eighty pounds to the yard, standard; 50,000 pounds track spikes, and 7,000 pounds track bolts.

Mr. GRAHAM: The rock cutting seems to be quite extensive?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. And then there is 600,000 cubic yards overhaul 100 feet, and 255,000 pounds of bridge steel. There is very extensive rock cutting. This is the estimate of the district engineer.

Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Bowden?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, Mr. McKenzie, the chief engineer at Moncton.

Mr. GRAHAM: I was going to say a word further about the construction of the docks at Halifax. The minister may be wrong if he is going to form his judgment from the estimate which the engineer will give him no matter how good he is. I understood the minister to say that if the tenders are lower than the engineer's estimate he will let the work by contract, and if not he will do it by day's work. I am not sure whether that is a very safe guide either way.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is a check one on the other.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a check but the minister says that if the tender is higher than, or as high as, the chief engineer's estimate, he is going to build the docks by day's work. I am inclined to think that his day's work will probably be higher too when he gets it done.

Mr. COCHRANE: The only objection I have to doing it by day's work is on account of the big plant that would be required.

Mr. GRAHAM: I was going to point that out as another objection. You have to calculate interest on the plant, wear and tear, and when you are through with it you will have it on your hands for a time at least. There is a great deal to be said in favour of a contract unless the price is not within reason.

Mr. COCHRANE: I move that the item be changed to read 'from Chaudiere Junction to St. Romuald—double-tracking line.'

Amendment agreed to.

Lévis—improvements at, $160,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What are these improvements?

Mr. COCHRANE: This vote is for the purpose of buying four pieces of property to extend the terminals at Levis station as follows:

From Rhodes estate: 56,956 square feet of beach at 25 cents, $9,239.

From H. Dussault: 24,420 square feet of beach at 25 cents, $6,105; 22,958 square feet deepwater lot at 25 cents, $5,714.50; 6,114 square feet wharf at $2, $12,228; total, $24,047.50.

From E. Couture, 5,074 square feet small wharf at $2.50, $12,685; 22,657 square feet, large wharf at $2.50, $56,642.50; 25,015 square feet land at 25 cents, $6,253.75; total, $75,581.25.

Legal expenses, $1,132.25; 79 acres of land for a stockpen, $50,000.

Grand total $160,000.

The accommodation is very contracted and we are trying to extend it.

Mr. GRAHAM: What plan was adopted in the purchase of these lots? I see that my hon. friend got into trouble in Halifax by getting opinions and then losing them.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not lose them.

Mr. GRAHAM: I understood him to say they were torn up.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, but that did not stop it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Does the minister follow the old method of having valuators appointed, do they give satisfaction or does he occasionally have to change them and get new ones? Who were the valuators?

Mr. COCHRANE: This is merely an estimate of the cost. We have filed expropriation proceedings; we will appoint arbitrators later or go to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LEMIEUX: From what I have been able to gather the estimate is not exaggerated.

Moncton—locomotive and car shops with equipment, $136,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) were here, he would ask: are you building locomotives or only repairing them?

Mr. COCHRANE: Only repairing locomotives.

Mr. GRAHAM: And how many cars have you built and of what kind?

Mr. COCHRANE: We are building box cars.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where do you buy your locomotives?

Mr. COCHRANE: From Canadian manufacturers; it is pretty hard to get them.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Moncton shops are not as large but they are as well equipped as any on the continent; will you be able to handle some of the work of the Grand Trunk Pacific at this point?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think so. If I had been in office I would have advocated getting the two yards together and a lot of money could have been saved but unfortunately when I came to the Department the work had gone too far under the late Government. We can repair for the Grand Trunk Pacific but perhaps not build.

Mulgrave—to provide new car ferry and a dock for same, $460,100.

Mr. McKENZIE: What kind of a steamer are you getting?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have not yet asked for tenders. Her length will be 322 feet by 40 feet in width and 14 feet draught. The present steamer is only 282 feet long. The new steamer will have three tracks of seven cars each. The cars are made longer now and the steamer needs to be longer.

Mr. McKENZIE: Will there be two boats in use?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. We had to send the old to the dry-dock last May and we used an old scow which was very dangerous, and we had to take a great deal of risk.

Mr. McKENZIE: I think this is a wise expenditure and one which is much needed.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose the steamer will be built in Canada?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am going to try very hard.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think the minister is inclined to be a made-in-Canada man if he gets half a chance.

Mr. COCHRANE: How much ought we to allow extra for building her in Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Fifteen per cent.

Mr. GRAHAM: I may not be orthodox, but I would be willing to go higher than that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am more conservative than the ex-Minister of Railways.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not like to say how far I would go until I saw the tenders, but I would not be confined to fifteen per cent, I think.

Mr. COCHRANE: The builders in Canada want about twenty per cent extra.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would go that distance to have it made in Canada.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): Would a boat forty-eight feet wide come through the canal? There are ship-building firms at Port Arthur and Collingwood, but I doubt if a steamer of that character could get through the canal.

Mr. COCHRANE: The deputy minister tells us the Welland canal is only forty-five feet wide.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): You had better get this ship built in the East.

Original construction, $800.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is the minister making a survey of the proposed diversion of the Intercolonial railway so as to eliminate the Folly Mountain grade?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not done so yet.

Mr. MACLEAN: Do you propose doing so this year?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do, but I would not like to make any promise.

Mr. MACLEAN: I saw a statement in a newspaper recently that the survey was in progress.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is not the survey we have been working on.

Improvements at Point Tupper, $90,000.

Mr. KYTE: Will the minister explain what this work is?

Mr. COCHRANE: We were unfortunate in having a fire there this year, and we are going to repair the damage.

Mr. GRAHAM: Sometimes it is a good thing to have a fire.

Mr. COCHRANE: We only had $11,000 insurance on this. The works proposed are: Brick station, $25,000; concrete platform, $2,250; grading around station, $2,000; roundhouse, ten stalls, $50,000; turntable, foundation, ring wall, excavation, ties, &c., $3,737; turntable, 75 feet through, steel work, 102,000 lbs., $4,590; coaling pockets, 16 at $225, $3,600; ashpit, complete, including drain, $1,183; tank, complete, $4,500; sand house, standard, $1,800; stand pipe, set up, $400; pipe from tank to stand pipe, laid, $300; earth and rock excavation 20,000 c. yds., at 75c., $15,000; earth excavation, 6,944 c. yds., at 30c., $2,083.20; rails 67 lb., 67 tons, at $25, $1,675; angle bars, 214 pairs, at 45c., $96.30; bolts and nuts, 856 lbs. at 4c., $34.24; track spikes, 4,500 lbs., at 3c., $135; frogs, rigid, 6 at $26.50, $159; guard rails, 6 sets at $16, $96; split points, complete, 6 sets at $45, $270; switch ties, 6 sets at $34, $204; switch stands, 'Rampo,' 6 sets at $20, $120; track ties, 1,500 at 33c., $495; ballast, 7,000 c. yds. at 30c., $2,100; labour laying track, $313.43; freight shed, $3,500; fire pump, $1,500; engineering, inspection, advertising and contingencies, $10,850; total, $125,-419.19; say $126,000, less estimated expenditure of 1912-13, $25,000, leaving $101,-000. Loss to be credited to fire renewal account, $11,000; required for 1913-14, $90,-000.

Mr. KYTE: The new station is a considerable distance from the old station, nearly half a mile, whereas, I understand, the freight shed is to be located where the old station was, behind the track. Objection seems to be made by the people residing there on account of the freight sheds being so far from the railway station. Point Tupper is a place where several lines of steamers call, and these deposit freight and passengers at the wharf, which is near the old station. Heretofore all that was necessary was to land the freight and the baggage at the wharf, and put it in the freight room close by, and, when the train came along there was no expense in transporting it to the car. Under the new arrangement, the passenger getting off the steamer must have his baggage transferred to the freight shed, and then it will be necessary for him to get a dray to transport it to the railway station. I suppose those entrusted with the location of the new freight shed have some good reason for its location, but to one who is not an expert it does seem rather an unfortunate location. The Boston boat calls at Port Hawkesbury, and there is very great traffic in the summer of passengers who are transferred by boat from Hawkesbury to the wharf at Point Tupper. All these people will be inconvenienced by the new location. I should think the Government ought to undertake the construction of a wharf at the new station, so that these steamers could call there and land passengers for that place at the station, and thus save expense in the transfer. I should be glad if the minister would make a note of this and ask those entrusted with the handling of this matter to make a report as to the desirability of having a public wharf built near the new station.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not been at Point Tupper since the station was built, but I will make a note of what the hon. member says and ask the general manager to look into the matter.

Mr. KYTE: When does the minister expect that the new ferry steamer will be completed and in commission?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not asked for tenders. I am waiting to have the vote first.

Mr. KYTE: What does the minister intend to do for a substitute for the Scotia should she go in dry-dock this summer?

Mr. COCHRANE: Do what has been done in the past—make the best shift possible.

Mr. KYTE: In other times the SS. Mulgrave was there and transferred freight on barges and carried the passengers. But in the fire last summer the slip and apron were destroyed, and I understand the hoisting machinery was taken away and shipped to New Glasgow, so it will be impossible for the minister to take advantage of the makeshift which was used on former occasions. Should anything happen to the Scotia it will be impossible to transfer a pound of freight across the strait of Canso. I think it is unfortunate that those in charge of these matters did not repair the Mulgrave slip or apron. There is no apron to allow the barges to discharge freight cars at Point Tupper at the present time.

Rivière du Loup—additional facilities, $28,000.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I would like to know if the minister is aware of the scheme under consideration by the former Administration by which extensive wharfs were to be built at Fraserville, not only for unloading coal for the Intercolonial railway, but especially for the development of the lumber industry. I do not know whether the Minister of Railways and Canals is aware, but Rivière du Loup port is one of the best ports below Quebec, in spite of what my hon. friend from Rimouski (Mr. Boulay) would say. The reason why the scheme could not be carried out, as I have been informed, was that the Minister of Public Works at the time could not get the ear of the Minister of Railways to make him share in the expense of the work. Last year we had in the estimates of the Public Works Department for rivers and harbours in Quebec, an item of $75,000 or $78,000. Nothing was spent last summer. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works did not feel like inviting the Minister of Railways to share the expense. This year we have in the Railway Department $78,000, and, if you look at the item for harbours and rivers under the Public Works Department you will find an item for $50,000 for improvements in the harbour. I would like to know from the Minister of Railways if he is converted now to share the expense of the work we were promised. What is going to be done about that work at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think the hon. gentleman has got the wrong idea about the Minister of Public Works being converted. The arrangements were made last year, but we did not go on and spend the money, because the work which had to be done under the Public Works Department was not finished and our work could be done so much quicker. The wharf was not of much use to the boats because the water is shallow.

Mr. GAUVREAU: How is the $78,000 to be spent?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have to build a track down to the wharf. I believe this work is a good business proposition. We haul up to Quebec by boat about 50,000 tons of coal for Rivière du Loup, and we rail it down. If we had this dock and the track and other facilities for unloading—which I hope will be better than they are at Quebec, because the unloading costs about forty cents to sixty cents a ton more than we could buy the coal for at Montreal—we could save a great expense on that rail carriage and handling, besides making the transport by vessel a little cheaper than to Quebec.

Mr. GAUVREAU: There is nothing in that amount for the building of a new station at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. COCHRANE: You have a pretty good station there now.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Then the minister must have passed at Rivière du Loup during the night, if he speaks that way; but, after all, if we can get that amount spent on coaling at Rivière du Loup, I shall be satisfied for this summer.

Mr. MICHAUD: Is it impossible for passengers from the province of Quebec, taking the train at Rivière du Loup, at 11,30 p.m. to find out from the station agent an hour or two before the express comes in whether or not they can get accommodation in the pullman? A number of passengers come to that place about nine o'clock in the evening and cannot get any such information from the station agent. If the conductor of the pullman would wire from Ste. Flavie that he has certain berths vacant, it would accommodate the public.

Mr. COCHRANE: I shall be very glad to make a note of it and look into the matter.

Rolling stock, $1,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: This rolling stock for capital account is $1,000,000, but that is not all to be spent on rolling stock?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: This question came up this afternoon on some other item. In the management of the railways, three new accounts have been established; I do not know whether they are maintained or not, there is the equipment renewal account, the rail renewal account and the fire protection account.

Mr. COCHRANE: They are all kept up.

Mr. GRAHAM: I should like to know what amounts are expended each year out of revenue. Take the rail renewal account. An amount is taken out of revenue and placed in that account. While it does not appear in the estimates, it is in that account just the same; but it does not have to be reported as it has been taken from the surplus. The same thing happens with the equipment renewal account and the fire protection account. These will not appear in the estimates as they are included in the amount required for operating expenses and not for capital account. I should like to get a statement of the three accounts.

Mr. COCHRANE: For the rail renewal account, $150,000 is the amount kept up each year; equipment renewal account, $300,000; fire protection account, $60,000. This is what we have bought out of revenue since April 1, 1912: one hundred and thirty coal cars, sixty refrigerator cars, one hundred and fifty wooden box cars, one snowplough, twelve thousand steel box cars, one hundred and fifty platform cars, two tank cars, one hundred dump cars, ten first-class passenger coaches, two dining cars, two sleeping cars, three baggage cars, thirty consolidated locomotives, four switching locomotives.

Mr. GRAHAM: These purchases have been made out of revenue and not out of capital at all?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes. Out of the present $1,000,000, four hundred steel frame cars and twenty freight engines have been ordered. The cost of the freight engines is $470,000. The cost of the freight cars is $484,000. Inspection, &c., makes up the million dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM: What has been spent out of fire protection?

Mr. COCHRANE: About $17,000 up to the 1st of March.

Mr. GRAHAM: The question of all steel construction of passenger coaches has been taken up by all the leading railways, particularly where there are fast-running trains. I think the time has come when we might begin making up that fast train the Ocean Limited out of all steel cars.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is well worth looking into.

Mr. CARROLL: Have any changes been made in the tariff of freight rates charged to the Dominion Steel Corporation at Sydney?

Mr. COCHRANE: The figures have been raised. We could not go on paying the coal company an increase of some fifty cents per ton and the men some $750,000 or $1,000,000 more, and still charge the same rate. I do not think we have made a dollar out of the steel company's business from Sydney to Montreal. No freight on this continent is carried as cheaply as theirs.

Mr. CARROLL: Some time ago, while some of the hon. minister's estimates were being considered, I brought to his attention the fact that a report was current that there was likely to be a change in the Dominion Steel Company's tariff over the Intercolonial railway. At that time I gave expression to a hope that the minister would reconsider any notion that he had of increasing this tariff. I do not know whether or not there should be any favours in this country, so far as real favouritism is concerned, but I do contend that the Dominion Steel Corporation having been given in its earlier days a schedule of freight rates over the Intercolonial railway that were somewhat lower than the ordinary rates, that at this particular period of the history of that institution the freight rates should not be raised. The Dominion Steel Corporation, like other new corporations in this country, has much to contend with. The gentlemen who saw fit to put their money in the new scheme of manufacturing steel on the harbour of Sydney were given certain privileges by the people of the city of Sydney and by the Dominion Government in the shape of tariffs and of bonuses, they were also granted certain privileges by the Government of Nova Scotia, all those things were done at that time with a desire to influence the men interested in the Dominion Steel Corporation to start operations in this country. Some of these privileges were afterwards taken away, the bounties on steel rods were removed by the late Government and although the Conservative party in the eastern part of Nova Scotia was profuse of promises prior to the last election that if returned to power they would renew the bounties on steel, not only was there not a renewal of the bounties but now we find that their rates over the Intercolonial railway are being raised. First of all the tariff in the sheds at Sydney has been raised one hundred per cent, and now the corporation has as much as it can do to make both ends meet. It was granted those privileges with the idea of influencing these men to put their capital into the enterprise. These institutions are up against a proposition that not only are they not receiving those bounties, but also they are finding that they are compelled to pay higher rates of freight. I contend that every dollar that the Dominion Steel Corporation are obliged to pay over to the railway over and above their freight rates of the past, is a dollar taken out of the workmen of eastern Nova Scotia, because if the Dominion Steel Corporation has to pay more freight they will certainly have to make a decrease in their wages in order to make both ends meet. I think it is most unfair that this institution, the Dominion Steel Corporation, having been given the idea that they were to have a cheap rate over the Intercolonial railway, should at this particular period of its history be made to pay a higher rate than they have hitherto paid. The eastern section of the Intercolonial railway is the best paying part of that railway, or if it is not the best it ranks second only to the Montreal end. I say it is discouraging to capitalists who have placed their money in this province, it will discourage future capitalists from doing so under the idea that they are getting certain privileges and, as representing the constituency where the Dominion Steel Corporation carries on its business, I protest to the minister and this Government, I protested when this news gained currency, that it is unfair not only to this corporation but to eastern Nova Scotia and unfair to the workingmen of Nova Scotia. The steel corporation of Sydney has been instrumental, together with the coal company, in building up good towns in Sydney, Glace Bay and other parts of the country. These towns afford markets for the farmers of Nova Scotia, not only of Nova Scotia but of Prince Edward Island and the eastern section of New Brunswick and I think it is rather discouraging that the Minister of Railways should see fit to make this change in view of the fact that this end of the line is one of the very best paying sections of the whole road. I can only add my word of protest against this increase so far as the eastern section of Nova Scotia is concerned. What does this mean? It means this, further, that the Intercolonial railway are not going to gain anything by this change, for I dare say the Dominion Steel Company will hereafter ship as much as they can by water rather than submit to this increase in freight rates over the Intercolonial railway. If the Intercolonial railway were going to gain by this increase it would not be so bad but I believe the railway will be the loser. The corporation are bound not to pay such a high tariff and having that in view they will endeavour in every possible way to make all shipments from Sydney by water.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Is the minister going to let a contract this summer for the work at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. COCHRANE: If the Minister of Public Works goes on we certainly will.

Mr. MARCIL: With regard to the explanation the minister gave concerning rolling stock, do I understand that the number of freight cars on the Intercolonial railway has been increased?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, largely increased.

Mr. MARCIL: That was a source of complaint last winter. With your permission I should like to read extracts from a number of letters that have a bearing on this matter. I have already had an apportunity in the present session of congratulating the minister on the improved passenger service he has given in our constituency by maintaining the Ocean Limited throughout the year. That was a good move and the result was very important to the Gaspesian peninsula where people are landed at Metapedia at nine o'clock in the morning instead of at two or three in the morning. I hope that the freight service will be equally improved, and for this reason I would call attention to some of these letters which have been in my desk for some time past, although the conditions may not be quite the same as when these letters were written. I have a letter here from a leading merchant in Bonaventure enclosing letters from millers with whom he deals. His letter reads:

I inclose letters received from some of the millers with whom I deal, which speak for themselves. They might be of some use to you and you could mention facts and omit the names of the firms. One car of flour left Brantford on November 30 and arrived at Giroux January 7, the other left Seaforth first week of December and arrived at Giroux on January 7 also. I got sold out of flour before the holidays and there was a general sing out for flour from Nouvelle to New Richmond. I disappointed my customers, lost trade and feel that I have a clear damage for the break in trade which $1,000 would not cover.

Attached to this letter are two letters from large milling firms of Canada, one of which reads:

We are in receipt of your favour of the 27th, and in reply beg to say that we are very sorry for delay in delivery of your car, and we are tracing same. The railroads are very much behind in their deliveries on account of congestion of freight.

Another milling firm is somewhat outspoken in its language, but I shall read it as it is. By this letter there seems to be a difficulty somewhere; it reads:

Montreal, Jan. 6, 1913.

We have your favour of the 4th and we certainly do not blame you one bit for making a big kick about the delay in the delivery of your car. It is a downright shame the way the Intercolonial railway people are delaying some cars. We must say that the greater part of their cars seem to go through pretty well, but occasionally there are cars that are held around Montreal, Campbellton, and other places in a most vexatious way to the very great annoyance and loss of the buyers. If you do refuse the car we will not blame you. If refused we will sell it to the best advantage we can and will endeavour to make an example of the Intercolonial railway over it. We do not think, however, that our cars are any worse delayed than those shipped by our competitors. You know that it is not our fault. We are tracing cars till we are black in the face, and we are doing everything we possibly can to get them forward quickly. The only thing we can suggest is for the shippers and buyers of flour to get their heads together and make a determined protest against the damnable treatment we are getting from this Government road. There are no politics in it with us, not a bit, but business is business, and it is a crime the way the public are being served. For our part, we do not pretend to submit to it, and if we can get the necessary help, we will stir up a rebellion if this thing goes on any longer. What do you suggest your self

This letter contains only a portion of the truth. I have heard a number of complaints in this House about the shortage of cars, and I thought they applied only to the western part of Canada, but I see that the same evil has occurred in the eastern part of Canada along the line of the Intercolonial. The Intercolonial railway may not be wholly responsible, or may not be responsible at all, but the inconvenience is there, and I think it my duty to call the minister's attention to it, to see if it cannot be remedied. I consider the branch line in my constituency practically a branch of the Intercolonial, and I would like to read an extract from another letter showing the great disadvantage to which merchants using that branch line are put to. This letter reads:

As it is now, it is getting so we can't ship anything, its too costly. I shipped one car of potatoes in December billed from St. Godfroy to New Carlisle, a distance of 10 miles, $10, and New Carlisle to Matapedia, 98 miles, $24. You can see what amount the poor farmers have to pay; they have to give their goods reduced to compete with the farmers on the Intercolonial railway.

I have already called the minister's attention to the advisability of taking over the Quebec Oriental railway and the Atlantic, Quebec and Western railway. Among documents brought down to the House last week there is an important letter, which might not have attracted the minister's attention, and which I would like to read. It might be an encouragement to increase the number of cars on the Intercolonial railway, because all the cars used on that branch line come from the Intercolonial railway. The letter is from the St. Lawrence Pulp and Lumber Corporation, and reads:

Pabos Mills, P.Q., April 1, 1913.

E. A. Bouillon, Esq.,
Paspebiac, Que.

Dear Sir,—In further reference to our conversation regarding proposed operations, I beg to state that we propose erecting a pulp mill with an output of 30.000 tons per annum, and sawmills to cut 30,000,000 of feet per annum—with a probability of an increased output later on.

Naturally, we have been counting to a great extent upon railway facilities for our operations especially as regards our winter operation; and, the lack of an effective railway service will, of course, have the effect of obliging us to curtail our contemplated manufacture—if indeed we do not take steps to manufacture elsewhere, by shipping the raw material in summer, by water, to a more congenial spot. This would naturally have a very discouraging effect, and I sincerely trust that you may succeed in your endeavours to have the Government take over and operate the railway.

Regretting my inability to be present at Ottawa,

I am, yours very truly,
St. Lawrence Pulp and Lumber Corporation, per H. W. Racy, Manager.

That is another important statement in regard to the shortage of cars in that district, and I hope that in the estimates the minister has now before the House provision is made for this car shortage, so that it will not occur again. In that particular portion of the province of Quebec, we have not the advantage possessed by our friends in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, where they have several railways. We are entirely dependent on the Intercolonial, and when the Intercolonial fails us, everything fails us. So far as the Intercolonial is concerned, any improvement will receive my hearty support. I know from experience that the passenger service has been very much improved, and I am glad to know that the minister is taking steps to improve the freight service.

Mr. COCHRANE: The very thing upon which my hon. friend congratulated me in connection with the running of the Ocean Limited, had the effect of making her short of motor power. We had a good deal of trouble last year, and for three reasons. The first was that the yards of the Grand Trunk railway were very congested, and it was almost impossible to handle the freight and to hand it over to us promptly, with the result that cars lay there for a month. The congestion was so great that we had to put a man there and get right after them. Then we were short of motor power, and made slow time. We are trying to rectify that as fast as we can, and hope that next winter the service will be much better. There were a good many complaints about the Ocean Limited being late, but at one time, owing to the deep snow, we thought we would not be able to continue it. Fortunately we were able to do so, but it took up a lot of motor power. We would have changed the time table had we thought we were going to run the Ocean Limited all winter. We were trying to make summer time in winter, which was impossible and unsafe. I have had an occasional complaint in respect to cars from the branch line referred to, and I would be very glad if we had enough cars to serve the purposes of all those who want them, but we have to take care of our own traffic first. But with this vote I hope to have more motive power, and with the cars already received, and with those on order now, we will be able to give better satisfaction to the people there.

Mr. CARVELL: I understood the minister to say that they set apart $100,000 only for the replacement of cars. That would mean twenty or twenty-five miles of rails. Would that be sufficient on the average to cover the wear and tear of the rails?

Mr. COCHRANE: I would not be able to express an opinion upon it, I do not know. I am told that the amount is $150,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: There are two or three things in connection with the rolling stock to which I wish to call attention. In the earlier part of the session, I spoke of the defective locomotives on the Cape Breton end of the road. I do not know if anything has been done to better the situation. Last October, November and December, the conditions were very bad indeed, as the minister knows. I do not know whether it is the custom to transfer locomotives across the Strait of Canso. I suppose it is not desirable to transfer them frequently. The traffic from Canso down to Sydney is very heavy and I would urge upon the minister the necessity of giving us good locomotives. I think that one or two good locomotives should be put there, and as the run is only about ninety miles, the rails heavy and the road bed fairly good, they should last quite a long time. We had too many experiences last year of being three and four hours late in that short run from Point Tupper to Sydney. I trust it will not be necessary to say anything further to the minister on that subject.

There is another matter that I brought to the attention of the minister last winter when we had something up in connection with the road. I refer to the necessity of supplying cars, not cold storage cars, in which to carry fish. In the fall of the year, in the part of the country I come from, it is impossible to get sailing vessels to come in for the fish that are caught away north and right out into the ocean. The market for these fish is in the New England States, Boston, New York and other places and the only way of sending the fish is over the Intercolonial railway. We have a steamer running from North Sydney down the shore. She brings the fish to the end of the Intercolonial railway and we could send it out if we could get the cars. Last year we could not get cars. We were told that fish gives a bad odor to a car and that possibly it would not be suitable for anything else. That is hardly a sufficient reason. I think that there could be a few cars set apart even if they had to be devoted altogether to this kind of work. As the Intercolonial is our only railway we should be given an opportunity of shipping our fish out over it. In the fall of the year there is splendid fishing. Great runs of fish come in along the coast very late in the fall until it gets too cold for people to go out and fish, and if we could get cars we could always count on a catch of fish to send away. I hope the minister will provide us with some cars.

There is one thing more, and it has reference to the train connections at Truro. I do not know whether the matter can be remedied or not. As I have personal knowledge of this matter I wish to bring it to the attention of the minister. The last time I had to go to North Sydney from here I went by the Intercolonial railway and arrived at Truro at about four o'clock in the afternoon. The Intercolonial train came along from Halifax at about eight o'clock. Passengers who had come from the west had to stay at Truro from four o'clock in the afternoon until eight o'clock in the evening. Then the Intercolonial came in from Halifax and the passengers were ready to go right on to Sydney but they had to stay there until one o'clock in the morning waiting for the Canadian Pacific railway train. My hon. friend will realise that it is a rather tough proposition for a passenger to get to Truro at four o'clock in the afternoon, get his own train at eight and then be obliged to stay there until half past twelve or one o'clock in the morning before he can make a start to go home. This may be impossible of improvement but as this was my own personal experience I want to inform the minister that if there is any possibility of bettering that situation I would like to have it done. The stay is altogether too long. I have no doubt the man who is coming on the Canadian Pacific railway is very anxious to make connection, and I sympathise with him, but if something could be done to better the situation I think it would be hightly desirable. It discourages traffic on the Intercolonial railway. If you know that you are going to be kept seven or eight hours at Truro you feel that you might as well go by the other road and not be detained at all.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will be very glad to look into these matters.

Mr. BOULAY (Rimouski): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonaventure has just complained of the want of freight cars on the Intercolonial. For my part I have received a great many complaints about this. We have a real grievance in Rimouski in connection with the want of cars for the shipping of freight in the Metapedia valley and other parts of the county of Rimouski, where there is a big trade in potatoes. I may say that I have been overwhelmed with letters on this subject and I know that the superintendent of the railway has been hard pressed to give patrons of the road the cars that they needed. It often happens that one has to wait for over a month and after the cars are loaded they are left for a full month on the sidings.

In days gone by it was sought to make the Intercolonial pay by cutting down the expense for the purchase of cars and even of engines. That was the way they tried to get a surplus. I am glad to find a substantial increase in the amount to be voted this year for rolling stock. I have even strong doubt of the amount being sufficient. Traffic has increased and is constantly increasing on the Intercolonial, as elsewhere, for that matter, and moreover there are new branches built which are using our cars. In that way the Baie des Chaleurs, Intercolonial and Caraquet railways are using our cars to carry their freight. Instead of supplying cars for the service of those lines connecting with the Intercolonial, it would be more practical and more in the interest of the country to buy these branch lines of railway. We are already supplying them with the cars they need. The Intercolonial could operate these railways cheaper than they can be operated by the companies; it already has the necessary plant, such as shops, &c., and it could realize better profits than the companies. I hope the hon. Minister of Railways will take the necessary steps for the purchase of these branch lines before the Pacific Company takes hold of them. There is the railway from Ste. Flavie to Matane, the International, the Caraquet railway, the Baie des Chaleurs railway, I mean the road that goes from Metapedia to Gaspé. I hope that means will be taken to purchase these branches and thus increase the profits of the Intercolonial.

Mr. MARCIL: What the hon. gentleman from Rimouski says is quite true, that the branch lines in eastern Canada are provided with Intercolonial railway cars. On this two hundred miles of railway on the Gaspé coast the cars all belong to the Intercolonial railway, with a stray Grand Trunk railway or Canadian Pacific railway car. The same thing is true of the Caraquet railway, and several other branch lines. This may be a strain to the Intercolonial railway, but it is also an argument in favour of taking over the branch lines, seeing that all the business comes from and goes to the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: Someone has suggested that all these cars have not been purchased by tender during the past year.

Mr. COCHRANE: Except the last five hundred for which the order was extended.

Mr. GRAHAM: A year or so ago the contract was given, and it was extended without asking for tenders.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, no, it was only given two months before the extension.

Mr. GRAHAM: If that be the case it is almost a violation of the statute.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am told that at the time the order was extended these cars could be bought for $100 each cheaper than was paid for them.

Mr. COCHRANE: We asked for tenders from all the concerns. We extended the contract because they said they would give us the cars before navigation closed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where did you buy the cars?

Mr. COCHRANE: The Nova Scotia Car Company of Halifax.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am told that you could have got them for $100 per car less at the time the order was extended.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would like to know where. There is a company which started up since which could not have given us cars at the time.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not refer to that company.

Mr. COCHRANE: I was told something similar since by the hon. member for Pictou.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not know that company was doing business. My information was, of course it may not be correct, that tenders were asked for and after several months had elapsed the order was extended for five hundred more cars costing $600,000, and that if tenders had been asked for at the time the extension was made, the cars could have been got for one hundred dollars each less.

Mr. COCHRANE: Where ?

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps the same company; the price quoted was less generally.

Mr. COCHRANE: The tenders were exactly the same, and I do not think the cars could have been got for less. If they could, I would like to know where.

Safety appliances for equipment, $24,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: How long will it be before all the old cars are equipped with safety appliances ?

Mr. COCHRANE: In about two years.

St. John—to increase accommodation, $18,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: There was an arrangement made at St. John with a sugar refinery that they were to ship their freight. Has the refinery shipped any freight yet ?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think so. The arrangement was completed only last fall.

Surveys and inspections, $25,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness): I accompanied a delegation which waited on the minister with respect to the proposed branch line between Orangedale and Chéticamp. I have discussed the merits of that branch line in the House on two occasions. At the time the delegation met the minister I suggested that he should send one of his engineers down and report on the merits of this line from a traffic standpoint. The minister acquiesced, and I am glad to say carried out his promise, and the report is now in his hands. I asked for the report five or six months ago, but did not get it. I believe the report is very favourable to the construction of this line, and I am convinced it could not be otherwise than favourable. I give myself credit for being candid enough to say that I would not suggest to the minister that he send his engineer down there if I did not believe in the merits of the proposed railway. I have watched the policy of the minister with regard to branch lines, and I may tell him, as I told him before, that I have always had faith in his line, and I have faith in it now more than ever. It is not necessary to take up the time of the committee to go over the same ground again, as I have discussed it on two occasions. The minister knows my opinion; he has the opinion of the delegation that waited on him, and he has the opinion of his own engineer, to which I attach a great deal of importance and which I believe is favourable to the construction of the line. I trust the minister will give this proposition careful consideration, and as soon as possible will do something to start the construction of that line. And I would like if the minister would be good enough to give the committee his opinion of that report.

Mr. COCHRANE: The report is altogether too rosy, I am afraid; the actual facts would not bear it out.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am glad to get the minister's opinion. I suppose I can have very little hope for the construction of that line under the circumstances. The engineer who reported was selected by the minister and I suppose he was one with the necessary qualifications to make a thorough report. But now, because the report is too favourable to the road the minister thinks it too rosy. I thought I had accomplished a great deal when I got the minister to give consent to send the engineer down. But now, having received the report of the engineer, he considers it too rosy.

Sydney Mines, diversion, $40,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: This is a very important piece of work. I suppose every member of Parliament regards the work of his constituency as important, but this has been regarded as important from the Intercolonial standpoint. It will have the effect of removing a serious defect in the line of that important railway. It is getting rid of a very serious grade and will enable the road to do three times the business that it is capable of doing to-day. A considerable amount of money has been expended in building the line as far as Sydney Mines. I have no hesitation in telling the minister that the expenditure that has been made will be useless unless the work is completed. It is necessary to extend the line. Of course, when he gets to Sydney Mines he can link up with the Intercolonial railway which carries him to North Sydney. We have the line completed from Georges River to Little Bras d'Or, and from Little Bras d'Or to Sydney Mines. But from North Sydney to Leitch's Creek, four or five miles the line is not yet touched. I have urged the minister to fill in that gap. The sum of $40,000 will not complete that work, and it is important to complete the whole loop from Georges River to Leitch's Creek. So far as my own town of North Sydney is concerned, that has far outgrown the local terminals there. The minister's officials will tell him that the Newfoundland traffic has grown so enormously that the terminal facilities he has there cannot handle the traffic at all. While I am anxious to have these terminal facilities at North Sydney, I tell the minister frankly that it would not be well for him to spend money on the terminus he has now. He must remove it, for the present location will not afford him the facilities necessary for the road. I pointed out to his officials that the proper place for the terminus is what is called Ballast Ground. I do not wish to bind the minister to any particular route; but I do say that if he and the Government are willing to properly equip that terminus, they will put the rails down on Ballast Ground, where they have a magnificent area and plenty of room and deep water all around it. There is no other spot in North America quite so well fitted for an ocean terminal as Ballast Ground at North Sydney. I trust the minister will build these terminals and build them quickly. I have urged this upon these officials, also the building of the gap between North Sydney and Leitch's creek.

Mr. COCHRANE: This item is to finish the work we have been constructing. There is in the supplementaries $100,000 to start the connection the hon. gentleman is so anxious to build. The land damages on the front line are very high according to the figures I get and that may confine us to the back line which we can build for less than a half of the other and make as good connections. The matter has not yet been settled as to whether we shall take the front line or the back, but we are making progress and propose to go on.

Increased accommodation and facilities along the line, $126,000.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have here a list of the proposed improvements:

Sydney drop pit	$ 1,000
Between Sydney and Jefferson's siding to hold 30 cars	3,551
Hawkesbuhy Junction, extension or siding, 20 car lengths	1,432
New Glasgow, additional sidings	7,816
Stellarton drop pit	1,000
Westville, extension of freight shed	1,775
Pictou, extension to ice house	1,020
Oxford Junction, hot water heating in station	700
Springhill Junction, extension of siding	766
Amherst, additional sidings	4,900
Boundary Creek, addition to freight room	1,085
Hampton, turntable at	3,500
Bathurst, extension of siding	3,104
Rimouski, tracks to freight shed	2,685
St. Romuald, enlarging station building and additional yard accommodation	4,953
Ste. Rosalie, additional siding accommodation	5,270
College Bridge, new station	4,500
Drummondville, coal handling yard and extension to freight shed	9,200
Chaudière Junction, additional sidings and drop pit	31,000
Unforseen	25,000

Mr. MARCIL: No items in the Matapedia valley.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not read them all.

