TO THE TENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1948, INCLUSIVE

BEING

VOLUME CCLXI FOR THE PERIOD 1875-1948

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

OTTAWA
EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., B.A., L.Ph.,
PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 10, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—NOTICE FROM KING'S PRINTER WITH REGARD TO REPRINTS OF MEMBERS' SPEECHES

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the rights and privileges of members of this house. I shall be as brief as I can, without any detail. Last year, on July 14, the joint committee on printing presented its second report to this house. I refer to the report having to do with Hansard reprints. Concurrence in that report was not moved; consequently it was not approved by the house. Recently, however, hon. members have received from the king's printer a statement with respect to Hansard reprints, increasing the price and also decreeing that the recommendations of the report, which we have never approved, are now in effect. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is a breach of the rights and privileges of hon. members, and that either the Secretary of State or Your Honour should look into the matter.

MR. CRUICKSHANK—PRESS NOTICE OF SNOW IN VANCOUVER

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): On a question of privilege, sir, I may not be quite as brief as the previous speaker, because we have had considerable publicity lately in Edmonton and elsewhere about the freedom of the press. An insult to the province of British Columbia and particularly to my riding has been published in the papers. I shall just read it:

> Schools were closed in Vancouver, on Vancouver island and in the Fraser valley . . .

On account of snow. Mr. Speaker, I received a flower from my garden this morning.

MR. MITCHELL—EXPLANATION OF REMARK MADE IN DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 9

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, yesterday I made a remark during the course of the address by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) which gave an impression quite contrary to what I believe. I was quoted as saying "That is not the story in the trades congress, and the hon. member knows it as well as I do". The hon. member for Cape Breton South had been talking about profits, prices and wage control and then of labour organizations being willing to co-operate with the government and myself and my remark made it clear that I discounted this. What I had in mind when I spoke was the stand of organized labour on wage control—that they were against it. I was not thinking about co-operation, which I must say now has been forthcoming at all times from labour organizations and which has helped greatly in better industrial relations generally. Because of the misapprehension, hon. members will note that I deleted the word "not" from the typewritten report of my remarks recorded on page 989 of Hansard. I thought I should make this statement in explanation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister what work he intends to proceed with if the motion before the house is disposed of this afternoon?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): We shall continue with the debate on the emergency measure today, and tomorrow and on Thursday the debate on the address, and on Friday we shall return to the emergency measure.

Mr. KNOWLES: By "emergency measure" the Prime Minister means Bill No. 3?

[Later:]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I supplement what I have said with reference to continuing on Friday with the emergency measures? I have since been informed by the Minister of Finance that he may wish to ask the house to take some other measure on Friday than the emergency measure, and in that event we will try to arrange, between now and Thursday night, what will best suit hon. members.

Mr. BRACKEN: I understood the Prime Minister to say that tomorrow we would proceed in committee with Bill No. 3.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, today.

Mr. BRACKEN: I understood the Prime Minister to say tomorrow as well, and I had previously understood that tomorrow and Thursday were to be given to the speech from the throne.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry if I did say that. I meant to say that this afternoon we would continue with the emergency measures, on Wednesday and Thursday with the debate on the address, and on Friday take up the emergency measures again. I am now saying that on Friday we may not take up the emergency measures at present being considered, but we shall seek between now and Friday to arrange either to continue the debate on the address or to take up some other emergency measure as may best suit the convenience of the house.

Mr. ADAMSON: I understood the Prime Minister to say that it was the intention to proceed with a measure of the Minister of Finance on Friday instead of going back to the speech from the throne. Is it the intention of the minister to proceed with the gold measure, or some other matter?

Mr. ABBOTT: I had not given special consideration to that, Mr. Speaker. The measure to assist the gold mining industry is on the order paper and it could be proceeded with at any time. It is not as urgent as some of the others, but perhaps we can give the question consideration between now and Friday.

SUGAR BEETS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF 1948 PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, based upon a newspaper report of January 12, 1948. The report states that on January 12 was announced the 1948 increase in price for tomatoes, peas for canning, sweet corn and green beans, crops which compete with sugar beets in the labour market. In the light of these facts, will the minister tell the house when he will make known what increase the government will render possible to producers in the price per ton of beets for sugar making in 1948?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for Lethbridge was good enough to give me notice of the question and I can best answer it by repeating the last paragraph of the statement I made on November 3, 1947, when sugar rationing was abandoned. The paragraph reads:

> The government does not propose to subsidize the production of sugar beets in 1948, nor does it propose to sell imported cane sugar on a subsidized basis. Beet sugar may therefore be expected to sell at prices in line with average laid down duty paid costs of imported cane sugar.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRINTING OF ANNUAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): The Minister of Agriculture has tabled a copy of the report of the administration of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Is it intended to have that report printed, and if so, will it be available for distribution to members? If that was not contemplated, will the minister arrange to have the report printed?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I will inquire into the matter. I am not certain whether it will be printed or not, but I will look into it.

FLAXSEED—CATTLE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ASKED ON FEBRUARY 9

On the orders of the day:

Mr. LEWIS MENARY (Wellington North): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or, in his absence, his parliamentary assistant, to take notice of my questions of yesterday, page 986 of Hansard, relating to flaxseed and cattle, and answer them.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My parliamentary assistant advises me that the statement in answer to the question is not ready. It will be given tomorrow or as soon as it comes to hand.

WHEAT

PARTICIPATION CERTIFICATES FOR 1945 AND 1946 CROPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he in a position to advise when participation certificates covering the 1945 and 1946 crops will be paid?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My hon. friend is aware that no increase in the initial payments from the five year wheat pool can be made without an amendment to the wheat board act. The amendment has been prepared and will be on the order paper within the next few days. I am advised by the wheat board that payments can be made promptly after that amendment is approved by the house. Participation certificates for the 1945 crop are already in the hands of the wheat board, and cheques will issue, I am told, over a very short period as soon as the legislation is passed.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

FUEL OIL FOR FERRY STEAMERS "ABEGWEIT" AND "PRINCE EDWARD"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): In view of the short supply of fuel oil, as per statement made a few days ago, I desire to direct a question to the hon. the Minister of Transport. Is there a sufficient quantity of fuel oil in storage at Borden and Tormentine for the ferry steamers Abegweit and Prince Edward on the Borden-Tormentine route for the winter and spring seasons of 1948?

POSTAL SERVICE

SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS TO RURAL MAIL COURIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Seeing that I did not get an answer to my previous question I will try another one. I desire to direct a question to the hon. the Postmaster General, or the Prime Minister, or both. Is it the intention of the government to set up a special committee of the house to study the problems of the rural mail couriers in order to give these most faithful servants a living wage?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): It is not the intention of the government to establish a committee, but as I said before, a bill will be brought in to give authority to make further supplementary payments.

PRICES

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO PRICE INCREASES AND MATTERS PERTAINING THERETO

The house resumed from Monday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie King that a select committee be appointed to examine and report on the causes of the recent rise in the cost of living, and matters pertaining thereto.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): When the debate was adjourned last night I was mentioning that when Canada developed a shortage of United States dollars, the government acted rapidly to take some corrective measure. When however Canadian citizens are faced with a shortage of Canadian dollars the government considers that a powerless committee is a good enough answer to this house and to the country. By their actions in these two matters they invite the suspicion that there is an ulterior motive, and possibly Mr. Warren Baldwin, writing in the Globe and Mail on January 9, 1948, hit on that motive. Mr. Baldwin has this to say, and I quote from a press dispatch of that day in the Globe and Mail:

> Plans crystallizing here to take care of Canada's physical contribution to the still hypothetical European recovery program are predicated on a greater degree of austerity than is yet being practised by the Canadian consumer . . . the Canadian public will be expected to produce an exportable surplus by cutting down on domestic consumption . . . counting on the rising costs of living in Canada to assist by cutting down the present spending spree . . . This principle applies in the food field itself... If higher prices themselves fail to take care of the situation it may be that other forms of pressure will have to be used.

And further on he says:

> There are at least some members of the government who are finding it hard to shed very many tears at soaring prices so long as it contributes to the goal which it is expected the United States will demand that Canada achieve.

I suspected, and apparently he suspects, that Canada is being sold to the United States, and neither Canadian citizens nor this house of parliament know what the terms of the sale are. We only know the end result so far, and that is the high cost of living. I consider this method a rather cruel way of reducing consumption. If in order to play our proper and honourable part in assisting Europe to recover it is necessary to reduce our consumption, then every Canadian should make a sacrifice, and equality of sacrifice cannot be achieved by allowing prices to rise to a point where our less fortunate citizens are forced by economic pressures to do without many of the basic necessities of life. That equality of sacrifice can only be achieved by some form of rationing, and we have suggested the imposition of price controls and the payment of subsidies as expedient and more practical than straight rationing, although even that may be necessary for some articles.

The payment of subsidies will require the imposition of the excess profits tax, and I can see no hardship to corporations in that imposition. We have already had put on the record here some of the profit increases by many corporations. I want to quote a few more just to emphasize what I mean when I say that no hardship will result to the corporations by the imposition of the excess profits tax.

These figures are taken from the Financial Post of November 15, 1947, and have been quoted before during this debate. In 1945 the Simpson Company had a profit of $1,425,858. In 1946 their profit was $3,656,851, an increase of $2,230,993, or 156 per cent. That was a substantial increase in one year, which I believe was quite unnecessary. Zellers increased their profits in 1946 over 1945 by $231,967. Dominion Stores increased their 1946 profits over 1945 by $456,116. Loblaw Groceterias increased their profits in 1946 over 1945 by $566,668. Canadian Bakeries, while they are apparently a smaller concern, increased their 1946 profits over 1945 by $71,669. Canadian Canneries increased their 1946 profits over 1945 by $697,144. The Borden Company increased theirs by $7,487,034; Silverwood Dairies increased theirs by $263,754; H. R. MacMillan Export Company alone increased theirs by $1,097,075. I gave the figures for Massey-Harris last night, and there are more figures here with which I shall not weary the house. I submit those only to emphasize again that I do not believe any hardship will result to these corporations by the reimposition of the excess profits tax.

Again, if these extra profits had not been made in 1946—and undoubtedly they will be still higher in 1947, according to all accounts we see in the papers—they could have been handled in one of two ways by the companies themselves. They could have been used to reduce the costs of the manufactured article, or they could have been used to increase the wage to the workers of those industries. As those corporations did neither, I see no reason why the government and the public should not have the benefit of those profits as a redistribution of income when there is low purchasing power on the part of many of our citizens, in order to level off the income in these days of high prices.

I know that some people will say that those increases in profits are not from profiteering. They will say that it was increased business which made them possible. That is a possibility; I do not deny it. But I have been listening for a good many years to certain types of advertising by businesses in this country, by means of which they drill into the mind of the consumer and the customer that volume cuts cost. If the volume of their business increased to the point where their profits increased as I have indicated by the figures I have quoted, obviously the volume did cut cost; and somehow that cut in the cost should have been handed on to the wage earners, the consumers, or to the public treasury. These are the reasons why our leader early in the year gave voice to the six-point program he proposed, all based on the things which we believe and which have been supported generally in the speeches from this, the C.C.F. section of the house.

Our leader asked for the following measures: reimposition of price control; renewal of the subsidies on a number of things; the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange, which could be done; reconstruction of the wartime prices and trade board—while it may be a big job, it is not impossible; continuation of the excess profits tax after December 31, 1947, and rationing, if necessary, on some essential commodities. In spite of the courageous speeches made by members from the other side of the house, including the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) and, I believe, the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Bertrand), the government has made it clear that it will not even give consideration to the imposition of price controls, the continuation of subsidies, or the imposition of the excess profits tax. That makes me wonder what the government hope to accomplish by the setting up of this committee. Do they expect a miracle, Mr. Speaker? I am sure they do not want it. It may happen.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) cited four things which would not be done; and if none of those four things is done, the committee will serve no purpose whatsoever except to provide a place in which members may spend their time instead of being here in the house or somewhere else. The chances against the miracle are great, because the committee is to be watched over by the eagle eye of a cabinet minister who will want the government policy—which is to discover nothing—carried out. He will be ably assisted by partisan members who will be equally subservient to government requirements.

The vast majority of Canadians have already said that they want price control. Let us see what the farmers have to say. I have here a leaflet containing the resolutions adopted at the fourteenth annual convention of the British Columbia federation of agriculture. This resolution, among others, was passed:

Whereas president H. H. Hannam of the Canadian federation of agriculture has issued a call to action to all member bodies of the federation, urging a nation-wide campaign of petitions, telegrams, delegations to members of parliament, and protest meetings, designed to press the government for the return of price controls on grains, feeds and feed ingredients, and the restoration of subsidies at the coming session of the House of Commons;

Therefore be it resolved that this 1947 convention of the British Columbia federation of agriculture commend our national body for this action and pledge our wholehearted support towards the realization of a powerful and effective protest campaign, and

Be it further resolved that, in order to strengthen and co-ordinate the campaign, regional conferences shall be called throughout the province as soon as possible, representatives—

And so on, with the idea of promoting that particular plan.

I think the members of this particular group and others have indicated quite clearly plenty of good reasons why this committee should not be set up—not because we object to committees, but because the committee will serve no purpose except that of taking up the time of the members. We believe that action is what is required now. I know there are a few people in the country who do not want controls. But, Mr. Speaker, in the old days when highwaymen and bandits were prevalent in some parts of the world the first government that attempted to control them and prevent them from preying on the peaceful public was considered to be a most radical government. The bandits felt they had the right to the kind of life they lived, the right to engage in their piratical activities. Even one of Kipling's poems, the Lament of the Border Cattle Thief, indicates the insult which the chief of the border band felt had been visited upon him because the British government refused to allow him and his tribe to prey on the peaceful farmers of the valley in his territory.

The beneficiaries of any system or plan of society—or lack of plan—complain when some privilege is taken from them. But, Mr. Speaker, at the present time the welfare of far too many of our Canadian citizens depends upon the action taken by this government and this parliament to permit a few people, who because of some historical events in their lives have now assumed positions in the economic world, to exercise control which this parliament should have.

I repeat that we see no good purpose to be served by this committee. We believe the government should get on with its job, as it has in some of the other instances I have mentioned during the course of my contribution to this debate.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, today the Canadian people find themselves in a desperate situation. The proposal that a parliamentary committee be set up at this time reveals how little that fact is appreciated by those in control in the government here. For the past two years we have been facing rapid rises in the cost of living, which have used up the entire income of the people and drained their last bit of savings. The steepest increases have taken place in the past ten months, and the point now has been reached where the income of the average Canadian breadwinner no longer buys the food, clothing, fuel and care which his family requires for a proper Canadian standard. Each week new prices are announced on basic goods—flour, bread, milk, clothing, shoes, fuel, including coal, wood and oil. Each month, with monotonous regularity, the family finds that its income will not cover the new costs. Every wage earner in Canada is facing the problem of a rapid decrease in the amount of necessary goods his cheque will buy.

Recently I received a petition from my constituency, in the form of a resolution, which with your permission I should like to read to the house:

Whereas the rising cost of living is making it impossible for us to buy the necessities of life in food, clothing, fuel and shelter for our families and ourselves;

And whereas wages and salaries do not keep up with these rising costs, and so our savings are being completely used up;

And whereas there appears to be nothing to stop these costs from going completely out of the reach of the people who need these goods, and will ultimately bring unemployment and depression;

Therefore we urge, in the strongest terms possible, that the authorities at Ottawa who control these policies take immediate steps to control prices of food, clothing, shelter and fuel, as basic necessities of life, until the production and supply of these things is adequate to meet the needs.

People who have some savings, or who are in a position to ask their employers for increased wages, are fortunately situated; but those who are on fixed wages, those who are in receipt of war pensions or old age pensions, and wage earners with no savings, are in a desperate situation. Today I think of people out on the prairies in the crop failure areas who have practically no income this year, and who find the cost of living most alarming. Their deep concern is, first, that no effective action seems to be taken, and, second, that there seems to be no ceiling to limit the cost of living. In vain they wait for some action by the government in Ottawa to halt this upward trend, but nothing appears to be done; on the contrary government action sometimes actually makes the situation worse.

Let me give one example to illustrate what I mean. Until last October the prices of coarse grains were controlled. Thus the cost of feeding poultry, beef, pork and mutton was kept stabilized at least to some extent, and the cost to the consumer was kept within the reach of the average man's pay envelope. The government waited until the prairie farmers, who grow a large part of Canada's coarse grain, had delivered most of those coarse grains, I believe some 39,000,000 bushels of barley and millions of bushels of oats. Then suddenly the authorities at Ottawa removed the subsidies and turned over control of the prices of coarse grains to be set by the gambling on the Winnipeg grain exchange. Within a couple of weeks prices of these feed grains had increased ten, twenty, thirty, thirty-five cents a bushel, and those prices are still fluctuating to the detriment of both the consumer and the producer.

What was the effect of this action on the part of the government? The feed companies and the grain companies, who had purchased the grain at the lower price, by manipulating the market were able to pocket the difference. The feed companies, which had bought the grain at the lower prices, were now able to charge the increased prices for the feed they sold. As a result we hear such protests as that made last evening by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), who told us that the price of feed for poultry had doubled while the selling price of eggs had been reduced by about twenty cents per doz. The net result, as far as Canada was concerned, necessarily was that since it costs more to feed cattle and poultry it costs more to produce milk, butter and eggs. So the cost of these things to the Canadian consumer had to jump, and the cost of living rose tremendously right across the country with regard to foods which are the basis of the nutrition and health of the people of Canada. The farmer who produced the coarse grains and sold before the price increase naturally lost.

The Canadian people are demanding that the Winnipeg grain exchange be closed, and that gambling in foods be stopped. It is costing the Canadian people too much. I think every member of our group has received resolutions from the Saskatchewan wheat pool committees at various points asking for the closing of the exchange. Canada cannot afford it.

Members of this house have complained about these costs. The Canadian people, and rightly so, expect effective action in regard to the rising cost of living; and they want that action now. Six months from now it may be too late. The Canadian people went through one depression. We feel we cannot protest too vehemently against any delay; and we believe that setting up this committee can only bring about a delay in essential action.

[Mr. Castleden.]

The greatest danger from a continuation of the present policy is that Canadian income will continue to be inadequate to purchase the production of this country. When production declines, firms will start laying off employees, and unemployment will further aggravate the situation. The purchasing power of the Canadian pepole, reduced time and again, ultimately will bring about a depression. I am sure every thinking Canadian would do anything he could to avoid a repetition of the thirties. If that is to be done this price trend will have to be halted, so that purchasing power will remain in the pockets of the Canadian people. I repeat that the present situation is desperate, and though its full effect has not been felt as yet, effective action to cure it must be taken now.

In the face of this situation we came to Ottawa and the house reopened on January 26. What did we find? We were told the government proposed to set up a committee. Well, Mr. Speaker, a committee can investigate; it can cross-examine witnesses; it may even expose some profiteering. For several months it will meet frequently; it will hear government officials whose evidence will cover many pages in an endeavour to vindicate government policy. If representatives of large firms are brought to give evidence they will bring with them mountainous briefs prepared by highly paid legal advisers and chartered accountants. We are told that we will find some facts, that the proceedings of the committee will give publicity to the actions of the evil doers. The Prime Minister informed us that he thought publicity was much more valuable than penalties.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the government and the people responsible for the proposed committee that valuable as it may be in determining the ultimate policy and actions of the government, that type of investigation is not what the people of Canada want. What they want is action within the next few weeks. They are deeply interested in having the cost of living reduced to a point where they can all live better on the pay envelopes they bring home each week. A committee is simply not the machinery which will bring those costs down. It is not enough.

Someone has suggested that this might be a fishing expedition. Well, in a fishing expedition a fishing pole might be a valuable instrument. But what the people of Canada want is more action taken now which will put coal in their basements and food in their cupboards. That cannot be done with a fishing pole. They want the cost of living brought within the range of their pocketbooks.

The strong exception taken by the C.C.F. group to this committee may have irked the government and hon. members opposite. This protest of ours is not a protest against the committee for what it may or may not do. Our protest—and we have made it as vehemently as possible—is against the policy of the government in not implementing measures immediately to stop the rapidly rising cost of living. It is because the committee which so far is the government's only answer, is just not good enough. It does not and it cannot meet the desperate needs of the situation of the people of Canada today. If the average Canadian were in this House of Commons this afternoon, or if he were speaking of the thing which is closest to him, I believe he would say this, through you, Mr. Speaker: "Please, Mr. King, what are you going to do right now to stop the rising cost of living?" The Canadian people know that a committee will not do it. As yet we have had no answer from the government or from any of its ministers as to what it intends to do now to stop the rising cost of living.

In his contribution to the debate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) told us that subsidies were impossible at this time. My reply to him would be that he introduced a variety of subsidies during and since the war, and effectively prevented inflation in this country. He said that was an emergency. I should like to let him know there is an emergency in Canada today; and if the Canadian people have to make a choice between subsidies and unemployment or depression, they will be glad to have subsidies.

As this debate draws to a close the Prime Minister will rise in his place and Canada will be waiting for his answer. Doubtless he will berate this group for its protests; but that will not answer the question. The Canadian people want more than a parliamentary committee. We have a right to be informed that the government will do something to make it possible for the average man in this country to use his pay envelope so that it will bring to him and his family the things he requires for a proper living standard.

By way of constructive suggestion let me repeat one or two of the things which we think should be done to stop this rising cost of living.

First, we require proper fixed prices on essential articles of food, clothing, fuel and shelter. The basic necessities of the average home must be placed within the reach of the average breadwinner in Canada.

Second, I suggest closing the Winnipeg grain exchange, so that the value of feeds and coarse grains will not fluctuate and wheat will not be allowed to go back on the grain exchange and be subject to constant fluctuations, thereby affecting the cost of living of the people of Canada.

Third, I suggest the restoration of the excess profits tax on all excess profits, so that the Canadian people will have the assurance that excessive profits are not being made by a few people while millions are forced to live in misery or without the necessities of life.

Such a program I understand will not be favourably received by those who had the privilege of grabbing all they could in a time when grabbing was good. But I suggest that this bare minimum is essential to meet the situation today, and it should be established until trade and production are restored at least to normal conditions.

The Prime Minister's answer to the Canadian people will be one of the most important statements he will make in his long public career. I hope he will not waste too much of his time berating those who oppose his ideas. I venture to say he will have the support of every thinking member of parliament from every part of the house if he outlines a program which will stop the rising cost of living. I can assure him that he will have vehement and continuous opposition from this group if he does not.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if this debate has served no other purpose, at least it has been a fairly satisfactory test of endurance; and I am happy to discover that at the end of one solid week of sitting in the house, listening to what has been said back and forth in the course of the debate, I have found it possible to hold my own with anyone in the house—which, I suggest, is not too bad for one in his seventy-fourth year.

May I say further it has been something of a test of patience. Here again I take a certain amount of satisfaction from the thought that I have been able to listen to what might almost be called a volume of vituperation at times, and yet have been able to refrain from saying anything disagreeable or nasty to those who were making remarks of that kind.

There is, however, this real satisfaction about the whole matter: What we have had to listen to is as nothing compared with what we would have had to listen to from hon. gentlemen opposite had someone on the other side suggested or had he moved that a committee be set up to inquire into the cost of living and the government had refused to grant that committee. We would have been told from the different groups, and in many different ways, that, in dealing with a great problem—and I believe all are agreed that consideration of the cost of living is one of the greatest problems facing not only this country but the countries of the world today—the first necessary step to take was that of investigating the causes. We would have been told by hon. members opposite that that is the method physicians adopt when they seek to combat disease. I would point out to hon. members that the cost of disease is one of the factors which keeps higher than it otherwise would be the cost of living to families which suffer in that way. We would have been told by members of the legal profession that that is the method they adopt in seeking to solve the problems of their clients. They look first for the causes at the root of the trouble they are expected to remove. We would have been told by hon. members opposite that investigation into cause is one method scientists adopt in dealing with any question, no matter to what subject it relates. The first necessary step is to ascertain the causes of the trouble into which we are inquiring and to make those causes as clear to the public as possible. That is what the government is seeking to do.

The resolution before the house is a simple one, asking that a committee be formed to inquire into the causes of the high cost of living. It sets out one or two supplementary matters to help make clear the particular causes in which the public are specially interested, namely those relating to possible profiteering, hoarding and the like. Yet we have had all kinds of objections and all this week's debate with respect to the one request by the government, that the House of Commons join with it in doing the one thing which above everything else is necessary in dealing with this all-important question.

I made it clear at the outset that this was but one of the steps which the government was taking; I cited a number of instances of what the government had done already and I indicated that there were other things that the government intended to do. I said that this was to supplement other measures, not to be a substitute for any; that this was one additional means of helping to make clear what further steps there were that would assist in the solution of this problem.

That is a simple statement of what the house was asked to do. But what have we had from hon. gentlemen opposite in the way of acquiescing in that request? We have been forced to listen to a lot of declamation and ridicule; we have had to listen to many opprobrious epithets. We have had anger displayed by hon. gentlemen opposite; we have had threats of boycotting; we have had amendments moved to this simple resolution, and we have had appeals from the Speaker's rulings in regard to those amendments. On what grounds can these actions be defended? There is only one explanation that can be given. Hon. gentlemen opposite have recognized that this step which the government is taking is one which the people of this country want taken and want taken quickly. Because it has been taken by the government, they are doing all in their power to obscure the importance of that step. That is one explanation.

This motion was the simple matter of asking hon. gentlemen opposite to join with us in having a committee of the house appointed to investigate the causes of the great problem of the rise in the cost of living in which they, like us, are interested; but they have taken advantage of this opportunity to belabour the government for coming forward with a suggestion which, if any suggestion in the world would be helpful in meeting this serious problem, this one would be.

There are perhaps other reasons. After listening to the debate it has not been difficult to discover that the members of the three groups opposite have felt that this was a good opportunity—seeing that the government had promised to give a good deal in the way of latitude and the Speaker being asked not to rule too rigidly on the different points that might come up in an effort to keep the debate to one issue—to bring out their different policies. They have exploited their policies by using the time of parliament which should have been devoted to other subjects. They have endeavoured to make the public familiar with what they regard as important in their particular policies.

The amazing part of this whole thing is that their policies are as divergent as it is possible to have them. The minute it comes to the vital question of discussing the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite, that minute they begin to fight with each other like Kilkenny cats. They have no agreement whatever in the matter of policy, but when it comes to an opportunity, as they see it, of trying to embarrass the government they are ready to join hands and dance together merrily enough.

I hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will not think that the public are deceived by anything of the kind. The public have been watching their performance from outside the house with quite as much interest as I have from this side of the house. To me the week has been of interest in the sort of entertainment it has afforded and profitable in what it has revealed of the methods adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite in dealing with the public generally. The public will not be deceived by the performance we had in this house over the whole of last week and during the early part of this week on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite.

But there is something more serious than that. In the course of this debate we have had a good deal said that I believe is very unfortunate from the point of view of the future development of parliamentary practice and procedure and of the solution of great questions in this parliament. Among other things, we have witnessed an effort made to change the nature of what has hitherto been regarded as the duty of a parliamentary committee, to change a committee appointed for the purpose of investigating matters, into a committee to devise policy, into a committee which would take unto itself the obligation which, under the British system of government, has always rested on the shoulders of the government of the day. If we continue with that kind of thing we shall soon find the whole basis of our system of responsible government being undermined, with consequences which no one, at this moment, can foresee.

Then there was a suggestion that members of the house would not serve on the committee, that, not being able to have their own way, not being able to get others to see things just in the same light as they saw them, they would not serve, they would refrain from discharging a duty which is part of the obligation of every hon. member of parliament. I do not want to stress the point, but I was very much impressed when I heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) describe his experience in New York while attending the assembly of the united nations. He told us that walking out and refusing to serve was the method being adopted by some of the Soviet representatives at the united nations. I hope we are not going to have government in Canada carried on or developed along those lines, and I hope we have heard the last of any suggestion from hon. members that they intend to proceed in accordance with these new revolutionary methods, if they may be so termed.

Another thing which has been unfortunate is a tendency which has been clearly revealed of continuously appealing from rulings of the Speaker. The Speaker of the house is chosen by the members of the house to preside at its sessions. If there is one rule that is followed by the government at Westminster, above all others, it is that the ruling of the Speaker shall be respected by the house. Someone has to give the final decision. Where it is obvious that the Speaker is deciding in accordance with rules which hon. members themselves have made for the protection of freedom of discussion and debate, then every time the Speaker's ruling is challenged and an effort is made to have it appear that the Speaker has not given a just and fair ruling, to that extent correct procedure in the House of Commons suffers a heavy blow which, in the course of time, will have far-reaching reactions.

I wish to say this to hon. members about this matter of appealing from the Speaker's ruling. I venture to say that every hon. member of this house knew very well that when the Speaker decided that a certain amendment was not in order because it did away altogether with the original motion, the Speaker was giving a correct decision. They must have known that. Yet they appealed from the ruling of the Speaker and what is—

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Prime Minister is referring to a decision given by Your Honour and voted upon by this house. I submit that he has no right to discuss a matter that has already been settled, and that he is entirely out of order.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Or to impugn our honesty. He is impugning the honesty of everyone who voted against it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friends may say what they like.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. FLEMING: On a point of order, is it not against the rules of the house for an hon. member to reflect upon a vote cast by any other member of the house? The Prime Minister is reflecting upon the honesty of the votes cast by hon. members on this side of the house on an appeal from your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and to do so is absolutely against the rules of this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The point I was making was, I think, perfectly clear. Hon.

members of this house know very well that where an amendment which has the effect of ruling out a motion made—

Mr. MacINNIS: I rise to a point of order. If the Prime Minister is permitted to discuss a ruling made in the house, then every hon. member has a right to discuss that ruling. The ruling has been made, and before Your Honour made it we did not get an opportunity to say whether or not the ruling was in order. I object to the Prime Minister making an issue of it at this time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the Prime Minister is not discussing the ruling which was made by the Speaker.

Mr. MacINNIS: He is discussing the ruling.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He was discussing the conduct of the opposition, and he has a perfect right to do so.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Prime Minister is not God.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is one way of getting away from discussing the cost of living.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it will enable us to get a little nearer to the appointment of this committee I am prepared to end the discussion at this point. But I think the point I was making was pretty clearly understood by hon. gentlemen—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to know whether in saying he is willing to drop it the Prime Minister is withdrawing what he said when he imputed dishonesty to everyone who voted against the ruling. I want to know whether he withdraws it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must confess I am a little terrified by the look of my hon. friend. Notwithstanding that, I must say to him that all that I have said I have said for the best of reasons and it is in no way intended to reflect—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —and in no way intended to reflect on anyone. I was referring to something that has happened in this house, an unfortunate practice that is growing up.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is my hon. friend shaking his head so much for? I have said nothing to cause him any feeling. I have said what every hon. member knows to be the fact; they know certain amendments—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I rise again on a question of privilege. I want to know whether the Prime Minister has withdrawn the imputation which he made against everyone who voted against this ruling when he said that it was a dishonest vote. That is what he said.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, he did not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to know whether he withdraws it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, hon. members know very well that I have no intention of casting any reflection on any member of parliament with respect to his honesty, and I have not done so.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Why not say so?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not done so, and I have nothing to withdraw.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order. I humbly request Your Honour to rule whether the Prime Minister has been in order or out of order in his discussion of your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I understand, as I said a few minutes ago, that the Prime Minister has not been discussing the ruling which has been given by the Speaker. He is reviewing what happened during the debate. I do not think that the Prime Minister has imputed any motives to hon. members.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. SPEAKER: He gave his opinion of what happened during the debate.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is no wonder that rulings are appealed.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He is discussing your conduct, and you do not like it.

Mr. KNOWLES: If it is your ruling that the Prime Minister is in order, I respectfully appeal your ruling to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to recall that in discussing a ruling which I gave on an amendment I drew hon. members' attention to the fact that often some hon. members seem to be of the opinion that in ruling an amendment out of order the Speaker rules against its merit. The same thing applies to a motion to adjourn the house to discuss an urgent matter of public importance. As I said before, because the Speaker does not accept the motion, some members seem to be under the impression that the Speaker does not believe that the question which the hon. member wishes to discuss is urgent and important. Because of that some hon. members appeal the decision of the Speaker. During the course of the debate two amendments were ruled out of order and they were appealed. In closing the debate the Prime Minister is reviewing what happened during the debate. I do not see any objection to what he has said up to now.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Speaker, I asked you to rule whether or not the Prime Minister was in order. You have indicated that in your opinion—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. KNOWLES: —the Prime Minister is in order. Standing order 12 states that the Speaker decides points of order, subject to an appeal to the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I did not decide any point of order. I just said I did not think that the Prime Minister had anything to withdraw.

Mr. KNOWLES: I raised a point of order. Under standing order 12 Your Honour has the duty of deciding on the matter raised, subject to an appeal to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member knows very well that if he wishes to appeal, some other hon. members must rise in their places.

Mr. KNOWLES: Oh, well, there are plenty of us to do that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those who are in favour of the Speaker's ruling being sustained will please say "yea."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those against please say "nay."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "yeas" have it.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question before the house is an appeal from the Speaker's ruling. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point of order to the effect that in the course of his reply in the debate on the motion to appoint a select committee the right hon. the Prime Minister imputed certain motives to the opposition members. I ruled that the Prime Minister did not.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

YEAS

Mr. BLANCHETTE: I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COTE (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville): I was paired with the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case). Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. HATFIELD: I was paired with the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Gariepy). Had I voted, I would have voted against your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McLURE: I was paired with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Dionne), Mr. Speaker. Had I voted, I would have voted against your ruling.

Mr. HEON: I am permanently paired with the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Lapalme), Mr. Speaker. Had I voted I would, with great regret have voted against your decision.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, if it is any consolation to hon. gentlemen opposite I would say to them at once that, being most anxious to see this committee appointed as soon as possible, I promise I will not take up too much more of the time of the house this afternoon. So I hope that without its being found necessary on my part to raise any question of privilege or point of order I may be permitted to continue my remarks without being interrupted too freely from the other side of the house.

Obviously, having regard to the amount of talk—if that is not an unparliamentary expression—to which we have been obliged t listen for the last week, I cannot attempt in a short time to do more than give illustrations of the sort of argument that has been presented by hon. gentlemen opposite, and to which I am expected to reply.

In the first place, I would say that in following the debate I have not been able to discover anything that was too small for hon. gentlemen opposite to take exception to; and, after saying that, may I make the further assertion that I cannot think of anything they have brought forward thus far as to which, if we had brought it forward, they would not have found an equal amount of argument to present on the opposite side. They were determined at all costs to make it as difficult as possible to have this committee appointed. They were determined to make a display before the country of several days of obstruction of the government to have it appear that the measure the government was bringing forward was not in the public interest.

As an illustration of what I have said about nothing being too small, let me direct attention to the first clause in the motion I presented for the appointment of the committee which reads:

(a) the causes of the recent rise in the cost of living.

That word "recent" has been just too much for hon. gentleman opposite. They had to take exception to it. I was astonished at the number of members who did so, and particularly at some of those who took that exception. When this house reassembled at the beginning of the new year, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) rose in his place and said, as reported at page 543 of Hansard for this year:

. . . I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) the adjournment of the house under standing order 31, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the sudden and unprecedented rise in the cost of living.

The hon. gentleman mentioned the "sudden rise in the cost of living." Well, when the government was drafting this motion, being anxious to gain as large a measure of support and agreement as possible from hon. gentlemen opposite, we thought it would be desirable to put in the word "recent" in order to have the motion accord with what my hon. friend felt was the most urgent matter. He was anxious that it was the recent increase that should be taken into account. May I just ask hon. members this question. Suppose the government had left out the word "recent" and the clause had read "the causes of the rise in the cost of living." What would we have heard from hon. gentlemen opposite? We would have been told that we were giving the committee an academic task, that of going into the causes of the rise in the cost of living, something which might take them back not only generations but possibly centuries; that we were deliberately trying to give the committee something to do which would take up all their time before they would get anywhere at all. I need not elaborate the point further, but I give this as an example—and it is an example which applies all along the way—of many of the points which have been raised, and to which exception has been taken and the government's motives misinterpreted and misconstrued.

Then I come to the question of recommendations, the next objection which was raised frequently—that the government had not put in a clause giving this committee power to make recommendations. Well, I would recall to hon. members what I said in introducing the motion, before anyone on the opposite side had spoken. I said the government had purposely left out that clause at this stage for the reason that we wished to have the committee get on with the work of investigating causes, that parliament and the public might know the results thereof as rapidly as possible; that had the committee been asked to make recommendations, we would have found that the time of the committee would be taken up, as is pretty obvious from the debate which has taken place here, by discussion between members of different parties as to which particular recommendation should be made, whether it would be a recommendation along the lines of my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party or a recommendation along the lines of the C.C.F. or along the lines of the Social Credit party, should that party have a recommendation that it might wish to make. Certainly, with a request for recommendations of this type, the time of the committee would be taken up in a discussion of which particular recommendations they should make.

I need not take much time to point out the truth of what I am saying, and of how futile that might render the work of the committee. During this debate many references have been made to the committee which was appointed in 1934 to deal with the question of price spreads. That committee was given power to make recommendations; indeed it was asked to make recommendations, and what was the result? Well, the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) has told the house what was the result of giving that committee power to make recommendations. If hon. members will look at page 863 of Hansard for February 4 of this year they will find the following remarks by the leader of the C.C.F. group:

> Reference has been made to the price spreads committee of 1934. I looked up the record to see how long it took that committee to make its report. On February 2, 1934, just fourteen years ago to the very day that we began to discuss the resolution now before us, the order of reference for the setting up of the committee passed this house. On February 22, twenty days later, the first meeting was held. The last meeting was on June 22, 1934. Then, as hon. members will recall, the committee became the royal commission. On October 30, 1934, the royal commission met for the first time. On February 1, 1935, one year later, the last meeting of the commission was held, and on April 9, 1935, it reported. Confirmation of what I have said will be found in the report of the commission which I have before me.

Imagine for a moment what would have happened if the government had said in this motion that the committee was to make recommendations! Would any hon. member suggest that this particular instance would not have been cited immediately by the leader of the C.C.F. and other hon. members opposite as a reason why we should not give the committee, at this stage, power to make recommendations? Does anyone suggest that we would not have been told that it would take two years before this house would get any word from the committee on which action could be taken one way or the other? Nothing could be plainer than that.

But what is even more to the point is what the hon. member himself was prepared to do with regard to one of the amendments which were before the house. It will be noticed that in the passage I quoted the leader of the C.C.F. party was talking about the committee on price spreads. He was presenting an argument showing how long it took that committee to make a report. The leader of the opposition had before the house an amendment which asked that the resolution be amended to provide, among other things, that the committee examine and report upon—

(g) spreads between prices received by producers and prices paid by consumers.

That particular clause was left in by the C.C.F. when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved his amendment to the amendment that had been moved by the leader of the opposition. In other words, after telling this house that on the basis of the experience of the price spreads committee, it would be two years or more before we could expect any report from this committee, the leader of the C.C.F. group, as well as the leader of the government, was prepared to support—I mean the leader of the opposition—

Mr. GRAYDON: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, if my hon. friend gets any satisfaction out of that, let him have it; because it will be a very long time before he will ever have any satisfaction from office.

Mr. GRAYDON: Coming events cast their shadows before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, if the word "insincerity" is not unparliamentary, I should like to use it in reference to this particular action on the part of a leader of a party that will denounce the appointment of a committee with power to recommend on questions of spreads between prices received by producers and prices paid by consumers and then, when that has served his purpose, turns around and is prepared to vote with those who are in a party opposite to his own, that the committee be now given the power to report on spreads between prices received by producers and prices paid by consumers.

I hope I have made it plain also that if, as the committee pursues its investigations, it is thought advisable to have its powers enlarged so that it might be given an opportunity to make recommendations with respect to certain matters, the government will be quite prepared to consider any request of that kind at the time it is brought forward. But what we do not wish today, at the present time, is to give any excuse whatsoever to the committee for not devoting its time and attention in a thorough way to the investigation of the rise in prices and the cost of living, which is what we believe the public are most concerned about.

Another argument put forward by hon. members opposite is that I had said, speaking with respect to the price spreads committee when it was before the house—I refer to the motion to appoint a committee on price spreads in 1934—that under the Combines Investigation Act there was plenty of authority to proceed and to effect a remedy. And because I had said that in 1934 in relation to that particular committee, hon. members opposite say the government should have found enough scope at this time under the Combines Investigation Act to settle this matter of prices.

I thought I made it quite clear that the committee which was dealing with price spreads had before it an entirely different kind of problem from what we have at the present time. We may have certain aspects of that problem to deal with at this time; but at that time what the committee was trying to find out was how it was that on the one hand primary producers were being exploited because the prices they were receiving for what they were selling were being kept down, while, on the other hand, consumers were being exploited by some agencies which were keeping up prices in regard to those very same commodities which they desired to purchase. Somewhere in between there was some force at work which had the effect of accounting for that large spread. The particular kind of organization which would be found in a case like that would be in the nature of what we call a combine or merger, or an association of persons who bound themselves together to serve their own particular ends as against those of producers or consumers. That was the duty of that committee at that time—to investigate mergers, trusts and combines. And naturally, when speaking on that question, I said that there was an act on the statute books dealing with mergers and trusts, and that there was sufficient authority under that act to find out what was necessary to be found out in connection with combines, trusts and mergers.

But here, in present circumstances, we may have many causes of prices being kept up, in which the question of combines does not enter at all. Combines may be one reason for prices rising. But they are not the only reason. The government is seeking today, under the Combines Investigation Act, to find out to what extent mergers, trusts and combines are responsible for this rise in the cost of living. But we cannot stop there. We must look for everything we can discover, affecting the increased cost of living, and once that information has been secured it will not take long for this parliament to meet those conditions by legislation, if they are of a character that can be met by legislation.

The whole question then was, as Mr. Stevens himself made clear when he spoke on his motion, that the committee was appointed to look into the possible, alleged or presumed existence of a combine. That is what the whole inquiry was about. From this side of the house it has been made clear from the outset that the whole administration under the Combines Investigation Act is directed toward one specific end, namely, that of discovering combines. It is not for discovering causes of rising prices outside the Combines Investigation Act altogether.

Another criticism levelled at the government in connection with this motion is that the scope of the committee is not wide enough. Hon. members opposite say the scope is not wide enough, and there have been amendments moved to enlarge its scope. What is the scope? It is the causes of the recent rise in the cost of living. You can take it all in that one paragraph, if you like. The paragraph is all-embracing as to whatever affects the increased cost of living. Can anyone suggest any wider scope than that? To discover the cause of the rise in the cost of living, can anyone give wider scope than is contained in that one sentence where, without any limitation or without being circumscribed in any way, the committee is given power to investigate every possible cause?

A number of things have been mentioned by hon. members opposite in their amendments—policies, subsidies, and what-not. Any one of those things they have mentioned, if it is responsible for the rise in the cost of living, can be investigated by the committee under the clause I have mentioned. The purpose in introducing those amendments could not have been to widen the scope. If accepted, they would only have served to narrow it, if anything, by directing the attention of the committee to certain specific things. The committee might then have felt that it should give its time to those specific things, rather than to the all-embracing question it is asked to investigate.

So far as the subject matter of the amendments relate to causes of the increase in the cost of living, whether due to government policies, subsidies or anything else, they will be under investigation; and those matters are adequately taken care of by the first clause in the motion. These are all involved in the investigation; and to introduce other factors is simply to destroy the purpose of the motion.

No, Mr. Speaker, the amendments have not been made to enlarge the scope of the committee. They have been made to change the purpose of the investigation. The committee is to be appointed to gather facts and to get information so that this House of Commons and the country may be clearly and fully informed. But the movers of the amendments say, in so many words, "no, that is not what we wish this committee to do; we wish the committee to discuss policy. We do not want it to discover facts. We do not want this committee to obtain information; we do not want it to give us facts. As a matter of fact, we do not want the committee at all." That is perfectly clear from one motion which was put, and to which I made reference today. I hope my hon. friends opposite will not take objection if I refer to it again. The motion by the leader of the C.C.F. was to the effect that all the words after "that" in the motion be stricken out and that there be substituted therefor a certain declaration of policy or opinion which the amendment contained. In other words, the contribution made by the C.C.F. in their second amendment was to the effect that we ought to have no committee at all to investigate the causes of the rise in prices, but that any committee that might be formed should be diverted to something else altogether.

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, action.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now, if my hon. friend would just try to restrain himself. I know he likes to appear before the public from day to day by his interruptions.

Mr. KNOWLES: By your attitude you admit that we are right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is not by any means making the impression either upon the house or the public generally that he thinks his utterances make, when he interrupts other speakers.

As I have said, the purpose was not that. Another purpose brought forth clearly by some of the amendments proposed was that we should give this committee power to make policy and recommendations involving the expenditure of large sums of public money. Here again we have another example of what I was speaking of before as tendencies in this debate which are evidence of the change that is coming over the thinking of some hon. members with reference to British parliamentary procedure and practice. It is something that we ought to consider most carefully.

The rules of this house have been framed, and the practices of parliament up to the present have been framed, amongst other things, to protect the public treasury, and not to make it possible for any group in parliament to have large sums of money taken out of the public treasury because they themselves wish to have it spent in a particular way. The whole effort of the past has been to place the responsibility for expenditures of public moneys on the shoulders of the government, and to hold the government responsible to parliament and the people for expenditures. Some of these amendments have involved a departure from what is a very sound principle of government.

Another criticism that has been made is that the powers of the committee are restricted. I have already covered that in part, in what I have said about the scope of the committee. Someone said that, unless there was power given the committee to make recommendations, there was no power in the committee at all. Here is what the motion says:

> That the committee shall have power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary to deal with specific phases of the enquiry, and power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

There is another paragraph to which I would particularly direct the attention of hon. members who say that the powers of the committee are restricted. This reads:

> That the committee shall have power to engage the services of counsel, accountants and other necessary assistants who shall be paid out of the appropriation for parliament.

What greater powers could be given to a committee than that? There are all the powers of a royal commission, the power to summon persons from one end of the country to the other, to engage experts to make inquiry into any phase of this question, to have highly trained accountants serve the committee in its efforts to find out what is the cause for the rise in prices. I can understand persons who, in times like the present, may have been hoarding, or who may be seeking to profit, complaining about an investigation into the questions of hoarding and profiteering; I can understand them not liking the idea of a committee that will have all the powers necessary to discover these things; from that source I can understand opposition to a committee of this kind. However, I find it difficult to discover any ground of complaint, from the point of view of the public interest, against a committee which will seek to serve the public by discovering as soon as possible what the causes are that account for the recent rise in the cost of living in our country.

One other matter. We have been told over and over again that it is action that hon. gentlemen want, not a committee. To some extent their behaviour during this last week has borne that out. They certainly have not made it easy to get a committee functioning. We have been a whole week in just trying to get a yes or no answer as to whether a committee should be appointed. What action have we had? We have had something in the nature of action from hon. gentlemen opposite, but all along it has been what might be termed "a delaying action".

When I spoke a week ago Monday I told the house that we would set apart the following week for the discussion of this measure, that we would give precedence to it over any other measure, that the government was anxious to have this committee appointed as soon as possible. What happened the week before? I had to ask hon. gentlemen opposite please to come along with the names for the committee that I had requested in a previous week. I should have said that, as soon as the house reassembled in the New Year, I gave my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, the assurance that we would appoint this committee within a week. I said, first of all, "possibly in two weeks." I knew from the past that hon. gentlemen opposite have been accustomed to delaying a little the sending in of the names for committees, and that has proved to be true again in this case. The leader of the opposition said, "No, we must have this in a week." I said, "All right, let us have it in a week, but before it can be set up within the week we have to have the names for the committee." I had to ask hon. gentlemen please to hurry along with the names so that we could go along on Monday with setting up the committee.

What happened on Monday when the motion was introduced to set up the committee? I proposed to give the motion precedence all through the week, but hon. gentlemen took exception to my effort in that regard. They raised objection to the discussion on the appointment of a committee from being gone on with on the following day. Well, we did manage to keep the debate going for four days in the past week, through yesterday and up to the present time. This whole matter might have been settled on Monday afternoon, over a week ago, but here we are on Tuesday of the following week still seeking a simple yes or no answer to the question of appointing a committee to investigate the rise in prices.

I say again that the action of hon. gentlemen opposite has been definitely a delaying action. The responsibility has not been that of the government; the responsibility is that of those who, up to the present time, have made it difficult to get this committee appointed. As I have already said, if hon.

gentlemen of the C.C.F. had had their way there would have been no committee at all. Their amendment was to the effect that the entire motion should be struck out and something else substituted in its place.

Let me come now to a further criticism. We have been told that the government's action has been evasive, that there has been inaction and that we are responsible for that. Let me say that if there has been any evasion or inaction the blame is not on the shoulders of the government; it is squarely on the shoulders of hon. gentlemen opposite.

We have been told by the leader of the C.C.F. that he was angry; we have been told by him and others that the public were angry. May I say that I do not think that anger is an argument or an answer to anything. I am quite prepared to admit that hon. gentlemen opposite have shown many signs of anger and displeasure, but I would say that so far as the public is concerned the anger is not against the government; it is very much against those who up to the present have been making it as difficult as possible for the government to get this committee appointed.

I want to give my C.C.F. friends and some other hon. gentlemen opposite something to think about in the next few days. If they listen to a statement I have here they will probably take it from the source from which it comes when they might not be prepared to take it from myself. No doubt some of them have already seen what has been appearing in many of the journals of this country with regard to their attitude in this debate. Let me just repeat what I have said. I have had conversations with a great many people during the course of this last week, and particularly at the beginning of this week. I have been asked, why this waste of public money? When is this waste of the time of parliament to cease? These people have said, "Surely it is possible for the house to make up its mind whether it wants a committee to investigate this matter without talking day after day to debate this question, delaying the consideration of other questions already on the order paper and others still to come.

I hold in my hand one editorial; I give it as a sample; I cite this particular editorial because I do not think anyone in this House of Commons will accuse me of having inspired the source from which this editorial came. It is an editorial from the Toronto Globe and Mail, of date February 6, 1948. The heading of the editorial is, "Evasive Inaction", the very words that hon. gentlemen opposite have been using. They say the government is seeking to evade. They have been accusing it of inaction and so forth. In order that I may not be accused of omitting any significant clause in the editorial, I should like to read the whole of it to hon. gentlemen opposite and in particular to the members of the C.C.F. party. The editorial, as I say, is entitled, "Evasive Inaction". It reads as follows:

> Opposition groups in the commons failed, during the debate on the parliamentary price probe committee, to achieve acceptance of several amendments. Some of these probably had merit. But the government's refusal to accept them is no excuse for the boycott of the committee threatened by the C.C.F. leader. Whatever else may be its defects, the committee, with all the authority of a commission, is empowered to examine and report on "the causes of the recent rise in the cost of living." This can mean a lot or little, depending on the diligence and initiative shown by the committee. There are here surely no barriers to full examination into those charges of profiteering and other abuses of the short supply situation in consumer goods, which have been flying back and forth across the country.
> It is perhaps significant that the loudest cries about the "ineffectiveness" of the committee have come from the same quarters that have had the most to say about profiteering and other excesses. Mr. M. J. Coldwell, national leader of the C.C.F. party, is the chief advocate of the boycott—"We are going to be no party to this manoeuvre." He was also the author of the assertion that Canadian packing companies would make an "unearned increment" of $10,000,000 out of the meat price rises in early January.
> If Mr. Coldwell is not trying to escape the obligation of proving this latter statement, he should be willing and eager to give the committee a chance to demonstrate its effectiveness or lack of it. His course is simple. He can go before the committee at the earliest possible moment, restate his charge and bring forward the evidence to support it. If the parliamentary committee is, as he implies, an instrument of evasion, the nation will not be long in finding this out.
> As matters stand it would seem that Mr. Coldwell and his followers are attempting to avoid the penalty for having talked too much by talking some more. If they are prepared to make good on their allegations of profiteering, they need not be fearful of the inadequacies of the committee. We venture to suggest that, lethargic as it has been on many things, parliament, when prodded by a convinced public opinion, will readily make good any shortcomings which may be found to exist.

I recommend that editorial as a sample of editorials which are appearing right across the country today, as evidence of what public opinion is asserting in this country today. The people are tired of having members of parliament seek to thwart a measure that will throw light on the question that, above all others, they wish to have investigated, which is what they want and what they recognize will be most effective of all in this matter.

