FOR HIS SAKE.

Felix del Arabal and Raymond de Lorida were educated together and served in the same regiment. Felix was a more sociable man, and possessed a more decided character. His even temper and excellent judgment exercised a beneficial influence over his more excitable friend.
On one occasion, Felix was in the English, Raymond had saved Felix's life by rescuing him from a sword-thrust intended for him. Raymond had been killed, and Felix was without limit. The two friends were stationed in Gibraltar, when that stronghold was in possession of the Spanish, but besieged by the British.
It was a sunny day in August, 1782.
The streets of Gibraltar were alive with the gay and brilliant populace.
The greatest crowds congregated in the ment was to pass. This excitement was posed of the curiel darlings of Spain, and was a great favorite of the people—above all with the ladies, for its officers were all picked men.
Raymond and Felix were two of the handsome men in the regiment. As they marched side by side, Raymond suddenly exclaimed:
"Felix, quick! Look there. Look at that beautiful woman on the balcony overhead!"
Felix looked up, and beheld a young lady of striking loveliness, half hidden behind the flowering vines which covered the balcony.
"You are like a very ferret, for discovering pretty women," laughed Felix.
They marched on, but Raymond kept turning back to look at the lady until she was lost to view.
She had turned her eyes on the two young officers—the one still pale from his late wound, but a noble appearance, the other, shorter but more formed, was elegant and active. Behind the lady's face a well advanced in life. By his dress and commanding air it could be seen that he was a person of distinction. He was, in fact, the mayor of the city.
A look of annoyance crossed his face as he caught the admiring glances which the young officers cast upon him, and he was saying rather roughly by the way, he said, authoritatively:
"You had better retire from the balcony, Laura. These popinies are yours as boldly as if you were performing monkey tricks."
At the military ball given that night the young officers were fortunate enough to be introduced to the beautiful creature, who was known as the victim of an old and tyrannical husband.
Raymond had the felicity of dancing frequently with Laura, and their mutual affection became noticeable.
"Take care," whispered Felix to Raymond as they stood apart and observed her.
"Take care of what—of whom?"
"Why, don't you see? Her old husband is watching you with blazing eyes, and looking as if he would like to swallow you at one gulp."
"Me? Why Felix?"
"Because he sees it being plain enough to your admiration for just opposite his eye is a young woman without meaning any harm.
"Oh, hush! Anybody may admire a pretty woman without meaning any harm.
I think he is just despoiling himself for a small matter."
"A small matter now, I grant you," replied his friend, "and furthermore, that he who owns that priceless jewel is not worthy of its possession. Still it is his, and he guards it carefully. Therefore, I say to you, Raymond, just where you are, are, let the small sun of mine admiration of another man's wife grow into the rays of one of loving her and thereby losing two souls."
Raymond looked grave for a moment, but the steeple had enthralled his fancy at that fatal moment, and he turned his arms of a fellow officer, and flung on him an enchanting smile that he fairly lost his wits.
That smile determined the fate of three people. Turning to his friend, Raymond said recklessly:
"And I say to you, Felix, that I am but 25, and do not know, being a soldier, if I shall live twenty-five hours. Let us, then, enjoy life while it is ours, Felix, and leave blood-curdled prudence to gray-headed fools."
Raymond contrived to see Laura frequently, but not to speak to her, for her husband would not permit her to do so.
Dissatisfied with this, Raymond contrived to see her in the church without an attendant. In his disposition he determined to disguise himself and follow her to some quiet place.
He succeeded in kneeling beside her, and slipping into his peyer-lock a little note.
She noticed in a very timid, tear-stained face, requesting him not to write any more, but assuring him when and where she would grant him an interview.
The next day, when he was sitting at his window, old Maria passed and made a sign to him. He followed her, and she led him down stairs, on into the street, and following her at a little distance.
The old woman fumbled in her pocket, and then drew forth a little note, which Raymond snatched in his eagerness and sore open. It contained only these few words:
"My husband goes out of town to-day. I shall be at liberty to-morrow night and can see you. It will be the first and it must be the last time."
Maria then described the place of meeting, where she, the nurse, would be awaiting him. Raymond kissed the note, and offered the old woman a purse, but she spurned it, and in a quivering voice said:
"Sir, I am that girl's foster mother, and that which I have consented to do to please her may be a weakness, but that which you are about to do is an infamy."
The next day Felix dropped into his friend's room after a late breakfast, and found him alternately tearing his hair and breaking the furniture, looking the incarnation of rage and death. "Great heavens!
What has happened?" he asked.
Raymond answered, grinding his teeth:
"Accused by military life! Accused to all time for this ghastly slavery! Accused to be the coldest, the brainless despot? Accused to be the epineuric, which, like a chain, I cannot break! Accused—" "Hold!" said Felix, "don't waste time cursing every individual separately, rank and file. How have you had any trouble with the colonel?" he asked.
"Trouble!" echoed Raymond. "Trouble!
He has destroyed the whole happiness of my life. Take that and read it!" He handed him Laura's billet-doux. Felix read it.
"Well?" he said calmly.
"Well?" replied Raymond. "Am I not the most unfortunate of men?"
"These lines would give me to understand just the contrary."
"But do you know that I am officer of the advance guard to-night," said the young lover biting his nails to the quick.
Felix laughed outright.
"And is this the reason of your violence and despair? Cheer up, man. I will take your watch, and some time you can do duty for me when it's my turn to want to be guard."
Raymond strained his friend to his heart in the excess of his joy.
"Felix, if he cries, say Felix! I believe you were born for my happiness! You are the beneficent being who scatters flowers over my pathway."
At day-break the next day Raymond,