Mr. MARCIL: Are there any from Matapedia West?

Mr. COCHRANE: St. Andre, Causapscal, Moffat's, Montmagny.

Truro—to increase accommodation, $155,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: There used to be an annual discussion about some place that required filling in these towns. What became of that?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think they are all filled now. $99,000 of it is a revote.

Mr. GRAHAM: Will this amount finish the station and everything at Truro?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: What will the whole amount be?

Mr. COCHRANE: $294,887.

Spur line to Wallace harbour, $69,500.

Mr. COCHRANE: This was an agreement entered into by the coal company. They have not carried out their part of it. They were to build a dock and do the dredging done there. We are revoting it to some extent.

Mr. GRAHAM: To see what they would do?

Mr. COCHRANE: When they start work we will carry it out. We made a contract to haul a certain amount of coal down there at so much per ton, but they have not done their part yet.

To increase water supply, $41,500.

Mr. COCHRANE: This is at different places along the line. Matapedia—pipe line, dam and tank, gravity supply, $17,100; Assemetkwagan—pipe line, dam and tank gravity supply, $7,400. We find it pays to put in these tanks.

Mr. MARCIL: The next station west from Matapedia is St. Alexis. Has anything been done there?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have no vote for it. There is water supply at the following stations: Bloomfield, Merrigomish, Brockville, Cold Brook, Dorchester. Wells at stations, $3,900.

Towards the construction of a railway from a point on the Intercolonial railway at or near Dartmouth, in the county of Halifax, via Musquodoboit harbour and the valley of the Musquodoboit to Dean's settlement in the said county, $1,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is one of the lines for which a contract was given some years ago. How long is the road, and what is the estimated cost per mile?

Mr. COCHRANE: Seventy-three miles; estimated cost, $28,545 per mile.

Mr. GRAHAM: This road will run through some timber territory.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think it gets as far as the timber territory.

Mr. GRAHAM: What weight of rails are you using on that road?

Mr. COCHRANE: 65 and 67 pound, the old rails. $600,000 of this is a revote.

Mr. KYTE: In the absence of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), I should like to ask if the hon. minister is prepared to make any announcement tonight as to whether the construction of the Guysborough railway will be undertaken.

Mr. COCHRANE: Not yet.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is that the road which had the very high estimated cost?

Mr. COCHRANE: It was $68,000 a mile there.

Mr. GRAHAM: The estimate was made almost on a Grand Trunk Pacific standard, which was not necessary at all.

Mr. CARVELL: Has there been any change in the classification on the work now under construction from Dartmouth eastward? A very serious change was made in the classification after the work was well under way, a change which means a great loss of money and possibly ruination to some of the sub-contractors. I am speaking now from some professional knowledge of the subject. Certain contractors and sub-contractors tendered on the work along the lines of classification that had held good in eastern Nova Scotia for many years. After the work commenced and for some months down, I think, to the month of May or June of last year, they received a classification which gave them a fair profit after paying their ordinary expenses. For some reason a new order went forth from Ottawa, and the engineers on the work were ordered and compelled to give an entirely new classification, I understand, very much against their better judgment.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is absolutely untrue. No new specification and no new orders have been given.

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say there was a change in the specification; I said there was a change in the classification.

Mr. COCHRANE: There was not.

Mr. CARVELL: I tell my hon. friend that there was.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know, but the hon. gentleman makes a statement that it was given forth from Ottawa. I say that is absolutely untrue. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. CARVELL: I think I know what I am talking about. If necessary, I shall be glad to produce the proofs. Engineers in Nova Scotia did get instructions from Ottawa, and acting on these instructions changed the classification and cut it down until some contractors will lose money. There is hardly a man on the work but will lose money, let alone making a profit. It may be that it was the proper classification, I am only telling the minister the facts that took place. I know because clients of mine were interested. I not only heard them but I went on the work myself.

Mr. COCHRANE: That would not prove the classification.

Mr. CARVELL: I saw the engineers and the instructions. If the minister will investigate he will find I am telling what is true and the classification was changed.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, Sir.

Mr. CARVELL: It was changed in May or June of last year.

Mr. COCHRANE: Neither one nor the other.

Mr. CARVELL: And amounts were taken out of the estimates which had been given before, in June, July or August of last year, in order to bring it down to the new classification. A great injustice has been done to practically every contractor on the work. I shall give the minister privately the names of the officials in Ottawa who gave the instructions. I wish he would make the inquiry.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have been into it.

Mr. CARVELL: I wish he would do justice to these people and put the classification back where it was.

Mr. COCHRANE: This contract was let when I came in, the specifications were drawn and there were no changes in the specifications or classification. The point is it was let to Messrs. Davis and Company and they sub-let to another and this sub-contractor again sublet so that there are two rake-offs, if these men are losing money. The question of hard pan comes in but that hard pan was to be seen and if the men the hon. member speaks of had gone over the ground they could have seen for themselves. There is at least 20 per cent profit being made off the sub-contractors. The contractors took the easy sections themselves and then these men went on blindfold and we are not the parties to make good to them. We are holding the original contractors, and it is to them that the sub-contractors should go if they have been misled in any way.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister has not denied one statement I made. I know that the contractors were the Davis firm and that they sub-let portions of the contract. I think the first twenty miles was sublet to one firm.

Mr. COCHRANE: There have not been two interpretations of the specifications.

Mr. CARVELL: I have seen the original estimates and I tell the minister that a certain classification was given in June and May and after that that classification was taken away. While the first classification would yield a profit, the other classifications entailed an actual loss.

Mr. COCHRANE: Here is the deputy minister and he does not know.

Mr. CARVELL: Let him go to his chief engineer and he will find out there.

Mr. GRAHAM: When does the minister expect this to be completed?

Mr. COCHRANE: We hardly hope it will be finished this year up to Lévis.

Mr. CARVELL: Engineers on the work advised contractors who were going to throw up their job to go on with the work with the promise that the May classification would be restored.

Mr. COCHRANE: He had no authority to do anything of the kind.

Mr. CARVELL: He did it.

Mr. COCHRANE: I connot help that.

Mr. CARVELL: He did it to me personally, and the result was that the contractors went on and did the work and they have had their classification reduced and lost money. The trouble with my hon. friend is that he will not believe a man is telling the truth when he is.

Mr. GERMAN: It seems to me that the hon. member for Carleton has made a serious charge, if he has received information from engineers in the department that is not in the possession of either the minister or the deputy. If that is so, the minister should ascertain it, and such a man should receive his congé in rather short order.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm): (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, when the Great Northern Railway Company built the branch line which starts from Ruisseau St. Jacques and goes to Rawdon, it was agreed that a siding would be laid near the village of St. Alexis, to accommodate the interests in that parish. Since then the company has often been approached but it has failed to grant the demands of the people, and interested parties in St. Alexis had to build that siding themselves, at their own cost, which is a crying injustice, and such an important company as the Great Northern should not be guilty of leaving this siding to be constructed by the people instead of building it themselves.

That road shortens by about two miles the distance between Ruisseau St. Jacques and St. Alexis.

Had that siding been built as agreed, the distance to the main line would only be one and a quarter miles. It is a great hardship, especially when the roads are bad, to be obliged to go four miles. It is still harder for the traders, farmers and manufacturers who are obliged to go to that station. The company has often been asked to lay that siding, and recently the parishioners, seeing that nothing was being done, have felt compelled to build it themselves.

It is a crying injustice. These companies ask subsidies from Parliament, they are well treated and liberally subsidized. It seems to me that means ought to be taken to compel them to grant such just requests made by the tax-payers and to force them to build these roads themselves.

I ask the hon. Minister of Railways, who seems so well disposed, to give justice to whom justice is due, and to see that the cost of that road, built at the expense of the rate-payers of the parish of St. Alexis, be reimbursed to them and that an order may issue to give justice to these honest people.

I also wish to ask the hon. minister what has been done with regard to the proposed line of railway which, from Rawdon, was to be continued to connect with the Transcontinental? I was called upon to examine the plans submitted to the Great Northern Company. These plans were deposited in my presence and approved of by the hon. minister. Since then, I have not heard what has been done. Has there been a beginning of the work between Rawdon and the Transcontinental, such as proposed by that company?

Mr. COCHRANE: I cannot give the hon. member any answer, because I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MARCIL: Perhaps I might explain. The hon. member appeals to the minister to use his good offices to induce the Canadian Northern to construct a siding at the village of St. Alexis, and he also wishes to know what progress has been made with the construction of the line from Ruisseau St. Jacques to Rawdon in the county of Montcalm. He is under the impression that plans were approved of, and he wants to know if any progress has been made.

Mr. COCHRANE: Has the line a Dominion charter?

Mr. MARCIL: Yes, to connect with the Transcontinental.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: The plans were submitted to the minister in my presence and I understood they were accepted. I want to know what has been done.

Mr. COCHRANE: Of course the approving of the plan does not build a railway.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: I want to know if something has been done?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know anything about it. I do not know how much they have built or what they will do, but I will take a note of it, and write to the Canadian Northern, and do anything in my power in connection with the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the line to which my hon. friend (Mr. Lafortune) refers has a Dominion charter, an appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners would compel the company to do what he suggests.

Prince Edward Island Railway—to increase accommodation facilities along the line, $5,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P. E. I.): I wish to call the minister's attention to the fact that the Railway Department owns a wharf at Souris, P.E.I., which cost a considerable sum of money. The cars go down to that wharf and a steamer calls there four times a week, carrying a good deal of freight. She does not call at the railway wharf, and the freight has to be carted from the railway wharf to a private wharf at considerable expense. The boat is subsidized by the Government. There is considerable expense to some person, either to the consignees or to the department if it pays for the cartage. It appears to be such a strange thing that I would like an explanation.

Mr. COCHRANE: It has never been brought to my attention before, but I will make a note of it.

Mr. HUGHES: Does the department know anything about it?

Mr. COCHRANE: The deputy minister does not know, but I will make a note of it.

Mr. HUGHES: The Department's wharf there is a large expensive wharf, but it is left without facilities for doing business. There is no proper freight shed.

Mr. COCHRANE: Does the boat not call there?

Mr. HUGHES: She does not call at all.

Mr. COCHRANE: Is there any reason why she should not call?

Mr. HUGHES: I do not know of any reason.

Mr. COCHRANE: It ought to be looked into.

Mr. HUGHES: Some facilities are required for doing business at the wharf.

There is an old freight shed there, which is hardly suitable. It is not exactly in the right place. Another thing very much required is a weighing scale. A thousand dollars would put a suitable freight shed and scale there. I would like the minister to look into the matter.

Mr. COCHRANE: All right.

Prince Edward Island Railway—to provide car ferry and make necessary alterations incidental thereto, including change from narrow gauge to standard gauge, $1,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES: I would like some information about this. I presume that tenders have been called for the construction of the piers.

Mr. COCHRANE: Tenders have been received, but I do not know whether the contracts have been completed or not. The award has been made.

Mr. HUGHES: What are the amounts of the tenders that have been accepted?

Mr. COCHRANE: Let the item stand until we get the information.

Mr. HUGHES: And the tender for the steamer that has been accepted?

Mr. COCHRANE: I will get the information for the hon. gentleman if he will allow the item to go through, both with regard to the boat and each terminal.

Mr. HUGHES: All right. Will the hon. gentleman get it to-night?

Mr. COCHRANE: Either to-night or in the morning.

Mr. HUGHES: I secured an order of the House about twelve days ago for some information as to what the completion of the Elmira branch cost, when it was taken off the contractor's hands? I would like to get that information.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think we had to send to Moncton for it. We will get it as early as possible.

Mr. HUGHES: I do not know whether I shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter again.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, when the supplementary estimates are under consideration.

Mr. HUGHES: We may be rushed for time. I would like to point out some things in connection with it that I think the department should know. This work cost a great deal more than it should have.

Mr. COCHRANE: It cost a lot of money, I know.

Mr. HUGHES: It was very badly managed. There were men employed by day-labour, after the work was taken off the contractor's hands, who were not capable of doing half a day's work. I have information that the coalshed was painted after it was covered with ice and snow and that when the ice melted off there was no paint left on the building. The cemeteries were not ransacked, but actually men were taken out of the poorhouse to work on that road. The local politicians got charge of it. I do not suppose that the department knew what was going on, but whoever was in charge of that work ought to be called to account. If there was an engineer in charge of it he was no good or he was overruled. The work cost twice as much as it should have cost. It was the most notorious piece of graft that has ever taken place in that part of the country. Surely someone is responsible. I would ask the minister to look into it. I wish to discuss it when the supplementary estimates are under consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD: I would like the minister to tell us how soon he expects the car ferry to be completed and whether he intends to proceed with the widening of the gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway this summer?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. MACDONALD: I would also like to ask him whether he intends to do the work by contract or day labour, whether he intends to take over as part of the Intercolonial line from Cape Tormentine to Sackville, and if so what arrangement he has made in that regard.

Mr. COCHRANE: We hope to have the car ferry running by the 1st August, 1914, the docks completed and the boat there. We do not propose to start the widening of the railway this year. We have not made any arrangements for getting to Cape Tormentine yet. That will come in under our branch line policy and we will construct a line if we cannot make suitable arrangements.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does the minister intend to proceed to widen the gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway by day's work or by tender and contract?

Mr. COCHRANE: I said that we were not going to do anything with it this year, and we have not discussed it or decided on any plan.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.): With regard to freight rates, the people of Prince Edward Island thought they had a promise that the disadvantage of the three short hauls would be eliminated when the car ferry would be established.

Mr. COCHRANE: When was the promise made?

Mr. HUGHES: I think on the eve of the last election.

Mr. COCHRANE: Well, I do not know anything about it. Did you make it?

Mr. HUGHES: No, I think the Prime Minister made it. I am not quite sure, but that the Minister of Railways and Canals made it.

Mr. COCHRANE: The Minister of Railways?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: And that was before the last election?

Mr. HUGHES: I am quite satisfied that gentlemen supporting the Government made the statement that they had that assurance from the Prime Minister.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not make it, I can assure you.

Mr. HUGHES: Can the minister give us any statement with regard to it?

Mr. COCHRANE: No, it is a matter that has not come before me to my knowledge.

Mr. HUGHES: It has not been considered yet.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. HUGHES: Well, then, we will have to depend on the future?

Mr. COCHRANE: I would be almost willing to give them the railway if they would only undertake to run it and build the ferry too.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does the minister intend to operate the car ferry as a part of the Intercolonial railway when it is completed, or is he going to allow the Department of Marine and Fisheries to have anything to do with the operation of the steamer?

Mr. COCHRANE: It is a matter that will have to be decided in the future. I could not give the hon. gentleman an answer because we have not discussed it.

Mr. MACDONALD: The trouble with this car ferry proposition and the attitude of the Government has been that the whole thing has been a leap in the dark. My hon. friend's proposition to-night indicates that he does not know what he is going to do. The only thing he knows is that he has let a contract for a car ferry and that he is going to construct two docks at the Prince Edward Island mainland terminals.

Mr. COCHRANE: What would the hon. gentleman do?

Mr. MACDONALD: If I had the responsibility I would be able to tell the hon. gentleman when he would ask me, and I would be in a different position from what he is in to-night. I would know what I was going to do, because he apparently does not know what he is going to do. The minister proposes letting a contract in his department to provide transportation facilities between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I was going to ask him, if it is really his desire to give proper communication with Prince Edward Island, to take over the control of the winter service between Pictou and Charlottetown and Georgetown and operate it as a part of the railway system of the Dominion. The grievance that Prince Edward Island has had against the federal Government, and it is one which still exists, arises out of the extra cost of the transportation of its products during the winter months. The railway brings them to the sea-coast, and they are placed upon boats which are controlled by the Department of Marine and Fisheries and where the charges are of such a character that it is impossible for the products to be sent forward except at a great disadvantage. Notwithstanding the car ferry between the capes, the Government will have to continue the operation of the winter boats, which ply to the two great ports of Prince Edward Island. Has the minister considered that phase of the question; have his supporters who come from Prince Edward Island urged on him the desirability of taking over the operation of the two winter boats, and lightening the cost of the transportation facilities in that way so that the people of the island will have a real and substantial benefit?

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, Prince Edward Island): I understand—

Mr. MACDONALD: I did not ask the hon. gentleman; I asked the minister.

Mr. McLEAN: I have the right to speak in this House.

Mr. MACDONALD: Usually when a minister is asked a question, the courtesy of the House allows him to make a reply.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, Prince Edward Island): I am going to make a few remarks notwithstanding the objection of the member for Pictou. As I understand it, the railway system of Prince Edward Island will be connected by means of this car ferry with the Intercolonial railway system on the mainland, and that will be a fulfilment of the terms of Confederation which require continuous communication between the island and the mainland. The car ferry will be regarded, as I understand it, as so many miles of railway, and the Prince Edward Island railway will, when the car ferry is in operation, be simply a section of the Intercolonial railway. That is the arrangement, which as I understand it, is made by the Government with the people of Prince Edward Island, and such an arrangement will be carried out when the car ferry is established. I am glad the minister is able to tell us this system will be completed on the 1st day of August, 1914. We have looked for it for many years; ever since Confederation, practically. We have asked the successive Governments of Canada to fulfil the terms of Confederation in this regard, but until the present Government came to power we have been unable to get anything. There have been three short hauls to connect with the mainland, which has been a great expense and disadvantage to the people of the island in the past, and when this car ferry is in operation, it would practically mean one haul, and the people on the island will be put on an equal footing in that respect with the people of the mainland. That is only due to the people of the island and it is nothing more than fulfilling the terms of Confederation. The people of Prince Edward Island have just as much right to this car ferry as the people of the mainland have the right to have filled in any gap between two parts of the same line of railway. I cannot see any reason why the contention should be raised that there should be any extra charge for the car ferry service than if the freight were carried just the same number of miles on a section of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. MACDONALD: The hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. McLean) evidently knows more about what this Government is going to do than does the Minister of Railways. If he had only waited until the minister answered the question, the House would have obtained a statement from some responsible authority as to the policy of the Government. I want to know whether the minister will assume control of the transportation facilities between Prince Edward Island and the mainland including the winter steamers.

Mr. COCHRANE: Do you mean when the ferry is started?

Mr. MACDONALD: Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: I misunderstood you. I thought you asked if when the ferry was completed the Department of Railways is going to run the ferry. As to its being one straight haul, it will be taken as part of the transit across there and in that way will be about the same as a tunnel, so far as the terms of Confederation are concerned.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is nothing about a tunnel in the terms of Confederation.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know, but I suppose this would be a continuous communication.

Mr. MACDONALD: Continuous communication was to be maintained between the island and the mainland, and the minister is going to have a ferry boat and two wharfs built to cost a large sum of money, but he does not know how he is going to get down from the Intercolonial railway at Sackville to Cape Tormentine; whether he will take over that railway there or build a new one.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would not tell you if I did know. There is no use stating to the House what railways I will buy or what railways I will not. There is lots of time to build a road there or to buy the existing railway or to rent it.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend the minister says he would not tell me if he was going to buy that railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: I would not.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am not so very anxious to know that, but what I do want to know is whether or not the minister is undertaking to assume the solution of the transportation problem there. I am telling him that although he may have a car-ferry service in August he will not escape the demands which will be made by the people of the island. Notwithstanding the statement of the member for Queens, P.E.I., that the demands of the people would be satisfied with a car ferry. The minister will have to assume the responsibility of meeting the request of the people of Prince Edward Island that the winter boats which now run from Charlottetown and Georgetown to the mainland, will be kept on. The solution of the problem by a car ferry service is of a most doubtful character, while these winter boats built at great expense, have practically solved it. Have any of his friends or supporters from the island placed before him the proposition that he should regard it as his bounden duty to at once provide cheap transportation on these winter boats? Will the minister tell me whether he will take these winter boats over?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why not?

Mr. COCHRANE: Because that is in another department at present, and I am not going to take it out of that department. If we do not find our scheme satisfactory, we will have to adopt some other scheme, but I will wait until the time comes. It is time enough to bid the devil good morrow when you meet him.

Mr. MACDONALD: You will not help the people of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have helped the people of Prince Edward Island, and the hon. member has sat in this House a number of years, and he never did anything to help them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), who arrived in this House about a year and a half ago, knows so much about the province of Prince Edward Island that he thinks it very amusing that these questions should be discussed here.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman from Vancouver has respect for the minister, and your impertinent cross-questioning is enough to make anybody resent it.

Mr. MACDONALD: I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call the hon. gentleman to order. I was not impertinent. The hon. member has no right to make that remark.

Mr. STEVENS: If I did withdraw it, I would only have to say that it was not true.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member, of course, understands, that nothing offensive is to be said in debate.

Mr. MACDONALD: As the member for Vancouver has been in the House only a year and a half, he certainly displayed a great deal of temerity in the remark he made commenting on the request I made of the minister in the interest of the people of Prince Edward Island. The minister has been treated very well by the Opposition—I think he is bound to admit that. The Minister of Railways and Canals is one of the ministers who has always received special consideration from this side of the House. So far as I am concerned, I have no complaint to make of his courtesy. But I do not propose, when discussing a matter in which the people I represent are interested, to be deterred from seeking information by any little demonstration on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. The minister was good enough to say, when I put a proper question, that he was not going to do anything about this question of a winter service in the meantime, and I want it distinctly understood whether that is the position of the minister or not—that although the people of Prince Edward Island have a problem of winter communication, he does not propose to remedy any of the grievances with regard to the cost of the transportation of freight. He said that I had been in the previous House and had supported the late Government, and that this, that or the other had not been done. Surely, after this country has been governed for almost two years by this great Conservative party which once claimed to have the only initiative in government given by divine or any other authority, and whose leader went to Prince Edward Island and pledged himself in advance to deal with this question and to satisfy the needs of the people, they ought to be able, when a courteous question is asked of the minister as to his policy, to give a better answer than that their predecessors had not done these things. What were they given power for? Merely to follow in the footsteps of their predecessors?

Mr. GRAHAM: They came in to build a tunnel.

Mr. MACDONALD: They gave the impression that the building of a tunnel or the providing of a car-ferry was a part of the terms of Confederation. Apparently, the situation is that the minister is going to have a car-ferry, but he is not going to have the means to get to it so that he can operate it. When it is there in 1914 he cannot tell the House whether that ferry can be operated in the winter months or not.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. gentleman does not know that it will not.

Mr. MACDONALD: If I had the responsibility, I should be ready to make a definite statement one way or the other.

Mr. COCHRANE: We are going on; that is a definite statement.

Mr. MACDONALD: And the minister is asked whether he is going to operate the car-ferry in the winter time, and he gives no answer. He will find that he cannot operate in the winter time. I warn him of that in advance and tell him that the winter service will have to be kept on. I am warning him in the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island that he should give cheap transportation this winter and take charge of the whole system of connections.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.): For many years in this House the members for Prince Edward Island argued that it was necessary in the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island that these three short hauls should be done away with. The hon. member for Pictou was a supporter of the Laurier Administration for fifteen years, yet he threw cold water upon the request of the people of Prince Edward Island for this boon. He laughed and jeered at practically everything the members from Prince Edward Island said with regard to lowering freights between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, but now when he sees that this car-ferry is going to be put in operation between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, sixty miles from his own town, he is getting a little anxious and for the first time argues in favour of the people of Prince Edward Island. The people of Prince Edward Island do not want his assistance, and have never asked for it. On every occasion when they asked for anything, he was the principal man on the other side. He laughed and jeered at the project of a tunnel, and now he laughs at the project of a car-ferry inaugurated by this Government. I think the car-ferry will probably fill the bill and will be of the greatest benefit to Prince Edward Island. It may not be of much benefit to the people of Pictou whom the hon. gentleman represents. I know he feels sore that the Government have taken this up, but the people of Prince Edward Island do not care a rap how he feels.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.): The information sought to be obtained by the hon. member for Pictou was proper information. In the event of the car-ferry not being a success, he wished to know from the minister whether the transportation between Georgetown, or Charlottetown, and Pictou would be maintained. That is information useful to the committee. I would like something definite on this subject. I understood the minister to say that the car-ferry would be in operation in August, 1914, and also that the result of its operation would be the elimination of the disadvantage of the three short hauls, that is, that people living in Prince Edward Island could export and import at the same rates for equal distances as those on the mainland. For instance, people living at Souris would be able to send goods to Montreal or Toronto at the same rate as those of Pictou, assuming the distances to be the same. I understood the minister to make that statement.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. gentleman made some statement with respect to the elimination of the three short hauls. Would he be good enough to tell me what it was?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not the way to get on.

Mr. COCHRANE: The statement I am asked to make is one I should really consult the Government before making. Some people say the Prime Minister made a statement to that effect. If he did, he will carry it out. But I did not make it.

Mr. HUGHES: I thought the minister made the statement just now.

Mr. COCHRANE: No. But if the Prime Minister made a statement to that effect, hon. gentlemen can rest assured it will be carried out.

Mr. HUGHES: The member for Queens—

Mr. COCHRANE: The member for Queens says he saw a letter to that effect.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I).

Whatever promise was made by the Prime Minister will be carried out definitely.

Mr. HUGHES: The member for Queens made the statement, if I understood him correctly, that the disadvantage of the three short hauls would be eliminated. That must mean that freight would be carried to and from Prince Edward Island at the same rate as on the mainland for a similar distance. The member for Queens must have had some authority for that statement. I am sure he will tell me what that authority was. Does the hon. gentleman not know anything about it?

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.) The hon. member for Kings is in the habit of catechising members who speak in this House. He heard what I said. I make this statement, and I think it is one which must be correct and in line with the policy the Government have formed in regard to the car-ferry—that the car-ferry will be simply so many miles of railway, and when a man ships goods from Charlottetown to Montreal, he will ship at the same rate as if the water were land. That is the way I have understood it, and so by reason of the construction of the car-ferry, the three short hauls will be eliminated.

Mr. HUGHES: Would the hon. gentleman tell me on whose authority he makes that statement?

Mr. McLEAN: The hon. member for Kings made a motion in this House for the production of certain papers. Those papers were brought down and he knows what was in them as well as I do. He knows that a car-ferry connecting the railway system of Prince Edward Island with that of the mainland was set forth in those papers. When you connect two systems of railway and buy a car-ferry, it means that the car-ferry is part of the railway.

Mr. HUGHES: I do not know that I can take that meaning out of the correspondence. There is nothing in the correspondence, so far as I can remember, stating that this disadvantage of the three short hauls would be eliminated, or that the people in Prince Edward Island could export or import goods at the same rate for the same distance as they could be carried at on the mainland. The minister will not make that statement to-night. We want to get something definite now. I think the responsible minister who is in charge of this, if such information is in existence, should be able to give us definite information on the subject.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. HUGHES: Then, I have this information to ask from the minister. In the event of the car-ferry being a failure, will the present service be continued?

Mr. COCHRANE: Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES: In that event, will the three short hauls be eliminated by the other route?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know.

Mr. HUGHES: The Government own and operate the railway on Prince Edward Island, the railway on the mainland, and the only steamers that connect with these two railways. If the Government really were sincere in eliminating the disadvantage of the three short hauls, it could be done now.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P. E. I.): Why did you not do it when you were in power?

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. member for Queens says that he got a promise that it would be done. I am only asking the present Government to carry out that promise. They do not appear to be ready to say that they will.

Mr. COCHRANE: I said that, if the promise was made, I would carry it out. I have said so three times, but somehow I cannot satisfy my hon. friend, although I would like to do so.

Mr. HUGHES: What were the promises that were made?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know. I have not seen the promises.

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. member for Queens says that the promise was to the effect that goods exported from Prince Edward Island, say from the town of Souris to Montreal, the distance being the same as from the town of Pictou to Montreal, would be carried at the same rate for similar goods, and from Montreal or Toronto to Souris or Charlottetown.

Mr. COCHRANE: If that promise has been made, it shall be carried out.

Mr. MACDONALD: Let me point out to my hon. friend the minister, who is willing to carry out promises which he does not know were made or not, that his leader in 1907 promised that, when they came into power, the Intercolonial railway would be put under the control of a commission who would run it absolutely free from party influence of any kind whatever. That promise is contained in documents which have become a matter of public property. The hon. minister is not carrying out that promise.

Mr. COCHRANE: He was not elected in 1907. The people did not want him then.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend is pleading the statute of limitations. He is not very clear as to what promises his leader really made. My hon. friend from Halifax, Mr. Maclean, confirms the impression which I have in my mind that the present Premier of this country in 1911 reiterated that promise, and assured the people of the maritime provinces that, when he came into power, the Intercolonial railway would be run by a non-partisan commission, free from party influence.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is now.

Mr. MACDONALD: Where is the commission? My hon. friend has dispensed with the board. He does not propose to have any commission. He has appointed a general manager.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is run in a non-partisan way now.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend runs and intends to run the Intercolonial as a non-partisan institution?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am doing so now.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend have a patronage list? Will he accept recommendations from reputable people in the maritime provinces?

Mr. COCHRANE: That would be partisan. I am running a railway as a railway should be run.

Mr. MACDONALD: That is all very well in theory. My hon. friend is not doing that. He need not pretend to say to anyone coming from the maritime provinces that he is not accepting recommendations from Conservative members and defeated candidates all along the line of the Intercolonial. He is running that railway as a partisan institution. He does not propose to carry out the promises of his leader. He knows that his leader promised a non-partisan commission, and he is not going to have a commission at all. What is the use of attempting to bluff the House of Commons?

Mr. COCHRANE: Mr. Chairman, is that word parliamentary?

The CHAIRMAN: I think that word is rather strong. The rule is that nothing offensive shall be said.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend is not offended. He does not mind being told that he is a bluffer. He knows that he is an old hand at bluffing.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) does not play the game.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) seems to think that members on this side of the House have no rights at all. We are here at the close of the session. Nobody on this side of the House is obstructing or doing anything of that nature. We are asked to discuss this vast expenditure on railways and to do it in one day. The minister and I understand one another. I say he tells the hon. member for Kings, Prince Edward Island, that he does not know whether his leader make a promise or not but if he did he will carry it out, no matter what it is. I might call attention to the fact that his leader made a promise in 1907 and in 1911, and that the minister knows his leader made it.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will my hon. friend dispute the copy of the Conservative literature of both those years containing that statement on the Halifax platform?

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not know it.

Mr. MACDONALD: The hon. member does not know anything about the Halifax platform. If the present Premier in 1907 and 1911 promised that the Intercolonial would be run by a commission as a non-partisan institution would he carry out that promise?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is not under discussion at all.

Mr. MACDONALD: Oh yes it is. It is very apt and very important in order that my hon. friend and the people of Prince Edward Island may know whether he is going it blind or whether he will carry out the promises made by his leader no matter what they are. The minister knows that his leader promised he would run the Intercolonial railway by a non-partisan commission. He knows himself that he does not intend to carry out that promise.

Mr. BURNHAM: Suppose he had discovered a better way?

Mr. MACDONALD: As the hon. member for Cape Breton says, the alarm clock has gone off again. If the minister has discovered a better way we will consider that. The minister does not take that position.

Mr. COCHRANE: Time will tell.

Mr. MACDONALD: Time will tell, we will watch to see whether Mr. Gutelius is going to run the Intercolonial railway as a non-partisan institution and whether or not the promise of the Premier will be carried out in the operations under his control. The people of the island will have to accept the assurance and go it blind, that whatever the Prime Minister promises the minister will carry out. I would like to ask the member for Queens, P.E.I., who is so ungenerous in regard to the good word I am inclined to say for his province, that last year I had the pleasure of visiting the island, the constituency of my hon. friend for Kings, and meeting a large number of the people of that splendid little province. My hon. friend does not speak for the whole people of the province; I am proud to believe that in that province there are a number of friends who are my friends and who believe in regard to this attitude which I am taking on this question that I am acting in their best interest. I defy the hon. member for Queens to stand up and say he is not in favour of the position I am taking, that the minister should take over the operation of the winter boats, cut down the freights and give advantage in regard to transportation of goods which he says he proposed to do when the car-ferry is in operation.

Mr. HUGHES: I asked if the contracts for the ship and for the piers have been let?

Mr. COCHRANE: The contract for the ferry has been let to W. E. Armstrong and Company at £138,000. The pier at Cape Tormentine has been let to A. P. Mackie at $571,590. The pier at Carleton point has been let to the Halifax Dredging Company at $199,493.

Mr. HUGHES: Will these amounts complete the piers and the boat ready for service?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is the understanding.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose when my hon. friend speaks of widening the gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway the proposition is to introduce a third rail until the present rolling stock has been worn out?

Mr. COCHRANE: I had an engineer all summer working on the question of the car-ferry but I have not had an examination as to the third rail or the conversion of the Prince Edward railway to standard gauge. You would practically have to rebuild the road to put on the third rail.

Hudson Bay railway—construction and terminals,—$4,500,000.

Mr. OLIVER: How much of this is for railway construction and how much for terminals?

Mr. COCHRANE: The contracts as let, as near as we can get at them, are: from the Pas to Thicket Portage, $2,500,000, one hundred and eighty-five miles; from Thicket Portage to Split Lake Junction, $1,000,000; from Split Lake Junction to Hudson bay, $1,000,000. That is as near as we can get at the cost of the railway at present, that is from the Pas to Nelson.

Mr. OLIVER: This vote is enough for the whole construction then?

Mr. COCHRANE: We have got to put in something for the harbour work. We expect to send a number of men with supplies and a complete plant down this year to start the development of the harbour there, they have dredges and cement and a regular plant for the development of the harbour.

Mr. OLIVER: What part of this vote is for the harbour?

Mr. COCHRANE: $1,500,000. We do not expect to spend all of it this year.

Mr. OLIVER: And how much is it estimated that the harbour improvement will cost?

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not a definite estimate. The trouble is to get into communication there. I propose to put a wireless station at the Pas and one at Nelson. The one at the Pas we can move to some other place afterwards when we get the land lines through. The one at Nelson we will, of course, require permanently. We have only had one communication since navigation closed last fall, since I came out in fact, and I cannot say definitely what the total cost will be.

Mr. OLIVER: It is definitely decided to establish the terminus at Port Nelson?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, it is so much shorter than the other route. There are seventy miles of barren land on which it is difficult to say how the operation of a railway would act. It is frozen, and I think there are from three to seven or eight feet of muskeg on the top. It would be difficult to get over.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the Government is not well advised on deciding on Port Nelson until information is at hand as to what the cost will be of establishing proper harbour facilities at that point. My information is that the expense will be stupendous, and that under no circumstances can an entirely satisfactory port be established at Nelson.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is not our report.

Mr. OLIVER: The reason being that there are many miles of shallow water from the shore until deep water is reached. There will have to be a dredged channel for some ten or fifteen miles, to enable vessels to enter the harbour at the mouth of the river. It is absolutely impossible that vessels can reach the sheltered mouth of the river by way of that dredged channel in any but calm weather. That, as it appears to me, is a tremendous objection to the establishment of Port Nelson as the terminus of the railroad. At any rate, I want to place before the Government my view that they should have the fullest information as to what the cost will be before they begin to make large expenditures. There is no doubt that at Churchill there is a harbour at the present time, a harbour easy of access, and safe when reached, not large, but possibly large enough for any reasonable requirements. I quite appreciate what the minister says against Fort Churchill. The distance is greater, and there are certain questions as to railroad construction. That, of course, must be admitted, but on the other hand we know that there is a practicable harbour at Churchill; we know that if we are to have a practicable harbour at Nelson it will have to be made, and I say again that we ought to know what it will cost to make that harbour before we make large expenditures upon it. I understand from the minister that he proposes to spend a million or a million and a half of dollars upon that harbour, and as much of that amount as possible during the current summer without having full information as to what the expenditure required to complete the work will be. If that is the position, I think it is hardly a desirable position.