As I said at the beginning of this debate, there are some evils that publicity will cure which penalty will never cure, and there are none of that category which will disappear before an informed public opinion more quickly than anti-social evils, such as profiteering and hoarding at times like the present; the very evils which this committee is being appointed to investigate.

As against the attitude taken by hon. gentlemen opposite in this debate with respect to the appointment of a committee to investigate the cost of living and the rise in prices, may I give to the house the attitude of the Liberal party in regard to the two other large investigations on the cost of living and prices which have been held in previous parliaments. Two committees have been referred to repeatedly in this debate, and my remarks in regard to what was said in discussion of these committees have been frequently quoted. I notice that, in all these quotations, hon. gentlemen opposite were very careful not to quote the really important part, namely, the attitude of the Liberal party toward the appointment of a committee. They did try to construe other parts as having a different meaning from what they were ever intended to have. But the position of the Liberal party in regard to both of these committees is quite clear. The first committee was appointed in 1919. Sir Thomas White, who was then minister of finance in the Conservative government of the day, moved for the appointment of a committee to study the question of the cost of living. That motion was brought forward and it was carried unanimously. There was not the loss of a day; there was not the loss of an hour. The matter went through this house in accordance with what the house believed at that time was the wish and feeling of the public in a matter of this kind. The feeling today is just the same as it was then, and many of the reasons for the committee are just the same as they were at that time.

What about the price spreads committee of 1934, which was moved for by Mr. Bennett? That is the debate from which, to a greater or lesser extent, my remarks have been quoted. Let me give the house exactly what I said in speaking in that debate on the appointment of a committee to investigate. I quote from Hansard of February 2, 1934, at page 217, in the debate on the appointment of the price spreads committee:

> May I say a further word in order that there may be no misunderstanding of my attitude or of that of the party on this side of the house? We have repeatedly stated—and indeed the legislation that has been introduced under the former Liberal administration shows the evidence of our belief—that we believed there are many evils of a class which publicity would do more to cure than penalty. Certainly evils which are in the nature of anti-social practices, if that term may be used to cover what I think we all have in mind, namely, the kind of thing that enables the mean man to profit by virtue of his meanness, are perhaps more effectually cured by publicity than by aught else. Anything which will throw light upon these anti-social practices is, I believe, wholly in the public interest. Certainly the kind of practices set forth in the resolution as introduced by the government, constitutes a class of evils from which this country is today suffering to a great degree in common with other countries throughout the world. I doubt very much if there is a single evil that more affects the well-being of consumers than those agreements which artificially fix or control prices and one way or another restrict and hamper trade. The internal trade of our country has become honeycombed and enmeshed by secret understandings and agreements. So far as the Liberal opposition is concerned, we heartily welcome anything that will throw light upon this class of evils. I can say for the official opposition that its members will join very cordially and wholeheartedly with the Prime Minister and his friends in endeavouring to make the investigation just as thorough as it can possibly be made.

That is what the government is seeking to do today, to have a committee appointed which will make an investigation, as thorough as it can possibly be made, into this great question.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have helped to make it as difficult as possible to get this committee appointed. It is now for them to say what their attitude is to be when it comes to a vote on this question. Let me tell hon. gentlemen immediately that they will have an opportunity to vote on this question. I should say again the government is asking this house, and asking everyone in this house, to assist it in appointing a committee to investigate the recent rise in the cost of living. The government intends to appoint that committee regardless of any attitude taken by the opposition to obstruct it. We do hope that, in the end, all will join and do their best, as we believe the country will wish us all to do, in furthering the work of this committee. But if they are not prepared to do that, they will be answerable, not to the government, but to parliament, to their constituencies, and to the people whose interests we are here to serve.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Mackenzie King) which was agreed to on the following division:

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed from Friday, January 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources —Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the minister going to make a statement, or is he going to give the information which was asked the other evening and which I think he said he would furnish in due course; that is to say, the question asked originally by the hon. member for Stanstead with regard to changes in the fund? I think the minister will remember that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I recall that the hon. member for Stanstead asked what portion of our exchange reserves, the figure I gave to the house, was represented by gold and what portion by United States exchange.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes, and I believe the minister said he would give a breakdown. That is what I understood.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. I do not know that I have the figure here at the moment. I was not quite sure that we would be going on this afternoon, but if I do not have it now I shall give it this evening. I have the approximate figures in my head, but I had better give the exact figures.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Chairman, we have been jumping about so much from subject to subject, and it is so long since we had our minds addressed to this bill, that I think it would be desirable for me to recall the general background to the minds of hon. members before I begin to ask questions about the bill and comment on its details. I want to lay the foundation for some questions I wish to ask.

First, I should like to recall to hon. members that when this matter was brought up last autumn we were here for the so-called emergency session. During that session we jumped about from bill to bill, as we have been doing this session. I agree with what was said by the hon. member for Cape Breton South the other evening, that this jumping about from bill to bill is very confusing; and for that reason, as I say, I should like to take hon. members back to the reasons for this bill and the arguments which have been addressed to the house up to the present.

In the first place, we remember that the bill is to meet an emergent shortage of United States dollars. We have suggested here that there was great delay on the part of the government; that what was originally a small cloud was allowed to grow until finally it darkened the whole sky.

We had this bill before us in December. We looked at it; then it was removed from our sight, and we did not have another look at it until we came back here a little more than a fortnight ago. Since then, we have gone on with a three-ring circus—this bill, the cost of living debate, and from time to time that poor despised debate on the address. So for a moment, as I say, I should like to recall the seriousness of the problem with which we are dealing.

We recall that the shortage of United States dollars goes to the very root of our economic life; that if we do not have United States dollars with which to buy necessary goods we face unemployment and all kinds of undesirable and difficult things. We say and have said—and I only mention it in passing, without dwelling on it—that in the main, if not exclusively, this was due to government mistakes. We say things were going along reasonably well in June, 1946, when the government decided to return to parity with the United States dollar, and that it was the decision then made which started a perfect avalanche of United States dollars from this country, to the point that last November the situation became so dangerous that the government was constrained to act.

I want to say a word about the debate. In one way I think it has been very disappointing. Apart from the ministers' speeches I think the government side contributed some fifteen minutes to the debate, or about two minutes a day. I quite realize that a government desiring to get business done does not encourage its own members to speak much, but it seems to me a great public loss that those who represent a very large section of the community should not be allowed to intervene at all in this debate. It seems to me that the process whereby a government, in order to expedite business, has muzzled its own members has been carried to a very injurious extent. As a matter of fact, in addition to muzzling its own members the government would like to muzzle us a bit. As I say, I can quite understand that governments dislike talk unless it is done by themselves, because talk is apt to produce criticism, and naturally governments do not want criticism. In passing, it does seem to me one might point out that this tendency on the part of government members to sit in the House of Commons in silence—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I hope my hon. friend is not now going to make a second reading speech on section 1 of the bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, Mr. Chairman, I assure you I am not. I am just laying a foundation for one or two questions I wish to ask, and I shall be brief. I was just saying it seemed to me that under our system of government, with all its advantages, we are running a great danger of so denaturing the members on the government side of the house that we lose the undoubted advantage they have in the United States, where the legislative side has much more authority than we have here. Perhaps it has too much authority there, but here I think the executive side has grown out of all proportion to what was originally intended.

I come to the minister's speech. He said the principle of the bill is a very simple one, namely the use of import restrictions to conserve United States dollars. Then he went on to say that one might quarrel with details, but that surely no one could quarrel with that principle. I deny that that is the principle. His statement is correct so far as it goes; but I suggest that it is only a partial statement and that it leaves out what is the most important, or, at any rate, a very important and objectionable feature of the bill, namely the arbitrary powers given to one man.

That is a principle we find now in peacetime in a bill before the committee, and it is a profound misfortune that it has not been discussed at greater length. It is a profound misfortune that the government has been led into a measure of this kind. I find it difficult to believe that the Prime Minister, with his background, could in his heart be in favour of legislation of this kind. I am sorry he is not in his seat at the moment, but I should like to read—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I believe I should remind the hon. member that the principle of the bill was dealt with on second reading and supported by a vote of the house. I should hope that the hon. member would now direct his attention to the sections of the bill, the first of which deals with the short title.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I submit that a practice has grown up whereby we have been allowed a great deal of latitude on section 1. I have heard that argued in the house on many occasions in the comparatively short time I have been here; and it seems to me that, while the rule has always been stated, the rulings have been somewhat lenient. As I said a minute ago, I am really laying a foundation for some questions I should like to ask, and I can assure the committee that I shall not be long.

I believe it is important for us to have in our minds the great objection which this party has—and I hope it is shared by others—to the arbitrary powers the bill gives to one man. That is something we must keep in mind when we are dealing with these schedules; our whole judgment of what is contained in the schedules and in the bill itself must be affected by that objection.

I was about to say that I find it difficult—and I wish the Prime Minister were here so that he might speak for himself—to believe that the Prime Minister, with his background, could really believe in this. I should like to read briefly from a broadcast made by the Prime Minister during the 1935 election campaign. In his speech on July 31 of that year he said:

> It was not until someone began to preach the doctrine that parliamentary methods were not suited to these times; that the constitution was an obstacle to progress; that shorter and swifter methods were necessary to obtain results even if they involved sweeping aside parliamentary restraints, and over-riding the constitution, that in Europe parliaments and democracies alike began to disappear. Have we not all heard this very sort of language from Mr. Bennett, Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Stevens?

And so I wish to make the point that the real principle of the bill, or at any rate a real principle of it, is its arbitrary power. The minister will no doubt say that flexibility is desirable.

Mr. ABBOTT: On a point of order, I must challange the statement that the principle of the bill is the use of arbitrary power.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I said "a principle".

Mr. ABBOTT: That may be a criticism of it; but the principle of the bill on which the house has voted is the principle I set out in closing the debate; and I do not think we should at this time rehash all the points dealt with on second reading, nor do I expect the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario intends to do that. If my submission is correct; he was quite out of order in reading the quotation. I did not wish to interrupt him; but if he is allowed to do that, then every member in the committee can be allowed to read copious quotations on the theory of parliamentary government. I do not believe that would be proper in the committee stage.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The principle is not to be discussed when the bill is before the committee; that has been dealt with on second reading when the vote is taken. I believe hon. members generally would like to make as much progress as possible in dealing with this bill. From time to time we have heard many complaints about the rules of the house, and have heard suggestions as to how they should be changed so as to speed up the business of the house. I believe that if we were to abide by the rules of the house as we now have them we could speed up the business of the house very considerably. If one member were permitted to discuss the principle of the bill, then every member would have the same opportunity. I should hope hon. members would not wish to do that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I quite agree with you, Mr. Chairman, and I would point out that I was not discussing the principle of the bill. Rather, I was correcting a misstatement the minister had made respecting its principle.

Mr. ABBOTT: Or what my hon. friend thought was a misstatement.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): At any rate, I have finished that now, and I shall take very little more time. I do not believe what I shall now say has to do with the principle, but it is related to the practice or working out of the bill. I should like to point out what will happen when we begin to work it out—and surely that is a question of detail.

We have before us a most extraordinary power given to a minister—and I shall not take the time to read it. Hon. members will recall, however, that the minister can really make and unmake regulations; he can do anything he likes. I should like to picture briefly what will happen to the business community of this country. In the first place, one has to explain—maybe the government will make a point of it—why there has been so little opposition in the public press and so little complaint made by businessmen. I suggest the reason is that they are afraid.

We all know that the ordinary banker stands in a good deal of awe of the governor of the Bank of Canada, and is careful of what he says. In the same way we have here a man who is able to make and unmake business. Let me picture what would happen and the unfairness of this thing. It is not so bad for the big businessman who can come to Ottawa and, if you like, have breakfast with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and at that time put his case before him. Or, if he finds the minister is not very receptive, he can have an appointment later in the morning with the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Then, if he finds he does not get very far with the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, perhaps he can have lunch with the Minister of Mines and Resources. If that minister is hostile he can have an appointment in the afternoon with the Minister of Transport; and perhaps in the evening, before leaving, he might have a "coke" and ginger ale with the minister of housing.

That is what happens to the man who knows his way around. He is the big fellow who comes to Ottawa. But what happens to the little man? He does not know his way around. In the first place, the expense of coming here offers considerable difficulty. And so we have a situation, which probably was never intended, where he will not be able to have breakfast or lunch with a minister, or have a "coke" or ginger ale with him, or with any of the ministers who occupy the seat in which the Postmaster General is now sitting. That man will be out of luck.

I suggest that is one of the incidents of this legislation. I am sure the minister agrees with me on that, although he may not say so. Incidentally, if I may refer to one further statement by the minister, I believe it will be seen by anyone who reads his speech carefully that the minister was most careful not to say one word in support of this arbitrary power.

There is just one further point I wish to make before asking my questions in detail.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member would wait until we reach section 6 he would find that that subject deals directly with ministerial powers, and it would be proper for him to speak on that subject at that time. If there is no objection to carrying the title, we could do that and then go on to the clauses.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am getting near the end of my remarks if you will give me permission to proceed. I submit to you with deference that it will be found during similar debates in the last couple of years that almost every time the unfortunate hon. member who begins, as I am beginning this debate, has had to undergo a good deal of friendly barrage from the Chair, but that nevertheless the Chair has exercised a certain amount of benevolence toward him.

The principle so far as I can make out has always been more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

There is one other point which I wish to make and which I think is important, although it has not exactly to do with the working of the bill. It is simply background for the questions which I am working up to and which I want to ask the minister. I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that it is not cynical to suggest that this arrangement whereby people have to come to Ottawa, not to get their rights by reason of law but to get their rights by reason of the favour of this many-sided or multilateral minister is one which places them in a difficult position. It is not human for a man to come here and get the permission which he wants and go away and feel evilly disposed toward the minister or toward the party to which the minister belongs. That is just not human nature. I think we should put it on record that this is a perfectly magnificent way to obtain political support. Indeed it does not need much imagination to reach the conclusion that if this kind of thing goes on long enough a situation will arise which might be very desirable for the government. That is, if you had enough power of this kind in the hands of the government it would be almost impossible to defeat the government. It would be like the fascist governments with which we are all so familiar. You would have too many people afraid to speak their minds: you would have too many people becoming just yes-men, and in the end you would find an absolute breakdown of our whole system of government.

I try to use moderate words when I am speaking on a subject of this kind, even though I may not on other occasions, but I think that making the whole business subject to one man is one of the most dangerous and objectionable things which have faced this House of Commons for many days. It is simply war mentality being carried on into peace and I think it is most undesirable.

Mr. ABBOTT: Would my hon. friend permit me to interrupt for a moment? I want to move that the committee rise before six o'clock in order that I may move certain changes in the personnel of the committee which has just been set up.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to make just a few comments about the details of the bill. In the first place, we want to know what the bill is. We understand that a good many changes have been made in it. We know there have been some and we understand that there have been many more. It seems as though the government—and perhaps we should not be too unsympathetic toward them—just dumped everything in. I think that is what the government did in their hurry, or perhaps in their panic. Since then, they have been giving the matter a more careful look and they have taken out certain things. I hope the minister will now—not later—give us a full statement of the schedules with any changes which have been made. Would it be possible for the minister to do that at eight o'clock?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have the revised schedules ready. I had thought that I might put them in when we were considering the schedules themselves in the interests of order, but I am quite willing to meet the wishes of the committee on that. While I am on my feet—and I am sure my hon. friend will not object to my answering his question now—may I say that these schedules were not prepared, as he has suggested, in twenty-four hours, nor was everything dumped into them. They represented months and months of work by a competent interdepartmental committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I did not say how long the dumping process went on.

Mr. ABBOTT: I hope none of us desire to have the reputation of being either a mule or a jellyfish. Obviously changes had to be made when it was shown that it was necessary that they should be made. Because of the very nature of things, advance notice could not be given of these proposals and business could not be consulted to see how they might affect particular trades. My own surprise is that it has been found necessary to make so few. I want to contradict as strongly as I can any intimation that these are hastily considered schedules.

The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) asked how much of our holdings of gold and United States dollars, aggregating $513,884,563, as announced on January 29, was in gold. The answer is that $296,008,031 was in gold. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the committee meets this evening will the minister tell us whether there were any unusual transactions, any windfalls, in the gold situation, whether any gold came in from some unexpected sources outside of the North American continent?

Mr. FRASER: The minister is going to give us a list of the things that have been taken off. Will he also give us a list of the things that have been put on?

Mr. ABBOTT: At eight o'clock I intend to produce schedules which I shall ask to have substituted for those which appear in the printed bill.

Progress reported.

PRICES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF COMMITTEE

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): If I might have permission to revert to motions I should like to move:

That the name of Mr. MacInnis be substituted for that of Mr. Knowles, and the name of Mr. Irvine be substituted for that of Mr. Nicholson and the name of Mr. Harkness be substituted for that of Mr. Smith (Calgary West) on the special committee appointed by this house to examine and report on increases in the cost of living.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the house rose at six o'clock I was just about to conclude some general remarks which I had made and which I explained were made with a view to laying the foundation for some questions that I wished to ask. I said that a good many changes had been announced in the schedules, and the minister intimated that there had been some. He is going to give us information regarding them. I hope he will be able to give us several copies of that information.

The minister took me to task for suggesting that the schedules, and the bill itself, had been put together in a hurry. He explained that it had actually taken several months. I do not know that I committed myself to any time limit. I said I thought things had been dumped into it. I suppose if they were several months at it there was a lot of time to dump things into it. There have been some changes. The minister said that the changes will be listed and we shall know more about them when he gives us detailed information. I hope he will tell us something in particular about the regulations. I understand that the regulations with regard to the entry of capital goods have caused a good deal of difficulty. First of all, I understand that it was proposed to deal with these by individual permits. I heard a little bedtime story. I understand that certain people came down asking for permits. One was that of a happy family where there were a son and a daughter. The little girl wanted a party dress. That was considered non-essential; therefore she could not have it. On the other hand, the boy wanted a winter coat. That was considered essential; therefore he could have it, and that was the principle which should be followed in the case of the permits. I understand that they found it was difficult to deal with them individually and eventually—perhaps I should say now—they are—

Mr. ABBOTT: That class of goods is not under permit.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps the minister will have more to say about that later. The way it came to me was this. It was proposed to deal with these things under permit; now they are treating the whole lot by classification. The minister will no doubt tell us about that.

The CHAIRMAN: I wonder whether the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario would reserve his remarks on the regulations until we reach section 5, which deals with regulations governing the issue of permits for goods in schedules 2 and 3.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not propose to make any extensive remarks on that. I was trying to recall to our minds just what the particular situation is with regard to this bill before we proceed to go into the details.

The questions that I want to ask are these—I have already asked one of them, and the minister is going to answer it—what changes have been made in the schedules? Perhaps we might deal with that now. Before the minister answers I should like to make this general suggestion to him. I think that, until we get the schedules in their final form, we really do not know what we are talking about. I am sure the minister agrees with that. The other thing I want to suggest is that in giving us these altered schedules, which I believe the minister is going to do, he should go through them with us so that we shall understand them. He should draw attention to the changes and let us know in a general way the causes of those changes. I realize that might take a little time, but after all, this is an important matter. People's businesses are being affected. Men are being snuffed out of their businesses because a certain item is in here or not in here, as the case may be. Therefore I am sure the minister will agree that we should take time now to go through these schedules, and I hope that he may have several copies of the new schedules. I would ask him to go through them in some detail, and after that I have other questions that I should like to ask.

Mr. ABBOTT: First, on the question of the schedules, I think the appropriate time to go through the schedules is when we come to them and consider them in detail. Before the dinner recess my hon. friend asked me to state at this stage, when we are on section 1, what the changes were, and I readily agreed with that, because I think it is important that before we come to the schedules the committee should know in detail what these changes are.

Of necessity, to outline in committee what the changes are is a bit difficult because we have adopted the tariff item technique, if I may so describe it, of indicating the articles which are on the prohibited list in schedule I, on the quota list in schedule II, and on the permit list in schedule III. The changes which have been made are not particularly extensive. They consist almost entirely of taking items from the prohibited list and placing them in the quota list. In other words, there has been relaxation from the original arrangement of schedules I, II and III. Perhaps the most useful procedure for me to follow, so far as the committee is concerned, would be for me to place on Hansard the details of these changes. Schedule I, which is the schedule containing the prohibited items, has been changed by the deletion of certain items, and the following items are to be deleted. I could enumerate them, Mr. Chairman, but they are a list of tariff items. The bulk of them have been transferred from schedule I to schedule II. It might be more useful to the committee if they were placed on Hansard this evening; then they could be studied by hon. members, and we could consider them in detail if we wished to do so. For example, tariff item 26, "coffee, roasted or ground, and all imitations thereof and substitutes therefor, including acorn nuts, n.o.p." has been removed from schedule I and, I believe, is being transferred to schedule II. I cite that simply as an illustration. I think it would be in the interests of more expeditious and efficient discussion of these items if I were to place them on Hansard and allow hon. members to study them in the meantime before we come to detailed consideration of these schedules.

I agree with my hon. friend that we should take all the time that is necessary or desirable in considering these various items, but with the permission of the committee I think it would be well if I placed these changes on Hansard, because I am not asking that schedule I be repealed and a new schedule be put in place of it. From the point of view of procedure, I shall move at the appropriate time that these changes be made in these schedules, but for the convenience of the committee I suggest that I might place on Hansard the proposed changes—

Mr. BENTLEY: Does the minister not think it would be better, or at least be more convenient for us, if we had a complete new set of schedules printed with a new bill than to expect us to go through them when they are placed on Hansard and check them with the schedules here?

Mr. ABBOTT: I could do that very easily, but that would not indicate to hon. members the changes that had been made, and I assume that is what the committee would want. I shall place on Hansard tonight the proposed changes, and then by going down schedules I, II and III we can see what the changes are. For instance, I could go through schedule I of the bill as it now appears and say that item 26, which appears on page 6, has been deleted; that item 29 on page 6 has been deleted; that item 104a on page 7 has been deleted. But in most cases the items which have been deleted from schedule I are being placed in schedule II, which is the quota schedule. At the dinner recess I discussed the matter with my officials, and it seemed to us that if I put on Hansard the deletions from schedule I, the additions to schedule I, the items taken out of schedule I and added to schedule II, that is the quota schedule, and the additions to schedule II as well as the additions, if any, to schedule III, the committee would then be able to see, by comparing that list with the schedules as they are printed in the bill, just what changes have been made since the bill was introduced. I am in the hands of the committee and I shall do it in the way that is deemed most convenient.

Mr. MANROSS: Would the changes in Hansard show where the items are transferred to?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. The method is to use the tariff item technique, and all tariff items are numbered, so that if you look at tariff item 26, which is deleted from schedule I, and look in the list of items added to schedule II and see that item 26 is placed in schedule II, it at once appears that the item has been transferred from schedule I to schedule II. It sounds complicated, I know, but I really think that would be the method which would prove most useful to the committee.

Mr. MANROSS: It would be easier if it were noted, "transferred from schedule I".

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I understand it, by putting it on Hansard the minister means handing the document to the reporter without reading the items, and we shall know nothing more about it until we see it in Hansard tomorrow morning.

Mr. ABBOTT: Tomorrow afternoon we shall be resuming the debate on the address, and it seemed to me that tomorrow would give hon. members an opportunity to analyse these changes and to be ready on a subsequent occasion to discuss them. I can summarize the changes that have been made. There have been fifteen changes in schedule I, seven in schedule II and three in schedule III.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is not a formidable list, but it seems to me that we can study these items much more intelligently afterwards if the minister would now take time to go through the list, picking out those that are changed and giving us briefly the reasons for the change, and when we come to Hansard we shall have the whole story. In the end it would save time. I suggest that if we know in advance the reasons it may save a lot of unnecessary questions later on.

Mr. ABBOTT: Broadly speaking, the reasons can be summarized in this way. The items in schedule I, the prohibited list, which are transferred to schedule II, have been transferred because these are the items of which there are substantial exports from the United Kingdom or sterling areas, which exports it is desired to encourage. It has been found possible to transfer these from the prohibited list to the quota list. That is one of the main reasons why, after looking into all the various circumstances, it has been found desirable and appropriate to transfer items from the prohibited schedule to the quota schedule. That perhaps is the principal reason. There may be special reasons for special items: for instance, toilet soap and castile soap. Castile soap, as I suppose many members know, comes from France. France is a country to which we have made advances and we are anxious to stimulate trade with that country. It has been found possible to transfer that item from the absolutely prohibited list to the quota list. I am using that by way of illustration. Without going into details, the tariff items which have been transferred from schedule I are: Coffee, roasted or ground—

An hon. MEMBER: Would the minister give the numbers?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it would be helpful if I put this on Hansard. I will summarize it first: coffee, roasted or ground; coffee, green; toilet soap; castile soap; shoe blacking—we get a lot of shoe blacking from the United Kingdom, the kind we used to get during the first war—toilet or dressing combs. Torpedoes, firecrackers and fireworks of all kinds, paintings in oil or water colours and pastels are deleted entirely from the schedule. At present these are all on the absolutely prohibited list; but we found on inquiry, and following representations, that a good many paintings and works of art were exported to this country by dealers in the United Kingdom in particular and that there was a very large volume of tourist purchases of these items. It was clear that, on balance, we gained more dollars by allowing imports of that specialty product, if I may so refer to it, into Canada and removing it from the prohibited list. I am using that as an illustration. Only a few items have been added to the prohibited list. It is really a change of wording. It is in the paper group: papers and paperboards or fibreboards the surface of which is in two or more colours or is embossed or otherwise decorated. Empty containers wholly or partially manufactured from paperboards or fibreboards having affixed thereto paper the surface of which is in two or more colours, or is embossed or otherwise decorated.

These descriptions are rather technical and if we go through them one by one I can give to the committee the explanations for the changes. I have indicated, without giving the tariff item numbers, the items which have been deleted from schedule I, that is the prohibited list, and the majority of the items which have been deleted from schedule I have been included in schedule II, the quota list.

Mr. BENTLEY: And there are only fifteen?

Mr. ABBOTT: There are fifteen items removed from the prohibited list.

An hon. MEMBER: How many new ones have been added?

Mr. ABBOTT: There have been in fact no new ones added. The paper item which I have read has been reworded and, as a result of the rewording, the scope may be somewhat extended. I am informed that the intention is to catch the fancy boxes, if I may use that expression. There are certain specialty types of fancy boxes that are imported into the country and the change in the wording is intended to include these fancy boxes in the prohibition.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I presume that when this was worked out the minister of necessity had a figure of hoped-for savings of United States exchange which he attributed to each item. Is there any estimate of any kind?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. There is no intention of doing that at all. As I said just before the dinner recess, these schedules were prepared after a great deal of study by the technical people who are familiar with these things. But for reasons which I think are obvious, of necessity they were prepared without an opportunity of consultation with those who were directly concerned with the import trade involved. As a result of representations which have been made to me and to the emergency import control division since the schedules have been announced, and as a result of information which has been obtained as to the effect on importers and the economy generally, certain changes have been made. But no particular consideration has been given as to whether the change will result in a saving of a particular amount or otherwise, except for this; no change would be made which it was felt would result in a substantial impairment of our United States dollar position on balance.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to be too persistent about this, but I confess that I am a little bit surprised. After all, the government figured out a suggested amount which they hoped they might save. I have forgotten just what it was—$300 million to $500 million, if I remember correctly. It is hard for me to understand just how that was arrived at unless some pencil work had been done. While I appreciate fully what the minister says, to the effect that they could not take the business community into their confidence, nevertheless I should have thought that, with the elaborate statistical department we now have, these figures would be available. I confess myself to be much surprised that no figures of any kind are given. How is that total made up?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is simple. I think I stated in the press conference which followed the announcement of these restrictions that, on the basis of importations during the preceding year, if importations were continued during the current year at the same rate as during the last year on all these items, the savings would be in the vicinity of $300 million. Obviously any figure of that kind, so far as the future is concerned, cannot be better than an estimate. But if my memory serves me aright, I said that if we had continued to import the products, under schedule I, which are now prohibited, at the rate we had imported them during the preceding year, and if we had continued to import the products which were on the quota list at the same rate, without these restrictions we would have imported $300 million more, which is obviously an estimate; but it was the best estimate one could arrive at.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I can understand that the estimate had to be a rough one, but I still submit that there is a great difference between an estimate and a guess. If I understood the minister correctly, what he said was that there was nothing more than a guess.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I said that was an estimate.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You called it an estimate; but if in fact—

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend can tell me at the beginning of January, 1948, that we shall import during 1948 exactly the quantity of goods that were imported in 1947, he is a better man than I think he is.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I would not say that at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was the only forecast I made.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Surely, when you have the figures with regard to the importation of a certain article in the year 1947, you have the figure as to what you may hope to save in 1948. That is what I am asking for.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the figure I gave.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No. I am asking that we have that by items. You must have that.

Mr. ABBOTT: We can give you that information, but I think it would be better to do it when we come to the schedules. But we can take up the various items, item by item. I can tell my hon. friend what we imported under each item. Obviously it is a matter of public record. I can say that if we imported the same amount of tariff item 26 in 1948, we would spend so much on the item. I can go through these items in that way, item by item.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have no desire to waste time, but that is exactly what I want. I think, if the minister will give us that, it will be simple with regard to schedule I; it will not be so simple with regard to schedule II and it may not be possible at all with regard to schedule III. But I suggest that the minister might give us what he could with regard to schedule II. I imagine it could be done. When we come to schedule III where discretion enters in, I do not like to suggest offhand what can be done, but I feel sure that something can be done.

Mr. ABBOTT: That information can all be made available and will gladly be made available if the committee wants it when we come to schedules I, II and III. But obviously that is a matter which will take some time. The data is all available, but it is lengthy. I think we should do it when we come to the schedules, not when we are discussing the short title of the bill. It is not a matter for argument; it is purely a matter of statistical fact which is ascertainable by looking at the customs entries for 1947 and seeing how much they are. There is not any argument about it. I know my hon. friend appreciates that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes, I appreciate that.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not a matter that we need to quarrel about at all.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I agree with the minister that we need not ask him to do all that for us now; it can be done tomorrow.

The next question that arises is a much more difficult one. In schedule II, I understand that certain quotas have been given, and they are based on purchases over a basic period. Then we come to schedule III, and I am still more perplexed because there you have a wide-open discretion. What changes have been made in the items of schedule III? After the minister has answered that, I should like to ask him another question.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I can give my hon. friend the changes which have been made in schedule III. So far as detailed inquiry is concerned with regard to schedule III, I may say that will be dealt with by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) who is unfortunately not able to be here this evening. But I think we have plenty to occupy our attention in schedule I and II if we reach them.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Item ex 238a which is described as follows has been added at the commencement of schedule III:

Cinematograph or moving picture film negative one and one-eighth of an inch in width or over.

I do not pretend to be able to tell the committee why that has been added. There is, I am informed, a good technical reason for adding it. I think my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, will be able to tell the committee more clearly why that should be the case. That is the only item which has been added to schedule III.

Mr. FRASER: What is that number?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is described as ex 238a.

Mr. FRASER: On January 28 there was a custom notation on import restriction. It is marked 427h and its motion picture projectors for use with film one and one-eighth inches or over. Would that cover the same thing?

Mr. ABBOTT: This is the film itself we are referring to, not the projector.

Mr. FRASER: This covers motion picture projectors.

Mr. ABBOTT: This added item is the film itself, not the projectors.

Then two items identified by the following numbers are to be deleted, and the items which I shall refer to are to be substituted. Instead of item ex 415 as it now appears in schedule III, the following is to be substituted:

Electric vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; hand vacuum cleaners; and complete parts of all the foregoing for production use.

Then item ex 427h is to be deleted as it now appears in schedule III, and the following is to be substituted for it:

Motion picture projectors for use with film one and one-eighth of an inch in width or over; electric rectifiers or generators designed for use with such motion picture projectors; arc lamps for motion picture work, motion picture or theatrical spot lights, light effect machines; not to include electric light bulbs, tubes or exciter lamps; complete parts for production use of motion picture projectors arc lamps for motion picture work, motion picture or theatrical spot lights, light effect machines, motion picture screens, portable motion picture projectors with or without sound equipment, and electric rectifiers or generators designed for use with motion picture projectors.

That is the end of the description of the amended tariff item. These are the only changes which have been made in schedule III as it appears in the bill before the committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then, if we take these it is understood we shall have the new schedule put on Hansard; the minister can give us these figures of expected savings on the various items and that will apply to schedule I and schedule II.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not given the particulars yet on schedules I and II, except in the most general form. As I have said, fifteen items are being deleted from schedule I. There are seven added to schedule II, and there are these very minor changes to schedule III. I could ask the officials to make some estimate as to what may be the effect on balance in savings or otherwise of United States dollars as a result of these proposed changes. I do not think it will be substantial; I think the changes are more in the nature of relaxing in order to facilitate the importation of certain goods from soft currency areas. I do not think the effect on balance would appreciably change the estimate of approximately $300,000,000 which I gave in the press statement following the announcement. The changes are intended to facilitate the easier flow of trade and more particularly to assist or at least not to impede the importation from sterling areas of goods which can be properly brought in.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): At any rate, if the minister gives us the details for each item, both those appearing in the bill and the new ones, we shall be able to make an estimate for ourselves.

Mr. ABBOTT: It might be of assistance to the committee if I were to place on Hansard, for study tomorrow, a summary of the changes in schedule I, II and III. If that is on Hansard hon. members can take the bill as it is printed; each of these changes will be identified by a tariff item number, and they can turn up each one in schedule I, II or III, as the case may be, to see exactly what the change is.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is quite satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN: Then is it agreeable to the committee that the minister shall have leave to place this statement on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then I formally place on Hansard a statement outlining the changes to which I have just referred. The statement is as follows:

SCHEDULE I

The following items to be deleted:

26	Coffee, roasted or ground, and all imitations thereof and substitutes therefor, including acorn nuts, n.o.p.
29	Coffee, green, n.o.p. (not imported direct from the country of growth and production.)
ex 228	Toilet soap.
230	Castile soap.
252	Shoe blacking; shoemakers' ink; shoe, harness and leather dressing, and knife or other polish or composition, n.o.p.
652	Toilet or dressing combs, n.o.p.; fancy combs, not being jewelry.
665	Torpedoes, firecrackers and fireworks of all kinds.
ex 695 ex 695a	Paintings in oil or water colours and pastels (not to include paintings in oil or water colours and pastels to be used exclusively for printing or lithographic reproduction purposes).

The following items to be added after item 1976:

ex 192 ex 197 ex 198 ex 199	Papers and paperboards or fibreboards the surface of which is in two or more colours or is embossed or otherwise decorated.
ex 199b	Empty containers wholly or partially manufactured from paperboard or fibreboard having affixed thereto paper the surface of which is in two or more colours, or is embossed or otherwise decorated.

The items identified by numbers below to be deleted and the items set opposite them to be substituted:

Deletions	Substituted items
104a 105	ex 104a ex 105	Fruit pulp, other than passion fruit pulp, with sugar or not, and fruits crushed or frozen.
124 125 126 127 128	124 125 127 128 ex 123 ex 133	Oysters
ex 326g	ex 326g	High thermal shock resisting glassware, but not including industrial or laboratory glassware or glassware parts imported by manufacturers for production use in their own factories.
624 et al	624 et al	Bead ornaments, and ornaments of alabaster, spar, amber, terra cotta, composition or other material except china or porcelain; fans of all kinds; statues and statuettes of any material other than porcelain or earthenware.
ex 655a	ex 655a	Propelling pencils.

The word "humidifiers" where it appears in line 17 on page 13 of Bill 3 after the words "juice extractors", to be deleted.

SCHEDULE II

The following items to be added to category 4:

228 Soap powders, powdered soap, mineral soap, and soap, n.o.p.
230 Castile soap.
252 Shoe blacking; shoemakers' ink; shoe, harness and leather dressing, and knife or other polish or composition, n.o.p.
362 Articles consisting wholly or in part of sterling or other silverware, n.o.p.; manufactures of gold or silver, n.o.p.
652 Toilet or dressing combs, n.o.p.; fancy combs, not being jewelry.

The following items to be added to category 5:

26 Coffee, roasted or ground, and all imitations thereof and substitutes therefor, including acorn nuts, n.o.p.
29 Coffee, green, n.o.p. (not imported direct from the country of growth and production).

SCHEDULE III

The following item to be added at the commencement of the schedule:

x 238a Cinematograph or moving picture film negatives one and one-eighth of an inch in width or over.

The items identified by numbers below to be deleted and the items set opposite them to be substituted:

Deletions	Substituted items

Mr. LOCKHART: Have any of the quotas been increased?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am afraid I did not make myself clear in what I was asking the minister. I assume the statement he has placed on Hansard will not have the relevant amounts which he is to give us. Those will be furnished separately, I take it?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; the statement will not give any indication as to what change, if any, there would be in the estimate I gave earlier as a result of these restrictions.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sorry; I have not yet made myself clear. I understand that the minster is to give us the expected saving with regard to each item in the schedule as it is now. Do I understand correctly?

Mr. ABBOTT: That can be done. My assistant deputy minister advises me that this will cover at least fifteen pages of double foolscap. That can be made available, and I would gladly make it available if the committee wants it, but I hope I shall not have to read it all. That data is all available.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to ask for anything that will mean a lot of unnecessary work. I thought we were to get that. I have before me schedule I, which is quite short, covering only seven or eight pages. I do not understand why it should be such a tremendous affair.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not. I have all the data here, but it is of considerable length. I have here schedule I, the prohibited list, with the estimated total savings. It covers eight of these large sheets, with items varying from $3,000, for instance, under item 7, beef and veal fresh, to $1,611,000 under items 9 and 9a. It goes all through a long list of tariff items, with the estimated savings, those savings being computed purely on the assumption that imports this year would be at exactly the same rates for these items as they were last year.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Well, I have one or two other questions I should like to ask the minister. He gave us some figures with respect to the results to date which certainly sounded encouraging. He told us that the holdings of United States dollars and gold, while, I think, going down to a low in December, had come up at the end of January. That leads me to ask these questions. Of course it is very natural that there would have been a bit of a breather after the virtual run on United States exchange which took place before November 17. These are the questions I wish to ask: the exports and imports to and from the United States in December, 1946, in December, 1947, and in January, 1948. The reason I ask for this information will be obvious; to show whether exports and imports in the two relevant months, December, 1947, and January, 1948, look normal or whether they look in any way abnormal. It seems to me that will help us make up our minds as to exactly what the situation is.

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend knows, the December figures were published about a week or so ago and are on record, though I do not have them with me at the moment. The January figures will not be available for another three or four weeks. The December figures are a matter of public record, available to every hon. member of the house.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister is right on that, of course; but he gave us a figure, I think to the end of January.

Mr. ABBOTT: January 29.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Presumably he has the figures of exports and imports, even if they are not for the full month.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, I have not, and they will not be available for two or three weeks. I have the figures as to our daily exchange position, but those are not the figures on exports and imports.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I see. Then you suggest that we cannot get any figures at all at the present time?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those figures are compiled from the returns received from the hundreds of customs ports across Canada. They cannot be available on twenty-four hours notice. There is always a lag of three or four weeks.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But the foreign exchange control board must have the figures, because both export and import transactions are known to them. Certainly they know about the imports, because they furnish the exchange. I wonder if they do not have some means of knowing the export figures too and if we cannot get a rough and ready figure, not the last word but a working figure, up to the end of January. Will the minister look into that and see what can be done.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall look into that; but I am sure that, so far as identifying it with a physical volume of goods, the foreign exchange control board could not very well have more rapid or up-to-date information than the customs branch which acts as its agent in these matters. Therefore I consider it most unlikely that we would have more up-to-date figures on the physical volume of imports from the foreign exchange control board than we would have from the Department of National Revenue, customs division. However, I shall make inquiries.

I can and do obtain weekly reports as to the exchange holdings of the foreign exchange control board; but there are forward commitments; and, while it is the intention, it does not necessarily follow that we will have the day-to-day volume of trade imports, because there are invisible items such as settlements in respect of transportation, and so on.

If my hon. friend buys a ticket today in Canada to go to Miami for a couple of weeks he can buy it in Canadian funds, but Canada will have to settle for the United States mileage portion of that ticket in United States funds.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I shall not press the point, but I do say that while there may be a time lag, it is the same time lag all the time, and I think the day to day records of the foreign exchange control board reflect pretty well what is going on.

Mr. GREEN: There is one feature of this exchange conservation plan which seems to me very unfair, and I am hoping the minister can do something to remedy it. I refer to the way in which quotas are determined. Apparently the basic period is for the year preceding June 30, 1947. This has meant that in many instances people have been unable to qualify because they started in their businesses perhaps late in 1946 or early in 1947. I know it has hit several veterans very hard, and I do not understand why that period could not have been the twelve months preceding October 31 rather than June 30.

I notice in tonight's press that the quota for automobiles has been based upon the twelve months period ending October 31, 1947. I would ask that the quota for all goods be worked out on the same basis. It seems only fair that that should be done.

Mr. ABBOTT: The explanation of the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South is that when the import restrictions were put on, the June 30 figures were the latest for which full information was available. The figures for October 31 were not available at that time. As the committee knows, in respect of automobiles imports at the outset were prohibited, pending the working out of a quota. The quota in respect of automobiles had to be ascertained on a basis somewhat different from the others. Returned men are given consideration up to November 17, so far as imports are concerned. As I believe I said in reply to an interjection during the debate on second reading, a special quota figure has been reserved in order to take care of returned men who did not have a basis of performance in the previous period. I believe there is ample provision under the arrangement to take care of the returned men; and, as I say, they are given consideration for their imports right up to November 17.

But they are a special case. I repeat that the June 30 date was taken because that was the latest date for which figures were available when the restrictions were put into force.

Mr. GREEN: That might have been all right at the time; but now that we have the legislation before us, would it not be wise to follow the suggestion I have made?

Mr. ABBOTT: The difficulty is that quotas are set. They have been operating since November 17. We are now in February, discussing the legislation. So that it would be pretty difficult to adopt literally my hon. friend's suggestion. I do not think the basis of performance up to June 30 is an unfair one, because the volume of imports, during the year which ended June 30, 1947, was at an all-time high for this country. I do not believe there is anything wrong in that basis.

Mr. GREEN: It seems to me that that is looking at the problem from the point of view of the officials who are administering the plan rather than from the point of view of the man out in the country who is being hit. Surely his quota should be based upon the goods he imported in the year immediately preceding the time these restrictions went into effect.

Mr. ABBOTT: One reason why I personally would object to using that basis is that during the last month or two, before these restrictions were imposed, there was a terrific acceleration of imports from the United States. Many people thought the restrictions were coming on, and there was a rush to bring stuff into the country. I believe that the last month or two before the restrictions were put on would represent a completely distorted picture of the normal imports into this country; and I think it would be wrong to use as a basis the period just before these restrictions became effective. I believe that is a pretty compelling reason for using June 30 as the date.

Mr. GREEN: That may be all right for the big fellow, the fellow who was smart and perhaps got a hint from somewhere that this plan was coming into effect—

Mr. ABBOTT: Nobody got a hint from anywhere. No innuendoes of that kind, please.

Mr. GREEN: If the minister is putting the quota on its present basis for that reason, then I say it is punitive; it is not fair at all. I am referring to the case of the small man in business in Vancouver or Halifax who had not the remotest idea that this plan was to be brought down. He carried on his business in the regular and ordinary fashion. Then he suddenly found that a quota was put on and that, instead of its applying up to November 17 or the end of October, he is cut off at the end of June. I know of several cases in which there has been the utmost unfairness as a result. Those men can get no consideration from the department. If in a bona fide case they can be given consideration, all right; but I suggest that there is hardship at the present time and that, because of the way in which these quotas are being administered, these men can get no help.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed by the assistant deputy minister, who is head of the emergency import control division, that we have had almost no complaints as to the fairness of the June 30 date. There have been questions raised by veterans who have gone into business at a later date and, as I have already said, special provision has been made to take care of them. But in respect of the ordinary importer I can see no unfairness in using that date. It is just as fair for one as for another. I think, myself, that the period ended June 30, 1947, represents a high level of import so far as this country is concerned, and I believe that any attempt to use another date would create more unfairness than the date now used. As I have said, veterans are treated as special cases; but I repeat I have been told that we have had almost no complaints as to the fairness of using that date.

The CHAIRMAN: May I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that we are now considering section 1, short title. It seems to me that the committee would make more progress if it abided by the rules of the house and considered matters as they appear in the clauses. For instance, the question which we have been discussing could properly be discussed under section 5 (1) (b), the latter part of which reads:

> . . . and the method of calculating the quotas, or prescribing the circumstances in which permits may be issued to applicants therefor.

I ask hon. members to discuss the bill clause by clause.

Mr. SKEY: I think, Mr. Chairman, you will find that the references which I have to make are in order because they are general in nature. I should like to refer back to the time when I spoke on this bill when I had an exchange with the minister, in part humorous and in part serious. The minister has done me the honour of dealing with one of the recommendations that I made to him when he replied, as reported on page 735 of Hansard. However, he did not deal with one other recommendation which I made at that time and I should like to give him an opportunity of dealing with it now. I think he will welcome this opportunity in view of the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario when he referred to the difficulty that certain businessmen met when approaching the government with their problems and the new situation in which they found themselves.

I recommended to the minister that he should call to Ottawa some of those in the country who are skilled in commerce and export and import matters. I recommended that he consult with boards of trade and chambers of commerce in Canada. The minister has said that prior to the bringing in of this measure they had no opportunity to do that, but I ask him what action he or his departmental officials have taken, since the bringing in of this measure, to consult these experts in the country.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is extremely easy to answer. I think on the average I personally see at least six or seven representative delegations in the course of a week. Today I had a delegation from brush manufacturers and I have had delegations from electrical manufacturers, furniture manufacturers and others. I think it is fair to say that I see at least ten or twelve delegations a week. They come to my office with extremely well prepared briefs which outline the problems of their particular industry. Of course I receive them with my customary courtesy and I listen to their stories. I am very glad to have these representations made.

In addition to the delegations that I see, the officials of the emergency import control division and other officers of the Department of National Revenue or the other departments of government concerned with the administration of this program see literally hundreds of representatives of business and industry. I think it will be found that the reception which these Canadians received was sympathetic and considerate. My friend, the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario shakes his head—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He was agreeing with you.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On a question of privilege, I was agreeing with the minister. I am sure that the minister was so courteous that he made it as painless as it could be made.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thought the hon. member was shaking his head from side to side and not up and down. I apologize to him. Speaking personally, and I know that this applies to the officers of the department, representations from organizations such as my hon. friend has suggested are not only welcomed, but are necessary for the effective administration of any law of this kind. They are the same sort of thing that I get month after month during the year with respect to matters which affect the budget. That is the way in which our system works.

Boards of trade, chambers of commerce and trade groups of one kind and another are constantly making representations to the government. I can assure my hon. friend that he need have no concern over the reluctance of organized groups of this kind to bring their cases fully and clearly before the government. I am glad that they do, and he need feel no concern over the fact that the points of view of all groups are not fairly presented to the government.

Mr. SKEY: I am sure that many in the country will be pleased to know that they are so welcome in Ottawa and will always receive the sympathetic and non-political treatment which they appear to be getting.

However, I should like to come to the other side of this question. This is an emergency exchange measure. When I spoke before, I asked the minister if he had consulted those in the country who were skilled in exchange matters. We have the minister's answer with regard to import and trade groups, but what about those skilled in finance and exchange? Has the minister interviewed the bankers' association or representatives of the Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver stock exchanges? Has he met with the boards of directors of any of the banks? Are they in agreement with the action the government has taken in this case?

Mr. ABBOTT: Fortunately in this country we still follow the principle of responsible government. The government does not have its policy determined by this House of Commons, by the bankers' association, by the trades and labour congress or by any other special group.

Mr. SKEY: That is not the question.

Mr. ABBOTT: Let me make that perfectly clear.

Mr. SKEY: I was referring just to consultation.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is all right. The government is always willing to listen to the representations of any group in this country that may be interested either in promoting the public welfare or in promoting its own particular interests. That is part of our system and ministers of the crown and the government are always ready to listen to these representations. But in the final analysis the people who have to determine the policy of this country are not the bankers' association; they are not the trades and labour congress; they are the government which represents the elected people of this country. As I say, the government is always willing to listen to the views of any group in this country, but the responsibility for determining what government policy will be lies with the government. Let me say that in budget matters or in matters of this kind there are obvious reasons why we cannot consult either with the bankers' association, the trades and labour congress or any other private group before determining what the policy will be.

Mr. SKEY: The minister has suggested in his reply that I was advocating that he should ask the advice of these various organizations. That was not my idea at all. I was merely asking the minister if they had been asked to give their views to the government in the same friendly way as the traders previously mentioned. It seems strange that we have the minister describing the welcome given to the trade delegations and import people, but when we come to the question of finance and the management of currency and exchange the minister shows some heat.

Mr. ABBOTT: The minister never shows heat.

Mr. SKEY: He showed some heat.

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, no, never.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister always has the same complexion?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is just the temperature.

Mr. SKEY: My question still remains unanswered. Has the minister had representations from the heads of the various financial organizations and has he had their opinion with regard to the measure now under discussion?

Mr. ABBOTT: If one may judge the published annual reports of most of the chartered banks, they appear to approve the action which the government has taken.

Mr. SKEY: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend may smile, but I have read the reports. Perhaps he might usefully do so. These reports are pretty capable documents. If he reads them carefully he will find he gets a lot of useful information from them. I do not think there is any criticism of the action which the government has taken on this particular issue.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I compliment the minister on his eloquent presentation of the elementary principles of responsible government. You know sir, one needs to attain a professorial attitude to give us the great truths that he gave us just now which, of course, we all learned in the first grade when we went to school.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not all.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Quite apart from that, I have three questions to ask, but, first, with respect to the minister's answer about the statements of the banks, may I say that they were prepared, although not published, long before he took the measures he is talking about.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not all of them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I want to ask three simple questions, not in the realm of high finance which we have been dealing with just recently because I confess I do not understand large figures. I know something about refrigerators; I know something about fireworks, and I know something about one other subject. I want to ask the minister a question first about fireworks because, if I heard him correctly, he mentioned that fireworks had been taken from the prohibited list and put on a quota basis. I understood him to say that just a moment ago. I speak to him now on behalf of an organization known as The Calgary Exhibition and Stampede. I wrote him a letter about the matter today; at least I was sent a copy of a letter that was sent to him. Perhaps, sir, knowing as you do how wonderful our facilities are for getting our mail out I should have said I dictated a letter today. I may send it out in the course of the next couple of weeks, granted that I get it back again—I do not know so much about that. But may I assume from what he said a moment ago that this government would grant an expenditure of $7,500 to the one event in the Dominion of Canada, by way of entertainment, including your Toronto exhibition—

Mr. SKEY: The Canadian National.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): All right. This is the first time I have ever known anyone from Toronto who would not accept credit even though it was not due. They call it the Canadian National. What I am saying is that the exhibition at Calgary attracts more real United States dollars than any other single event in the country. It is a matter of great importance, not national importance —I am fed up with this national business. We heard something today about somebody seceding out there; I am not going to secede. It is a great show in our own area, and I think the people sitting in front of the minister will agree that no other single event in Canada attracts the United States dollars which the Calgary stampede does; therefore I am simply making a plea that $7,500, which will bring back fifty times as much, be granted. I am not expecting an answer to that at the moment because, as I say, I have written.

These other two matters I have taken up with the department or departments. The first has to do with refrigeration. I was very happy to hear the minister tell the House of Commons how courteous he was to everybody who came to see him. In order that he should not be lonesome on that pedestal may I immediately thank those under him in his department and in the Department of National Revenue for the great courtesy they have shown me in invariably turning me down in everything that I asked them to do.

I want first to deal with one incident which I think is entitled to consideration. May I, Mr. Chairman, say that I do not mention this or the next item in the House of Commons without first having done my best by correspondence with the department to get for these people what I think is simple justice. I tell you this simple story. There is a small outfit in Calgary which makes casing for refrigeration; that is, the wood, the furniture and the fittings that go with it, and they buy their refrigeration in Los Angeles. I think it was the evening of November 17 that the Minister of Finance, quite illegally, of course, pronounced his edict that things ended as of the date when Caesar spoke, or whatever the proper expression is.

