BRIDGETOWN, DECEMBER 3, 1879.

DISTURBANCES IN IRELAND.

Some weeks ago we briefly remarked on the restiveness and discontent of the people in many parts of Ireland, and expressed a hope that a more quiet state of affairs would soon prevail.

The poorer classes in Ireland claim our sympathies and commiseration. There can be no doubt that the tenantry in that country are grievously oppressed by their heartless landlords.

Our natural eyesight is too feeble to see objects at remote distances. Some of the lower animals, in the scope and clearness of their vision, are superior to men. Naturalists tell us that the keen sight of the eagle, when poised high in air, can see its tiny prey when miles away.

—Mr. J. C. Mahon, of Truro, some weeks ago, took three fast horses from the United States. One of them, Frank Allison, was a larger and better specimen than any he had seen in his travels.

—The cause of the present social disturbances in Ireland is less attributable to bad government than to oppressive landowners.

We regret the present troubles in Ireland. It is renowned for the sweetest of poets—the mightiest of orators—and the bravest of soldiers.

We live in a reading age, which is distinguished for the almost interminable multiplication of books. The most of them are either frothy fictions or the foggy exhibitions of vague theories that excite a transient interest.

Acadia College—A Telescope.

The class of students that graduate at Acadia College in 1871, before bidding adieu to Alma Mater, and going forth to exercise their collegiate advantages, in various ways, on the broad field of public usefulness, undertook to confer upon that educational institution some grateful token of the benefits they had received.

—The Dominion flour market, we see by our exchanges, is steady. In England there is a slight advance, with stiff markets. Sugar markets are strong with prospect of advancing prices.

—We learn that four new vessels are to be built at Bear River in the spring. Men are now in the woods getting out the timber.

—Some swindlers in the Upper Provinces have lately been converting $1 Dominion notes into $4 notes.

Miscellaneous

Cetewayo

Cetewayo as he is seen in European dress, being handed ashore at Cape Town docks by Commander Coffin, R. N. is a very different and less heroic looking person than as he was pictured some weeks ago in his native and scanty costume. For some interesting facts of Cetewayo's domestic habits, we are indebted to the Illustrated London News. It says: "Cetewayo's domestic habits, while at home in his own country, were those of other Zulu and Kaffir chiefs. He had many wives, and a multitude of male and female slaves, collected in the Royal Park of enclosure of huts, and his wealth consisted of great herds of oxen and much cows. He was, notwithstanding his corpulence, a man of active pursuits, fond of riding, shooting, and fishing; a plentiful eater of beef and native porridge, and drinker of Zulu beer. He never drank strong liquors, but he was not averse to the use of wine. His temper was sanguine, jovial, cheerful, and boastful, somewhat haughty, but not prone to fits of violent rage. He was quite illiterate, and had never travelled out of Zululand, but he was shrewd in his questions about foreign affairs. He believed profoundly in the religious and political traditions of the Zulu nation; he remembered the memory of his deified ancestors, the heroes and conquerors of the former Zulu empire; he consulted the oracles of Zulu priests, the famous rain-makers, and the oracles and witch-doctors of that heathen country. It was for the imagined beneficent power of Langalibalele as a conjurer of rain, that Cetewayo sought to procure his release from the British Government. And he was at one time persuaded to forego his purpose of attack on the Swazis, because they possessed a noted local shrine at which prayers for rain should be offered, and the Zulu agriculturalists wanted rain. Such was King Cetewayo, who inherited, unimpaired for himself, the sceptre of a realm endowed by his predecessors, forty or fifty years ago, with a rigid military constitution." In reference to his journey on board H. M. S. "Natal," the News says: "The Commodore sent him a suit of clothes, tweed coat, waistcoat, and trousers, with an ordinary rain, and Cetewayo was glad to put on; understanding that such apparel was necessary for him