Mr. COCHRANE: The hon. gentleman has got some wrong information. Shortly before I arrived at Nelson last year, the Minto was up within a mile, I think of the place where it is proposed to have the harbour. There is a channel there, over twenty feet deep, and there is no aid to navigation. There are no buoys or anything of that kind to guide a vessel up to the harbour. That matter will have to be straightened to some extent, and buoys will have to be put in to guide a ship up. I do not intend to go on with any elaborate expenditure until we know something definite about the navigation. If we are sure on that point, we will go in and make a permanent place, but until we find out about the navigation and see what benefit it is going to be as our grain route, I would not care to go to any great expense there. But I saw the place myself. The water is shallow, but the channel is there, and it can be made more navigable without a great deal of dredging. They propose to run a pier out into the stream rather than dredge, because they think it would be cheaper to do so.

Mr. GERMAN: The hon. minister has made a remark which appeals to my mind very strongly. He says he does not propose to make any very great expenditure in connection with the harbour at Port Nelson until he has assured himself that that will be a satisfactory harbour. That will certainly be an act of wisdom, and I trust he will retain that idea in connection with the building of the so-called Hudson Bay railway, and will not proceed with any lavish expenditure in connection with that railway until he has absolutely assured himself that its construction will work to the advantage of Canada generally. I am one of those who doubt that the construction of the Hudson Bay railway will be of one dollar's worth advantage to Canada.

Mr. CARVELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. GERMAN: The wheat from the Northwest cannot reach the British market by the Hudson Bay railway and Hudson bay during the year in which it is grown and harvested. It could only get through Hudson bay in the following year. I maintain that if you satisfactorily deepen the St. Lawrence navigation route you will get a transportation route, which, together with the railway facilities that we have, will carry to Great Britain every bushel of grain likely to be grown in the Northwest during the next 100 years, at a cost less than you could carry it over the Hudson bay route, and it would be carried at a much more rapid rate, so that it would reach Liverpool earlier than grain carried by any Hudson bay road you can build. Although this Hudson bay route was suggested by the late Government, I was opposed to it, and I am opposed to it to-day, and until I see some evidence more clearly showing that the construction of that railroad will be to the general advantage of Canada, I shall retain the opinion I have always had, that it will not be to the general advantage of Canada. The history of that country teaches us that the Hudson bay is not navigable except for about three months in the year.

Mr. COCHRANE: It never freezes.

Mr. GERMAN: But the straits are impassable. No boats carrying wheat from the Northwest would ever attempt to go through there, excepting for about three months of a year. No insurance company would insure them. It is to my mind an absolutely impracticable route, and I am not alone in saying that. I have asked men of wide experience and wide knowledge, of much wider knowledge and experience than I have. Such a scheme, as a financial proposition and as a scheme for the general advantage of Canada, is absolutely absurd and it is throwing money into a hole. It is an absolute waste of material. Let us use our money to better advantage. I trust that my hon. friend, pursuing the policy which he has announced with reference to Port Nelson, will use some degree of wise discretion in regard to the construction of the railway and not spend very much money or go ahead rapidly until he has absolutely satisfied himself, as the level-headed business man he is, that the construction of the railway would be for the general advantage of the country and that the money cannot be used to much greater advantage in the building up of our water transportation.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings): Having had the pleasure of travelling over that section of northern Canada last year, I feel that I should not allow this opportunity to go by without saying a word with regard to it. While perhaps the opinion of a man of my years would not weigh as much as that of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), or of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), or of other older gentlemen, I may say that I have formed a conclusion in regard to this subject that is the result of personal observation and study. In this connection let me point out that the report issued by the Senate in 1905 or 1907, gave a very large amount of information in regard to that north country, to which information I gave particular study last year. I am of the opinion that the Hudson Bay route is navigable for four or four and a half months in the year, and that any expenditure which this or any succeeding Government may make with regard to the extension of a railway into that section of Canada in order to make that route available, will in the future result in immense good to the country. Fort Churchill, as the hon. member for Edmonton has stated, is one hundred and fifty miles north of Port Nelson and is only five hundred miles in a direct line from the heart of the Peace river valley, an area seven hundred miles long by one hundred and fifty miles wide, and possessing, according to statements by agriculturists of the most advanced knowledge, probably the finest agricultural land in Alberta. Let us consider that Fort Churchill is some fifty-eight miles nearer to Liverpool by water than is New York, let us consider that the heart of the great provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan is within a five hundred rail-haul of water communication, that the products of that great country can be placed in a ship at Fort Churchill and Port Nelson and transferred across the water by a route which is admittedly fifty-eight miles shorter than from New York to Liverpool, and we must come to the conclusion that these conditions are bound to contribute to the greater development of Canada in the future. Few hon. gentlemen apparently have given the matter sufficient study to warrant them in coming to a final opinion in regard to the matter. In consulting the records in regard to the natural resources of that section of the country, we get an idea of its tremendous area and the variety and volume of its products. The United States consul at Kingston or Toronto, I forget which, in preparing data for the United States Government in regard to the forest belt of northern Canada, describes what he calls the spruce belt of Canada, as running from Labrador north-westerly to Alaska, a stretch of land in area some fifty-four times larger than the state of New York and possessing untold millions of feet of timber, spruce, fir, pine and birch. That is not all. In that great northwestern country there are 3,000 miles of inland navigable waterways which can be connected by the building of a short line of railway of only thirty miles and that inland water communication, at present navigable, is only five hundred miles from Fort Churchill and some seven hundred and fifty miles from Port Nelson. When we consider the fact that the isothermal lines in northwestern Canada do not run east and west, as I venture to suggest hon. gentlemen have believed offhand, but run north and south and that, therefore, the ability to raise wheat and vegetables has been demonstrated as far north as within fourteen miles of the arctic circle in the great Mackenzie valley, we can picture with some degree of accuracy, we can prophesy with some degree of certainty, what the future of this great section of the Dominion will be. The question which presents itself to my mind is whether or not the expenditure of a million or two millions in the Hudson Bay district will not be the percursor of expenditures which will contribute to the building up of a larger Canada in that great northwestern section of this continent than we have at present under civilization. From what study I have given to this subject I am profoundly enthusiastic over the great possibilities of this northern country. I am profoundly impressed with the belief that any expenditure wisely made by this Government or by succeeding governments cannot but contribute to the future development of the country.

One word more and it is in regard to the point that was made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) on the question of the navigation of the Hudson Bay route. He says that he does not think that the straits are navigable. It has been demonstrated that the Government steamer went in there in the early part of July and that it came out on the 5th of November last year. We know from personal observation that we have found greater obstacles in the straits of Belle Isle and north of Belle Isle, where steamers operate in the early part of the summer, than we found going through the Hudson straits on our trip last year, and from which I gained a most favourable opinion as to the feasibility of that route. Some information has been given us by Captain Bartlett who went through the straits on the Minto. It must not be forgotten that instead of a day of ten or twelve hours they have in that north country a day of nineteen hours or twenty hours and at some seasons of the year they have not more than three hours of night. All these things taken together must convince anybody who studies the question that this expenditure in that country is a worthy undertaking and that it will redound to the benefit of the Dominion generally.

Mr. OLIVER: I would not like the minister to think that the remarks I made with regard to the probable cost of improvements at Port Nelson would be any reason why work on the Hudson Bay railway should not be pushed. My theory is that having made harbour improvement at Port Nelson, or having fixed on Port Nelson as the terminus of the railroad and it being found that the expense is great or the result unsatisfactory, the road itself should not thereby be condemned. That is what I want to provide against. It is certain that we have a practical and safe harbour at Churchill.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think it would cost almost as much to do what I propose doing at Nelson as it would at Churchill. I was at both places and it is shallow out a long piece and there is no channel at Churchill. I think it would cost at much at Churchill as it would at Nelson, and of course it would take a great deal to build the railway eighty-five miles further.

Mr. OLIVER: It would certainly cost more to build the railway to Churchill. I am not quarreling with the minister because he is making an attempt at Nelson. I appreciate the advantages of Nelson if it is practicable, but I want to guard against the supposition that Nelson is the only alternative.

Mr. COCHRANE: I understand that.

Mr. OLIVER: I am pointing out that there are certain difficulties at Nelson and I would be glad to see them overcome. If they are not satisfactorily overcome and if they cannot be, then there is no doubt that a practical port can be found at Churchill. One point in connection with Churchill is that it is more directly accessible to the Peace river country than is Nelson. When the Peace River country is developed, Churchill would be the natural port for that country, and it would give the Peace river wheat region closer access to the ocean, that than Manitoba has to-day, and thus cheapen the cost of the transportation of the product of that country.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is a very barren place?

Mr. OLIVER: No doubt, but still the isothermal lines in the western part of the central country run far north, so that directly west of Churchill is a wheat-growing country when you reach the Peace river. How many miles of the railway are actually under grading at present?

Mr. COCHRANE: The bridge across the Saskatchewan river was unfortunately only finished last month and they only commenced this month to lay the track. I have not a report as to the number of miles of track laid. I think the grading is done for 100 and some odd miles; we hope to have the rails on the first 185 miles this fall.

Mr. OLIVER: Will the work be opened up beyond that point this summer?

Mr. COCHRANE: They have provisions in to work on any rock work there may be found there.

Mr. OLIVER: How many men are employed?

Mr. COCHRANE: Speaking from memory the last report said there were between 400 and 500 men.

Mr. OLIVER: Are there any heavy bridges on that 185 miles?

Mr. COCHRANE: There are quite a number of bridges, but I do not think any large ones.

Mr. GRAHAM: Lest my silence might be construed that I have lost faith in this work, I may say that I have still faith it will be a practicable and profitable undertaking and if I had not I would not have committed the country to the expenditure. I would go so far as to say that the railway should be constructed even if it had not any steamship connection to Europe. Railways have been constructed in different parts of Canada where there is far less prospect of doing business than in connection with this project. From what I know of the country and the prospect of traffic from the bay I would be in favour of building the line even if there were no ocean ports there at all. I always favoured Nelson from the information I had in the department, and that view seems to be confirmed. If the traffic is to assume any dimensions at all—and unless the department were satisfied it will, they would not go to the expense of having very costly terminal facilities there—if the traffic is to assume any proportions a good harbour is necessary, and from the information in the department the best harbour is to be found at Nelson, provided the difficulty referred to is overcome. I would not say that navigation would be opened for four and a half months, but it has always been my opinion that it will be open for between three and a half and four months, and even at that it will relieve the congestion very materially.

And I would like to point out to the doubting Thomases this: they refer to grain only; but the dairymen and stock raisers of eastern Canada may well keep in mind the fact that that part of the West is going to be a great dairying and stock-raising country. Nobody need tell me that stock that can be put on shipboard with a rail haul of two cool nights and one day and then taken by a cool route to Liverpool, will not be in better condition than if carried by a long rail haul. The amount saved in shrinkage would alone be a large item. All this must be taken into consideration when we are thinking about the effects of this route.

Mr. EDWARDS: And there is the import.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, there must be the return cargoes to the West. Even if we say that it is only for three, or three and a half, or four months in the year, I cannot see but that the expenditure will be in the interest of the people of Canada not only of the West but of the East as well. Is the minister any nearer to arrangements for a steamship connection than he was a year ago?

Mr. COCHRANE: That is hardly in my line. I have been urging it on the Government, but I do not know that much has been done. We shall have to subsidize a line—

Mr. GRAHAM: No doubt.

Mr. COCHRANE: And we shall have to give what some people regard as a heavy subsidy; but to have a proper test, this will have to be done. This is going to help out Nova Scotia and the East, especially in the shipping of steel rails to the West. There is a steamer haul of two thousand miles from Sydney to Nelson, and then a rail haul of six or seven miles would distribute over quite a large country in the West.

Mr. GRAHAM: Where are the rails purchased for this road?

Mr. COCHRANE: At Sault Ste. Marie. Of course on a shipment by way of Fort William, we get a much lower freight rate than the other way. Until we get a wharf and a track and have other facilities for handling freight, the rates by the other way would be very high, because handling freight by lightering it out in small boats is very expensive. I think I am safe in saying that it takes $3 to do what $1 would do with proper facilities.

Mr. OLIVER: Are the wireless stations to be built this summer?

Mr. COCHRANE: The one at Port Nelson goes up on the first boat, and the one for Le Pas is ordered now. By means of these we can keep in touch and get information.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish to say a word in favour of the Hudson Bay railway, as I was a member of the Government which first encouraged this national undertaking. When the Canadian Pacific railway was started thirty years ago there were many doubting Thomases, and yet events have proven that it was a successful national undertaking. When the Grand Trunk Pacific was started under the leadership of the present leader of the Opposition there were many who predicted that it would be a huge failure, yet to-day we are not satisfied with two transcontinental lines but are building a third, and probably shall be asked within a day or so to help that third line. When the people of the West are clamouring for the construction of the Hudson bay railway, and when, according to the experts, there is a legitimate expectation that it will bring relief to that section of the country which is building up so rapidly, and which in twenty-five or thirty years will be the home of millions of people from all parts of the world, I think it is only fair that the Government should begin now to provide for the future. What I wanted to lay emphasis upon was this further fact that, when you have completed the Hudson Bay railway from the centre of the prairie region to the great sea of Hudson, when you have reached Port Nelson you will be face to face with this difficulty that the straits will be kept open only for a limited period of the year.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think that has been definitely settled.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It has not been dealt with definitely, and I do not suppose it will be in the near future. It is admitted, however, that the straits cannot be kept open for a long period of time. Once the grain has reached the shores of Hudson bay, if the straits are closed up, I believe the next best thing to do is to build a railway from the head of James bay to Montreal, tapping the Transcontinental at Cochrane.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, it would be farther east of Cochrane.

Mr. LEMIEUX: East of Cochrane, and from there to Montreal or Quebec, then working in conjunction with the existing main lines in this section of the country. The Hudson bay itself—I am not speaking of the straits—is navigable for at least eight months in the year, according to the reports. Grain can be shipped more cheaply by water than by rail. You can certainly save a large amount of money on big shipments of grain via the Hudson bay from Port Nelson to the head of James bay. If you have a railway from James bay to Montreal or Quebec, which will put this whole railway system in communication with the eastern parts of Canada you have found the key, the solution to the transportation problem of Canada during summer and winter. I hope the hon. minister will look favourably upon that project.

The legislature of the province of Quebec has heavily subsidized that section of our transportation system between James bay and Montreal. It will develop the resources of northern Quebec and I think, at least incidentally, part of northern Ontario. That region, which I had the advantage of visiting last summer, strikes me as being very rich and capable of a vast development. The government of the province of Quebec has opened up new townships in that region, and already a large number of settlers have gone there. The reports received so far are most favourable. This railway system from James bay to Montreal, working in conjunction with the Hudson bay railway is bound to be a great success in the near future. That is why I vote, without any hesitation, the necessary moneys for the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. I care not whether it benefits the West; I sincerely believe it will benefit the country as a whole. What benefits the West, benefits the East. For my part, as a member of the late Government, I claim some credit for having with my colleagues shaped the policy in favour of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. If the present Government will continue in our footsteps, I will say 'Yea' with great pleasure.

Mr. KYTE: Will the hon. minister give me some information with respect to the expropriation of land at St. Peter's canal? The minister was good enough to place the file in my hands. I cannot understand, however, why the award made by O'Dwyer, who was sent down by the department to value those lands, was revised by three men in the town of St. Peter's, all of whom are personal and political friends of Mr. J. A. Gillies, the defeated Conservative candidate, who owned the land. The hon. minister stated to me last year that, if the owner of the land was not content with the valuation placed on it by that gentleman, the matter would have to go to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. COCHRANE: I sent Mr. O'Dwyer down there as he had done good work as valuator for the Intercolonial. When his report came in, I thought it was high, just as the hon. gentleman stated in the House, and so I apointed the others. Their award was very little less than Mr. O'Dwyer's. I was aware, when the second award came in, that we would have been in a difficult position had we gone to the Exchequer Court at that time, because they could have summoned these men and produced their valuation. I have in the supplementary estimates a sum for a valuator of the department, whom we can send around. He has been working on the Intercolonial and has done good service. He will soon have completed his work there.

Mr. KYTE: Will the hon. minister tell me who recommended those valuators at St. Peter's?

Mr. COCHRANE: I cannot give the information at present, I could look it up in the department.

Mr. KYTE: I presume these appointments would come through the person having the patronage in the county of Richmond?

Mr. COCHRANE: Absolutely no.

Mr. KYTE: The recommendation would rather suggest that.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. OLIVER: How long will it be before the road will be completed to the bay?

Mr. COCHRANE: They have taken the contract to complete it next year. From the progress they have made I question whether it will be finished then or not.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a reasonable prospect of its being completed by 1915?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any mention of reaching Split Lake in advance of railway construction?

Mr. COCHRANE: I think there is a way up. They go up Lake Winnipeg; there is a chain of lakes which they use in order to strike the railway very near there. I think Split Lake will probably be the next point to which they will move their headquarters in the fall.

Mr. OLIVER: Have the locations of the terminals at the Falls been decided upon?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, on the south side.

Mr. OLIVER: Are they acquired from the Indian reserve?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, the Indians are being given valuation on their property. I hope it will not be too high. I do not think their land is worth much.

Mr. OLIVER: The question has been raised here in regard to the cost of this railroad, the charge upon the treasury. Some years ago the principle of pre-emptions was introduced into the western country, with the understanding that the fund accruing from the sale of pre-emptions would be considered as an extra source of revenue from which the Hudson Bay railway might be constructed. There was no ear-marking of money received. When the policy of sale of pre-emption was introduced, it was introduced with the understanding that a new source of revenue was being created which would relieve the general treasury from the cost of the Hudson Bay railway. Therefore the treasury of Canada is not finding the money for building the railway. It is the land of the Northwest and the price that is being paid for that land that is building the Hudson Bay railway; and enough money is being taken out of pre-emptions in the West to pay for that railway. I think it is just as well to have that statement made.

Mr. COCHRANE: The road will be built anyway.

Mr. OLIVER: I want to relieve the assertion that the road constitutes a serious charge upon the finances of the country. As a matter of fact, it does not. Another point was that the grain that was raised in a certain year cannot go forward by the Hudson bay route during the same calendar year. That is measurably true, but it is also true with regard to grain going forward by the St. Lawrence route. Only a portion of the year's crop goes forward during the calendar year in which it is grown. I think it is safe to say that by far the larger part goes forward after having lain in storage not less than four, five, six or seven months. Therefore the disadvantage of the Hudson bay route in that particular is not serious. The disadvantage of navigation of Hudson straits is spoken of. Surely Hudson straits are more easily navigable during their proper season of navigation than the straits of Belle Isle. The straits of Belle Isle are three or four miles across while the Hudson straits are from forty miles to one hundred miles across. Yet an enormous traffic goes through the straits of Belle Isle when they are open. It is dangerous but it is short and much traffic is handled that way. In the Hudson straits there are disadvantages but they cannot be as great as in Belle Isle and the shortness in distance compensates for the disadvantages. The Hudson bay route was for two hundred years the only route by which could be reached what is now our prairie west and if it was adequate for the purposes of that trade during that time with the means of navigation that then existed, surely it will be of advantage under present conditions where the needs are so very great and the means of navigation have so greatly improved. In any case, it is a matter that may be talked about interminably without any conclusion being reached. The only way in which the question will ever be solved will be by laying the rails from the wheat fields to the bay, and the sooner the rails are laid to the bay the better for the country and the greater the credit to this Government.

Mr. COCHRANE: I think the greatest difficulty that navigators will experience will be drift ice and fog. I do not think the straits ever freeze over, from all the information I can get, but the raft ice and fog during a portion of the year are very bad. You cannot do much even with wireless where you have ice. If it was only fog, if the straits were free of ice, you could have wireless stations and guide the steamers up through the straits but where you have both it will be very difficult.

Mr. GRAHAM: We will go on with these estimates to-morrow?

Mr. ROGERS: I think we will take up the militia estimates and the Justice Department estimates to-morrow. An understanding to that effect has been reached between the whips.

Mr. CARVELL: Could the Justice Department estimates be taken up, as I want to be present when the militia estimates are taken up, and I have to attend the Railway committee for some time in the morning.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: We have been accustomed to having an interim report of the Transcontinental commission, giving the work up to date on the construction of the line. We will expect that information from the minister when these estimates are taken up. On the item for the Welland canal, I presume the Minister of Public Works will be able to announce the policy of the Government in connection with the Georgian Bay canal. These questions will surely be asked and pressed and I wanted to give notice.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 27, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at eleven o'clock.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DOHERTY moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 236, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Explain.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Bill relates to three matters in connection with prisons and reformatories. The first clause amends the law relating to Ontario and enables an indefinite sentence to be inflicted of not more than two years. It is most important that there should be power in the case of persons sentenced to reformatories to either shorten or extend the sentence in accordance with the condition of the prisoner, so that where a person is speedily reformed he may be at once released and put in a position where he can establish himself as a good citizen, and in other cases that the sentence should be prolonged within reasonable limits so that reform may be effected. The principle of this has already been established, for instance, in the case of British Columbia in the Act of last session 1912, chapter 43, section 146.

The next amendment relates to the province of Prince Edward Island. In that province there is no reformatory, and this clause is to enable the province to make an agreement with the adjoining provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for the care and custody of offenders sentenced to a reformatory.

The next clause is the addition of part 9, which is to cover the case of a Protestant reformatory for girls which is on the point of being established jointly for the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. This legislation does not provide anything with respect to this reformatory that has not already been established with respect to the reformatories for other provinces.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 234, for the relief of Lenore Power.—Mr. MacNutt.

Bill No. 235, to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio, and other States.—Mr. Fripp.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Mr. Doherty, it was ordered that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend The Penitentiary Act, and to provide that the salaries payable to officers and employees of penitentiaries shall not exceed the rate in the following schedule, namely:—Warden, with quarters heated and lighted, $2,800; deputy warden, with quarters heated and lighted, $1,800; surgeon, $1,700; superintendent of insane ward, $1,000; accountant, chief clerical officer, $1,600; clerical assistants, $1,200; chaplains, to give exclusive service to the prison, $1,200; chaplains, with permission to take outside work, $900; chief keeper, $1,200; chief watchman, $1,200; steward, $1,200; assistant stewards, $900; hospital nurse, $1,000; assistant hospital nurse, $900; matrons, with quarters heated and lighted, $700; engineer and electrician, $1,300; assistant engineers, $1,000; chief trade instructor, $1,200; industrial guards, to act as instructors, $1,000; watchmen, $900; guards, $800; day firemen, $800; night firemen, without uniform, $900; temporary and probationary officers $100 less than the schedule rate for permanent officers.

Provided, that the above schedule shall not affect prejudicially the existing salary, or the eligibility to gratuity of any officer in the penitentiary service at the date of its adoption.

RUSSIAN IMMIGRANTS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. VERVILLE: Has the Government any information respecting the fifty-five Russians who were ill-treated at Moosejaw?

Mr. BORDEN: In replying to the hon. member for Moosejaw, who referred to this some time ago, I inadvertently fell into an error. I stated that no communication with respect to the matter had been addressed to me. I found afterwards on inquiry that a day or two before, a resolution had been sent to me, and it had been transmitted at once by my secretary to the Department of Labour for inquiry as to what they knew about it, and whether there had been any investigation. I have since learned from my colleague, the Minister of Labour, that the department did make some investigation through their officials as to the facts alleged, and I believe the circumstances as detailed in the resolution are, according to the information which has come to me from the Department of Labour, exaggerated. I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of Labour, to make a statement to the House with regard to it to-morrow. I regret that I have been guilty of inadvertence in replying to the hon. member for Moosejaw, but the fact that the resolution had come to me was not present in my mind; as a matter of fact, I think it was sent at once to the Department of Labour without having been specially laid before me.

EQUALITY OF FREIGHT RATES.

On the motion of the Right Hon. R. L. Borden for Committee of Supply:

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I intend to bring before this House a matter of supreme importance to this country and especially to the people of the West; that is, the present inequality of freight rates that exists as between the West and the East. I have spoken on this matter three or four times this session, and I had expected that a Bill amending the Railway Act would have been brought down and that an opportunity would there be presented of having an amendment, declaring for equality of railway rates and of other railway charges, within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, inserted in the Act. I had also hoped that probably some of the members from the West might have made a proposition in this direction on going into supply. But, as the House is now approaching prorogation, and as the question is of supreme importance to the people of the West, I propose not only to bring the attention of the House to this condition of affairs but to ask the House to declare that it is of the opinion that there should be no discrimination as between the East and the West. I am not going into the details of the question now, for they have been presented to the House time and again. I have presented them on many occasions, and so have other members, and the journals of public opinion in the West have expressed their views, and a very prominent declaration of opinion has recently been put on record by the Board of Trade of Winnipeg.

I think I can bring the matter to the attention of the House in a very few words by saying that in my view legislation and progress are sometimes a matter of strategy, and that inasmuch as the Canadian Pacific railway has taken advantage, as I believe, of Parliament, and advantage of the Government in increasing its capital stock as it did last year; and inasmuch as the Grand Trunk railway have been here for relief, and inasmuch as I believe there may be a proposition in connection with the Canadian Northern this session, to my mind in such opportunity Parliament should assert itself and secure from these great companies concessions in the direction of equality of railway charges in the West with the charges now imposed in the East. The Canadian Pacific railway is enormously rich; its charges are high and it can well afford to reduce them. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway was built for the very purpose of creating competition and reducing rates; the same policy was announced in connection with the construction of the Canadian Northern, and when we have them before us in Parliament, asking favours of one kind or another, we should demand that they should give some concessions to the people. The people of the West feel that they are not getting justice because the railway rates in the West are higher than they are in the East. Our railroads are national roads; they have been subsidized by all the people and therefore all the people should be treated equally. To my mind, even if the cost of operation were higher in the West than in the East, I would still be of the opinion that there ought to be equality of charges. These people have contributed as much in the West as they have in the East; all the proposals for relief that may go through this House will have to be made good by the people of the West together with the rest of the people of Canada. Citizenship in Canada ought to involve equality of treatment in a national proposition, and especially where the national funds are called on or have been called on to aid any proposition. If the proposition is within the jurisdiction of Parliament, if it is subsidized by Parliament, if it is relieved time after time by Parliament, then I say Parliament should say that that corporation ought to give equality of treatment to all the people of Canada. To make that clear I shall read from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of Friday last. I am also going to read a short extract involving the declaration of the Winnipeg Board of Trade. The Winnipeg Free Press of last Friday says:

The Free Press has all along contended that as the first step towards the remedying of the injustice of the railway rates in the west the Dominion parliament should in a formal enactment establish the principle that there must be equality in the rates in all parts of the Dominion, save and except where the railway companies show that in any section of the country there are differences of density of traffic and of costs of maintenance and operation, justifying higher rates. This applies equally, of course ,to express and telegraph rates.

I do not accept that principle of the Winnipeg Free Press that because there is density or absence of density of traffic there should be discrimination. I have already stated there should be equality of treatment, inasmuch as all the country contributes to these railways and that citizenship should involve equal treatment throughout the entire length and breadth of the Dominion. The Free Press then goes on to deal with the matter that I brought up in this House a short time ago, namely, the proposal of the Minister of Railways to increase the salary of the Chief Commissioner of the Railway Board. I said that I was in favour of that; but I took the opportunity of drawing the attention of the House to the inequality of railway rates. The Free Press goes on to say:

The laying down of the principle of equality would not be a complicated business at all. It would be simplicity itself. The thing could be done in a couple of dozen words. All that would be necessary would be to draft a declaration of the principle of equality and have it incorporated in the Railway Act. The principle has been set forth several times in the Free Press during the past few years.

It is very well set forth in the closing paragraph of the resolution recently passed by the Winnipeg Board of Trade in regard to the reported application of the Canadian Northern to the Dominion Government for further financial assistance to the extent of some $35,000,000. That resolution, after stating that the rates in the West are higher than the rates in the East, and are excessive charges for the services performed and constitute a heavy burden on the people of the West, concludes as follows:

I want to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers) and the members from the West to what the finding of the Winnipeg Board of Trade is in regard to this inequality of treatment:

Therefore, be it resolved that the Winnipeg Board of Trade hereby petition the Government of Canada and respectfully urge (without expressing any opinion as to whether aid should be given by the Government or not) that in the event of it being considered expedient by the Government to grant the Canadian Northern Railway Company financial aid in connection with the construction of its lines, such assistance be given only on the condition that the rates charged for the carriage of freight between points upon the Canadian Northern west of Port Arthur be reduced to an equality with rates charged by railways in Eastern Canada for similar services, except in so far and to such extent as the railway company may be able to establish higher cost of operation in the west.

That is the resolution of the Winnipeg Board of Trade. While it specifically deals with the case of the Canadian Northern railway, it asserts the principle that there should be equality. The Free Press goes on to say:

What the member for South York urged on the Minister of Railways and the Government was simply the insertion in the Railway Act of a clause in general terms, declaring that the priniple enunciated in the closing lines of the above closing paragraph of the Winnipeg Board of Trade resolution in regard to Canadian Northern rates shall apply to all railway rates. It would be no Herculean labour to draft such a clause. There would be no need to consider a single item in a single railway rate, much less 230,000 railway rates.

I believe this resolution expresses the views of all the people of the West. The western roads have been built at smaller cost rather than at higher cost. I do not believe the cost of operation in the West is greater than in the East. If this resolution expresses the opinion of the people of the West, it ought to be put before the House, and the opinion of the House taken on this great question.

I have no faith, nor has the Winnipeg Free Press faith, in any general relief coming from the Board of Railway Commissioners. They are engaged in examining 230,000 individual tariff rates; they are taking months to do so, and they will take months more. If they do anything this year, all that they will give will be small measure of relief. Parliament ought to come to the assistance of the Railway Commission and declare that there shall be equality as between East and West. When the Board are in possession of that principle, they can easily find what fair and equitable rates should be, and then they can apply them to the whole country without discrimination. The railway policy of this country is not to be framed up by the Board of Railway Commissioners. The jurisdiction is in Parliament and Parliament ought to lay down this principle of equality in treatment. When that principle is declared by Parliament, it may be necessary for the Railway Commission slightly to increase rates in the East in order to give fair treatment to the West. If that is to be done, it should be done immediately. Why should this stigma rest upon the people of the West that they must pay higher rates than the people of the East pay? No member from the West will say that it is fair treatment for the West to be under the bondage of paying higher rates than the people of the East pay. My motion does not involve any loss of revenue to the railways, but it says that the railway rates as imposed shall be equally distributed as between East and West. Therefore it involves no unfair treatment to the railways. This principle of equality in charges applies not only to telegraph and telephone charges but to express charges as well as other tolls. Railway passenger rates to-day are on an equality. The maximum rate to-day by a declaration of the Railway Board is three cents a mile. Why not have the same thing inserted in regard to freight and all these other charges? The railways are making more money at the present time in the West than in the East. None of them are complaining of lack of business; they are all overworked. I am not arguing for lower rates in the West; but, if it should be the case that the two weaker roads would be at a loss by a reduction of rates in the West, Parliament ought to find some means of making up the loss to these roads in order to work out this principle of equality.

I cannot put the case more clearly before the House than I have done. I have spoken about it time after time and session after session. I have been waiting to see the relief come, but it does not come. The question of freight rates has been sent to the Board of Railway Commissioners and they are probably dealing with it as best they can, but they are dealing with it without the guiding principle before them.

We have delegated to them the question of dealing with railway matters in a large measure, but we have not delegated to them the right to frame the general policy of the Railway Act and of the Railway Commission in regard to equality of treatment. I trust to have the support of the entire House in this declaration of equality of treatment in connection with railways. My motion is very short. I have made no arrangements with anybody, and I do not know whether I shall get a seconder or not. I hope some member from the West will second my motion. It is a hard thing for a member in my position to bring up a question, which has such a widespread interest, and on which there may be a wide divergence of opinion between the two parties. I beg to move:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: 'That in the opinion of this House there should be no discrimination as between East and West in the tolls for freight or any other service within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.'

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX: I shall be glad to second the motion.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): I quite appreciate the courage of my hon. friend in ploughing a lonely furrow so far as his own side of the House is concerned. As he knows, I have been supposed to have done some little work in that line myself and it is not always an agreeable position. He says it is a hard thing for him to move an amendment like this in his present situation. I have always thought my hon. friend's situation was a little illogical, because he is a natural born radical. He reminds me of the well known character of one of Molière's plays, Jourdain, who was talking prose all his life without knowing it. I can quite appreciate that it is a hard thing for him to have come to the help of the western farmers in his own present political Egypt. We are, as he recognizes, suffering under a disability in the West in this matter of freight rates. I would point out that it is not the only disability under which we suffer, and I am afraid that we are so used to being called on to make bricks without straw that we shall cease to repine from sheer inanition if we are not stirred up occasionally by some radical like my hon. friend. I have great hope of my hon. friend, he is a man with his eyes wide open and watches the turn that political events have taken. He has good blood in him. I believe it is a fact that his father was the pioneer, from his point of view, of the protective policy in this country. He saw what they were doing in the United States and he said: from our nearness to the United States, protection, if it is a good thing there, must be a good thing here. I am quite sure my hon. friend has his eyes open and sees that United States are going the other way now and he will not be dishonourable to his father's memory if he becomes the pioneer of free trade in Canada because United States are going in that direction. I interject these remarks in the question of railway rates in order to point out that there are more kinds of bondage than one. We may be in bondage to the railway companies, but we have another kind of bondage and I want my hon. friend to give free play to his radical proclivities and show that he is a man of independence and a good Canadian, and to cross the floor of the House and join another radical like himself and then we radicals will go all abreast like the horses of the sun.

At this stage of the session I do not wish to hold up the House for any length of time, but I should say it was so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, may see the truthfulness of it, that there ought not to be any difference between freight rates in the East and in the West, there should not be any discrimination. The way to build up a great empire is not to divide Canada whether on a naval question in the provinces or a fiscal and railway question in the provinces. The way to get imperial unity is by means of Canadian unity, and if we can have Canadian unity in regard to freight rates I am sure the western members will give my hon. friend any credit that is coming to him for having been the pioneer on the subject. I wanted to say these few words to encourage my hon. friend in the development of very hopeful symptoms which I see breaking out in him.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): I wish to support the motion of my hon. friend, and give him all credit for the course which he has taken, so far as he has taken it. I think, however, he was hardly fair in giving the impression that the western members in the House had not taken due interest in this matter during this session.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): I hope the hon. member will pardon me; I did not attempt to impute any such thing. I appreciate what he said and the speeches that have been made in that direction.

Mr. OLIVER: In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I wanted to say that this question was brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), and supported in the House by several other members, in the only manner in which it could be brought before the House at that time and in that condition of the business of the session. It has been a long and very strenuous session up to date; it is not possible to attend to every matter that may require attention even during the period of a very long session, and I think it will be generally agreed that at this particular stage of the session, if there is not a larger representation of western members present in the House and prepared to take part in this debate it is not to be imputed to them as blame. The western member, by reason of his distance from home, absolutely sacrifices his business during the period of the parliamentary session, whereas the member who resides in the nearer parts of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec is able, under stress, to keep up his own business at least to some extent while attending to his parliamentary duty. Therefore, the length of the session is not so material to, say, one half the members of this House who live within a twelve or fifteen-hour run by rail from Ottawa. The length of the session is not so serious to these gentlemen in the discharge of their business as it is to the gentlemen who come from the far western constituencies and particularly from the prairie west where there are just two seasons, spring and fall, and if a man is not on hand to attend to his business in the spring and fall he has not any business in the intervening season. So I say if we have not that fuller discussion of this matter that my hon. friend would like on this occasion, from western men it is a condition of circumstances that cannot be avoided. I do not wish to impute to my hon. friend any blame. He has brought forward the matter probably as early as it was possible to bring it forward and for my own part I am entirely in sympathy with the idea of bringing it forward as a substantive motion. I am further in favour of actually voting on it. I do not wish to recriminate, but the House will remember that when my hon. friend brought a similar motion before the House at the last session it was not brought to a vote. However, there is no question about the importance of this matter to the western people and to the eastern people as well, and it is from that point of view that I wish to discuss it for a few moments.