Mr. ABBOTT: Whatever you want to call it, yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): This is a simple question. The output is very small. Fifteen people are engaged in the business of building these casings or set-ups, furnishing for refrigeration. They have a cash capital paid up of $9,000. They had started a comparatively new business, and business was good. With assistance from banks and elsewhere they bought, it so happens, the same amount, $9,000 worth of refrigeration. It arrived in Calgary at the Canadian Pacific railway warehouse at three o'clock. They were notified. They got in touch with their customs brokers. Those brokers informed them at that time that it was too late to get the thing cleared through customs, and then mighty Caesar spoke and their refrigeration was refrigerated in the Canadian Pacific railway freight sheds in Calgary. Nothing was done to remedy that.

This was not a matter of prohibition, as the minister so kindly informed me last December; it was a matter of excise tax added to that price. They had arranged to dispose of the material. When the minister made his announcement he said it would be a temporary measure. Those persons who were to buy the material said, "Don't be silly; we are not going to pay that price. The minister says this is just a temporary measure." What has happened since I do not know. They could not send it back. They had paid for it. It may be lying in the Canadian Pacific warehouse yet. Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect and in all seriousness, I do think that goods which had been delivered this side of the border and were lying in a warehouse in Calgary or in Ottawa or in Toronto prior to this announcement should get some consideration. I am glad to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his seat. Title had passed. It may have been conditioned on a customs release; but the department absolutely refused to move from its position, and told me, and I think told these people, that nothing could be done, since no exceptions could be made. The exception should never have had to be made because it is unjust; it is wrong; yet, so far as I know, it stands unrighted.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was the tax.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Excise tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is another resolution; that is not this bill.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sorry, but I shall not repeat it. Do not forget that I mentioned it on this bill.

The other question which comes to my attention—and I may say it is among a very great many—has not to do with the excise tax; it has to do with prohibition. In the city of Calgary from which I come—and I am glad to see the Minister of Fisheries here; you see, he is our very good neighbour, and he is going to give us a fishing pool in the city square there and breed his own kind of MacKinnon trout; we have that all arranged—there is the only concern in the Dominion of Canada which is engaged in the manufacture of billiard room or poolroom and bowling equipment. I want to mention this particularly with reference to the exceptions which the minister said were being made in favour of the returned man.

A very fine gentleman by the name of Mr. Taylor wrote back the most pleasing letters, but at the end I found I was exactly where I started and perhaps a little more behind the eight ball than I thought I was when I began. This is the situation, and I want the house to get it. So far as I can learn, they are the only outfit in the Dominion of Canada engaged in the manufacture of bowling balls for alleys. I do not know how many hon. members have engaged in the game of bowling, but it is very general throughout the country. The greater part of that equipment is supplied by the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company. I do not know what the "collender" means in connection with bowling. I had thought it was something my wife used for straining things when making salads. As I say, I do not know what it means in this connection, but they supply practically the whole of that equipment in the dominion.

This little outfit had a capital of $35,000, all paid up. It was composed of a returned veteran and his brother-in-law. This returned veteran had a splendid record overseas. I mean a combat record; I do not mean one of the chaps sitting at a desk with a pencil, blue-pencilling other people's ideas. I mean a man who was fighting. He used his gratuity, a government loan, a loan on his insurance and a loan from the bank and raised $17,500. His brother-in-law put up the remaining $17,500.

I thought he was entitled as a returned veteran to special consideration, but I was informed by the department that he was not so entitled because he owned only 50 per cent, with his brother-in-law, who is not a returned man. Where are you going to draw the line? Must the veteran own 100 per cent, or 90 or 80 or 75 or 50 per cent? Where do you draw the line? The simple fact is that there was an outfit doing something for business in this country and in a very short time succeeding quite well. They were original people, the sort of people we want here, people who were doing something for this country, providing employment for thirty-five persons. Today they are practically out of business, certainly so far as a large proportion of their business is concerned, because they are unable to import certain things required in that business; for example, the wood from which these bowling balls are made.

I would not mention the matter in the house had I not placed all the facts before the department. I have the correspondence, and these people have been turned down on that basis.

I hate strong language or exaggerated language, but I do say this. They are facing ruin at the present time and the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company are taking over the business. They had opened up branches in Regina, Prince Albert and Edmonton, and today they have to close them because, through this stupid and unfair regulation, the business is being handed to this great company which practically controls that industry throughout the whole continent of North America.

I would not have mentioned these things, but they are not really of local interest merely. That is the attitude that has been taken, that a man owning 50 per cent, and having borrowed in every place he could, is not entitled to some form of import quota. If that is the case, then heaven help us and let us throw the rest of the business to people comparable with the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company of the United States of America.

Mr. ABBOTT: With regard to the matter raised by my hon. friend, point number one is that this firm never imported anything before June 30 of this year.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They were not in business.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. My hon. friend has stated the facts correctly. The business is owned 50 per cent by a veteran and 50 per cent by a non-veteran. I did not know it was this veteran's brother-in-law. This is no doubt a perfectly genuine case, but it is very easy for anyone to use a veteran as a stalking horse in order to get special quotas under an arrangement of this kind or any other special provisions such as we had during the war.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I told you what this veteran did to get his money, did I not?

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not interrupt my hon. friend and I should like to state the other side of the case, because there are always two sides to a case. It is true that it was a new business and it is true that it was owned 50 per cent by a veteran. I do not know whether bowling balls are all made in the United States, but this firm can import all the bowling balls that can be made in the United Kingdom. Their quota is practically unlimited. They are restricted, it is true, as regards importations from the United States, but they are not restricted in bringing in equipment from the United Kingdom.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is the minister not confusing these bowling balls with bowling balls which are used on the green? I doubt very much whether bowling balls used in alleys are even made in the United Kingdom.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may be; I do not know.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is quite a different matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know whether bowling balls used in bowling alleys are made in the United Kingdom. From the United Kingdom there is a substantial import of balls under the heading of sporting equipment, but whether they are bowling balls or not I do not know. My hon. friend has made a tremendous point, and this is one of the cases to which I referred in my first statement with regard to this policy, namely, that inevitably some hardship must be caused to somebody. You cannot put in a policy of this kind in a painless fashion; somebody has to be hurt to a certain extent.

This is a concern which is owned, it is true, to the extent of 50 per cent by a veteran and 50 per cent by a non-veteran, and it was not in this business before June. It was bad luck, if I may say so, to get into the business after June 30, but no one knows better than my hon. friend, who is a distinguished lawyer, that hard cases make bad law, and I am not going to take as a typical example the case of one firm which cannot import bowling balls from the United States, which are prohibited and, I believe, under existing conditions properly prohibited. I cannot take this as an outstanding example of the foolishness and unsoundness of this prohibitory legislation. If the concern were owned 100 per cent by the veteran, there would be a special quota assigned to him; but it is not possible for me or for the administration to look into every case where there is joint ownership between a veteran and a non-veteran to find out whether it is a case where the non-veteran along with the veteran should get a special privilege.

I am told that this case, partly no doubt as a result of representations made by the hon. member for Calgary West, was carefully and sympathetically considered by the officials of the department, and the decision which was taken was one which it was felt was necessary if we were to maintain any semblance of principle in the administration of an admittedly difficult law.

The refrigeration matter raised by my hon. friend is, of course, a matter of the tax, which is under the amendments to the Special War Revenue Act and will come up later.

As regards the Calgary stampede, the stampede has certainly taken its place as the greatest show on earth and I agree that it is a great producer of United States dollars.

The reason fireworks were dropped from the prohibited list is that a considerable proportion of these do come from the sterling area countries, and that is one case where it was found possible to drop goods from the prohibited list.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask a supplementary question?

The CHAIRMAN: If the bowling alley case has been completed, I should like to make a few observations.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask one general question, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is it the rule of the department that, when one seeks special consideration, the business must be wholly owned, 100 per cent, by a veteran?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the case unless it is an incorporated company where, of necessity, there must be legal qualifying shares held by two other directors, or whatever they may be. It is a special exception; it is a special privilege given to the veteran as a veteran.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I realize that. I am happy about it and am very much in favour of it. But let us take as an example, for instance, a young veteran like the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) here. We will say that he has now returned from his fifth war or something like that.

Mr. ABBOTT: It cannot be that bad.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): And we will say that he, being a poor man, has got together $10,000 and is going to form a radiator company or something like that. I have heard that he has been in the radiator business, not the radio business. We will suppose that he, having raised that money, gets hold of a plant and borrows $5,000 from a person who is not a veteran and who has a security on his business. Is that company or partnership which it may be, an enterprise wholly owned by a veteran, or is it not? If it is regarded as one that is wholly owned by a veteran, how in the world do you distinguish between two partners, one a veteran and one not a veteran; because in the case which I have mentioned if the thing does not go, the mortgagee, not the veteran, will ultimately own the whole business? A mortgage in that case is really ownership. What is your ruling there?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend says that a mortgage is really ownership. Some test must be established, and the test is whether the business is owned by the veteran. That does not preclude a veteran who owns a business from borrowing money from his bank, from a private individual or from anywhere else he likes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): With security on the property?

Mr. ABBOTT: With security on the property. I do not know what the effect is in my hon. friend's jurisdiction, but in the jurisdiction where I practise law the mortgagee takes a charge on the property but the veteran continues to own it. That is the test which is accepted for extending this special privilege. One must have some test. There will be borderline cases, I suppose, with regard to any rule. But I am informed that the rule which is followed by the division is that the business must be wholly owned by the veteran. He can borrow money anywhere he likes, but it must be his business. If he shares it with somebody else, he or the firm is not entitled to this special privilege which no one gets but the veteran.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let us take another example. Let us assume that we have a business for which you and I have paid $10,000. You would supply $9,999 and I would supply the dollar and so we would get the capital.

Mr. ABBOTT: You would supply the brains; I would supply the cash.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): We would get our capital together. I know this is not true, but we will say that you did not have that $9,999 and that I did not have the other dollar. What we do is we incorporate a company and we go to the minister sitting immediately behind you, who has saved all his money, as we Irishmen always do. What he does is this: he says, "Now, boys, you have a very nice company. You have a share apiece. Assign to me 998 of them in blank and I will give you the money you require." You are a veteran; I am not. As I told the House of Commons before, my only military achievement was that of being lance-corporal in the boys' brigade in the Methodist church in Regina. In a case like that—and that is an ordinary business case—would you say that you and I as veterans—you a veteran of the first great war and I a veteran of the boys' brigade in the Methodist church in Regina—would have special consideration given? I know it is half funny, but the thing might easily happen. What is your ruling on that?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course my hon. friend is a skilful lawyer and he would know many methods whereby perhaps it might be possible to achieve the desired end without the export-import control division being able to see through all the screens which were placed in the way of getting at the true ownership of the business.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have borrowed money from every person and every bank that would give it to me. I admit that.

Mr. ABBOTT: On occasion, I have done a little borrowing myself. It is hard to give rulings on these hypothetical cases. I think all I can do is to return to what I said a moment ago, that the test which is used in extending this special consideration to a special group is that the business must be the business of the veteran, and that veteran is entitled to a quota, although he did not have any record of performance in that particular line prior to June 30. No doubt there are cases where people may use veterans as a blind to cover up the real ownership which is not that of a genuine veteran, and some of these we cannot catch. But on balance, the purpose of the rule is to enable veterans to get this special treatment. I cannot say any more than that. The division are trying to administer the rule just as fairly as they can and in the interests, not of fellows who are trying to put it over on somebody else, but of genuine veterans.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You rely solely on legal title. May I again thank the department for their courtesy in turning me down in the gentle way in which they have.

The CHAIRMAN: Before we proceed to clause 2, may I again refer the committee to the rules of the house. I draw their attention to standing order 58 (2), which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The discussion we have just been listening to is one which I believe could have been more appropriately considered under section 3 (1) which reads:

> No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II, or III . . .

And so on. I do not like to interrupt hon. members when they get into the midst of a discussion, but it occurs to me that the committee will make more progress if we abide by the rules of the house and make our remarks directly relevant to the clause which is being considered.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I make one point which was made in the discussion before we rose at six o'clock, namely, that it was agreed—and I think the minister will bear me out in this—that it was desirable, before we did anything else with regard to this bill, to have a clear understanding of the changes which had been made in the schedules. I think this discussion so far, in a general way, has had to do with the schedules and their present condition.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the minister has handed to Hansard a table of the changes.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

The CHAIRMAN: I certainly think it would be out of order to discuss the schedules at this time. I am satisfied—and I think the committee will agree with me—that we always make more progress and get into fewer difficulties if we abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. HARKNESS: While we are still on this billard supply case, I think it would save time if I now made one or two comments which I should like to make on it. On this same case I have also had a number of courteous letters from the minister, which did not do anybody any good. However, in stating the position a few moments ago I think the minister omitted one point; that is, that these billiard balls and other supplies which this small Alberta concern wishes to import, and which it started to import from the United States, are not banned. They are under a quota; and the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company is still bringing in these materials. As a matter of fact, the only way in which this company can get any business is practically to become an agent for the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and take the stuff they bring in, at much higher prices than they could bring it in for themselves; otherwise they cannot stay in business at all.

When the minister introduced this measure he said special provision would be made for new businesses, and particularly for businesses run by veterans. As far as I can make out, no provision has been made for new businesses, as far as this company is concerned. The department has applied to it only one criterion, that the business was not entirely owned by a veteran, but only fifty per cent of it was so owned. Therefore they gave it no consideration whatever. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the minister give consideration to this company on the ground that it is a new business, in addition to the fact that actually fifty per cent of it is owned by a veteran, and it employs a large number of veterans. It is no good talking, as the minister did a while ago, about making special exceptions for prohibited goods because these goods are not prohibited. It is merely a matter of whether Brunswick-Balke-Collender bring them in or whether a small Canadian company which is trying to get started, which is chiefly manned by veterans and half owned by a veteran, is to have a chance to compete with that large concern.

Mr. BENTLEY: I have a similar case I wish to mention.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member wants to bring up another case I would ask that he reserve his remarks until we reach section 3. As I said, I did not want to interrupt the billiard ball case, but I do not think we should bring up a number of these cases at this time.

Mr. BENTLEY: I shall have to do what the Chairman instructs me to do, of course,, but the hon. member for Calgary East had a lot of fun in his own way, and I think he brought up a good case. The other hon. member for Calgary was also allowed to go ahead and discuss it. If you insist that I am not to be given the same consideration of course I shall sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not saying the hon. member cannot go ahead, but I am satisfied that we shall make more progress if the case he has in mind is discussed under section 3, which we shall reach very shortly.

Mr. BENTLEY: I really do not believe it will be any more relevant under section 3 than it would be here; but, as I say, I shall be guided by your ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. BENTLEY: In this connection I wanted to recommend something to the government in regard to this veteran these other hon. members have been talking about; and I think they have a good case. In this country we are supposed to have what is called an industrial development bank. Why not have this bank lend the veteran the balance of the money and let him pay off the non-veteran half owner?

Mr. ABBOTT: The non-veteran owner could lend the money himself. If he would be willing to lend the veteran the money instead of taking a half interest in the business it would be all right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Blood is thicker than water; he is a brother-in-law.

Mr. ABBOTT: That should make him still more willing to lend the money.

Mr. BENTLEY: Then the other case—

The CHAIRMAN: It is the other case to which I was referring.

Mr. BENTLEY: Then I shall bring it up under section 3.

Mr. ADAMSON: This is a matter concerning a veteran, and since it is a general case I think it should be discussed on section 1.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. There should not be a general discussion of a specific case on section 1. This matter should be discussed under section 3, and I suggest to the hon. member for York West that he also reserve his remarks until that time.

Mr. ADAMSON: This is not a particular case. It deals with the general principle of the bill, and it is along the same line, in regard to the veterans preference, which I do not see comes under section 3 (a). The case is that of three veterans who started in the trucking business; the Minister of National Revenue knows about the case also.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I think the committee must determine now whether or not it will abide by the rules of the house. I am in the hands of the committee, but according to my interpretation of the rules the discussion upon which the hon. member is now entering would be out of order at the moment, but would be in order under section 3, certainly, and possibly under section 2. It would certainly not be in order under section 1.

Mr. GREEN: With all deference, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that you have not yet heard what the hon. member for York West has to state. He has not gone along far enough to make his case, and I suggest that the discussion which has taken place has really been upon the general administration of the plan. Surely hon. members are in order in asking questions of that type. I have never known the Chairman to prevent discussion of that kind on the first section of a bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: If I may add a word, perhaps it is always a little hard to draw the line between what can and what cannot be discussed under section 1. Perhaps matters relating to the general administration of the bill can be brought up under that section, though I believe that is open to question; but I think specific cases referring to the enforcement of prohibitions, when that is felt to be unfair, or the refusal to give quotas, or the giving of inadequate quotas, should be dealt with under the proper sections; in the case of prohibitions, when we are discussing schedule I, and in the case of quotas, when we are discussing schedule II, which is the quota schedule. Section 3 is the broad, enabling section which provides that no goods will be imported into Canada that are set forth in schedules I, II and III, except under permit; and I should think the door would be pretty wide open under that section for almost any question of a general nature that might be raised. But is it pretty hard to deal with specific cases under section 1.

Mr. ADAMSON: This is a general case that I want to bring up under section 1, and it is along the line of the case previously discussed, in regard to veterans. Here is a case where I think clarification is needed, and I believe this is the section under which it could be given. We were discussing the case of a veteran who owned only fifty per cent of the business. Apparently under the bill he is debarred. Here is the case of three brothers who have invested or borrowed from the government—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. In fairness to the hon. member for Swift Current, I do not think I should allow the hon. member for York West to bring up a specific case. To me it is obvious that it does not come under section 1 of this bill. Definitely it comes under section 3. If the committee wishes to disregard the rules of the house that is agreeable to me, but unless the committee so indicates it is my duty to enforce the rules.

Mr. ABBOTT: If I may add just one word, if the committee will look at section 4 it will be seen that this section deals with exceptional hardship, and the minster is given discretion to allow goods in where there are circumstances which, in his opinion, constitute exceptional hardship. Under that section I should think it would be quite in order to bring up cases which hon. members may feel are unfair; but to do so under section 1, which is the title section, I think is completely out of order.

Mr. ADAMSON: I was not complaining that this case was unfair; I merely wanted to get clarification on a general matter. Here is an instance where we have a veteran owning fifty per cent. Then there is the other question where three veterans are partners, and one is not. Are they debarred under this section?

Mr. ABBOTT: When we come to section 3 I shall try to answer that.

Mr. FRASER: How much has the country saved in United States dollars under this emergency plan of allowing only $150 for travel in the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is impossible to say; any answer given could be only an estimate. Expenditures of Canadians travelling in the United States can be estimated, but only with a reasonable degree of accuracy. The amount which will be saved by restricting those who travel in dollar areas for pleasure purposes to the amount of $150 once a year can be estimated only in a rough fashion. I believe the best estimate has been that the imposition of that restriction would result in a saving of something in the order of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 a year.

Mr. FRASER: Has it cut down travel to the United States very much?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is difficult to say. The period of extensive travel is the summertime. Of course it is still open to Canadians to go freely to the United States and take not more than $10 in United States currency and $15 in Canadian currency, as often as they like.

Mr. FRASER: As often as they wish?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. FRASER: What are the regulations in respect of a man or woman under a doctor's care, who is supposed to go south for health purposes?

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe I covered that in my statement. Such persons are allowed whatever is reasonably necessary to enable them to spend the time they are required to spend in the southern United States, or wherever it may be, for medical reasons. The policy being followed there is the same as that followed at the end of the war and immediately thereafter. From what I have been told, I believe the board is pretty reasonable about that sort of thing. There is very little questioning in respect of elderly people who are advised by their medical doctors that they need to spend a month or two in a southern climate. There is very little difficulty about that.

Mr. FRASER: Are applications in respect of persons who are ill made in about the same numbers as in other years?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not the figures here. However, I could get them, and give them later on.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have one or two questions about the general administration of the bill. It is interesting to learn that, so far, the department has found it necessary to make only fifteen changes in schedule I, seven in schedule II, and only one change in schedule III. It might be of interest to the committee to know how many applications for changes have been made, how many of such applications have resulted in refusals and how many are still pending. If the minister would give us information on that point we might form some idea, despite the minister's statement that they were put on after very careful consideration extending over some months—my own feeling is that they were slapped on in a hurry—as to just how much disruption these regulations have caused in Canadian business.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is difficult to give my hon. friend any accurate figures on that. I suppose every interested party has made representations in the matter. There is a fairly long list of prohibitions, and I believe it is fair to say that pretty nearly everyone affected by the prohibiting list has made representations at one time or another. Other than that, however, I do not think I can give my hon. friend any detailed statistics.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister did say that he had probably five or six delegations waiting upon him daily.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not daily, no.

Mr. JACKMAN: Weekly.

Mr. ABBOTT: To be fair, I would say they would average a couple a day, or about ten a week.

Mr. JACKMAN: I think the minister did say that the departmental officials had interviewed hundreds. I thought an estimate from the minister would be welcomed, so that we could learn how much of a monkey-wrench these regulations have thrown into the Canadian business structure.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have had all kinds of representations. Perhaps it would not surprise the committee to know that a good many Canadians have come forward and asked that additional items be banned, or placed on the prohibited list. We realize, of course, that it has a highly protective effect; and quite a number of Canadian industrialists, or at least, Canadian producers, have suggested that many United States dollars could be saved if we would add some items to the list, and thereby stimulate production in Canada. However, thus far we have not seen fit to accede to those requests. But there have been a lot of representations to that effect.

Mr. FULTON: As a matter of general policy, has the government any estimates which the minister would be willing to put before the committee as to the period of time which it is expected will elapse before the countries of Europe can be placed sufficiently on their feet to pay us in United States dollars, so that we can begin to take off these restrictions? In other words, how long will this short-range policy remain? When may we expect to begin to put into effect a long-range policy of removing restrictions and expanding trade? Can the minister give us some general indication of his views on the matter?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should like to be able to do so; but I think my hon. friend will realize that that is absolutely impossible. I have never laid claim to having any gifts of second sight, or of possessing any outstanding qualities as a prophet. I would not attempt to do more than say what I have already said, that we consider these restrictions as essentially temporary restrictions. When the world will be in a position where we can be paid in cash for what we have to sell depends upon so many factors which are completely beyond the control of this country, that I am not prepared even to hazard a guess.

Mr. FULTON: Perhaps I should not have used the expression, "make an estimate." But we are given to understand that the program was an expedient. We were told that the government had a definite policy for expanding Canadian trade along the lines of the Geneva trade agreements, and that this measure became necessary to conserve United States dollars. Just the other day the minister made a speech in Montreal in which he said how many Canadian dollars had been saved.

Mr. ABBOTT: I told the house before. I gave no new information in Montreal that I had not given here.

Mr. FULTON: The minister told how many Canadian dollars had been saved. Can he say when we can take off these restrictions? The government must be working, having in mind some sort of estimate as to the effect of the Marshall plan, and how soon the Marshall plan will enable Europe to pay in dollars for what she gets from us. I am asking the minister if anyone has been able to formulate a reasonable estimate as to how such European recovery will progress, and a time limit as to when we may be able to begin taking off these restrictions; or is the matter entirely in the hands of Providence?

Mr. ABBOTT: In the first place, the figures I have given do not necessarily indicate how much we have saved. It is some indication of what our reserve position was at that time. I think it is a fair inference to say that the improvement was due, in part at any rate, to the actions which had been taken.

As to giving an estimate as to what the results may be in the future, my opinion is, and this is confirmed by the best advice I can get, that it is far too soon to attempt to hazard a guess. I uttered a note of caution the other day when I gave figures in the house which showed what these reserves were. I cautioned the house and the country that one swallow does not make a summer, that there is a long road ahead. After all, a great part of the world is in a very difficult trading position at the present time. No matter how we in this country may try, and successfully try, to expand our exports to dollar markets, we cannot expect to be wholly prosperous, as I said in Montreal yesterday, in a prosperous dollar area with a depressed soft currency area. The net result must be that, as regards countries of western Europe and Asia, to which we have made such a substantial contribution in proportion to our means to get them back on their feet, the ultimate solution of our problem and that of others will have to be that those efforts must be successful. I am not going to attempt to hazard a prophecy or guess as to how we might have to continue some kind of appropriate action to conserve our exchange reserve position.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You do not think it will be just a matter of months?

Mr. MERRITT: I appreciate the minister's frankness when he says that he has no idea how long these restrictions will have to be continued. I do not suppose it is possible to make a specific estimate as to the time when the restrictions can be removed. However, that only serves to show more clearly the difficult position into which the government has got this country. It shows how, by the provisions of this bill, the country is placing itself indefinitely in the hands of one or two men.

I see the heir apparent, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, laughing when I suggest that it is the government's policies which have brought this policy to its present condition but during this debate we have had from more than one source substantial reasons why this is so, chief of which is the action of the government in returning the dollar to par.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would have fixed everything.

Mr. MERRITT: There has been very close control exercised by the government over all affairs of the country all the time since the war. Does the Minister of Finance know when he will be able to remove these restrictions? There are many manufacturers and agriculturists who would find it very useful if they had some forecast or knew that there was some "time certain" within which they could arrange their affairs and decide either to go into or out of business as a result of this new situation.

Mr. ABBOTT: A lot of people would like to know when the stock market is going up.

Mr. MERRITT: I was interested a moment ago when the minister pointed out that quite a few Canadians had come forward to ask to have goods placed on the prohibited list. I think he was trying to suggest to the committee that there was something wrong with that, that such a measure of protection should not be granted to Canadian manufacturers or producers. I want to remind him that in this legislation he has taken very good care indeed to look after the business interests of United States firms. The non-discriminatory provisions of this legislation are based upon the idea that, no matter what Canada's situation may be, no damage must be done to United States commercial interests. I see no reason why Canadian commercial interests should not receive as much advantage as possible in our present difficulties.

I am not suggesting that he accede to all requests for embargoes which amount to prohibitive tariffs. But I can see that in the case of goods produced in the proper quantities United States exchange would be saved and Canadian producers would be benefited. It is quite probable that more employment would be created. I suggest that if the minister could tell our manufacturers and agriculturists that there was a time certain within which the restrictions would not be taken off it would enable them to carry on business with profit to themselves and to the people of Canada in producing the things which we need. It would perhaps assist in keeping down the cost of living.

It would not matter if the minister does not know exactly the time when the restrictions would be removed. In the case of agricultural production he could guarantee the growing season. Then these producers would be able to plant a certain crop and be sure that they would not be faced with dumping just when it was to be harvested. In the case of manufactured goods it might be that many industries could go into the production of goods which are now being imported if they had a time certain within which these measures would apply. The Canadian people would benefit from the goods produced. It would not matter if, in fulfilling that undertaking, the restrictions with respect to the particular commodities had to be maintained a little longer than other restrictions. I think that is a matter which the minister should look into most carefully. There is no reason at all why the interests of the Canadian people and the Canadian producers should not come first in his mind.

We have had examples of people wanting to grow vegetables under glass and things like that. When I was home in Vancouver at Christmas time I had an inquiry from a business firm which for many years had had business connections with manufacturers in the United States. This firm asked me if I knew how long these restrictions would continue. I said I had no idea and I asked why they asked that question. I was told that they were considering what they would do in the future. They said that if the restrictions were to be maintained for years they would have to look into the question of whether they should change their agency to principals who could supply goods within the government's regulations, whether they should go into manufacturing for themselves or what they should do. They pointed out, of course, that if these restrictions were to be of a short-term duration they would not like to upset their long-term arrangements. The minister must know that these considerations are important, and they concern many businessmen across Canada. The fact that he cannot tell us for certain the date on which the restrictions will have to come off, and when the Marshall plan will come into effect, does not relieve him of any responsibility to give a lead to Canadian business and agriculture on this vital point of the restriction program. I urge him to relieve the people of Canada from uncertainty, even though he cannot relieve himself of uncertainty in this respect.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of my honoured colleague the member for Vancouver-Burrard is certainly worthy of consideration. I listened to him with great interest, but he should make some more precise suggestions to the minister and tell him what, in his view, is the time that should be taken to continue these controls in the interests of the farmers and the producers. I understand very well that it is embarrassing for the producers when there is a change in tariff. We complained of that a long time ago, and conditions are similar. A tariff must have a certain amount of stability, and in that there is a lot in what he said. He has spoken in a persuasive manner, and I am sure that he got the ear of the minister.

First, he complained that the cabinet ministers who are sitting on the treasury benches were smiling while he was speaking. There are two obvious reasons for this. In the first place, evidently they were enjoying his speech and, in the second place, they are naturally cheerful. It is a very good thing for cabinet ministers to remain cheerful in such circumstances as these, and it is to their credit.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has not always a smiling disposition. He sees everything in dark colour. As a member of His Majesty's loyal opposition it is naturally his duty not to see everything in rose and pink. I understand that. I do not agree with him but I understand it. However, he should not blame the ministers for their naturally good dispositions, especially when they listened so attentively to him. By smiling when he is speaking, it shows that they appreciate his grains of wisdom.

Mr. GREEN: They are smiling at you now.

Mr. POULIOT: No; it is the smile that they had when the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard spoke, which is still continuing. They enjoyed the speech so much that they still enjoy it, although he has ceased to speak and although I am speaking myself; it is a credit to him, and I congratulate him for having achieved such success.

Mr. MERRITT: May I ask one further question? The smile of the nature to which the hon. member refers I would reciprocate, but the smile I referred to was not one of those smiles, I am afraid. The question I want to ask is this. How far does this bill or the present order in council bind government agencies? For instance, the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation is an agency of the crown. Is that agency bound by the prohibitions, quotas and restrictions of this bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: The bill binds all corporations. Of course it does not bind the crown.

Mr. MERRITT: Perhaps the minister can give me a non-technical answer. Will the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation be given a quota for quota goods, and will it be unable to import prohibited goods?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is bound by the bill, yes.

Mr. MERRITT: I understand that either in December, or at some time when these restrictions became current, the corporation, either directly or through agents, purchased 200 cars of shelled peanuts in the southern states, and I have information that shelled peanuts were available in Fiji and in India, and in other sterling area countries. I was also informed when I was in Vancouver, although this is on a much more minor section—

Mr. ABBOTT: Did my hon. friend say they were shelled peanuts?

Mr. MERRITT: Shelled.

Mr. ABBOTT: These are not either banned or under quota. They are free; anybody can bring them in.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. ABBOTT: Nuts in the shell are under quota or banned, but not shelled peanuts.

Mr. MERRITT: These nuts were bought from the United States, of course. I understand that United States dollars were paid for them by a government agency. I am suggesting, and my information is, that similar nuts were available for sale in sterling area countries.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are in very short supply, and are part of our international allocation in the oils and fats administration. Peanut oil is made from them.

Mr. MERRITT: If the minister will let me finish what I want to say I should then like to hear what he has to say in reply. In a much more minor key I was advised recently that a government building in the city of Vancouver has to buy a well-known United States type of floor wax. My informant claimed that there was a very good Canadian substitute which could not be purchased because of the policy of the Department of Public Works or whatever department is concerned. I should like to ask the minister—and it makes no difference whether peanuts or floor wax do not come under this bill—whether the government in its own purchasing is observing the spirit of the austerity program in the same way as it is insisting that it be done by private individuals across the country? Does the government make sure that, before it purchases anything with United States dollars, it cannot get the article it wants from any Canadian or non-United States dollar source. Is there any policy on that point?

Mr. ABBOTT: The government observes these restrictions the same as anyone else. I cannot give my hon. friend the categorical assurance that some government purchasing department may not purchase some floor wax which it might have got in Canada. If we knew about that we would not permit it. The general rule is, of course, that the government departments are observing the law and are subject, in fact, to the same rules exactly as anybody else. The government purchases its supplies through the ordinary channels of trade. It is not, as a rule, a direct importer of anything.

Mr. MERRITT: I should like to suggest to the minister—if no special instructions have been given to this effect as a result of the restriction program having come into force that the government now see to it that such instructions do go out and that government agencies conserve United States exchange just as private persons in the country are required to do.

Mr. ABBOTT: They do. The government buys supplies through the ordinary channels of trade. It is not a direct importer. I should qualify my statement there. We do import certain military supplies from the United States; but so far as ordinary civilian supplies are concerned, they are purchased through the ordinary channels of trade in Canada, the same as anybody else purchases them.

Mr. MERRITT: They are purchased here. The Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation and the Canadian Commercial Corporation must be subject to government policy in that respect. Surely, if they are not—

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course they are.

Mr. MERRITT: Then, surely in these circumstances specific instructions should be given to these bodies to purchase in non-dollar countries where they can.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend would be satisfied if I told him that the president of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation is the chairman of the war-time prices and trade board, and is the assistant deputy minister of finance who is specifically charged with the administration of the emergency control division. So he can rest assured that the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation is observing the so-called austerity program.

Mr. MERRITT: I might observe, Mr. Chairman, that I would not be wholly satisfied with that since the minister is here himself and he could, if he would, give the assurance I asked for.

Mr. LENNARD: With respect to what the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard had to say in connection with growers, I have particular reference to those who grow under glass, the greenhouse men. In answer to a suggestion of the hon. member for Temiscouata that the minister should have some direction, I might say that a crop of tomatoes grown under glass takes four months, and if there is to be any change in the regulations and there is an increase in the growing of tomatoes for the spring crop, if these regulations are taken off by the end of May it will be a non-profit crop for those who would be sacrificing another crop to grow foodstuffs needed in this country.

Another point I wish to bring up, a general point, is that the florists of the country—I do not mean the flower shops, but those who grow flowers—are not buying bulbs for spring planting. They do not know what the regulations will be in May around Mother's day, when formerly great imports came from Florida and the southern states. They do not know whether the restrictions will be in force then. They do not know what to do at the moment, and that is the situation as far as the growing trade in eastern Canada is concerned. I know something about the matter, and I can assure the committee that these people do not know where they stand. Someone has foolishly told them that these restrictions will be lifted about March 31. I am sure that is not the case, but they do not know that, and the whole thing is in a muddle.

Mr. ABBOTT: I received a delegation from the vegetable growers, and they brought up the question whether they could get an assurance as to how long the restrictions would be in effect. They referred to the growing of tomatoes and lettuce under glass and to the expansion of hothouses. I told them—and I am sure they were not surprised—that I could not give any assurance that this measure was a protectionist measure and that anybody who expanded the production of hothouse tomatoes or lettuce must take whatever business risks were involved in doing so under our system. If they planted and the restrictions were still on, they would make a handsome profit and if they planted and the restrictions were not on, they would not. That is a part of the system, and I told them I could give no assurance as to when the restrictions would be taken off. They were not on as a protectionist measure but as an emergency measure, and that was a business risk which they would really have to assess for themselves.

Mr. FULTON: That is not a business risk. That has been the objection to so many of these things. Government interference with the ordinary cycle of marketing, whether necessary or not, creates hazards that cannot be called business risks. No one has asked that this be turned into a protective measure. But you have interfered with the Canadian economy and we say that you should now try to alleviate the effects of that interference as much as you can. Where you have created tremendous uncertainty, try to minimize that uncertainty by introducing a little certainty. If you tell them, "We will not take it off for six months or even three months", you will give them that degree of certainty. That is not a protective measure. It is a measure of common sense, and to refuse to do it is to blind your eyes to the disastrous effects that these things are having, effects which they need not have at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: No one need go ahead and build more hothouses to grow more tomatoes and lettuce.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. ABBOTT: If they want to do so they do it at their own risk. We are not putting on prohibitions to encourage the production in this country of hothouse tomatoes and lettuce in the winter. Why should we? If conditions were normal it would be far better to buy lettuce and tomatoes where they are grown naturally in the open and to sell something else to the United States. This measure is not put on as a protective measure to enable industry to expand or increase behind what is the greatest form of protection, namely a prohibition. It is not for that purpose. It is a temporary measure because we have to do it. It is put on reluctantly, and anyone who expands production in a particular field, relying on the protection which is afforded by these prohibitions, must do so at his own risk.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is before the committee now is simply the short title, "This act may be cited as the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act". The rule is very clear. Standing order 58 states that speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration. I wish to appeal to hon. members to try to conduct the business of the house in an orderly way. There is no reason in the world why we should discuss all these matters on the short title. When we come to the different clauses these matters can be discussed in their order. I think hon. members ought to agree now to follow the rules of the house. I appeal to them to pass this clause and get on with the clauses that deal with any of the matters which have been brought up under clause 1.

Mr. LENNARD: There is one point I want to call to the attention of the Minister of Finance. I did not for a moment intimate that the acreage under glass should be increased by one foot. I wish that distinctly understood. But the growers want to know what to grow that will be most beneficial to the people of Canada. Would it not be better to grow vegetables than flowers, something necessary for the people.

Mr. ABBOTT: I should like to be able to help the growers. My hon. friend has asked a direct question. I do not know that it is very much better for the people of Canada to have hothouse lettuce grown in Canada than hothouse flowers. It is fifty-fifty. Obviously there are not enough hothouses in Canada to provide everyone who wants lettuce with that vegetable. Lettuce grown in winter is a straight luxury commodity, and I consider that the people who want to buy hothouse lettuce in winter can pay the price if they have the money. If you were importing lettuce, if you had the United States dollars to import it in volume from the United States or anywhere else at reasonable prices, and if everyone could buy it, well and good. But when you cannot do that, then I say that lettuce grown under glass is a special luxury product which those who can afford it can pay for.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before you took the Chair we had a discussion with regard to what would or would not be in order on this section. The Deputy Speaker was then in the Chair, and it was pretty well agreed on all sides of the house—and certainly he did not question us on our submission—that any discussion of general adminstration of the plan would be in order on this first section.

An hon. MEMBER: That was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN: We were not ruled out of order. The Postmaster General has been sitting here all evening and he did not make one peep about its being out of order.

Mr. ABBOTT: The Deputy Speaker was doing his best.

Mr. GREEN: The questions asked in the last half hour have been all of a general nature having to do with the general administration of the plan, and I submit to Your Honour that as long as they are of that type they are in order. I agree that if we were dealing with questions which could be brought up under specific sections, the questions would not be in order, but that is not the case.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: In answer to my hon. friend I would say—and I think he will agree with me—that many of the questions which were raised would be more properly raised when the various clauses are before the committee. I would point out that before six o'clock I made an attempt to get the members of the committee to deal with this bill in an orderly manner; that is, to deal with clause 1, which is only the short title, and then go on with the other clauses and deal with the different matters which have been discussed here. But we have not reached the other clauses at all. Surely my hon. friend does not contend that this is an orderly and proper way in which to deal with the bill. On the contrary, it is altogether out of order. There is no rule that permits it. I want to appeal again to hon. members to try to deal with the business in the way in which the rules provide that it should be dealt with. It is not a pleasant thing for the Chairman to be obliged continually to call hon. members' attention to the rules. Every hon. member should try to assist the chair in seeing that the rules which are laid down for us are complied with. I think we should abide by them. I appeal again to hon. members to try to get on in an orderly way and deal with clause 1.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to ask the minister a question.

This comes under the general heading. I do not think it will be out of order. This bill deals with the question of saving exchange.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not intend to deal with what is in the bill. I want to ask a question.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The clause that is before the committee now is the short title; that is all. I think my hon. friend will find other clauses—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Emergency exchange.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: —as we go along, under which he can deal with the problem he has in mind.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have not stated it yet.

Mr. POULIOT: I abide by your ruling. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. POULIOT: I will not discuss your ruling, Mr. Chairman; I abide by it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): —I have the floor.

Mr. HARTT: Who said so?

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry, sir, but I think I have. We are dealing with the short title, which reads as follows:

This act may be cited as the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is what I said.

Mr. POULIOT: This is the first time that I can repeat what has been said by St. Paul's without making a mistake. I would suggest to the minister that he change the short title so that it reads in this way: "This act may be cited as the barter act." Barter should be a detour around United States dollars. The trouble now is that everybody is inclined to adopt new fashions. Why should we always stand by the United States dollar, speak only of the United States dollar from dawn to dusk and from dusk to dawn, and think only of the United States dollar as a means of exchange?

In the first place, the purpose of exchange is to correct the difference in a transaction which is made between two parties. Usually goods are exchanged and the difference is paid in dollars. But when we hear of the dollar as being the principal in a transaction instead of the accessory, one falls into the error of the Social Credit group. My suggestion to the minister is to trade by means of barter, to barter with all the countries that have not enough United States dollars with which to pay for Canadian goods. Only last year I made a practical suggestion to the minister regarding the income tax, namely, to replace the income tax by another kind of taxation that would not be so hard on the Canadian taxpayer. This time I suggest to him that he put aside the United States dollar and practice barter, and that he assist Canadian exporters and importers to barter with all countries of the world which have not enough United States dollars with which to make full payment for Canadian exports. That would be a way to recovery, and it would show the people of the United States that we may become independent of them.

Why should we always be subservient with regard to the people of the United States? There is no reason for it. South of the United States is a republic which is entirely independent of the United States. There are some United States investments there as there are some here; but they do their business with the United States and they can do so well that one official of the government—not a responsible gentleman, but one of the deputies—said not long ago that our trade with Mexico could amount to $100 million a year. Is it possible for Mexico to pay us in United States dollars? I doubt it. But we could practise the exchange of goods. Therefore there should be an entirely different trade policy. We should have a trade policy that would mean something to the Canadian people. In this country we have primary products and manufactured goods that we could exchange for primary products and manufactured goods of any other country in the world. At the present time what is the plague of the United Kingdom? It is that they have not enough United States dollars. But those people from Cripps down to the last cabinet minister are devoid of imagination. When they start with the wrong fashion, they think they are bound to continue to follow that fashion. They are entirely devoid of imagination, which should be the first quality of those who frame trade policy or any other policy of importance to the country. This is just an idea that is put forward, and I may tell the minister that I am not the first one to suggest it.

A long time ago, when Mr. Stevens was Minister of Trade and Commerce and when Brazil was throwing coffee into the ocean, I said it was a crime to throw away a commodity like that which had value. They had over-production. They were not using the coffee at all; they were throwing it into the Atlantic ocean. We could have exchanged wheat for coffee. I made that suggestion to Mr. Stevens, who was minister of trade and commerce, and he said it was worthy of consideration. That is just what I said a moment ago, of course entirely without authority, to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. Many others have suggested it. Only this winter, around Christmas, on the first page of the Montreal Gazette I read that no less a man than Colonel Horace Boivin, mayor of Granby, who has visited every country in Europe in the interests of Canadian manufacturers, advanced exactly the same suggestion. Therefore it is not only the suggestion of the member for Temiscouata; it is the suggestion of many people.

Trade is not only a question of banking. Banking is secondary in trade. What is essential is the exchange of products. Here I pay special tribute to the producers of this country in every field; the farmers, all the producers of primary products, the fishermen, and the producers of manufactured goods. But they need the assistance of the government. They need the help of our trade agencies, call it commercial intelligence or what you like. They need the help of our consuls and our so-called ambassadors to promote Canadian trade. These gentlemen do very little for better political understanding among the nations. They should prove their usefulness in promoting Canadian trade, in helping out those who have something to sell and those who wish to buy. For a time it was impossible to learn anything about imports; the figures were not given by the predecessor of the hon. gentleman who is piloting this bill. It was impossible to get any information about imports. Now we hear only about imports, and the figures in regard to exports are false. Our trade is fictitious. Let us come back to real trade. Let us barter our goods with the other nations of the world, and let us be free of the United States dollar.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. MacINNIS: I rise to a point of order. During the short time we were discussing this matter this afternoon various hon. members were ruled out of order for making speeches which were not nearly as far from the subject, from my point of view, as the one just made. I think hon. members should be uniformly kept within the same limits.

Mr. POULIOT: My speech was absolutely relevant, because it was in reference to a suggestion I made to the minister about changing the short title. It was relevant from A to Z, and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. MacINNIS: My hon. friend might have made the suggestion, but there was nothing in his speech that had anything to do with changing the title.

Mr. POULIOT: It all referred to the suggestion I made about changing the title.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East is perfectly correct. I agree that the speech just made was not in order, just as many others this evening have not been in order. That is what I am appealing to hon. members to avoid, and again I would ask their co-operation.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I shall try to do as you say, Mr. Chairman, and stay in order; I like you so well I would not want to go against your wishes. However, the only place I can find to say what I have to say, which will be brief, is in connection with emergency exchange. The idea of the bill is to save United States exchange, and my suggestion is this; I do not know whether the minister has already adopted it. I think he should make an appeal to the Canadian people telling them to buy Canadian, to buy British, to buy French. If he made it a real appeal I am sure he would save a good many United States dollars. I believe a great many things which are now being bought American would be bought Canadian if the right appeal were made by this government.

Mr. ABBOTT: Just in reply to that suggestion, may I tell my hon. friend that we published a couple of advertisements in the daily press throughout Canada, in order to reach as many people as possible, pointing out some ways in which we felt this emergency could be met. We said:

> Do not order goods by mail from other countries . . . do not buy goods to bring home when you travel outside Canada.
> If you feel some purchase is absolutely essential, see your collector of customs and excise beforehand to learn whether the item is prohibited.
> Look for alternatives or substitutes for the items which are temporarily prohibited.

In the opening paragraph of the advertisement, which emphasized why this was necessary, we said:

> Canada is heavily "in the red" in present trading with the U.S. dollar area. In our total trade with the world we are in a good position but not in that part which is done with the U.S. dollar countries. Other countries with whom we do business cannot pay us in full, either in cash or in goods, for the things they buy from us. . . .
> There are two things we can do at the moment . . . cut down unnecessary purchases from the U.S. dollar area and increase our production of goods that can be sold to those countries to balance accounts.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): But you do not say why.

Mr. FLEMING: Why not say "Buy Canadian"?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a slogan. It is a necessary inference from what I have read: "cut down your unnecessary purchases from the U.S. dollar area." What else can it mean?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): You could say "Buy Canadian" and "Buy British."

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, I really give the Canadian people credit for enough sense to believe they will take that for granted.

Mr. FLEMING: Just before six o'clock the minister, in referring to the schedules and also, I think, to the provisions of P.C. 4678, said they represented months of work, by which I took it he meant that months of work had been applied to the formulation of those provisions before they were promulgated on November 17. Would he expand his remarks somewhat and indicate to the committee when this work was begun?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I can give my hon. friend an absolutely accurate answer, but broadly speaking I should think it was about midsummer. About that time it was realized that it was quite possible import restrictions might have to be resorted to as a method of conserving our United States dollar reserves. It was realized by those who know something about these matters that it would not be possible to create overnight a workable and appropriate schedule for putting into force such import restrictions; and about the middle of the summer we set up an interdepartmental committee, of which the present assistant deputy minister of finance was chairman, to study the question of what import restrictions could or might properly be imposed should it be decided to take that step.

Mr. FLEMING: Then may I follow that up with two other questions? The first is, were the tariff experts of the Department of National Revenue, on the customs side, consulted in that work?

Mr. ABBOTT: They were on the committee.

Mr. FLEMING: Second, what was the total of gold and United States dollar holdings in Canada at the time that work was begun, which the minister says was midsummer?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not that figure available here, but I think I gave that information in reply to a question by the leader of the opposition at the very outset of the session. Those figures are on Hansard, or were tabled early in the session.

Mr. ADAMSON: I want to move an amendment to clause 1, the short title. I do not think the word "emergency" is justified at the present time; I think the word should be "chronic". I do not see how we can get the word "chronic" into the title of the bill, but the situation nevertheless is chronic.

Two years ago we warned—I certainly warned—that our exchange situation was going from bad to worse. It was aggravated in 1946 by the parity action. Times without number I said in the house that the government would have to take restrictive measures and would have either to impose embargoes or to put on tariffs, restrict dollar exchange, restrict trading in dollars and eventually devalue.

They paid no attention. They found themselves eventually squeezed and squeezed and squeezed into a corner, like a rat, and having now to take these actions belatedly. As I said when I spoke on the bill, they will have to take action, and even more stringent action, before they get out of the impasse they were in.

Mr. ABBOTT: Some people hope they will have to.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wish to mention one thing, and that is that today it was announced that the United Kingdom deficit, hard currency, in gold, amounted to £1,023 million sterling for the trading year of 1947 just past. If anyone in Canada is sanguine enough to believe that, unless we are prepared to go on a completely free economy, this country will ever in the near future be able to overcome the very serious dollar deficits, then their thinking is entirely wishful.

Therefore I move:

> That the word "emergency" be stricken from the short title, so that the bill will read, "The Exchange Conservation Act."

I believe we cannot foresee the day when we shall not have to have exchange conservation acts. And to call this an emergency, or to refer to it as an emergency—well, it is an emergency, but it is more chronic than emergent. To refer to it as an emergency, and to suggest that it will remain such, merely makes the operation of the act more unsettling than it normally will be. From that fact it upsets people who are growing vegetables and producing other embargoed goods. The very word "emergency" makes the operation of the act more hazardous, and adds greatly to the uncertainty of the situation.

We have a problem which will be with us for a long time. The very action that is taking place in the commodity markets and the stock markets of the world in the last week shows that what has happened has intensified our problem. The matter is of the utmost seriousness. It is, in very truth, an emergency; but to call it an emergency and to assume that it is of a temporary nature is, I think, unwise and unsound. The Canadian people should realize the true situation we are in. Therefore I have pleasure in moving this amendment.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Would the hon. member be good enough to tell us the last time he warned the house about what would happen? I should like to read it.

Mr. ADAMSON: On the last day of the last session I said that you have to get down to devaluation, that it would start before you came back here. France devalued, and England will devalue—she cannot help it. I also said—

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Would the hon. member—

Mr. ADAMSON: You asked me a question; let me answer it. I spoke on the budget last year and, although I have not the copy of Hansard with me, I said on July 17 that there were three courses of procedure open to the minister. He had to take them and he had better take them before he ran out of hard currency and gold. He could put embargoes on, raise tariffs right across the board, put on restrictions with regard to United States dollars and hard currency, and devalue the dollar. There are three weapons you can take to overcome the hard currency deficit. He has taken two and a half of them. I feel that the third one will be essential.

That was said last summer. And speaking during the second session I said virtually the same thing, namely, that our monthly deficit of hard currency was rising and that the nest-egg of $1,600 million would run out, I estimated some time this spring.

The true state of our position with regard to gold and United States currency was asked from the minister recently. He gave a general statement, but he did not bring out the difference between gold and hard currency, and United States dollars. We do not know how much British gold and gold from other sources was shipped in and earmarked. We have just the general overall figure of the gold and hard currency held.

I suggested a year and a half ago that we would run into the impasse we are in today. We are in it now and, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the government, we shall be in it for a long time to come. And if we are not prepared to face the facts, then the whole bill is just wishful thinking and a palliative, and we are in for a worse time than this government ever contemplated.

Mr. ABBOTT: Just a word in answer to the hon. member. I do not know how serious he is in suggesting his amendment. He admits that this is an emergency, but suggests that the use of the word "emergency" in the title suggests that it is for a short time. I do not know that I agree with him on that.

It is true that he has been an advocate of devaluation for some time, and there are a great many people in this country who would like to see the devaluation of the dollar. They would benefit by it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, they would; I know they would; make no mistake about that. There are advocates of devaluation, because, among other things, it would benefit some lines of endeavour that they would be in.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: I seldom interrupt other people. I am not questioning the fact that the hon. member for York West has advocated devaluation for a long time; but I do not agree with the assertion which is made here that devaluation is inevitable. I see very little useful purpose in putting it forward. And when he suggests or implies that the position of France is the same as that of Canada and that because France found it necessary to devalue Canada should, in my judgment he is talking nonsense. The situations are not comparable at all. France was not in a position to export because her prices were too high; the goods were too high. That is not so with Canada.

Mr. ADAMSON: If the minister can read anything in what I said where I even remotely suggested that our conditions were the same as those of France, then I suggest very seriously that he see an alienist. I was replying to a question put by the Postmaster General. He asked when I had advocated these three measures in the past. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that perhaps in a court of law he would be considered to prejudice his case when he says that I have advocated devaluation alone. I said that there were three weapons which the government could use. They have used two of them, or perhaps two and a half, but in my opinion they will have to use the third.

Whether the situation in France will have a chain reaction cannot be known, but I merely say that the thing that started to drive all currencies off the gold standard in 1931 or 1932 was the failure of a comparatively small bank in Austria, the Creditanstalt. That started the chain reaction, which led directly to the bank panic in the United States. I do not say that the devaluation of the French franc will start a chain reaction throughout the currencies of the world, but I do say that when you have currencies artificially pegged at a false parity very much higher than the price at which they are bought and sold in the open market, then you are in an extremely dangerous and unsound economic position and one out of which this country is not likely to get for a considerable period of time.