to take a respectable figure among European eyes. He asked for a box to keep his clothes in, and was supplied with a metal travelling trunk, in which he laid them up neatly folded at night; he also got a hat-brush and clothes brush. The red and green tablecloth was worn as a shawl. The women were supplied with shirts, but were not always so particular about wearing them. The King made a very tolerable figure in his English dress; he is a tall, big man, nearly six feet in height, and extremely stout, measuring about sixty inches round the chest, but not uncleanly, his thighs are very large and his knees swollen, from a disease of long standing. He is fifty-four years of age, but looks not above forty, the hair of his head being only a little grizzled. His hair at top is moulded into the stiff ring, which all married men wear among the Zulus. He has a good natured, unassuming smiling face, a slight mustache, but not much beard. His color is a light ash brown, not like that of a negro. The wives are good young women, and some of them years of age, one of them rather handsome, the chief or induna, Umkoshana, in whose honor the Zulu King was taken, and who has voluntarily surrendered his captivity, is a finely-grown man, above six feet tall, well shaped and muscular. Cetewayo accepted of cigars and a pipe, and was fond of smoking with Captain Poole. He was taken on board H. M. S. "Boadicea," where he saw the women and marines at their drill, and the great guns, but he was not admiring. "I am a child," he said, "I was only born yesterday; I know nothing." His behavior, in general, was sociable and agreeable. The only complaint he had with Captain Poole was upon the demand he first made to have an ox killed and roasted every day for his dinner, which he is accustomed to eat in the Zulu Royal household; but it was soon explained to him that this would not do in an English kitchen. He did not like the customary English dishes, perhaps associating with Sir T. Shepstone and Mr. Dennis, whom he now regards as his enemies; but officers, naval or military, he was always inclined to meet. No person was allowed to come near him without special permission. He consented to let a photograph be taken in several poses, though he seemed to fear that there was some beneficial art magic in the use of the lens and camera; a sketch of him was also drawn while at Simon's Bay. The portraits of the women likewise were taken. His Majesty the ex King of Zululand, like some of the Norman Kings of England (but not not exactly right). But nobody has ever yet been able to spell it. Cetewayo, Ketswayo, Ketswayo, Ketswayo, and several other phonetic names. Similar curiosities have been tried in vain. We believe that the last of those given above is nearer than the others to the actual sound of the whole name, but it is not exactly right. The Zulu language has three "click" consonants of its own, or rather common to most of the Kaffir and other Basin languages of South East Africa. These different "clicks" are produced by smartly thrusting the tongue against either the palate, or the roots of the front teeth, or the sides of the teeth. The first syllable of the King's name, therefore, is a double click, which passes from the palate to the dental. No letters of the European alphabet will represent this part of the name. The second portion is "why" or "woy," not "wyo," according to the ordinary use of vowels in English. It is of no great consequence, but as he is now taken pains to learn how to roll his tongue, we may as well try to seek it, barring the impossible "clicks," till he and his officers can be safely forgotten, and there be no need to speak of him any more. During his late voyage from Port Durnford to Cape Town on board H. M. S. "Natal," transport ship, he expressed a wish to know how to write. Having recovered from sea-sickness, which he endured with patience and good humor (only wishing he had thought his "big stick" or sceptre, to have thrown it into the sea and made a cullin), the captive monarch was ready to take his first lesson. This was kindly given by his friend, Commander Crawford Coffin R. N., who, with Captain Roscoe, Poole, R. N., had joint charge of the illustrious passenger on board. Commander Coffin first inscribed the King's name, spelling it as he thought it, in printing capital letters, which the royal pupil imitated as well as he could.