On the great products of the West the export rates, I think, are generally admitted to be reasonable or measurably reasonable. They are special rates especially provided so as to enable the great products of the plains to be marketed profitably to the producer and also to the transportation interests. It is not in regard to those rates that complaint is being made at the present moment, it is in regard to the rates on merchandise and produce—on what might be called the interior rate on merchandise and produce. But as the carriage of freight under those rates consitutes a large part of the business of the railway companies and these rates give them a very considerable amount of revenue, the question of what those rates are to be is important both to the people and to the railway companies. Let it not be misunderstood; it is not a question of export rates on wheat or cattle that is at issue.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): Except on the ocean.

Mr. OLIVER: It is principally the interior rates that are in question at the present time. The contention is that the interior rates in the West are higher than the interior rates in the East. On that point my hon. friend calls for a declaration of principle by Parliament. I had the honour to say, at last session of Parliament, that I believed with him that Parliament was the proper authority to make that declaration, and that it was a responsibility that Parliament had no right to lay upon the Railway Commisison. But there is this view: Does not the Railway Act as it stands to-day declare for equality of rates? Is not that the specific and fundamental principle of the Railway Act?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): I think so.

Mr. OLIVER: Then, if that is the fact, and I believe it to be the fact; and I certainly am aware that it was the principle that Parliament believed to have been embodied in the Act at the time it was passed —then, there has been a failure on the part of the commission, or of the Government, or of the commission with the Government, in not seeing to it that the principles of the Act were enforced. Now, I am not going to blame either the commission or the Government because that has not been done. A certain condition did exist, and they found it in existence. Western rates were higher than eastern rates, and the Administration with the commission has acknowledged that condition without undertaking to remedy it; they accepted that condition and carried on under it, though it was contrary to the principle of the Act. But, I say the time has come, in my judgment, when Parliament can no longer consider that it is discharging its responsibilities to the country if it does not by declaration compel the Government —if that is the proper word—and instruct the commission as to what Parliament intends shall be done in this matter.

What should interest eastern Canada in this question of Parliament and the railway rates, and nondiscrimination in railway rates,—the traffic that is really important in relation to the business of Canada considered as a whole—is not altogether the export rate on products from western Canada; it is not altogether the internal rate either in eastern or western Canada. May I suggest to our eastern friends that to them more especially the important question of railroad rates is the question of rates that carry the products of their industry and their merchandise to the markets of the West. Let me suggest that as the question of railroad rates of greatest interest to them. It is that feature of the railroad rates that either builds up a united Canada or breaks Canada in half.

Now, let me show my manufacturing friends and those engaged in merchandising here in eastern Canada that under existing conditions the railway company—there is only one at the present time, but we hope to have two more very shortly, though when we have two more the condition will be just the same as it is to-day, unless Parliament exercises its authority—the railway company charges transportation rates on eastern goods to western markets adjusted with a view to the railway company absorbing as large a proportion of the tariff protection as it is possible for them to do and still keep the business going. I say to the manufacturers of eastern Canada that the protection that they see in the tariff as it stands to-day is absorbed in large degree, as a matter of system and principle, by the railway company; the railway company gets it, and they do not. I hope I have been able to impress that idea upon our friends here.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): They share it.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, but the manufacturers think they get it all now. They do not get it all; I doubt very much if they get half of it. I say it is a matter of principle, it is one of the foundation facts upon which the railway companies establish their tariffs, that they take the benefit of as much of the customs tariff as they are able to take. And there is no way by which our friends in eastern Canada are able to protect themselves against that condition, except by the exercise of the authority of Parliament.

Mr. LALOR: Is there any discrimination between the freight rate coming East and the freight rate going West for the same distance?

Mr. OLIVER: I could not say as to that. But my friend will understand that the rates on the great export products of the West are fixed on a special basis for export purposes, and eastern Canada has the benefit of these export rates on these great products.

Mr. LALOR: It was not to the export rate that I alluded. For instance, would the rate from Toronto to Calgary on the same commodity be the same as from Calgary to Toronto? I was wondering if there was a discrimination in that.

Mr. OLIVER: The hon. gentleman's comparison does not hold, because the article that is the product of Toronto is not the product of Calgary. Therefore, a tabulated rate that would show the same for the Toronto product to Calgary as for the Calgary product to Toronto would have no meaning or effect. I am taking this opportunity to state the fact, the outstanding fact, which I do not think our industrial and commercial population of eastern Canada understand, I am taking this opportunity of placing it before them strongly—that the railway company as it exists at the present time fixes its rate with a view to absorbing to the benefit of the company as large a share of the tariff protection in regard to each particular industry as it is possible for them to absorb. The result of that is that, especially in heavy manufactures or heavy goods which are produced in the United States in territory very much farther west than eastern Canada and therefore much nearer to the markets of the prairie west, these manufacturers in the United States get an advantage over the eastern manufacturer because of that adjustment of freight rates. I want that great outstanding fact to sink into the minds of our friends from eastern Canada on both sides of the House, because they may have been at some loss to know why they were hit, as they have been hit, by imports from the western states into the Canadian Northwest. That is one important and outstanding reason, and the higher the tariff is raised the higher the railroad rate will be raised. The outstanding feature that I want to keep before the House is that as regards trade between eastern and western Canada, the tariff means tariff for the railroad, as much as for the eastern manufacturer, and probably a good deal more.

In regard to the question of the rates on railroads in the West, I would think that the question of density of population is not a factor to be considered. I would consider that cost of construction or cost of operation might fairly be considered, but I do not think that density of population should be considered. Where the population is sparse, is where there is an opportunity to build up, and in order that business and population may build up in those regions there must be reasonable rates. To establish high rates simply gives the railroads running through unoccupied country the means of keeping that country unoccupied, which is not the intention of the constructors of the road, or the desire of anybody concerned. I do say that where there has been excessive cost of construction, or where the cost of operation is excessive, that the railway company might reasonably be entitled to greater rates.

However, I desire to support the motion of my hon. friend because I believe it is an established fact that the foundation principle of the Railway Act as it stands to-day is not being lived up to, so far as western Canada is concerned, and without blaming the Railway Commission, without blaming the Government for that, I say that here and now is the time and place for the people of Canada to assert, direct, and give their mandate that the principle of the Railway Act in regard to equality of freight rates shall be maintained. That principle has already been established in regard to passenger rates; it is more important that it should be established in regard to freight rates, and it is upon the shoulders of the members of this House of Commons that the responsibility rests, and not upon the shoulders of the Railway Commission.

Mr. F. N. McCREA (Sherbrooke): In the matter of equality of rates, there is certainly room for complaint and for a remedy, but the inequality of rates is not, I think, the only and most serious inequality. The inequality of treatment is perhaps more serious than the inequality of rates. I am not quite prepared to say that we should have uniform rates in all parts of say eastern Canada as against western Canada. In the unpopulated parts of this country it would be hardly reasonable to expect the same passenger rates as in the settled parts of the country where there are large cities. What I desire to speak of however, is the inequality of treatment, as between competing points on railways and noncompeting points. I am connected with several industries, the lumber trade and the pulp trade, and consequently am a very heavy shipper, and my experience is, and I shall speak from experience just now, that the great grievance, is in the treatment given to shippers at non-competing points as against competing points. If we want two cars or a dozen cars to ship from a competing point, we would not have to go and ask the railway company for them. They are out catering for the business at these competing points, and there is no season in the year when they are not prepared to furnish cars on twenty-four hours' notice, or less. But at other points, where there is no competition, we can wait a month for cars. Personally I am a shipper of timber, and square timber, when ready for shipment, is almost as perishable as fruit because if left long exposed to sun and weather it becomes cracked and weather beaten, is not merchantable when it reaches the market. The only remedy we have is to say to the railway companies unless you give us cars to ship our goods you will not get any business from us at competing points. By using this threat we generally succeed in getting cars, but I do not know how it is with the poor fellow whose business is entirely at noncompeting points. I think that this is a question that the Government of this country should take up and deal with. There does not seem to me to be any reason why a railway company can supply cars on twenty-four hours' notice at competing points, and cannot supply them at noncompeting points within a reasonable time. This is a point which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has not touched upon, but it is a condition from which the public are suffering more than from the inequality of rates. For my part, I would quickly pay one or two cents additional per hundred if I could get a car when I wanted it in preference to having goods damaged by delay in for cars. When goods are not merchantable when they reach the market, it becomes a serious question.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). It is one of the advantages of a periodical change of Government that translation from right to left in this House brightens the minds of so many hon. gentlemen and makes them conscious of long outstanding facts of which, for a long period, they appear to have been utterly unconscious. I am delighted indeed to hear a member of the late Government (Mr. Oliver) champion equality of treatment between East and West. I am all the more delighted to hear it because it has always seemed to me strange that any western minister, like him, should have been content to rest so long in control of the administration of affairs, particularly with regard to the West, and to pay no attention to the representations made to him and to his colleagues in the Government for equal treatment.

With respect to the amendment now before the House, I may say that it was not because of any lack of sympathy with the suggestion that the hon. gentleman who has moved it found that he was ploughing a lonely furrow. He would have had no difficulty at all in securing a seconder, or supporters for a resolution of this kind, if it had been made at a time when it seemed to be with serious intent, instead of for the purpose of advertising. This is no new thunder which has been sprung upon the House to-day. This matter of the equalization of rates, and the securing of justice to shippers to and from the West, so far from not having received attention, has been receiving the most elaborate attention and is now before the Railway Commission, it having been presented in a most thorough way through the efforts of the boards of trade of British Columbia, in co-operation, I believe, with the boards of trade in various parts of the prairie provinces. We have strong hopes of success in our efforts before the Railway Commission, because we believe that if the Railway Commission find that the representations which we have made to them in an orderly and regular manner are justified, and that they lack the power to make such order as they desire to make, they will apply to Parliament in an authoritative way and ask Parliament for the necessary power. If they do, I am in strong hopes that such a request shall receive the support of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House.

The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has been rather careless in his concluding statement to the House, that passenger rates have already been equalized. If he had given the attention to the subject which anyone who was earnestly interested in the success of this movement might have been expected to give, he would have known that on the contrary passenger rates have not been equalized, but that the province of British Columbia suffers still from a disability to which it was subjected very many years ago, and that the railways are permitted to charge, and do charge, the extortionate rate of five cents per mile in British Columbia, whilst in eastern Canada the rate is three cents per mile. I would press upon the attention of the Government the advisability of removing the permission which the railway companies have to make that discrimination; and, further, the advisability of dealing with the subject of American railroads crossing the border into our Dominion and taking advantage of the Canadian law to charge in Canada rates which are double those charged on contiguous portions of their lines in the United States. I have in mind particularly the Great Northern railway line from Seattle to Vancouver, running for about twenty miles through the district that I represent. The company charges the full five cents per mile on the Canadian side of the border as against two cents per mile on the American side, notwithstanding the fact that the traffic is quite as great in Canada as it is in the United States, and notwithstanding the fact that the railway has no justification at all for this increase in the charge, except that the Canadian law permits it, and it takes full advantage of the law without any other reason whatever. I would call the attention of the minister to the fact that these abuses do exist, and I would suggest to him that this matter might very well be made the subject of serious consideration at the first opportunity on which Parliament can consider it. While we do not expect a change of this kind to be made as an amendment to Supply, we from the West are strongly in sympathy with the principles laid down by the mover of this amendment.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, before we leave this subject, I have just one or two words to say. First of all, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Taylor) has not in my judgment added very much to the case that has been made out in reference to the question that is before us for consideration. I do not think that I ever heard the hon. member for New Westminster rise to address this House that the chief substance of his argument was not this: You did not do it; why should you expect us to do it? The hon. gentleman says that this is no new question that is before us. The hon. gentleman is right; it is not a new question; it is not any newer than the oriental question in which my hon. friend was so interested when he sat on this side of the House, instead of where he sits at the present time. The railway question and the oriental question were questions upon which the hon. gentleman raised his voice very frequently in this House, but with reference to the oriental question the hon. gentleman has not a word to say. Perhaps it is too much to expect to hear from the hon. gentleman on that question now. Probably his voice gave out when a change of administration took place. His views changed with the change of position that his party made in this House.

With reference to the question brought up by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that the question is one of vital interest to the people of western Canada and to the people of Canada at large because that which affects the welfare of the West certainly affects the welfare of the East. If we are discriminated against, if the railways are taking away the prosperity of the people of the West, it is going to reflect very greatly upon the welfare of the manufacturing and other interests in eastern Canada. I am still of the opinion that the proper tribunal to deal with this question is the Board of Railway Commissioners. It is before them at the present time. I think that the present railway legislation does not give that board authority to deal with this question. If it does not give them that authority, then I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is the duty of this Parliament to give them the necessary power. I do not think it would be in the best interests of the House and the country that we should undertake the expert investigation necessary to determine the truth of this matter, the grounds upon which railways discriminate as between one part of the country and another. It is a matter for expert investigation. I have faith and confidence that if it is demonstrated that there is unfair discrimination in the freight rates as between the East and the West the Board of Railway Commissioners will deal with the matter in a way that will be satisfactory.

My complaint against the present Administration is that, as this matter has been referred to in this House before, they are not forcing the case forward for the consideration of the commission in the way they ought to. It has been discussed already and I do not propose to go over the same ground, but I do submit that if this Government were as anxious to see this case determined as they ought to be in the interest of the public, they would see that this now almost interminable delay in dealing with the question by the Railway Commissioners does not exist any longer. The hon. member for New Westminster speaks of the discrimination in passenger rates as between British Columbia and the rest of Canada. My hon. friend knows very well that about three years ago the McBride Government came into office as the result of a contract between them and the Canadian Northern Company. I wonder if the McBride Government, as political friends of my hon. friend, took precautions, when they were making that contract, to safeguard the rights and interests of the people both as concerning freight and passenger rates in that province. There is no question of doubt that the McBride Government have had their share of responsibility if there is a discrimination in that province as to passenger rates in British Columbia as compared with other provinces.

The hon. gentleman also complains of the fact that the American roads running into Canada charge a higher rate in Canada than they do in the United States. Of course they do. When they cross the boundary they are not under American law, and certainly if the Canadian railways are compelled to reduce their passenger rates the American roads in Canada will be compelled to do the same. I see no point in referring particularly to the American railroads and the differences in their charges in Canada as compared with their charges in the United States, because any change in tariff that is brought to bear on the Canadian railways, will affect the American roads operating in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): Our Canadian roads to-day are carrying people in Michigan, and other American states for two cents a mile while they are charging Canadians three cents a mile in Canada.

Mr. NEELY: I am quite aware of that fact, and I agree that if they can carry for two cents in the United States their rates in Canada are too high. The population is I believe denser in the states referred to by my hon. friend than in western Canada. I am not defending the tariffs in Canada on any of the railways, but I am simply pointing out in reference to the argument of the hon. gentleman from New Westminster that if the tariffs on the Canadian roads are altered, that will necessarily affect American railroads operating lines in Canada. This is a live question and my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) deserves the support of the House in the object he has in view, namely, the lowering of freight and passenger tariffs in Canada and the bringing about of equality between one part of Canada and the other. But I still hold the opinion I have always held, that the proper tribunal to settle the question is the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, within whose sphere it lies. If there is responsibility, that responsibility lies with the Government and with the Minister of Railways particularly to see that the dilly-dallying that has occurred up to the present on the part of counsel, representing the Government and the public before the commission, shall not be permitted to continue and to cause further delay. I trust that the Minister of Railways will see that his counsel will be asked to bring this matter to a speedy and, we trust, successful conclusion.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways): I am a little surprised that I got no notice of this motion. I was attending a meeting of the Railway Committee, considering some Bills that had been referred to us by the Senate, when this motion was made in the House, and I did not have an opportunity of listening to the remarks of the mover or of the seconder, and I only heard part of the address of the hon. member for Edmonton.

I can look upon this motion as nothing but a vote of want of confidence, not only in the Government, but in the Railway Commission. The rate question was discussed here nearly one whole day by gentlemen on both sides, and I then took the ground that there had not been any dilly-dallying or delay on the part of the commission. This is a bigger task to undertake than any of the members of this House realize. The chief commissioner told me that there are in the West 230,000 different tariff rates. We have an expert working on these rates, and we hope very shortly that the commission will be able to determine the matter and announce their finding. If there is not authority in the Act, then I agree with the member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) that we should put it in the Act. The commission is the proper place to decide this case; they have the expert officials competent to study out these things and decide the matter on the principle of justice.

As to the statement of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor), I certainly will bring that to the notice of the Government and make inquiry with respect to it, because I do not think the American railroads which come into this country should charge higher rates than they do in the United States.

One remark made by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was, I think not quite fair, when he said that through sparsely settled country rates should be as low as thickly settled country, because it cost the same amount anyway to run the trains. I think he is a little wide of the mark there. I cannot accept the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER: The Railway Commission has made certain reductions in express rates; did they reduce these express rates so that the rates in western Canada should be equal to the rates in eastern Canada?

Mr. COCHRANE: I understand they have not reduced the rates in the East at all. They found that in the East the expenses are going up and the receipts coming down. The experience of the parcel post system in the United States is that it has reduced the receipts of express companies by twenty-five per cent in less than six months, and when the Parcel Post Bill of the Postmaster General is passed, the same result may probably follow here. It was felt that the rates could not be lower in the East than they are today. I cannot tell what a comparison of the eastern and western freight rates would disclose, but I understand there was a reduction of twenty per cent in many instances west of lake Superior.

Mr. OLIVER: Then, notwithstanding the reduction in the West, the rates are still higher than in the East.

Mr COCHRANE.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply:

Administration of Justice—Salaries, $116,536.25.

Mr. DOHERTY: Any differences over last year are due to increases and some promotions under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MURPHY: There is an increase in the number of employees. Will the hon. minister explain that.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are six in the first division, sub-division B. That is the result, I think, of one promotion from one division to another. The first division, sub-division B, is where the increase is to be found. This is to provide additional clerical service particularly or entirely of stenographers and persons doing that class of work.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What salary does Mr. Beauchesne receive?

Mr. DOHERTY: His salary is fixed in the supplementary estimates at $2,800. He came in originally, temporarily, to do work in connection with pecuniary claims, and was paid $200 a month. His services have been found perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Mr. Beauchesne is a personal friend of mine and a confrere of the Bar of Montreal. If he were to confine his activities to the Justice Department, he has every reason to aspire to the higher ranks of the Civil Service. But, speaking frankly, I am informed that he does other work, work of a political nature. He is an excellent writer, as my hon. friend knows, and I am told that he is writing for the Conservative press and in the interest of his party. I do not know whether that is true or not. I am glad to see him in the Department of Justice and hope he will remain in the department and give his time to the work there. I make no charge against him, but simply say what I have heard, not with the intention of injuring him in any way. He has great ability and wide knowledge, especially of the law of the province of Quebec, and can be of great usefulness to the department. He is an excellent writer, as I have just said, as good a writer as he is a lawyer; but I hope he will give his time to the work of the department. I would be pleased to see him advanced to higher ranks in the department; but he must not be there to do political work.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no knowledge of his doing work outside of the department or of doing work of the kind the hon. gentleman mentions. However, from what I know from personal observation, as well as from reports presented to me by the deputy minister and the assistant deputy, Mr. Beauchesne is most diligent, and the work he does fully justifies the enconiums upon his abilty and knowledge of the law which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has given voice to. It certainly is to be expected that a gentleman in his position would devote his time to the service of the department, and the results of Mr. Beau-chesne's work would seem to indicate that he does so. I have no knowledge of his engaging in any other occupation.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Will the minister kindly give the names of the employees in the first division, sub-division A? The heading on twelve made 'The Department of Justice including the penitentiary branch,' I would like to know whether this includes the inspectors of penitentiaries. If so, I have some observations to make.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, the first division, sub-division A, includes the inspectors of penitentiaries.

Mr. WILSON: This would include the salaries of Mr. Douglas Stewart and Mr. G. W. Dawson. And I understand that a new inspector has been appointed, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. DOHERTY: There are only two inspectors, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Hughes. Mr. Dawson has recently been transferred to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. WILSON: I would repeat a suggestion that was talked over last session a good many times, that there should be an inspector familiar with the French language. My hon. friend is aware there are in the penitentiaries nearly two thousand convicts. There are nearly five hundred resident convicts in St. Vincent de Paul in my own riding, and I feel pretty sure that seventy-five per cent, certainly sixty per cent, of the convicts and also of the guards and other employees are not familiar with the English language at all. I know that inspectors Stewart and Dawson have sometimes great difficulty in cases that arise, and have had to employ the services of an interpreter. It seems to me that that is a very queer position. Disciplinary offences will sometimes cause severe punishment. The inspector is to decide and impose the punishment, and it may be a punishment of two, three, four, and even six months. I have received complaints on the part of convicts, and on the part of guards that they could not express themselves fluently in English, and some could not speak English at all, and the judgments delivered by the inspectors were sometimes not to the point. I would say—and I think in this I will be supported by the majority in this House—that, if not a French-Canadian, which I would prefer, at least a man should be appointed in the inspection department who is familiar with both languages.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think a great deal is to be said in favour of the hon. gentleman's suggestion. I may be allowed to say that the existing state of affairs I inherited from the Government which the hon. gentleman supported, which had two inspectors neither of whom spoke French. The hon. gentleman says that complaints have been made arising out of this condition. If complaint is made of injustice done through failure of the inspectors to understand French, or from any other cause, I should be pleased to have these cases brought to my notice and will do my best to rectify them. I realize the importance of what the hon. gentleman says of having an inspector or some similar officer qualified in the respect he mentions. I confess, I took the situation as I found it, and it did not occur to me to make a change. But now that he has brought it to my attention, I shall be pleased to consider to what extent it will be possible, for me, under the circumstances, to meet his suggestion.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): If I may be allowed to make another suggestion, it would be that the work of the inspectors is too great. It must not be forgotten that there are seven penitentiaries, and the inspector has to travel from New Westminster to Dorchester. I should favour the appointment of an inspector for each penitentiary, but, if that cannot be done, at least the number should be increased. Then it would be possible to appoint a man familiar with the French language, and I know his services would be appreciated and would be for the benefit of the administration of justice, for there are many convicts in every penitentiary who are more familiar with French than with any other language.

Mr. EDWARDS: I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Laval is deserving of consideration. My own opinion is that, instead of there being two inspectors, there should be three; and if there were three, I think his contention would be quite reasonable, that one of the three should be a man conversant with the French language. It often happens that in the administration of the penitentiaries it is found necessary for one of the inspectors to take the place of the warden for the time being. It requires no argument that, in the case of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, if this action were necessary the man to temporarily relieve the warden of that institution should be thoroughly conversant with the French language. I think the position taken is a very reasonable one, and while I would not like to see the number of English-speaking inspectors reduced, because most of the institutions are what might be called English-speaking, I think an additional inspector should be appointed, one thoroughly conversant with the French language.

Mr. MURPHY: Under what circumstances was Inspector Dawson transferred to the Public Works Department?

Mr. DOHERTY: The transfer was made because the qualifications which he possesses, a knowledge of building operations and things of that kind, qualified him particularly to be of greater usefulness in that department than in the particular department in which he was, although I am not reflecting in the slightest degree upon the performance of his duties as Inspector Dawson.

Mr. MURPHY: What are his duties in the Public Works Department?

Mr. DOHERTY: The Minister of Public Works could better give that information.

Item 32. Miscellaneous expenditure, $10,000.

Living allowance for judge of Atlin district, B.C., $1,200.

Mr. DOHERTY: These are amounts that have been voted in the successive years. The first is to provide under the head of miscellaneous expenditure for the cost of administration in the Northwest Territories as now constituted and in the unorganized territories, expenses incurred in connection with extradition and fugitive criminals, sundry small expenses which it is quite impossible to foresee accurately. $10,000 has usually been voted. In most years it is not all used but, of course, it is posssible that we might have exceptional circumstances requiring more in one year than in another. The $1,200 for the living allowance for the Atlin judge has also been allowed from year to year.

Mr. OLIVER: Did the minister say that in this item of miscellaneous was included the salary of judges in the unorganized territory?

Mr. DOHERTY: It is to provide for the administration of justice in the unorganized territory.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a judge or stipendiary magistrate there now?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not quite sure of that. There was a judge in the territory that has been annexed to the province of Manitoba but, of course, after that annexation, his office disappeared as the territory became a portion of the province of Manitoba. There may be expenses, the necessity of arresting a criminal or something of that sort, and that is covered by this vote.

At one o'clock, House resumed, and then took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock, and again went into Committee of Supply.

Appropriations not required for 1913-14, decrease, $300.

Yukon territory—travelling allowance of judge, $500.

Mr. DOHERTY: With regard to the Yukon territory, we have a very considerable decrease, because we have decreased the number of judges. There were three judges before; now there is only one. Last year we had $1,500 for travelling allowances; this year there is only $500. The living allowances for three judges last year amounted to $15,000; this year the amount is only $5,000. Then the amount for salaries of sheriff and deputy sheriff is reduced, because one of these officials has been dispensed with. Last year we passed an Act to provide for the reduction of judges, and apart from that we have reduced the number of officers.

Mr. PROULX: Is there the same necessity now for giving a living allowance of $5,000 to the judge in the Yukon as there was when the judges were first appointed? Since communications have improved there, the cost of living must have decreased.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no reason to suppose that there has been any material reduction in the cost of living. All the officers, not only in this department but in the other departments have this allowance, and unless we have evidence, which I certainly have not, of some substantial decrease in the cost of living, I hardly think we would be justified in withdrawing the allowance. They were appointed on the understanding that they were to have that allowance and I have no information that would justify me in concluding that there was reason for altering that arrangement.

alaries, territorial court, sheriff and clerk, $4 000 each; two stenographers, $2,000 each, $1 ,000.

Mr. OLIVER: That is a reduction of $1,800. Will the minister say how that reduction comes about?

Mr. DOHERTY: The officials of the court, as well as the judges, have been reduced in number.

Mr. OLIVER: What officers have been dispensed with?

Mr. DOHERTY: There was a sheriff and a deputy sheriff. We have dispensed with the deputy sheriff.

Living allowances of officers of Territorial Court and police magistrate, $8,600.

Mr. OLIVER: I suppose that reduction is because there are fewer officers?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: Has the police magistrate been dispensed with?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, we have still one police magistrate at White Horse.

Fees and expenses of witnesses, jurors, and interpreters in criminal trials, $5,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that reduction in the expectation of less judicial work?

Mr. DOHERTY: Because the business has decreased.

Transport of prisoners, $4,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a jail in the Yukon?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think prisoners are detained in the guard room of the mounted police barracks.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): What is the meaning of the transport of prisoners?

Mr. DOHERTY: The territory is very wide and when a man is arrested at any one place he has to be brought to the place where he can have his trial. If a man is sentenced to the penitentiary he would have to be transported to the British Columbia penitentiary as that is the institution that serves the purposes in that respect of the Yukon territory.

Miscellaneous expenditure including fees and expenses of crown prosecutors, salaries and living expenses of other employees connected with the administration of justice, coroners' inquests, &c., $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that a general reduction or is there any special change?

Mr. DOHERTY: This is merely a reduction because we found that the business had not increased and there was no necessity of asking for more than the amount appearing in the item.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there one crown prosecutor and how is he paid?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think the crown prosecutor is paid a salary. There is only one, if my memory serves me correctly. There are not more than four lawyers in the territory.

Dominion police, $104,000.

Mr. DOHERTY: The increase of $7,000 is due to the fact that we require an additional constable at the Royal Mint, an additional constable at the ticket of leave office, an additional constable at the criminal identification bureau and two additional constables at the National Art Gallery. That makes five constables at $1,000 each. The other $2,000 is made up of an increase in the pay of three inspectors of the detachment at Esquimalt. Twenty per cent is added to the ordinary pay of the detachment at that point.

Penitentiaries—Kingston, $155,200.

Mr. OLIVER: Would the minister be kind enough to state the reason of the increase in the case of each penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: At Kingston there is an increase of $2,000 in salaries and retiring allowances.

Mr. OLIVER: Is that in salaries or an increase in the number of salaried officials?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is a new isolation ward necessitating an additional officer and his salary had to be provided for. Maintenance of convicts last year amounted to $26,000 and this year it is estimated at $30,000, an increase of $4,000: Last year we found that the cost of maintenance had been under-estimated. Provision is here asked for a possible daily average of five hundred and fifty convicts.

St. Vincent de Paul, $131,000.

Mr. DOHERTY: The only item of increase is $3,000 for maintenance of convicts due to the fact that, as in the other case, the amount last year was under-estimated.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the number of convicts at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: Provision is made for four hundred and ninety.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): I understand that this item of $131,000 does not include the increases provided for in the resolution now before the House and which is coming up for discussion to-morrow.

Mr. DOHERTY: No; the increases in the salaries of officers of St. Vincent de Paul will be provided for in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. WILSON: So that the increases will have to be added to the item of $131,000?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. WILSON: At the opening of the session, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), in seconding the Address, made quite a few remarks about penitentiaries; and, if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, without referring to a previous debate, I would like to quote a few of his remarks. They were made in good faith and with the intention of improving our penitentiary system—there is no doubt about that. But I will have to take exception to a couple of his observations. He says:

I would like to take advantage of this opportunity, Sir, to urge on the Ministry the necessity of doing something that will make the men in these institutions better fit when they leave them to earn their living.

I quite agree with the hon. gentleman on this point.

On a Sunday afternoon I have spoken in the Kingston penitentiary to 600 men whose faces showed nothing but sullen despair and hopeless sorrow.

I would like to have an explanation as to whether this was an infringement of the rule. I have never thought of going to the penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul and addressing a meeting there. I do not know whether my hon. friend means that he went there to pay a visit, in which he would have been within his rights, as it is a privilege that every judge and every member of this House has. I hope the hon. gentleman will tell us what was the purpose of his meeting. We read in the papers the other day that Sarah Bernhardt visited the penitentiary at St. Quentin in California and gave a grand performance before the convicts. There was an address presented to her by a convict who had been born in France. I presume that this was done from a humanitarian point of view and in the expectation that it might improve the condition of the convicts. But I would like to know what kind of a speech my hon. friend made at Kingston penitentiary—whether it was on religion, humanitarian, or political lines.

I believe that something can be done to improve the condition of these men.

Mr. BLAIN: They are not voters, are they?

Mr. WILSON: No, but they might become voters after they had served their terms.

Mr. OLIVER: You could not be sure of it if it were a close election in Manitoba.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): The Grits brought them out of the asylum to vote against me.

Mr. WILSON (reading):

I believe that something can be done to improve the conditions of these men, and I want to urge upon the Minister of Justice, whose humanitarian principles I well know—

As we all do.

—and on the Minister of Agriculture, who will I know recognize the necessity in this matter, that such steps be taken as will make each penitentiary a demonstrative and reformative institution. There is no reason why cheap land should not be bought and be so developed that the farmers who live in the adjacent municipalities and districts may come and see what is being done, and how they may best improve their own condition. In following out these principles a favour will be conferred upon the prisoner, because when he leaves the penitentiary he will not be obliged to enter again the city slum with all its temptations, and a favour will be conferred on the agricultural classes, because from one end of this country to the other the cry goes up for farm help. A favour will likewise be conferred on the state by freeing it from what must always be a burdensome load.

I do not know if there is any farm attached to the penitentiary at Kingston, or to any other penitentiary, except St. Vincent de Paul, where I know there is one. The penitentiary farm is between three hundred and four hundred acres in extent; it has a quarry on it, a large stone barn and also a wooden barn. I know something about farming, because, like most of the members of this House, I was brought up on a farm, and I think it is my duty to say that the worst farming done in Canada is on a penitentiary farm. It has been so in the past under every Government, it is so now, it will continue to be so, and it cannot be otherwise. It is all very well to call for an eight-hour day, and that is the rule applied at the penitentiary, but you cannot apply it to farming work and be successful. If the diligent farmer wakes at four o'clock in the morning he sees the sun rise; he knows more than science about the condition of the weather; he will wake up his sons or employees and get to work to save the crop, and he will work during the day continuously until the storm comes. That is not the way in the penitentiary; the convicts rise at half-past six in the morning; they go out to the fields to work, at 8 a.m., and at half-past eleven they line up and come into the penitentiary for lunch; they return at one o'clock and come back at four or half-past four so as to get to their cells at five o'clock. How could you run a farm on such principles? I suggest that we should sell the land around the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, retaining only a few acres on which to grow the table vegetables which are used in the institution.

I presume the same conditions obtain at other penitentiary farms as at St. Vincent de Paul. Therefore, instead of favouring the proposition of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), which has been made in good faith and for a good purpose, I would urge the minister to get rid of some of the land around the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. That land has increased in value enormously. Land around Montreal that was worth fifty dollars an acre some years ago, is now worth $2,000 an acre and I would not be surprised if the minister could get $500 or perhaps $1,000 an acre for the St. Vincent de Paul farm which money could be used to much better advantage than at present. Indeed, the Department of Agriculture could establish an experimental farm there, but not to be cultivated by convicts, who are limited to working at certain hours.

Then again, the farm superintendent at St. Vincent de Paul has great trouble in finding men to work the farm, because it is only short term men who are allowed outside the walls of the penitentiary, and sometimes he runs short of labour. I have seen very excellent crops of hay and oats lying on the field in the penitentiary farm without sufficient labour to save them, and that was not the fault of the farmer, nor of the inspector, nor of the minister; but of the system. The minister has now an opportunity to improve the system.

There is another reason why the crops have suffered at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and it is this: the Canadian Pacific railway track crosses the penitentiary, and there is a road in front of the penitentiary called la Monte de St. Francois, and on the north there is a station, and on the west there are three sidings, two for the use of the public and one for the exclusive use of the penitentiary. I am glad to see my good friend Mr. Douglas Stewart, the inspector, here, because he knows the conditions of which I speak. A gentleman bought a quarry there and he asked the Canadian Pacific railway to have a derrick erected, and the answer was that there was not room for it because the penitentiary had its private siding there. I interviewed the Canadian Pacific railway authorities, and they said they could do nothing unless the Government removed the siding. I now suggest to the Minister of Justice that he have that siding removed. The penitentiary buys its coal at a season of the year when coal is cheapest; it burns above 4,000 tons, and the coal reaches the penitentiary siding in July, just at the period when the crops are being harvested. The man in charge of the farm wants the horses, teams and agricultural instruments to save the crops, but the deputy warden needs the teams and carts to haul the coal. They have to cart the coal from the siding at the north gate a distance of five or six acres, because if the cars are detained, the Canadian Pacific railway will charge so much per day demurrage, and so the appliances are taken from the farm work to dispose of this coal. On the penitentiary farm, I, representing Mr. Trenholme of the Montreal Lime Company, succeeded in having a siding in order that he might take limestone from the quarry there to the Mile End at Montreal. This siding should be prolonged near the north gate of the penitentiary; and there should be a shed of some kind so that, in the month of July, when coal is cheaper, it can be dumped there. In that case the deputy warden would not need the carts and only a few men. With those automatic cars the coal could easily be dumped. There are some periods during the winter when the wardens do not know what to do with the convicts. This will provide for the work during that time and will not interfere with the work at the farm. There are more shipments from the county of Laval from the quarries than from any other part of the Dominion. Therefore, the public will have the advantage of that third siding which is at present for the exclusive use of the penitentiary. It would not cost $2,000 to the Government to improve it; the roadbed could be built by the convicts, and the cost of steel and ties would not be very much.