To throw out the rather nasty innuendo that devaluation would benefit some is, I think, unworthy of the minister. It is the sort of glib gibe we are too prone to expect from him lately. When he looks at the whole picture and gets a more oriented and mature view of the thing I think he will see that the forces which are at work in the world today are much greater than those which can be controlled by his government, by his advisers or by the people in Ottawa. The situation is worldwide. Unfortunately we are in it and cannot get out of it without taking continuous measures to conserve our hard currency. The fact that you call it an emergency and regard it as temporary is simply deluding the Canadian people.

Mr. QUELCH: When the hon. member for York West was speaking I could not help but think it was a pity that he had not a better appreciation of the world situation at the time we were discussing the Bretton Woods agreements. At that time he supported them, but I notice from an article of his which appeared in the New Liberty magazine he is advocating that we withdraw from the international monetary fund. It will be recalled that when we were discussing Bretton Woods we criticized the proposal to value our currency in terms of the United States dollar, having only the right to devalue it by ten per cent. We have since then seen nations of the world being forced to break away from the fund because they could not devalue their currency by more than ten per cent.

As I understand it, the purpose of this measure is to conserve United States dollars. That being the case, I should like to ask the minister why the government has considered it necessary to place prohibitions against imports from the sterling area. I am well aware that under the Geneva trade agreement we have agreed to a policy of non-discrimination, but I realize also that there is an escape clause which permits a nation with an unfavourable balance of trade to place prohibitions against imports from a nation with which it has an imbalance without placing similar restrictions or prohibitions against imports from nations with which it has a favourable balance of trade.

Surely that escape clause was meant to cover exactly the situation that we have today in Canada? We have an imbalance of trade with the United States, while we have a favourable balance of trade with the rest of the world. One of our main difficulties is to get sufficient goods for Canadians to consume without having to use United States dollars. Apparently Great Britain has certain goods which we need and which are available for export to this country. Surely the logical thing is to do everything in our power to encourage imports from the United Kingdom. I know the minister has said that the amount of business covered by this prohibition is small, nevertheless it is a certain amount of business. Why should we discourage importations from the United Kingdom when we have a favourable balance of trade with that country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have already said why, and I can say it again. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that there is any country in the world which has a greater interest in the principle of non-discrimination than Canada, both because of the volume of our external trade and because of the triangular pattern of that trade?

Mr. QUELCH: That is not satisfactory at all. In that agreement there is an escape clause to deal with the very situation which exists in Canada. We can take advantage of the escape clause without violating the principle of non-discrimination. Otherwise, why is the escape clause there?

Mr. ABBOTT: We do not want to violate it, but we do want to set an example. As I have said two or three times, the amount of business is negligible, whereas the benefits to be got from this restrictive program are tremendous.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is there anything further to be said about the business on Friday? As I understood the Prime Minister, he said that, first of all, we would go on with Bill No. 3, and then he said the minister might wish to do something different.

Mr. ABBOTT: As the Prime Minister announced, we shall proceed tomorrow with the debate on the address. Due to an engagement which I made a long time ago it will not be possible for me to be in the house on Friday. I had proposed speaking to the leaders of the parties tomorrow to see what arrangements we might make for business on that day. I shall be available tomorrow and Thursday to proceed with this bill, but I would assume that hon. members would want to continue with the previous arrangement for the debate on the address on Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. KNOWLES: Why not switch Friday for Thursday?

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be absolutely satisfactory so far as I am concerned. I would be glad to proceed with the discussion of this bill on Thursday if that met with the wishes of all parties; but perhaps we had better leave that until tomorrow and either I or the whips could discuss that question.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 11, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FAILURE OF BOILERS IN CENTRAL HEATING PLANT

Mr. SPEAKER: I consider it my duty to inform the house that this morning I received many calls from hon. members complaining of the temperature in this building. Some hon. members suggested to me that under the prevailing conditions there should be no sitting of the house this afternoon. Hon. members will realize that it is for the house itself to decide whether we should sit or not.

I communicated with those who are responsible for the heating of the building and was informed that there had been an accident in the central heating plant, but they hoped that sometime about noon or one o'clock today they would be able to send some steam into the chamber. Just before coming into the house at three o'clock I was told that unfortunately the repairs had not yet been made, and that it would be impossible to heat the building this afternoon. I thought it my duty therefore to bring the facts to the attention of the house. The temperature in this chamber is now about 64 degrees, and in some parts of the building it is only 60.

I thought that before we proceeded with the business of the house hon. members would like to know these facts so that the house might decide whether there should be a sitting this afternoon. Those who have been complaining about the temperature cannot expect any improvement this afternoon.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that it would be well if we could have our sittings in Vancouver?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Before the house comes to a hasty decision as to whether we should sit or not, I should like to make the following statement.

On account of the unduly severe weather that has prevailed during the present week it was necessary to force the capacity of the plant to the extreme limit, and under such circumstances one boiler failed. The central heating plant is composed of six boilers, all of which are connected to a central manifold, and they have been used and have met the demands imposed upon them even with the additional temporary construction that was put up during wartime. One boiler failed in a minor way at midnight on the 9th, and it was necessary to close this one down to make repairs. While these repairs were under way, the other five boilers were under additional pressure and the second boiler failed after midnight. Both repairs are not what might be considered serious. They can be corrected temporarily, and it is hoped that one boiler will be back on the line in an hour or so, and the other one will be ready by tomorrow morning.

These are circumstances over which we have little or no control as they are brought about by reason of severe weather. While the plant is overhauled between heating seasons, it is found that today the scarcity of materials makes it difficult to replace with new parts the wear and tear that has ordinarily taken place; and, in substitution, wear and tear has been replaced by welding and other processes to tide over until such time as it is possible to make adequate renewals.

At present we have working on the building the Campbell Steel and Iron Works and the staff of the public works department. The last information I received was that during the afternoon we shall have the ordinary temperature in the building.

OLEOMARGARINE

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF EMBARGO UNDER GENEVA AGREEMENTS

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of the fact that we have on the order paper a bill to amend the Dairy Industry Act with regard to oleomargarine. My question is this. Did the government in signing the Geneva trade agreements agree to remove the embargo against the importation of oleomargarine?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been giving special attention to the situation that arises with regard to oleomargarine under the agreements. I would suggest that my colleague reply.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The trade agreements signed at Geneva, Mr. Speaker, are being applied provisionally between Canada and the signatories of the protocol of provisional application which is printed at page 85 of our document, treaty series 1947, No. 27.

Under that protocol, the signatories are applying parts 1 and 3 of the general agreement on tariffs and trade and they are required to apply part 2 only to an extent not inconsistent with existing legislation.

Articles XI and XX of the general agreement are those which deal with the exclusion of prohibitions or restrictions other than duties; they are both in part 2 and there is no obligation to apply them in any way that would require now the modification of existing legislation.

The general agreement itself will not come into force in such manner as to make part 2 a requirement that any signatory modify existing legislation until the thirtieth day following the day on which instruments of acceptance have been deposited with the secretary general of the united nations on behalf of governments signatory to the Final Act, the territories of which account for 85 per centum of the total external trade of the territories of the signatories to the Final Act as provided in article XXVI, subsection 5, of the general agreement.

There are twenty-three signatories to that Final Act, and the percentage shares of total external trade to be used under article XXVI to determine when you reach the 85 per cent is stated in annex A-H, which is printed at page 76 of our publication.

It is apt to be some months yet before the requirements of article XXVI for the coming into force of the general agreement shall have been satisfied.

The signatories of the protocol of provisional application are: Australia, Belgium-Luxembourg-Netherlands, Canada, Cuba, France, United Kingdom and United States. They are extending to each other the benefits of the concessions negotiated between them respectively and some of them are even extending to each other the benefits of concessions negotiated with countries whose governments have not yet signed the protocol, but they are not bound to do so, and we ourselves have excluded from the provisional application the concessions we negotiated with Norway because Norway has not yet signed the protocol. This was done by order in council P.C. 5270 of December 23, 1947.

The question of the effect of articles XI and XX of the general trade agreement, when it does become binding on the signatories, is now being considered by the Department of Justice. Hon. members will see that the general exclusion of prohibitions or restrictions other than tariff charges or tariff duties is followed by paragraph 2 which declares that those provisions do not apply in certain cases. The effect of the exceptions on such legislation as exists in Canada that would amount to prohibitions is being considered at the present time by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BRACKEN: Perhaps the minister would permit one other question. From his answer are we to understand that at the moment we are not in the position of having agreed to remove this embargo? And further are we to understand that the minister is not in a position now to say what the final effect of the signing of these agreements is with regard to the embargo on oleomargarine? Is that a correct interpretation of what the minister had to say?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I would prefer to put it this way. An agreement has been signed which has not yet come into force. Certain portions of it are being applied under a protocol of provisional application. None of the things which are required by the protocol of provisional application makes it necessary for us to modify any of our legislation. The Department of Justice is studying the question whether, when it does come into effect, the general trade agreement would require us to modify the Dairy Industry Act which deals with oleomargarine or certain tariff provisions which exclude secondhand machinery or commodities. These questions are being studied at the present time by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BRACKEN: When the agreement does come into effect, the government is in the position that it does not know what position it is in with respect to this particular matter?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The government knows that articles XI and XX are the general rules which will apply, but there are exceptions. It is a question on which the government will have to act on its responsibility after it has received advice from the legal adviser of the government. Under the statute, it will then have to say whether or not it considers that the exceptions affect this provision of the Dairy Industry Act and the provision about the exclusion of secondhand commodities, unless there is agreement to modify these exceptions.

Just a week ago today I had an interesting conversation with our chief representative at the Havana conference, and these two articles are still being debated at Havana. They may remain as they are; they may be modified. Under the exception there is an argument that if there is a non-discriminatory prohibition affecting an agricultural product, non-discriminatory inasmuch as it applies to Canadians as well as to outsiders, it does not have to be interfered with. That is a possible construction of the exception. Whether or not it is the proper construction of the exception is now being considered by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister has been dealing with the interpretation of the provisions of this agreement. Might I ask him what was the intention of the government with respect to the embargo on oleomargarine when this agreement was signed?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I should draw to the attention of the leader of the opposition the fact that while it is the practice to ask questions before the orders of the day are called, and while it is sometimes the practice to ask additional questions, it is not the practice to start a debate on the answer given by a minister.

Mr. BRACKEN: I just wished to be clear as to what the minister was telling us in his answer to my question.

FUEL

ALLEGED SHORTAGE IN SWIFT CURRENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of a telegram received from the Swift Current fuel dealers' association, advising of a serious fuel shortage there. Will the minister say whether the federal government is doing anything to assist in settling the dispute between the miners and owners in Alberta and British Columbia?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): This particular dispute comes within the jurisdiction of the Alberta government. Recently they appointed a board of conciliation. That board has made its report, which has been placed before the parties to the dispute that is, district 18, United Mine Workers of America, and the coal operators.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT, 1938, ON SETTLER ASSISTANCE

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Was there an agreement between the dominion government and the provincial government, in 1938, concerning settler assistance on a colonization plan?
2. If so, what share of such assistance was to be paid by the dominion government?
3. Are there any amounts outstanding under the said agreement?
4. If so, when will the government pay such amounts?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. Yes. An agreement was entered into with the province of Quebec under the provisions of the Unemployment Relief and Assistance Act 1936, which provided for a contribution by the dominion to the cost of assisting selected families who would otherwise be in receipt of direct relief to settle upon the land and thereby eventually become self-supporting. This agreement was in effect until March 31, 1940.

2. One third of all expenditures incurred by the province and any organized municipality up to a total of $1,000 per family assisted. Where a family was selected from an unorganized territory of the province and placed upon the land the maximum dominion contribution was $300 per family.

3. The dominion government's commitments to the province under the agreement have been met.

4. Answered by No. 3.

IMMIGRATION CENTRES IN EUROPE

Mr. WINKLER:

1. On the European continent how many Canadian immigration centres have been established?
2. Where are they located?
3. How are these manned?
4. Are other stations under contemplation? If so, where?

Mr. GLEN:

1. Five points at which there are regular immigration officers. Nine where immigration matters are attended to by officers of the Department of External Affairs attached to Canadian missions.

2. Regular immigration officers are stationed at Paris, Brussels, The Hague and Rome.

Heidelberg, Germany, is the headquarters of the Canadian immigration mission directing the work of teams selecting and examining displaced persons in Germany and Austria. Immigration facilities are provided at the following diplomatic missions: Oslo, Norway; Copenhagen, Denmark; Stockholm, Sweden; Berne, Switzerland; Lisbon, Portugal; Athens, Greece; Prague, Czechoslovakia; Warsaw, Poland; and Moscow, U.S.S.R.

3. At Paris, two immigration officers, one doctor from the Department of National Health and Welfare, and clerical staff. At Brussels, one immigration officer, one doctor from the Department of National Health and Welfare, and clerical staff. At The Hague, three immigration officers, two medical officers from the Department of National Health and Welfare, and clerical staff. At Rome, Italy, one immigration officer, one doctor from the Department of National Health and Welfare, and clerical staff.

The Canadian immigration mission in Germany consists of the immigration officer in charge of mission with clerical staff at Heidelberg. Six immigration inspectors, six medical officers, six special security officers, three interpreters, one immigration woman officer, six selection officers, from the Department of Labour.

At other places listed above, work is performed by officials of the Department of External Affairs.

4. The need for other stations is constantly under review.

WHEAT PRODUCED AND DELIVERED TO WHEAT BOARD

Mr. ROSS (Souris):

1. (a) What were the total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in 1945? (b) What were the total bushels of wheat delivered to the Canadian wheat board for 1945 as at July 31, 1946?

2. (a) What were the total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in 1946? (b) What were the total bushels of wheat delivered to the Canadian wheat board for 1946 as at July 31, 1947?

3. (a) What were the total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in 1947? (b) What is the estimate of total bushels of wheat that will be delivered to the Canadian wheat board for 1947 as at July 31, 1948?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. (a) The total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in the crop year 1945-46 were 318,512,000; (b) Deliveries to the Canadian wheat board in that year were 237,297,178 bushels.

2. (a) The total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in the crop year 1946-47 were 413,725,000; (b) The number of bushels delivered to the Canadian wheat board in that year were 335,108,427.

[Mr. Glen.]

3. (a) The total bushels of wheat produced in Canada in the crop year 1947-48 are estimated by the third estimate of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics at 340,767,000; (b) A recent estimate indicates probable deliveries of 270,278,809 bushels of wheat to the Canadian wheat board during the current crop year.

ADVANCES UNDER EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

Mr. McMASTER:

1. What is the amount to date of the advances to the countries other than the United Kingdom under section 22 of the Export Credits Insurance Act?

2. What are the amounts advanced to each individual country?

3. Was there any agreement with the different countries as to the maintenance of the value of their currency?

4. Were the agreements as to repayment of the loans uniform with the different countries? If not, what were the variations?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1 and 2.

	Advances at January 31, 1948
Belgium	$ 67,000,000 00
China	35,288,027 97
Czechoslovakia	13,749,398 36
France	200,725,000 00
Netherlands	104,760,170 80
Netherlands Indies	11,450,000 00
Norway	19,962,000 00
U.S.S.R.	2,866,098 69
Total	$455,800,695 82

3. No. The loans are repayable in Canadian dollars or fine gold at the option of the borrowing government—the value of the fine gold to be calculated at the official Canadian buying price.

4. The basic principles applied under the agreements for the repayments of the loans are substantially the same for all countries. The average length of the term of the loans varies and the interest rate varies depending upon the length of the term of the loan.

Copies of all agreements under the Export Credits Insurance Act have been tabled in the House of Commons as appendices to the annual report required under the act.

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE OR CAUSEWAY

Mr. MacLEAN:

1. Has a report been submitted to the government in connection with the construction of a bridge or causeway across the strait of Canso?

2. What is the width of this strait at its narrowest point, and the average depth of the water?

3. What is the average yearly tonnage crossing this strait during the past ten years, also the average number of passengers carried during said period?

4. What is the yearly revenue of the Canadian National Railways in Cape Breton, and the present average yearly cost of maintaining the present railway ferry service?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. Yes.
2. (a) 2,800 feet. (b) 110 feet.
3. The Canadian National Railways advise: (a) 1,615,316 tons. (b) This information is not segregated for railway purposes and to compile it would involve much clerical labour and expense.
4. (a) Information as to the revenue of Canadian National Railways in Cape Breton is not compiled. To compile it would involve considerable time and expense. (b) Based on ten years to December 31, 1947, is $357,245.

L. RASMINSKY

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Is L. Rasminsky an employee or officer of the Bank of Canada?
2. What is his nationality?
3. What annual salary does he receive from the Bank of Canada?
4. What is the amount of the travelling or other expenses paid to him since the beginning of the war?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Yes. Mr. L. Rasminsky is executive assistant to the governors of the Bank of Canada.
2. Canadian.
3. Not of government record.
4. Not of government record except as to amounts paid by the government, which amounts totalled $281.23.

INTEREST ON NATIONAL DEBT—AMOUNTS PAID TO COMPANIES, INDIVIDUALS AND BANKS

Mr. CAOUETTE:

Of the total interest on the national debt in 1946 and 1947, what amount was paid to loan companies and individuals, and what amount was paid direct to the chartered banks of Canada?

Mr. MAYHEW: No information. As a large part of the funded debt of Canada is in bearer form, it is not possible to state what amount is held by the loan companies, individuals and the chartered banks of Canada.

MOUNT PLEASANT AIRPORT

Mr. MacNAUGHT:

1. Has Mount Pleasant airport (No. 10 B & G. school) been declared surplus?
2. If so, have any of the buildings or assets been disposed of?
3. What are the names and addresses of the purchasers and what amount was purchased by each of them?
4. What are the details of the assets remaining at this airport?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. (a) The department of reconstruction of the province of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, P.E.I. purchased 5 buildings for a total price of $6,481.72.

(b) The Department of Mines and Resources, Ottawa, Ont. purchased 8 buildings for a total price of $6,319.58.

(c) Mr. Oscar MacNeill of Conway, P.E.I. purchased one building for a price of $1,500.

4. Land: 690.14 acres.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. How many retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20 per month; (b) $20 to $29.99 per month; (c) $30 to $39.99 per month; (d) $40 to $49.99 per month; (e) $50 to $59.99 per month; (f) $60 to $69.99 per month; (g) $70 to $79.99 per month; (h) $80 to $89.99 per month; (i) $90 to $99.99 per month; (j) $100 per month or over?

2. How many veterans of world war I are included in the figures given in each bracket in question 1?

3. What is the number of retired federal civil servants presently residing in each province?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. (a) 274; (b) 512; (c) 666; (d) 771; (e) 725; (f) 709; (g) 677; (h) 756; (i) 579; (j) 2,210.

2. No information.

3. Prince Edward Island, 38; Nova Scotia, 342; New Brunswick, 139; Quebec, 1,316; Ontario, 3,566; Manitoba, 320; Saskatchewan, 176; Alberta, 317; British Columbia, 1,349.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX—REFUNDS

Mr. IRVINE:

What is the total excess profits tax which (a) has been refunded to private corporations; (b) is refundable?

Mr. WINTERS: (a) and (b). The accounting records of the taxation division are not maintained in such manner as to indicate the amount of excess profits tax refundable to private corporations, as distinct from the amount refundable to public corporations.

As of the 31st March, 1947, the liability of the government for refundable portion of excess profits tax to all corporations (whether private or public) was estimated at $250,000,000, of which amount $303 has been refunded to date.

INDUSTRY OPERATED BY COAL, ELECTRICITY AND FUEL OIL

Mr. ISNOR:

1. What proportion of industry in Canada is operated by (a) steam, produced from coal; (b) electrical energy produced by hydro; (c) fuel oil?

2. By provinces, what proportion of industry is operated by (a) steam, produced from coal; (b) electrical energy produced by hydro; (c) fuel oil?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1 and 2. The sizes of industries are not capable of measurement by any one unit but the rating of power equipment will give an approximation of the relative sizes from a power aspect.

(1) The total capacity of electric motors operated with power purchased from central electric stations has been divided here between steam engines and hydraulic turbines on basis of power generated by thermal and hydraulic equipment in central electric stations.

(2) Less than a tenth of one per cent.

(3) One hydraulic plant close to the Manitoba border is included in Manitoba where the power is used.

(4) Internal combustion engines are operated almost exclusively with gasoline and oil.

[Mr. Knowles.]

REGISTRATION OF GREYHOUND RACING STOCK

Mr. NICHOLSON:

Will the Department of Agriculture be responsible for the registration of greyhound racing stock as the department is now responsible for the registration of race horses?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The Department of Agriculture will not be responsible for the registration of greyhound racing stock any more than it is now responsible for the registration of race horses, as such. The function of the department in regard to registration consists in the examination and approval of certificates of registration duly issued by a breed association affiliated with Canadian national livestock records. Eligibility for registration is determined by the ancestry of the individual animal through several generations of breeding, not by its use for racing purposes.

INCOME TAX—CHARTERED BANKS—ALLOWANCE FOR COST OF PUBLISHING ANNUAL STATEMENTS

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. Are chartered banks allowed a deduction for income tax purposes with respect to costs incurred in advertising their annual statements?

2. Are such deductions allowed when said annual statements include political propaganda?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. Chartered banks, in common with other corporations, are permitted to deduct from gross revenue all reasonable operating expenses before arriving at net taxable income. Advertising is considered to be an operating expense.

2. See No. 1 above.

DISTILLING AND BREWING INDUSTRY—INVESTMENT IN NEW PLANT AND EQUIPMENT

Mr. NICHOLSON:

How much capital has been invested in each of the last five years in providing new plant and equipment in (a) the distilling industry; (b) the brewing industry?

Mr. McILRAITH:

OTTAWA FEDERAL BUILDINGS—EMERGENCY HOUSING

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. What buildings have the federal government made available to the city of Ottawa for emergency housing purposes?

2. Which of these buildings were sold to the city, and for what amount in each instance?

[Mr. Jean.]

3. Which are leased by the city from the federal government, and at what rental?

4. What expenditures were made in altering these shelters for family accommodation? What share of this expenditure did the federal government bear?

5. Does the federal government share with the city of Ottawa costs of administration?

6. If so, how much, and on which housing shelters?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Ex. H.M.C.S. Wallis House, 589 Rideau street.

Wolseley House, 381 Stewart street.

Ex. H.M.C.S. Hardy House, 443 Daly avenue.

Freiman House, 159 Somerset street.

Argyle barracks, buildings 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Uplands airport, buildings 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 24, 27, 35, 44, 46, 47, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55 D, E and F.

Rockcliffe airport, buildings 85, 86, 87, 88, 93, 94, 95, 99, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113 and 118.

2. None of the above mentioned buildings has been sold to the city of Ottawa.

3. The buildings listed in answer to question No. 1 above are leased to the corporation of the city of Ottawa for a nominal rental, except that in the case of Argyle barracks, the city reimburses the crown in respect to land rental paid to the owner of the land.

4. With respect to Hardy House, 443 Daly avenue and Wolseley House, 381 Stewart street, all conversion costs were borne by the corporation of the city of Ottawa and detailed information is not a matter of government record. The cost of conversion re Freiman House, 159 Somerset street and Argyle barracks, was $11,457.42 toward which the federal government contributed $7,500. The cost of converting Ex. H.M.C.S. Wallis House, 589 Rideau street, was approximately $4,000 toward which the federal government contributed $2,000. In view of the fact that the Rockcliffe and Uplands projects are located outside the municipality of Ottawa, the total cost of conversion will be borne by the federal government. The contracts for these projects are not yet completed but it is estimated that Rockcliffe will cost approximately $168,000 and Uplands $353,000.

5. No.

6. See answer to question No. 5.

SUGAR—AGREEMENT WITH SANTO DOMINGO

Mr. ISNOR:

1. Has Canada entered into an agreement with Santo Domingo to purchase sugar?

2. If so, what is the rate per hundred weight f.o.b. Montreal?

CONFERENCE ON WELFARE AND REHABILITATION OF HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. THATCHER:

1. Have any plans been made by the Department of Labour or any other federal department to call a conference for the purpose of discussing the welfare and rehabilitation of handicapped persons in Canada?
2. If so, will it be called this year?

Mr. COTE (Verdun): 1 and 2. On 26th August, 1947, committee of privy council, on my recommendation, approved order in council P.C. 2961 granting permission for the Department of Labour to hold a national conference to consider the vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons. Under the terms of this order in council the conference was to be attended by delegates nominated by private organizations working on behalf of physically handicapped, as well as representatives of the dominion and provincial governments.

The order in council set the dates for the conference in the month of October but plans could not be completed and it was necessary to defer arrangements for the conference until December. In view of the decision to call parliament into session on December 5, it was again considered necessary to postpone the conference as it was felt that many of those persons interested in vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons would not be able to devote sufficient time to the conference while parliament is in session.

In the meantime, officials of various branches of the Department of Labour are continuing to study the matter of vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EXCISE TAX ON CIGARS, CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO

1. Did Acadia Overseas Freighters Limited acquire ships from the Canadian government or War Assets Corporation?

2. If so, when and how many ships were so acquired, and of what kind and tonnage were they?

3. What were the terms of payment and the price?

4. When was the price paid?

5. What persons negotiated the sale or sales on each side?

6. Was there a public offering of the ships for sale and, if so, on what terms?

7. Were tenders invited for the purchase of the ships and, if so, on what terms?

8. Were any other offers received for the ships, or any of them, except from the Acadia Overseas Freighters Limited?

9. How did the vendor arrive at the price?

10. When was Acadia Overseas Freighters Limited incorporated, and what is its authorized and issued capital?

11. Who were its officers and directors at the time of the purchase or purchases, and who are its officers and directors now?

12. Is Harry Mathers a Canadian citizen?

13. What is the registry of these ships now? Has the registry been changed?

14. What undertaking, if any, has been given by Acadia Overseas Freighters Limited, as to (a) operation of the ships; (b) resale; (c) or otherwise?

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY—SECURITIES

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. As at September 1, 1939, what was the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada and other countries?

2. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the above noted countries as at the present time?

3. Have any Canadian Pacific securities held in the United Kingdom been acquired by the government of the United Kingdom? If so, what is the value of such securities so acquired?

4. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities returned to Canada from the United Kingdom since September 1, 1939, and what disposition has been made of any such securities returned to Canada?

5. Did the Canadian government acquire any Canadian Pacific securities following world war I?. If so, to what extent were such securities acquired, and to what extent are such securities still in the possession of the Canadian government?

6. Does the Canadian government hold any Canadian Pacific securities other than those acquired following world war I?

EXPORTS OF MILITARY SUPPLIES, AMMUNITION AND EQUIPMENT

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. What was the total value of military supplies, ammunition and equipment exported from Canada for the calendar year 1947?

2. To what countries were such military supplies, ammunition and equipment exported?

3. What was the value of such exports to each country?

CENSORSHIP OF BOOKS

Mr. KNIGHT:

1. Who is the official responsible for the censorship of books entering Canada?

2. Is his appointment on a permanent or a temporary basis?

3. Is free entry permitted for text books on school or university curricula and books ordered by a library?

4. If so, is there a similar concession for other non-fiction or reference books of a learned character imported by teachers or professors for their own use?

5. If not, has the government considered making such concession?

6. What was the approximate revenue derived by the government during the last fiscal year from the duties on books (not including magazines or periodicals)?

7. How many books were refused admission to Canada during that period?

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL—ACQUISITION OF GUARANTEED SECURITIES—INVESTMENT OF CANADIAN FUNDS FROM SALE OF U.S. DOLLARS

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario):

1. How many securities of or guaranteed by the dominion of Canada and having a maturity date longer than five years have been acquired by or on behalf of the government of Canada or any agency thereof in each of the six months prior to February 1, 1948?

2. (a) Is the total of Canadian funds received by the F.E.C.B. as the result of the sale of U.S. dollars during 1947 still in the possession of the board or has any part of such amounts been repaid to the receiver-general? (b) How has the F.E.C.B. invested any balance of such Canadian funds remaining in its hands?

NAVAL SERVICE—FUEL OIL

Mr. MOORE:

1. What was the cost per ton of fuel oil used in H.M.C. ships at the following points in 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945: Esquimalt, Halifax; St. Johns, Newfoundland; Bermuda and Londonderry, Ireland?

2. What is the cost per ton of fuel oil being used in H.M.C. ships at Canadian ports, at the present time?

NATIONAL DEFENCE (ARMY)—BRITISH COLUMBIA—UNIT PRICE OF CERTAIN FOOD ITEMS, 1939-47

Mr. MacINNIS:

What was the unit price paid by the Department of National Defence (Army) in the British Columbia region for the food items in the cost of living index as at (a) August, 1939; (b) November, 1941; (c) November, 1945; (d) December, 1947?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I ask the Prime Minister if notices of motion for the production of papers might be taken up also? They are usually taken after the questions. That was not done last week, and I wondered if the government would be prepared to go on with them today.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There is no reason why they should not be taken up hereafter, but I am not certain that we are prepared to proceed with notices of motion today. They will be taken up next Wednesday.

Mr. GRAYDON: There is quite an accumulation of them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the house proceeds with the special order, so there may be no misunderstanding about the proceedings tomorrow and the day following, I understand that last evening the question was raised as to whether or not hon. gentlemen opposite would be agreeable to having tomorrow given over to the emergency measure, and Friday to the debate on the address. I understand there is agreement to that effect. That being so I would say that tomorrow the government will continue with consideration of the measure which was discussed yesterday, and on Friday will take up the debate on the address.

Mr. BRACKEN: The understanding is that instead of proceeding as had been planned originally, tomorrow and Friday we will reverse the program.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is quite satisfactory.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. A. Dion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned I had spoken for a few minutes, at which time I was exercising my prerogative as a member to make a general survey of conditions in the maritime provinces. At the time of adjournment of the house I was pointing out that the headlines in the press across the dominion indicated that conditions in that part of the country left much to be desired. I am going to continue my observations along that line.

May I first draw the attention of the house to the Ottawa Citizen of February 10. In the course of my remarks in another debate I said that the press, in trying to follow the affairs of the house, including statements made by responsible ministers, left some confusion in the minds of the public. In this issue of the Citizen I find a statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). The dateline is Halifax, February 9, where apparently he was addressing a meeting. The headline states "Howe reveals Canada in record boom". He made that statement in the city of Halifax, and pointed out that in the preceding year between government and private investments there had been spent some $2,300 million and stated that in this year that amount would be increased by 17 per cent, bringing the total to $2,700 million.

People in the rest of Canada reading that statement of a responsible minister would naturally come to the conclusion that the prospective investment and prosperity the minister outlined was applicable to the whole of Canada. I find it strange therefore that in the same paper on the same day and under a Halifax dateline, at the time the minister was making the statement to which I have referred this further statement was made. It appears on the front page and is headed "Halifax, February 9; freight slump hits port of Halifax". It goes on to say:

> Harry Mathers, president of Acadia Overseas Freighters Limited, Canada's biggest ship firm, said tonight that because of a slump in the freight market, two of the company's 10,000-ton vessels, the Shelburne County and Inverness County will be tied up here. His announcement came after the blackest weekend in twenty years in this port's history. Not a sling moved in or out of any hold of the few ships berthed along the waterfront.

As I was pointing out when I adjourned the debate a few days ago, the government has classified the maritime provinces as a depressed area. While the minister's statement may be applicable to everything west of Montreal, it certainly is not applicable to anything east of Montreal. I point that out, because if the people of Canada are to be properly informed, and if they are to have any respect for statements made in the press by responsible people, particularly by members of the government, and even by private members, then there must be some accuracy in statements which are put out. What I have read certainly indicates that the port of Halifax is not going to share in and is not sharing in the prosperity or future investment in the present year to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred when speaking in Halifax.

I hold in my hand another clipping—and perhaps I should say I was doing a little job on the press in the last couple of days. This is from the Halifax Chronicle, and the caption in very large letters says "Works plan brightens Halifax labour outlook". This dispatch is dated at Ottawa, February 6, and was given to the Associated Press. The press statement released by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) reads:

> "The national harbours board has plans for a capital and maintenance program on the Halifax waterfront which will mean the expenditure of more than $3,800,000 and possibly as much as $4,700,000." Gordon Isnor, Liberal, Halifax, said tonight in an interview.

Of course he goes on to say that this future development may not get under way until some time in the fall. It is still a guess. What I am getting at is this, that a statement of that kind appearing in the press in this part of the country leads the general public and hon. members of the house who come from other parts of Canada to believe that things are fine down in the maritimes, when in fact the reverse is true. While the hon. member for Halifax may have some inside information that that money is to be spent some time next fall or some time in the future, nevertheless there is a critical situation in Halifax at the present time and throughout Nova Scotia.

Mr. ISNOR: Was that a correct statement?

Mr. GILLIS: I do not know; but I know this—

Mr. ISNOR: Do you question the accuracy of it?

Mr. GILLIS: I do not know anything about it. But if it is on a par with the statement issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then it leaves a question in my mind whether it will relieve the situation which I know exists down there.

Mr. ISNOR: You know nothing whatever about it.

Mr. GILLIS: And I do not think you know much about it, either.

I have in my hand a further clipping with respect to the longshoremen's union, which presides over the wages and destiny of men employed on the waterfront. In fact in the final analysis they keep that city going; they are the wage earners. They say: "Worst in twenty years; nothing being done; no immediate solution."

I have another clipping from Halifax, dated February 6, headed "Unemployed now need assistance," and stating that Halifax has 4,500 jobless who may ask their provincial and civic governments that unemployment relief be instituted immediately. That statement is issued by the director of the workers' federation at that point. I have read press dispatches emanating from Halifax and I do not believe any good purpose is served for the people in that part of the country if the rest of the people of Canada are asked to believe that things are fine down there, and that there is nothing wrong. I know they are not fine. They leave much to be desired. Something has to be done in that part of the country, and done very soon, if those people are to continue to support our present institutions. They are getting anything but a square deal from us.

The point I am making is that the unemployment situation prevailing in that part of Canada today is not new. The fact of the matter is it was anticipated in 1942. The senior member for Halifax was a member of the reconstruction committee.

Mr. MARTIN: A good member.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not saying anything about that; I leave that for you to say. All members are good; they do the best they can, with whatever little ability God gave them—and some have not much. I said it was anticipated by that committee, and that the committee was a good one. It was a fact-finding committee like the one on prices. It will go out with a miner's rod looking for profiteers. That committee was a good one and I enjoyed working on it. I think it really did a job because it dug out a lot of facts and served many industries. The committee came back to this house and made a report. It had the power to recommend, something the present prices committee has not got; it is set up merely to gather something which will collect dust in the archives.

The Journals of the House of Commons, 1943-44, contain the recommendations of that committee on the subject I am talking about now. I want to put those recommendations on the record, in order to show that the unemployment situation now prevailing in the maritimes was anticipated by the government and acted upon by that reconstruction committee. I should like to quote from the recommendations of the committee with respect to the maritimes, to be found on page 723 as follows:

> This inquiry should include the extent, if any, to which the maritimes have suffered because of lack of proper distribution of secondary industry in Canada, and also the possibility of securing extended markets—both Canadian and international—for all maritime production.

They were recommending an inquiry into the whole situation which prevailed in that end of the country. The report continues:

> We are convinced that after the war—if pre-war conditions are permitted to prevail—the Nova Scotia coal industry will not be able to exist without assistance in the marketing of the output of the mines. The coal industry situation would, therefore, be an important part of the proposed survey.
> After the war, transportation will play an even more important part than previously in economic development.
> Therefore in dealing with conditions in the maritime provinces, we strongly urge that the government give earnest consideration to certain proposed improvements in transportation facilities. These include:
> (a) Improvements designed to make communications between Prince Edward Island and the mainland constant, reliable and adequate.
> (b) Improvement of transportation across the strait of Canso by the construction of a causeway, or in such manner as may be judged most satisfactory, considering the amount of traffic and the conditions of ice, tides and current.
> (c) Regrading, realigning and double-tracking of the Canadian National railway from Sydney to points in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I was in on all the discussions leading up to that recommendation. It was estimated that if the government undertook that particular project it would give employment to 7,000 people for at least four years. Had that one recommendation in connection with Nova Scotia been carried out by the government we would not be reading the headlines about unemployment that we are seeing today in the press all across the country. It would have settled the problem of employment for at least four years.

In the meantime the governments, provincial and federal, have had an opportunity to carry on a survey of secondary industries as was recommended by that reconstruction committee. Absolutely nothing has been done about this except that the Minister of Transport has done some boring and he knows how deep the water is. I am glad he is to follow me, because then I will have an official answer to the questions I am asking. That government-dominated committee recommended unanimously what should be done, but it has not been done. I should like to give hon. members a little more information.

I have talked about this to some hon. members from Ontario. They have said to me, "Well, $20,000,000 or $26,000,000 is a lot of money to spend to build a bridge from the island of Cape Breton to the mainland of Nova Scotia." I was talking to one fellow about this problem of unemployment and when I reached the strait of Canso and started across he said, "Wait a minute; you are not in Canada." I said, "No? Where am I?" He said, "You are on the way to Newfoundland." I showed him the map and was able to convince him that we are still part of Canada. It is not a wilderness down there. Perhaps I had better give the house the opinion of the board of trade, because if I said this hon. members might not believe me; they might think it was just propaganda.

An hon. MEMBER: Why should we believe the board of trade?

Mr. GILLIS: They are nice fellows and they are non-political. They give a description of the island and state that it is the most important industrial centre east of Montreal. This report continues:

> Cape Breton is an island forming the northeast part of Nova Scotia, jutting out into the Atlantic and separated from the rest of Canada by the narrow strait of Canso. With a land area of 3,120 square miles and a population of 200,000 (1945 estimate), it is the most concentrated industrial area east of Montreal. The key industries are coal, steel, tourism, lumber, fishing and farming. It is significant that one-third of Canada's coal output and one-quarter of its pig iron comes from Cape Breton. Being closest geographically to Newfoundland and the continent, its fine harbours handle large amounts of exports and imports through the Sydneys and Louisburg.

There are some people living there and this island means something economically to the rest of Canada. I have here an editorial from the Sydney Post-Record, which is not a C.C.F. paper. I am sure my hon. friends from Cape Breton will agree with me when I say that. I think myself the engineering branch of the Department of Transport should get down to brass tacks and make a better guess, and I say "guess" advisedly. The first survey for this bridge was made in 1906 by Waddell Hardestry Company of New York, a well known engineering firm. The report they made at that time was made available to the reconstruction committee. According to them it was a feasible project. Of course their estimate of that time would have to be revised considerably, but even so it would not be in accordance with the figures the department are giving out at the present time. This editorial reads:

> Mr. MacLachlan said a causeway would cost between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000, a steel and concrete bridge between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. In a subsequent report to the government, which was tabled in the house last spring, Mr. MacLachlan's estimates were briskly stepped up to $32,000,000 for the causeway and $54,000,000 for the bridge. Obviously Mr. MacLachlan has been doing more guessing than figuring, and he seems capable at any time of producing the kind of estimates he thinks his principals or his audiences, as the case may be, would like him to produce. In the circumstances, an independent inquiry is what the needs of the case clearly indicate.

That is merely a press dispatch, but I have here a return which was tabled by the minister on April 23, 1947. It was stated at that time that a causeway would cost $17,797,000 and a bridge, $26,275,000. All kinds of figures have been thrown around. I have another report to which I should like to make reference, because I consider this man is qualified to talk on the subject. The caption is "Bridge over the strait of Canso." I do not know whether the minister has read this article.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have read it.

Mr. GILLIS: Then there is no need for me to read it again. The minister agrees with it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have not said that.

Mr. GILLIS: The article is by Charles P. Disney, consulting engineer, Toronto, and retired engineer of bridges, Canadian National Railways. I am sure they would not employ anybody who was featherheaded or incompetent. This gentleman says on page 4:

> Chief of these is the fact that the bridge would eliminate the very costly ferries and terminals that now provide the only means of access to and egress from the island, particularly the train ferries of the Canadian National Railways which involve in the neighbourhood of a million-dollars-a-year maintenance charge for the ferries and the slips and terminal facilities on either side. The saving through the abolition of two complete terminals with their railroad maintenance and operating equipment and personnel, plus the elimination of the necessity of rebuilding or replacing the present worn-out and obsolete ferries at a cost of millions of dollars, would go a long way towards paying the cost of the bridge.

I was rather disturbed when it was brought to my attention that the government were building another ferry for use at that point at a cost of $5,000,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Surely not anything like that.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman was in the house when the statement was made.

Mr. GILLIS: No, I was not.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My recollection is that he was.

Mr. GILLIS: My recollection is seeing the statement first in the press that it would cost $5,000,000 and maintenance charges of $1,000,000 a year. If a bridge were built it would pay for itself in a few years. Ferries are an obsolete means of transportation, no matter what kind of ferry it may be, and you will have exactly the same kind of bottleneck you have now. It will not improve conditions at all. I cannot understand the thinking of people who recommend that kind of thing when the construction of a bridge is the modern thing and would lead to the expansion of industry at both ends. One of the main reasons why there is not more secondary industry in that part of the country is the lack of transportation facilities. A bridge would encourage the development of industry and be in keeping with modern life. I would rather walk than take that old train that sputters along over an old roadbed and takes fifteen hours to go from Halifax to Cape Breton. But it does not look as if the government has any intention of building a bridge, having made this large expenditure of $5,000,000 in perpetuating an obsolete means of transportation by ferry.

This man Disney makes a very sensible report. He points out that he has had objections from people in Ontario and Quebec that the government of Canada should not be expected to make such a large expenditure in that part of the country, a charge on all the taxpayers of the country. But Mr. Disney points out that this is no local project; it is a national project.

Mr. GRAYDON: It has support from Ontario too.

Mr. GILLIS: Definitely, and I am glad to hear that from the hon. member for Peel. A large part of the personnel that would be employed in the construction of a bridge at that point would come from this part of the country, and a large part of the materials used. Most of the steel would be rolled here and shipped down there. It would mean something for practically every part of this country, and the project should therefore not be considered a merely local one. Mr. Disney comments on that in his report and I merely mention it now to dispose of that parochial angle. It is not something which the people in that part of the country are just hollering for. We are entitled to it. If there was such a bottleneck in Ontario or Quebec it would be cured and cured very quickly without any quibbling, but this Canso question has been a matter of controversy and investigation since 1906 and the controversy is still going on. However the Minister of Transport is both aggressive and progressive, and I am in hopes that the controversy will not last much longer.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. GILLIS: He must be going to do something about it.

Mr. Disney also points out that there is a certain kind of pier being put down now—I shall not go into the technical details because the minister knows the kind of pier I mean—which could be used there. Already a bridge has been built in the province of Quebec, across deep water, with a greater span, where there is just as much tide as there is in the strait of Canso, and that bridge is standing up.

Mr. MacNICOL: And there is another one at St. Catharines, Ontario.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, and one in Quebec province too. I understand that they offered to build a sample pier in the centre of the channel and let it remain there to demonstrate that that type of pier will stand up against the tides and ice, which are the conditions on which the department base their objections to the building of a bridge. I would suggest that the minister read the whole report, because I cannot accept the departmental estimate that it would cost $54,000,000 to construct a bridge across the strait of Canso. I am inclined to accept Mr. Disney's estimate of $20,000,000 more or less. I think that is nearer the mark, although it may be a little low, but I shall not comment further on that.

I would point out to the minister that another investigation is being carried on. Boring has been going on since 1945 and all that part of the work is now done. The examination of costs is not yet completed. A board of engineers has been selected in consultation between the Premier of Nova Scotia and the federal government. I presume that negotiations were carried on through the Minister of Transport; and that board is going to make a survey of transportation facilities.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does my hon. friend object to the establishment of that board?

Mr. GILLIS: I am going to object to it in a moment. The establishment of transportation facilities—what does that mean? It means, is the old ferry good, bad or indifferent? That is the proposed investigation, and you do not have to investigate that. You need only ask me. I have often gone over in the ferry, as I think the minister has himself, and it is about the worst transportation on the North American continent. Now that you have the provincial government co-operating —I think the gesture of the federal government was a very anaemic one—the board of engineers should determine the feasibility of that causeway or bridge and what the cost would be.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is exactly what they are going to do.

Mr. GILLIS: Is it? The press dispatch said that the board would examine transportation facilities, and I visualized their looking over the old ferry to see whether it went fast or slow.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Often press reports are away out of line.

Mr. GILLIS: That is right. I am glad that the minister has clarified that point and says that the board are going to determine the feasibility of the project, the cost and so forth.

My objection to that board of engineers is this. The three men appointed are from Quebec and Ontario. They are Professor D. S. Ellis, dean of engineering at Queen's university, Kingston; Doctor Arthur Surveyer, and Doctor P. L. Pratley, both Montreal consulting engineers.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Are you objecting to the board of engineers?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes. I am still objecting and I am objecting for this reason. I do not think the minister had to go outside the house. He has an engineer sitting behind him. He has the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Revenue, the member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters), and there are several others in this house who are qualified to go there and do that kind of job.

Mr. GRAYDON: Why don't you and the minister go down yourselves?

Mr. GILLIS: He has engineers in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What about the member for Davenport?

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. GILLIS: I am not being political about this. I do not want any opposition member to go. My conception of engineers is that they are practical fellows who are loyal to their profession and they do not like to let the profession down in such matters. I would be satisfied with the member for Queens-Lunenburg. He has a great deal of ability in that field. But someone definitely interested, someone living in that part of the country, should have been included as a member of the board. Professors who are teaching in universities are secure in a world of books, and with all due respect to their profession I think that someone in the sticks who is living outside and is doing that kind of work should be on the board.

I am not going to exceed my time. I merely want to conclude by saying this. There was a time when the maritime provinces were quite in the minority and would be outvoted no matter whether they co-operated one hundred per cent or not. At the present time, if the maritime province members banded together in the interests of that part of the country they could force any vote they wanted to through this house. The present government has twelve of a majority. There are twenty-six maritime members here, and if we got together on that causeway and said, "No vote for your committee unless you make the commitment that you will give us that causeway"—

An hon. MEMBER: A threat of blackmail.

Mr. GILLIS: The whole system under which you live is blackmail. That is merely exercising your legitimate prerogative to get something done for the part of the country you represent, and I say that we could force the implementation of the report of a committee on which the government had a majority. If we got together and forced the implementation of that report, it would create employment and link up that part of the country with the rest of Canada. It would give that part of the country a half decent break, and that would be only doing our duty to the people we represent. British Columbia, I am sure, would do it. When it is a question of apples or lumber, of Japanese or fisheries, you generally find the British Columbia members, whether Liberals, Tories or C.C.F'ers, fairly well united on the subject.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Not on the Japanese.

Mr. GILLIS: I am suggesting to the members from the maritime provinces that on this particular subject we should try to get together to get something done. We should have secondary industries there. We should have that causeway, and there are several other things we should have.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Halifax recently he gave a press interview. He was asked whether it was not possible for the members from the maritime provinces to get together and force something along the lines I have suggested. The minister's answer was, "What are they asking for that they are not getting done?" The implication there is that we are not asking for anything, because we are not getting anything done. I think we should accept that challenge, and any time the senior member for Halifax is ready to call a caucus on maritime projects, for the purpose of getting together and forcing some recognition of that part of the country, he can give me a buzz and I shall be glad to join him.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): If I rise to take part in the debate it is not so much to reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) as it is to deal with two matters which concern the Canadian National Railways and the pension fund of the railways. Before embarking on these two matters, however, I think it is in order that I should say a word or two in reply to some of the statements that have been made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

In concluding his remarks the hon. gentleman said that the members from the maritimes evidently had not asked for very much since they had received very little. Apparently my hon. friend's memory is quite short. He must have forgotten that within a very short period of time the government had spent, from 1936 until 1946, no less than $18,000,000 in the maritime provinces, and at the moment they have a program concerning the harbours of Saint John and Halifax which will cost no less than $8,000,00. So that when the hon. gentleman said they had asked for nothing and had received nothing—

Mr. GILLIS: Not yet.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —he was unquestionably wrong.

Mr. GILLIS: Merely promises.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), in a statement he made the other day, referred to some of the expenditure that was about to be made in the port of Halifax, and he was correct in the statement he made. I have not seen it, but I have heard it quoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

I can tell the hon. gentleman that in the main estimates for the present fiscal year there is provided for the port of Halifax the construction of a transit shed, and there is further provision for the construction of a pier which will cost in the neighbourhood of three or four million dollars.

What my hon. friend means by saying that nothing is being done I do not know. All I can say is that when the amount that has been placed in the estimate has been voted and when the contract has been awarded there is nothing more that can be done so far as the department is concerned. It is then up to the contractor to complete the job. As regards the $8,000,000 mentioned a moment ago, contracts have not yet been awarded for this amount, but contracts have been awarded, I think, in one or two cases, and I recollect that at least one of the contracts is now under way.

Mr. GRAYDON: Have you that harbour down there under local control yet?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can deal with that matter very quickly by telling the hon. gentleman that when his leader was down there he advocated local control, and he advocated local control during the by-election.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think your candidates did too.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If by local control he meant a return to the conditions which existed prior to the passing of the National Harbours Board Act, then I am sure that is not the kind of thing that this parliament ever intended.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is what your candidates asked for anyway.

Mr. CHEVRIER: In any event, I should like to return to some of the suggestions that have been made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and I do not wish to deal at any length with them, because I should like to spend the greater part of my time dealing with matters which concern the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. HAZEN: The minister said that $18,000,000 had been spent between 1936 and 1946—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. HAZEN: —on the harbours, I understood him to say, in the maritime provinces. Was that amount not spent by the national harbours board on all national harbours in the dominion?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. These sums were spent in the two ports of Saint John and Halifax, and for harbour facilities in the maritime provinces, such as terminal facilities and so on at Tormentine, Borden and the like. It had to do with the maritime area only, not exclusively the national harbours board.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to transportation facilities at Canso, and that is a matter which has attracted the attention of this house for some years. He complained of the fact that the estimates are not similar, that they vary, and so on. The estimates were given to the house prior to the adjournment in 1947, in a statement prepared by myself. The only difference between the return which my hon. friend refers to and the estimates then given is the increase in the cost of construction over the years.

Mr. GILLIS: Twenty-seven million is a big increase.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is not $27,000,000, because the cost of the causeway was fixed at $32,000,000, roughly, and that of the bridge at $54,000,000. Those figures were arrived at after consideration of the increased cost of construction and the increased cost of material, and they were added to the amounts which were tabled in the house.

Mr. GILLIS: May I make a correction?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Just let me continue.

Mr. GILLIS: But the minister is wrong in his figures.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That was the information which was given to the house. Those are the figures which the engineers arrived at after adding on the increased cost of construction.

Mr. GILLIS: The return which was tabled in the house early in 1947 stated that the bridge would cost $26,000,000. In a few months why should it jump from $26,000,000 to $54,000,000? The increase in the cost of materials was not that much.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not know what return my hon. friend refers to other than the one I have in mind in 1946.

Mr. GILLIS: I have sent upstairs for it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If it is the 1946 one, there can be no doubt that the difference is for the increased cost of construction.

Mr. GILLIS: From $26,000,000 to $54,000,000 in two years?

Mr. CHEVRIER: In any event, my hon. friend complains about the fact that there is a great deal of investigation going on. He says that something should be done about it, but the moment we set up a board of engineers to review the transportation facilities, he objects. That is exactly the tenor of his remarks this afternoon. The board of engineers has been set up for the purpose of reviewing the engineer's reports of the Department of Transport and the estimates therein. Those are the estimates to which my hon. friend objects. Those are the estimates of which he complains. He says they are not correct and he quotes Mr. Disney, the engineer, and so on. I have no objection to that. If that is so, let the board of engineers review the position and ascertain whether the bridge is feasible, whether the causeway is feasible, whether the terminal facilities should be improved or even whether a tunnel should be constructed. I do not want to take up any more of the time of the house on this matter.

Mr. GILLIS: I objected to the personnel. I said that at least one engineer from the maritimes should have been on that board.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I told the hon. member, when he was speaking, that one of the engineers was appointed at the request and suggestion of the province of Nova Scotia; and I should have thought that with the two other engineers, Doctor Surveyer and Doctor Ellis, the board was an exceptionally competent one. So far as I am concerned, I do not care where the engineers come from.

Mr. GILLIS: I do.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The important thing is whether they are competent and qualified men, and whether they will do a good job. I do not think there is any doubt that in this case they will. I do not want to spend any more time upon the transportation facilities at Canso, but with the permission of the house I should like to deal with two matters that were discussed by opposition members during the course of this debate last week.