How Long We Are to Live.

It is not even one who asks himself this question, because, strangely enough, it is the belief of many persons that their lives will be exceptionally lengthy. However, life assurance companies are aware of the credulous weakness of those whose lives they assure, and have therefore compiled numerous tables of expectancy of life for their own guidance, which are carefully referred to before a policy is granted. The following is one of these well-authenticated tables in use among London assurance companies, showing the length of life at various ages. In the first column we have the present ages of persons of average length, and in the second column we are enabled to peep, as it were, behind the scenes of an assurance office, and gather from their table the number of years they will give us to live. This table has been the result of careful calculation, and seldom proves misleading. Of course, sudden and premature deaths, occasionally occur, but this is a table of average expectancy of life of an ordinary man or woman:

Table with 2 columns: Age and More years to live. Rows include ages from 1 to 80.

Our readers will exactly gather from the above tabulated statement the number of years to which their lives, according to the law of averages, will reasonably be expected to extend.

AN EXPERT FORGER.—A detective with whom a reporter of the New York Times recently was talking in New York, Ct., and who did not know the profession of his companion, unburdened himself of some interesting reminiscences concerning criminals, of which Massachusetts furnished the following:

"One of the most expert forgers that ever appeared in this country was caught in Massachusetts lately, convicted and sentenced to ten years imprisonment. He had not been in prison more than three months when, to the astonishment of the jailer, a pardon came for him in due form, and signed by the Governor, and properly countersigned. There was nothing to be done but to liberate the prisoner, and he walked out. But he had not been gone long before the jailer discovered that the prisoner had managed through his friends to get a blank pardon from the Governor's office, had filled it out with his own name, and had then passed it out to his friends again, to be mailed to the jail in proper form. The clever forger had not got far enough away to escape, and he was arrested and sent back to prison. He employed a young New York lawyer, whose name is familiar through the fame of his father, and told him the story. 'They have no right to lock you up again,' said the lawyer, 'having once liberated you, without legally proving that the pardon is a forgery, they can get you out, but it will cost you $1500.' 'Go ahead,' said the forger. The lawyer went ahead, gained his case, and liberated the prisoner. 'I'm going out now,' immediately said the forger, as soon as he was free. 'My father, who is a wealthy man, owns a thirty thousand dollar farm in Kansas, and he has just sent me this letter, begging me to come home and lead an honest life, and telling me to draw on him for $2000 to pay my bills. I am his only son, and told him it is coming to an end: I shall settle down on my father's farm and be an honest man, and he showed me the letter. 'I shall need $1000 of the money to pay some little bills,' continued the forger, 'and here is a draft I have made on my father for the $2000. If you can give me a check for $1000 I will give you the draft, and will send you the other $500 as soon as I get home.' The lawyer read the letter carefully, drew a check for $1000 and handed it to his client, and received the draft for $2000. About ten days after the draft was deposited in a bank for collection it came back, with the message that the man on whom it was drawn was dead for eight years, and wasn't worth a cent when he was alive.'"

Travelling Stationer.

Many of our readers have doubtless heard of the travelling stone of Australia. Similar curiosities have recently been found in Nevada, which are described as almost perfectly round, the majority of them as large as a walnut, and of an iron nature. When distributed about upon the floor, table, or other level surface, within two or three feet of each other, they immediately begin traversing toward a common centre, and there lie huddled up in a bunch like a lot of eggs in a nest. A single stone, removed to a distance of three and a half feet, upon being released at once started off with wonderful and somewhat comical celerity to join its fellows. Taken away four or five feet, it remained motionless. They are found in a region that is comparatively level and is nothing but bare rock. Scattered over this barren region are little basins from a few feet to a rod or two in diameter, and in the bottom of those that the rolling stones are found. They are from the size of a pea to four or five inches in diameter, and are doubtless to be found in the material of which they are composed, which appears to be limestone or magnesian limestone.

Joker's Corner.

The Breeding of Berkshires. Mr. A. Southwick of Massachusetts, writing from his experience in the State, regards the Berkshire swine as meeting the demands of most farmers who want a hog that will attain a weight of from 250 to 350 pounds in the least possible time. This sort of hogs is that which is regarded at the West as the best adapted to the wants of the West. How a Chicago Man Prevented an Engagement Being Broken. We have it on the authority of the Chicago Tribune that you never get ahead of Chicago, and the statement is substantiated. A young man of this city had long paid attention to one of the fairest daughters of Cleveland, now visiting here, and had been engaged to her, when suddenly, for some reason or other, she concluded to marry some one else. The unsuspecting young man went to call on her at her aunt's house on Calumet avenue last week and as she drew back, her ruby lips when he prepared to greet her with a loving kiss, he at once thought there was something up and glancing at her again he noticed that she wore none of his gifts, which he conjectured were in an ominous looking parcel on the sofa. This conjecture was subsequently proved to be correct.

What does this mean? 'Mean?' cried the young man walking on his hands and knees down the sumptuous drawing room; 'It means I'm free. I've been trying to muster up courage to ask you for two weeks to let me cancel our engagement—but I could not—I would have been going back on my word, and besides I knew that husbands at this period of commercial depression were hard to get.' 'Sir?' said she glancing at him like a tiger-cat, 'your presents are all in this package. Take them and return me mine. This must be brought to me.' 'I'll send you all of 'em I can find, but I guess our cook carried off your Tennyson with the marked passages in it—I lent it to her and she had some of your locks of hair and pressed roses and things, I burned when I was cleaning up my room the other day, and as for your ring, I don't think Cora will give it to me.'

'And, pray, who may this creature 'Cora' be?' is she the cook at the boarding house? 'Cora, bless you, no—she's the girl I'm in love with, and that's going to propose to this very evening, as soon as you give me that package of presents and let me go—I hope you've been going to put in the diamond earrings I gave you. I'll give them to her and she'll be glad.' The beautiful Cleveland girl's cheeks glowed so that you could have lighted a match at them if you weren't afraid of having your fingers burned by the glare in her eyes. 'Tell me about this 'Cora' of yours, is she good looking?' 'Good looking!' said the young man, exactly; 'hold on till I show you her picture, and be seated in a chair, in his pockets. 'No, I must have left it in my other coat. Well, she's a beauty, I used to think you were pretty fair looking, but you—hair so long that she steps on it when it is let down and she tries to walk; eyes that make you feel as if you were getting back a ten dollar bill you had never expected to see again; a waist very much like yours, only much smaller, and as for her feet—why you couldn't put more than 40 per cent. of your toes into one of her boots. Well, good night, Miss What's-your-name, I told her I'd trouble you for that package.'