There was some trouble about a woman who came into the penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul. She was sentenced to a term of four or five years in the penitentiary. She came from the Eastern Townships and had to stay somewhere for two or three days until the papers were ready for the warden of Kingston to receive her. There is no place at St. Vincent de Paul to receive women. The only place to put her in was the parlour where visitors are allowed to speak to the convicts. I think the law should be amended so that all magistrates in the province of Quebec should have the power to send prisoners from the tribunal where the sentence is passed directly to Kingston, instead of sending them to St. Vincent de Paul. The wardens do not know what to do with these women, and their presence creates some excitement in the penitentiary.

I think the convicts should be kept within the precincts of the penitentiary. I have often met on the sidewalk forty, fifty or sixty convicts when they leave the penitentiary and go to work on the warden's property. A couple of years ago, a new house was built and as many as seventy convicts were employed there every day. So far as I am concerned, I do not take much exception to that. I know, however, that the public at large is not very fond of meeting convicts. When a man is sentenced to the penitentiary, he is supposed to be within the precincts of the penitentiary, and he does not like to be exposed to the public view. Many of these convicts will put their straw hats over their faces in order that they may not be recognized. They go to work either in the gardens or at the waterworks. The penitentiary is surrounded by a system of waterworks, the mains of which pass through the streets. Inhabitants on both sides of the streets, through which the mains pass, are entitled to use the water provided they pay a certain amount, I think $10 a year. If there is any trouble with the waterworks or the pump down the river, or if any improvements are to be made, the convicts come down. Sometimes they come down in order to clean the streets. It seems to me this could be avoided. This country is rich enough to have some civilian employees who will do this work around the penitentiaries instead of letting convicts wander through the village as they do now. Take Longue Point, where there is a lunatic asylum. You do not see the lunatics there wandering through the streets. I do not see why these convicts should be subjected to such humiliation. Sometimes I have seen very disagreeable convicts on the streets. There are young people around; and, although it may be a good warning to them, on the other hand I think the convict's life is not so gay that the Government should make it more unpleasant. I think a couple of men at reasonable salaries could do all the work that is required, and the convicts could earn something for the benefit of the department by working within the precincts of the penitentiary. They have their own private road to the farm. I have even seen ladies taking the back streets so as not to meet convicts who will look at them sometimes in a very queer way. Real estate values at St. Vincent de Paul are not so high as in other villages on account of being within the shade of the penitentiary.

I have practiced mostly before the criminal courts for the last eighteen years, and have often heard judges make this remark: Young man, I do not know what to do with you; you are only sixteen, seventeen, or eighteen years of age. I pity the condition of that poor man. I should like to see the time when no young man under 21 years of age should be sent to the penitentiary. But our judges believe—and under the circumstances we cannot say that they are wrong—that it is better to send a man to the peniteniary for two years than to send him for twenty-three months to the common jail. This was more especially true in Montreal until the Bordeaux prison was completed. The hon. Minister of Justice knows the awful condition the prisoners were in in our city jails, and it is no wonder that the judges should prefer to send the prisoner to St. Vincent de Paul. I think that the aim of the penitentiary is faussé. The men sentenced to penitentiaries are supposed to be sent there to learn a trade—a man would be sent to the carpenter shop if he desired it, and if there was room, or to the shoemaker shop, or be taught some other trade. It seems to me that a wrong idea has been dominant in our penitentiaries for the last twenty years at least, and possibly ever since Confederation, and that is the idea that the penitentiary should benefit itself from the work of the convict. And this is the reason for the amazingly small product of the penitentiary works. From what I have seen at St. Vincent de Paul, or Kingston or any other penitentiary, I do not believe that our present system turns out good tradesmen. There is a hospital to be built, a warden's house to be built, a north wing to be built, a wall to be built, and word constantly coming from the department that the work is to be rushed. The guards do not take the trouble to teach a man the trade properly—they cannot do it under the system. When a man at 17 years of age is put to learn the trade of stonecutter, let us say, he should be under instruction, and if the stone is not properly cut, let him begin over again, as at school. But that is not the system. The work has to be done, whether it is done well or not, because the primary idea is that the whole work should be done by the convicts. That may save money to the country, but now that we are trying to improve the convicts, I do not think the saving to the country is of such importance. I make these suggestions in good faith.

So far as the staff is concerned, and so far as the officials of the Department of Justice are concerned, with regard to penitentiaries, I do not think there is much fault to be found. So far as I have come in contact with the employees of the penitentiaries, I have found them anxious to do their work well, ready to take suggestions, even inviting suggestions, and putting them in practice to improve conditions. I say this not to pay them compliments, but merely to give them what belongs to them. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) four years ago spoke in the same way on a similar occasion, declaring that in St. Vincent de Paul, for instance, there was practically no room for improvement under our present system. I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice, who has done well, will give my suggestions his best consideration, and will carry them out if they are good.

Mr. NICKLE: The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Wilson) has asked me how it came that I delivered the address to the convicts in Kingston penitentiary to which I made reference in the early part of the present session. It has been the custom for some years in the penitentiary for the chaplain from time to time to invite those whom he thinks interested in penitentiary work to address the convicts on Sunday afternoons in relation to any non-controversial subject. It was in relation to such a subject that I addressed the men that afternoon. If my memory serves me correctly the general theme of that address was 'The opportunities of the unfortunate.' I can understand that my hon. friend would not be in a position to appreciate that subject in its fullness, and therefore I shall not go into details. But I can assure him that if he will come to Kingston any Sunday afternoon, I shall be glad to spend an hour listening to him, and if he will—

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Will the hon. gentleman provide me a seat between two convicts?

Mr. NICKLE: I will provide him with that which I am sure he would like, a seat on the platform. In relation to the work of the penitentiary my hon. friend and I differ radically as to the way in which the convicts should be treated. He seems to think that the penitentiary farms should be managed from the point of view of saving to the state. I take the exactly opposite view. I think the penitentiary farms should be so managed as to give a maximum of education to the convicts so that they may leave these institutions better able to do a useful life's work. I believe that the objects of the penitentiary are reformative as well as punitive, and I think that in the administration of our institutions we have emphasized too much the punitive idea and have lost sight almost altogether of the reformative. I believe farm work can be so conducted that there will be little or no loss to the state and a distinct gain and advantage to the convicts.

We have heard not a little during the present session about the cost of living in Canada. Go back to fundamentals and you will find that the reason the cost of living is increasing is that industrial occupations are taking the men out of the country, and the proportion of men and women engaged in industry is now much greater in proportion to the total population that it was a few years ago. In other words, the farming population is proportionately growing less, while the demand of the inhabitants of cities, towns and villages for our natural products is growing greater. You cannot make two eggs do the work of four, you cannot make twice the beef from one animal that you made from two before. The demand for these natural products is increasing more rapidly than the supply. What does that mean? It means that the greatest opportunity for the convict is to go back to the land; that he should be removed for his own good from the city conditions and for the advantage of the country put back upon the land where his work is most in demand. For that reason, if the minister could be induced to develop this farm-work side of penitentiary life, he would be conferring a favour upon the state and upon the convict as well. I do not know about the penitentiary in the province of Quebec. From what little knowledge I have of farm conditions in Ontario, and from what I have observed while driving around, I should say that the penitentiary farm in Kingston is well run.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): What is the area?

Mr. NICKLE: I am told by the inspector that it is some three hundred acres. The education given on that farm has certainly redounded to the advantage of the country.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.): At what hour in the afternoon do the convicts leave the farm work?

Mr. NICKLE: It depends on the season of the year; in summer, about 5.30, in time to have the penitentiary locked up at six o'clock. No disadvantages will redound from the men being given farm work. It is a very simple, practical thing.

Contractors tell me that when the ordinary penitentiary convict is liberated and goes to them for work he shows by his colour and by the state of his muscles that he has been a convict, that he is not a physically fit man, and as a result they do not care to employ him at an ordinary rate of wage. I believe that if those men could be put out in the open and given stiff manual labour their skin would become tanned and their muscles hardened and they would be able for a day's work when they left the penitentiary. I quite agree with the hon. member for Laval that it is objectionable that convicts should have to meet from time to time the public under disadvantageous circumstances. I would direct as I have done in private the attention of the minister to what I consider a most unfortunate practice, that of having the liberated convicts accompanied to the railway station by uniformed guards.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): That is correct.

Mr. NICKLE: When a man has served his time in the penitentiary, the moment he leaves the gate of the penitentiary he should be a free man and I object to any system that authorizes a keeper in uniform to accompany him to the station so that every man on the train knows that a convict is on the train with him.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): My hon. friend knows that this practice is followed because in some cases when men have been liberated from the penitentiary and have been supplied with tickets to the places from which they came, they have gone to the corner hotel, sold their tickets and gone on a spree and perhaps have come back to the penitentiary that night and brought something in the way of 'square face' for the other convicts.

Mr. NICKLE: My hon. friend misses my point. I was not objecting to the prisoners being accompanied to the train by a guard but by a uniformed guard so they may be recognized as convicts. In relation to the question of trades, if one examines the returns as shown in the report of the Minister of Justice, one cannot but be struck with the number of young men who are serving first terms in the penitentiary. I am told that the instruction given in the penitentiary is not of such a character as to be of very great practical value when the inmate leaves the institution. The labour is direct manual labour of the old school type and does not equip them for taking their place in life in relation to modern methods where intricate and involved machinery is used and, with the hon. member for Laval, I hope that some solution may be devised by which a better opportunity will be afforded the convicts of acquiring a trade. I quite realize that it is unwise and impossible to bring into competition with the free labour of the outside world, the product of the manufactories of the penitentiary. There certainly must be a loss to the state, but the loss which the state suffers through instruction in trades being imparted to the inmates of the penitentiary would surely be more than overborne by the benefit through the men being able to earn a living when they are freed from the institution.

Mr. EDWARDS: I want to add a word or two to what has been said by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), first in regard to the penitentiary farm. The farm at Kingston has been very much enlarged from what it was some years ago, and I think he is fully justified in saying that the farm under its present management, shows up very well indeed. The farm is in charge of a practical farmer from the vicinity of Kingston. He has certainly produced results which are very much to his credit and to the credit of the farm. Mr. McCaugherty, to whom I refer, received an increase in salary some years ago in common with the heads of different departments. The increase was one hundred dollars a year. At that time he was living in a house on the penitentiary property which he enjoyed free of rent, but when his salary was increased he was at once charged one hundred dollars a year for this house, so that he really received no increase and no consideration whatever. That is notwithstanding the additional services which he was called upon to perform because of the increase in the area of the farm. Nor does there seem to have been any consideration paid to the return from the farm. Many things which formerly they had to buy he has succeeded in raising, thus lessening the cost of maintaining the institution. For all this he has received no consideration whatever. This strikes me as manifestly unfair.

I want to add another thought in regard to the employment of the convicts in the penitentiary. If you allow convicts to engage in occupations through which the product of their labour will come into competition with outside free labour, at once objection will be raised that you are interfering or competing with free labour. The public do not seem to want that, but there is a line of work in which the convicts might very well engage, at least at Kingston. That is in the manufacturing of tile for road draining. It is a very simple kind of work, it does not require skilled training. The Government could supply the forms of various sizes for making these tiles for culverts, &c. It is well known in my part of the country at least that they are not now putting down any wooden culverts, and wherever it is possible they are superseding the wooden bridge with something in the form of concrete. I think the penitentiary might be supplied with forms for making tile of different sizes for culverts and making arches to be used for the smaller bridges on our roads. I believe there would be a very great demand for such products. I suppose that in some penitentiaries the material for that kind of work would not be so handy as it is at Kingston. There, there is any amount of limestone, and the sand and cement would be all that would require to be carted in. These tile or arches might be made and supplied to various parts of the country at exactly the cost of their construction. I do not think there would be any objection on the part of any people in the country on the ground that it would interfere with that class of work outside. I am led to think so, because in the city of Kingston, in the county jail there, they have been making certain sizes of tiles by jail labour for a number of years, and I have never heard one word of objection raised by people outside. The tiles are being sent to various townships in the county, and even outside the county, and are being utilized as fast as the limited labour in the jail can supply them.

There is another thing which I think should be taken into consideration in connection with our penitentiaries. I think that these institutions should maintain the roads alongside their property. I have a reason for suggesting that. Wherever these institutions are placed, in a city like Kingston, for instance, the merchants and tradesmen of the city reap a certain amount of benefit from supplying their wants. That, however, applies to only a limited number. Wherever these institutions are built, and 200 or 300 acres of land are taken up, that land contributes nothing to the general revenue of the township, and the burden of taxation is consequently increased in the municipality. I think it is a reasonable argument to advance that wherever these large institutions are situated, the roads adjoining the property should be maintained, and in the case of Kingston could be maintained at a minimum cost, by convict labour. For instance, there is a piece of road called the Bath road running through the penitentiary farm at Kingston. It runs for a distance of at least half a mile through the penitentiary property, and I think that piece of road should be maintained by convict labour.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Has that not been done in the past?

Mr. EDWARDS: No. There is one piece of road which has been maintained for a number of years by convict labour, but there are other pieces of road which I think should be maintained in the same way. I would not restrict the application of this principle to penitentiary farms. It should be applied also to military property, and I am pleased to say that the late Government did take a piece of road in the vicinity of Kingston under their control and maintenance. I think the same principle should be applied to the roads in the vicinity of these large institutions. Every person in the province of Ontario, and I presume also in the province of Quebec, knows that the principal tax on the people is the school tax. The second largest tax is probably the road tax. Of course these properties contribute nothing to either of those taxes, and necessarily the burden is proportionately increased in that neighbourhood. It is right that we should have, and we do have, a certain amount of sympathy with the convict. I think that when the convict is released, the guard who takes him to the station, and places him on board the train, should go in civilian clothes, and not in the regular guard's uniform. I think that is a good suggestion, and one which could be easily carried out. I do not see anything that could be said against it. But there is another class of people who are affected by the incarceration of a certain element of the population, and who are more entitled to our sympathy than the convicts. I think we would be perfectly justified in placing convicts at remunerative labour, and in placing a value upon their labour. I think it would have a very beneficial effect if part of the money so earned by the convict were applied for the benefit of that convict's family, who, under our system, are obliged to suffer for the sins of the person who is convicted. A man is sent to the penitentiary, he may be the head of a family, and the children are obliged to suffer for his misdeeds. It is not fair, I do not know that I could outline just what plan should be adopted, but it occurs to me that a value might be placed on the convict's labour, as it is placed upon his labour in certain lines, and it might be held out to him as an inducement to good conduct that a portion of the money so earned would be applied for the benefit of his family who, under the present system, are made to suffer through no act of their own.

It is not my intention to go into details in regard to the running of penitentiaries at the present time. But I do not believe there is a proper division of labour amongst the guards in the penitentiary. I think some men have to work longer than others and do not get just as fair a show as some others receive. I think the guards are entitled to the increase which is being given to them this year. The cost of living has increased for them, as it has for other people, and their work is of such a kind that they are in more or less danger. If they perform their work properly, they are running risks which should call for a higher remuneration than they have received in the past. There are one or two cases which I hope the Minister of Justice will consider in connection with the Kingston penitentiary in the past. I have in mind one man of whom I spoke to the minister some time ago. He was for many years a guard in the Kingston institution, and there was not the slightest black mark against his conduct, which was all and everything that should be. Through an accident he lost the sight of one eye, but he was still retained.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Did the accident happen when he was discharging his duties?

Mr. EDWARDS: The accident occurred while he was engaged in his duties as a guard in that institution. The man's name is Charles McConville, who has a very long record as a very efficient guard in that institution. He lost the sight of that eye through the neglect or the inability of the surgeon of the penitentiary at that time. He was, however, retained in his position as guard notwithstanding that he was there against the regulations of the institution, being a man with only one eye. He was advised by some of his friends to say nothing about it. Some time after this accident happened a convict escaped. A number of convicts were down at the wharf and one escaped for a few hours. That was made the excuse for the dismissal of this man, McConville. He was dismissed when Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was Minister of Justice. The action of the Minister of Justice at that time does not reflect anything to his credit. He used that man with extreme harshness. I am bringing the case before the House in order to emphasize what I have said privately to the Minister of Justice that this case should be looked into. That man, after serving something like twenty-five years, without a single mark against him in all that time, was dismissed without any gratuity or recognition.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): We have seen worse than that lately.

Mr. EDWARDS: If you have seen worse cases than that then those cases should be considered. What is the use of talking about administering justice if you pass over a case of that kind and not grant justice to a man who is entitled to be fairly treated and has not been fairly treated ? I do not care who is responsible, that man's ill-treatment in the past should be rectified at the earliest possible opportunity.

This morning I took occasion to back up a suggestion made by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Wilson) with regard to the appointment of another inspector who had a knowledge of the French language. I think that suggestion is a good one. Very frequently we have had to send inspectors to an institution to take charge of it for a time. We have had very efficient men as inspectors; especially is this true of the oldest inspector in the service, Mr. Stewart, who knows every detail of penitentiary work. But there are occasions when, as I have said, an inspector may go and take charge, and I think that there is such an occasion at the present time in connection with the Portsmouth penitentiary. The present warden, Col. Irvine, who is a very efficient man, is temporarily absent on account of illness and I do not think it is right that that institution should be in charge of a man against whom charges have been made for misconduct in his official capacity. I think that some person should be sent down there to take charge of that institution until such time as the charges against this official have been investigated as they should be investigated.

Mr. OLIVER: Did my hon. friend say that there were charges against Colonel Irvine ?

Mr. EDWARDS: No, I did not.

Mr. OLIVER: What charges does the hon. gentleman refer to—I did not catch what he said.

Mr. EDWARDS: I said that I did not think it was just the correct thing to have that institution in charge of a man against whom charges had been made. I do not cast any reflection upon Colonel Irvine at all, because I believe he is a very efficient man. But it does occur to me that this is an occasion when one of the inspectors of the penitentiary should temporarily take charge during the illness of the warden, and especially in view of the fact that charges have been laid against a person who, in the absence of Colonel Irvine, is the head of the institution. There are many particulars in which Portsmouth penitentiary will compare very favourably with any of the other penitentiaries in various parts of the Dominion. Stoney Mountain was not capable of holding some desperadoes and they were sent down to Kingston. It was a difficult matter to hold them there, they made a break for liberty, but were recaptured. I think that the Kingston penitentiary in that respect has a very enviable record. The officials have been very alert and have shown themselves to be exceedingly vigilant and up to their work.

But while saying that I want also to say from information that I have received from various sources, and which I believe to be reliable, that the institution at Portsmouth should be thoroughly cleaned out from one side to the other. It is in need of being cleaned out. There is injustice, petty tyranny, favouritism, and men are being hounded out of their positions through spite. I repeat that the institution should be thoroughly cleaned out and an investigation held that will have the effect of putting a stop to that sort of thing. I live within three miles of the penitentiary and naturally there are a great many of these complaints which come to me. I suppose that a great many of them also reach my hon. friend the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). It is only natural. The parties concerned will apply, I presume, to any member who lives in the vicinity of any of the penitentiaries. The various officials of these institutions, when they have complaints to make, will hunt up a member and pour their grievances into his ear. In many cases, no doubt, these grievances are only imaginary, but I am convinced that in so far as the Portsmouth penitentiary is concerned the grievances in many respects are not imaginary.

While hon. gentlemen have been expressing their sympathy for convicts here this afternoon, I am afraid that the same sympathy is not shown sometimes by the officials for the convicts. I call to mind an incident in connection with the penitentiary at Portsmouth, not during the administration of the present Minister of Justice, I may say, but some years ago. A night guard stopped on his rounds to cut down a convict who was hanging himself in his cell. As you are aware a guard has to go around and wind so many clocks. These clocks are an indication of whether he was awake or asleep during the night. It took some little time to get into the cell and cut down this man who was hanging himself. The clock in the morning showed that the guard was a little late in winding it. Being reprimanded for being late in winding his clock, he explained the reason, stating that one of the convicts was committing suicide, that he thought he should stop him and not permit him to hang himself. He was told by the official to whom he reported and who reprimanded him for being late: Let him hang, but wind your clock. That is carrying discipline even farther than I believe the Minister of War would carry it. You are talking about sympathy for convicts, but that particular official did not have very much sympathy for that particular convict.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Has that remark any reference to our present Minister of War?

Mr. EDWARDS: Or to any other minister of war, or to any warlike minister. If that statement of mine is true, then any official who showed himself so absolutely heartless as to tell the guards they could let the convict hang who is committing suicide in his cell, and go and wind their clocks, I say that man is not fit to hold a position as an official in that institution or in any other institution. I want to say that every hour that passes that such a man is kept in a position of trust in that institution is a reflection upon the department for leaving him in that position. I have stated these facts before; I have asked that the facts be investigated, and I believe it is a proper case to investigate. I want to place myself on record as saying that it will be the more creditable to the Minister of Justice, the sooner he has that investigation and looks into the correctness or otherwise of what I am saying. This is only one instance of wrong-doing which should be looked into. I am merely making these statements to support my contention that there are good reasons why an investigation should be held into that institution.

Some little while ago I was charged in this House with haying advocated the appointment of a man to the position of warden of the Kingston penitentiary because he was an Orangeman, and with being annoyed because the Orangeman did not get the position. I want to say that that is not correct at all. The only man I recommended for the position of warden of Kingston penitentiary was Major Hughes, a gentleman who now occupies the position of inspector of penitentiaries, and Major Hughes is not now and never was a member of the Orange Order. It would not be anything to his discredit if he were a member of that order; I want that distinctly to go on record as my opinion at all events, whether any person else may think to the contrary. I did advocate the appointment of Major Hughes because he had demonstrated by years of faithful service that he was one of the best men this country ever produced in that line of work. He was spoken of in the highest terms by the late Sir Oliver Mowat, when he was Minister of Justice, by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, when he was Minister of Justice; by the late Sir John Thompson, when he was Minister of Justice, and he was backed up for the position of warden by twenty-five or thirty members of this House and a good many influential people outside of this House. I think that is ample justification for my advocacy of Major Hughes for the position I thought he was eminently fitted to occupy. However, the Minister of Justice saw fit to appoint him to the position of inspector of penitentiaries, and I maintain that the choice of the Minister of Justice was a wise one. I believe Major Hughes will do good service in that office. A man who has ordinary intelligence—and Major Hughes has more than ordinary intelligence—a man who has ordinary intelligence and has satisfactorily filled a number of positions in an institution like the Kingston penitentiary, must gather a lot of information which ought be of very great value indeed, and I have no doubt Major Hughes will amply justify his appointment by the Minister of Justice to the position he now occupies. It may be that in placing him there the minister has acted more wisely than I would, if it were in my power to appoint him to the wardenship, but the Minister of Justice was quite within his right in appointing Major Hughes as inspector and I am sure no mistake was made, because I believe he will make an efficient officer in every respect.

I wish to impress upon the members of this House my position with regard to the Kingston penitentiary, and I ask them to bear in mind that the constituency I have the honour to represent comes right up to the borders of the city of Kingston. The county of Frontenac surrounds the city of Kingston; the island municipalities being south of the city and the other portions of my county being north, and east and west of the city. Because of that fact I am necessarily thrown very much among the officials of that institution. I have heard a number of their grievances and complaints; I suppose that where there is any large institution like that there will always be men who think they have grievances, and of course there are many of them who think they have grievances when they really have not. I am perfectly sincere in stating that I do think there is ample justification for a thorough investigation into every department of the Kingston penitentiary, and I am only anxious to have that investigation take place in the best interests of the penitentiary. I believe that is the view entertained by the Minister of Justice. I impress upon him again the importance of having that investigation, and I believe it will mean a lot less trouble to him, a lot less trouble to all those upon whom responsibility rests for the proper conduct of that institution, if the investigation results in straightening out the tangles and getting everything on a proper working basis again.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): I do not want my opinion to be misconstrued with reference to penitentiary farming. I am not against farming in connection with a penitentiary, but I do think the area of land devoted to that purpose at St. Vincent de Paul is too large. I think one hundred acres would be ample. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) that there is benefit to be derived from education in farming at a penitentiary. As the Minister of Justice is bringing down to-morrow a resolution to increase the salaries of the penitentiary officials, may I be allowed to suggest that he should bring down a penitentiary Bill on the lines which I will suggest. What I will read to the House is a Draft Bill prepared under the late Administration, I think about the month of June last, but on account of the conditions which arose at that time, the Bill was not submitted to the House, although I have no doubt it will be found in the archives of the Department of Justice. This Bill was drafted with the concurrence of my hon. friends from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), Regina (Mr. Martin), and I think all the members who have penitentiaries in their constituencies. The first amendment proposed by that Bill was the nomination of three inspectors instead of two. I had a conversation with the Minister of Justice this morning, and I think the law will be amended so as to give affect to the suggestion that three inspectors should be appointed, one of whom will be familiar with the French language. Another important change would be made by section 34, which reads:

If any officer dies in the service leaving a widow or any person who in his lifetime was dependent on him, the same gratuity as defined and calculated in previous sections may be paid to such widow, if any, and if not, to any person or persons in the litetime of such officer dependent on him, or to any person or corporation in trust for any such person or persons so dependent on him.

We had a case in St. Vincent de Paul where Mr. Champagne died suddenly before he had time to sign his resignation and his family was deprived of the annuity. I think a similar case came from Kingston and one from the West. I would suggest, when a man has not an opportunity to resign before his death, his gratuity should be paid to those dependent upon him. (Reading):

2. Such gratuity may be increased by one-half the amount thereof if the death of such officer is occasioned by any injury received by him in the performance of his duty, without fault or negligence on his part, at the hands of any convict, or in preventing an escape or rescue, or in suppressing a revolt, 6 E. VII., c. 38, s. 34.

3. No officer on the permanent staff of a penitentiary, except the warden, deputy warden, matron, deputy matron, Roman Catholic and Protestant chaplain and surgeon, shall be allowed to remain on the staff of a penitentiary after he has attained the age of sixty-five.

4. Every officer, when reaching the age of sixty-five, will ipso facto cease to be an officer of a penitentiary and will be entitled to the gratuity provided for in section 33 of this Act.

5. Every officer on the permanent force of a penitentiary, who has reached the age of sixty, may, at that time, or at any time between the ages of sixty and sixty-five, tender his resignation to the hon. the Minister of Justice, who may accept said resignation; and, said resignation being duly accepted, the officer whose resignation has been accepted shall be entitled to the gratuities of section 33 of the Act, provided that in each case the conduct of that officer has been good, and that he has been faithful in the discharge of his duties.

I do not need to make any comments. I think my suggestion as an amendment to the Bill is quite clear. I do not think a man of sixty-five years of age can resist a convict who is twenty or twenty-five years old, in the prime of life. How can a man of sixty-five fulfil his duty in chasing a convict and bringing him back?

I thought it my duty to make these suggestions now on account of the resolution which will be presented to-morrow. I shall give notice to the hon. Minister of Justice. If he will allow me, I shall be glad to send him this draft.

My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) made reference to the appointment of Mr. Hughes. I do not know Mr. Hughes. I am trying to believe that all he said about him is true. There is one thing that the Minister of Justice should explain: what has become of Mr. Dawson, who was a faithful employee of the department for a good many years, a prominent man and an ex-member of this House. He seems to have done his duty while in office. It would be interesting to know where he is now, and for what reason he left the department. We are entitled to know whether he has been removed or superannuated.

Mr. DOHERTY: I answered the same question to another hon. gentleman this morning. Mr. Dawson was transferred to the Department of Public Works, as it was found that his knowledge would be very valuable to that department. There was nothing in the transfer of Mr. Dawson which reflected on him in any way and nothing to prejudice his position or salary.

I am very grateful for the suggestions of the hon. members who have spoken on this subject. There can be no possible question that, in the matter of administration of penitentiaries, there is room for vast improvement. The whole subject of how best to deal with the convict, the man who has so conducted himself as to call down upon him punishment at the hands of society, is a most intricate and difficult, and at the same time a most interesting problem. It is one that has caused a good deal of thought to the officers of the department and, I may say, to myself, since I have occupied the position which I hold to-day, which makes me responsible for the administration of these institutions. I have had in mind some general scheme of improvement in the system. That is something that of course requires to be very carefully thought out, and a measure to bring that about is one that would necessarily call for serious consideration, and take up in that consideration not a little of the time of the House. For these reasons I do not propose to attempt to deal with that subject in a general way at this session. I hope, later on, to be able to introduce legislation looking to the improvement of the entire system. When I come to do so, I shall be very pleased to bear in mind the suggestions that different hon. gentlemen have made and I have no doubt they will be found most valuable.

The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Wilson) referred to the existence of a siding at St. Vincent de Paul, which I understood him to say interfered with the advantageous use of the property in the interests of outsiders, particularly with the placing of the derrick at the station there and in the neighbourhood of the station. This matter is entirely new to me. I shall have it looked into. I may say that the penitentiary desires to act as a good neighbour to those who live in its surroundings. If we find there is any inconvenience or disadvantage resulting from the existence of our siding which can be remedied, we shall be glad to find a way to do it.

With regard to the unloading of coal, and this being done at the most undesirable time of the year, that is to say, at the time when it interferes with farm labour, I am told by the inspector that over two years ago instructions were given that arrangements should be made so that the coal should arrive at a season of the year when its unloading would not interfere with the necessary labour upon the farm. If these instructions are not being carried out, it is not because they have not been given. I shall have that matter looked into.

The hon. member referred to the case of a woman who was detained for a day or two at St. Vincent de Paul on her way to the women's penitentiary at Kingston, and suggested that there should be some amendment in the law to prevent the happening of such things. The law expressly provides that, from the time of sentence, the person sentenced to a penitentiary is assumed to be in the hands of the warden of that penitentiary, in the sense that he is the person to whom that prisoner is to be taken direct. I understand that, as a matter of custom, when it is necessary that a prisoner should stay over for any period of time at any city on his way, the jail is the place where that prisoner is usually detained. The reason for that is simple enough. The prisoner is at the time in the hands of the officer of the court, which is the provincial court; and, in the particular case referred to, I understand the convict was on her way from Quebec, where she had been sentenced, to Kingston, her ultimate destination. The officer who was in charge of her certainly erred in the place which he selected for her to remain in during her stay in Montreal. Moreover, I think the Penitentiary officer erred, when it happened that she was brought there and as a matter of fact did stay there, in not finding some other place in which to confine her. At that time the fact was reported to the department; and, I may say, met with the censure of the department. The officer responsible for it is no longer an officer of the department.

Mr. WILSON: Will the hon. minister tell why the commitment was made to St. Vincent de Paul instead of to Kingston direct? I understand she was confined in St. Vincent de Paul pending the decision of the department as to what to do with her.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand from the inspector that the woman was, on the face of the commitment, committed to St. Vincent de Paul, and the error was in detaining her there. She should have been forwarded to Kingston. I understand that all the convicts sentenced in the province of Quebec are sentenced to St. Vincent de Paul, but in view of the fact that the woman's department is at Kingston penitentiary, she should have been immediately transferred to Kingston.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is there no woman's department in St. Vincent de Paul?

Mr. DOHERTY: No.

Mr. WILSON: In order to avoid that a woman convict should be sentenced to the penitentiary at Kingston even from Quebec, and then she would go direct. The warden at Kingston would have no authority to receive the woman if the commitment was to St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall look into the matter to see what can be done in that respect. It was a misapprehension that the woman was directly committed. With regard to the complaint of convicts going through the village in which the penitentiary is to places where their work is to be done, causing inconvenience to the inhabitants of the village, and also exposing the convicts to be unduly gazed upon, by the public, we should be glad as far as possible to avoid this. On the other hand, we endeavour to find work for them, and when there is useful work to be done on the penitentiary property, I should not like to undertake absolutely that convicts should not be sent from one place to another. Of course, they should not be allowed, and I do not believe they have been allowed to wander in the village street. But I think the matter can be so arranged that the mere passing of a few convicts on the village street from one point to another would not cause very serious inconvenience. However, I shall look into the matter.

Reference has been made to the taking of released convicts to the railway station by a guard in uniform. This matter has been brought to my attention, and I have given it some consideration. The inconvenience found is in the guard having to specially dress himself for the purpose of taking the convict to the station, and then changing his costume when he comes back. But I think we can so arrange it that complaint will not be made. Of course, as pointed out by the hon. member for Laval, it would not do that these men should be let out of the gate of the penitentiary and allowed to stay in the town or village where the penitentiary is. I believe that the law provides for their being sent out of the town,—I make that statement on the information of the inspector.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Frontenac that convicts might be used in working on the roads adjacent to the penitentary building is one that I think commends itself. As the hon. member says, we have done some work of that kind, and I shall be glad to look into the possibilities of extending it further. We have also done work of that kind in Manitoba, on the road from Stony Mountain to Winnipeg. It has not only given satisfaction to the people of the neighbourhood, but has proved a useful method of turning to good account the work of the convicts. I have also taken note of the hon. member's suggestion that we might employ these men in making tiles for drains. This whole question of productive work by convicts is one that presents very considerable difficulty. I entirely sympathize with the view of the hon. gentleman that it is highly important that we should find some method by which the labour done by the convicts in the institution should inure to their advantage, and more especially should inure to the benefit of those dependent upon them and who by their imprisonment are in fact condemned to a severe punishment, perhaps a more severe punishment than that which falls on the convict himself. I should be glad if we could devise some method by which that most desirable object could be obtained without giving rise to justifiable complaint on the part of free labour outside. For you have to consider that always. Since I first interested myself in penitentiaries, this question has been the subject of thought with me. I have had representations on the subject from people who take an interest in the subject of improving the condition of convicts, and have made inquiries into attempts that have been made elsewhere to meet this difficulty. In the efforts that were made in France, the results, so far as I can find, were not very encouraging. At the same time I am glad to find my view on the principle involved at any rate supported by the hon. member for Frontenac, and I shall be glad to give my best attention to the matter and endeavour to devise some method by which we can gain the desired result. But, as I have said, we must bear in mind that we should not create a condition of affairs that would interfere with men outside engaged in work similar to that to which the convicts might be put.

As to matters of administration complained of, or charges against the penitentiary officers, particularly the matters referred to by the hon. member for Frontenac, I desire to say that it is my purpose to have an investigation into the institution mentioned, and to have it at the earliest possible moment, just as soon as I can secure the services of commissioners who are absolutely qualified both to do impartial justice upon complaints of, or charges against, individuals, and to investigate the methods of administration, and to make such a report thereupon as may be useful to us in our endeavours to improve the system generally. Those endeavours will be materially assisted by the valuable suggestions we have had this afternoon.

Some reference was made to the newly appointed inspector and to some observations that I understand were made upon the recommendation that the gentleman should be appointed to the position of warden of Kingston penitentiary. So far as the qualifications of Major Hughes are concerned, I desire to join most heartily with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) in what he has said with regard to them. I was so much impressed with the idea that Major Hughes would be most valuable to the penitentiary administration in the highest position connected with it that I appointed him to that position. I think that is the best evidence of my appreciation of his merits and his ability. The hon. member has said that some reference has been made to Major Hughes being an Orangeman and that this was not so. The hon. member said that he would find no fault with him in that regard. I would also say that I would have found no fault with him if he had been an Orangeman, the fact of his being or not being an Orangeman would have made not the slightest difference in my appointing him to a position for which I believed he was eminently competent. Neither in his case nor in the case of any other man would I be affected by any consideration of that kind. People may differ about matters of this sort, but when you want a competent officer for a particular position, that is no consideration one way or the other in my mind.

Manitoba penitentiaries, $66,700.

Mr. OLIVER: In regard to Manitoba penitentiary, I understand that Colonel Irwin, who has been warden there for a number of years, has been transferred to Kingston. Who has been appointed warden of Manitoba?

Mr. DOHERTY: Captain Ponsford.

Mr. OLIVER: What was his previous occupation?