The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) made the charge that the basic pension of the Canadian National Railways was too low and should be revised; and he invited me to take part in this debate. At the same time he asked the government to reconsider the revision upward of this pension. The hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) dealt with a matter affecting freight rates and complained bitterly about the fact that the traditional policy of the Canadian government had been violated when an export rate reduction had been made from Kingston east to Portland, Maine. I should like to deal with those two matters.

The hon. member for Lake Centre referred to the Canadian National Railways' pension fund, and he quoted rule 12 which I, too, should like to put on Hansard. Rule 12 reads as follows:

> Every employee who joins the service of the company hereafter before attaining the age of 45 years shall, if he remains continuously in the company's service to age 65, be entitled to receive upon his retirement a basic pension of $300 per annum, which amount shall be provided at the sole expense of the company.

This rule entitles the employee upon retirement to a minimum pension of $25 a month, which is paid at the sole expense of the company. No contribution is required as in most pension plans. This is the first or basic plan of the Canadian National Railways, and in effect it is in recognition of the ten years of service by the employees of the company. But this is only part of the story. The hon. member for Lake Centre did not put on the record rule 22, which should be read in conjunction with rule 12. I should like to place on Hansard rule 22, which reads as follows:

> Upon retirement each employee shall receive such basic pension or service pension as he may be entitled to under this pension fund. He will, in addition, receive such supplemental annuity as may be purchasable from the company by the amount of his contributions added to the contributions credited by the company together with accrued interest compounded thereon.

If an employee exercises his right to contribute to the fund after completion of ten years' service, which contribution may be from one to ten per cent of his salary, the company will contribute a like amount up to five per cent. These contributions by the employee and the company with compound interest to date of the employee's retirement will result in a considerable supplemental annuity, and the total amount of the pension together with the basic pension paid at the sole expense of the company will be a substantial amount added to his salary.

Let me take an example of this. Let us assume that an employee at age twenty-five begins to work for the Canadian National Railways and has a continuing period of employment of forty years. Let us assume that during that forty years' time he receives $100 a month. He may contribute from one to ten per cent of his salary. Let us assume that his contribution is five per cent of his salary. That five per cent is matched by the railway; and that means in effect that he will be receiving a monthly straight life pension which will be in excess of $75 a month. There are, of course, some employees who are in the low brackets and who may not be able to contribute one to five per cent or who may not be able to contribute anything at all. However, the pension plan is drawn up in such a way that they may contribute; they have an opportunity to do so, and the failure of an employee to take advantage of the privilege to contribute cannot be charged against the Canadian National Railways. The total contracts issued under this plan number 11,617, of which 9,595 are still in force. Most pension plans provide for contributions by the employees, including employees in the low-wage brackets. In the case of the Canadian National Railways plan, this is purely voluntary; therefore the Canadian National minimum cannot be judged without consideration to the other features of the plan. I should like to put on record one paragraph of a letter I wrote to the hon. member for Lake Centre, to which he referred in the debate, under date of November 4, 1947. I said:

> In the administration of the fund, the rules must, of course, be applied alike to every employee and cannot be variously interpreted. To depart from this principle would lead to endless trouble and certainly we would be charged with discrimination. We know of no injustices and employees are free to take up their cases with the superintendent of pensions through their labour representatives or through their superior officers even as far as the president, if they feel that they have not been fairly dealt with in the matter of pensions. A very large number of our employees belong to labour organizations and the officers of the brotherhoods are not backward in presenting cases to us where they think any merit exists.

Before leaving the subject of pensions, I should like to refer to a statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) on January 3 of this year, in which he set out in detail why the government could not give consideration to revising upward the annuities of superannuated civil servants. At that time he said the government did not think it fair and proper to grant its own superannuated civil servants an increase in their allowances, and he gave the reasons therefor. In reply to the invitation given by the hon. member for Lake Centre to the government to revise upward the basic pension of the Canadian National Railways, all I can say is that, in view of the attitude taken by the government with respect to its own superannuated civil servants, I would not feel disposed to advise the government to interfere in the pension plan of the Canadian National Railways, or to ask the government to tell the officers of the Canadian National Railways that they should revise the basic pension upward.

Mr. KNOWLES: Perhaps, before the minister leaves that question, he will say whether he has any figures as to the number of retired

Canadian National employees who receive only the basic pension, and how many receive an additional pension as well.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I believe the number of employees receiving the basic pension is something in the neighbourhood of nine hundred. I say that from memory, subject to correction.

Mr. KNOWLES: Those figures would be available if we asked for them in the proper way.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Certainly. I have seen them, but I am giving them now from memory, and if I am wrong I hope the house will forgive me. I shall be glad to get them for my hon. friend.

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall put the question on the order paper.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The second and, I think, more important matter with which I should like to deal was brought up by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen), who complained bitterly that the export rate on eight or ten commodities to the port of Portland, Maine, had been reduced. He charged that the traditional and historic policy of the government and of Canada, to encourage trade and traffic through its own Canadian ports, had been violated. The hon. gentleman based his whole argument upon a false premise and upon facts which at times were inaccurate. His charges against the officers of the Canadian National Railways were wholly and entirely unwarranted.

My first words, Mr. Speaker, will be to assure the house that I, as Minister of Transport, and the government of Canada did not depart one iota from the traditional policy of encouraging traffic through Canadian ports. In fact I expect to be able to establish that positive action to encourage the use of our ports and to assist in the betterment of the facilities of those ports has been and will continue to be taken. The hon. member based his remarks upon two things that had occurred. The first was the action of the Canadian National Railways in equalizing the rates to Portland on eight or ten commodities, and the consequent withdrawal or shifting of the sailings of the Moore-McCormack Lines, a United States concern, from the ports of Saint John and Halifax to the port of Portland. The second was the routing of a million bushels of rye by the French supply council through Portland instead of through a Canadian port. The hon. member dwelt at great length on the traditional policy of Canada, and quoted statements made from time to time by public men, former premiers of New Brunswick and former prime ministers of the dominion. As far as those statements are concerned, I find myself in entire agreement with my hon. friend; but from that point on we must part company. I want to refer to the Canadian Northern Railway Act of 1911, and I should like to quote section 13. I refer to that act particularly, because it contains in essence what parliament intended the policy of Canada and of the railways should be:

> The company must agree (1) that all freight originating on its lines, not specifically routed otherwise, shall when destined for points in Canada be carried over the railways within Canada; (2) that the through rates on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports; (3) that all such traffic not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper shall be carried to Canadian ports; and (4) that the companies shall not in any matter within their powers directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall in all respects, in good faith, use their utmost endeavours to fulfil its conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

My contention is that nothing done by the Canadian government or nothing done by the Canadian National Railways in any way violated the traditional policy as laid down in that and other statute law in this parliament.

Since the hon. member claims that this policy has been violated, it becomes necessary for me to bring to the house the facts which arose in connection with this incident. What are the facts? They are as follows: Since 1905 the export rate on all commodities moving east of Kingston through the three ports of Halifax, Saint John and Portland have been on a parity, with but one exception, namely, that Saint John had an advantage of one cent per 100 pounds over the port of Halifax until 1923, when the Canadian National Railways system was set up and established; and it was the Canadian National Railways which did away with the one cent per 100 pounds preference in favour of Saint John.

From that time on, until 1938, the three ports remained on a parity. In 1938 the interstate commerce commission of the United States granted a ten per cent increase on export rates to the port of Portland. In the same year, or shortly after the United States application, a similar application was made to the board of transport commissioners for Canada, asking for a similar increase; and the board of transport commissioners did grant a similar increase of ten per cent and again placed the three ports on a parity.

Because of representations made by various interests to the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National Railways decided to forgo the ten per cent, not on all the commodities, but on eight or ten only. The remaining rates, which were by far the majority, remained on a parity among the three ports. In November, 1947, the Canadian National Railways equalized the rates to Portland on the remaining eight or ten commodities. In doing this, the traditional policy of the Canadian government, as well as the obligation placed upon the railways of this country, and as laid down in various statute laws, was not in any way violated. No discrimination was exercised against any Canadian port. The only thing that was done was to equalize rates with reference to the three ports, a condition that had existed over many years.

I should now like to deal with the reasons why the rates were equalized by the Canadian National Railways to Portland; and in order to do this I should like to refer to the letter written by Moore-McCormack Lines Incorporated to the Canadian National Railways and to quote two paragraphs therefrom.

First let me remind the house that a shipowner is of course entirely free to arrange his sailings according to what he considers his best interests; and it is not uncommon that shiftings take place from time to time. The letter I have in my hand states that at least one of the reasons why the shifting from the maritime ports to Portland took place was because of undue time taken at the berth in the winter season of 1946-47 waiting for and loading cargoes.

During that season, as the house knows, not only were the railways of this country hard pressed to bring equipment to the maritime provinces, and in fact, to all parts of Canada, but the weather was such that delays in shipping took place from time to time. Those were conditions over which the railways, and certainly over which the national harbours board had no control.

In September of last year the national harbours board held a conference at Montreal of all interested organizations to review the operations of the previous season at the maritime ports, and to secure co-operative effort for the present season. Committees were established; and I am glad to say at this time, from the information I have received from these ports, that conditions have been materially bettered. In fact our terminals at Saint John and Halifax handled substantially more traffic in December last than in the same month of the previous year.

Mr. ISNOR: Would the minister be good enough to give us the date and place of the letter from Moore-McCormack?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was coming to that. The letter from Moore-McCormack Lines is dated at New York, December 9, 1947. It is addressed to F. J. Stock, traffic manager, foreign freight department, Canadian National Railways, Board of Trade building, Montreal. Let me again remind the house that this is a United States shipping company. I do not wish to read the letter in full, because it is too lengthy. However, I shall quote from it.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there not a rule that if a letter is produced it must be read?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have no objection to producing it.

Mr. HAZEN: I ask that it be read.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have no objection to producing the letter and reading it to the house. My only reason for not reading the whole of it is that it would take several minutes, and I had intended quoting only two paragraphs.

Mr. HAZEN: I produced several letters and read them into the record, because I thought it would be fair to do that. I would ask that the minister read the whole of the letter into the record, if he would be so good.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have no objection at all. The letter is as follows:

December 9, 1947.

Mr. F. J. Stock,
Traffic Manager—Foreign Freight Department,
Canadian National Railways,
Board of Trade Building,
Montreal, Canada.

My dear Mr. Stock,

We beg to confirm our conversation that was held in this office in April of this year, when we complained to you bitterly in consequence of the extremely poor service that had been rendered to our vessels at the winter ports of St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., in the winter of 1946-1947.

At that time we discussed the progress of our Canadian service to the east coast of South America and the plans that we were laying for the future in injecting our fast combination passenger and freight and reefer vessels, when we advised that it would be impossible to do this until better arrangements could be made as to winter service.

We advised you specifically that our first vessel which loaded at Saint John—the Pontus H. Ross—actually arrived at 12.32 p.m. on December 15 and she was delayed in getting a berth and did not start loading until 9.30 a.m. on December 18. She was delayed very greatly in not being able to get her cargo in consequence of the congestion of harbour facilities, with the result that she did not sail until January 18, 1947, having been in the harbour thirty-four days and loaded with some 5,488 tons of cargo.

In consequence of this unfortunate operation, we conferred with our agents, Montreal Shipping Company, who recommended that our next vessel be berthed at Halifax, N.S. Accordingly, the Berkeley Victory arrived in Halifax on January 19, and did not commence loading until January 22. She sailed February 2—fourteen days in harbour—and loaded 4,941 tons, all of which by comparison with operations at other ports was still extremely bad.

Our next vessel was the Vernon S. Hood. She arrived at Halifax on March 4, and did not dock until March 7. Our experience with this ship was the same as with the other ships, and it was not until March 14 she sailed, and then with a part cargo only, i.e., 3,596 tons, after she had remained in port ten days.

In consequence of these very bad performances, we decided to cancel our April vessel and resume service from Montreal in June. In our conversation with you in April of this year, notwithstanding your urgent request that we give the ports of Halifax and Saint John a further trial, we had to regretfully advise you that we could not see how we could resume service at these ports during the winter of 1947-48. Before making this decision final, we conferred with the Montreal Shipping Company, who advised that they did not see very much hope for improvement.

With this before us, we appealed to you to make some adjustment in the rates so that the port of Portland, Me., could be used as an overflow port until such time as the operations at the ports of Halifax and Saint John were improved so as to provide efficient and economical operation of ships at these ports.

I now understand that you have so arranged to equalize the rates to Portland, Me., as against the other ports, and I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your kind co-operation, this from both ourselves and our shippers, who otherwise would have been forced to route their cargoes from Canadian points of shipment via Boston or New York.

Yours faithfully,
Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc.

Where in that letter is there any indication of inducement on the part of the Canadian National Railways to withdraw trade from Canada to the port of Portland? On the contrary, the letter clearly states:

. . . notwithstanding your urgent request that we give the ports of Halifax and Saint John a further trial, we had to regretfully advise you that we could not see how we could resume service at these ports.

And then there is this part in the last paragraph:

I now understand that you have so arranged to equalize the rates to Portland, Maine, as against the other ports, and I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your kind co-operation, this from both ourselves and our shippers who otherwise would have been forced to route their cargoes from Canadian points of shipment via Boston or New York.

The point is that if the railways had done what the hon. member for St. John-Albert suggested they should do, then Canada would have lost the whole trade and would not have had even the freight revenue consequent upon the carrying of the commodities to Portland.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

I come now to the matter of the equalization of the rate to Portland. It should be clearly understood that the railway freight adjustment was not a matter of setting up discriminatory rates but of restoring equality. What must never be forgotten is that the Canadian railways are compelled to haul traffic to eastern ports at relatively low ton-mile revenue because of the longer mileages involved. For instance, here are the mileages from Montreal:

To Halifax	840 miles
To Saint John	482 miles
To Portland	295 miles
To Boston	326 miles

With this additional mileage involved, the railways cannot justify lower rates to Canadian ports than to the nearer United States ports. In effect the argument of the hon. member is that, on the eight or ten commodities referred to, the rates should be maintained on a lower basis than to the United States ports. If that suggestion were adopted, why should not all rates be similarly treated? Government policy never contemplated such a situation and it would be dangerous so to interpret it. If the Canadian railways had reduced the rate to United States ports below that applicable to Canadian ports the present complaint of the hon. gentleman would be well founded, but that is not the case. Where then has there been a violation of the traditional and historic policy of this country to encourage Canadian trade and the movement of Canadian trade via Canadian ports?

I should next like to deal with the question of French rye. There might be a contradiction in these two terms, but the charge has been made by the hon. gentleman that the officials of the Canadian National Railways permitted a strangely inaccurate statement to be made by the manager of the French supply council and did nothing to encourage the movement of the rye through Canadian ports. So far as I am aware, the shipment of rye through Portland by the French supply council has no connection with nor was it in any manner influenced either by the shifting of Moore-McCormack sailings or by the reduction in the freight rate.

The hon. member considered it advisable to go into this matter at some length and to leave an inference, entirely unsupported, that some sinister influence operated on the part of Canadian officials to deflect this traffic from Canadian ports to Portland. I have made numerous inquiries, and all that I can find from the sources available to me is that the Portland routing was the decision of the French supply council and the decision of that council alone. In the first place, I am advised by the officers of the Canadian National Railways that the traffic came to them with the routing definitely determined and established and stipulated by the shipper as to where it should go.

I am further advised by the officers of the national harbours board that at no time prior to the routing was this traffic discussed with them and that it is inconceivable that anyone connected with either the harbour of Halifax or the harbour of Saint John would have given Secretary General Hommey of the French supply council such palpably incorrect information as he is supposed or alleged to have given to the press. In the circumstances, the inference is left with me that whatever consideration influenced the decision the routing was fixed by the French authorities without inquiry from responsible sources as to the ability of Canadian ports to handle this business.

At this juncture I should like to say one word about the delegation which called to see me in connection with these matters. I believe there were some thirty in number, and I listened carefully to their recommendations for the greater part of two hours and to a brief which had been prepared ostensibly for submission to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and not for submission to me as Minister of Transport.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I must remind the minister that his time is exhausted.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I thank hon. members. I am sure the hon. member did not want to be unfair to me the other day when he left the implication with the house that I was in a hurry. I think any minister who gives the better part of two hours of his time to a delegation is certainly not in a hurry. He could not be in a hurry, otherwise he would not have been prepared to deal with them on that basis. However, that is a matter of little or no importance, and I pass now to another question.

To my mind, this whole question is one concerning freight rates. Being a matter of freight rates, it is one which should be disposed of by the court established for that purpose by this parliament, namely, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. No one knew that better than the people affected because they decided to make application to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and protest against this reduction or the equalization of rates.

What made the interested parties change their minds and withdraw their application from the board, I do not know. All I can say now is what I said to the delegation, that I was extremely sorry that they had decided to withdraw their case from the board of transport commissioners, because if, as my hon. friend has stated, there was a violation of the traditional and historic policy of Canada, then the board of transport commissioners would have told us whether that was so or not. I maintain that there was no such violation and I have attempted so to prove. If perhaps I am wrong, then my hon. friend may likewise be wrong. Is it not up to the tribunal established for that very purpose to decide whether or not the traditional policy of Canada has been violated? In any event, for reasons best known to themselves, the interested parties decided to withdraw their application from the board. I regret that it was withdrawn, because I think the protest they made should have been made to the logical board which was established for that purpose.

If one listened carefully to the hon. member he could not come to any other conclusion than that the hon. member thought—to some extent this is true also of the hon. member for Cape Breton South—that the operations of our maritime harbours are seriously threatened by the action of the Canadian National Railways and perhaps as well by the actions of the national harbours board. I have before me some statistics which I should like to place on the record with the indulgence of the house, because I realize that I have gone beyond my time. I should like to place on Hansard this statement affecting the two harbours, because the figures speak for themselves. The total cargo tonnage at both harbours, Halifax and Saint John, amounted to 6,593,000 tons last year, which compares with 3,988,000 tons pre-war, 1938, or an increase of 2,600,000 tons, or 65 per cent.

With regard to harbour facilities I submit that the best evidence of the government's interest in and desire to promote the activity of our maritime ports is the fact that construction projects have recently been given approval and will be carried out as rapidly as possible. They involve an aggregate expenditure of about $8,000,000 in Saint John and Halifax.

I should like to give some further information and statistics which may astound the house, but I feel that they should be put on the record because of the statement made, first, by the hon. member for St. John-Albert, and also by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and other hon. members from the maritime provinces who seem to think the government or the railways are not doing what they should for these ports. I wonder if they will have the same opinion after they have heard these figures.

1. The Canadian export traffic, excluding grain in bulk, handled by the Canadian National Railways through the port of Saint John during the calendar year 1947 amounted to 651,000 tons, or an increase of 28.9 per cent over similar traffic handled during the year 1946.

2. United States export traffic—that is, traffic originating in the United States but coming through maritime ports—handled by the Canadian National Railways through the port of Saint John during the calendar year 1947 shows an increase of 159.4 per cent over similar traffic during the year 1946. Does that indicate that the railways are enticing traffic away from Saint John and Halifax?

Mr. HAZEN: Could the minister give us the amounts?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have prepared my answer in this fashion. I have not the amounts before me, but I shall be glad to get them for my hon. friend if they will be of any assistance.

3. Total Canadian import and export traffic, excluding grain in bulk, handled by the Canadian National through the port of Saint John in 1947 was 23.6 per cent higher than for the year 1946.

My hon. friend has complained, and those whom he represents have, to some extent, complained of enticement by the Canadian National Railways of traffic away from Canadian ports to Portland. Let the hon. gentleman listen to this:

4. In 1946 the export of Canadian goods handled by the Canadian National Railways through the port of Portland, and excluding grain in bulk, amounted to 59,209 tons, and in 1947 this traffic was reduced to 11,499 tons, or a decrease of 80.6 per cent. Does that indicate that Canada or the railways are inviting traffic to the port of Portland?

I go on:

5. The import of foreign goods through the port of Portland for Canadian destination in the year 1946 amounted to 17,770 tons, and in 1947 this traffic was reduced to 10,589 tons, or a decrease of 40·4 per cent.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

6. In 1946 the Canadian National Railways carried to Portland for export 97,820 tons of grain, and in 1947, 75,846 tons, or a decrease of 22·5 per cent.

Mr. ISNOR: Would the minister be good enough to give corresponding figures for the port of Halifax?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Anticipating that question, I brought the figures along for Halifax.

1. The Canadian export traffic, excluding grain in bulk, handled by the Candian National Railways during the calendar year 1947 amounted to 750,000 tons for Halifax, as compared with 651,000 tons for Saint John.

2. United States export traffic handled by the Canadian National during the calendar year 1947 shows an increase of 66·8 per cent over similar traffic during the year 1946.

3. The total value of imports and exports passing through the port of Halifax in the year 1936 was $65,500,000; in 1939 it had risen to $71,000,000, and in 1946 it stood at $179,000,000, or an increase of 172·7 per cent over 1936.

To go back to Saint John, the total value of imports and exports passing through the port of Saint John in the year 1936 was $68,000,000; in 1939 it had risen to $80,000,000, and in 1946 it stood at $244,000,000, or an increase of 259 per cent over 1936.

The receipts and shipments of grain at the port of Saint John in 1936 stood at 25,000,000 bushels, in 1939 at 19,000,000 bushels, and in 1946 at 31,300,000 bushels, 1946 showing an increase of 25 per cent over 1936.

The receipts and shipments of grain through the port of Halifax in 1936 stood at 7,000,000 bushels, in 1939 at 7,500,000 bushels, and in 1946 at 13,200,000 bushels, 1946 showing an increase of 89 per cent over 1936.

Mr. GRAYDON: Of course there was a war on.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I ask the house to compare these figures with the three or four shifts of sailing by Moore-McCormack, of which the hon. member complained and which in 1946-47 amounted to 14,000 tons of cargo, which, compared with the figures I have just given, without in any way wanting to be derogatory, is simply a drop in the bucket. If these figures are not an indication of the attitude of the government and of its various agencies in encouraging trade through our ports I do not know what could be said in their favour.

In conclusion, let me tell the hon. member for St. John-Albert as well as the mayor of Saint John that the policy of the present administration is to encourage and to use our national harbours to the fullest possible extent, and it has never departed from that policy.

I should like to have taken a minute or two —but I hesitate to do so, because the house has been more than kind to me—to say a few words concerning the attitude of the president of the Canadian National Railways. I am sure that the hon. member did not want to cast any reflection upon him when he stated that, although the people of his city had been assured by the president of the Canadian National Railways that there would be an encouragement of the movement of trade through Canadian ports, that had not been done. I asked the president of the Canadian National Railways himself. I discussed the whole matter with him and I saw him again yesterday. He assured me that he had made no such statement as that quoted by the press and by my hon. friend.

Mr. HAZEN: I quoted your denial of it too.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. I am simply pointing out to the house the position of the president of the Canadian National Railways when he denied that he had made the statement which was alleged by the press to have been made, and not only has he assured me that he has made no such statement, but no one is more anxious than he is to assist the ports of this country and to do everything he can to route traffic in the direction of Canadian ports.

My hon. friend wound up his speech by asking me a number of questions, and the answers I have already given in my remarks. But I say this to him in conclusion. The traditional and historic policy of the government, of successive governments, of encouraging trade to our national ports and national harbours, has never been violated; but in fact, as established by the statistics I have put on record, positive action to encourage the use of our maritime ports has been and will continue to be taken.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the minister a question. What we in Ontario would like to know, having in mind the situation that has grown up in the house, is this. Is this traffic, which we understand has been routed now to Portland, being re-routed to Halifax or Saint John?

Mr. CHEVRIER: What traffic is my hon. friend referring to? Is he referring to the traffic that has to do with the equalization of rates on eight or ten commodities to which the hon. member for St. John-Albert referred, or does he refer to the traffic of all other commodities that were not equalized?

Mr. GRAYDON: We are interested only in this. We understand from the debates here that some of this traffic which should be going to Halifax and Saint John is going to Portland. If that is not the case, there is no question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not the case.

Mr. GRAYDON: Fine.

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): I have listened with interest to the minister's declaration of policy with regard to freight rates and transport in Canada, and now I should like to exercise my prerogative in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne to turn my attention to matters of defence in Canada. I am sorry that the minister is not in the chamber at the moment, but might I request his colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) to draw his attention to the remarks I have to make this afternoon. I consider it appropriate that the Minister of Labour should be asked to do this, because I have expressed admiration for his declaration on a defence policy in Canada when he said that if you are not prepared to defend that which you have you will lose it.

On this occasion I have the honour to speak for my party on the subject of air defence of Canada. Though all of the things I might recommend would not, of course, be their responsibility, the views I shall put forward this afternoon have been endorsed by the defence committee of the Progressive Conservative party, and at the special request of our chairman, the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), I have been asked to put the case for air defence this afternoon, because we consider it to be a priority requirement in Canada.

I should like to mention one or two things that have been said in the past by men whom we all respect. The first one I wish to quote from is General Marshall in his report on the armed forces of the United States following world war II. He said, in referring to the United States:

> We may elect again to depend on others, and the whim and error of potential enemies, but if we do we will be carrying the treasure and freedom of this great nation in a paper bag.

I contend that the quotation from General Marshall which I have just given is equally applicable to our Dominion of Canada, because the defence needs of Canada and of the United States are completely interwoven. If one is threatened, so is the other.

Our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton), speaking in Montreal as recently as February 9, is reported by the Canadian Press as having said that it was impossible to rule out the possibility of aggression after looking at the Russian record in the field of international relations since the war.

We have General Marshall, who is so prominent today in trying to keep the peace, and our own minister saying that we must preserve our freedom by being prepared to defend it. I do not feel that I need labour these points any longer.

When I have spoken previously on this subject in the house I have recommended the air force as the most powerful of offensive weapons and the most effective defensive weapon. To illustrate this, the skilled German generals after the last war, when they were asked how we invaded the continent of Europe, paid our air forces the compliment of saying that they were the decisive factor, both in securing the invasion of Normandy and in the Germans' failure to contain that invasion. I have mentioned that previously in the house.

I have also spoken of the manpower situation and urged a survey of our manpower so that we might know what forces the country could sustain. I have spoken for air cadet training and called attention to the importance of cadet training in the schools and high schools of our country. I have called the attention of the house to the necessity of dual forces in Canada, equally balanced to defend our west and east, pointing out that we require a duplication in our defence needs. I have spoken about the great service rendered to all Canada's armed forces by the women of our country, by the Canadian girls who went into the navy, army and air force, and I have urged that their fine service be continued by enlisting them in reserve units. I have spoken also of supplementing our service personnel with civilian employees to increase the effectiveness of the few men we are able to enlist in our services today.

There is one subject, however, on which I have not had a great deal to say, but which I wish to discuss this afternoon, and that is the Canadian flying clubs. Prior to the war, Canadian flying clubs were paid a small subsidy for every trained pilot. I understand that now their costs have risen to a great extent. In the Toronto club they have risen from $900 to $2,200 a month, and they are meeting there to discuss the possibility of washing up all their activities. I think it would be a great pity if Canada were to lose the services of the flying clubs which, from coast to coast, played such a great part in the formation of our defence forces in world war II. I urge the government to reconsider the adoption of the policy which they had prior to the war, namely, that of paying to these clubs some subsidies for those pilots whom they are able to train to a licence standard.

In addition to these considerations, we should be concerned at the present time with the production of our own aircraft in this country. In a recent editorial in Aircraft and Airport of December, 1947, I notice the following:

> That Canada can build aircraft—good aircraft and lots of them—was proven in the not too distant past, but that vast potential built out of a wartime necessity has been allowed to dissipate and go down the drain with the fine phrases and rose-tinted promises made to the boys who came back.

We are faced today with an aircraft industry which is on the point of disintegration, and I suggest that we should do all we can to support it, so that machines may be built which our forces and civilian pilots will fly, in order to preserve for our country this great technical industry.

We are not the only country that is concerned with this industrial problem. The United States secretary for air, Mr. Symington, recently brought down a report. Although I have endeavoured to obtain an original copy, they are not available in Ottawa, and I must use the report from Time magazine of January 19, 1948, in giving the house a short resume of what the United States secretary for air had to say. In reporting on the industry, the commission pointed out, among other things:

> A nation in the modern world is only as strong as the industry which produces its weapons. If air power was the nation's first line of defence—

I pause to call to the attention of the house the fact that this United States committee did find that air power was their first line of defence. I continue:

> —it was a very weak line indeed, considering the state of the aircraft industry.

That is, of the industry in the United States.

Recently we have imported into Canada some fine, first-class jet fighter aircraft. I understand that members of the house will have an opportunity of examining some of them tomorrow. I feel that they are a step forward, but not the complete step until we are able to produce in our own country or at least on this continent these machines, so that we shall have our forces supported by an integrated industry and not in the position in which they would be reinforced over long and precarious lines of communication.

In past years there has been some discussion in the house about the necessity of building up a proper intelligence and information service. I would certainly endorse this effort on the part of all Canada's armed forces. But with all these, the real strength of your defence forces lies in scientific research. I should mention the incorporation of a national research council member on the defence council of Canada. I think that is a forward step, and I believe that the representative selected is a fine and able man who will give real support and understanding to the needs of our armed forces.

I have said these things, Mr. Speaker, without political bias. There is, in truth, nothing in my speech that is with political bias, because I merely speak for what I believe to be the good of our country, for the protection of our people and for the protection of those social gains that we have been able to make under our system of government. Without the defence and security provided by our armed forces, the benefits of pensions, health insurance, medical clinics, mothers' allowances, and so on, can mean nothing, if we are vulnerable to the destructive force and fury of aggressive powers.

It may look as if I am standing here advocating the widespread use of the taxpayers' dollars. I am not doing that, however, because I propose to prove in the next few minutes that what I am advocating is the cheapest and best method of defending our country. The air force is peculiarly adapted to give us security and the most adequate defence with the maximum flexibility, which means that the smallest numbers can be used over the largest front. It is peculiarly suited to our geographic needs. It is a medium in which Canadians in two wars have proved themselves to be well skilled and able to compete. yes, more than compete, with the men of other countries. We have the great records of those who flew in the first world war, and we had our great training plan in Canada as a result of which forty or more squadrons of our men served in the front line in Europe and indeed across the world in the last war. When I mention this, I should like to call the minister's attention to an editorial in the Globe and Mail, dated Thursday, February 5, entitled, "Air power Canada's weapon". Set out there is, I believe, the most complete and able statement that I have seen on the defence of Canada, and in particular the air defence of Canada, up to the present time. I quote in part from it as follows:

> Relying as we undoubtedly do on this assistance—

That is, assistance from the United States.

> —we have a clear obligation to be ready with our own contribution to joint defence, one which suits our resources in manpower, skill and money. It needs no argument to prove that this contribution should be an air force larger and better equipped than the one we now have. It happens that such a force, besides being within our reach, provides the kind of defensive and striking power especially needed in a country of Canada's size and geography.

I believe the truth of those words is self-evident. I have some other quotations I could read on that point, but I think I can leave it, since it is so well stated by that editorial writer. It is indeed the cheapest defence we can buy, and the most effective at the present time. I will give the house just one illustration. During world war II, Britain had around her coasts a chain of early warning stations, which were able to plot the enemy bomber and fighter squadrons as they flew against the British isles. These stations gave good protection; when the German commanders estimated the fighter defences of the British isles they believed that the fighter force which opposed them was ten times greater than it actually was. In other words, by the application of the early warning service to the air force a small force was made ten times more effective. A few squadrons were as useful as many wings and groups would have been without it. Canada can make use of this great discovery and apply it economically to its own defence. Most emphatically it can, because during the last war Canadian technicians became especially skilled in the use of radar. We have heard the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe) speak of its benefits to the merchant shipping. At the great school at Clinton, Ontario, we developed technicians who went not only to the Canadian forces but to all the allied forces, to show them the application of radar to the air weapon. This school was commanded by Wing Commander Patrick, who is now with RCA-Victor, and who during his time with the air force I believe made a unique contribution to his service and his country. Fortunately his good work has been continued by able successors, and I am pleased to learn that this great school at Clinton is carrying on into the peace, to use this great scientific device for the benefit of our service and the protection of our people. I might just make passing reference to the fact that this school is in Huron county, where one of my service colleagues is contesting a by-election in a few days. I refer to Flight Lieutenant Tommy Pryde, who served with the army and air force in the first great war and with the air force in the last war. Even if he did not belong to my political party, he certainly would have my every sympathy. I am pleased to see, however, that his great record of national and community service is such as to recommend him to the people there over and above party considerations.

To change the theme of this address for a moment, I have already ventured the opinion that an adequate and reasonably balanced air force, balanced in content and supported by the devices of modern science, can give Canada the best defence protection at the present time. I now urge the government to adopt a policy in support of the R.C.A.F. which will develop it into a first-line defence force. I do not believe a country of the size and population of Canada can afford to be strong in all three services at the same time. Therefore, without apology, with great deference to and appreciation of the service rendered by our soldiers and sailors in the last war, and without detracting from that service in any way, I urge this policy upon the government.

I now return to another section of the report of Mr. Symington, secretary for air in the United States, in order to point out what was found by this commission appointed by the president. Here are some of their findings: firstly, that the United States of America is under definite threat. I shall not elaborate on that; but, if it is true, Canada is also threatened. Secondly, they also assume that any attack on democracy would be directed against the United States and that it would come without warning; thirdly, that the objective of any potential enemy would be the destruction of the United States, capacity to resist; fourthly, that security lay in keeping an air force in being in peace time greater than any other self-governed people have ever kept; fifthly, that neither minding one's business nor trying to reach a pacific accord among nations was enough at the present time. It is a pretty dismal prospect, and only because of that fact did I choose to speak on a subject which I know is unpopular, which may lead some people to attack me as a militarist and which is perhaps not foremost in the minds of the Canadian people at the present time.

Our military leaders, from George Washington to General Eisenhower, supported as recently as November 4 by Canada's General Crerar, have urged a policy of peace through strength. Though we may all respect Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and his stand following world war I; while we may have admired him personally, we now know that he was wrong. On November 4, in New York, General Crerar said:

> Until this world of ours reaches a much higher plane of civilization and international understanding, I consider it essential that these countries which believe in the maintenance of peace, and in the arbitration or judicial settlement of international disputes which may endanger that condition, should be militarily prepared immediately and strongly to act in support of these principles.

Two days before that statement was made, General Marshall had reported that fifteen million men perished in world war II.

If I were to make recommendations, I should make reference, first, to several statements made in Montreal on February 9, by the Minister of National Defence. Firstly, he said that Canada cannot afford to maintain a huge peacetime defence force. Secondly, he said that we must ensure positive security under our own arms; thirdly, that we should co-operate with the United States and the commonwealth and, fourth, that our forces should be capable of rapid expansion. With those four statements I can have no quarrel. I consider that they are all sound, and that the only unsound feature is that we continue to spread the small amount we have for our defence forces, rather than to concentrate it on something that could be considered effective by way of an air defence force.

I would urge that he set up the type of force which could meet these immediate requirements, an air force which would be supported by adequate reserves, a force which would be highly trained and flexible, and provided with the most modern weapons and scientific assistance available.

Before concluding, I should like to refer to some of the more general aspects of the subject of defence. In this connection I should like to refer to a comment by Trygve Lie, secretary of the united nations, in London on January 29. He said the united nations had kept the peace for two years. The remark struck me forcibly because, much as we may hope for it, the united nations still remains an organization without any constables or magistrates to support its force.

Mr. GRAYDON: Just a lot of truant officers.

Mr. SKEY: Yes. And though we all admire the great work Mr. Lie has done, we wonder at his saying that the united nations has kept the peace for two years. His observation recalls to my mind, or to the mind of any thoughtful person, the speech made by Mr. Winston Churchill almost two years ago at Fulton, Missouri. Mr. Churchill then recommended that the united nations should receive the support of squadrons of aircraft, because they were the cheapest and most flexible armed unit, and that they could support the moral decisions of the constables and magistrates in this shrinking world. On that occasion Mr. Churchill said:

> We must start immediately to equip the united nations with sheriffs and constables in the form of an armed force of air squadrons directed by the world organization.

Then he closed with these words:

> . . . because our supreme task and duty is to guard the homes of the common people from the horrors of another war.

He thought only of peace; and who should think more of it than a man of his stature, who saw Britain at her weakest and her greatest during the days of the last war. I fully agreed with what he advocated at that time, and I repeated it in the house. What he said proved to be right.

Just a few days ago he rose in the British House of Commons to say that we must find a way to live with Russia during the next two years. The searching truth of his statements during the war, and of his appreciation at Fulton, Missouri, makes one apprehensive; because this man, when he speaks, does not speak carelessly. He speaks with the greatest of knowledge and says we have to find that solution within two years. The time factor is important—vitally important—in the world today.

I therefore say that, although we cannot afford to leave our people undefended at this time, we must redouble our diplomatic, political and social efforts to find a way to avert war, and to make unnecessary speeches such as I am making this afternoon. We must secure the peace and continue toward a realization of the four freedoms by all men, and the relief of our people from the remotest possibility of another conflict. While we may make these efforts for peace, we must support our armed forces and provide adequate protection for the Canadian people.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise because of a statement made today by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). However, before replying to or making comment in reference to those statements. I wish to add my support to what has been said by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) in bringing to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and the government the, shall I say, lack of efficiency or lack of interest shown by the officials of the Canadian National Railways in respect of shipments through maritime ports, namely Halifax and Saint John.

I am not going to cover the points discussed by the hon. member for St. John-Albert who, I think, laid the case for the maritimes before the minister in a strong, able and efficient manner. If what was said served no other purpose, at least it brought the minister to his feet today to place on record the facts relating to the equalization of freight rates between the ports of Halifax, Saint John and Portland.

While naturally I want to see every possible ton of cargo shipped through Halifax, if that is not possible, then my next thought would be that it should go through the other maritime port of Saint John, rather than through Portland. I wish only to add my sentiments in support of those of the hon. member for St. John-Albert.

I sat and listened to the hon. member for Cape Breton South when, as usual, he placed before the house a dreary and dismal picture of conditions in the maritime provinces, and particularly in his native province of Nova Scotia. He referred to the fact that I had given a statement to the press, and compared it with another statement. It appeared to me that he questioned the accuracy or the truth of what I said. I say to him that that statement was given in good faith, and I believe it to be correct. I am looking forward to the commencement, in the very near future, of the work I have mentioned.

I have had the co-operation of hon. members from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in bringing about improvements in conditions in the maritimes. I resent, and I think many other hon. members will also, the thought thrown out by the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I was not willing to co-operate with other hon. members in working for the best interests of our province.

The hon. member said that hon. members should be careful as to the accuracy of their statements. I think that reference would apply more to the hon. member than to any other hon. member coming from the maritimes. I say that advisedly, after having listened to the hon. member on many occasions. I remember how he toured the county of Halifax during midsummer of last year along with some of his colleagues. I remember the extravagant statements which were made about the awful conditions in Nova Scotia, that we did not have any industry there, that nothing was going on, that there was no employment, that our farms were run down and so on. His colleagues from the prairie provinces who were down there spoke along similar lines, but they did not dare go as far as the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

I think any hon. member who has had any business experience at all will realize that you cannot attract industry to a place which is always painted as being dead, dreary and dismal as has been done on more than one occasion by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. WRIGHT: How did it get that way?

Mr. ISNOR: I do not think it is that way. Perhaps I had better give the hon. member some information. I am glad to know that he couples himself with the hon. member for Cape Breton South by saying that it is that way.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What about housing in Halifax?

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member who has just interrupted me is forever harping on housing, but I have yet to hear him offer anything constructive to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) in the time he has been here.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Are you proud of your Halifax houses?

Mr. ISNOR: I am just as proud of our Halifax houses as I am of the hon. member.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I know you do not think much of me.

Mr. ISNOR: I hope the hon. member is ready to treat me with the same respect as I should like to treat him with, and I hope he will not interrupt me again. I feel I should answer him in regard to housing. Those hon. members who have kept in touch with the situation in Halifax realize that, prior to the war, we had a population of something like 60,000. Because of the active part which Halifax took in the war effort, our population increased to around 135,000, and today it is around 95,000. I am ready to admit that our housing is not as it should be, but we are working toward an objective which will provide more houses for our people. We are not just talking about houses; we are making some constructive suggestions. At the present time there is under way a project which will provide five to six hundred houses. The contracts have already been let. There is another project in the offing which I hope will be under way within a month and which will provide another hundred houses. Those are concrete, definite things, and I hope the hon. member will accept that as an answer to what he said about housing.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then there is the $17,000,000; do not forget that.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member has always been ready to help me out. We are grateful to the Minister of Transport for showing the interest he has, not only in the great port of Halifax but also in the port of Saint John. In that connection I might say that we have definite assurance from the national harbours board that a new steel shed will be erected, at an estimated cost of $600,000, on pier 26 as soon as the steel is available. Plans and specifications have been prepared for the erection in a year's time of a modern concrete pier with two steel sheds. The existing pier is 600 feet long by 160 feet wide, and the proposed new pier, as planned at present, will be 700 feet long by 270 feet wide. The additional length will permit berthing two coastal size vessels on either side, whereas the present pier can accommodate only one on either side. It is estimated that the cost of this will be something like $3,900,000. Then there are other expenditures in connection with maintenance, totalling $246,000. In spite of all the unfair criticism that has been offered by the opposition, I think the Minister of Transport and the national harbours board are doing fairly well for Halifax.

Then a word as to the accuracy of statements. On more than one occasion the hon. member for Cape Breton South has referred to the closing down of the Trenton steel works and the unemployment that was created. For the benefit of the prairie members of the C.C.F., I should like to quote from the Eastern Chronicle of February 5, 1948, as follows:

> Two major industries of Pictou county, the Eastern Car Company Limited and the Acadia Coal Company Limited continued their steady progress towards higher peaks of production, corporation figures tabulated for the month of January disclose.
> An all-time record was set in the Eastern car shops, where the working force turned out fifty-ton boxcars at higher capacity per day than ever before experienced in the company's near forty-year history. Three hundred and eighty-six boxcars rolled from the assembly lines in January, all steel wood-lined, a number considerably greater than former figures on this type of construction. Some years ago, company officials said, wooden boxcars, i.e., unlined, were built faster than the current order is being handled, but the January, 1948, record exceeds the old wood type construction speed, in that the work involved on the present order greatly exceeds the old pattern.

Seventeen hundred cars are being built by Eastern Car for the Canadian National Railways, with the end of the order scheduled for March.

I might mention for the information of the hon. member for Cape Breton South that in addition to these 1,700 cars, 250 seventy-ton hopper cars are being built, which order will run into something like $1,300,000 and will provide employment for a period of eight months. During the same midsummer period of last year, hon. members referred to the large lay-offs which had occurred in the Halifax dockyards. I regret that there were lay-offs in the Halifax dockyard, but I should like to place the actual facts before the house, so that they will realize that industry in Halifax is not completely run down. In 1939 there were something like 274 men on the payroll at the Halifax dockyard. During the war that number naturally increased, rising from 274 to 1,500, 2,000, 3,000 and up to 4,000. Then there was a drop, and the members of the C.C.F. went to Nova Scotia and told of the awful conditions in Halifax, of 500 employees being laid off today, 550 the next day, and so on. But actually today there are 1,890 employees on the payroll of the Halifax dockyard and they look to be fairly permanent. I mention that, Mr. Speaker, because of the effect which it is having on the rest of Canada and upon our province and particularly the city of Halifax of having men spread gloomy tales. You cannot build up if you are continually tearing down and belittling your own industries.

What I have said about the Halifax dockyard applies also to the adjacent shipyard. Not so many years ago we had the old Halifax Graving Dock Company there, employing from 150 to 250 men. Then came along what I consider was a real improvement, Halifax Shipyards Limited. They employed very large numbers of men, naturally, during the war doing ship repair work and constructing destroyers. I was interested in finding out the actual employment conditions in the Halifax shipyard, so I telephoned the general manager and asked him to be good enough to tell me the number of employees on his payroll the previous month; that was about two months ago. I ascertained that there were 1,479 men employed at the Halifax shipyard, and at the subsidiary in Dartmouth, 374 men, or a total of 1,853, as against 250 or 300 employed years ago by the smaller company. That is the kind of figures the members of the C.C.F. never use. Instead, they use the lowest possible employment figure. In that way they do not, particularly the hon. member for Cape Breton South, do justice to their own part of the country, and that is to be regretted. I believe I am speaking for the membership generally from the maritimes, irrespective of where they sit in this house, when I say that we regret that any one member should continually cry down his native province, as has been done for so long in this house. We recognize, of course, the fact that employment is not as good as it should be in our part of the country. We are not so situated as to enjoy markets such as they have in other parts of Canada. We have a population in Nova Scotia of around 600,000; in New Brunswick 500,000, and in Prince Edward Island, something like 100,000, or all told, a population of 1,200,000 for the maritime provinces, as against 4,500,000 to 5,000,000 in Ontario, concentrated around the large cities and furnishing, therefore, a readily available market for industrial production. But we still can brag of a certain number of industries in our province; and for the benefit of the hon. member for Cape Breton South I think I should give a few facts, so that he will have this information and perhaps use it in a different way from what he has been accustomed to doing in the past.

We have 1,281 industries in Nova Scotia, employing 38,000 men, paying wages of $60,000,000, and producing $204 million worth of goods. That may not be large in the eyes of members from Ontario, but to us it means something. Sixty million dollars in wages means a lot in a province of our size. Our manufacturers are shipping their goods to every part of Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We have one of the oldest coffee and spice firms, Schwartz, in our province, shipping its products right across Canada, from Halifax to Vancouver, and to the West Indies and overseas as well. We have Moir's chocolates, perhaps the finest chocolates sold in Canada today.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Any samples?

Mr. ISNOR: I feel sure that if they knew the desire of the hon. member for Fraser Valley they would be only too pleased to send him some.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Please see that they get that information.

Mr. ISNOR: I could go on for the benefit of my C.C.F. friends and tell them more about Nova Scotia. I could tell them that we have 33,000 farms in the province, notwithstanding that the members from the prairies who are farmers go down there and try to tell them how to make money and how it is possible to be successful when they are so unsuccessful themselves. Our farmers are still able to get a living off their farms. Our 33,000 farms maintain a population of 150,000. They produce 7,000,000 pounds of dairy butter, which is not bad for a small province. So I do not think we are so badly off in our province. We produce the finest apples grown in Canada, with a productive capacity of 2,000,000 barrels a year, the greater portion of which has in the past gone to the United Kingdom; but now that the whole of Canada has become acquainted with our apple juice, we are looking forward to markets for that product within Canada.

On motion of Mr. Isnor the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if there is any possible chance of veterans legislation being brought into the house this week?

Mr. GREGG: The resolution to set up the veterans affairs committee will appear on the order paper before the end of this week, and I can assure the hon. member that the legislation will be brought forward just as soon as possible thereafter.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 12, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

OILSEEDS

PAYMENT OF 50 CENTS A BUSHEL TO PRODUCERS DELIVERING FLAXSEED TO WHEAT BOARD 1947-48

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make certain announcements that will be of interest to Canadian producers of oilseeds.

During the current crop year, 1947-48, the Canadian wheat board is buying flaxseed at a price of $5 per bushel basis the top grade of both eastern and western flaxseed at Montreal and Fort William-Port Arthur respectively. There is a ceiling price at this same level which fixes the price to Canadian crushers on domestic supplies. Any surplus over domestic requirements of seed and oil is available for export. Existing trading methods require the use of this surplus seed and oil in arrangements with the other countries so that Canada may secure supplies of other essential oils. Under present regulations, the producers who delivered flaxseed to the Canadian wheat board are entitled to participate in any net profits that may arise. It has become apparent, however, that this participation cannot be a clear-cut, commercial proposition when so many arrangements between countries are involved and the government has decided to calculate and pay out to producers the participation that would have been involved on a fair and reasonable basis. This action has the double effect of settling the producers' interest in the flax and freeing government agencies to use the surplus seed and oil in arrangements for other essential oils necessary to the whole Canadian economy. The government has therefore accepted the recommendation of the Canadian wheat board and will authorize that body to pay a fixed and final payment of fifty cents per bushel to those producers who have delivered or will deliver commercial flaxseed to dealers acting as agents of the board during the crop year 1947-48. This payment will involve distribution of about six million dollars to Canadian producers.

An announcement with respect to the handling and marketing arrangements for flax covering the crop year 1948-49 will be made at the earliest possible date.

With regard to rapeseed and sunflower seed, it is also the intention of the government to authorize the Canadian wheat board to buy these oilseeds in 1948-49 on the same basis as in 1947-48, namely, at six cents per pound basis the top grade of each, f.o.b. shipping points named by the board.

Mr. MENARY: Do I understand the announcement just made is in answer to the question I asked yesterday with regard to flax?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MANROSS: That is that "flaxible" control.

UNITED KINGDOM

AGREEMENTS WITH RESPECT TO BEEF, BACON, CHEESE AND EGGS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COPIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). Will he table copies of the recent agreements concluded with the United Kingdom with respect to beef, bacon, cheese and eggs?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I shall be pleased to table copies of the agreements made between Canada and the United Kingdom with respect to the products that have just been named.

DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN HIS MAJESTY AND THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. RENE HAMEL (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). In its issues of February 7, 9 and 11, 1948, a Montreal newspaper, Le Devoir, informs the Canadian public that, after a personal request had been made by His Majesty the King to the Canadian government, changes have recently been made in connection with the signing—

Mr. SPEAKER: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that when an hon. member puts a question, he should not give information to the house, but merely state his question.

Mr. HAMEL: My question, of which I have sent a copy to the right hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs is this: Have any changes been made in connection with the signing of our diplomatic representatives' credentials? If so, what are they?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member refers to three articles published in the newspaper Le Devoir on February 7, 9 and 11 and one said to have been published in the Chicago Daily Tribune on February 10 with regard to the effect of the letters patent constituting the office of governor general of Canada, which became effective on October 1, 1947, and he asks for an explanation in connection with the statements contained in those articles.

I received the hon. member's notice just three or four minutes before coming into the house, and I must confess that I had not read these articles. I have now obtained the articles and will give them careful consideration, but in the meantime I think it would be of interest, in view of the fact that the question has been raised, to place on Hansard the explanation which was given by the Prime Minister in a press release of October 1, 1947, dealing with the subject. I will then carefully consider the articles in question and see if there is any difference between what they contain and what was contained in the official statement; and if explanations are to be given as to differences I shall be glad to give them. The press release by the Prime Minister was as follows:

The Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, announced today that new letters patent governing the office and appointment of the Governor General of Canada had been signed by His Majesty the King on September 8, 1947, and countersigned by the Prime Minister of Canada. The new letters patent (the principal document relating to the office of governor general) come into force on October 1, 1947, and will supersede on that date the existing letters patent of 1931 (as amended in 1935) and the royal instructions of 1931.

2. The royal documents relating to the office of governor general had not undergone a careful revision since 1931. The Canadian government accordingly recommended to His Majesty the issuance of new letters patent consolidating the former documents and bringing them up to date.

[Mr. Hamel.]

3. Apart from textual alterations designed to bring the new letters patent into line with constitutional developments and practices in Canada and within the commonwealth, the principal alterations may be summarized as follows:

(a) By the introductory words of clause 2 of the new letters patent, the governor general is authorized to exercise, on the advice of Canadian ministers, all of His Majesty's powers and authorities in respect of Canada. This does not limit the king's prerogatives. Nor does it necessitate any change in the present practice under which certain matters are submitted by the Canadian government to the king personally. However, when the new letters patent come into force, it will be legally possible for the governor general, on the advice of Canadian ministers, to exercise any of the powers and authorities of the crown in respect of Canada, without the necessity of a submission being made to His Majesty. (The new powers and authorities conferred by this general clause include, among others, royal full powers for the signing of treaties, ratifications of treaties, and the issuance of letters of credence for ambassadors). There will be no legal necessity to alter existing practices. However, the government of Canada will be in a position to determine, in any prerogative matter affecting Canada, whether the submission should go to His Majesty or to the governor general.

(b) The new letters patent revoke and supersede the existing letters patent and the existing royal instructions. The royal instructions have been incorporated in the new letters patent which have been issued under the great seal of Canada.

4. No new commission of appointment will be issued to Viscount Alexander, the former letters patent having been revoked "without prejudice to anything having been done lawfully thereunder." Moreover, Viscount Alexander's present commission is a continuing one expressed to be subject to the existing letters patent "or any other substituted for the same."

5. An appropriate proclamation will, as required by clause XVI of the new letters patent, be published today in the Canada Gazette.

6. Annexed to this statement is a copy of the new letters patent, with appendices giving the text of the documents in force prior to October 1, 1947.

That is the complete statement, and I will now table a copy of the letters patent and other documents referred to. As I said before, I will examine these articles to see whether they purport to make any statement of fact that would not be in conformity with the official press release, and give a further answer after I have made that examination.

BUTTER

DISCUSSION RESPECTING IMPORTATION FROM NEW ZEALAND OR AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. DROPE (Northumberland ,Ont.): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a copy of which I have already forwarded to him. Has the question of the importation into Canada of New Zealand or Australian butter been discussed by any officials on behalf of the government with any officials representing New Zealand, Australia or the United Kingdom, and if so what decision has been reached?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Anticipating a possible temporary shortage of butter in April the government communicated with Australia and New Zealand to inquire whether butter would be available from either source in the event it is required. The replies indicated that there is still a strong requirement for Australian and New Zealand butter for the United Kingdom. Therefore the government has dropped the proposal for obtaining butter from those sources.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INTERNATIONAL BILL OF RIGHTS—APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, having to do with press releases to the effect that Canada has made no recommendations regarding an international bill of rights. For that reason I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to set up the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms at an early date.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have not seen the references my hon. friend has mentioned, but as I understand his direct question it is whether the government intends to reappoint the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms. The answer is yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then if I may ask a supplemental question, has Canada made any recommendations as yet with respect to the composition of the international bill of rights, or with respect to any rights which should be included therein?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Obviously I could not answer that question without first conferring with the departments concerned. I shall regard it as a notice, to be answered later.

RENT CONTROL

INQUIRY AS TO EXPIRATION OF CONTROL ON COMMERCIAL RENTALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): In view of press reports of which the Minister of Finance is aware, I should like to ask him whether the government contemplates any change in the announced policy of permitting rent control on commercial accommodation to expire on March 31, in keeping with the statement made by the minister in the house on January 27, at page 593 of Hansard.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. As long ago as June, 1947, I announced in the house that it was not the intention of the government to ask parliament to continue the control of commercial rentals beyond March 31 of this year, and an order of the wartime prices and trade board was subsequently passed—I am not sure as to the exact date—revoking the control of commercial rentals as of March 8, 1948. There is no intention of changing that order.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Bradette in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. ADAMSON: When the committee was last discussing this matter I had moved an amendment respecting the title of the act in which I had suggested the striking out of the word "emergency" so that the act would be known as the Exchange Conservation Act.

I pointed out at the last sitting of the committee that there was no question that, while the exchange situation beween us and the United States was in the nature of an emergency, nevertheless the emergency had now become chronic, and that any attempt to hide the facts of the case would delude the Canadian people in respect of the very essence of our exchange difficulties.

Since then, if anything, the exchange situation has been aggravated by the rapid and startling decline in the security markets of the world. These security markets are a barometer of world trade. They forecast accurately the situation to come, and show more than anything else the situation we are approaching, namely that we are moving from a sellers' to a buyers' market. In other words the international exchange position will be aggravated, as it was during the period of depression in the early part of the thirties.

When I say that I do not anticipate, nor is anything I say now to be so interpreted, that we are entering a period of depression or slump. That is not my intention, nor is it my belief. But I do say that the changeover from a sellers' to a buyers' market is upon us, and the first move has already been made. Therefore we shall be faced with selling our goods under different circumstances—some of them, I admit, in fortuitous circumstances in that those goods command a world market and are essential to the feeding of the world. On the other hand our essential metals are required for the making of the sinews of industry throughout the world, so that world industry may have the essential raw materials. We are in a fortunate position in that regard. But from the point of view of the over-all position, having regard to the rapid depression and the slump that has taken place on the security exchange, it can be said that we have moved into a different type of market, one in which pressure will have to be exercised in order to sell goods. That being so—and it is bound to happen sooner or later; every cyclical movement of trade develops in that way—exchange restrictions will have to be a continuing part of our way of life until such time as world trade really gets to a state of equilibrium and regains some semblance of stability. It is merely wishful thinking to consider that that is likely to happen in the near future. Therefore I offered my amendment.

I have one further observation to make in this connection, and it is in direct reply to the hon. member for Acadia. He is perfectly correct when he says that I did support the Bretton Woods agreement. I believed, and I still believe, that some method of currency stabilization on an international level was necessary. I still believe there is at least a hope that that might take place. Therefore I supported the Bretton Woods agreement. The levels of currencies agreed upon under this agreement have proved to be completely unworkable. Instead of devaluating currencies, they were placed at an uneconomically high level in order to improve the trading position of the various members of the international monetary fund with the United States. This has made the whole Bretton Woods agreement unworkable.

My position now is that we should take steps to maintain our freedom in respect of the international monetary fund. It has been proved that under present regulations it cannot be made to work, or cannot be a workable instrument for the stabilization of international exchange. It has been proved that the rates fixed by the fund have no real connection with the actual value in the open market of the fund of the member countries. I feel that necessary steps should be taken; and if the fund will not bring reality into its dealings, then either we should withdraw from it or should take such steps as will bring reality into our dealings with the fund.

[Mr. Adamson.]

I say that because there are just two alternatives in connection with currency stabilization, two ways in which it can be brought about. One is by the establishment of a gold standard; and I think it would be wishful thinking if we were to assume that in the chaotic situation of the world today any semblance of a fixed gold standard could be brought into being. The other way is by international agreement to stabilize currencies. I supported the Bretton Woods agreement in the hope that there would be some international agreement and that it would work. Unfortunately it has not proved to be workable.

As I see it, this situation is not likely to be temporary, despite the sanguine hopes of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. My reason for saying that is that our trading position is dependent upon world trade. If we are to control our currency, or at least attempt to control it, it will be a long long time before world trade gets into such a state of balance that these or some other regulations will not be necessary. If the government would free the Canadian dollar and abolish the foreign exchange control board these regulations would not be necessary. There are the two alternatives.

There is a third possibility which has been discussed at length in this house by myself, the Minister of Finance and others. I refer to the progressive devaluation of our dollar within the terms of the Bretton Woods agreement. I understand that we can devalue ten per cent and eventually a further nine per cent which would put our dollar at eight-one cents as compared with the United States dollar. But even though we did that, I still believe that exchange conservation measures would be necessary.

We are deluding ourselves by thinking of this as a temporary measure. I have contended that part of this measure should have been adopted years ago. I do not want to repeat what I said the other night, that there are three parts to it. One is devaluation, and that action has not been taken. With the upset state of the world, with the majority of the world trading today under controls directly imposed by governments, unless we are prepared to take a long step and free ourselves completely from the foreign exchange control board, I do not see how we shall be able to get away from controls over currency of this nature for at least years to come. Therefore I move the amendment.

Mr. KIDD: I should like to say something about the amendment moved the day before yesterday by the hon. member for York West, but I rise particularly to bring one or two points to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Just as we entered the house today at three o'clock we were handed reprints of Bill No. 3.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was done merely for the convenience of hon. members. I explained the other night when my hon. friend was not here—

Mr. KIDD: I was here.

Mr. ABBOTT: I beg your pardon. That was done for the convenience of hon. members.

Mr. KIDD: I just wish the minister would listen to me for a moment because everything is not going too well. Only yesterday I had an inquiry concerning this bill, and do you know what I had to do? I had to take Bill No. 3, which had its first reading on December 11, 1947; then I had to note what the minister said on December 8, 1947, as reported on page 18 of Hansard; then I had to consider the amendments that were read into Hansard on Tuesday, February 10; and then today we have this reprinted bill.

This brings me particularly to the point made by the hon. member for York West, that there is not very much of an emergency in connection with this measure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. KIDD: Just a minute. Sometimes I think the minister gets carried away. It is very difficult to get the Minister of Finance to make a statement. I think hon. members will follow me when I say that when he was Minister of National Defence for over two years we could not get him nailed down to making a public statement in this house. We have the same thing now in connection with the finance department. When we tried to get him nailed down to saying something about policy he journeyed away over to Cornwall one day and then after he left the defence department his successor read a carefully prepared statement complimenting the government on its policy.

What has happened here? This bill has been before us only since the house opened in December. It was actually tabled on November 17 when you went on the radio and tried to tell us about the emergency. You went on the radio with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and you gave us the contents of this bill which was brought in a couple of weeks later. So I take issue with you. It is being done more or less by order in council, and then you come in and expect the members of this house to agree with you. Since the bill was brought into the house you have made two amendments—

Mr. ABBOTT: Those amendments have not been moved yet.

Mr. KIDD: Never mind; the fact is that this is creating hardship for the people of Canada, and if that were not so I would not be making these remarks now. I think some of the blame for this procedure must rest on the Prime Minister and the law clerks. I contend, and I think many agree with me, that in dealing with this bill you should have followed the same procedure as you do when bringing down your budget. In fact, if it is an emergency the house should have been called two weeks earlier.

Mr. ABBOTT: Submit that to the new committee on rules.

Mr. KIDD: I am not going to argue one way or the other. When you were replying the other day to the hon. member for Peterborough West, as reported on page 1077 of Hansard, you held up two advertisements in an effort to justify what you are doing.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know my hon. friend wants to be in order. I believe he is supposed to address the Chair and not use the second person singular.

Mr. KIDD: I know the Chair pretty well and I will agree with him. While you were speaking you held up one advertisement, and you could have held up two, in an effort to show that everything you had done was quite proper and in order. It is not in order. One advertisement appeared on January 14, and the other a week or so later. You were hoping that the public more or less took those in.

An hon. MEMBER: Address the Chair.

Mr. KIDD: Never mind. You interjected something about the $10 clause, and that is where I want to take issue with you. You referred to the order in council of May 23 which permits Canadians to take across the border United States funds to the amount of $10 and $15 Canadian. Three ladies of my constituency crossed the border and they had to undergo hardship because you did not do what you should have done.

Mr. HARTT: I rise to a point of order.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. HARTT: Will you please stop hollering?—because it will not do you any good. I rise to a point of order.

An hon. MEMBER: Look at your assistant, Mr. Abbott.

Mr. HARTT: I do not expect anything from some hon. gentlemen but grunts, and I do not want the hon. gentleman's advice. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the speaker who had the floor was entirely out of order. Clause 1 deals with the short title of the bill. We have discussed the principle of the bill—

Mr. FERGUSON: What is the principle?

Mr. HARTT: The hon. member would not understand it, not with his brain power. Clause 1, as I said, deals with the short title, which reads:

This act may be cited as the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

Either the title is correct or it is not; either it is acceptable or it is not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The amendment is to determine whether it is correct or not.

Mr. HARTT: If there is any objection to the title, let it be stated; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not in order to discuss currency policies or anything else that may come to mind on this particular clause.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I submit that no ruling can be made until the hon. member for Kingston City has finished his argument.

Mr. LENNARD: On a point of order, when I rise in this house, which is not very often, I speak from my appointed place in this chamber, and I feel that if backbenchers in other parts of the house did the same we should make more progress.

Mr. HARTT: Speaking again to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I have a right to repeat, and I think the committee will grant it to me—

Mr. POULIOT: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no one has the right to speak twice on the same point of order.

Mr. HARTT: I accept the hon. member's point.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): In committee of the whole a certain amount of latitude is allowed on the first clause. I hope that that privilege will not be abused. I will ask the hon. member for Kingston City to proceed.

[Mr. Hartt.]

Mr. KIDD: I think the Minister of Finance should make a statement in advance of any such order in council as P.C. 2045 going into effect. It was passed on Thursday, May 22, 1947. Nothing was said about it on Friday, May 23, nothing on Monday, May 26, nothing on Tuesday, May 27, until a reply was made to a question asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. That is the only time the Minister of Finance made a statement about the order in council. I bring this up because one of my constituents was directly affected. Three girls were journeying by bus from Kingston to the United States, over the international bridge, as they do once or twice a year. They were picked up by the customs officials. I want to pay a compliment to the customs officials, nearly all of whom are veterans of world war I. They are very courteous and gentlemanly, but they have to carry out their instructions under the foreign exchange control order. This girl was asked how much United States currency she had. She told them $40 U.S., plus $5 Canadian. They said that was $30 too much. She had to leave $30 with them. They gave her a form which she signed, and it came back to Ottawa. She then proceeded to Watertown with her friends. The officials said that the girl should have had form H with her, but this girl did not know it was necessary. She had collected her United States currency at various stores. When she came back across the border she expected that the $30 would be refunded, but the officials intimated that she had broken the law. Probably she had, but the point is that if she broke the law it was the fault of the Minister of Finance for not publicizing the order in council. He said nothing about it on the floor of the house, or on the radio, and no advertisements about it were published in the press.

Mr. ABBOTT: I must interrupt the hon. member. First, on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with the present bill. The matter to which he refers took place last May, and I cannot recall whether I made an announcement in the house.

Mr. KIDD: No, the minister did not.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will accept the hon. gentleman's word, but I do know that the details of the order were widely publicized. I raise the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot discuss the administration of the foreign exchange control board on clause 1 of this bill. If we attempt to do that we open up a discussion that will keep us here until the heat of summer. I did not interrupt my hon. friend when he was stating his case, but I would ask the members of the committee to keep within the scope of the bill we are now considering.

Mr. KIDD: I am not going to say any more, but the minister did make a statement the other night on the $10 restriction.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was in reply to a question.

Mr. KIDD: An hon. member asked me whether the girl got her money back. She did not.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Standing order 58(2), reads:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

We are on clause 1, and I would ask the committee to keep within the orbit of that clause.

Mr. CASE: I hope to keep within the rules, Mr. Chairman, in discussing the short title of the bill, which reads:

This Act may be cited as the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

That indicates the purpose of the bill. By this bill we are delegating to a minister of the crown, to one person, tremendous authority. There is such a thing as the law and the spirit of the law. I know this act is to be administered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; schedules I and II will be administered by your humble servant and schedule III by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. CASE: When we come to the other schedule we shall hear from the minister responsible for administering it.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the intention. On the point raised by my hon. friend I think I mentioned the other night that in matters relating particularly to schedule III, that is the permit system for so-called capital goods, I would expect my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce to deal with that schedule, and I shall handle the questions as to schedule I, relating to prohibitions, and schedule II, the quota item.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Is the committee ready for the amendment?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have a question to ask; I hope I am in order. I want to assure the minister that there is no catch in it; I am really looking for information. I was wondering under what authority we are acting now. Is it the War Measures Act?

Mr. ABBOTT: P.C. 4678, under the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That lasts until when?

Mr. ABBOTT: From memory, 1949 or 1950.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): We seem to be getting along pretty well the way we are under the War Measures Act. Why is it necessary to bring in this legislation?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to answer that question.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perhaps the minister has explained it before.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did, first in the broadcast which I made on November 17 in announcing the proposed policy, and again in the house when I introduced this legislation. Broadly speaking what I said was—this has been discussed before—that the Foreign Exchange Control Act was not intended to be used for the purpose of imposing import restrictions on goods.

Mr. JACKMAN: Not like a sledge hammer.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am replying to the hon. member for Calgary West. I am repeating what I said at the time. The act was not intended to be used for that purpose, but we were advised by the law officers of the crown that powers did exist under the act whereby we could impose those restrictions. I said in my broadcast address and in introducing the bill that in these circumstances the government felt that it should bring before parliament at the first available opportunity specific legislation to impose these restrictions. That is the position. We may be criticized for our action in using the foreign exchange control order, but that is the reason why the government is now asking parliament to enact in statutory form a special exchange conservation measure.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not ask the question for the purpose of getting an opportunity to criticize. I was wondering—and perhaps this is not done; I do not know—whether a copy of the opinion about which the minister spoke could be made available.

Mr. ABBOTT: The opinion was a verbal one. I have a memorandum which I can make available. I say that offhand; I do not know whether one usually produces the opinion he receives; it was a verbal opinion given to me.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Who asked for the opinion?

Mr. ABBOTT: I asked for it. I think I answered that question in the house before; but in any case I asked for the opinion.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If the minister gave that information before I did not hear it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think my hon. friend was here when some other hon. member raised the question.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Did I understand the minister to say that he would be glad to let me look at the memorandum?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I do not know that one usually tables these opinions in the house. I asked for the opinion, I received it, and I have a memorandum in my file which the deputy minister of justice gave me.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I shall appreciate it if the minister will be good enough to let me see it. I am not much of a lawyer, I know, but I may differ from the view that has been given to the minister.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, so far I have not passed any comment on the bill which has been introduced. I wish that the Minister of Reconstruction were in his seat, because what I have to say concerns him.

I am one of those who wishes to see made effective the pronouncement some time ago of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply that goods which are not made in Canada at the moment, but could be made here, should be made here. One of the schedules prohibits the importation of that type of goods. The minister has a program which I heartily endorse, namely, that of making more use of branch factories located in Canada of United States factories. The minister intends to encourage them to ship back to the United States many of their finished products made in Canada. I agree with that. The minister has an opportunity there which will be good for Canada, because there is a large number of United States plants, many of which I am thoroughly familiar with, whose plants in Canada are producing exactly the same material as they are in the United States. Some of these plants are located in Toronto, Hamilton and elsewhere in Ontario and Canada. I am going to encourage the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to pursue that policy.

Much of the material that is now barred cannot be completed here unless more material and more machines come in. I want to assist the minister to the best of my ability to pursue his policy along that line in the hope that he will save a lot of United States dollars by having material made in United States branch plants in Canada shipped back to the United States. I was thinking of one item, school furniture. At present, boards of education in Montreal, Toronto and elsewhere buy special school furniture in the United States. There are United States branch plants located in Canada. I have in mind one branch plant which makes a special line of school furniture. At the moment they need more machines to equip the plant to finish what they make. Until they are able to obtain certain equipment they will not be able to make the equipment our schools want.

The minister has had a lot of business experience. I hope he will see to it that some latitude is given to enable branch plants of United States firms located in Canada to finish the products that they can make. I repeat, I think the minister has something there and I should like to encourage him in every way possible to promote shipment to the United States of any material made in Canadian branches of United States plants, material which is exactly the same as that made in the parent plant in the United States. I cannot understand why a plant in the United States which has a branch in Canada should hesitate to encourage the importation into the United States of goods made in their Canadian plants. If that were done we would save a lot of United States dollars, and it would be doing no injury to our friends across the line.

When I take part in a debate I always try to add something worth while. Because of my long business experience I believe the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply has something in that program. I want to support him in that regard.

There are one or two other matters on which I should like to speak while I am on my feet. I should like those who have to do with issuing permits to use their best judgment in that regard. Do not ask busy men, big business managers, sales managers and their advisers, to come down to Ottawa to obtain a permit for some small item. I hope that in working out the program the two ministers have in mind, busy men will not have to come here for everything if a letter will do. I have no doubt that the department has officials who will be available to determine at once, even from a good letter, whether they should issue a permit or not. I hope consideration will be given to these busy men. They find it difficult enough to make a go of business without being harassed in coming down here to get a permit for a small item. Perhaps that is another way the two departments can assist in saving United States dollars. When the matter is laid clearly before the department I hope there will not be too much difficulty in getting a permit.

I wish to say to the Minister of Finance that Canadians generally want to assist him in saving United States dollars. I think everybody is imbued with the idea that it is necessary to do that. How can we assist him? I think Canadians want to help him. We all realize that we must cut down on what we buy from the other side. On the other hand we must enable those who are producing in Canada equipment containing something produced in the United States to be able to finish that equipment. If someone asks for a permit for a small machine or a small part of a machine to assist in making his product—for instance, school furniture—or some small part to complete the equipment which when completed could be exported back to the United States, thus bringing in United States dollars, I hope the two departments will use their best judgment to help business. I think most people really want to do the best job they can for Canada under present conditions. That is the spirit we all should have.

I wish to mention one further item, namely, stone. Many of the schools in the big centres use a great deal of Indiana limestone and other special types, and additions to some schools are planned. No one knows better than do the two ministers that two different types of stone cannot be used in the outside walls of a school without spoiling the whole symmetry of it. I do not know just what can be done. We do not want to import any more stone than necessary. But if a case like the one I have mentioned should arise, I suggest to the two ministers that they see to it that no trouble occurs. If it is a whole new school building that is planned, they should see to it that the school is built wholly of Canadian material, if it is available or if it can be substituted. But where a school is partly built and an addition is being made, I suggest that some judgment be used in deciding whether the material required to build that addition should be admitted or not. At the moment I do not know whether it is admitted. I hope the best expectations of the government will be realized and that as much foreign exchange as possible can be saved. I for one want to help in achieving that objective.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank the hon. member for Davenport for his remarks. I shall see that the parts which relate to schedule III are brought to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My hon. friend can rest assured that both of us will do whatever we can to minimize any necessary inconvenience to the Canadian public as a result of these unfortunate restrictions.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Davenport, but I should like to point out to the committee that I feel that specific items should be dealt with under the proper section, such as sections 3, 4 and 5. There are lengthy schedules under which specific items may also be dealt with.

Mr. QUELCH: I wish to address a question to the minister with regard to the conservation of United States exchange. Can the minister tell the committee how far discussions have gone with regard to the Hyde Park agreement? The specific point I have in mind is this. Last week my attention was drawn to an article which stated that the United States would be buying from Canada farm produce for re-export to Europe, and that the price paid therefor would be similar to the price we receive under the British agreement. If that is correct, I should like to ask if that price would apply to all farm produce bought from Canada by the United States for re-export to any country in Europe, or would apply only to the farm produce bought from Canada for re-export to the United Kingdom as part of Canada's commitments to that country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have seen some of the press reports to which the hon. member for Acadia has referred. However there have been no discussions along those lines with the United States authorities, and of course there cannot be any until congress has decided on what plan, if any, is to be approved for purchases for assistance to Europe. As I have said on a number of occasions, we are hopeful; we believe that if a plan is passed it will authorize what have come to be known as offshore purchases, and that there would be funds available for the purchase in Canada of the things we have to sell and which are needed in western European countries. To answer my hon. friend's question specifically, for the reasons I have explained there have been no discussions with the United States government authorities as to the basis on which such commodities will be purchased.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to say a word on the amendment, and to remind the committee that the tenor of it is to point out that this bill is likely to be on the statute book for some time. With that wise caution which nearly all lawyers develop in the course of their practice the minister said he was "not going to attempt to hazard any prophecy or guess as to how long we might have to continue some kind of proper action to conserve our exchange and reserve position." I notice that his colleague, the Minister of Reconstruction, is still unrepentant about his use of the word "months", because he is reported to have used it again in Halifax a night or two ago. I want to point out that this bill has no time limit on it, although the foreign exchange control bill, to which we made so much objection, did have a time limit. I believe it has only a little more than a year to run.

I want to point out again—I intend to say it in season, and perhaps the minister will sometimes think out of season—that this is a bill conferring arbitrary power of a kind absolutely foreign to all the professions of the party opposite. I am sorry that the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) has left the chamber; he was in his seat earlier. I was proposing to ask him, in view of the things he has had to say about Liberalism, what he has to say about this arbitrary power. I should like to point out again that no matter in what temporarily pleasant hands arbitrary power is placed, it is still arbitrary power.

In December when we were here I ventured to make a prophecy. I ventured to say there would be little demur or protest from the business community, and I said the reason was that they would be afraid to come here. I do not often venture into the realm of prophecy, but I have had that one proved to my entire satisfaction. One of my friends tells me that he went to something like a dozen business firms to get some comment from them. Not one would say a word. And who is to blame them? After all, they may have to come down here next week to try to make some terms with the minister. I want to say again —and I hope my friends in the business community will hear me—that this is arbitrary power of the very kind that existed in Germany. I do not intend to talk about national socialism and all that kind of thing, but power is power. I want them to know that this is the same kind of power that the businessmen in Germany welcomed and thought would not hurt them a great deal. Indeed, for a while they thought it went nicely and even ministered to their profit. In the end they found that arbitrary power was not a pleasant thing.

I have just one further word to say. The gentlemen to my immediate left, even in the somewhat extreme suggestions which in our opinion they have from time to time made as to the exercise of power, have never I believe suggested a power like this, where one man has it in his hands to make or unmake any business which has, as so many have, the need of substantial imports from the United States. Therefore we have a government today which is going beyond even socialistic doctrines so far as they would be applied at the present time by the gentlemen to our left. I ask the business community to remember that. I understand their difficulty at the moment, but I remind them again that when this sort of thing begins you can never tell where it will end.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Order. I really believe a great deal of this discussion should have taken place on second reading of the bill. I have been very indulgent so far, and I hope that indulgence will not be abused.

Mr. PEARKES: Speaking to the amendment, I notice that on page 323 of Hansard for December 16 the heading given when the minister introduced his bill was, "Foreign exchange conservation". Obviously even the editor of Hansard seemed to have some doubt as to whether or not there was an emergency in connection with this bill. Then turning to page 336 of Hansard for the same date, the minister was speaking and reference was made to the reason for the imposition of some of the taxes; and they were said to be imposed in order to protect the regular suppliers in the United States and the dealer organizations in Canada. I do want to suggest that a degree of protection is required for those producers in Canada who are growing the vegetables required to replace those which are prohibited.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): If the hon. member will permit me, I suggest that in the following sections and schedules he will find ample opportunity to deal with specific matters, instead of bringing them to the attention of the committee at the present time.

Mr. PEARKES: I want to refer to one statement made by the minister on February 10, when he was again dealing with the production of vegetables and referring to lettuce and tomatoes produced in hothouses. He rather insinuated that vegetables produced under those conditions were not equal to those produced in the United States under natural conditions. I do suggest this fallacy was exploded many years ago, and that all kinds of tests—

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not intend to give that impression. I said they were luxuries, but I do not know whether or not they are as good.

Mr. PEARKES: The minister's words are at page 1082 of Hansard:

. . . it would be far better to buy lettuce and tomatoes where they are grown naturally in the open. . .

If I have placed the wrong interpretation upon those words I shall be very glad to have the minister correct me.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was just assuming it was more expensive to grow them under glass; that is what I was referring to.

Mr. PEARKES: I want to point out that this is the time when the vegetable growers on Vancouver island are actually sowing their vegetables. That is done during February and March, and this is the time they have to make a decision as to whether or not they are going to plant more than they have planted in the past. Therefore I would ask the minister whether he could give the same degree of assurance to those vegetable growers on Vancouver island that he has given to producers in the United States, that they may have a reasonable degree of protection.

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, Mr. Chairman, in the first place I have not given the growers in the United States any assurance that they will have any protection at all. All I have said is that I can give no one in this country any assurance as to how long these restrictive measures will remain in force. That is as far as I have gone; and I have repeated that statement on a great many occasions, about as many times as the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has made his speech about the arbitrary powers contained in this bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And you will hear it again.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I can add anything to what I said the other evening.

Mr. LOCKHART: I believe another hon. member may intend to introduce a new matter, but I should like to ask a question in relation to a brief reference the minister made a moment ago. I am confused; I am just wondering where one may come in. The minister said this bill was based originally on the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, or that it was made necessary because of the application of that act.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I said the order in council which is now in effect, or the regulations which are now in effect prohibiting imports from the United States and placing others under quota, were passed under the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, which as my hon. friend knows is another statute which was enacted by this house a year or so ago and that the government felt it would be more appropriate to have a special statute introduced in this house and adopted to cover these particular restrictions. That was my statement.

Mr. LOCKHART: Granted that, the very first sentence at the top of Bill No. 3 is "an act respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources". The hon. member for Kingston City raised a point in connection with the imposition of certain control regulations at border points. Since this discussion has been under way three or four very serious matters have come to my attention. If the minister says that cannot be done, or if you, Mr. Chairman, rule that it cannot be done under section 1, the short title, would someone please advise me just where a member may bring up a matter of this kind? You have said there was a lengthy discussion on the motion for the second reading, but at the same time there are particular matters which should be dealt with, and I am wondering if there is any place in this bill where I might bring up briefly one or two points.

Mr. ABBOTT: If I may make an observation I would say there is no place in this bill at which my hon. friend or any other hon. member could properly discuss the operations of the foreign exchange control board. A discussion of that matter could perhaps take place on various occasions. One such occasion I can think of offhand would be when the appropriation in my estimates for the administration of the foreign exchange control board is before the house. At that time, of course, hon. members would have full liberty to air any question relating to the administration of the board, which as my hon. friend knows is an agency of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. LOCKHART: Then if there is a specific matter having to do with the conservation of United States dollars I take it we must search through schedules I, II and III to find a place where that discussion would be in order. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend knows, this bill relates only to the importation of commodities. On the appropriate schedule, or on one of the sections dealing with permits, I should think the hon. gentleman could make any observations he wished as to the way permits issue and administration was being handled; but it would have to relate to matters concerning the import of commodities. Travel restrictions, for instance, could not be debated under this bill.

Mr. LOCKHART: I am not worrying about travel restrictions, but it appears to me this is a case of confusion worse confounded.

Mr. KNOWLES: If the hon. member for York West is serious in proposing his amendment that the word "emergency" be struck out of the title, I rise to oppose it. Like the hon. member, if he was here, I voted against second reading of the bill. It seems to me the one redeeming feature of the bill, since I am opposed to it, is that it is only an emergency measure. If you took out that word, since there is no time limit in the bill, as the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has pointed out, it seems to me we would have on our necks permanently something we do not want. The hon. member may have had some point in mind in offering his amendment; but it seems to me to be ridiculous. We should vote on it and get on with the bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have been waiting until the end of the discussion on this section before making my reply. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked for some information at the last sitting, and before we finish the discussion on this section I should like to give it. I shall be prepared to say a few words when other hon. members have concluded what they have to say with respect to this striking amendment.

Mr. SKEY: The other evening when this section was under discussion the minister and I took part in a verbal exchange. He expressed a view which I should like to bring to the attention of the committee, and with your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I should like to place some facts on record.

The minister referred to the reports of the banks of Canada as reliable documents, and suggested that I should read them.

Mr. ABBOTT: Just in fun.

Mr. SKEY: Well, I have read them—or at least those of them I could find. He suggested that they approved the action taken by the government. I have been able to find one reference in a bank report in which he might be interested. In a statement made by Mr. Dobson, president of the Royal Bank—and as I do not know this gentleman I hope his being quoted in the committee will not make him subject to penalty—he says:

> Something drastic had to be done. Whether the restrictions imposed will prove effective remains to be seen. All hoped the controls would be temporary.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Then I turn to a statement by Mr. Bryden, of the North American Life Assurance Company, who was a graduate in commerce and finance and got his training from the same sources from which Mr. Rasminsky of the Bank of Canada received his training. Mr. Bryden states:

> The Canadian dollar is being held at parity with the United States dollar, when it is perfectly obvious that our balance of payments with United States doesn't justify such a rate. Other currencies generally are being held at exchange rates which cannot be justified on the basis of their balance of payments with us.

Those are two financial references. The third comes from the president of the Royal Trust Company, who has this to say:

> In consequence of this we fail to realize that our thinking could be simplified if we went down to what I believe to be the basic fact that there can be no lasting cure for international financial difficulties without a return to free convertibility of national currencies at realistic exchange rate.

That is the financial side. Then, referring briefly to the commercial side, I would quote what was said as recently as two nights ago over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by Mr. Courtland Elliott, executive member of the Canadian chamber of commerce:

> The facts probably are that the present emergency is due, not to a few acts of recent occurrences, but to the combination of a whole series of interferences by government planners which had the effect, at one time or another, of upsetting the normal functioning of prices, interest rates, wages, foreign exchange values and other factors.

I do not ask the minister to rise in his place and attempt to refute the quotations I have made.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree with them, in substance.

Mr. SKEY: I merely rise to say that when there was a great government campaign in respect of price controls Mr. Donald Gordon was in charge of the prices board. The government went out, with Mr. Donald Gordon back of it, to sell the Canadian public on this measure. We now see that those false controls could not keep the Canadian people from suffering from the tremendous rise in prices. I would now apply the same lesson to the exchange situation. If in this instance the government goes out to sell this policy to the Canadian people, offering it as the only solution, it will find itself in the same position as that in which it found itself in connection with price controls.

All I urge is that the minister and his advisers take counsel with themselves, keep an open mind on the subject, and do not try to tell the Canadian people that this is the only way out.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank my hon. friend for his advice. The government is in favour of the free convertibility of currency, and it is in favour of realistic exchange rates. It believes that the Canadian exchange rate is a realistic rate.

As to keeping an open mind, we will always try to do that. I am not prepared to say that this is the only way of solving the problem. However, after a great deal of careful consideration the government did come to the conclusion that it was the best available means at this time. That is why the measure is before the house.

Mr. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I have three observations to make. Two of them I will be allowed to make, but I am not so sure of the third one; therefore I shall leave it to the last.

First I will ask the minister a short question requiring only a short answer. In reply to the hon. member for Acadia he used the expression "offshore purchases". What does that mean?

Mr. ABBOTT: It has come almost to be recognized as a term of jargon. It means purchases made outside the United States with funds appropriated under the European recovery plan.

Mr. BENTLEY: We thought so, but we were not sure.

Mr. ABBOTT: Those have come to be generally understood as offshore purchases.

Mr. BENTLEY: We could have a better definition.

Then, coming to my next point; I am a law-abiding citizen and am anxious to abide by the rules of the house. I do not wish to do anything to embarrass anyone. At the same time I do not want to be deprived of my rights as a member. I believe half of the comments made here this afternoon could have been ruled out of order so far as the subject under discussion is concerned. What I have to say is along the same line, but perhaps with a different slant, and I should like to know whether I shall be permitted to proceed or whether we will hold strictly to the rules, as a result of which I would have to wait until next July to say what I should like to say now or in the near future.

Mr. ABBOTT: Have a try now.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I know the hon. member for Swift Current fully realizes that the Chairman as such has no personal preference. However he must help to enforce the rules—and on this point the rules are definite. I would refer hon. members to standing order 58 (2) which states clearly:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The Chairman of necessity must rule in accordance with what I have read.

Mr. BENTLEY: It is so difficult to decide exactly whether what one has to say falls within that scope. I think in some respects I am within it, although possibly in other respects someone may find that I am not.

A moment ago the minister replied to the hon. member for Acadia who had stated that there was more to the Hyde Park agreements than meets the eye. I have reason to believe that the Hyde Park agreements and the later arrangements made between Canada and the United States have had some influence upon this bill. I want to remind the house that the other day I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if there was anything more to the Hyde Park agreements than the house already knew. His reply was concise and definite, that only what appeared in the President's and the Prime Minister's statements on April 20, 1941, as issued to the press, was contained in them. However, the Ottawa Citizen of February 7 had this to say:

> The Washington correspondent of the Evening Citizen, Mr. Peter Inglis, however, has found that the senate committee on small businesses is in possession of much more "evidence."

He then goes on to discuss the whole matter, and he deals with the problems that confront the Canadian people because of this bill and other measures that are before us, such as the Geneva trade agreements. He points out that arrangements have been made between the two countries which have never been formalized or, as he puts it, have never been coded; nevertheless they are in the archives of the two nations. Apparently under this arrangement letters between Mr. Ray Atherton and the present Minister of National Defence indicated that while the United States government recognizes Canada as the forty-ninth state in the matter of receiving imports such as oil and steel, nevertheless, and again I quote his words:

—it offers Canada no apparent help in her present dollar difficulties.

On other occasions we have contended that it was unfair to apply the non-discriminatory clauses of the Geneva trade agreements to this particular bill. But the fact remains that in one section of the bill it is stated that permits will not be issued unless in the opinion of the minister they are necessary or hardship will result. We have seen no evidence since the minister assumed charge of his department that he has a mind which is receptive to other people's opinions. Apparently he is quite opinionated. We find that generally he has made up his mind before he comes into the house and there is no use offering any argument here. He contends that everything in this bill is all right, but the fact is that these non-discriminatory clauses are working hardship on some businessmen.

A short time ago the hon. member for Davenport said that he hoped the big business men of Canada would not be inconvenienced by having to come to Ottawa to see officials in order to get permits. I submit that it is infinitely more important that the small businessman be not required to do that. The big businessmen can afford to hire emissaries; they have expense accounts and they can send their people down, but the small businessmen have no possible way of getting down here, and, as someone suggested the other day, having a cup of coffee with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a glass of Scotch with some other people, and a dinner with someone else. They simply cannot afford to come here and buy Scotch and Coca Cola.

An hon. MEMBER: Unfair to use trade names.

Mr. BENTLEY: In looking through the bill I cannot find any section which would cover the illustration I want to give, but the fact is that the particular item has been banned. A small businessman in my city has been running a little shop where he sells goods. He is a good businessman and he has been able to get many customers. He recently took on the agency for the Norge and Magic Chef cooking ranges which use propane or bottled gas. Because of his aggressive sales policy and the fact that he was located in a section of the country where there was an immediate response because of a shortage of other fuel such as electricity and so on, he was able to build up a fair business. In the early stages he could handle the delivery of the bottled gas with his own truck, but later on the business developed to the point where he had to keep larger quantities of this propane gas in store in order to assure a continuity of service to the people to whom he had sold stoves. This meant a heavy investment. To a big businessman the investment may have represented only peanuts, it may have represented only the cost of a couple of trips to Ottawa, but it was a large investment for this man to make. He now finds that he cannot import Norge or Magic Chef stoves from the United States, and that it is difficult to get propane gas. His investment is lying idle, or mostly idle, because he cannot store the stuff. He could have bought the stoves from Great Britain, but he is not allowed to do it. The British trade commissioner wired on December 19 that these cooking ranges are on the prohibited list from Great Britain.

We are supposed to be dealing with the principle of the bill, and I contend that that prohibition is unfair. The only item I can find that applies to this is item ex 446a on the last page of the newly printed bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would come under item ex 443 on page 10.

Mr. BENTLEY: The fact that there is an item in the bill makes it no better or no worse; it just makes it a little easier for me to understand it. I think the minister should give consideration to some of these things. We want British goods over here. Our people have indicated their willingness to use these commodities. Our merchants have indicated their willingness to merchandise them in this country. A majority of this House of Commons has indicated belief in private enterprise and private initiative. Surely things should not be done that hamper initiative simply because some other nation desires the application of the non-discriminatory clauses contained in the Geneva agreements.

I should like to refer to a speech made in this house by the Minister of Finance, who said, when asked why he applied these non-discriminatory clauses:

While it possibly could not be called a fetish with them—

That is the United States.

—it is a principle to which great importance is attached.

I have been suspicious of what has been going on in the last few years, and I believe that we are actually being sold to the United States. Before we go any further with it I should like to know the terms of sale. I can see no earthly reason for banning British goods from this country. In this connection I should like to quote a reprint from the Toronto Globe and Mail, appearing in the Vancouver News-Herald of January 30, 1948. It says in part:

> The intent of the program was to discourage purchases from the United States. But the same bans were applied to the soft currency countries, which were thus deprived of any chance to repay us in goods for the credits we had extended them. Mr. Abbott and his brain trust, in their eagerness to keep Washington happy, evoked a "non-discrimination" clause. Its effect has been to discriminate most harshly both against the Canadian people who have to pay the cost and against those nations we should be seeking to help.
> The British board of trade, for instance, released on December 11 a list of manufactured articles available for export. Of 86 items on the list, 39 were under the import ban, 13 were restricted by quotas, 21 were subject to 25 per cent excise tax and 13 could be imported only under permit.

I submit that the whole thing is unfair and that parts of this bill should be revised by the minister to make it acceptable to the Canadian people as a whole and to this house as representative of the people.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I had better answer now one or two points raised by my hon. friend. First he referred to the Hyde Park agreement and intimated that this bill is in some way tied in with benefits we got from the United States under the Hyde Park or some other agreement. That is not the case. The Hyde Park agreement during the war actually resulted in the purchase in Canada by the United States of about one and a quarter billion dollars worth of goods and that accounted in substantial measure for the very strong position in which our dollar reserves were at the end of 1945.

I have answered my hon. friend's point as to the non-discriminatory clause on two or three occasions. As to the United States making almost a fetish of non-discrimination, we do too. No country has a greater stake in the principle of non-discrimination than has Canada and being of that opinion we feel that we should set an example. I have repeated time and again that on balance this does not prejudice exporters from soft currency areas. On the contrary it helps them enormously. But because of the quota system, while that results in severe restrictions of United States imports, it permits a tremendous expansion of importations from soft currency countries.

As to propane gas type stoves and heating and cooking apparatus, importations are very heavy running into several million dollars. I cannot say offhand how much of that is represented by the propane type of gas stove, but the proportion would be substantial. We have to select some things to exclude. The government has no illusion that this will be a popular measure. We fully realize that, in essence, it is bound to be unpopular, but it is one of those things which the government has to do on occasion. There is no doubt that this is not a vote-catcher. I have no illusions that we are going to get a lot of votes by this measure. But the measure is an unfortunate necessity. If we are going to accept responsibility for the restriction of imports, we have to restrict something; we have to select the less essential commodities which are in reasonably good supply in Canada. I daresay that propane gas type stoves are produced here.

Mr. BENTLEY: By two firms which have practically a monopoly.

Mr. ABBOTT: That business has grown up largely in the last two or three years. If some means can be found of affording some relief there, well and good, but, as I said at the outset when I announced this policy on November 17, there are bound to be some hardships and inconveniences. We have tried to make them as little as possible. These articles on the prohibited list have been selected with the greatest care. We have endeavoured to select articles which were imported primarily from United States dollar areas rather than from soft currency areas. I think we have been pretty successful in that, because I am informed that if imports were on the same scale as last year the whole prohibited list would exclude only one and a quarter million dollars worth of goods from the United Kingdom, which is negligible compared with the total importations. That is the position with respect to the non-discriminatory question. It is, of course, non-discriminatory. We believe strongly in that principle. It is not as non-discriminatory in fact as it is in form. We have maintained the principle of non-discrimination, and I for one believe and the government believes that it is in the interests of Canada that this principle should be maintained.

Mr. BENTLEY: I just want to comment on the minister's statement about these gas stoves being made in Canada. They are made I believe, by two firms in Canada, McClary and Clare Bros. McClary and Clare Bros., if they make them, have a policy of granting an exclusive agency, and because of that, other dealers are shut off from this source of supply. It is virtually a monopoly for these two firms and their agents. Something should be done to ease that situation in the interests of the Canadian consumer, if these stoves are manufactured here, and I understand that they are. Otherwise the minister will only confirm my original statement that he never changes his mind once he brings his policy into the house.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not agree. I have changed my mind in a number of cases. I have made a number of amendments when they have been shown to be desirable or necessary, and since these restrictions were imposed we have made many changes in them as announced. I have been accused from other quarters of wobbling back and forth, but as I said the other night, I have no desire to earn the reputation of being either a mule or a jellyfish. If some change is shown to be sound I will make it, but the general principle remains, and one cannot be continually carving out of the list this article or that until we are much more nearly out of the woods in regard to exchange.

Mr. JACKMAN: Perhaps the minister will later give an answer to this question which arises out of his remarks. Where a barrier has been imposed against soft currency countries has that barrier not made it difficult, if not impossible, for those soft currency countries to ship their goods into Canada? The reason I ask the question is this. We find that the retailer in Canadian towns and cities has not been able to purchase some British textiles because he could not pass on the cost expressed in sterling. If British textiles and other goods from soft currency countries have to leap over a tariff barrier, even though only a small preferential one, it may exclude much more than one and a quarter million dollars worth of goods which the minister mentioned as being on the prohibited list.

I support the amendment of my colleague the hon. member for York West in regard to the use of the word "emergency." I have just consulted the dictionary and I find that emergency is a sudden juncture demanding immediate action. This particular juncture has been growing for a long time. The minister informed us yesterday that his experts made very few mistakes, that they had been working on this list since last June or so.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said the middle of the summer.

Mr. JACKMAN: I can point out to the minister some glaring errors which have since been rectified, after all the midnight oil that was spent in preparing the list. The word "emergency" means a sudden juncture. I doubt whether that applies here. The word "temporary" is generally taken to be a word of not such acute significance. It means only "for a time". I do not think that word would be suitable either. The word "permanent" means "lasting", or "intended to last". Judging from what these controls are likely to bring about, I think they are more apt to be of a permanent nature. Therefore I have no hesitation in supporting most heartily the amendment of my colleague asking that the word "emergency" be deleted. Since we have not heard from the Minister of Finance or from any of his colleagues on the government side it may be that he is enthusiastic and willing to accept it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said I was going to wait until everybody had expressed their opinion.

Mr. JACKMAN: I realize that. As I say, I do not think that "emergency" is the right word—

Mr. ABBOTT: I was not sure whether the hon. member for York West was serious or not in his amendment.

Mr. JACKMAN: I understand it is difficult to know whether the minister is serious or not. I heard the other day that officials in the department used to be very much concerned because the predecessor of the minister used to be worried about everything. Now they are very much concerned because the present incumbent of the office worries about nothing.

Mr. ABBOTT: Who can tell.

Mr. JACKMAN: Who can tell? I should like to point out, first, that there is nothing temporary about the condition in which we find our trade position. It has been a chronic situation with us for years and years vis-à-vis the United States. In the bill which the minister has brought down there is no time limit set at all. Should this house overlook the fact there is no time limit set we can be very thankful that there is another place, just as we found in the foreign exchange control bill. When our protestations were of no avail, hon. gentlemen in the other place were able to enforce upon the government a certain time limit. I think the Minister of Finance, who at that time may have been a parliamentary assistant, said that they would not make any changes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was Minister of National Defence at the time.

Mr. JACKMAN: But changes were made. I remember that in a corridor conversation he said that changes would not be made, but changes were made.

The second point I wish to make in regard to the use of the word "emergency" is that there is nothing curative in the present regulations in this bill. It is entirely as I have said twice in this house, very much like a patient who takes insulin, which keeps him alive from day to day but cures nothing. At least the minister should point out to the committee just how or where he expects our exchange position to be righted, and how he expects to look forward to having the condition remain righted and the controls removed at the same time. So far as one can see, these controls will be with us probably forever unless some adventitious event occurs and helps the government out of its predicament. The method of cure which many of us on this side of the house prefer is, of course, the more normal and natural one, the one which has worked in times gone by, namely, devaluation, perhaps step by step and within Bretton Woods, as I believe we shall be allowed to do. The question now is whether one wants the government to put on selective controls; whether the people want the government to prohibit this item or that or put it on the quota basis, or whether the people themselves, under the natural working of exchange, allow our dollar to go to the discount at which it is entitled to sell because of our prodigal buying. Do they want the government to tell them they may have this and that, or are we to continue under conditions as they have always operated in a free economy? There is not very much difference except as to who is to do the dictating, the individual or the government.

Are we to allow the normal method of economic law to work the situation out and to right it permanently and give it a permanent, self-righting cure? Is the government to decide whether we shall have $150 each to travel in the United States, or whether we can spend $10 for lettuce in the cold season? Personally I would much rather spend $10 for lettuce in place of being told by the government that I could have $150 to go to the United States. The people of Canada do not want to be told how they may spend $20 or $25. They want to be given a certain freedom.

One generation may have been raised without lettuce and fresh vegetables in the wintertime. Another generation may have different ideas. Surely people can spend their own money the way they want to spend it, and if the government makes so much United States exchange available per capita, let the individual spend it as he wishes.

Mr. HOWE: Appalling hardship.

Mr. JACKMAN: Quite a hardship.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is a hardship to a great many people in Canada. People want to be freed from this irritation.

Mr. ABBOTT: The amount of $2,800,000 worth of lettuce in the base period.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why should some fresh vegetables not be permitted to come into the country?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I am in the hands of the committee, but I do not think all this discussion should take place on the short title. If the committee wants a general discussion of all items on the short title I shall be satisfied. Surely the committee wants to follow the rules if it hopes to make any progress in this important legislation. Unless we follow the rules we shall never make any progress.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am always very glad to bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but the question is whether or not the word "emergency" is applicable in this particular bill or whether it is not. This is an extremely important bill. Nothing at all is said about a time limit except that it is to expire on the proclamation of the governor general. The whole embodiment of the bill has to do with an emergent matter, but the very substance of it indicates that it is to be of a permanent nature. I hope, sir, that you are keeping that in mind if you feel that you must rule against me. I consider that the present regulations are not getting us anywhere. The government was impressed with the holding of the dam during December when the outflow was not as great as formerly. It is very much like a person who has been laying in a great store during the summer months. As the minister well knows, all the importers bought as much as they could. They used all the bank credit they could and even endeavoured to raise loans from private sources in order to buy United States products in the event that when the controls finally did come about, which were so well known to all these importers, they would then simply coast along for a while and give the minister's exchange account the appearance of having been temporarily righted, perhaps without too great hardship to the people.

I should like the minister to tell us just what there is in the nature of his orders today which will effect a permanent cure. What is there that is not exactly in the nature of a drug which keeps one alive from day to day? Where is the curative nature in these regulations? When may we look forward to their removal? That is where the emergency nature comes in. How are we ever to have them removed? I cannot see it myself, and I think the committee is entitled to some enlightenment. What is the effect of the devaluation in Italy and latterly in France on the government's position?

Mr. ABBOTT: This should not be discussed on section 1 of the bill. I rise to a point of order. I have discussed the question of devaluation ad nauseam. I discussed it when we were on second reading of the bill. I have made three or four speeches on it. The announcement of the government's policy was with respect to the constructive side of this program. This bill admittedly deals with part of the restrictive measures, and we are on section 1, the short title. There must be some limit to the freedom of discussion which we can have on this section of the bill.

Mr. JACKMAN: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, the question is, are these restrictions of an emergency nature, or are they of a permanent nature? There can be no question in my mind that they are of a permanent nature. We shall never get a cure so long as the government follows the policies it has followed up to now.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is your opinion.

Mr. JACKMAN: Unfortunately in these very words are expressed the whole gist of the bill.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Is the hon. member speaking to the point of order raised by the minister?

Mr. JACKMAN: I am explaining.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the point of order? The minister is perfectly right. Surely, the discussion has been going far afield. I do not think it is the intention of the committee to have it carried on indefinitely.

[Mr. Jackman.]

Mr. JACKMAN: Mr. Chairman, if you are going to rule against me I am forced to obey your ruling. The question is whether or not the matters outlined in the bill and the acts which are done under it are emergent, or whether they are not. I am claiming that there are a great many points which illustrate that, and I hope that members on the government side will pay some heed to the arguments I am putting forward. As a matter of fact, as far as I gathered, I have had good attention. I asked the minister a question which, I grant, was far afield. It was whether he had changed his mind since the devaluation of the franc. That was merely a theoretical question on which it may not be necessary to take up the time of the house, but there are a number of points which, I think, are germane to the question of whether or not the word "emergency" should remain in the title of the bill. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will continue.

What I should like to know is this. If these regulations are entirely of a temporary or emergent nature, as I assume the minister will suggest, how are we to re-establish our credit in the United States? It would seem at the present time that we cannot borrow there except from a government agency, the export-import bank. If we are to go to private sources there, as we ordinarily do as a self-respecting country, what is there to be of a permanent nature on which bankers can rely so that they can see that, if we borrow in United States exchange, we shall be in a position to make repayment? As long as these regulations do not cure but merely keep alive, I do not feel that we are likely to re-establish our credit. The minister should point out to us what there is of a curative nature here which will, over the long term, keep the Canadian dollar in balance at some appropriate level.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only cure will be to export more and import less.

Mr. JACKMAN: There are various ways of doing that. The government may select one method and the people may prefer another. What I should like to ask the minister in regard to this "temporary" or "emergency" nature is this. What is to be the position of our country should we re-establish triangular trade as we had it before, and for the re-establishment of which we are now advancing hundreds of millions of dollars of credit? Again, we are the natural breadbasket for Great Britain and certain parts of Europe. What is to be the position of the Canadian dollar, first, vis-à-vis sterling and, second, vis-à-vis the United States dollar? In times gone by, when we were not on the gold standard, when you could not exchange all currencies at parity, we occupied a midway position. Today we find our dollar on a level with the United States dollar and sterling at a substantial discount. Should we be successful in restoring the triangular trade basis on which we functioned for so long in the past, when are we to readjust our currency so that we can get back to that normal position? Or would the minister be good enough to say that that is a condition which we should no longer have to look forward to, that our dollar can remain high? I am getting back again to whether this is a permanent cure or merely a temporary expedient. Would the minister at the same time explain to the committee why it was that our dollar sold at a discount in relation to the United States dollar at various times in our economic history, when our costs of manufacturing were not higher than United States costs; which situation, I understand from his previous expostulations, was the only reason why a country should ever consider devaluation of its currency. Perhaps the minister can give us some help.

Mr. HOWE: Why not buy a good book on it?

Mr. JACKMAN: Not the kind the Minister of Trade and Commerce read the other day. In fact, he was not reading any book at all. He was making up his own theory. In order not to burden the committee further, I would ask the minister to point out whether there is, in his opinion, anything of a curative nature in these present restrictions or whether they are merely a stopgap to keep us going from day to day.