Mr. DOHERTY: I cannot say at the moment precisely what occupation he was following at the time his appointment was made. He had previously been engaged in business which involved his controlling and directing very large numbers of men and he had also had experience in the active militia as a captain and was very highly recommended to me. These facts were put before me, I had several interviews with him and I felt convinced that he had qualities which would enable him to perform his duties with satisfaction. Since he has been in charge of the penitentiary I have had the most satisfactory reports from reliable sources as to his competency for the position.

Mr. OLIVER: What was his calling in life?

Mr. DOHERTY: He had been engaged in the carrying out of very large contracts, principally in connection with building operations, I think.

Mr. OLIVER: How many convicts are there in that penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: Last month there were one hundred and ninety-five convicts there.

Mr. OLIVER: Has a comparison been made of the actual cost of maintenance per prisoner in the different penitentiaries?

Mr. DOHERTY: That information is given in a special appendix to the report.

British Columbia penitentiary, $90,600.

Mr. OLIVER: Some years ago there was a good deal of criticism of this penitentiary and its management owing to the escape of a very noted criminal. Has anything occurred since that shows either a better condition of the conduct of the penitentiary or better arrangements in any way or have the unfortunate occurrences of those years been repeated and if not what is the reason?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in a position to say that conditions are materially improved there, but at the present moment the inspector is on his way to British Columbia penitentiary, taking in the others on his way, with a view to make a thorough inspection and examination and report upon the conditions in that penitentiary as well as in others. I do not know that I am in a position to say that we have any special information showing either improvement or deterioration in conditions since the incident to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. OLIVER: Have there been many changes in the staff and in the actual buildings since then?

Mr. DOHERTY: There have been no changes of importance in the staff, but the large wall which was defective at that time has been completed.

Mr. OLIVER: Had the condition of the wall anything to do with the escape of this prisoner?

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand that the convict at the time of his escape was working outside the wall, so that the condition of the wall had no bearing upon the escape, and the respect in which the person responsible was blameworthy was in allowing him to work outside the wall in the conditions that existed.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the number of convicts in New Westminster penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: 360 are provided for.

Mr. OLIVER: How many convicts are there in Edmonton penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: There were 197 convicts last month.

Mr. OLIVER: From time to time representations have been made to the Government, and to the minister, in regard to the removal of the penitentiary. Can the minister give us any information as to how that matter is now viewed by the Government?

Mr. DOHERTY: Representations have been made at different times, by different parties, suggesting or recommending the removal of the penitentiary at Edmonton. There have been suggestions that it should be removed and placed on a different site in, or adjoining, the city, and there have been suggestions that it be removed to some other locality. The last time the matter was discussed was when I had a visit from a gentleman occupying a high position in the municipal government of Edmonton. He was very desirous that we should arrive at some arrangement by which the penitentiary property might pass over to the city, the city providing another site which would still be in the neighbourhood, but not in the heart of the city, as I understand it is at present. As a result of that interview, I asked the gentleman representing the city of Edmonton to put a definite proposition in writing as to the location of the land they proposed to give us as a site, and to send it to us, and we would consider it. That was a couple of months ago, and we have not yet received any definite proposition on the subject.

Mr. OLIVER: Would the minister care to say whether any proposition would be accepted, and if so, what would be the fundamental necessities in such a proposition as to area, the distance from the railway station, and the possibility of having the benefit of the city utilities, the water works, and so on. If the requirements of the department were known there could be some definiteness in the efforts put forth to meet them. But the minister will understand that with properties at high values, and with people more or less keeping an eye on property values, it is not likely that anyone on behalf of the city would go to work and secure a knowledge of a certain area of property that might be acquired, when, after that knowledge had been acquired, the department might say that they did not care to effect any removal, or that the property selected was not suitable for certain reasons. If we could know what the requirements of the department would be in the event of removal, the city of Edmonton would have something more definite to work upon. I know there is a very great anxiety to have the penitentiary removed from where it is, and I am anxious to try to bring the wishes and interests of the city of Edmonton to work with the wishes and interests of the Department of Justice. I think both could work together successfully.

Mr. DOHERTY: The way we look upon the matter is that the penitentiary is satisfactorily situated as it is. As I understand, the citizens of Edmonton are desirous that we should remove it. We are not exactly in the position to define conditions upon which we should go out, because we are not in the position of wanting to sell. The city comes to us; we are satisfied with the present position. We find many advantages in the present site, which they say they desire to acquire. Under these conditions, it seemed to us fair to ask the city, what is your proposition; you are the people who desire the change. I think we would be disposed to give every consideration to a proposition in the interests of the city of Edmonton, consistent with our duty as administrators of the penitentiary, but it seemed to us that the initiative lay with the people who desired the change to be made, rather than with us. If the change involved no detriment to the public service, and was carried out in a manner that would be just to the penitentiary, we would be disposed to give it every consideration. However, I will consider the matter from the point of view of the hon. member.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Has the minister any objection to stating who the official was from the city of Edmonton?

Mr. DOHERTY: At the moment I cannot recall the gentleman's name. He was an alderman of the city. I do not mean to say that he was speaking officially in that capacity, but like the rest of the citizens he was interested in this matter, and he came to see me, and we talked the matter over. As I have said, I made the suggestion that he should endeavour to see if some definite proposition could be made. He was not in a position to speak of any particular site. If he had been in that position, and if we had had a proposition to exchange sites, we would have been in a position to look into it, and to deal with it. But it is difficult for us to go looking around for sites. We might select what we considered a good one, and find that it was not possible to secure it. The city on the other hand knows what sites could be procured.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The alderman who visited the minister would probably be Alderman Smith. I understand he was given authority to interview the department regarding the removal of this penitentiary, and that the city government had made arrangements to purchase land, within three or four miles of the city, which would be suitable for penitentiary purposes. They had also arranged, I understand, to extend the street railway system on the understanding that the Government would surrender their property in the city of Edmonton. As the hon. minister is aware, the property, as at present situated, comprises 100 acres in the very heart of the city. It is not only that the location is objectionable, but this vacant land in the heart of the city is detrimental to the best interests of the city, and I think it would be in the interests of the Government that these conditions should not prevail much longer. If the city is prepared to give the Government a suitable situation and possibly erect a building, such as they have on the present area, I presume the Government would have no great objection to the change being made.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not prepared to say offhand that merely on this basis we would be prepared to act. We have to bear in mind that we have an exceedingly valuable property, an asset of this Dominion, and when it comes to a question of exchanging, we would have to look to the question of what we are parting with and the value of what we are receiving. I do not mean by that to say that no consideration should be given at all to the position and interests of the city of Edmonton and that we should act absolutely with the view of wanting to treat this as a purely commercial question, but I say, and I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree with me, that the comparative values of the property to be parted with and that to be given to us is a matter that we have to consider. Then the peculiar advantages that our present site has for our special purposes will have to be taken into consideration as compared with the advantages that would attach to any area which may be offered to us. It is difficult for us to make a definite answer to a general proposition. It is a matter that does not seem to me that we can come to any conclusion upon unless the department is put in possession of precise information as to what the city offers to us in exchange for what we have. I have the best disposition towards the city and to consider what is in the interest of the city of Edmonton as well as what is in the interest of the Dominion as a whole.

Mr. OLIVER: There is a certain area surounding the present penitentiary. The whole of that area is not practically available for the purposes of the penitentiary as the railway tracks run across a part of it. I do not know how much of the property is occupied, but it would probably be twenty or thirty acres. It might be presumed that that is a small area for a large penitentiary. If the department would consider that a larger area less conveniently situated would answer the purposes of the department as well, or better than a small area conveniently placed, as this is, there would be some ground for the city of Edmonton to go on and try to make an arrangement. But I am afraid, from what the minister has said, that we have not made much through the change of Government, because the argument he puts forward is about the same as that which his predecessor put forward. It was up to the city to show cause.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is difficult to accept or reject a proposition that is not made. That is our proposition pure and simple. I said to the gentleman who came to me, and I say it again, that I would be prepared to deal fairly with any proposition that is made to me, bearing in mind the importance of this matter to the city of Edmonton, as well as trying to do my duty as representing the Dominion. But I cannot say offhand that, if a site is offered to me, I will accept it. No doubt the advantages of a larger site would be a matter to be considered. I can only say that I am quite open to any other suggestion that may be made and I am prepared to consider it as fairly as I am capable of doing. I can realize how important it is to the city of Edmonton and I shall be glad to meet their views consistently with doing my duty on behalf of the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to press the minister unduly and I do not wish to suggest that he is not acting in good faith and consistently with his position, but it is my business to place before him and the committee the position and views of the people whom I represent. It is conceded generally, as was stated by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson) and my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), that it is in the public interest as well as in the interest of the penitentiary itself, that the institution should not be inside the city. It should not be inconveniently situated, but it is better that it should not be surrounded by population. In Edmonton the situation of the present penitentiary is absolutely surrounded by population. While it is not in the centre of the city, it is measurably centrally located. I have not very full knowledge, but it is probably more within the city than any other penitentiary in Canada. That being the case, the citizens of Edmonton are inclined to the view that it is not in the interest of the city, or in the interest of the good administration of the penitentiary, or of the country, to have the penitentiary located there, and that it should be located outside the city. The area that is now occupied by the penitentiary is admittedly small compared with the ordinary requirements of a penitentiary. Therefore, to take the further step, they believe that the penitentiary should have larger grounds, which it can only have by being outside the city. There are certain advantages possessed by the penitentiary and the department by reason of its location, in that it has street cars, city utilities, electric light, waterworks, and all the other conveniences. These are great advantages and they possibly could not be supplied at any serious distance outside of the city. If the Government would say that the use of these utilities was an essential condition to the location of the penitentiary outside of the city, the people dealing with the matter would know that, with respect to any location that they desired to secure, they must not go out of the range of city utilities. If the Government would insist on the use of the utilities, convenience to the street cars, convenient access to the steam railways, and a certain distance from the city, the people could go and do business. If these utilities were not insisted upon, of course, it would make the task very much easier and a still larger area of land might be secured at more reasonable figures. It is not with a desire at all of tying the Government or the department up to making an exchange that I am presenting this matter to the minister, but I would like to get what would be the minimum that the Government would accept in the way of the use of utilities, distance from the centre of the city, &c. If we could get the minimum the Government would accept in these three particulars, we could go on and see what arrangements we might make; not tying up the Government to accept what we would think, but we would have something definite to go on in making these preliminary arrangements. On the other hand, if it is not possible to secure a change of location, there is no reason I can see from the standpoint of the Government or of the city, for retaining as penitentiary property that part north of the railway track. It seems to me that part might be disposed of because it is not of serious value to the penitentiary for penitentiary purposes. The fact is that the lines of the Canadian Northern railway and of the Grand Trunk Pacific cut this part off for penitentiary purposes from the rest of the ground, and it might very well be disposed of.

The other point is that the wall around the penitentiary is only a board fence, and I would almost make the criticism that the reason the convicts remain in the penitentiary is because they like the board and the situation of the place. There does not seem to be any reason why they should stay there unless that be the case. If it is intended to maintain the penitentiary in that place, a more sufficient and permanent enclosure should be erected so that the officers of the penitentiary be not at the risk of their lives as they are to-day, with that continual inducement to the convict to escape. There have been several escapes. There have been several escapes or partial escapes from the Edmonton penitentiary, and probably the minister does not know that the then assistant warden was done to death in the penitentiary some years ago. The conditions are that if the penitentiary is to remain where it is there should be improvements which would tend to the retention of the prisoners and the safety of the officers. I am satisfied there might be blame attached to the officers for escapes, which I think would be entirely unjust, under present conditions. It is because it is necessary to make extensive permanent improvements in the present location that I would urge in the interests of the administration of justice that ultimately, although perhaps not at present, it is desirable the locality should be changed and the conditions approximately more closely to those universally accepted as conditions which should surround a penitentiary.

Saskatchewan penitentiary, $53,800.

Mr. OLIVER: How many convicts in the Saskatchewan penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: A daily average of one hundred. It is situated at Prince Albert.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it within the city limits?

Mr. DOHERTY: About three miles from the city.

Mr. OLIVER: What area of land surrounds it?

Mr. DOHERTY: About six hundred acres in the penitentiary reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: That bears out very strongly the argument I addressed to the minister in respect to the Edmonton penitentiary.

Mr. DOHERTY: An increased area would probably be of advantage at Edmonton, and having listened to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has said, I shall be glad to think the whole matter over and see if there is some practical method of meeting his views.

Mr. OLIVER: If the minister would let me have an idea whether he would insist on access to city utilities, or whether he would be willing to accept a situation not in touch with such utilities, it would greatly help.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will think it over.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Has the penitentiary at Prince Albert electric light, sewers, and water supply?

Mr. DOHERTY: The penitentiary has its own sewers and water supply, and the electric light is supplied by the city.

Expenses under the Pecuniary Claims Convention with the United States, $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER: What claims are these?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is a commission sitting to determine a number of pecuniary claims which the United States Government, the Government of Great Britain and the Government of this country had agreed upon to submit to the determination of that commission. There is a great variety of claims, most of them of very long standing. This commission, which began its sittings a week or two ago at Washington, is to pass upon these claims, after the particular claims that are to be submitted have been determined by the respective parties. There are already two schedules and may possibly be others. It is a mistake putting the amount of $2,500; it was intended to be $25,000. The balance has to be made up in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is the country to be reimbursed for the costs after the adjudications have been made?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that the commissioners are authorized to make adjudications as to costs. Some of the claims are on behalf of individuals, and, with regard to certain classes of these, I think the Government would consider it had done its duty in procuring the establishment of a tribunal to deal with them and in giving proper notice to the individuals concerned, leaving the individuals themselves to provide for the conduct of their own cases. Of course we would conduct those cases which were of a public nature. Certain people, for instance, were charged duty on hay going into the United States. It was subsequently determined that that duty was not properly charged, and these people have claims to be reimbursed what they paid. With regard to claims of that nature I do not think the Government would consider itself under obligation to provide for the cost of urging and supporting them before the commission.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand there are three gentlemen on that commission, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick representing Great Britain. Who represents the United States?

Mr. DOHERTY: Mr. Chandler Anderson.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And Mr. Fromageot, of France, is the third arbitrator.

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: There are some claims made by Canadian Indians against the Government of the United States. Do they come under this convention?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, I believe so. There is a particular claim in the case of the Cayuga Indians, and I think there are other claims.

Mr. OLIVER: There are other claims by Indians, and I would be glad if the minister would see that any such claims are included.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have been paying a good deal of attention to that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would my hon. friend give the House as soon as possible a list of these Canadian claims? The reason I ask is because some years ago one of my electors, Mr. Lindsay, of Gaspé, had chartered the steamer La Canadienne from the Government during the summer. That steamer was injured by a United States warship going by way of the canals to the great lakes.

Mr. HAZEN: That claim is before the commission.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Militia and Defence—Allowance active militia, $120,000.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the minister explain how this money is to be expended?

Mr. HUGHES: It is for camp and drill instruction, care of arms, postage and for trumpeters and signallers' degrees on qualifying for a certificate.

Mr. CARVELL: Has the minister decided upon any policy regarding the care of arms? Some small armouries have been established in different parts of the country. If an armoury of any size is built and arms are placed in it, it seems to be the custom that they shall be taken care of by the caretaker of the armoury, whoever he may be. Here is a case in point. I think that probably the first instance where a small armoury was built in connection with a public building, that is, a combination of an ordinary public building and an armoury, was in the town of Hartland in my constituency. I think one corps of militia is now housed in the armoury. I understand that somebody was appointed to build the fires, to keep the place clean and to act as general janitor of this public building.

Mr. HUGHES: When?

Mr. CARVELL: Some time within the last six or eight months. The building was completed only a few months ago. I have found that the captain of the local company has been notified that henceforth he has nothing to do with the arms of his company, they are taken out of his charge and placed in the charge of the janitor of the building. It may seem a very small thing to the minister, but it may be a very important matter to the men interested. In the first place, he says the responsibility is entirely upon him to look after those materials, keep them clean and keep them in order, and if there is any remuneration he should have it. But, more than that, when inspection day comes around, if there are deficiencies, the captain is responsible, and the amount will be taken from his pay, and he will have no way of recouping himself. Has this matter been brought to the attention of the Minister, and will he under the circumstances, leave the matter to the competent officer connected with the company who understands these matters—and has given good service?

Mr. HUGHES: I have no knowledge of the case referred to. The question of the care of these armouries in public buildings is a matter of rather serious import, and so far as I am concerned, I have refused in many instances in which it was brought to my notice to have the public building used for company purposes. They entail, as the hon. gentleman says, the appointment of a caretaker, and the furnishing of fuel, and, so far as I am concerned, our policy—which we are gradually getting into shape—is to turn these buildings over to the Public Works Department and erect small halls of our own. Furthermore, we have not yet quite developed our policy in relation to the caretakers, but I find that many of these gentlemen have done little, if anything, except to cater to the companies in the evening occasionally when they are in their quarters. Accordingly, we are rearranging the whole scheme of caretakers, and we purpose seeing that they attend to business where they are necessary and that they are retired where they are unnecessary. My own idea is that the officer in command of the company in a small place should be the man to take charge of the armoury. Of course, where the dual policy is in vogue—it has been in vogue for some time, and I have not interfered with it except in cases of necessity—where the caretaker of the public building looks after the room and arms, the officer in command of the company still gets half the pay. But we have the whole matter under consideration. Some of my officers have personally inspected a number of the armouries and in scarcely one solitary instance have we found them satisfactory. Toronto was satisfactory; Hamilton was more than satisfactory; Ottawa was simply scandalous, and there were other places where the men were not earning their money or doing their duty. A system will be devised to meet the case.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad to hear the statement made by the minister. With respect to the armouries which are wholly military and entirely under the hon. minister's department, I do not think there is any complaint. We have a very competent caretaker who was removed for special purposes, and another gentleman appointed in his place, of whose qualifications I make no complaint. He is a good Tory, and that was enough to secure his appointment.

Mr. HUGHES: He can do his work, I will guarantee.

Mr. CARVELL: I wish to say, to the credit of the minister, that he stood by the militia and against the caretaker. The caretaker would not allow the band in the room because they made a noise, the minister interfered and allowed the band to go in and make all the noise they wanted to. However, that is not what I wished to speak about. So far as the Woodstock drill hall is concerned, no fault has been found, because a man was appointed who received sufficient pay to justify his giving attention to the matter; and, so long as I had anything to say about it, I had a very competent man who certainly looked after everything in good shape. But, when you come to the small dual armoury and Public Works building you have a different state of affairs. You have a civilian appointed as caretaker. I do not speak with reference to the gentleman in the case to which I specially referred, because while this is in my own constituency, I do not even know his name. But in such cases, you have a civilian appointed who knows nothing about militia matters, and the captain of the company feels that a great injustice would be done to him if he were compelled to hand over these arms to a man who is not responsible, and yet the captain of the company himself is held responsible.

Mr. HUGHES: Is the hon. gentleman certain we have a man there? I have a fairly good memory, and so have my officers; and we have no recollection of appointing a man in any way under the Militia Department. The man must be a public works man.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know. I have a file of correspondence here which, though in a sense confidential, yet which I shall be glad to show the minister if he so desires. Although, it might be—what do the minister's men call it?—derogatory to these in command to have an officer write to somebody else——

Mr. HUGHES: This is a free country.

Mr. CARVELL: This officer wrote to me. I am not finding more fault than is necessary, but as I understand, it was proposed that the care of these arms should be taken away from a military man and placed in the hands of a man who was appointed by the Public Works Department. The captain objected, and I think with great reason. Whether the matter has been carried out or not, I do not know. I hope the minister will tell me that it will not be carried out.

Mr. HUGHES: I have no recollection of such a case. I have no knowledge of any place in Canada where we have an officer in a public works building.

Mr. CARVELL: But the minister has knowledge of cases where the Public Works Department building officer has been given charge of arms and equipment.

Mr. HUGHES: No, not at all.

Mr. OLIVER: This item covers provision for the storage of arms and accoutrements. That was the cause of a good deal of difficulty when I was a member of the Government, representing a constituency and supporting the Government. I hope that there will be less trouble now that the responsibility is on other shoulders. But it is not in regard to drill halls I wish to ask, but in regard to the provision for a country squadron. What is the system in the department in regard to caring for the accoutrements of, say, a country squadron of mounted men?

Mr. HUGHES: The system is the same as my predecessor pursued in relation to individual squadron headquarters. It would be impossible, even in a large number of years, to make provision for each squadron or company headquarters, but we are adopting a policy of inexpensive drill halls for squadron headquarters where we can store these supplies and we make the cost about equivalent to the rent of buildings we would have to obtain for storage purposes. These headquarters buildings also serve as places for the men to meet and drill.

Mr. CARVELL: In looking over the correspondence, I find that the caretaker was a former militia man, but he is not now and has not been for some years.

Mr. HUGHES: I shall look it up.

Mr. MARCIL: As there is not a dollar spent in my constituency for militia purposes, I am perhaps qualified to ask what is the total amount asked for this year for militia purposes and what is the increase over last year and the year previous?

Mr. HUGHES: The total last year was $8,896,397. This year it will be $10,500,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Have you the year before?

Mr. HUGHES: No, I have not those figures with me.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where is the chief increase?

Mr. HUGHES: The increase is chiefly an increase in the number of militia.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the minister add to the figures here given the amount that is being spent by the Public Works Department for militia purposes?

Mr. HUGHES: I have not that information here.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I thought the minister was going to transfer the construction of buildings used for military purposes, such as drill halls, from the Public Works Department to the Militia Department and construct them under the supervision of his own engineers.

Mr. HUGHES: Up to $15,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When the minister says an increase in the number of militia, does he mean an increase in the number of men and horses and the cost of equipping these men and horses with guns, armaments, &c.? Would the minister give the number of men and horses for the two years?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes. For 1911-12: men, 44,045; horses, 8,880; for 1912-13: men, 48,140; horses, 9,758 were trained in camp. That is about 1,000 more horses than were trained the year before and nearly 5,000 more men. This year the total increase over last year will be 9,151 men and 3,528 horses, which is a pretty large increase.

At six o'clock, House resumed, and then took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

PATENT OF COMMERCIAL ACETYLENE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 207, respecting a Patent of the Commercial Acetylene Company of New Jersey.—Mr. Maclean (South York). (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. OLIVER: In the absence of the promoter, this Bill stood over on the last occasion it was up. It is a Bill that affects patent rights, and it certainly should not go through without some responsible statement being made as to how far private rights are affected by it.

Mr. CARVELL: I would suggest to the Government the necessity of bringing in some sort of legislation next session to get rid of all this nonsense of placing people in the position they previously occupied, and which they lost on account of negligence, because in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred these Patent Bills are for the purpose of relieving people of the results of their negligence. It used to be the case that the patentee had to show some reason why he should be reinstated, but now we seem to have reached the point where a man can come here and say that he was negligent and had not paid his fees, and he is then reinstated. If it is right to reinstate a patentee in that way, it is not fair to make him pay two hundred dollars, besides solicitor's fees. It is taking up the time of Parliament. There should be some way of reinstating patentees without taking up the time of Parliament. I have made this statement before, and I offer it as a suggestion to the Government. If they are going to continue the present course of renewing every patent right that has expired by reason of negligence, the patentee should be relieved of the expense of coming here.

Mr. ROGERS: I entirely agree with the remarks of my hon. friend, especially when a patent holder has been negligent in his duty and when he places his Bill and explanation in the hands of some member who is also negligent in his duty, thus wasting the time of Parliament. I entirely agree with the hon. member that the time of Parliament should not be wasted in this way by men who do not appear to have any interest in their own business.

Mr. CARVELL: A system has grown up that is almost vicious in its results. We are getting more and more lax every year. Men come here now and claim reinstatement as a matter of right. They pay two hundred dollars and get their patents renewed. Up till two or three years ago we made the applicant show some reason why he should be reinstated. I can tell my hon. friend that three years ago a matter came before me professionally which meant a lot to the parties I represented. They were willing to establish an industry in my town, and expected to employ forty or fifty men if I could get their patent renewed. But I could not see any reason why it should be renewed, for they had simply been negligent. I did not want them to come and perjure themselves, and I advised them that I did not see any way of getting their patent renewed, and the patent was not renewed. Now, if that case came up to-day, all I would have to say to them would be, pay two hundred dollars and the fees of the solicitor. It is a great change, and I have doubts whether it is a change for the better. Parliament gives a man protection for a certain number of years by reason of his invention. It is a premium to the man for his diligence in inventing some article or piece of machinery. That is all right. But Parliament gives him that protection on certain conditions, one of which is that at the expiration of six years, if he does not pay his fees for renewal, his rights are gone. It seems to me that the public have some rights in this matter as well as the patentee. The man who has not enough interest to pay his fees, does not deserve to be reinstated, and I do not see why Parliament should come to his rescue, simply by asking him to pay $200.

Mr. BURNHAM: The patentee, who comes from Toronto, was here last week and was exceedingly anxious that this Bill should go through. He appeared before the committee, and the Bill seemed to be all right.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): The Bill is to grant an extension of time for one year for the manufacture of the patented invention. The hodlder of the patent is a Belgian, and did not know the manufacturing requirements of the Patent Act. An English company has taken up the invention and proposes to establish a factory in Canada within a year if the patent is reinstated. The facts were brought out fully before the committee, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture being present, and the committee was satisfied that a case had been made out. That is all the explanation I have to offer. It is similar to other Bills that have been before the House. It is very similar to the case covered by the Bill that has just gone through, and I would ask the committee to give it the same consideration.

Mr. NESBITT: What is the patent for?

Mr. MACLEAN: I cannot explain that in detail. It has been before the committee and the minister, and it has gone through the Senate.

Mr. REID (Minister of Customs): The Bill states that it is:

> A patent, issued under the seal of the patent office of Canada, number sixty-seven thousand six hundred and seventy-nine, dated the eighth day of June, one thousand nine hundred, for certain new and useful improvements in the method of storing acetylene, and that the said patent has expired by reason of the non-payment of the fees required by the Patent Act.

Mr. OLIVER: I understood from the promoter of the Bill that this was an extension of time to allow for the manufacturer to begin.

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: But I understand now from the Minister of Customs reading the Bill that it is a case in which the patent right had expired four or five years ago, and it is to renew it.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): The purpose of this Bill is to grant an extension of one year to allow of the manufacturer of the patented invention, and with that extension they will immediately undertake the manufacture of the patent in Canada.

Mr. NESBITT: Is this for making acetylene?

Mr. MACLEAN: Just for storing it.

Mr. OLIVER: I am sure the hon. member will give the committee suitable information as to what the process is.

Mr. LALOR: It seems to me that the principle of extending these patents is altogether wrong. The patentees have a reasonable time in which to comply with the law, and if they do not take enough interest then we should not extend the patents by legislation in this House. If they do not comply with the law the patents should become public property.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): In any event such legislation should be introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, and he should take the responsibility of recommending the passage of these patents in the House; it should not be left to a private member.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): I am quite willing to allow the Bill to stand until the Minister of Agriculture is here if anybody wants that, but inasmuch as similar Bills have gone through the House, until such time as the Government establishes a fixed policy, exception should not be made of one particular Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I agree with that.

Mr. NESBITT: I object to this continuous renewal of patents. If the people who take out patents do not take enough interest to get them renewed, we should not renew them here. I would like this to go as a warning to those whose patents have expired that they will not be renewed in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER: It is a remarkable position to place the House in, because here we are renewing a patent and no one in the House knows what the patent is for. I do not wish to oppose the Bill, but the House certainly should have some information about it. Inasmuch as it relates to acetylene, we ought to have more light on it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PATENT OF MAURICE DELVIGNE.

House in Committee on Bill No. 208, respecting a patent of Maurice Delvigne.—Mr. Barker. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. OLIVER: As this also relates to a patent, and as the hon. member in whose name the bill stands is present, it would be in order to have an explanation.

Mr. BARKER: This Bill is on behalf of a Belgian, who invented an explosive, and who employed people here to get a patent for it. In ignorance of our laws—I do not put that forward as a genuine excuse for the Bill—he did not realize the necessity of renewing it, and allowed the time to expire. When he found out the true situation he at once tendered the money. The patent was granted only three years ago, and the bill protects anybody who may have begun to manufacture the explosive in the interval, so that there can be no harm done. The patentee is paying everything that he would have paid if he had known what was expected of him. The Bill passed the Senate, and they thought it was a proper Bill. It also passed our committee, and, subject to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) says as to these cases being dealt with in this way, I cannot imagine a better case for reinstatement than this. This Belgian had no knowledge of the fact that he was risking anything; he thought he had his patent secured, and he offered to pay the money whenever he found it was necessary. In the Bill there is an express clause providing that any person who has begun to manufacture the explosive is protected, and that he may continue to manufacture.

Mr. CARVELL: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that the patent was granted only three years ago?

Mr. BARKER: In 1910.

Mr. CARVELL: Had the party to manufacture according to the provisions of section 38 of the Act?

Mr. BARKER: I think that was so. He did not begin within the three years, but he was ignorant of the necessity for doing so.

Mr. CARVELL: This Bill will of course go through, but it only illustrates the point I was making. If there is a principle of patent law known to every man who has had anything to do with patents, and to every solicitor in Canada who ever took out a patent for a patentee, it is that the patentee must commence to manufacture the article within two years, or come within the provisions of section 44 of the Act. I do not want to say anything offensive about my hon. friend's Belgian, friend, but no man can be so innocent, who would wish to get a patent in Canada and who would employ a solicitor for that purpose, that he would not know that he must commence to manufacture the article within two years. It is not possible, yet the man comes here and says: I did not know. That only illustrates the truth of what I said a little while ago that men ought not to be placed in that position. If it is right to renew these patents and allow them to evade the law, let us do it in a less public way than this; let us hand it over to the Department of Agriculture, to the Patent Commissioner, to some board, or to some public body, that can take these matters up, deal with them solely on the merits of each case and reinstate a man in his rights, if it is proper that he should be reinstated, but do not bring him to Parliament and make him state to the world that which it must bother him to state, or get somebody to state it for him.

Mr. BARKER: I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) says that it may perhaps be well to have some remedy other than that of coming to Parliament. But that is not the law yet. This man is a foreigner, a Belgian, he had people acting for him here and he had no notion that he was risking everything. The moment he found out the position of affairs he acted very promptly in coming here. The original patent was issued in 1910. If you can have any excuse under the present law I think this is a reasonable excuse in this case.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not want to oppose the passage of this Bill, because, as my hon. friend says, this case is as good as a number of other cases that have received the assent of Parliament. But clearly the principle is vicious. My opinion is, however, that it is not a change in legislation that is wanted but that it is a change in administration. These are private Bills, it is true, and it has not been the custom of the Government to take control of private legislation. That is probably a sound principle under most conditions, but where private legislation is continually and repeatedly sought, as it has been at this session, to set aside the law which embodied the mind of Parliament, I think the time has come for the Government to take the matter in hand and either to propose to Parliament such changes in the law as would be right and fair or else assume responsibility for private legislation of this character. I am putting this before the Government with all respect and without any desire to find fault, but I think that the conditions which have been shown during this session with regard to the renewal of patents are such as reasonably call for definite action and for a definite policy by the Government in the administration of the patent law.

Mr. ROGERS: I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), and were it not for the fact that the session is about drawing to a close, I would have no hesitation in saying that we would introduce legislation to cover the points which he has suggested. In the meanwhile I would venture to suggest that it would be well for the holders of patents to consult with their legal representatives, and if their legal representatives continue to be negligent in the future, as they have apparently been in the past, I have no hesitation in saying that the Government will next session introduce legislation to remedy this condition of affairs.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

On motion of Mr. Lancaster the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 99, respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company—Mr. Guilbault—were referred to the Select Standing Committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines.

On motion of Mr. Fripp, the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 183, respecting the city of Ottawa—Mr. Fripp—were referred to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 228, to incorporate the Pointe aux Trembles Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Baker.

Bill No. 230, respecting certain patents of Otto R. Barnett.—Mr. Kyte.

Bill No. 233, for the relief of Frank William Meek.—Mr. Pardee.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Active militia—allowance, $120,000.

Mr. OLIVER: When this item was under consideration at six o'clock, I was anxious to get from the hon. minister an understanding of the conditions that are now imposed or observed by the department in dealing with the care of arms and accoutrements of country squadrons. I assume that it is the desire of the department to establish mounted corps throughout the western country; that is, as the agricultural population become well settled and fairly prosperous, it is hoped that the young men will find recreation and interest in connection with the militia; and that, as a matter of fact, the young men growing up in the prairie provinces will be the great strength of the militia force, especially so far as mounted men are concerned. Therefore it is important that the department, in its arrangements, should take cognizance of the conditions prevailing in strictly rural settlements. One of the difficulties is the care of arms and accoutrements in a purely rural community or where the community is almost purely rural. What is the policy of the department in providing for the care of arms and accoutrements of a squadron of militia in a rural community?

Mr. HUGHES (Minister of Militia): The policy is to give $100 allowance for each squadron for care of arms. The officer or someone in connection with each squadron looks after this himself. He usually provides his own building, sometimes an upstairs room in his own dwelling or a hall. The policy is, wherever there is a goodly sized town or even a country village with a squadron, to build a small drill hall. The custom has been to put an armoury in the public buildings. I have figured up the additional cost to the Public Works Department of these armouries in public buildings. I find that a very convenient little building can be put up as a drill hall in each of these towns for less money than it takes to place an armoury in a public building, the reason being that armouries in public buildings are more highly finished than the ones that we put up. It will take a good many years before we can catch up, because there are about eight or nine hundred of these units throughout the country. Therefore we must rent for a long time. Where we do not rent, we give an allowance of $100 which recompenses a good man. For example, Wetaskiwin is a large town. The officer there did not want to be bothered with the matter so we rented a building. The rent is a little more than the allowance. We use the building for drilling the men in the evenings, and in that way get an additional advantage out of it.

Mr. OLIVER: The experience I had was that the allowance was under most circumstances entirely inadequate for the rent of a building that would take proper care of the arms and accoutrements of a mounted corps.

Mr. HUGHES: For saddlery, it is.

Mr. OLIVER: The necessity of having a water-tight and a good and roomy building for taking proper care of the saddlery is not recognized in the amount of money available under that arrangement. I wish to emphasize, as strongly as I can to the minister the absolute necessity of having either a larger allowance or a more elastic arrangement than formerly prevailed, especially in regard to mounted corps. While $100 might be quite sufficient to make provision for the arms and accoutrements of an infantry company, it would not be at all adequate for saddlery. There is another feature of it that I am sure must have struck my hon. friend. The saddlery that is required for the militia force might very well be used in civil life if it is not properly cared for, whereas the arms and accoutrements of infantry are not liable to be used except when the men are on duty. Unless the saddlery is kept under proper control, it is liable to become missing or the worse of wear.

While the minimum rental allowance that the minister speaks of may be adequate to provide a place to store the arms and accoutrements of an infantry company, it absolutely is not adequate, nor anything like adequate, to provide suitable storage room for the material of a mounted squadron. I take it for granted that it is to the prairie country that my hon. friend looks for the development of his mounted forces. That is where the mounted service is most likely to attract the favourable consideration of the young men. But if they are met, at the very beginning of their organization, by expense or inconvenience, it is distinctly a discouragement, for they are very apt not to take the interest in it that we all wish them to take. I urge the hon. minister to make a larger minimum for the mounted companies, recognizing the greater value and greater bulk of their material, and that he provide greater elasticity in the provision according to the circumstances. Because, while in a very small country village it may be possible to get rental at a low rate, when you take a thriving and a growing town, this accommodation must be paid for. It costs money, and if not paid for it cannot be had. I had great difficulty in impressing that on the late Minister of Militia; I hope I shall be more successful with the present minister.

Mr. HUGHES: We are working along the very lines the hon. member has laid down. In most cases, wherever an application is made and officers report upon it, we have increased the allowance to $125, $150 and so on. I may say that the value of the clothing and equipment of a cavalry regiment is $36,000, and it pays from an economic point of view to look after it.