Mr. ABBOTT: To answer the last question —and I will not take the time of the committee to answer some of the others because they are theoretical—I have said time and time again that this particular measure is not a curative measure; it is a restrictive one; and that in the final analysis our situation will not be permanently cured until we can get paid in convertible currency in cash for what we export, in order to pay our bills in the United States. Because of the position we are in at the moment we must take restrictive action, and we shall have to continue that restrictive action until the constructive measures to which I have referred time and time again in other speeches have had time to work out.

Mr. JACKMAN: What ones?

Mr. ABBOTT: On the question of what we shall do in our pattern of triangular trade and what will happen in the future, I would say that we have a pattern of triangular trade now. If my hon. friend asks what we shall do when sterling again becomes convertible—and that, after all, is the test—that is a different question. We are selling substantial quantities now for a currency which is not convertible into United States dollars—perhaps his opinion on that is as good as mine. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have a short question to ask. I wonder if I interpret the minister's last remarks correctly by this illustration. It seems to me that he has told us that we are drowning in ten feet of water, but through this excellent government bill we are now going to drown in only eight feet of water. That seems to be about the situation.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend, in his usual graphic way, has given an illustration; but I suggest that we are not drowning at all, that we are taking appropriate action to protect our position and taking it in time, and that effective action is getting results.

Mr. KNOWLES: You set up a committee to find out where the water came from.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was interested in the minister's statement when he said that we are to use this method only to a point; that it was not a curative measure; that we are to use it until such time as the curative measures we have put into force will take care of the situation. I have never heard of any curative measure which will do that. I wonder whether it is the Marshall plan which he is hoping will afford some assistance? How long does he think it will take those countries in Europe to rehabilitate themselves? I suggest that the minister has not yet told us one of the things we can do in this country, as a curative measure, namely, selling our natural products in the United States in return for the things which we shall get from them; sell our cattle in the United States—

Mr. ABBOTT: And take them from the United Kingdom.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): And I suggest the reason they have not done it—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The Minister of Reconstruction at the present time has great hopes, as a matter of fact, of sending some of the goods which we are to manufacture bits and pieces over to the United States. I say that you might as well send coals to Newcastle as send those goods from this country. I suggest that the cabinet have taken a most unrealistic view of this whole matter. I think they are afraid to face the issue as it ought to be faced right now. We have these conditions and, as my hon. friend says, they have not done anything for us. We are going to drown anyway, whether it is in ten feet of water or in eight feet.

Mr. ABBOTT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am going on for just a minute or two yet.

Mr. ABBOTT: All right, go on. I thought my hon. friend was through.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I say that the government have not taken a realistic view of the matter. If you want to do that, what have you to do? You must stop imports into Canada. Another thing you must do is do it over the whole population, not over just a few people. Why should one firm or one individual be singled out, crucified and put out of business? Why should all the people not bear the burden?

Mr. ABBOTT: Certainly; put them all out of business.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Why should the wheat producers take the price they are asked to take? Why should the burden not be spread over the whole population? That is what I am objecting to. Why not have sense and brains and devalue the dollar? Why stick to a prejudice? That is the point. I want now to quote one paragragh:

> In the meantime the whole economy of Canada is being put through the strains of severe regulation for a possibly unrealistic objective.

This is from the Montreal Gazette, which was discussing reviews made by two publications, one from the sterling area and one from the dollar area, The Economist and the United States News. These fellows who analyse these situations and write these articles are not fools. They have brains. They are on different sides of the water; they both have statistical branches, and so on, as well as economists of no mean skill. Yet our government here, with the help of their advisers, set themselves up to do a certain thing when everyone in the rest of the world says they are crazy to do it. Let me repeat this paragraph:

> In the meantime the whole economy of Canada is being put through hte strains of severe regulation for a possibly unrealstic objective. The United States News would certainly seem to agree with the statement of The Economist that the Canadian cabinet ministers who say that "they hope to start taking controls off in a matter of months . . . show no willingness, let alone any desire, to face the future frankly."

[Mr. Ross (St. Paul's).]

That is so; and in addition they have not told us yet when they hope to take off those controls. The people of Canada are going to be kept in suspense for a long time. My guess is that it will not be a matter of ten or eleven months, as the minister says, but that it will be a matter of years. Once we get these things on, we shall never get them off until we get the government out.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have only one comment to offer on the speech just made by the hon. member for St. Paul's. That is, it is the last of a long series of defeatist speeches from hon. gentlemen sitting opposite. I am not interested in defeatist speeches.

Mr. JACKMAN: What do you mean, "defeatist"?

Mr. ABBOTT: Saying the country cannot get out of its exchange difficulty; that it is in a condition that will last for years; that the only cure is devaluation, and that these methods will not work. I make the assertion that they will work. If hon. gentlemen opposite think they are helping the cause by standing up and saying these methods cannot work, that is their privilege.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister says these things will partly work; that is really what he has told us. He believes these will be a help. I want the minister to rise in his place and let us in this House of Commons know what steps the government intend to take to see that our exchange situation becomes normal. He cannot depend on getting sufficient convertible currency from Great Britain for years; he knows that as well as I do. We have to do something for the people of Great Britain and the countries of Europe. We have to do that; everyone knows it. What is the use of calling these loans? They are not loans. We have to help these people for our own satisfaction. If the minister can tell me what steps the government propose to take, it will be the first time he has told this House of Commons.

Mr. ABBOTT: In order to save the time of the committee, I will send my hon. friend copies of several speeches I have made in the last couple of months. All the answers are there.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should not like the impression of the hon. member for Swift Current, in what he said with respect to my remarks, to go unchallenged. I am sure the hon. member did not mean what I thought he meant in trying to suggest that I was not just as much interested in the small businessman as in the big businessman. I have been in business all my life, and businessmen and employment are my interest. I want to repeat what I said before, that I hope the two departments who have to handle this problem, which is a big problem, will try to work out some method whereby businessmen, large or small—it makes no difference to me, as long as they are employing labour—who find it necessary to ask for an explanation in regard to any regulations, will not always find it necessary to come to Ottawa. When I was speaking a few moments ago I had in mind two men, both large employers of labour. One has 670 men in his plant; the other has about 500. Both these men found it necessary to come to Ottawa, where they remained for about two days. They were treated very well by the departmental officials. From what they told me I am glad to learn that we have officials like those who discussed the problems of those two men, because both those gentlemen went back happy and satisfied, with their troubles eliminated.

What I had in mind was some method whereby such people could write to Ottawa, whether they were big businessmen or small, and have the department here unravel their difficulties without its being necessary for them to come here in person. I know what big businessmen have to do. A man with 670 employees believes it is his duty to be on the job every minute possible. It is no easy task to manage a company employing that many men, and to look after the products they produce. That is what I had in mind. I want both departments to make it as easy as they can for those who are seeing that the wheels of industry turn. I do not want the hon. member for Swift Current to get the impression I am not just as much interested in the small businessman as he is, or anyone else. That is not what I was trying to point out. I was talking for employers of labour, and I shall never cease talking for men who give other men employment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I appreciate what my hon. friend has said about the departmental officials. The section which has been set up to handle this particular phase of the program has been under very heavy pressure since November, but I believe they have tried to meet the inquiries of the public as well as possible. It is not only possible but desirable that requests should be handled by correspondence. I am told we are now getting about 350 letters a day, dealing with matters most of which can be disposed of without the applicant coming to Ottawa. In cases where that is not possible they are asked to come here, but even so it is advantageous to have such matters submitted in writing first, because then the matter can be looked into and the ground prepared.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I did not hear the minister a few moments ago when he interrupted me to say, "and take it away from the poor Britons". Well, I submit that the only reason the poor Britons are taking our cattle and dairy products to such an extent is that these contracts were shoved down the throats of the Britons and they had to accept them on that basis in order to get wheat.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not the case. If the hon. gentleman had been in Britain as I have been, within the last three or four months, he would realize that they are glad to get our bacon and beef and cheese.

Mr. HAZEN: I should like to ask the minister if he or his officials have made any investigation to ascertain whether United States funds can be saved by using Canadian National railway lines wholly within Canada rather than subsidiaries in the United States. I ask that question because last year in the railway committee I asked Mr. Vaughan, president of the Canadian National Railways, what the operating expenses of the Canadian National were on the line that runs from a point near Island Pond, Vermont, to Portland, Maine, and he told me the expenses amounted to $2,674,000. This year I put on the order paper a question asking if that amount was paid in United States funds. I was informed that of that amount, $2,348,482 was paid in United States funds. I am not in a position to say—and this may be looked into further—how much of the gross earnings was paid in United States funds. However, I believe that if the minister looks into the matter carefully he will find that a great proportion of the amount spent on that subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways running to Portland was paid in Canadian funds, while the operating expenses were paid in United States funds.

A dispatch from Ottawa appearing in the Telegraph-Journal on November 28 last states:

> The action of the Canadian National Railways in lowering export freight rates to Portland, Me., is in direct conflict with Canada's austerity program, it was admitted here today by officials of the foreign exchange control board. The belt-tightening program is to conserve United States dollars. The C.N.R.'s action will mean a depletion of this country's holdings of American dollars.

"The loss in United States dollars in the running charges from the border to Portland, where the rail transportation cost is paid in Canada, may be considerable," officials state, "The extent of the loss will depend on how much freight is diverted to Portland."

I do not wish to read further from this press report, but I would suggest that if the minister has not examined into the possibilities of saving United States dollars by having the trade of our country go through Canadian rather than United States ports, and particularly the port of Portland, the matter might well be looked into by him.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall take note of my hon. friend's remarks and look into the matter.

Mr. QUELCH: Before eleven o'clock last Tuesday night, when discussing this bill I brought up the question of prohibitions against soft currency countries, and the minister gave a reply, but it was then too late to discuss the matter further. A few minutes ago the minister made further reference to this matter.

The minister has emphasized the point that the amount of business lost through prohibition against soft currency countries is negligible. I think he would agree that, while the amount of business might be negligible today, it might be greatly increased in the not too distant future. I receive publications from England, and I know that the production of the very things we are prohibiting today is being increased; that is, the amount of their production is being increased today and will continue to be increased considerably in the future. So that the amount of business might be increased considerably in a few months' time.

The other point the minister made was that the government stands solidly behind the principle of non-discrimination. The policy of non-discrimination is merely one principle contained in one article of the general Geneva agreements. I think the minister agrees that the important point is not so much that we do not violate one principle of the general agreement, but that we shall not violate the general agreement in its entirety.

That being so, I suggest that the minister will have to agree that if at any time we place against any one nation a prohibition that we are not called upon to place, under the general agreement, then in fact we are discriminating against that nation. It is all very well to give lip service to the idea of non-discrimination; but when you apply against a nation a prohibition that you are not called upon to apply, under the general agreements, then you are definitely discriminating against that nation.

[Mr. Hazen.]

The degree is not important; that is, it is not important as to whether it is a great deal of business or a small amount of business. That, as I say, is not important; it is a question of principle. And to substantiate my argument, let me quote from the Geneva trade agreement, article XIII of which creates the principle of non-discrimination. But article XIII is definitely modified by article XIV. You cannot take one article out of this agreement, and say that is the principle of it. You have to take the other articles which modify or are related to article XIII.

Article XIV gives the exceptions to the principle of non-discrimination in several ways. Let me refer particularly to subsection 1 (b). Perhaps I should refer to the whole of section 1, which bears the heading, "Exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination". It states:

1. (a) The contracting parties recognize that when a substantial and widespread disequilibrium prevails in international trade and payments a contracting party applying restrictions under article XII may be able to increase its imports from certain sources without unduly depleting its monetary reserves—

And this is the important part:

—if permitted to depart from the provision of article XIII. The contracting parties also recognize the need for close limitation of such departures so as not to handicap achievement of multilateral international trade.

(b) Accordingly, when a substantial and widespread disequilibrium prevails in international trade and payments —

And I interject that certainly that is the situation today.

—a contracting party applying import restrictions under article XII may relax such restrictions in a manner which departs from the provisions of article XIII to the extent necessary to obtain additional imports above the maximum total of imports which it could afford in the light of the requirements of paragraph 2 of article XII if its restrictions were fully consistent with the provisions of article XIII, provided that

(i) levels of delivered prices for products so imported are not established substantially higher than those ruling for comparable goods regularly available from other contracting parties.

I shall stop there. Perhaps the minister may be able to argue under that section that the price level of goods we would be importing from Great Britain would be higher than the price level of goods from elsewhere. But I am not so certain he can substantiate that charge. I have seen quotations showing prices of articles we can import from Great Britain, and they compare favourably with prices of similar goods we can import from the United States today. But if the minister is to make that argument, namely, that we cannot import articles from Great Britain without a violation of article XIII, because the price level of goods is higher, then let me refer him to subsection (6) of article XIV which states:

> The provisions of article XIII shall not enter into force in respect of import restrictions applied by any contracting party pursuant to article XII in order to safeguard its external financial position and balance of payments, and the provisions of paragraph 1 of article XI and XIII shall not enter into force in respect of export restrictions applied by any contracting party for the same reason, until January 1, 1949.

I say when you take those two sections of article XIV you find they definitely modify article XIII which laid down the principle of non-discrimination. Therefore I charge that when you apply against a nation certain provisions which, under the agreement, you are not compelled to apply, you have discriminated against that nation. While the minister may like to give lip service to the principle of non-discrimination, I charge that today this government is unduly discriminating against the United Kingdom.

Another point is that the minister suggested that the benefit we would derive from this policy is far greater than the benefit we would derive from allowing these goods into the country.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said the benefits the United Kingdom would derive.

Mr. QUELCH: I think that is perhaps a matter of opinion. If the minister could argue that the amount of production of these articles which today is prohibited could not be increased, that might be true. But in view of the fact that Great Britain today is greatly increasing the production of those very things, it might tell a different story. I again emphasize this fact, that if we along with the United States, as two great producing nations, try to force upon less fortunate nations agreements which are not to their benefit, we may find that we are building up a position which may very well cause international friction and create war. That will certainly not be to our benefit in the future.

Mr. ABBOTT: I listened attentively to my hon. friend, and I do not think there is anything I can add on this matter of non-discrimination which I have not said already either in the course of the committee discussion on this bill or at other stages.

I have only one other observation to make in connection with what he has said. So far as I am aware, I have not posed any argument in connection with these matters of price levels in Great Britain or in any other country.

Mr. QUELCH: If you have not posed your argument in connection with non-discrimination in price levels in Great Britain, how can you say that in order to adhere to the Geneva trade pact you have to apply prohibitions against Great Britain? I contend that you are just basing your argument on one principle and ignoring the fact that it is made final by article XIV.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not necessarily tied up the Geneva pact with that principle. I have reiterated time and again that Canada believes the non-discrimination principle is in its vital interest. Whether there is an escape clause in the Geneva agreement which would permit us to violate that principle for a twelve months' period is, in my judgment, not particularly relevant.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The object of this bill is to conserve United States currency and the method being used to do this is to restrict imports from the United States. Naturally this will create shortages of many things in Canada. Is it not reasonable that, in order that we be not deprived of those things, our manufacturers, processors and growers should be given some guidance by the government? Is it not possible for the government to say to these people, "This restricted program is going to be in force for two months, for six months, for two years or for ten years"? Surely the government has some policy under which it can say to our growers and manufacturers that this will be in effect, say for at least a year? Does the government still say that it has nothing to give to the people of this country in the way of guidance as to what they should do?

Mr. ABBOTT: The difficulty with these committee discussions is that hon. members pop in and out of the chamber. I answered that question on Tuesday evening and again this afternoon.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The answer is that there is no guidance to be given to the people of Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have repeatedly made my position and that of the government quite clear. These restrictions are considered as being necessarily temporary in nature; they are not protectionist. Unfortunately the people must exercise their own judgment as to how long it is likely to take.

Mr. STEPHENSON: It simply creates confusion. The government has no policy; that is just what has happened.

Mr. ADAMSON: Before the debate on this amendment is closed I should like to reply to a statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The reason just given by the hon. member for Durham is the reason why I moved to delete the word "emergency." It would be of advantage to the Canadian people to know when this provision would likely be terminated. The minister stated that we shall be expected to export more and import less.

Mr. ABBOTT: Or both.

Mr. ADAMSON: Or get our dollars into convertible currency, into cash or into sterling convertibility. In my opinion, those are long-term hopes. I was going to use the word "chronic" in connection with our exchange conservation measures. I looked up the meaning of the word and I find it means "lingering," "lasting" and "inveterate." I would say that our exchange position with regard to hard currency is lingering, lasting and inveterate at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am a bit more optimistic than the hon. member.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister is more optimistic. Those are the hard facts, and they are world-wide. When we come to section 14, I intend to move another amendment setting a terminating date.

Mr. GREEN: It is quite evident that a great deal of discretion will be exercised under the provisions of this bill by departmental officials here in Ottawa, officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is a reasonable possibility of businessmen in Ontario and Quebec being able to come to Ottawa to state their cases before these officials, but it will be extremely difficult for the businessman, particularly the small businessman carrying on business in the west or in the maritimes.

Is there not some way in which discretion could be exercised by officials in more distant parts of the country? For example, there is a collector of customs in Vancouver, a senior official of the government. My understanding is that that collector has absolutely no discretion in connection with the administration of this austerity program. Would it not be possible to delegate some authority, so that a man in business in a small way in Vancouver could go to that collector of customs to tell his story and then find out whether special consideration would be given to his case? It should not be so difficult to work out a remedy.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am very conscious and the officers administering these new restrictions are very conscious of the difficulties faced by businessmen in the far west and the far east. There are not so many discretions exercised under the prohibitions under schedule I and the quotas under schedule II as there are under schedule III with respect to the import of capital goods under the permit system. The whole thing is under constant study, and I shall give careful consideration to the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South to see whether there is any possibility of delegating some authority to customs collectors or others at distant points.

Mr. HOWE: There will be an officer with authority to grant import permits in each of the large centres across Canada. The Department of Trade and Commerce have officers who now have authority to grant export permits and it is intended that the same officers will be empowered to grant import permits.

Mr. GREEN: That would be under schedule III?

Mr. HOWE: That is the schedule where the permits would be required.

Mr. GREEN: That will help a great deal, but the main difficulty is under schedule I which covers the power to deal with hardship cases. Practically all the cases that have been submitted to me come under schedules I and II and it was those cases I had in mind.

If a man in a distant city or town could walk in and tell a collector of customs or some responsible government official his story the possibility is that he would get consideration which he could not get by writing a letter. I have three or four cases of that type on my file, and I am confident that if Mr. Taylor or one of his senior officials were in Vancouver and could interview these men, permits would be granted under the hardship clause, if not under some other provision. At the present time it is practically impossible to get consideration of that kind. I am glad to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce say that he is providing for the granting of power to his officials in connection with schedule III. I do ask that power be given to deal with applications also under schedules I and II.

Mr. ABBOTT: These hardship cases are very special cases, exceptions to the general rule. The provision is that they must be cases of particular hardship. I think it is fair to say that the great majority of those cases will already have been disposed of. Under the orders that exist now and under the statute as proposed that discretion must be exercised by myself. In practice, the way it is handled is this. The facts are submitted to a special committee, headed by Mr. Taylor. The facts are first taken by an official, either by correspondence or otherwise; then considered by this committee which has been set up by me, and that committee makes recommendations. In most cases I have accepted their recommendations where particular hardship has been shown. If there are circumstances which are very unusual they will sometimes discuss them with me first before consideration by the committee. I think it would be quite possible to have men collect the relevant facts, say in Vancouver, and send them here by wire or air mail for consideration by the committee, and by myself, if necessary. But I am afraid that in the very nature of things the discretion is one which has to be exercised here. I would find it difficult to delegate a general power to make these exceptions.

Mr. GREEN: There are several officials on that committee?

Mr. ABBOTT: About four.

Mr. GREEN: What objection would there be to having some members of that committee go to the Pacific coast within the next few days and hear applications there? You would still have the same people making the decision, and you would get around the present difficulty that the small businessman has not a chance to present his case.

Mr. ABBOTT: Businessmen never appear before that committee. Their representations are made to an individual. The committee consists of the assistant deputy minister of finance, Mr. Taylor; Mr. Donald Gordon, representing the foreign exchange control board; Mr. Mackenzie, deputy minister of trade and commerce; Mr. David Sim, deputy minister of customs, and Mr. Taggart of the Department of Agriculture. That is the committee which considers these hardship cases and makes recommendations to me. As my hon. friend will appreciate, it is a very high-level committee, consisting of senior officials. The facts are collected by subordinate officials but they are passed on by this committee. We shall do our best to see that facilities are available at other points to enable those who have cases to submit to get the facts before local officials, but I am afraid the facts will have to be passed upon in the way I have outlined.

Mr. GREEN: There is a wide difference of approach between the two ministers. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said—

Mr. ABBOTT: The conditions are entirely different.

Mr. GREEN: There is no difference at all. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has dealt with his part of the problem by giving authority to men in the different centres to make a decision, and I think he is quite right in doing so. That may be because he has been out to the west coast a great deal more than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not fair.

Mr. GREEN: I do not want to be unfair.

Mr. ABBOTT: That has nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. GREEN: It is a fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is providing for discretion to be exercised in the local centres, and, I repeat, there is no reason why the Department of Finance could not likewise give discretion to representatives in the local community.

Mr. ABBOTT: The Minister of Trade and Commerce will supplement what I have to say. The circumstances are completely different. I have to act as judge whether or not there is a case of particular hardship. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has to decide whether it is proper to issue a permit, say for a printing press to come into Canada, or structural steel, or some other goods. The circumstances are completely different. They are not analogous at all. The Minister of Trade and Commerce can elaborate on that.

Mr. HOWE: In schedule I a prohibition is applied. In schedule II quotas are applied. Neither of these calls for the issuance of a permit. There may be cases of hardship which deserve consideration, but such cases are an exception. In schedule III everything that is admitted requires a permit. Therefore permits are the ordinary routine in schedule III, but not in schedules I and II. Where permits are required, we naturally have the facilities for issuing permits as well located as possible for the convenience of the public. We will have rules laid down governing the issuance of permits, and within those rules the local offices will deal with applications. But if there is a borderline case it will be referred to Ottawa for decision.

Mr. GREEN: May I point out that the quotas are of the same nature.

Mr. HOWE: Not at all.

Mr. GREEN: A quota has to be established for each business. Each business is entitled to a certain quota.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is based on a mathematical formula. There is no discretion.

Mr. HOWE: No permit is required.

Mr. GREEN: A quota has to be set up.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hardship clause has nothing to do with quotas.

Mr. GREEN: I know that. I am pointing out that under schedule II a quota has to be set up for each business.

Mr. ABBOTT: On a mathematical formula. There is no discretion. .

Mr. GREEN: Representations are made by the businessmen concerned. They are making representations now to the committee here in Ottawa. Discretion with regard to these quotas should certainly be given to officials in the local centres, and I can see no reason why hardship cases should not also be dealt with by men in the different centres.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Unless I misunderstood the two ministers, this clause seems to be not quite in accordance with what they said. Section 3 (1) says:

No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada any goods—

Mr. ABBOTT: Had we not better wait until we come to that?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, because this seems to say that permits are required under schedules I, II and III.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend will read further he will see that they are granted by way of quota. In the case of goods under schedule II, that is determined on a mathematical formula and the minister has no discretion. The permit is automatic. Under schedule III there is a discretionary issue of permits for a particular piece of goods.

Mr. GREEN: If the quota permit is automatic, could the local men not issue it without referring the case to Ottawa?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, up to five per cent. The quota is based on the imports of a particular importer in the base period.

Mr. GREEN: The local people are not given an over-all power to issue quotas under schedule II. They may be able to issue quotas for a very small amount, but I understand that they do not make all the decisions on quotas. Is that not right? They may have power to allocate a small percentage of the quota, but the decision that really counts is not made by the local men at all, but in Ottawa.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not a decision because it is determined on the record of performance. What happens is this. The local collector of customs is entitled to give a man five per cent of his quota. The full quota to which he is entitled is determined by examining the customs records here at Ottawa, and Ottawa only; they have to be checked here. The discretionary five per cent is to enable the importer to carry on until such time as the customs records can be checked in order to determine on the mathematical formula what his full quota shall be. That is the method. Disputes may arise over questions of fact in connection with these quotas. I do not know what the practice is. I think the collector of customs would get the facts and it would have to be settled.

Mr. GREEN: At the present time I think everything of that type has to be channeled through Ottawa, and that is one of the things I am complaining about. There should be discretion out in the centres to make these decisions.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that the changes are ordered and issued here and here only of necessity because the records are here, except the five per cent to which I have referred. The quota difficulty will again be ironed out very soon, because the records are being checked and additional staff has been taken on. The great majority of the quota question disputes is as to the facts, and so on, and I think they have already been cleared up.

Mr. GREEN: Then I suggest that the minister go one step further and iron out the hardship cases and make a provision for them to be decided out in the communities, unless there is a very rare issue to be settled.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall do the best I can. It is a judicial function, and it is very hard to delegate that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sure the Minister of Finance did not intend the remark he made to prompt me to make a few further remarks, but it has. He said a few moments ago that these measures were not protectionist. I should like to read a short statement to the committee indicating that his view is not unanimously held.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said the other day they were highly protectionist. Of course they are protectionist, but not intended for protection.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister had a different view a few moments ago.

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This is from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 5 last. I thought this short statement would be of interest:

As a part of the dollar shortage program, the dominion government last November 17, placed a large part of our imports from the United States under prohibition, quotas or suspended sentence with Mr. Howe as the judge and jury with power to cut them off if, as and when he pleases. The restrictions apply to scores of articles—stoves, radios, refrigerators, automobiles, furniture, cooking and heating equipment, machinery, all capital goods and so on. These goods are made in Canada by manufacturers who have always received tariff protection. But despite the disavowal of the government and the imposition of excise taxes on home production, the restrictions amount to the greatest dose of protection administered to this country since confederation. Compared with what happened last November, the Bennetts and the Meighens with their "no truck or trade with the Yankees," the "brick for brick tariff," "Canada First," tariff blasting and so on, were pikers.

I just thought the minister would be interested in that.

Mr. ABBOTT: We could repeat this sort of thing forever. This has been discussed time and again. I said the other night that of course this was highly protectionist; it could not be anything else.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was surprised to hear what the minister said this afternoon.

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course what I meant to say was that this was not introduced with the intention that it should be a protectionist measure, and I am sure my hon. friend realized that was what I was saying. It is not necessary to read a long excerpt from the Winnipeg Free Press to prove that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought the minister would be very much interested in the excerpt.

Mr. ABBOTT: I read it.

Amendment (Mr. Adamson) negatived.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I have just time before six o'clock to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. I really intended to do this before. A somewhat similar question was asked by the hon. member for York West.

On Tuesday last the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario raised a question about the movement of gold into Canada. Specifically, he asked:

. . . whether there were any unusual transactions, any windfalls, in the gold situation, whether any gold came in from some unexpected sources outside of the North American continent.

A little later on the same day, the hon. member for York West, referring to the statement I had given in regard to our holdings of reserves, said that I—. . . did not bring out the difference between gold and hard currency, and United States dollars. We do not know how much British gold and gold from other sources was shipped in and earmarked. We have just a general over-all figure of the gold and hard currency held.

I am not quite clear just what the hon. gentleman may have had in mind. However, I can say that there were no windfalls in the gold situation, no special shipments of gold into Canada from unexpected sources outside of the North American continent or, indeed, elsewhere, no imports of British or other gold for earmarking which affected our reserves, et cetera.

For the information of hon. members, I shall now break down the figures for our reserve position as of the four or five recent dates which I have already given to the house, showing our holdings of gold separately from our holdings of United States dollars. The figures are as follows:

	Total Official Reserves millions	Gold millions	U.S. Dollars millions
November 13, 1947	506·7	347·6	159·1
November 30, 1947	480·2	302·4	177·8
December 17, 1947	460·9	281·4	179·5
December 31, 1947	501·7	286·6	215·1
January 29, 1948	513·9	296·0	217·9

During the period in question, the only special gold transactions which took place—and by "special" I mean transactions other than purchases of our newly mined gold when refined by the mint—consisted of purchases of gold from a foreign central bank for payment in United States dollars, and this gold was almost immediately sold to the federal reserve bank for United States dollars. Hon. members will note that this transaction did not affect our total reserve position but merely changed for a short time the relative holdings of gold and United States dollars in that total position.

With regard to the reference to earmarking made by the hon. member for York West, may I say that any amounts of gold held in Canada by foreign or central banks under earmark do not enter into Canada's exchange position at all, because they are not the property of the Canadian government or the Bank of Canada. Any changes which may have taken place in such earmarked gold, have, of course, no relation to the question of Canada's foreign exchange holdings.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I ask a question? Will the minister give the figure showing the other holdings of the foreign exchange control board, other than gold and United States dollars.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that my hon. friend has a similar question on the order paper and the answer to that is being prepared.

Section 1 agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2—Definition—"permit".

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Section 2 in a sense takes us to the heart of the bill, and I should like to ask the minister to give us an explanation in some detail as to the way these permits are working. The matter came up briefly just before the dinner recess. The minister referred to these permits in a general way. The difference between schedule I, schedule II and schedule III has been pointed out, and also the fact that the permit in schedule I and schedule II is somewhat different from that in schedule III. The minister referred to the fact that changes had been made in schedule I. He says that, "after consideration of the various circumstances, it has been found desirable and proper to transfer items from the prohibition schedule to the quota schedule". He referred to the fact that under section IV he has given certain dispensations. Will the minister say in detail, if it will not run us into too much trouble, as to the permits which have been given? In other words, I want to know the distress conditions which have arisen for which permits have been given. The minister may feel that he should not give the names of the persons involved, but I see no reason why we should not have the other details; and I think it would be of interest for the committee to have them.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I can probably comply with that request, which is a perfectly fair one. First I should like to make a few general observations. With respect to goods in schedule I there is no question of a permit except where there are circumstances of particular hardship under section 4. With respect to goods in schedule II the permit takes, of course, the form of a quota which is given to the importer in accordance with the mathematical formula that was discussed this afternoon. Up to the present time, in connection with the prohibitions set forth in schedule I, a total of 5,226 special permits have been issued under the particular hardship clause. That includes such things as the mass importation of tomatoes from the Bahamas, with which I think the committee is familiar. Representations were made that these tomatoes had been grown and that there was no alternative market.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How many applications were made?

Mr. ABBOTT: There were also lumber and certain veneer items. Broken down between different countries there have been a total of 4,558 from the United States and 53 from the other schedule countries—that is to say, from dollar countries—or a total of 4,611. There have been 446 from the United Kingdom, and 169 from other non-schedule countries, making a total of 5,226 which I indicated a moment ago. The total value or total cost of those special permits—and these figures are as at February 7—amounted to $7,228,147. I have them broken down here into a long list of various commodities or items, but perhaps the committee does not wish me at this time to go into that detail. They can be made available if it is desired.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would the minister think it well to put them on Hansard? Is there any reason why they should not be put on Hansard?

Mr. ABBOTT: None whatever. Perhaps it might be suitable if I had a table prepared and placed on Hansard this evening, or perhaps it could be put on tomorrow. The list contains such items as lumber, furniture, radios, washing machines and electrical supplies. There is a long list.

Mr. JACKMAN: Does the minister mean that the total cost of $7,000,000 was on a year's basis?

Mr. ABBOTT: There are twenty-five specified groups and one sundry group. The total value of the goods which have been allowed in under the particular hardship clause is, as I have indicated, $7,228,147.

Mr. JACKMAN: Which is for what period?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is from the whole world.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How many applications have been made altogether, of which some are still pending and others have been turned down.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not available the total number of applications. A great many were turned down on the ground that they did not comply with the requirements of particular hardship. However, I have not those figures this evening and I am not sure whether they could be readily given now. They would be available from the files, of course, but I have not them here this evening.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister will be able to furnish them before this discussion is finished?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that already there have been handled some 25,000 or 30,000 letters, which no doubt could be made available. I suppose it would mean going through all the files. Some of the applications, quite clearly on the face of them, on general principles would not involve circumstances of particular hardship. They would be cases where the individual felt that there was some hardship involved and would make application. That would be turned down on the ground that there was no particular hardship. There were certain principles established. For instance, if goods were being manufactured in, let us say, the United States, and they had been stamped with the name of the importer, or they had containers or that sort of thing and could not be disposed of readily in an alternative market without substantial loss, those were allowed in. That is typical of a large class of cases which would be treated as coming within the particular hardship category. On the other hand, if they were goods which could be disposed of in the United States or some other market without any substantial loss, then in the final analysis I would decide that there was not any particular hardship within the meaning of the section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was the word "hardship" interpreted merely as a case where the person concerned would suffer some specific financial loss due to the unwarned imposition of the measure? Is that the sense?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is probably a pretty fair statement. It is a question of appreciation of the facts, as to whether there was particular hardship. Shall I put it in this way: if as a result of trying to dispose of the goods in the country of origin there would be serious financial loss, that would be considered as a case of particular hardship and a special permit would be issued. The variety of circumstances that have been put up has been almost legion. I wish my friend, the former member for Vancouver-Burrard, were here. He put up an application for a merry-go-round that was either en route to or in Vancouver, and under conditions which we finally came to the conclusion would constitute particular hardship if the merry-go-round were not allowed to stay in Canada. I am citing that only as an example of specific cases which have been considered on their merits, in regard to which it was decided that there was particular hardship involved and that a permit should be given.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think the minister said there were a certain number of groups and then a miscellaneous class. Does he mean that there were certain general principles decided or that all of these many thousand of cases had been considered as special cases and decided purely on the special circumstances of the case?

Mr. ABBOTT: There were a great many cases which fell into groups. On the other hand, there were a great many cases which really had to be considered and are still having to be considered as individual cases. We had one case of a merry-go-round, for instance, and there was one case in connection with grapes, as to which there was a long discussion because of the special way in which grapes are purchased ahead of time, are sent part way and placed in storage, and get in-transit rates and so on. It was found that, with respect to certain portions of the shipments which were en route here, there would really be particular hardship if those were not allowed to come forward. It is very difficult to generalize. It was felt that this particular hardship provision should be put into the order in council, where it is now, and into the law in order to give some flexibility to enable cases of particular hardship to be dealt with on a judicial basis, as I said this afternoon. It is a question for appreciation by myself, really, on the advice of those who look into the facts, as to what should be done to relieve a particular case; and I would think, if I may just conclude, that within a fairly short time we shall be able to dispose of the great majority of these cases.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When I asked the minister whether there were any groups which might fall into a principle—and if there are I hope the minister will attempt to describe them—what I had in mind was whether there were any principles which the general public ought to know, so that those who may have cases to bring to the minister may have some idea of the principles on which their applications will be dealt with.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I say, it is a little difficult to generalize. For instance, a wide range of paper products which are necessary for certain manufacturing processes have been admitted until alternative sources of supply can be arranged here in Canada. I am told that certain articles and equipment in connection with 25-cycle power have been allowed in for similar reasons. Of necessity, there must be the exercise of judgment in connection with these matters, and I think within another month or so we shall have that particular headache, if I may so describe it, largely behind us.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): To go back to what I said about general principles involved, has any publicity been given to what we have been calling the general considerations which might be a guide to the public?

Mr. ABBOTT: Speaking generally, there has not been any publicity given, because it is not possible to lay down any general rule. In certain cases, however, advice has been given to certain sections of the trade as to what can be done. I am referring now particularly to certain lumber and veneers. The trade interested in these matters has been informed as to what will be permitted, and a circular, a copy of which I have in my hand, was sent out early in January to importers of lumber and veneers. I need not read the whole thing, but it begins in this way:

> Following representations made by importers of lumber and veneers classified under customs tariff items 503, 504, 504a, 505, 507, and ex 507a (but not 507b) relaxations of prohibitions P.C. 4678 under permit have now been authorized as follows.

Then the particulars are given, and I am told that was published.

Mr. TIMMINS: That will be a continuing matter, then?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, that will be continued.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is the very sort of thing I had in mind. That appears to be a case where the distress is not merely that of some individual who happened to have entered into a contract which will cause him a loss; but it would seem to be a case where, due to the general needs of the trade, you are relaxing a prohibition. That is a different kind of distress. To me it would seem to be a recognition of the fact that certain goods are needed in this country. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: In part, that is true. There are a few groups of that kind for which, temporarily at any rate, it is necessary to relax these prohibitions.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. MANROSS: I thought these hardship matters came under section 4.

Mr. ABBOTT: They do, and this discussion should properly have come under section 4, but it was brought about by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario in connection with the permit question. I would suggest that there is not very much controversy about section 2, which is merely a definition section; that probably a good many of these questions will relate to hardship, and therefore it would be better to bring them up under section 4.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Before we leave section 2, I want to ask a question about hardship.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then I would suggest that the hon. member ask his question under section 4, which is the hardship section. Section 2 merely contains the definition.

Mr. FLEMING: Arising out of an answer given by the minister, I should like to ask if in any case he has regarded as a hardship case—

Mr. ABBOTT: Now, Mr. Chairman. I must ask that we deal with the hardship cases under section 4. I really think it will make for more efficiency. It is section 4 under which authority is given to issue special permits in case of particular hardship, and I urge hon. members to bring up hardship cases under that section. Otherwise we may have a couple of discussions on this particular phase of the bill. Probably we can reach section 4 in a few minutes.

Mr. FLEMING: I am quite prepared to come back to this point on section 4, though my question arose from an answer given by the minister. If I may come back to that under section 4 I have no objection to leaving it now. However, there is another matter I wish to mention in relation to section 2. What has been the procedure established within the department for handling these applications? The minister has said that in the last analysis the responsibility for making a decision rests upon him.

Mr. ABBOTT: With other committees sitting I suppose it is necessary to indulge in a certain amount of repetition, but I suggest to my hon. friend that this question was asked this afternoon, when I know he was engaged in another committee, and at that time I gave a fairly detailed answer which will be found in today's Hansard. We have a special interdepartmental committee set up, and this afternoon I named the members of the committee. They make recommendations to me. That is the procedure, which I outlined very fully this afternoon.

Mr. FLEMING: I did not intend to go into that; I was only concerned with the minister's part in it. Are all these cases, the refusals as well as the issuing of licences, brought to the minister's personal attention, or is it a case of the committee winnowing them out and only leaving the actual granting of the permits to the personal decision of the minister?

Mr. ABBOTT: After the first week or two of this headache, if I may use that word again, a pattern more or less emerged. The committee to which I referred this afternoon, headed by Mr. Taylor, the assistant deputy minister, has dealt with a great many of these cases and issued the permits without referring them to me. This committee keeps full and complete minutes of its proceedings and the decisions it takes. Those minutes are sent to me after each meeting; and the understanding with respect to the permits which are issued without being referred specifically to myself is that if I take objection to the method by which cases are being handled, I am to let the chairman of the committee know. Special cases are referred to me. The merry-go-round case which I mentioned a moment ago was taken up with me specifically. I decided that it was a hardship case and that the merry-go-round had better stay in Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not trying to differ with the suggestion of the minister that cases of hardship should come under section 4, but there is a question I wish to raise. We want to discuss the nature of the permits under schedule III. I am ready to follow the minister's suggestions as to whether this might be discussed under section 2, as I thought, or whether it had better come under section 3. If the minister has no objection, I will raise it now.

Mr. ABBOTT: I really think it would be more logical to discuss the nature of permits, the method of issuing them and so on, under section 3, which is the section which says that permits may be issued. This is purely a defining section. However, I do not suppose it makes much difference which way we do it, although I should think it would be more consistent to have it under section 3.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Goods not permitted import.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Chairman, would you call the subsections, please.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I believe it would be preferable to read the whole section, as we did with respect to section 2.

Mr. FLEMING: It could be called, one subsection at a time. It is a long section, and different things might be said by different members on the respective sections.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Subsection 1.

Mr. ABBOTT: If I might be permitted to comment upon the suggestion of the hon. member for Eglinton, perhaps it might be wise to consider subsections 1 and 2 together, because they are closely linked. If we do not, I think the discussion is likely to overlap. Subsection 1 imposes a general rule that no goods shall be admitted, except by virtue of a permit; and then subsection 2 contains an important provision, namely, that the first subsection shall not apply in respect of goods which are included in the schedules to the act that were included in appendices seven, eight and nine of the foreign exchange control regulations. I believe the discussion might range over both subsections.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): If it is satisfactory to the committee we shall call the whole section as one unit, so that it can be discussed as a whole.

Mr. JAENICKE: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to this section. It concerns section 3 (1) of the bill. However, before offering my amendment, I should like to make a few remarks in support of it.

When closing the debate on second reading, the minister said that the principle of the bill was very simple. Its use was to apply import restrictions in order to conserve United States dollars. Yet, in no portion of the bill do we see any mention of United States dollars. As a matter of fact, except for the short title, and the title itself, the bill does not suggest that it is meant for the purpose of regulating exchange at all. If anyone reads the bill, without the explanation given in respect of it by the minister on second reading, he would say it was a bill intended for very high protection. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard suggested that it might be used for that purpose.

Statistics found at page 882 of the Canada Year Book, 1947, show that in every year since 1919, including 1947, with the exception of four years Canada has had a favourable trade balance. And those years when we did not have favourable trade balances were 1920, 1929, 1930 and 1931. The total of these favourable trade balances, after deducting the unfavourable ones, is something in the neighbourhood of $9,000 million.

Even if we take into account payments made to foreign countries on account of private and public debts and obligations, which undoubtedly were paid out of these trade balances, it seems to me, even if we take these debts paid into consideration, that somebody, somewhere, somehow, must owe us a lot of money. In view of this apparent favourable situation, it is almost unbelievable —and I am sure it is unbelievable to the people in the country—that the government finds itself in the precarious position of presenting this remarkable bill to parliament at this time.

Our trade statistics show that in all these years we have always sold more to Great Britain, to the commonwealth and to other western European countries, than we have bought from these countries. I believe that is still so. And in fact, it has been more so in the last few years in spite of the British preference which, I believe, has been in force for some fifty years.

These statistics also tell us that during all these years we always purchased more from the United States than they purchased from us; in fact, we purchased considerably more than they purchased from us; and again especially in the last few years.

In his speech when presenting the bill to the house, the Minister of Finance explained how we were able to manage for years under this lopsided arrangement. He pointed out that Great Britain, the commonwealth and other countries to which we sold were able to sell enough to the United States in order to provide them with sufficient funds to pay us. And the way the minister explained it, it was a sort of triangular arrangement. It seemed to work nicely during many years, and especially before the first world war.

It now turns out that this triangle is by no means an eternal triangle, and that this vehicle upon which our foreign trade seems to have slid along fairly smoothly for years has now been smashed. It is interesting to speculate as to who should bear the blame for the smashing of this nice triangular arrangement.

Mr. ABBOTT: Blame it on Hitler.

Mr. JAENICKE: I am inclined to believe that no one in particular is to blame. We simply emerged into another new era of foreign trade and foreign relations necessitated by the technological and scientific advances on the one hand and war, destruction and mistrust on the other. It seems to me that by force of these circumstances the world has lost its old banker, Britain. And, again by force of circumstances, and without anyone willing it, the United States has emerged as the world's banker. Without laying any particular blame on our good neighbour to the south, Uncle Sam, I am of the opinion that we find ourselves in this precarious position today because Uncle Sam does not measure up to John Bull as the world's banker. You see, besides being the world's banker, Great Britain was also the world's trader. She was a free trade country. She took goods from other countries which owed her; and if she did not need those goods for her own domestic use, or for any other use, she sold them wherever she could.

It seems to me that in thinking of world trade—and I argue that we would do well to think about that condition—and especially world trade before the first world war, perhaps we may now realize that the world owed a debt to Britain for managing the system of world trade quite well prior to the two wars. Without arguing in favour of going back to that system of world trade, it seems to me that, in order to revert to the fairly smooth working situation which existed before the wars, we would need a banker who is also a world's trader. And if Uncle Sam is to be that banker, whether he wills it or not, we have to go a lot farther than the concessions which have been made under the Geneva trade agreement.

The present bill attempts to rectify the situation by conserving United States dollars. At the same time it endeavours to do this in a spirit of non-discrimination, as set forth in the Geneva agreement. In other words, the bill is drawn in accordance with the terms and spirit of the provisions of this agreement. I know that the minister in his address in presenting the bill on second reading did not rely upon the terms of the Geneva agreement. He tried to justify the non-discriminatory elements in the bill upon its own merits. But I may say I am quite sure the people in the country understand that the non-discriminatory feature of the bill is there because we wish to live within the terms and spirit of the Geneva agreement. That is why this bill is put forward as a non-discriminatory bill, and it is my opinion that, because of the inclusion of that principle, the bill will fail in its objectives. Even with the Geneva agreement, we still have time to enact a measure that would deal with this serious situation. It is true that it would have to be discriminatory, but it might remedy the situation.

The hon. member for Acadia spoke on this matter on Tuesday and again this afternoon. He referred to articles XII and XIII and he read portions of article XVI. In order to have the story complete, I think we should have on the record the pertinent portions of articles XII and XIII. Article XII is the article which permits a signatory nation to the agreement to enact measures such as the one we are enacting at the present time. I shall read only the words which are necessary in order to make my meaning clear, which are:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 of article XI, any contracting party, in order to safeguard its external financial position and balance of payments, may restrict the quantity or value of merchandise permitted to be imported.

And again:

> (i) to forestall the imminent threat of, or to stop, a serious decline in its monetary reserves.

The pertinent part of article XIII reads:

> No prohibition or restriction shall be applied by any contracting party on the importation of any product of the territory of any other contracting party . . . unless the importation of the like product of all third countries or the exportation of the like product to all third countries is similarly prohibited or restricted.

Even to that non-discriminatory clause there is an exception. The hon. member for Acadia placed on the record the pertinent words in article XIV which provide an exception to that rule of non-discrimination set forth in article XIII. I am of the opinion that we could afford to use discrimination in order to balance our exchange with the United States. The minister said that Canada or the government is proud of the stand taken in applying, not discrimination, but rather non-discrimination in connection with this bill, and that we want to set an example. That is all very well and I commend him for his fine spirit, but the question is whether we can afford to take that attitude. I submit that we cannot. Even the United States is not loath about enacting a law which is against the spirit of the Geneva agreement. Just a few days ago I read in Foreign Trade, a publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce, issue of January 31, 1948, the following which appears on page 225:

> The United States treasury department has ruled that the Canadian excise tax, imposed on November 18, 1947, is part of the freely offered price in Canada. Under the present United States customs laws, therefore, this tax must be included in the value for duty purposes of goods, subject to this tax when imported into the United States.

I submit that that attitude on the part of the United States is contrary to the provisions of article VII, section 3 of the Geneva agreement, which reads:

> 3. The value for customs purposes of any imported product should not include the amount of any internal tax, applicable within the country of origin or export, from which the imported product has been exempted or has been or will be relieved by means of refund.

In view of our precarious position, I submit that we cannot afford to set an example of non-discrimination. It is only discrimination that will overcome the difficulties in which we find ourselves. It seems to me that in order to balance our foreign financial position, in order to overcome our present monetary disequilibrium, in view of the statistics which have been quoted, we must restrict imports from the United States and all other countries which demand hard currency and encourage imports from countries which are willing to take our goods and which, by the way, already owe us a lot of money. I think we could very well apply the principle of discrimination to this bill, and therefore I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> That subsection 1 of section 3 of Bill No. 3 be amended by inserting after the word "Canada" in line nine on page one of the said bill, the following words:
> "From any country requiring gold or currency of the United States of America in payment or settlement of their purchase price."
> That subsection would then read:
> No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada from any country requiring gold or currency of the United States of America in payment or settlement of their purchase price any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II or III.

Mr. MANROSS: I am not going to speak very long but I have some questions to ask. From the trend of events I think I had better cover them all in about ten minutes without waiting for answers because it seems that when the minister answers a simple question he takes just about as much time as he does to answer a speech. We are talking about section 3 which covers schedules I, II and III, which in our kind of language is schedule I, "you don't"; schedule II, "you do", and schedule III, "maybe". Schedule I covers prohibited articles; schedule II covers articles under quota, and schedule III says, "Maybe you get a permit."

This particular bill will be hard to administer. Before touching upon the particular tariff items I wish to mention, may I offer some advice to the excise and customs branch? I suggest that they hold sort of sales or educational meetings with the examiners located at the borders in order to attempt to turn them into diplomatic policemen. I have noticed quite a few cases at the border where examiners have got pretty rough and tough. I know it is hard to administer regulations and examine cars without becoming somewhat officious or throwing your authority about, especially when you try to get diplomats for the miserable salaries that are paid.

I have one particular case I should like to mention. A car crossed at Windsor containing an invalid who was returning from a hospital where she had undergone an operation. They were asked if they had anything to declare, and they said, "We have some gifts in the trunk." The examiner went to the trunk and he tore in and tore the claws off the furs and damaged the car. Then he had them move the lady who was an invalid inside the customs house where she was kept for quite a while. He said "You did not tell us about this item and that item." She said, "I told you they are all gifts, and the names are on them. If they are not permitted, you can seize the gifts." He said, "We are also going to seize the car." The way it works apparently is that if you say you have nothing to declare and they find something, you are hooked. That has been my experience. But if you tell them you have something, then they have not the right to seize the car. However, they seized the car—I am not making an issue of that—and they fined her $50. These people got to Tilbury. It got cold and they wanted to put a heavier coat on her mother who was an invalid. They could not find the coat, so they drove back to Windsor, and the coat was there in the customs house. That was a coat made in Canada, with a Canadian label on it. The customs officers told her that they did not intend to seize that coat, that it was there by an oversight. I am not criticizing that particular examiner or the department except to this extent—

Mr. McCANN: Did my hon. friend state that the customs officer fined somebody $50?

Mr. MANROSS: The official fined somebody $50.

Mr. McCANN: That statement cannot be correct. Customs officers have no authority to fine anybody. What they have authority to do is to collect customs duties that are due. I doubt very much the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANROSS: Thank you very much, sir. Now I shall have to go into details, Mr. Chairman. They are as follows:

In re seizure No. 30322/7214:

The collector of customs and excise, Windsor, Ontario, having reported that a seizure has been made from you on January 29, 1948, of the following goods—

[Mr. Manross.]

Which are listed, and it goes on to say:

That the said goods were smuggled into Canada and that the said automobile was used in such unlawful importation.

(Car released upon deposit of $50)

An hon. MEMBER: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. MANROSS: I am reading from a Department of National Revenue statement. That $50 may not be a fine. The minister may trip me up on my English. I know they got $50 from her. I am not arguing that it was wrong. I am simply arguing that that was the attitude of those fellows because they have not been properly educated how to go about the matter. If the Minister of Finance and I held some sales meetings there we could educate these people to be diplomatic and still get the goods.

I presume that all items in the customs tariff which are not mentioned in the bill remain as is. That is my assumption. Tariff item 698 comes to my mind because this is White Cane week in Canada. Item 698 covers articles specially designed for the use of the blind, whether used for educational, recreational or other purposes. Such articles come in duty free. That item is not in the bill and I assume it remains as it is. It covers supplies brought in for the blind, such as Braille, and various other systems. The blind need these supplies and have not any too much money. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare is going to do something further this session to implement the program coming as close as he can to the six-point program for the blind, and naturally, if he does this, more supplies will be required. I am going on the assumption that the rest of the items in the tariff which are not mentioned in the bill are not to be changed.

I turn now to item 415(a) in schedule I, which covers "refrigerators, domestic or store, completely equipped or not." It does not say, "and parts thereof," although the general ruling has been that if parts are completely assembled they come in under 415(a), but items such as brass valves, wheels and so forth, are cleared under the items covering such materials. I know we are not talking about taxes under this bill. Nevertheless refrigerators carry a 25 per cent tax. My understanding is that the manufacturer in Canada of electrical refrigerators can bring in all the parts he wants. In other words, the 25 per cent tax is to curtail production. But there is nothing in the regulations to curtail his importations. In other words, he has to cut down production. The 25 per cent tax is paid by young couples and veterans establishing homes, and the tax will slow up Canadian production. I should like to have seen the electrical refrigerator manufacturers given a United States dollar quota similar to automobile manufacturers, and then you would not have needed this 25 per cent tax on refrigerators. They would get a quota of United States dollars for what parts they need. It is an established fact with all the leading refrigerator manufacturers in Canada that the refrigerator contains a certain United States content. One manufacturer estimates his at $8.90, one at $11, of United States content. It varies. If that item could have been in schedule II and if it had been given a quota of United States dollars, it would have eliminated this burdensome 25 per cent tax.