Mr. CARVELL: Do I understand that the captain of an infantry company receives the same for looking after the arms of the company as the officer commanding a troop of cavalry?

Mr. HUGHES: No, the infantry get less.

Mr. CARVELL: That is what I thought, but the hon. member for Edmonton seemed to think that the minister assumed that they got the same amount.

Mr. HUGHES: The infantry get $80 and the artillery and cavalry more. We increase them because of the greater value and bulk of their material and the greater need of taking care of them.

Mr. CARVELL: I suppose the Minister of Militia will do as he has a mind to—we may take that for granted.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, he is amenable to reason.

Mr. HUGHES: Certainly.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. gentleman says he is going to establish small drill halls all over the country—nine hundred or a thousand of them.

Mr. HUGHES: No, my hon. successors will do that; I will not be here that long.

Mr. CARVELL: I believe I had the honour of having in my constituency the first armoury and public building in Canada. Does the hon. minister think that he will get better results from the small buildings he is going to build than from the combination? If he is going to have a building big enough for a drill hall, he is going to spend many thousands of dollars. He cannot get architects and draughtsmen to design and put up cheap buildings for him. It cannot be done with public officials.

Mr. HENDERSON: They could do it, but they will not.

Mr. CARVELL: No, it cannot be done with Government officials. They will design expensive buildings, and the minister will have to build them. If he is going to put up a building of any size he will run into five figures at least and when he has the building, he must have the expense of caretakers, fuel and so on. But in the combination building, one set of officials, one caretaker, one expense for fuel and light will do the whole thing. The smaller building may satisfy the vanity of my hon. friend, but it will not conduce to economy for the ratepayers of Canada.

Mr. HUGHES: I do not want to wrangle across the floor of the House, but my engineers have looked into the matter. As yet we are very economical; I do not know what we may be in ten or twelve years. In every instance where we have been asked to join in having one of these combination buildings and armouries—which, I am sorry to say, is never used for drilling purposes, but is used for smoking, card-playing, spending the evening and not for the upbuilding of the militia—when we have inquired into the cost of the thing and the architects of the Public Works Department have given us figures, we have found that with the extra money needed to produce the combination building, we can produce a commodious drill hall suitable for any company in Canada to drill in, we are doing it as a matter of fact. If the hon. gentleman will come down to the department, the engineers will show him the plans—if necessary, will show him the buildings.

Mr. CARVELL: What do these buildings cost?

Mr. HUGHES: They cost $6,000, $7,000 and $8,000—and the building for a battalion $16,000. This building has rifle galleries in it and everything.

Mr. HENDERSON: Are they wooden buildings?

Mr. HUGHES: No, brick buildings.

Mr. OLIVER: What size?

Mr. HUGHES: Fifty feet by eighty-five, sixty by eighty-five, and we have one eighty-five feet by one hundred and six, which is to be put up for $30,000, with armouries and all that sort of thing—one-third of the old cost.

Mr. OLIVER: I find a very considerable indefiniteness in my hon. friend's statement in his reply to my very urgent inquiry. In order to get the matter nailed down, can he give me what the provision is in regard to the Morinville squadron in regard to their armoury?

Mr. HUGHES: I do not know anything about it—I know where Morinville is; I have been there a number of times.

Mr. OLIVER: I thought the hon. minister had the information at hand.

Mr. HUGHES: I think there was an armoury building there, commenced by my predecessor—an armoury, not a drill hall. I think it cost away up in the thousands. I can give an instance at Niagara Falls, where $50,000 or $60,000 was spent for a building which we could put up for $10,000. Then, at Port Arthur, there was a drill hall that cost $200,000, and we can put it up for $60,000.

Mr. OLIVER: There are certain squadrons of mounted rifles situated at points in the vicinity of Edmonton. At Morinville, the squadron has an armoury, at Fort Saskatchewan I do not think they have. What allowance is that squadron getting for the storage of accoutrements?

Mr. HUGHES: One hundred dollars, besides the cost of fuel, &c.

Mr. OLIVER: I would say, beyond any question, that instead of the Government paying the cost of that caretaking and storage of accoutrement, the men or officers are paying part of it.

Mr. HUGHES: Yes I think they are, I know in some cases they paid thousands of dollars.

Mr. OLIVER: I think that is entirely wrong. It was wrong under the late Government and it is just as wrong under this Government. I do not think it is to be expected that men should sacrifice their money as well as their time and attention for such a purely material matter as the storage of accoutrements that belong to the Government and which have to be provided for their use.

Mr. HUGHES: In the larger towns in the West especially it is very difficult to secure a building at as low a rate as in a small town. We are anxious to do the best we can for the fellows in each locality.

Mr. OLIVER: There is this condition as compared with eastern Canada that in the smaller towns of eastern Canada which are not growing rapidly you can readily obtain a small building that is sufficient for the purpose at a moderate rental but in the West where every building that will keep out the weather commands a price, is worth money, it is more difficult to secure accommodation of this kind and I do not think the Government should expect the men to pay for such accommodation. I hope that the policy which the minister has indicated, though not very definitely, will be carried out. It is necessary to do something of the kind if the force is to increase as we wish it to.

Mr. GRAHAM: I approve of the policy of distributing a larger number of smaller buildings for the use of the militia. I think it would bring practical results which no greater expenditure could bring and would give accommodation to a far greater number of squadrons. Might I ask the minister which one of these dimensions that he has mentioned we are to have in Renfrew.

Mr. HUGHES: I wanted Renfrew to have the eighty-five feet by one hundred and eighty-five feet, but I notice by the supplementaries that the estimate is not in, it has not been passed; but I hope to have it down in a further supplementary and, if not, I can erect them one, not quite as large, but nearly as large, out of the general vote. I would be glad to do that to oblige my hon. friend.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is very satisfactory. The next question is more personal to my hon. friend. I am asking this information for all Canada, although I sincerely hope that the course which is suggested will not be taken by the minister until after he has erected this building in Renfrew, because I would rather trust to him than to any other minister. He suggested that these buildings would be erected by his successor. Is that a confirmation of the rumour that has been afloat that my hon. friend might become the head of another department?

Mr. HUGHES: What I meant was that it will take at least twenty-five years to get all of these buildings and I think if I put in twenty years here I will then be fit for retirement.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not think that, not for retirement.

Mr. MARCIL: Seeing that we are going to have a rather aggressive and costly militia policy, I would like some information about the methods of establishing militia regiments. I find it remarkable that in the constituencies of Gaspé and Bonaventure, with an area of ten thousand miles, we have not a single volunteer. There has never been a dollar of expenditure for militia purposes in those counties. I have been glancing over the militia list, and I find that these two constituencies are comprised in what is known as the fifth divisional area of the province of Quebec which comprises a vast territory, twenty-three constituencies, from Gaspé up to Richmond and Wolfe. I know that Richmond and Wolfe, Compton, Beauce, the districts around Quebec, have some volunteer organizations. I think they extend all the way down to Rimouski. Beyond that there is no organization whatever. Is the organization of those corps left entirely to the personal initiative of the citizens, or is there an official of the department charged with the particular work of seeing that each district has a certain organization, has a cadet corps, or a battery of artillery, or a squadron of cavalry, or a regiment of infantry or some organisation of some kind? Is there some principle on which the department proceeds? We have in those constituencies some of the best material in the country from which to recruit volunteers, Scotch, Irish, English and French, but no attempt seems to have been made to form militia corps there.

Mr. HUGHES: I am pleased to see my hon. friend interested in this matter. If he will come down to the Lévis camp in a week or two I will be glad to show him some men from Bonaventure in the 89th regiment.

Mr. MARCIL: How do they reach there, by joining regiments of other counties?

Mr. HUGHES: The 89th of Rimouski.

Mr. MARCIL: Would it not be possible to have them recruited there?

Mr. HUGHES: We find that one of the companies is recruited at Matepedia.

Mr. MARCIL: That is only the fringe of the district.

Mr. HUGHES: I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would take a personal interest in this matter in his county. It is men like himself that we want to see at the head of the corps, the best men in the country. There is no officer for recruiting, especially militia regiments, that comes spontaneously from the people of the corps and there are some now in my hon. friend's county. Major Paquet of Quebec has charge of the cadets for that district, and I think there are about fifteen thousand cadets already organized in the Quebec district, including the district represented by my hon. friend from Bonaventure. If he will be good enough to take the matter in hand, to pick out the different officers, I would like him to pick out the very best men in the county, irrespective of race or politics, and I am sure that the officers of the department would be only too glad to see a regiment established in those counties.

Mr. MARCIL: The initiative rests with the people in the district? Is the selection of the particular branch of the service also left to the people of the district?

Mr. HUGHES: In a rural district, infantry is best.

Mr. MARCIL: As to the cadet corps, I understand that there is an organization at New Carlisle. Levis camp is so far from my constituency that the men can attend only every other year. There should be a recruiting officer or organizing officer down there. Why should the minister not send one of his officers down to that district and point out the advantages of the service ?

Mr. HUGHES: I shall be delighted to ask Colonel Landry to go down.

Mr. GERMAN: I would like to call the minister's attention to the necessity for an armoury in the town of Welland. A few years ago the Department of Railways and Canals agreed to hand over to the Militia Department a piece of Government canal land for the purpose of erecting thereon an armoury in the town of Welland. There is a squadron of dragoons under Major Sharp there, and a company of the 44th battalion. We have Colonel Raymond, Colonel Cohoe, and Major Rose there, and these officers are all in favour of having an armoury. At the time an armoury was first suggested for Welland, one was also suggested for Niagara Falls, and the minister's predecessor said he did not think there should be two. I told him that the Niagara Falls one was more important, and consequently one was built there. The next town in importance is Welland. There is an excellent location there, and the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned, are in perfect accord with the idea, and I am sure have brought the matter to my hon. friend's attention. So far as I can, I desire to back up their suggestions. An armoury could be built very cheaply. There is a nice location and a nice lookout, and it would be a grand thing for the service in that locality. I trust my hon. friend will consider the suggestion favourably and act promptly.

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. member spoke to me once before about this matter and the officers he has mentioned, very excellent officers, have also spoken about it. There would have been an estimate this year, but it is in the list for next year. We intended to erect a small drill hall, but I have learned that Welland is growing very rapidly, and it will certainly require a larger hall; therefore we will postpone it until next year.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Can the minister give me any information regarding the armoury at Yorkton, Sask. The officer in charge of the regiment stationed at Yorkton went to the expense two or three years ago of fitting up the old immigration hall for armoury purposes. It cost him seven or eight hundred dollars, and he has never been recouped by the Government.

Mr. HUGHES: I am sure he never sent in his bill to my predecessor, or to me.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Perhaps he billed the Public Works Department, but I know he has been endeavouring for several years to get some of that expenditure back.

Mr. HUGHES: Tell him to send in his bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS: What is being done at Wetaskiwin in the matter of an armoury?

Mr. HUGHES: There is one squadron at Wetaskiwin, and we have rented a hall there. I am sorry to say that we pay a lot of money, between two and three hundred dollars, for a hall simply for storing the saddlery and so on, besides paying for the heating. I think that is pretty liberal.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Is the minister prepared to build an armoury or drill hall?

Mr. HUGHES: Certainly. In all these matters the policy of the department is to request the locality to furnish a site. We are now about two hundred or three hundred sites ahead, more than we can utilize for some time to come. I do not believe that our engineers have a site at Wetaskiwin. If my hon. friend could suggest the advisability of picking out a site, it might hasten the construction of an armoury.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The gentleman who ran against me, and who holds the patronage, has told the people of Wetaskiwin that there was an estimate this year for a hall

Mr. HUGHES: If he could give us a site, he might possibly be telling the truth.

Mr. LAW: Has the minister decided upon the size of the armoury which he intends to build at Yarmouth, and when it will be built?

Mr. HUGHES: Have they furnished a site? The hon. gentleman's friends were up here and spoke about it. I have no recollection that they had any site in view, though I think they promised one.

Mr. LAW: I believe that a site has been purchased, but perhaps notification has not reached the minister. When will the armoury be built?

Mr. HUGHES: It cannot be done this year.

Mr. LAW: What will be the size of the armoury?

Mr. HUGHES: When the time comes the engineers from Halifax will go down to Yarmouth, look at the sites there, and study the prospects to see whether the town is likely to grow or not. That largely determines the size of a drill hall. We go by the engineers' reports very largely.

Mr. LAW: Yarmouth has a population of about seven thousand and is growing, and I have no doubt it will continue to grow in the next few years. I would impress upon the minister the necessity of giving us an armoury of good size.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the city of Edmonton is in the position suggested by my hon. friend. I think they have provided something in the way of land.

Mr. HUGHES: Edmonton was the first town in the West to donate an entire square. I do not know what the value of the site is, but it is a very valuable one, and Edmonton is getting a $200,000 drill hall, suitable for the needs of the city.

Mr. OLIVER: When will it be begun?

Mr. HUGHES: I think it is under way now.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the department now paying in Edmonton for accommodation?

Mr. HUGHES: We are paying $1,900 altogether for rents.

Mr. OLIVER: For a time I know the officers were considerably out of pocket in paying for accommodation. I saw something in the newspapers recently about the resignation of some officers of the 101st Regiment in Edmonton. Has the minister any information about that?

Mr. HUGHES: I have not heard anything about it.

Annual drill, $1,730,000.

Mr. CARVELL: Would the minister kindly explain the enormous increase in this item as compared with two years ago? There must be some good reason. I have gone over the matter hurriedly, but I understand that there is some $600,000 or $700,000 of an increase.

Mr. HUGHES: We have not increased the figures of the year before last.

Mr. CARVELL: I can give my hon. friend the figures from the report of the Militia Council for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1912. I will look it up and let the minister know what the figures are.

Mr. HUGHES: I may say that last year, over the year 1911, there was an increase of nearly 5,000 men and nearly a thousand horses drilled. This year, over last year, there is an increase of 9,500 men and 3,528 horses drilled.

Mr. CARVELL: Does that amount include the cadets?

Mr. HUGHES: No, we have 30,000 cadets drilling outside of that.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): What about the boy scouts?

Mr. HUGHES: They are not a Government organization, but they are a very excellent organization all the same.

Mr. CARVELL: In the year 1911-12 you had 45,000 men.

Mr. HUGHES: 44,000. Last year we had 48,140, not including the city corps. Then we had 9,758 horses, an increase of 5,000 men and nearly a thousand horses. This year we are going to have 9,000 more men than last year, or 14,000 more than the year before, and 3,500 more horses than last year, or nearly 4,500 more than the year before. The infantry force in two years has increased in numbers over a third and yet the increase in the expenditure for annual drill is very small.

Mr. CARVELL: It is an increase of about 60 per cent. That may be a very slight increase. But, I find at page 38 of this report that the vote provided $1,169,000 of which $155,000 was unexpended and that left practically $1,000,000. Now the hon. gentleman wants $1,730,000 and $100,000 in the supplementary estimates making $1,800,000. He wants nearly $2,000,000 more than he expended two years ago and yet he says there is only a slight increase.

Mr. HUGHES: There were no city corps drilled in camp the year before last. I might point out further that the pay of the men has been increased to a dollar a day, that there are sixteen days' training for a large part of the force and the whole of the cavalry and artillery. A few years ago a company of fifty-seven would cost $4,500 for pay and allowance and feed in camp. Now the cost is nearly $12,800 owing to the increase in pay. The pay is practically double what it was before, the men were drilled sixteen days last year, the city corps went to camp last year, which they did not do before, and they are going to camp this year.

Mr. CARVELL: Does my hon. friend mean to say that the city corps did not drill in 1911-12?

Mr. HUGHES: Not in camp.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, they got a lot of money if they did not.

Mr. HUGHES: They were drilled at their headquarters for twelve days.

Mr. CARVELL: They got $217,000.

Mr. HUGHES: They will have from four to seven days in camp in addition.

Mr. CARVELL: It seems to me that if we do not put the brake on this militia expenditure in some way or other there is no telling what the end is going to be. It is nothing short of a scandal that we are going to spend between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000 this year on militia in a peace-loving country as Canada is, in which there is no more danger of a possible invasion than there is of an earthquake overtaking the whole Dominion and wiping it off the face of the earth.

Mr. HUGHES: There was one the other night.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know hardly what to say. I have no doubt that I will be taken to task in certain quarters for presuming to criticize the militia estimates. It may be said that I am not loyal and all that sort of thing, but I am willing to take all the responsibility of what I am saying now. When it comes to spending $11,000,000 on our militia and when we come to think of the way in which the militia has been increased by the present minister we should stop and think what it all means. It is something terrific. When the hon. gentleman took charge of the department two years ago there was an expenditure of about $7,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES: $8,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon: He will find it in this report if there is any question about it. I find here that the total expenditure for 1911-12 was $7,579,000. A portion of it was unexpended, so that it brings us practically to $7,000,000. Now the minister has got it in two years, or practically one year because he took the estimates of the old Government for last year, up to $10,500,000, making an increase of $3,000,000 for one year, and he is going to add half a million to that in the supplementaries. There is between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 of a jump in one year. What does he want? Is he going to give us a standing army of 100,000 men? Do we want that? Does he think the people need it? I never heard anyone who had any idea that we would be called upon to use the militia against an enemy except the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who the other night said that in case of war between the United States and Japan it may be necessary to police the borders of the Dominion to prevent our people from sending a few thousand bushels of wheat over to the United States and selling it at the best price they could get for it. If this money was going to the men who spend their time and devote their energies to the militia service, I would not feel so badly about it, but out of an expenditure of between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000 we have less than $2,000,000 going to the men. My hon friend in his orgies of extravagance has only about $1,830,000 for the men. What on earth becomes of the rest? It would make an interesting story if my hon. friend would take half an hour and try to explain it. Here we have eight and a half millions of money being squandered—I will not say squandered, but being distributed to everybody else but the men who ought to have it. Surely $1,800,000 ought to be enough for the whole thing. If you take the report and look at page 35 it will give you some little idea of what they do with the money. I find that in the year 1911-12 they spent $243,000 for eighteen-pounder limber wagons and $366,000 was paid to the War Office on account of thirteen and eighteen pounder guns.

Then, there is a very interesting item of $20,000 for inspection of small arms and scabbards. There must be a lot of men drawing big salaries for doing nothing when you can squander $20,000 for inspecting 13,000 rifles and 20,000 scabbards. The Minister of Railways yesterday told us he was going to take up the rails on a few miles of railway down in New Brunswick, because the road did not pay running expenses; he was taking away from the people a railway connection they had had for forty years because it would cost a portion of $13,000 a year to maintain it, but here we are throwing away $10,000,000 on the militia and $20,000 for the inspection of a few rifles. That may satisfy the ambition of the Minister of Militia, but it is getting to be a very serious matter in Canada. I know that the minister and many of his friends will find fault with me, and I presume his friends will say I am the one disloyal man in Canada, but I mean every word I am saying and I hope the public sentiment of Canada will be aroused to such a pitch that they will put a stop to this nonsense. If they have $10,000,000 to spend on militia, an excess of three and one-half million dollars over last year, they could use that money in a hundred different ways to really benefit the people of Canada. There is a great demand for the development of our natural resources and for facilities for carrying on our commerce, but it would seem that the whole occupation of the Minister of Militia is to build up a great army and a great war party in Canada for what earthly reason I do not know except it be the glorification of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. HUGHES: No one is charging the hon. member with being disloyal; at least, I am not; he is merely getting off his annual speech on the militia question. He was always tame when his own party was in power; he used to take a fling once in a while at these fuss and feather fellows and then he would subside. I am delighted to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) again on this question. I want to tell him that I am not spending this money; it is the people of Canada who are demanding this. I want to tell him that we are only drilling—

Mr. CARVELL: Ten or fifteen per cent more than ten years ago when it cost only two and a half million dollars.

Mr. HUGHES: I am not responsible for ten years ago. I am dealing with the present. We are drilling this year about 56,000 men and 13,000 horses. Let me tell my hon. friend that the people of Canada to the extent of about 70,000 more are demanding the right to train themselves and be trained to defend their country. It is the people who are demanding this, it is not the Minister of Militia. They are demanding the right to train themselves to defend their homes and their firesides and their country, and I tell the hon. gentleman that so long as I am Minister of Militia I am going to do my level best to give them a chance to do so, and I am going to do it as economically as it possibly can be done. It is the right of every citizen in the Dominion to train himself, and be trained to defend his country and if he demands that right, I am not the man to tell him he is not to do it. So long as the system is voluntary the people must pay for it; if the system is compulsory, then it will make it much more economic, but whether it is compulsory or whether it is voluntary, arms must be furnished and guns must be bought. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) is an old artillery man, and he knows the cost of a battery of artillery; it costs money, but it is money well spent in the upbuilding of the country. You may look around any part of the universe you choose and show me a race that is not possessed of the military spirit, and I will show you a craven and degenerate race. Show me a part of the world where the people neglect the defence of their homes and their firesides, and run after graft in docks and dredging and railways and I will show you a degenerate race.

Mr. GRAHAM: You will have to take that back when you get into the Railway Department.

Mr. HUGHES: I am not going to the Railway Department. It is presided over by a gentleman of great ability and good looks and splendid capability.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It is said that he is coming out and you are going in.

Mr. HUGHES: Not at all. We have nearly 60,000 voluntary militia now and we have 35,000 cadets trained this year in Canada for the modest sum of $10,000,000.

Mr. VERVILLE: The modest sum.

Mr. HUGHES: My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) speaks of only $2,000,000 reaching the men. Has he ever figured it up? I can give him the expenditures in his own county in recent years and it rolls up to a considerable amount. I am glad to see my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) take an interest in militia matters now. He is generally complaining that his county does not get anything and I am sorry to say that not much money has been spent on militia matters in his county, although there has been a lot of hard-earned money of the people of Canada blown in along the shores of the gulf of St. Lawrence, and the maritime provinces, and Ontario and the West, and I do not know that it has built up the manhood of the nation any more than is proper, but I do know that the money spent for the training of the militia makes a better set of men in the Dominion of Canada than we would have if the money were not so spent. I make no apology for my aspiration to have 100,000 men trained and I make no apology direct or indirect for acceding to the demands of the people. As far as I can induce my hard hearted colleagues to go, in the expenditure of public money for militia matters, I am not going to make an apology.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are a parsimonious lot.

Mr. HUGHES: Yes, they are. When 70,000 people rise up in their might and demand the right to be trained, and I have to tell them we have no money to do it, it is pretty hard, but I am glad to say that a great many of them have organized and are training themselves this year without any money.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Are the women interested in this?

Mr. HUGHES: I am glad my hon. friend asked the question. When I took office I found the good women of the Dominion of Canada down on the militia system of this country, and rightly so to a large extent; I found that they were refusing to allow their sons to go into the camps, but I want to tell my hon. friend that the good women of this country to-day are right behind the militia movement and urging it on in every way they can.

Mr. PROULX: Has the minister closed the canteens?

Mr. HUGHES: There never have been any canteens since I have been Minister of Militia to be closed. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) to be good enough to blame the people of Canada but not to blame the Minister of Militia. I point out to him that at Confederation it was understood that one-tenth of the annual revenue of Canada was to go for the development of the militia of this country and I point out further that I am far from the estimate of one-tenth of the revenue of the Dominion of Canada in my expenditure. That was the understanding with the Imperial Government at the time of Confederation, and I am two or three million dollars yet within that estimate.

Mr. OLIVER: You are catching up fast.

Mr. HUGHES: I intend to catch up fast and I intend to help the people of Canada who are demanding the right to train themselves to defend their homes and their firesides. I am not urging them to do it. They are coming forward in thousands demanding the right. I have yet to see why they should not be accorded the right. I am sure my hon. friend would rather pay the trifling sum that is required for the training of these extra men than squander it in useless dredging and in erecting wharfs where boats will never tie up.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend mentioned the words 'compulsory system' a moment ago. When one-sixth of the estimates were being considered, somebody asked him what his views were. I think I am entitled to have his views on that question. He has expressed his views outside of the House during recess, and I think we have a right to know what his views are.

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. gentleman has no right to ask me what my private views are, directly or indirectly.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Your views as a minister?

Mr. HUGHES: My hon. friend has no right whatever, and I have not accorded him the right to ask what my private views are or my views as a minister. When the matter is decided upon by the Cabinet I shall be glad to let him know what their views are. He has stated that I have made certain statements in the papers. I would like to know what the statements are.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is reported in the newspapers.

Mr. HUGHES: That is a different matter. I stated that in South Africa Louis Botha requires each man who does not turn out and perform his annual drill to contribute the sum of $5 a year to the treasury of the South African colony, in order to maintain the defence of that colony and of the Empire, to keep the old flag flying, as he says, in any part of the world. A similar idea is carried out in Australia, in Switzerland, and in other parts of the world. That is the system adopted in countries where there is practically universal training. I have not said what my views are on the question.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend says that he is compelled to spend all this money. While I believe we ought to have a small militia force in Canada, I see no reason why it should be any larger than it is to-day, if as large. The militia force has not increased to any great extent in the last ten years. The number of men trained is not very much greater. I admit there is an enormous increase in the number of horses, and probably some of these may be necessary, because, if you create a mounted corps you must of course provide it with horses. Horses are expensive, but a number of horses that have been paid for are absolutely useless. That is what I am grumbling at. There is a company in my own constituency called the No. 1 Company of Engineers, which used to be called the Brighton Engineers. Annually they take to camp twenty to twenty-five horses. They have nothing for these horses to do, and I have seen them standing up at the picket line for the whole ten days. These horses have to be fed and paid for. Last year I pointed out to the hon. minister that he was making a big mistake in taking all these corps to Petawawa. He was determined, however, that the Minister of Militia should be glorified, if ever a man was glorified.

Mr. HUGHES: Against my own wishes, I carried out the policy that my hon. friend himself inaugurated by supporting his own Minister of Militia, because every plan that was carried out at Petawawa last year was formed by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Militia. I point-blank refused to carry it out this year.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend may blame his predecessor in office if he wants to; but he cannot blame me, because I pointed out to him the difficulty of transporting horses a thousand miles when it was not necessary.

Mr. HUGHES: I am not blaming anybody.

Mr. CARVELL: I told my hon. friend he would have trouble if he transported these horses a thousand miles, and he has had trouble and nothing but trouble. I asked for a return some time ago and I got an order for it showing all the correspondence regarding claims for horses in the Kent field battery. I find here that about twenty per cent of the horses taken to Petawawa got sick. The department had to pay pretty large claims. The men were dissatisfied, and I am sorry to say that in some cases their claims have not been paid. I have here the claim of one of the drivers who had two horses, one of which was very sick and was laid up for three or four weeks. This driver can get no satisfaction whatever for the loss of his horse, although he has made claim after claim. All this is due to the unbusinesslike policy of my hon. friend in taking these horses a thousand miles when there was no necessity for it. It is such things that cause this enormous expense, without any returns from it. This year I am glad to see that he is taking all these corps to Sussex which is only a short distance. That is all right. The people of Canada are not demanding this expenditure half as much as the Minister of Militia is. I know something of the trouble that the officers are having in regard to recruiting. I do not believe there is a corps in Canada that is not violating the regulations in order to fill the companies. Men under age and over age are being taken on. That shows the difficulty the officers are having in getting their corps filled up. When my hon. friend tries to tell us that the sentiment of the country is so great that he has got 70,000 men demanding the right to be trained, I say that this is what he has got. He has got about seventy officers who are demanding the right to form corps and to get these men to train, for their own glorification. It is not the men who want it; it is the fellows who want to be officers, and who want to create these corps. They go around and coax the young men and the old men to come into the corps. Then my hon. friend comes down to Parliament and says, See what we have done. If my hon. friend would ask the ordinary people, he would find that they do not want this militia expenditure. I know, in the atmosphere in which he is living, he hears nothing else, and he does not want to hear anything else, because it is music to his ears when these fellows come to him from all parts of the country and say to him. We want a corps here and a corps there.

Mr. HUGHES: Liberal members and Tory members.

Mr. CARVELL: I know who they are—just the class of men I have been describing. However, I have pointed out one of his blunders, and one way in which money is being squandered. Not very much—only $10,000 or $15,000.

Mr. HUGHES: Ten times that.

Mr. CARVELL: That just shows how easy it is to squander $100,000. I am not opposed to a reasonable militia force. I believe, probably it is necessary; I am opposed to this unwarranted squandering of public money.

Mr. BURNHAM: What does the hon. gentleman think the militia force is necessary for?

Mr. CARVELL: That is a very pertinent question. The only time within my lifetime that I have seen actual need for the militia force was in 1885, when we had trouble in the Northwest, and it was necessary to send men out there. And it is once in a while necessary to turn out a few men to support the civil authorities.

Mr. BURNHAM: To put down labour riots?

Mr. CARVELL: Not labour riots particularly, but any disturbance in which the civil power requires the support of the militia force. The militia has been used for that, and may be used for it again. But we have now a permanent force that will attend to that and we do not have to call out the militia for it. If there is anything to be added to this answer to my hon. friend, I do not know what it is. At the time of the South African war, we sent some men to South Africa. But we did not send only the Canadian militia; the militia formed the nucleus and supplied the machinery by which men volunteered.

Mr. MARCIL: We sent no organized corps.

Mr. CARVELL: No. But though I have seen but one occasion for the use of militia in my lifetime, I would not say to disband the militia. I say that every country ought to have a reasonable militia. But I object to this enormous increase of expenditure. When we get to $7,000,000, that ought to be the time to quit, but the Minister of Militia thinks it the time to begin, and if he is allowed to have his way, instead of $10,000,000, he will spend $20,000,000. He proposes to spend ten per cent of the total revenue, and as the revenue is expected to be $200,000,000 next year, that will mean $20,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES: I did not think it was so high. Fine!

Mr. CARVELL: That is the estimate of the Finance Minister, and I take him as an authority. The Minister of Militia will find opportunity to spend it—if it was $40,000,000, he would spend it, and much of it, no doubt, on just such useless affairs as in his transportation of horses to Petawawa. He will not repeat that expenditure, because he has had his lesson, but he will do something else next year that will be just as bad. He has to do it to spend the money. He will buy—

An hon. MEMBER: Automobiles.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, no doubt he will buy more automobiles. But I do not wish to discuss the automobiles now; an item will come up on which that discussion will be more in order. But I think the Minister of Militia should tell this committee that he is going to quit this enormous expenditure of public money.

Mr. PROULX: There is some criticism in the press of the army of high officials that are drawing high salaries, yet without work to do. A Government paper speaks of $200,000 spent on 'Scotch and soda officers', meaning, I suppose, officers who spend their time at the club and have no work to do.

Mr. HUGHES: Let me say a word in reply to the hon. member for Carleton. In 1911, while a Government supported by my hon. friend was in power, the camp was assembled at Petawawa, exactly the same as last year.

Mr. CARVELL: The hon. gentleman knows that we took the men, not the horses.

Mr. HUGHES: In 1911, men and horses went to Petawawa. In 1912 my predecessor had laid out the plans to go to Petawawa, and to take the officers and men. I came into office—

Mr. CARVELL: Does the hon. minister mean to tell me that the Woodstock field battery took their horses to Petawawa?

Mr. HUGHES: They did or—

Mr. CARVELL: They did not.

Mr. HUGHES: I tell him, the Tenth did.

Mr. CARVELL: The Tenth may have done so, but they did not. Nor did they in 1911.

Mr. HUGHES: They change about. Some New Brunswick batteries took their horses last year, and some did not.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not want the hon. minister to state to me things that are not true.

Mr. HUGHES: I am not stating things that are not true. What I said was that the 10th brigade and the 11th brigade—six batteries—

Mr. CARVELL: That is not New Brunswick.

Mr. HUGHES: There was the Moncton battery, and that is in New Brunswick, as the hon. member should know.

Mr. CARVELL: That does not mean the 3rd brigade.

Mr. HUGHES: They came from New Brunswick. They did not bring their horses, but horses were hired for them here. But others did bring horses. The Woodstock battery did bring horses last year; I presume they did not the year before. But that camp was laid out and carried out, as I stated, last session on lines not approved by me. If the hon. member will look at 'Hansard' he will see that I pointed out that this camp was going to be carried out against my judgment, but because the plans had been laid down by the officers of the Department and by my predecessor, I would carry out their plans for that year, but it would not occur again; and it has not occurred again.

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury & Queens): I think the people of Canada are in favor of maintaining an adequate militia force. Also I hold that we are not expending enough money on our militia. I see by the estimates that we are spending for the drill of militia only $1,730,000. The active militia of Canada are underpaid.

Mr. CARVELL: I agree with that.

Mr. McLEAN: Take the militia men obliged to bring horses to camp for $1 a day, when they can get $2 a day for every one of their horses. Remember, too, the class of men we bring to camp, and paid only half of what they could earn by staying at home. The people of Canada seem to have the opinion that an annual camp is a picnic. Let any gentleman come to camp, and he will see the sheer hard work these men have to undertake. From five o'clock in the morning until six o'clock at night they are working hard. What I object to—and I am speaking now only of the active militia—is: First, the men are underpaid; second, that the horses they supply are underpaid; third, that too small a number of men are drilled; and, fourth, they are not drilled for a sufficently long time. Take, for example, the tactical programme, look at the programme they have marked out for us. I want to object strongly to the new tactical work that has been marked out for the militia of Canada to go through unless preliminary instruction is provided for the regiment before going to camp. Without that it is absolutely impossible to take these men into camp and ask them to perform the work set out in this scheme. We have only twelve days' drill. There is one day to go in, one day to go out, one day for Sunday; that is three days; there are nine days left. Then, we have squad drill, one day. Squad drill, as you know, is the groundwork. In the regular army, a recruit is required to be instructed in squad drill for at least three months. The next day is for company drill. Then they have a day in battalion drill. In a city corps they will be working night after night for weeks and months before they are able to properly perform battalion drill. Then there is one day for brigade drill. Then allow for wet days and what have we left? Two more days. Then there comes the field day, the tactical day. The tactical day is supposed to be a miniature fight. The red body is sent away down some place, and the blue some place else, and then they march a great number of miles and are supposed to come together—and, according to the rules, the battle has to end at twelve o'clock because they have to have dinner. What I want to impress on the members is that in the first place there is not enough money spent on the active militia, in the actual training, and there is not sufficient time spent on the annual training. Any man who has had any experience in the active militia knows that, with the material that we have in Canada, our men can learn more in one week than men in other places can learn in a month or even a greater time. If our militia service had instructors there would be a great improvement in the conditions. That is the great want of our militia. The present minister and his predecessor are not responsible for this. Who are responsible? I do not know, but I know, as the commander of a regiment for a number of years, and as the commander of a brigade for a number of years, that it is impossible to get a sufficient number of efficient instructors during a camp. Therefore I say that the first thing we want is a large increase in the number of instructors. Our men are keen to learn, our officers are keen to learn, but we have not the instructors. We want a corps of instructors whose services will be available throughout the year. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) is an old militia officer, I have seen him in camp for a great number of years; he has been a most efficient officer, he knows the requirements of the militia as well as I do. The present Minister of Militia is an old militia officer. I believe that the present minister's heart and soul are in the militia. I believe that he will do his utmost to increase the efficiency of the militia; but we do want a radical change in some respects. We know that before the Hon. Sir Frederick Borden, the late Minister of Militia, became minister, the militia of Canada was sadly neglected. Under his efficient control and management the militia of Canada advanced at a marvellous rate—

Mr. HUGHES: Hear, hear.

Mr. McLEAN:—as regards efficiency, esprit de corps and everything that makes up a militia force.

Mr. BURNHAM: I understand the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) to take a view of the military affairs of Canada which is incompatible with the proper consideration of that subject, at any rate in my opinion. As I understand him, he is in favour of a permanent force. He thinks that anything in the way of civil war or labour riots, industrial conflicts, whatever it may be, might be put down by a permanent corps. He believes that it may be supposed to be able to put down such troubles as those if they arise. For my part, I am altogether against that. I do not believe in that sort of thing at all. A permanent force, so far as I can understand military affairs, which perhaps is not very far—but in this I think I am voicing to a certain extent the views of some of the people of Canada—a permanent force is not needed in Canada; what is needed is some such body as the militia which affords a system of training for the young men, not necessarily to fore each other, and go at each other or to attack people inside or outside of Canada; its greatest usefulness is as a system of discipline. I understand that the Minister of Militia has some such view in regard to militia affairs and that that is why he is developing so rapidly the cadet system; it is to introduce a spirit of discipline and esprit de corps into the youth of Canada. I would therefore take away the two and one-half or three million dollars provided for the permanent corps in the estimates, which would reduce the estimates by so much, and add one-half of that amount to the development of the militia corps. That would have the effect of perhaps bringing down the estimates to a certain extent and of developing the young man of Canada in the way that it seems to me they ought to be developed. I cannot express myself too strongly against the theory that we should provide a permanent force in Canada for the suppression of our own people.

Mr. CURRIE: What is the hon. gentleman going to do? We promised to Great Britain to man the fortresses a few years ago, and how is he going to do that if he takes away the permanent corps?

Mr. BURNHAM: I would reconstruct that agreement, if necessary.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew): My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) referred to the Petawawa camp, and to the fact that last year the Department of Militia and Defence spent a considerable amount of money in transporting horses from New Brunswick to that camp. Probably my hon. friend has never had the pleasure of visiting Petawawa camp.

Mr. CARVELL: I was there once, and why on earth the Militia Department bought the place, or should send men there every year, is something I cannot understand. It is nothing but a great sand plain, and would kill any horse and almost any man who goes there.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew): My hon. friend is the only man who has visited Petawawa camp who speaks of it in that way.

Mr. CARVELL: I never saw such an ugly place in my life.

Mr. WHITE: If my hon. friend will do me the honour to take a trip up there with me when the House prorogues, I shall be glad to show him around, and probably he will form a better impression.

Mr. CARVELL: You cannot change those sand banks.

Mr. WHITE: However, that is not the purpose for which I rose. I wanted to ask my hon. friend to be good enough to look up the Auditor General's Report for the last three years, and he will find that during the time his friends were in office, a certain hardware firm in the town of Pembroke, naturally of Liberal persuasion, supplied the Petawawa camp with a great many articles. I would like to refer to a few of the articles which that firm supplied to the camp, and I would ask my hon. friend and the House if they think that these articles could not be purchased cheaper from the different firms who deal in such articles.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What has that to do with the item we are discussing?

Mr. WHITE: It has as much to do with it as horses have. I find in the Auditor General's Report that the following articles were purchased from Dewar & Ryan, hardware merchants, Pembroke: 15 cases of toilet paper, 850 wooden chairs, 11.31 tons of ice, 5,000 bricks, 120 yards of cotton, 1,038 yards of cotton, 120 yards of flannelette, 9 pairs of rubber boots, at $4.14 per pair; 1,000 feet of lumber at $42; 758 feet of lumber at $28 and 400 feet of lumber at $38.

Mr. CARVELL: Is my hon. friend not aware that in all military camps they go to one firm and ask them to supply the necessary articles for the camp?

Mr. WHITE: That is not the policy which the present Minister of Militia is adopting. This same firm of Dewar & Ryan, hardware merchants of Pembroke, also supplied one Concord buggy and one set of harness, 680 feet 4-inch agricultural tile, 2 sides of leather, and 21,000 shingles. If I had time I could enumerate several other articles.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What about it?

Mr. WHITE: Naturally Dewar & Ryan had to get their profit, and where was the other man to get a profit?

Mr. MACLEAN: Perhaps Dewar and Ryan did not get any profit at all.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend knows better than that.

Mr. NESBITT: It would be quite possible for Dewar and Ryan to purchase these articles, and to supply them as cheaply as the other firms.

Mr. WHITE: Perhaps my hon. friend knows all about it. If he would look at the Auditor General's report he might find the prices which those people charged, and I venture to say that the present Minister of Militia is purchasing the supplies for Petawawa camp at rock bottom prices. I could turn up the Auditor General's report and show that certain firms which supplied the Petawawa camp got all kinds of profit.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where are the supplies purchased now?

Mr. WHITE: From all over the country. On the 20th of March last an inquiry was sent to Messrs. Dunlop & Co., of Pembroke, with regard to supplies for Petawawa camp. They aggregate about $1,000, and I would like to read to my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) what Dunlop & Co. supplied at that time. They supplied seventy pounds of strictly half and half solder and only five half pint bottles of solderall, amounting to something over $18.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What did it cost the year before?

Mr. WHITE: I have not got the figures.

Mr. MACLEAN: Then what is the good of that comparison?

Mr. NESBITT: I could buy that half and half solder for forty cents a pound.

Mr. WHITE: Is that so?

Mr. MACLEAN: What are the politics of this firm, Dunlop & Co.?

Mr. WHITE: I want to tell my hon. friends opposite that the present Minister of Militia is carrying on his department in a businesslike manner.

Mr. NESBITT: If that solder is an illustration, I doubt it.

Mr. CARVELL: Some years ago I was an officer in the militia, and I can tell my hon. friend how these things are done. The Government make a contract, or at least they used to do so, with one firm, or with one man to supply the articles required for the camp. The man usually ran a store in the New Brunswick camps, and I think I can tell my hon. friend who will run that store this year at Sussex.

Mr. CURRIE: The same man?

Mr. CARVELL: No, I do not think so. The job was always put up to tender, but my hon. friend will see to it this year that some good Conservative runs the store. The man who ran the store furnished all the articles required for the camp. That is the reason that the man is able to sell these different varieties of articles and that is exactly what is done at Pembroke or Petawawa. The only question is whether the articles were supplied at a reasonable price or not. I do not know and I do not care very much. I am willing to admit that the Militia Department was run just about as extravagantly when my friends were in power as it is now. About the same class of officials were running it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew): But the policy is different.

Mr. CARVELL: The policy is different? The only difference is that they have transformed it into a straight Tory policy.

Mr. WHITE: Not at all. As far as Petawawa is concerned, no Tory need apply when the late Administration was in power.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I expected to have some explanation from the minister with regard to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Queens and Sunbury (Mr. McLean). He is an active member of the militia, one of those who was in command of the Canadians who went to England at the time of the coronation, and he states that the annual camp is a farce, and that the money spent is squandered. Does not my hon. friend think that the time has come for a sweeping reform? I admit that my hon. friend is a good officer, and we have to expect some reforms from him. He has been told by a fellow-officer that the organization is a farce from beginning to end, and yet he sits there silent and does not have any explanation to offer to the committee. I would like to know before we vote $10,000,000 if any reforms are going to take place and if he is going to see that our young men are properly drilled by the necessary number of instructors. There are no instructors at these camps or, if there are, they are perfectly useless, according to the statement made by my hon. friend from Sunbury and Queens. What is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. HUGHES: I am delighted to see that my hon. friend from Rouville is so energetic and so greatly interested in the welfare of the militia. The hon. member for Sunbury and Queens never said there was no organization of the militia, and therefore I do not need to answer what my hon. friend did not say. My hon. friend spoke of the instructors, and we will come to the matter of instructors in good time. We have trained upwards of 8,000 instructors in this country, and I purpose initiating a policy of training a great many more officers, but I do not want to enunciate that policy until I am ready to carry it out.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Where are they?

Mr. HUGHES: From the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I want them by provinces.

Mr. HUGHES: I do not have to give them by provinces because I have not got them. I could give the cadet instructors by provinces but I do not propose to do so until the item comes up. I do not propose to trespass upon another item. The pay of the men has been doubled in the last ten years, and the pay for horses has been increased 25 per cent this year.

Mr. OLIVER: What is it now?

Mr. HUGHES: $1.25 a day for all classes and $1.50 for heavy gun horses. The men are being very well looked after as well as the horses, and I agree with the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens that until there is compulsory training, which seems a long way off, you cannot expect men to turn out and give their time and money to the upkeep of the militia force without getting some fair recompense for it. I admit that the men are not getting as much pay as they are worth, but they are being paid as well as most militiamen the world over.

Mr. OLIVER: This is a most important item of the estimates, it is a large item and it brings up a very important question. We have had in this House during the last three or four months a lengthy discussion with regard to Empire defence. We were instructed by our friends that Canada was not able to undertake her proper part in Empire defence because she did not have the men and she did not have the spirit to take that part; that is to say, the defence of the Empire by sea. Therefore, we were required to vote a sum of money to be expended in providing battleships which should be manned by British sailors under the direction and control of the British Admirality. The discussion we have had to-night would almost indicate that, so far as the land forces are concerned, we are far from perfection and, by the same process of reasoning that we have heard during the past four or five months, instead of further carrying on this militia force at an expense of $10,000,000 because that force must be for the defence of the Empire—it is not for the defence of Canada, because Canada has not needed defence for a matter of thirty years—we should hand that money over to the British War Office. I want to ask the minister if, on that process of reasoning to which the House was subjected during so many months it would not be the part of wisdom, of patriotism and particularly of loyalty to the Empire, if, instead of carrying on this system of drill which my hon. friend from Sunbury and Queens says is not efficient, instead of maintaining the camp at Petawawa, which my hon. friend here says is not useful for the purpose, instead of bringing out men to drill, as I understand some hon. gentleman to say they only go from time to time and not as a regular matter of enlistment, it would not be in line with the policy that the Government, of which the minister is a member, and his leader and his party, have insisted upon so strongly for the past five months, having regard to all these facts, to take the $10,000,000 and hand it over to the British War Office for expenditure by that office in defence of the Empire.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And bring back General Hutton.

Mr. HUGHES: Carried.

Mr. OLIVER: No, I would like to have the answer of my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES: I did not catch the question. Will the hon. gentleman repeat the question?

Mr. OLIVER: I am asking the minister, in view of the policy which he has supported in regard to the defence of the Empire, in view of the facts that have been brought out in the debate, does he not think that—

Mr. HUGHES: What are the facts to which the hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. OLIVER: As he has heard. Is he not required, in carrying out principles to which he and his Government are pledged, to change the tenor of this vote and hand this $10,000,000 over to the British War Office for the defence of the Empire?

Mr. HUGHES: If the hon. gentleman would be good enough to point out the facts to which he refers, I would be delighted to answer his question, but I cannot assume the question on his premises until I know what they are.

Mr. OLIVER: If the Minister of Militia is not able to give this Dominion a more efficient and effective military service, is it not for him to say to the British War Office: Here is $10,000,000; you know how to spend it better than I do; spend it for the defence of the Empire.

Mr. HUGHES: I have heard no criticism against the militia to-night, from any gentleman who is in a position to know anything about the militia. My hon. friend from Queens and Sunbury (Mr. McLean) has upheld the militia, and has pointed out that we should spend more money, to which my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) objected. The hon. member from Queens-Sunbury says further that we should provide for a longer annual training but to that I object because the men of this country cannot leave their business for more than the present number of days to devote to annual training. I stand here to say that Canada has a militia to-day which is second to no militia in the world. I have seen the Swiss militia and they cannot compare with the Canadian militia; I have seen the French regiments and I can pick out fifty per cent of the militia regiments of Canada which are just as good as the best of the French regiments; our militia regiments are just as good as the best of the German regiments and as good as the British regiments except about twenty per cent of them.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Did my hon. friend see the German regiments?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Last year?

Mr. HUGHES: I was not there last year, I was there the year before, and I may say that I was almost induced from half a dozen high sources to go to Germany last year but I had no time as I was attending the British and French manoeuvres.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about your Vancouver speech?

Mr. HUGHES: The Canadian militia to-day stands second to no militia in the wide, wide world.

Mr. OLIVER: Did the minister state in this House that the Canadian militia are efficient?

Mr. HUGHES: I did, a large percentage of them.

Mr. OLIVER: Am I to understand they are serving willingly and at pay which does not compensate them for their lost time?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: They are enthusiastic and capable?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not wish to misunderstand what the minister said; did the Minister of Militia say they were enthusiastic and capable?

Mr. HUGHES: Fire ahead, I did.

Mr. OLIVER: They are enthusiastic, capable, efficient, and there are 45,000 of them?

Mr. HUGHES: More than that; 73,000.

Mr. OLIVER: We have 73,000 men in Canada whom the Minister of Militia says are efficient?

Mr. HUGHES: Nearly all of them.

Mr. OLIVER: And are enthusiastic and are willing to make sacrifices for their country, and are willing to do military service at loss and cost to themselves, and yet the Minister of Militia is a member of a Government and a member of a party which during five months in this House has placed a libel upon the people of Canada; has persisted in it; has insulted the manhood of Canada by the declaration that Canadians would not do by sea what they do by land. I say that Canada resents that insult; the people of Canada fling that insult in the face of the Prime Minister and his Government and his party.

Mr. CARVELL: We are anxious on this side of the House to assist the minister in getting through his estimates, but let it be understood that he must civilly answer a fair question. We have demonstrated during the last six months that we can stay here and continue to ask him questions if necessary. Now let us start out with a fair understanding. The minister says he has trained 8,000 instructors last year.

Mr. HUGHES: I said 8,000 cadet and militia instructors were trained in Canada up to the end of last year.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, that would mean ever since Canada was civilized and we had a militia, but many of them are hors de combat now. One of the great difficulties in the militia of Canada is the lack of efficient instructors. Does the minister mean they have trained 8,000 men in the last year, or how many have they trained? What number of instructors are there at present? And what provision are they making for instructing each individual company or regiment.

Mr. HUGHES: The number of instructors we passed last year, including cadet instructors, was: Nova Scotia, 593; New Brunswick, 620; Prince Edward Island, 194; British Columbia, 272; Ontario, 193; Alberta, 389; Manitoba, 346; Saskatchewan, 117; Quebec, 189.

Mr. CARVELL: We are not talking about cadets just now. How many thoroughly competent instructors has the minister to send around the different military camps and corps this year?

Mr. HUGHES: We have already about one hundred and twenty competent instructors for the militia regiments, and there are others attached to the regiments themselves. The permanent corps is being instructed so that a large number of men will become competent instructors in a few years. In former times men of the permanent force were not called upon to be instructors at all, and were never given the opportunity of drilling a squad. Instructions have been given out for some time that each man shall have the opportunity regularly of standing in front of a squad and drilling them. In a short time we hope to find out who have the quality of being instructors and who have not. We are pursuing that policy in the hope of developing the whole force as far as possible, so that within a year they will be pretty well qualified to be instructors. These instructors are sent from corps to corps during the winter and to the camps in the summer. In answer to my hon. friend from Queens and Sunbury (Mr. McLean), I may say that in place of having the permanent corps of Canada to act as fatigue men and markers in the butts, these men are to be attached to the various forces as models and, those capable, as instructors.

Mr. McLEAN (Queens and Sunbury): As a member of the active militia, and as having been present at camp for a number of years, I wish to complain of the want of instructors. The Minister of Militia states that a full corps of instructors will be provided in the future. I agree with the hon. minister in that policy. In the past a large amount of money was spent on the permanent corps, and the men of that corps were not trained as instructors. It would require at least one instructor per company, although there should be more.

Another objection is this. It always seemed to me that we should have in Canada a permanent corps of instructors, composed of officers and non-commissioned officers. A non-commissioned officer, in order to be an efficient instructor, requires ability and training. He ought to be paid a salary in accordance with the work he performs. We want more officer-instructors. The Minister of Militia will agree with me that the officers of a corps are occupying a very doubtful position when a sergeant comes out and drills the corps. I think you should have officer-instructors, at least one per regiment, one per battery of artillery, and so on with the different branches of the service.

Mr. HUGHES: We have practically developed already a system of training officers, and you may include in that instructors. At the present time, in order to take a commission, one must pass the junior, intermediate and senior examinations for the British army. The papers have to be examined in Great Britain. The consequence is that very few officers have the opportunity of qualifying. The militia officers cannot write on these examinations as they are shut out. We have therefore developed a system, after a good deal of study, of examinations in and for the Canadian Militia, so that any private, sergeant or officer may have the opportunity of writing, when he feels qualified to pass the examination. At the present time there is no such opportunity for a Canadian volunteer. In this way we hope to have a large number of young men, especially in connection with our university corps and the various cadet corps throughout the country, thoroughly qualified in all that pertains to the instruction of any corps that we might wish to deal with in our annual camp. There is no intention that a young man, who passes an examination entitling him to command a regiment, shall command one. It merely gives him his certificate of knowledge. He might stand in the ranks, as other men have done with similar certificates, as a private or a subordinate officer and work his way up gradually. We would have, however, at the disposal of the country in time of need a large body of men thoroughly qualified as instructors. In the course of a year or two, I hope there will be young men in every village, town and city of the Dominion who will take no second place to any instructor, whether he be of the permanent service in the Dominion of Canada or elsewhere.

Mr. ROBB: Is there any discrimination in the policy of the Department as between city officers and country officers?

Mr. HUGHES: No, I know the case my hon. friend refers to. I looked into the matter. My hon. friend refers to the case of an officer appointed for command over another officer. These promotions come from the commanding officer in the various localities. Unless for very special reasons and unless our attention is drawn to the matter, we accept the recommendation of the district or brigade officer. We take it for granted that they do their duty. If an officer is specially reported against as not being able to manage his men, and the other man reported over him, we do not know the conditions and the thing goes through. I know the case the hon. gentleman refers to, though I did not know it until he first drew my attention to it. Otherwise, I would have made inquiries. The officer was promoted over another, because that other was not considered competent to command the squadron.

Mr. ROBB: The officer in question is too good a soldier to have the matter brought up in Parliament and ventilated. A great injustice was done to that officer, and it is not a matter of yesterday, but has apparently been going on for years with other officers. It has been a great discouragement to officers in that regiment. I do not know to what extent that kind of thing prevails through Canada. While I am on my feet, and in order that my hon. friend from Carleton may not be alone in the statement that we are going on too fast with militia expenditure, I desire to add a word. To-morrow morning, when the people read the statement of the minister that the policy of his department is to spend ten per cent of the Dominion revenue on militia—

Mr. HUGHES: The minister has not said it. What the minister said was that that was the policy laid down at Confederation by agreement with the Imperial authorities.

Mr. ROBB: And the minister is approaching it very rapidly. Take the position as we have it, and not holding the minister down to that statement. The expenditure now has reached ten or eleven millions of dollars. It will possibly run up, within ten years, to an average of $15,000,000. Is that extreme? I think not. Now, the Department of Agriculture has done a good deal of advertising, and has sounded trumpets before it to announce that it is going to spend $10,000,000 in ten years for agriculture. Their expenditure will be quite insignificant compared with that of the Militia, which will be $150,000,000 in ten years. I think that the members on both sides, and the members of the Cabinet, should say to the Minister of Militia right now that this must be stopped, that it is not the policy of the people of Canada to spend $150,000,000 on militia in ten years.

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. gentleman does not seem to be posted. He forgets that agriculture does not belong to the Dominion, per se; it belongs to the provinces, and is so treated by the provinces. In the states of the American union the militia is under control of the state, and the building of drill halls is under the same control. The matter is very largely under the control of the officers of the militia. Suppose that, let us say, in Rochester, New York, a drill hall is required, the officer in charge simply notifies the municipality that it must furnish a drill hall of a certain size and build, the people have to pay for it. And the militia are paid out of the state vote, just as in the Swiss cantons to a very large extent. Therefore, these items do not appear in federal expenses in those countries. But in Canada, the cost of militia building, the upkeep of the militia come out of the Dominion treasury. The vote for agriculture does not.

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski): Mr. Chairman, I have not very well understood the remarks made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean), but I do not think I am mistaken in saying that he has approved of the expenditure asked for in behalf of the Canadian militia, and even then he does not find it sufficient. Whatever the hon. member may think about it, I believe that if in the last election he had used the same language when addressing his electors, he would not occupy the seat he now occupies in this House, and that if he undertakes to repeat those words at the next election, his electors shall think otherwise than he does and shall make him aware of it.

As to the hon. member for Carleton, I share his views. The military expenditure is not at all in proportion with the amount we spend for agriculture. Having read the list of the main estimates which amount, for the Militia Department, to $10,479,065, and of the supplementary estimates brought down the other day and which run up to $438,240, I find the total expenditure to be $10,917,305. To my mind, this item is extravagant and should not be voted by this House before a substantial deduction has been made.

When I was a candidate at the election of 1908 and of 1911, I reproached my opponent with not having protested against the military estimates being run up to six or seven million dollars. Instead of six millions we have to face, to-day, an expenditure of nearly eleven million dollars for military purposes only. This is something extraordinary and I think the hon. Minister of Militia himself would be surprised to witness how unwelcome is the increase which he asks us to vote, if he took the trouble of consulting the hon. members, even those sitting on this side of the House.

The financial conditions of the country, prosperous though they be, do not allow us to dispense with the rules of prudence. Moreover, we are not in South America or in Europe, where the nations are always exposed to war. We have but one neighbour, and we cannot be sheltered against his attacks by means of an expenditure which is extravagant, if not useless. I think the hon. minister of Militia should reconsider his figures before asking us to follow him in the direction of an extraordinary increase as regards the military estimates.

I know also that the people of our country are opposed to such policy which will have no other result than to bring us considerable harm even from our friends.

I wish to enter my protest against any military estimate which we may dispense with. We have no rebellion to fear. We are far from the time when we might dread the blows of those fools and rascals of 1837 and 1838—to use the words attributed to the hon. minister—whose attention I would call to the fact that there were such fools and rascals in Lower and Upper Canada as well, of different race and tongue, but fighting for the same principle of a responsible government, for a government of the people by its mandatories.

Those fools and those rascals were men of spirit and men of honour, whose doings have gone down to posterity, and the memory of those martyrs of liberty is deep-rooted yet in the hearts of their offspring, a few of whom are in this House and do not like the memory of those heroes to be tainted with impunity. We do not want military men in our country as much as we want farmers. There are always too many people who try to live at the worker's expense.

Let us encourage the farmer and the manufacturer; we shall never spend too much for this purpose. If foodstuffs are scarce and dear to-day in our country it is because the consumers exceed the producers in number, and we should help the latter before all.

Those are the few remarks I had to make on this subject and, really, I cannot approve of the extraordinary expenditure which is asked for in the estimates and which means an increase of nearly three million dollars as compared with that of last year.

Mr. HUGHES: My imperfect knowledge of the beautiful French language has prevented me from following in detail the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I shall see his words to-morrow in 'Hansard', and, I hope, will have an opportunity to answer him.

Mr. OLIVER: In regard to this item for drill expenses, if my hon. friend is going to insist on keeping control of the militia and military expenditure instead of handing it over to the Imperial authorities for better management in their hands, of course he will have to listen to such advice as is offered to him from time to time. I do not speak as a military man, but as a citizen interested in the well being and well doing of the militia force of Canada. There have been placed before the House to-night by those in close touch with military matters statements that would indicate that conditions are not all that would be desirable. There are difficulties of recruiting for the camps. There are difficulties amongst the officers of regiments here and there. Let me suggest that the militia organization depends to some extent upon social conditions, and as social conditions have changed in this country that system which was adequate, sufficient and satisfactory twenty or thirty years ago is not so to-day when conditions all over the country are considered. I speak first of the case of officers. Officers are required to undertake large expense which they undertake for their own pleasure and for the good of the country as prominent, patriotic citizens. Amongst these expenditures they must provide their uniforms. I do not know what would be considered proper to happen to a man who would suggest that that which has always been in military matters should cease to be; some terrible thing might happen; but I am going to risk it, and I would say that in my humble judgment when an ordinary citizen of Canada, with a good share of patriotism and so circumstanced that he is able to give attention, time and energy to the work of being an officer of a company or battalion of volunteers, when he gives the proper time and attention to his own training and to looking after the force of which he is an officer, he has done all that can be reasonably required of him by the country.

Mr. HUGHES: Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER: To ask him to pay for expensive uniforms is simply an imposition and takes the matter out of the realm of patriotism and efficiency and transfers it into the realm of financial ability or social aspiration. That I do not think is good for the force and it is not in accord with the present condition or spirit of the country. I am quite aware that as matters were in Canada thirty, forty or fifty years ago that was a perfectly right and proper idea, probably the best idea on which the system could be based, but I desire to press upon the attention of the minister that the condition of Canada has changed so that that system of dealing with the officers of the militia is not suitable, does not bring the best results, and, so far as western Canada is concerned, is to a great extent impracticable. I know we have volunteer forces in the West and probably they will size up very well with those in other parts of Canada, but if so it is because of even greater sacrifices made under more difficult circumstances by the men who are taking the responsibility of acting as officers in those forces. I do not know what would happen to the minister if he should suggest such a thing as that the country should buy and pay for the uniforms of the officers. He has a reputation of doing as he likes, and I only hope he will like to do what I suggest. I have no personal feeling in the matter as I have never been a military officer.

Mr. HUGHES: You would make a gallant colonel.

Mr. OLIVER: And I have very little hope of ever being one; but I would like to see matters run on a basis of fair play, and I would like to see a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of expense. I have no doubt there would be a very serious outcry against such a departure, not from the taxpayers, although there might be some objection from them; but I have no doubt that a great many men now associated with military matters who are there in perpetuation of the ideas that formerly prevailed, would object to any such proposition. It would introduce a new element into the management of militia affairs; but I urge upon the minister that, the conditions having changed, the old system is no longer suitable and that the change of conditions should be met even by such a conservative institution as the Militia Department of Canada.

What is true in regard to the officers is also true in regard to the men. I am glad to know that the pay of the men has been increased. Judged by military standards generally it is liberal pay, but at the same time it is not liberal pay when judged according to the standard of earnings by men whom it is desirable to get into these militia camps and to have identified themselves with volunteer affairs. We want to get good men into the volunteer force. We want to get the man who has employment, not the man who has not employment. While a dollar a day and rations may be a reasonable amount to the man who has not employment, it is not reasonable pay to the man who has employment and it is the man who has employment who is the valuable man in a militia camp. While it would be a very radical departure—and I hesitate to make the suggestion, if they were paid just double to start with—it would not be more than fair, and I thoroughly believe that if the pay were doubled we would be able to get the class of men to enter the militia force and to take an interest in it who do not do so now. It is not because of the actual cash value, but because they would feel that their willingness to serve their country was being reasonably recognized by the country. At the present time I am satisfied that no man who is in valuable employment can leave that employment and take the risks, which attach to leaving it, who will go to a military camp and serve for a dollar a day and consider that the country is giving him fair and reasonable remuneration for the sacrifice he is making. I am given to understand that it is difficult to fill the regiments for the annual drill, and that sometimes it is a question of drumming up men who happen not to be in employment at the time in order to fill the regiments at the camp. That is not satisfactory. Instead of being a saving of money, to my mind, it is very largely throwing it away, because you are not getting the men who, having had training this year, will attend the camp next year, and thus have the advantage of the previous training. This country is different from what it used to be, and, different from other countries. We will have to revise our ideas in regard to the volunteer militia if we are going to get the sacrifice and service that we want, and that we were able to get thirty or forty years ago. Our young men have just as much of the spirit of patriotism as the men in those days had, but the conditions are different, and the changed conditions have not been met by a change of conditions in the militia organization.

The low pay which is given to the men works back on the officers. They must make sacrifices or expenditures in order to keep up the interest of the men. That is an unjust tax upon the officers. It is a principle that is contrary to the spirit of this country, and there should be in substantial and tangible form recognition by the country at large of the sacrifices that are being made for the country by the men who are engaged in the militia force. That would be an inspiration to the force, and would make it an object of ambition instead of having it looked upon coolly. We hold too much to the old traditions in regard to militia matters, and are not adapting our militia arrangements to the new conditions.

It may be said that the suggestions I have made would increase the militia expenditure so enormously that they are not to be considered. In my judgment, it would be better to cut the force in half, to have the men efficient, enthusiastic, satisfied and ambitious in their calling, than to have the number we have at present with a rather cool and careless spirit. I know the suggestions I have made are very radical, and I quite recognize the courage that would be necessary on the part of the minister to accept any of them, but as a rank outsider, as one who has no interest to serve in connection with the militia, but the desire, as an ordinary citizen, to see it efficient to the last degree, creditable to the country, and satisfactory to the men who are in it, I make the suggestions.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Can the minister favour us with some information as to the location of the proposed military school or armoury in Montreal? I understand that he had some interviews with the city council of Montreal as to the location of the drill ground or camp. Can he tell us what conclusion he has arrived at?

Mr. HUGHES: The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has pleaded that he has had no military training. He has certainly the proper military spirit, and if he had just a little bit of training, he would have made an excellent soldier. It is not too late yet, and I would like to see him at the head of one of the squadrons in the Northwest in the near future. I would like to see him in the saddle leading his men into camp. He has referred to the matter of uniforms. I agree with him, and I think everyone will agree, that an officer on becoming qualified should be given his drill uniform, at any rate. I do not think there is any reason why an officer should be called upon to put his hand in his pocket and buy the uniform which is necessary for his drill in connection with serving his country in camp, in the cities in evenings on parade. I think that should be furnished him. The matter is now before a committee of officers to devise the best means of carrying out that suggestion. My hon. friend has spoken about higher pay for the men. What he has said is logically correct, but I do not think that five per cent of the volunteers in Canada go into it for the money. In the city corps they pool the money, they never get it. The same thing holds good with respect to many of the rural corps. In my own old regiment we nearly always paid out more than was paid in. I find it is a question of training. If you give the men proper training they will not mind so much what the pay is. It is that spirit that keeps up the regiment. I was in Hamilton not long since, and there were 91 gentlemen sitting at a table. These 91 gentlemen had been officers in the service, and I would challenge any one in that city to pick out 91 other men who could equal them. It does not hold good to say that the militia force is made up of the offscourings of the country.

Mr. OLIVER: I hope my hon. friend did not understand me as saying that.

Mr. HUGHES: No. Of course, there are men in the regiments who should not be there, but the militiamen of this country will stand second to no other class of men that you can pick out in Canada or anywhere else. As far as the question of my hon. friend from Laval is concerned, I would say that the property known as the Logan farm was handed over to the Dominion Government by the Imperial authorities, and in case it was disposed of the proceeds were to go to the Militia Department. In 1908 44 acres, plus, were handed over in fee simple to Montreal for nothing; 31 acres, plus, were handed over to the city of Montreal for ninety-nine years at the nominal rental of one dollar per year, and 3.86 acres were retained by the Militia Department only out of the whole area whereon to erect an ordnance building, or any other building, for the purpose of the Militia Department. A little strip in a square, about 3 acres, or a little less, was being unloaded on the city of Montreal by gentlemen who were interested in the sale of it. I was informed both by the Mayor and an hon. member for that city, a member of the city council, and of this House, that these gentlemen would hand that over for $750,000 to the city of Montreal, provided I, as Minister of Militia, or the Dominion Government, would hand over the balance of the militia property, consisting of 3.86 acres, under the guarantee that we would never build upon it, so that there would be a complete square. I came to the conclusion that the city of Montreal had been fairly well treated by the Militia Department. Taking that valuation of $750,000 for this little corner, the 44 acres are worth from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000, the 31 acres about $9,000,000, and the 3.86 acres $1,000,000. I had no authority, and I did not see that the Government had any authority, to hand over free to any person property which was entrusted to them for militia purposes. It should be used for the development and upkeep of the militia of the country. I declined to hand that 3.86 acres over to the city of Montreal, and, while it is absolutely unsuitable for an ordnance stores building, it would be most admirably suited for a nice drill hall for one of the new regiments. The 85th, a French regiment, is growing up in that part of the city. It will likely become a city regiment soon, and it is quite possible the department may see its way clear to erecting a drill hall on that site and thus save possibly three quarters of a million which would have to be spent in buying a site for a drill hall. I might add that St. Helen's island, an historic property, was also handed over to the city of Montreal for $200,000. These properties, it has been estimated are to-day worth $47,000,000 that the Militia Department might have had if they had not been handed over as I have indicated.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): I do not think the minister has answered my question. I want to know whether the minister has come to any decision with regard to the building of a military school.

Mr. HUGHES: A military school is going to be built at Dorval.

Mr. WILSON: If there is one built at Dorval there will not be one built in the city?

Mr. HUGHES: No, there will be a drill hall.

Mr. WILSON: Where is the property situated in Dorval?

Mr. HUGHES: It is the old race course.

Mr. McLEAN (Sunbury and Queens): I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to what the minister has said with regard to assistance to be given to the officers in respect to their uniforms. I was also very much impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). I see that he has the interest of the militia at heart and that he appreciates its requirements. The point that appeals to me is that the men and officers should receive more assistance. It has been correctly stated by the minister that the officers of the city corps give their work free and voluntarily, they receive no pay, or their pay goes into the fund. That is the case also with the officers of the country corps. They also put in all their pay. Then, in addition to that, let us consider what the officer gives. First, he is required to prepare himself to pass a difficult examination. An officer, to be any good, must be a man of affairs. He has to be a man of position in the district or town in which he lives. He is a man whose time is valuable. This man is required to prepare by private study before he goes to the school of instruction. He has to remain at the school of instruction for at least one month and he should be there three months in order to qualify to pass his examination. He has to devote a great deal of time to recruiting. He has to devote also a great deal of time to preparing his men before they go into camp so that they shall be efficient. He has to go night after night to different places in his parish or county or, if in the city, to the drill shed in order to prepare his men for their work. He gets no pay and all this extra expense comes out of his own pocket. Where is his reward? The Government require that he should have a proper uniform. What do the regulations require with regard to the uniform? The class of men you have as officers are the backbone of the militia and they have some pride in their personal appearance. Placed over them are officers from the regulars in England who are well dressed. They come out here provided with natty, neat uniforms properly fitted. The officers of the Canadian militia also want to follow the example set by the officers of the regulars and to appear in bright, natty and well-fitting uniforms. The uniforms are the same as the uniform of the regulars in England.

The officer of a city corps requires to furnish himself with a tunic, a mess jacket, vest and trousers, overalls, riding breeches, a proper head-dress, a khaki uniform, and other things which cost him at the lowest calculation £21 in England. It is a great hardship to make him pay duty on that uniform. For example, swords are not made in Canada, and if you go to a private dealer and buy a sword you find the blade branded 'Made in Germany,' and yet we are not allowed to buy our swords in England and bring them in free of duty. I know Major Carvell and I had our uniforms made in England. A military uniform in order to fit has to be made by an expert and we have no experts in Canada who make a business of making that class of uniforms. Any officer who has pride in himself or in his corps gets his uniform made in England. Why should we be compelled to pay duty on these uniforms when they cannot be made here. The minister says he proposes to furnish uniforms to the officers. Well, if he is going to give to the officers the same kind of uniform as was furnished in days past to some of our men, then we will be awful looking frights. Why, you would not get an officer to wear such uniforms.

An hon. MEMBER: The uniform will be for active service.

Mr. McLEAN: Yes, but we are not on active service all the time. You have to appeal to the vanity of the men and the vanity of the officers, and that vanity is a laudable ambition to make a creditable display. What makes a corps efficient? It is in the vanity or the ambition of the officers and men to make that corps better than any other corps. As we all know, the backbone of the militia, outside of the officers, are the non-commissioned officers, and my idea about pay is: the ordinary man in the militia gets enough pay; some of them are not worth the pay they receive and a great many of them ought never be brought into camp. On the other hand, a great many of the men are efficient, and will make splendid soldiers. We have started under the late Minister of Militia with efficiency pay, when a man reaches a certain qualification. In order to have good non-commissioned officers, I would give him, when he has passed an examination showing his efficiency to command and thoroughly instruct a squad, not only a bonus for qualifying and spending the time required for study for that examination, but after he passes the examination and shows himself efficient as an instructor, I would in addition to the bonus, give him increased pay. For men who are not efficient the pay is wasted on them. But to the man who can pass an examination and qualify as a rifle shot, I would give more pay. To the non-commissioned officer who could qualify as a squad instructor, I would pay a decent, respectable wage. I appeal to the Minister of Militia, if he wants to gain the gratitude of the officers of the Canadian militia, to abolish the duty on officers' uniforms.