There is nothing in the bill which says that a new company shall have a quota for bringing in parts, tools, machinery, and so forth. A United States firm might want to establish a branch in Canada. It may have lots of money in the United States and could send the parts in to its branch company. There should be some arrangement whereby new firms can get a quota on parts importations, even if it is only for a temporary period, until they can secure sources of supply in Canada to take care of their needs.

I do not know whether quotas have been set on automobiles imported from the United States. They are on the prohibited list but I understand there are to be quotas. I do not know whether it is to be a dollar quota to manufacturers or a car quota to dealers to bring in completed cars. Of course, if the quotas are equal in dollars to manufacturers and new dealers who have established themselves in business to be able to bring in Nash, Studebaker and other completed United States cars, the new dealer will be seriously handicapped. He could not get many cars if he gets only $210 a car. The importer of United States made cars who has no Canadian source of supply may be forced out of business, while the other dealers will still be kept in business, regardless of how severe the import quotas might be. I know that in my riding there is extreme hardship for four dealers, with a plant investment of $350,000, employing seventy-two men, and handling United States cars. They are now being practically put out of business. Their franchise is gone and their bank credit is practically gone.

I notice another item in schedule I, item 192 on page 8 of the original bill. I have not the reprint here. It covers insulation. Insulation, with the exception of fibre glass, is prohibited. I do not know why that one type of insulation has been permitted entry, while all the others have been barred. I called the department in regard to these items and asked different people to try to find out why. I should like to know for my own satisfaction. We have refrigerator manufacturers and other people building houses and trying to insulate them. I asked the department why fibre glass was permitted to come into the country and other insulating materials were not. Finally I was told that somebody would call me back. You cannot expect everybody in the department to know everything, except the minister.

The individual to whom I was talking said that fibre glass was a much better insulating material. He said that it was a higher class material with much more heat resistance, and that is why it was admitted. I asked him what was the "K" factor of fibre glass. He said, "I do not get you." I said, "What is the 'K' factor of fibre glass?" He said, "I cannot tell you that." I said, "I can tell you that, because I have a book published under the authority of the Hon. J. L. Ilsley, M.P., Minister of Finance, in 1943, and on page 23 he lists the 'K' factor of these insulating materials." I might explain to the committee that the "K" factor has to do with heat resistance or conductivity of insulating material. Glass wool, which is fibre glass, has a "K" factor of ·27; "Kimsul" and some other types of insulation that are prohibited have a "K" factor of ·27, exactly the same. I told him that, and he said, "Fibre glass is used for certain types of refrigeration only; it is cut the size and it does not absorb moisture." That is all right. The minister might give somebody the right to import fibre glass for a particular type of refrigeration where there might be a certain moisture condition and where batts and other types of insulating material could not be used. Cork insulation is out because it is too hard to get.

Fibre glass was never used for insulating houses up to within the last few years. We have a manufacturing concern from the United States, the Kimberly Clark Corporation, with a $28,000,000 investment in Terrace, Ontario. They are building 2,500 houses for their employees. They want to insulate them with insulating material called Kimsul, which is made from Canadian pulpwood shipped to Wisconsin. They probably get one hundred and fifty million United States dollars from shipping pulpwood to the United States. They want to return probably $2,000,000 worth of insulating material from this pulpwood to Canada. The department felt that they were right when they took the stand that insulating material for houses is made in Canada and fibre glass is not for houses. If that were true, of course it would be all right; but the minute the fibre glass people were permitted to import fibre glass insulation they went out to all dealers handling Kimsul insulating material to sell them fibre glass for houses. They brought their price down to the same price of other insulating materials. The fibre glass people are running an advertisement as follows:

> Here's important news for the building trade. Fibreglass building insulation—the product which within eight short years of its introduction has rocketed to first place in the highly-competitive insulation field in the United States—is now distributed in Canada.

Therefore the prices are comparable. Fibre glass sells at $80 a thousand, while Kimsul insulating material sells at $75 a thousand. In other words, the fibre glass price is within $5 of the price of other materials. As a consequence, the fibre glass people have tripled their business, while the importers of other types of insulating material are not permitted to import. That is a problem in the schedules which should be taken care of. This is a matter which has come to my attention. I have no insulating distributors or manufacturers in my riding. It has come to my attention because I was associated with the business for a great many years, insulating houses, building cold storage places and so on across Canada.

Another matter I should like to mention is that of tumblers. I did not have as much information when I first brought this matter up as I now have. Machine-made tumblers, mostly tableware, come from the United States. If they are decorated when they come off the machine they are permitted to come in, but if they are decorated afterwards they are prohibited. The reason is that this bill is drawn solely on tariff items. Plain ware comes under one item and decorated ware under another. Before the war we used to get a lot of this ware from Belgium and England. Recently we seem to have cultivated the United States source of supply. Consequently they have allowed tumblers to come in from the United States. I cannot say whether we should or not, because I am not in a position to say whether we have enough in Canada or can get them from Belgium or not. But if tumblers come in from the United States, certainly we should allow the plain ones in. They cost twelve cents a dozen less, and in carload lots, which is the way they are bought, that is quite an item. This is another item that should be checked and rectified. These are not policy objections; they are schedule objections. As I said a while ago, they should have come under item 4, because some of them will create a real hardship.

[Mr. Manross.]

I have nothing further to say on this schedule with the exception of that which was mentioned by the hon. member for Davenport this afternoon. I hope that limestone from Indiana will be permitted entry, so that the universities which are now expanding to take care of student veterans will be enabled to enlarge their institutions without spoiling their architectural appearance. I also hope that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his quite generous and thoroughly businesslike way, will give these universities permits for the necessary building material to enable them to accommodate the students they have received from the second war. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. I could have put on a lot of questions, but that would take a lot of time. My questions are now on the record and we shall probably get the answers before the section is disposed of.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to go back to the question of permits under schedule III which, I think, are the most difficult and important. I do not know whether the minister would like to add something to what was said this afternoon just before the dinner recess. What we want to know is on what basis the permits are made; whether each case is being dealt with on its individual merits or whether there are certain general rules. We were told that regulations were to be made. The minister might tell us whether these regulations have been made. If so, what are they? If not, why not, and just what the situation is at the moment.

Mr. HOWE: There is a variety of permits under schedule III. Permits covering new construction are issued on a project basis. In other words, if a building project is approved a project number is given the over-all expenditure. When approved, individual permits issue automatically. And, as applied to the project, the sum total of the individual permits must not exceed the limit set in the project, but within that limit permits issue freely.

So far as individual items of equipment are concerned, we have rules applying to that. If it is a replacement of a worn-out part it will issue automatically. If it is a new machine, the needs of the situation are examined and it depends on whether a case can be made out or not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister permit a question? Is the minister going to put on the record certain regulations, or is he just going to give us the general description?

Mr. HOWE: Well, the only regulations today are the over-all permits affecting the automobile industry, both the manufacture and the parts. But it is impossible to bring new construction projects down to an absolutely rigid basis. Generally speaking, the tests there are as to whether they will create important amounts of United States dollars; whether they are essential to the industrial life of Canada, such as hydro-electric plants; and as to the general purpose of the project. On several occasions I have said that projects which merely add to the comfort and convenience of the Canadian people are not granted permits; for example, moving picture theatres, office buildings or places of amusement are glaring examples of projects that are not granted permits.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is interesting to know after all these years.

Mr. HOWE: If my hon. friend will just keep quiet I shall be able to inform the hon. gentleman who asked the question. My hon. friend's interjections are always helpful, but if we could keep the discussion to one at a time, it would help. As far as manufacturing firms are concerned, the purpose is to encourage the use of Canadian facilities to the maximum extent. The arrangement with the automobile industry has been published. It is so framed as to encourage the maximum use of Canadian components as well as the maximum effort on the part of the industry to export and help us to obtain United States dollars.

Mr. TIMMINS: I wish to ask a question of both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. At the present time I presume we are carrying on under P.C. 4678?—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. TIMMINS:—and whatever regulations there are must be in P.C. 4678.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. TIMMINS: There are a great number of things in P.C. 4678 such as designate currencies, non-resident, foreign currency, sterling area countries, Canadian currency, United States dollars and so on, which go to the very root of the matter of these import controls; yet they do not appear at all in the bill. I presume they must, at some time or another, all be covered by regulations, and regulations come under this section 3. My suggestion, and it is only a suggestion, is that, since those regulations must come before us some time, they ought to come before the house just as soon as possible so that we may deal with these matters which are the very meat of this whole bill. That is my first thought.

My second thought is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He suggested that permits will be issued under schedule III in the way of projects. I presume that, if it is decided that a certain project was a necessary one and was entitled to a permit, if it was an office building the limestone required may come in, as well as marble and steel. There would not be any end to the component parts of that building that might come in under that project permit. Does it give to the builder, the contractor or owner a choice of materials, or just what strings does the minister have on the things that come in under that permit?

Mr. HOWE: Before any project is approved, it is screened for United States content; and where Canadian substitution is possible, any United States content is stripped from the project before it is approved. When the project is approved it has a list of materials to be imported from the United States, and a dollar value for those materials which has been approved by the officials responsible for the examination. But any project that is approved is approved only to the extent of permitting the import of materials absolutely necessary for the completion of the project.

Mr. TIMMINS: May I follow that up by another question? As has happened and as will happen, suppose the minister is confronted with a project which is an office building and right next door he is confronted with another project which is partly mercantile and partly office building, what happens there?

Mr. HOWE: Neither one would be approved.

Mr. TIMMINS: Inasmuch as in certain places, I see buildings being torn down and people being thrown out of their offices, can we take it absolutely that if they are in either one of those categories the projects will not be allowed to go ahead?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. TIMMINS: Is there not some way that we could have before the house, and not so much before the house as before the people in business who may not be able to obtain them, the regulations which are to govern the minister's decision in respect of these matters in the future?

Mr. HOWE: It is much easier for anyone in doubt to write to the department and get a ruling on the case than it is for me to lay down definite rules.

Mr. KNOWLES: We shall have to get back to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kindersley before long; but, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been brought into this discussion, I should like to express the hope that, some time before long, he will make a statement as to what is being done under his direction with regard to the positive side of this new program. We were told in November, when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance made their famous announcements, and we have been told a number of times since, that this program is not just a restrictive one; that it consists not only of the kind of measures that are before us now under the direction of the Minister of Finance, but that there is also a positive program headed up by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We have been led to believe that there is to be an expansion of industry as the basis for increased exports which, in the long run will improve our position greatly. In the debate on the second reading of this measure, the Minister of Finance indicated that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would go into the matter later and give us the positive side of the story; but I submit that we are still waiting for it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is talking in the same restrictive terms that we get from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have this bill before us now.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not particularly anxious that the Minister of Trade and Commerce make that kind of statement tonight, but I think he owes it to the house and to the country, some time soon, to give us some details on the positive side of the program.

Mr. ADAMSON: The question just raised by the hon. member is one we spent all afternoon on.

Mr. HOWE: I shall save you the trouble of asking it again. The attention of the department is being devoted actively to making use of any existing facilities in Canada. The department is also encouraging new projects which promise to be substantial earners of United States dollars or to add substantially to Canada's useful exports. That is the direction in which the efforts of the department are being directed, and with some success, I may say. We have arranged for the use of existing facilities which will provide for substantial increments of United States dollars.

Mr. KNOWLES: Can the minister give some details, indicating in what industries or in what facilities these developments are taking place?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is out of order.

Mr. HOWE: I question how far we should be led down side alleys of this sort, Mr. Chairman. This has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is an important part of the program. We have been waiting for it for three months.

Mr. HOWE: I mentioned a program of $50,000,000 of aluminum exports to the United States from facilities that are not now active. I could mention an accumulation of other groups of projects, but I think it would hardly help hon. members to decide about this bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: When shall we get that kind of discussion?

Mr. HOWE: I do not think you will ever get it.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is a great reply for a member of the Liberal party to give in the parliament of Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Yes; and I am a member of it, and it is my turn. I contribute little, perhaps, and what I have to say now will be brief. A moment ago the hon. member for London was telling of the experience of some people who came to the border at Windsor. He was rudely contradicted by the Minister of National Revenue; and unfortunately that is becoming a habit with the minister, though he is the only member of the cabinet about whom I will say that. Lest he think everyone in his department is perfect, let me tell him that I crossed the border on January 25 at North Portal. I was going to the other side because of my health. My bank had communicated with the department and had obtained $400 for me. That took in my wife's $75 and my $75, so I did not get all the gravy that was going. I had my form H and everything else I should have had. The officer at North Portal said, "Have you $400"? I replied that I had. He said, "I will have to take it from you." He scared my wife to death; but I said, "Yes; you and who else?" Let us not think for one moment that these people the hon. member for London was talking about are all trained; and I hope they are not taking their cue from the manner exhibited by the minister in this house tonight.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I want to ask the minister one question on this point. What would be the reason for prohibiting the importation of certain very necessary things at this time, while at the same time there are no restrictions on the importation of United States films?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a pretty general question. I believe my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce is dealing with the film aspect of this matter. Some people consider that films are just as necessary a part of life as, shall we say, strawberries in January or some other things.

An hon. MEMBER: Cabbages.

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, we are importing cabbages now. One purpose of this program is to interfere as little as possible with established businesses in Canada on which a great many people are dependent for their livelihood. I do not think anyone can deny that the entertainment industry, including the motion picture industry, is certainly not patronized only by the upper ten, or that it is an industry which employs a great many people, and that it would be neither wise nor even desirable to cut it off in that way. I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce can give the committee some idea of what is being done with respect to the importation of films, but I would hesitate to believe that members of this committee would suggest that we should prohibit the importation of United States films, or, for that matter, of any films.

Mr. FRASER: They are a lot better than the films than the national film board get out.

Mr. HOWE: Negotiations are going on with the film industry which promise a substantial quid pro quo to offset the drain of dollars caused by the industry. I am not prepared to make a full announcement this evening, but I think I can say Canada will get good value from the industry in return for permitting the industry to take Canadian dollars across the line.

Mr. GREEN: Has any restriction at all been placed upon the importation of films from the United States?

Mr. HOWE: Certain film materials and cameras are prohibited.

Mr. GREEN: But has any restriction been imposed yet on the films?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. BLACKMORE: A moment ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke of various types of industry they were endeavouring to develop in Canada in order to save United States dollars. I just wonder if he will give particular attention to the possibility of developing the beet sugar industry in Canada. Last year we lost practically $28,000,000 in United States dollars because our beet sugar industry was not developed. If we really mean to get somewhere; if we really intend to develop industry in Canada, it is industry of this kind to which we must devote our attention, because there is no doubt this industry can succeed, and there is no doubt the Canadian beet sugar industry can save United States dollars if just a little common sense is shown in the management of that industry. But common sense was not indicated in the reply given me the day before yesterday by the Minister of Finance to a question I asked.

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, Mr. Chairman, could we get back to section 3?

Mr. SKEY: I am most concerned about the reply just given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who brought up a subject with which the committee was concerned all afternoon. One hon. member after another taxed the Minister of Finance with the same question. This is a restrictive measure, one of the positive measures, one of the curative measures in this legislation. Now it is put up to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he gives us the answer that there will never be the possibility of discussing this in the House of Commons. In other words, we must trust to him. I just want to draw a parallel to that answer, and I think it is apt in this case. Last evening I spent some hours in reading Mr. Trevor Roper's book entitled, "The Last Days of Hitler." In it he describes Mr. Goebbels' propaganda during the late war, by means of which the German people were kept happy year after year with his promise of the secret weapon. As I see it, this promise is the secret weapon of the Department of Finance and the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the Canadian people will never know what it is.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to say a word about the same question. As I understood it, the minister in effect said to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the details of the positive side of the government's new program would never be known.

Mr. ABBOTT: He did not say that.

Mr. HOWE: I did not say that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have been a businessman myself, and I am not suggesting that the minister should come out and tell us all the details of this or that arrangement he has in view. But I am suggesting that we should not be left to learn in the newspapers some fine day that this or that has been done. I suggest that we are entitled to some general ideas, not just these vague pieces of optimism. I notice the minister was at it again the other evening, saying this would be only a matter of months. He might do well to learn a little from the Minister of Finance, who does not indulge in nonsense of that kind. I think we are entitled to some information, unless we are to believe that this arbitrary power has made the minister not only above himself but above us. There must be some information we can have and not, as I say, just these general observations.

Before I sit down, I want to ask one other question. I understood the minister to say that one of the industries to which United States dollars were being allowed was the automobile industry, and that this was being done on the basis of the amount of United States dollars which that industry was likely to bring into Canada. That is what I took down when the minister was speaking, and I thought that was what he said. If he wants to correct it I wish he would do so now.

Mr. HOWE: The particulars of the automobile regulations have been published in the press for the last four days, both in advertisements and in the news columns. I have not that information before me at the moment, though I can get it. I said it was a proportion of imports they were allowed in the standard period, plus a proportion of the money spent on complete automobiles imported, plus a certain proportion of the money recovered from exports. But surely my hon. friend reads the newspapers, and he must have read that if he has any interest whatever in the subject.

So far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is concerned, if he saw the trade statistics for the last month which were published, and which I am sure are of interest to him, he would find that the increase in exports is very much larger than the decrease in imports. The exports did increase largely, while the imports were reduced, which is an indication that the program is in operation. And we hope that the future figures will indicate the same thing, namely a substantial increase in exports, while we bring about a reduction in imports.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What are the increases in exports? Will the minister give us details?

Mr. HOWE: We issue press releases on that subject almost every day. Surely my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am asking the minister, if he has those figures, if he will let us have them. We are discussing that now.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are completely out of order.

Mr. KNOWLES: When will it be in order? I was told a minute ago, "never". I am asking the question again.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): Part of this discussion is certainly out of order, because we are dealing with Bill No. 3, emergency measures for the conservation of foreign exchange. Is the amendment carried?

Mr. ABBOTT: I wish to point out to the committee again that we are dealing with Bill No. 3, which is one sector of the dollar conservation program. It is a purely restrictive measure. I cannot say at the present time that it would be proper for me to speak about constructive measures which the government is taking, through the Department of Trade and Commerce and through other government departments, to increase our exports. But I do know, and I am certain that it would not be on section 3 of this bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Just a minute; we are discussing permits, and we have been asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce to tell us the basis upon which permits are being issued.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has not anything to do with export.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): He has told us one of the bases of permits being issued—and I took this down—is the proportion of United States funds recovered by the motor industry. I want to know how the motor industry is recovering American funds. I do not think it is an unfair remark, for he himself brought it in as part of his argument. However, I will not press it. But I do wish to know what he means by saying that the automobile industry is producing American funds. If he is correct, where are the exports of motors going, which are producing American funds?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that it may surprise my hon. friend to know that the Canadian automobile industry is not a drain on balance—that is the industry manufacturing in Canada is not. It does not constitute a drain on American funds. Value of exports is in excess of value of imports. The net balance does not represent a drain.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does the minister mean a net balance in American funds?

Mr. HOWE: The net balance of exports.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That has not anything to do with this.

Mr. HOWE: I say that it is much the same thing. However, it would take all evening to explain that to my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): All right, take all evening to do it.

Mr. HOWE: As a matter of fact, dollar exports to the United Kingdom at the present time are just as good as exports to the United States, in obtaining American funds, because the balance in excess of the loan is paid for in gold—that is American funds.

However, the point I make is that it seems to us that the industry is capable of contributing much more in American funds than it has been doing, and the regulations are framed with that in mind. I shall be very glad to get the regulations and either put them on Hansard or send them to my hon. friend. I have sent up for them. I am surprised that he has not read them. I think he will see they are definitely designed for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister said that exports to the non-dollar countries were paid for in gold. Does that mean that exports of automobiles from Canada to South America and England are paid for in gold?

Mr. HOWE: The minute gold is mentioned, my hon. friend pricks up his ears; the discussion is getting into his territory. The position is this, that certain amounts of credit are issued per month to the sterling countries. Everything above those amounts is paid for in gold. If we ship anything to the sterling areas in addition to the amount of the credit, it is just as valuable in United States dollars as though we shipped it to the United States, because it produces gold. That is probably too deep for the hon. member.

Mr. JACKMAN: What the minister said was that we allowed Britain so many credits per month, I suppose in Canadian dollars, to repay us for things they buy from us. And anything above those credits will be paid to Canada in gold.

The question is this, should Canadians increase their imports from Great Britain? Then that would tend to offset further purchases from us by Great Britain.

Mr. ABBOTT: Right. The position is simply this, that the net deficit is financed partly out of credit and partly in cash. If the United Kingdom increases its exports of textiles, for instance, to Canada, it is just the same as United States dollars, or gold of course.

But I suggest that we do not get into a discussion of the balance of payments position on section 3 of the bill, or a discussion of any of the other thousand and one variations of this complex exchange problem, or we shall never finish. I do not know how we can handle it at all. One comes here with certain information ready to answer certain questions. I have before me some very competent officials who have figures with them, but it was not contemplated that this evening we would be discussing those subjects which have been raised. I do not think we have the necessary detailed information which could be provided to the committee. Questions as to the details in connection with permits are not properly asked now. General questions asking how permits are issued are perfectly in order, but when we get to details, it certainly does not come under this section.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): The point is well taken by the Minister of Finance. It is absolutely impossible to cover all financial ramifications on this bill. This is a bill for a definite purpose, and we are dealing with one section of it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The Chairman and the minister agree that this is the proper time to discuss permits; and the Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook to tell us the bases upon which he was issuing them. So far as I am concerned, the information he has given is either wrong or so confused that I, at any rate, cannot understand it. He can blame me for that, if he likes, but I will come back to have it cleared up. The minister gave us figures with regard to the automobile industry which, I think, are entirely misleading. I cannot yet believe that he has answered squarely the question I have asked him, because he got out of it by saying that exports to the United Kingdom were as good as gold, because the amount over and above our credit was paid in gold. How much is paid by our credit, and how much in gold? My understanding is that it is mainly paid by our credit. What is the sense of the minister saying that you apply the gold wholly to the automobile industry?

Mr. ABBOTT: If the British take automobiles, they will take them instead of aluminum; that is the answer to that.

Mr. McMASTER: Are any credits being given to the sterling countries other than the unexpended balance of the loans today?

Mr. ABBOTT: None.

Mr. KNOWLES: As will be seen, this section has to do with import controls. I understood—and I am speaking subject to correction—that one of the principles of import control was to provide in it the proper exceptions to enable the Minister of Trade and Commerce to assist in developing certain Canadian industries for the purpose of increasing our exports to help to overcome our balance of payments. That is the reason why I waited patiently until we reached section 3, because I thought that would be the appropriate place to discuss the positive side of the program which will be under the direction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I still feel that it is a perfectly proper question for a member of parliament to ask, namely, that some minister of the government should indicate when we can hope to get some information about that positive side of the program.

Mr. ABBOTT: Section 3 has nothing to do with the positive side of the program. The provisions with respect to capital goods in schedule 3 are there because, in the very nature of things, they do not lend themselves to quota restriction. Obviously one could not make a blanket prohibition of the importation of essential goods like machinery and structural steel. It was felt that the only practical way to deal with the importation of that class of goods as distinct from consumer goods was by the permit system. That permit system has nothing directly to do with the constructive side of the program. It might well be that one of the reasons which would govern in allowing or refusing a permit would be the fact that the project which was contemplated would contribute to our export trade, but the measure is essentially restrictive. These articles are such that they could not naturally be restricted under a quota system.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is a fair enough reply, but could the minister indicate at the same time when we can discuss the positive side of the program? I am beginning to wonder if there is one.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. ABBOTT: There is one obvious place where one could do that, and that is on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If there were no other place, it certainly could be done there. I think that would be an appropriate place to discuss this long-range matter. Obviously it is something that cannot be accomplished overnight, and I said that in my radio speech on November 17. I said these restrictive measures would be necessary until such time as the long-range constructive measure could be brought into effect. The hon. member for Cape Breton South laughs.

Mr. GILLIS: You mean it is out of range.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think any hon. member, on reflection, will agree that it is a pretty commonsense point of view.

Mr. GREEN: I should like to get back to the consideration of the amendment before the committee. As I understand it, the effect of that amendment is to take out of the operation of this bill imports from all countries other than dollar countries. I may be wrong in my interpretation, but I understand that that is what the amendment would do if accepted.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is my understanding of it.

Mr. GREEN: I must say that I support wholeheartedly an amendment of that type. Frankly I do not see how many of the private members on the government side can oppose that amendment. There are three types of restrictions provided by Bill No. 3. The restrictions under schedule I are in the form of outright prohibitions which apply to all countries, dollar countries and non-dollar countries or soft money countries, as the minister calls them.

Schedule II provides for quotas. It is pertinent to note that, in setting the quota restrictions, the government has forgotten all about this non-discriminatory principle about which the minister is so boastful. Two types of country are set out, the dollar country and the non-dollar country, and each is treated in a different way. I ask the Minister of Finance to correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding is that the dollar countries are Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Panama, El Salvador, Switzerland and Russia, which could hardly be described as a dollar country although she is in with the rest.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not a question of being a dollar country or not. It is rather a question of being one of the group of countries which are technically known as countries in balance of payment difficulties.

Mr. GREEN: Then there is the United States, including Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and Venezuela. There is discrimination in connection with schedule II.

There is a third group which comes under the Minister of Trade and Commerce and in which goods from all countries are included. In this case a permit must be obtained for the import of capital goods from any country.

It is perfectly clear that the problem we are facing is a shortage of United States dollars. It is also perfectly clear—and no minister has contradicted this—that under the Geneva trade treaties which the minister gives as his reason for having non-discriminatory—

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not give it as my reason.

Mr. GREEN: I am glad to hear that. Incidentally, I suspected that that was not the minister's reason. There is no doubt that under the Geneva treaties we have the power to adopt discriminatory policies.

Mr. ABBOTT: For twelve months.

Mr. GREEN: For twelve months. The minister says that this bill is temporary; he is calling it an emergency bill. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said it is to be for only a few months. Is it to be for more than twelve months, or what is it to be?

Mr. HOWE: Just keep the record straight; I never said a few months.

Mr. GREEN: I am afraid that what happens is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce gets enthusiastic and does not know what he says.

Mr. HOWE: I know what I say.

Mr. GREEN: I am afraid that statement was of that type.

Mr. HOWE: I am afraid it was not.

Mr. GREEN: It is perfectly clear that under the Geneva trade treaties Canada can discriminate to remedy an adverse exchange situation. It is perfectly clear that, by adopting this policy of total prohibition against non-dollar countries when we do not need to, we have discrimination. That is the sort of action which is breaking the terms of the agreement upon which some of the ministers place such store.

The minister said last night that this non-discriminatory policy was of the utmost value to Canada because of our large export trade and the fact that there was this Atlantic triangle of the United States, Canada and Great Britain. I would point out that Great Britain has always been our best customer.

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. GREEN: Practically always.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, not practically always.

Mr. GREEN: Ever since confederation, with the exception of a few years. So far as Great Britain is concerned, much of that trade has been built up under the discriminatory policy. The empire preferences, which were the only things that pulled us out of the depression, were discriminatory. Under those preferences, British Columbia was able to sell her lumber, her apples and her fish. There is no British Columbia member on the Liberal side of the house who will disagree with that statement.

Mr. REID: Do not point at me; I voted against the trade agreements.

Mr. GREEN: You made a big mistake that time. The hon. member for New Westminster does not often make a mistake like that. The imperial preferences were discriminatory. Canada's whole tariff policy from confederation to within these last few weeks has been discriminatory. No matter what government was in power, that was the type of fiscal policy we adopted.

Now suddenly the government has turned to a non-discriminatory policy. I would point out that we do not yet know what the United States will do. Congress has not approved the Geneva treaties and we do not know yet how far they are going to go. We do not know what concessions we shall get in the United States market. For the life of me I cannot understand why Canada is in such a hurry to give everything away. The Minister of Finance said last night, at page 1088 of Hansard:

> We do want to set an example.

We want to set an example to the whole world. That is why we are rushing into this non-discriminatory policy. The hon. member for Kindersley said that the government had adopted this non-discriminatory policy because of the Geneva treaties, but the Minister of Finance a moment ago denied that. He said that is not the reason at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not the only reason.

Mr. GREEN: The reason was given clearly by the minister himself when he said on December 9, as reported at page 95 of Hansard:

> The United States in particular attaches great importance to the non-discrimination principle. While it possibly could not be called a fetish with them, it is a principle to which great importance is attached. The success of this emergency program and the smooth functioning of our economy depend upon the wholehearted co-operation of our friends to the south. That has been evidenced by their willingness to make us a loan of $300 million.

Mr. ABBOTT: And to give us oil and steel.

Mr. GREEN: Give us nothing. We are paying for it all. The minister talks about a loan of $300 million. He does not tell the house that he was turned down when he asked for $800 million.

Mr. ABBOTT: He did not ask for that and was not turned down. Where does my hon. friend get his information?

Mr. GREEN: Let us get down to bedrock. The reason for this rush to adopt a non-discriminatory policy is to please the United States, and there is no other reason. This bill has one great defect. It should have stamped on every page, in large red letters, "Made in U.S.A."

Mr. ABBOTT: What nonsense!

Mr. GREEN: Then we would know exactly what sort of thing we are dealing with.

Mr. HOWE: No truck or trade with the Yankees.

Mr. GREEN: It is not a question of no truck or trade. That is just a cheap interjection.

Mr. HOWE: I am simply saying—

Mr. GREEN: Let my hon. friend rise in his place to say it.

Mr. HOWE: I simply say that cutting off imports from the United States, a market which they have had for many years, to help us straighten out our dollar position and at the same time preserve our place in the United States market is no truck or trade with the Yankees.

Mr. GREEN: I do not know what that has to do with the matter. I do say this, Mr. Chairman: there was a situation to be met and I am sure the people of the United States understand it. They are friends of ours and they know what position we are in. They want these restrictions lifted as soon as possible, and the quickest way to remedy our trouble was to put restrictions on imports of dollar goods rather than on goods from all over the world. The United States people have always been our friends and always will be. I should like to tell the ministers this, that the people of the United States and the United States government would have far more respect for the Canadian government if it stood on its feet and took the straightforward course. It is not the American way to want to have people grovelling before them and trying to win their favour. That is not how they do business, no more than it is our way. If we want the respect of the people of the United States, let us be open and aboveboard about this thing and not try to go around the corner. I urge the members on the government side to support this amendment and to make this bill apply only to the dollar countries. That is the reasonable provision to make at the present time. Put the bill through on that basis, and let us try to get over our difficulties as quickly as possible. But do not use this present occasion as a means of bringing in a non-discriminatory policy.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know how my hon. friend can speak with such complete assurance as to what the attitude of the United States people and government would be if we adopted the suggestion which is contained in this amendment and which my hon. friend has just advocated of a frankly out-and-out discriminatory policy against the United States.

Mr. GREEN: And all other dollar countries.

Mr. ABBOTT: But they do not amount to very much, I am sorry to say. It would be considered, and rightly considered, as a frankly discriminatory policy aimed at the United States. I know what I am talking about, because I have some means of knowing what the people of the United States feel about trade discrimination and I know that is how it would be considered. I hope the committee will fully realize the implications of adopting such a policy. I realize them, and I hope the committee will. The United States have been very good neighbours, and in the difficult times during the war when we were very short of essential supplies there was never any restriction placed on their exports to Canada. Export permits and export controls have never been enforced by the United States against Canada, as they have been against every other country. When hon. members stop to reflect for a moment on some of the essential raw materials we have to obtain from the United States, such as oil, steel and so on, I think they will agree it is important that the United States should continue to treat us in that way. That is something we might well bear in mind. I have, both this afternoon and before, discussed this question of discrimination and non-discrimination, and I have said that the net effect of adhering to this desirable principle will be, not to injure or diminish our imports from soft currency areas, but to increase them.

The amendment strikes right at the fundamental principle of the bill and converts it from a bill which is non-discriminatory to a bill which is aimed directly at the United States. I want the members of the committee to realize fully what they are doing if they vote for this amendment. I say at once that I cannot accept it and the government cannot accept it. The amendment will be opposed.

Mr. MERRITT: I should like to ask the minister a question arising out of his statement. Was the minister giving the committee an expression of his own opinion when he said that discriminatory measures against the United States would have repercussions in the way of stopping all United States exports to Canada, or has he had the assurance from United States authorities that that would be the result?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have had no such assurance, but I know this without any question, that such action would be deeply resented in the United States. What action they might see fit to take in consequence I do not know. They have always treated us extremely well. But to take such discriminatory action against them is something I would not do.

Mr. MERRITT: I am reminded by the minister's statement of something that took place in this house in 1930 when Canada was facing an adverse trade balance with the United States, although in lesser degree than today. It is my understanding that at that time the Conservative party, then in opposition, were calling upon the government to take action to right the adverse trade balance in the then only known way by the imposition of tariffs. The government was unwilling to take this course, and the then Prime Minister who is also the present Prime Minister said: Oh, yes, we could take action like that, but in dealing with our great friends and neighbours to the south "we must keep cool heads." Somebody from the front row of the opposition benches called out that the right hon. gentleman "has his extremities mixed." I think we have the same situation here now. If the minister has not this assurance from an official source in the United States that the result of our taking direct measures to counteract what after all is shortage of United States dollars and not other currency, I think we have the same Liberal party attitude, the same pattern and no changing of its stripes after eighteen years. I feel sure that in our present difficulties any steps that we took which were not designed against any country for the mere sake of discrimination, but were designed to protect this country from conditions to which it has come without any fault on the part of the Canadian people, would not be resented by any right-minded people. In taking the course that he has, and in making the statements that he has made this evening, the minister is not rightly interpreting the spirit either of the United States or Canadian people.

I have been quite amazed, and I should like the minister to expand on his position in this respect. In introducing this bill, the minister gave a reason for the imposition of the special excise taxes, which may be found on page 336 of Hansard. I agree it was only one reason, but he said in part:

> A second reason for these taxes was to limit so far as practicable the degree of discrimination against regular suppliers in the United States and their dealer organizations in Canada. For the time being, many of these suppliers and dealers are losing a part of their business because of the unavoidable necessity of restricting imports from the United States. Regrettable as it is, we cannot help that.

I call the attention of the committee to the next words:

> But by imposing these excise taxes we are doing something to protect the legitimate long-range interests of these businesses. While the Canadian manufacturers are temporarily relieved of competition from the United States, their unexpected advantage is being at least partly offset by the effects of the special taxes.

I would have said that the Canadian manufacturers were under disadvantage now, not advantages. So much for the way the minister, in practising non-discrimination, deals with United States business which has interests in Canada. He specifically protects them. He uses the word that is so hateful to him, "protection". When he introduces this general range of legislation respecting restrictions he will protect United States business. Perhaps there is nothing wrong with that, but I would have expected that he would also take equal pains to protect Canadian businesses and the Canadian people. I would have thought he would use—

Mr. ABBOTT: The tax is against the Canadians also.

Mr. MERRITT: I would have thought that he would use them with at least as much consideration and generosity as he used United States firms.

Mr. ABBOTT: He has.

Mr. MERRITT: But on the other hand, I shall give the committee one example of how the minister looks at his duty toward the Canadian people. He protects the United States businessman. But when we were talking the other night about hothouse tomatoes and lettuce, the minister, in dealing with the restriction and refusing to give the Canadian people any lead as to how long the restriction would be in operation, said of the measure, as reported at page 1082 of Hansard of February 10:

It is put on reluctantly, and anyone who expands production in a particular field, relying on the protection which is afforded by these prohibitions, must do so at his own risk.

In other words, special measures to protect the United States business. Perhaps that is perfectly all right, but surely not all right when he accompanies them with these categorical statements that Canadians must get along at their own risk.

Then again, on page 1077 of Hansard the minister said, and he brought this point up himself in talking about representations that had been made to him:

We realize, of course, that it has a highly protective effect; and quite a number of Canadian industrialists, or at least, Canadian producers, have suggested that many United States dollars could be saved if we would add some items to the list, and thereby stimulate production in Canada. However, thus far we have not seen fit to accede to those requests.

In another part of the same evening's debate at page 1086, the minister had this to say about the suggestion from the hon. member for York West, that deflation of the dollar would still be necessary, coupled with this program. Referring to the hon. member, the minister said:

It is true that he has been an advocate of devaluation for some time, and there are a great many people in this country who would like to see the devaluation of the dollar. They would benefit by it.

Some hon. members interjected, suggesting that that was an unworthy statement for the minister to make, and he went on and said:

Yes, they would; I know they would; make no mistake about that. There are advocates of devaluation because, among other things, it would benefit some lines of endeavour that they would be in.

His attitude throughout seems to have been one of being willing to get away from the Liberal party's doctrinaire free trade, and even to use the horrible word "protection" in respect of the United States manufacturer; but when it comes down to helping Canadian producers, in our present difficult situation to expand the production of goods in this country, to get some advantage of what otherwise must be disadvantages to all of us in Canada he says, No; it is at their own risk. They have private reasons of their own benefit for making these requests. Altogether, Mr. Chairman, not only on the ground of this question of discrimination, of stopping imports from non-dollar countries, but also on the ground of what right the minister has to ignore the interests of Canadian producers when he carefully protects the interests of United States producers, I think we should hear more from him.

The hon. member for Vancouver South has quoted the passage where the minister said that in this measure we want to set an example to the world. I want to suggest to the minister that his first duty is to the Canadian people and to Canadian business. We are in difficulties which are not of our own creation. We have no duty to set examples which will react against our own people. I want to suggest to him that he is still Minister of Finance in a Canadian government, and that we have not yet the wider form of North American government or world government which he seems to envisage by his statements to the house.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will just answer that, if I may. We are still on this protection business. I have dealt with this time and time again. The effect of imposing these prohibitions is about the highest form of protection that could be imposed. It protects the domestic producers who are behind the embargo, including the raising of vegetables or anything else. The statement that I made about these taxes and preserving to the legitimate United States exporter the market which he has had in Canada was this. It would offset to some extent the terrifically grave disadvantage under which he was placed in this market by the high protection we were giving to the Canadian domestic producer. Such offsetting protection, if one may call it that, of the United States exporter to Canada, is more than outweighed by the highly protective advantage given to the domestic producer. To say that you are protecting the United States exporter by cutting him down on a quota basis to a fraction of what he had previously and giving the Canadian producer a free and unrestricted market is a distortion of the real truth. There is no question as to the excise tax conferring protection on the United States exporter.

Mr. GREEN: You yourself used the word.

Mr. ABBOTT: How does a country prosper unless it has export and import trade? If anyone in this house will suggest that we should do anything which would unnecessarily injure the normal flow of trade between our two countries, he has a political philosophy which is completely different from my own. This afternoon a number of hon. members were urging the view that we were foolish in cutting off imports. The hon. member for Swift Current was urging that we should remove some of these prohibitions and should let in some of these refrigerators. You cannot have it both ways in these things. To suggest that this policy is one which shows I have just forgotten the exact language my hon. friend used—that I am thinking of world government, international government—

Mr. JACKMAN: North American.

Mr. ABBOTT: —North American or something that is other than a Canadian government is, to use a word I have had occasion to use before in this debate, just nonsense.

Mr. MERRITT: I wish to follow this up one step further. To my mind, this is not just simply a question of a bill that goes through this house like amendments to the National Housing Act or other important measures. What we are hearing from the minister now is a new statement of Canada's trade policies, and it is important that we should fully understand where this government is leading us by these new ideas which have never before been introduced in this house.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is nothing new at all.

Mr. MERRITT: I would ask the minister this question. According to his own statement, he has taken steps to protect, for the duration of these emergency exchange restrictions, what he calls the legitimate interests of the Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; because we have taken them away in the same bill.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, I quite understand that.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are trying to let them keep a little of what we have taken away from them.

Mr. MERRITT: I quite understand that he has taken much away in the same bill.

Mr. HOWE: You will never get him to understand.

Mr. ABBOTT: I suppose not, even though I talked all night.

Mr. MERRITT: He has taken much away in the same bill. In these measures he has taken what steps he could to soften the blow upon United States businesses. He himself used the word "protect" in relation to the action he has taken in that respect. By this bill you are taking away from Canadian manufacturers their normal trade as well. You are stopping a lot of them from importing from the United States goods which for a long time they have been accustomed to import. But when it comes to protecting them against what you are doing to them in this bill the minister says, that is a business risk you must take yourself. He has no help to give in the bill and no advice to offer to Canadians, even as to how long these restrictions will remain in force. We have tried to get from the minister a statement of how long he thinks these restrictions will be in force, because we think it will be useful and will soften the blow upon Canadian businessmen. They can then make up their own minds as to what they are going to do. But the minister tells us that he cannot make any forecast at all. Yet the other night the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Halifax speaking just when this same point was up before the committee. He had no hesitation at all in giving a forecast. He gave his well-known forecast that the restrictions would last for only a few months, if he was correctly reported in the press. One of these ministers has an idea how long the restrictions will continue, namely, a matter of months, and the Canadian businessman could make up his mind on the basis of that statement. The other minister says that he has no forecast; it may be longer; it may be a very long term. I say that one of them, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not say so.

Mr. MERRITT: —is teasing the Canadian people. "Teasing" is the only word I can think of that correctly describes the situation. Suppose it should happen as the hon. member for York West suggested to this house. Suppose it should happen that these restrictions had to remain in force, not for months, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce says, but for years, as was suggested by the hon. member for York West, who has been right several times over these matters.

Mr. ABBOTT: He is a great fellow.

Mr. MERRITT: Is the situation to be that for all those years the United States businessman who has present connections in Canada is to have his market protected for him?

Mr. ABBOTT: He will have it restricted.

Mr. MERRITT: Is he to have it held open for him during these restrictions, while for all these years the Canadian businessman will not be able to go into any one of these businesses, may not be able to continue in his present business, or may have to change the very basis of his business, not just because of the restrictions, but because the restrictions are on and the minister will not tell him when they are likely to come off?

Mr. ADAMSON: The restrictions are a secret weapon.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister talks of this measure as a highly protective measure—

Mr. ABBOTT: Protectionist.

Mr. MERRITT: —or a highly protectionist measure. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the members of the committee what protection there is for the Canadian businessman and the Canadian people who are in complete and absolute uncertainty as to what the protective measures are. There is no protection at all in such a measure.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is protection on both sides.

Mr. MERRITT: I can only suggest to the minister that he forget for a moment his doctrinaire ideas about free trade—

Mr. ABBOTT: I will try to.

Mr. MERRITT: —or at least the doctrinaire ideas which have been followed by his party ever since confederation.

Mr. McILRAITH: To the great advantage of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: They have never followed the idea.

Mr. MERRITT: I suggest that he realize that this bill is not in any sense a protectionist measure for Canadian businessmen. It is a means by which many Canadian businessmen may be destroyed. It is a means by which many Canadian businessmen have been destroyed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MERRITT: Certainly.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I want to ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard exactly what protection he desires turtles to have.

Mr. MERRITT: I do not want to say any more on this point at this moment, but I do not want to let pass unchallenged the statement of the minister that this is a protectionist measure for Canadian business. It is not. It is a destructive measure. I want to suggest to the minister and the government that, in following this principle of non-discrimination, particularly when, as has been pointed out many times, it is not necessary even under the Geneva trade agreements to practise full non-discrimination, he is doing more harm to the Canadian people than that which necessarily had to follow the moment restrictions like these were brought in. When the economy of the country is being placed so thoroughly in the hands of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as is done by this bill, the sort of statements made by the Minister of Finance throughout the debate do not give me any assurance of a measure which will be of any assistance at all to the Canadian people. I think he needs a major change in his outlook on these matters if we are to have this measure administered in such a way as to do the Canadian people the least possible harm.

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I wonder if the committee is ready for the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I have said I cannot accept it.

Mr. GREEN: Do not hurry; take your medicine.

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, gladly; from you and a lot of others.

Mr. REID: I have been waiting for over fifteen minutes, so that there is no favouritism being shown me now. My purpose in rising is to answer an argument advanced this evening by the hon. member for Vancouver South. I thought he made it plain that one of his main arguments against this measure and in favour of the amendment was that the legislation was directed not only against United States trade but also against trade with Great Britain; and he suggested that if we on this side voted for the amendment that would free trade as between Canada and Great Britain, and that this measure would then be directed solely against the dollar countries.

Mr. GREEN: I am sure the hon. member does not want to be unfair. I said it covered all the soft currency countries. Great Britain is, of course, the principal country; but it covers also Australia, France, Belgium, Holland and other countries.

Mr. REID: But you said you could not see a member on this side standing up and voting for the amendment, which drew the retort from one of the ministers—I did not say it—that you were waving the flag in regard to the triangle formed by Canada, the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. GREEN: I did not hear that interruption, or I would have dealt with it.

Mr. REID: You wanted this bill to deal directly with the United States and not to bring the United Kingdom within the provisions of the schedules. There might be something to that argument if we did not have the schedules before us. I would just ask the committee to look at the bill. There are three schedules. The first is the prohibitory schedule; the second sets out the items which may be imported under quota, and the third covers those coming under permits. So it can be reasonably assumed that under schedules

II and III certain goods will be allowed to come from Great Britain and the United States, under quotas and permits. But look at schedule I and see what it deals with. You will see that we are prohibiting the importation of such articles as tea, coffee, oysters, turtles, which were mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley; maple syrup, grapes, melons, fruits. Then you get on to tarred paper, sandpaper, roofing shingles. Then you go along to candles, perfumery, licorice. If you look over the schedule you will see that very few of the articles enumerated in schedule I come from Great Britain. I doubt if the trade between Canada and Great Britain in any of these prohibited articles would amount to very much. Look at the items. They include planks and boards and plywood; fruits of all kinds; grapes; frozen vegetables, and so on. It seems to me most of these articles come from the United States, and that Great Britain would not be losing any trade because of these prohibitions.

I rose because the inference I took from the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South—and I think it was more than an inference—was that schedule I was directed not only against the United States but also against Great Britain; and the hon. member went on practically to challenge us on this side to vote against the amendment proposed by the C.C.F. I just draw these facts to the attention of hon. members on this side; and I would ask hon. members opposite to tell us how many of the articles listed in schedule I would be brought to Canada from Great Britain.

Mr. FLEMING: In his remarks a few moments ago, following the hon. member for Vancouver South, the Minister of Finance submitted what I thought was the most extraordinary argument in support of this extraordinary measure that one could expect to hear in this house, even coming from the government side. I wish to deal with that argument for just a moment.

The minister was talking about discrimination, harmful discrimination of the kind that will give offence to our cousins south of the border. I should like to ask him, where did this idea of discrimination begin in respect of this program? I say it began right in the government's order in council P.C. 4678; and yonder to your right, Mr. Chairman, are the exponents of government by order in council. Look what they have done here. They drew a distinction in this order between the scheduled and the non-scheduled countries. They themselves drew the line of distinction as between the hard currency countries on the one hand and on the other, the countries other than hard currency countries. It is not simply the United States, as the Minister of Finance has said. The others may not bulk so large in our total trade, but the line was drawn on the basis of hard currency.

What the Minister of Finance had to say was this, and to me it was an extraordinary argument. He said, "Now, do not remove from this bill the harm that it will do to our trade with countries outside the hard currency countries." It is not just Britain. It is Britain; it is the commonwealth and France and many other countries in the world, countries with which we want to trade. What does he say? He says, "Do not remove from this bill the harm it will do these other countries, because if you do you will give offence to the United States."

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not do them any harm; it helps them.

Mr. FLEMING: To confine the application of this bill to hard currency countries will not do the United States one particle of harm. The harm which is done to United States export trade is done in the bill, just as it was done in P.C. 4678; and to confine that harm, that reduction in export trade, to countries in the hard currency area will not hurt the hard currency countries one whit more than they are being hurt right now.

Beyond that, far from increasing the burden this bill is imposing upon imports from the United States and other hard currency countries the sort of proposal we on this side of the house are supporting, which would confine the effect of the measure to the hard currency countries, actually would help the United States. How is the United States to be helped, the position of international trade being what it is today, unless we do all we can to help to revive those countries in the soft currency areas? Will the Minister of Finance say that it will be of some help to the United States, that it will appease feeling in the United States, for us to apply import restrictions against Great Britain, against other commonwealth countries, against France, against Scandinavian countries, against other countries in Europe and in South America?

One of the fundamental lines of United States policy today is to help these countries to rebuild their economies. Yet the minister says we shall offend sentiment in the United States by trying to undo now, in this amendment, the harm that this measure would do to soft currency countries. The minister's argument does not hold water; it contradicts itself.

The United States is contemplating a European recovery program; a figure of $17 billion to $20 billion is talked about, that the United States is preparing to put into Europe, to rebuild those countries; and Canada at the present time is being asked by the Minister of Finance to impose hardship on those countries when they try to get their goods into the Canadian market.

An hon. MEMBER: Nonsense.

Mr. FLEMING: He is. It is right in the bill; and if you cannot read it there, you cannot read anything. Not only will the kind of proposal we are making on this side of the house, which is to confine the effects of this measure to hard currency countries, do no harm to the United States, but it will actually help the United States.

And in the next place, it will help us.

Mr. ABBOTT: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. FLEMING: You are trying at the present time to help those countries by giving them credits. We do not know in many cases whether or not we shall be repaid. But, Mr. Chairman, surely it would be the part of common sense to take from those countries at the present time what they are in a position to send to us, struggling as they are to build up their export trade.

What country in the world has a bigger stake in the rebuilding of the export trade of Great Britain, France, the Scandinavian countries and other countries in the soft currency area than has Canada? What country has a greater stake? None. It means a great deal to Canada right now to help those countries in every way possible to increase their export trade. That is the only way, under present conditions, that we are going to help to get ourselves paid.

The kind of treatment the minister is proposing does not simply harm the United States and harm these other countries. It is harming a great many Canadians right here at home. Let me give one or two examples. I am thinking of two young returned soldiers in Toronto who took everything they had in the world, including their re-establishment grants, to establish here an agency for the importation of a certain line of French goods, based upon contacts that those veterans had made when they were fighting in France. What happened? What will happen now? This bill, simply because the Minister of Finance blindly follows the fetish of non-discrimination, will completely ruin the business of those two young veterans. Will any man in his right senses stand in this House of Commons and say that will help the United States?

Mr. Chairman, I could give you dozens of examples of other veterans and other Canadians who have established import businesses in Canada for the purpose of importing goods from Great Britain, from the commonwealth countries and from other countries in Europe—soft currency countries. What is happening to them? They are being ruined. Their businesses are being completely ruined by this measure. Why? Will that bring help to the United States? Of course it will not. Will that appease sentiment in the United States? —to ruin the businesses of these Canadian importers, and to reduce imports from these soft currency countries which so badly need to export today?

Well, if that is the kind of sentiment the Minister of Finance imputes to our cousins over the border, then I say to him and to the committee that he insults the intelligence of the people of the United States.

This situation with which we are confronted, which is embodied in the arbitrary and dictatorial measures in this bill, is a situation brought upon this country by a government that was blind and impotent. What they are doing today, now, is not simply to encompass further ruin of the Canadian people; rather, by making such a stupid fetish of this talk of non-discrimination, they are doing untold damage to our relations with trading nations elsewhere in the world, with which in the future we are bound intimately to be connected, if there is to be any hope of economic revival in the world.

Two wrongs do make a right; and the Minister of Finance does not make this bill one whit more acceptable to the house or to the Canadian people by extending the harm that it does to the soft currency areas, as he is doing to the hard currency areas. The more one hears the government trying to support this measure, the more one is convinced that the whole thing is a priceless example of economic lunacy.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief, because it does not require much to meet what has been said by the hon. member. My voice is not good tonight, but the hon. member does not require much answering. He has absolutely proven the need of the bill by the speech he has just made. Long before I came to this parliament I heard about "no truck or trade with the Yankees." I heard about "blasting our way into the markets of the world."

Mr. FLEMING: You are trying to blast your way out of it.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I can talk just as long as you can, and I can wave my arms just as long as you can. After having listened to that speech from one of the heirs-apparent to the leadership of the opposition, I can only say that in this party we have a great deal more difficulty in aspiring to leadership because we are all heirs-apparent. Over there they change their leadership every six months. So my hon. friend may yet have some hope.

The speech he made just now was a wonderful speech for isolationism. I believe I can understand this bill, and particularly item 109 in schedule I, one of the prohibited items: "Nuts of all kinds". We do not need nuts in Canada; we have them here now.

Mr. JACKMAN: If they are shelled they are all right.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The day before yesterday I heard the hon. member for Rosedale read for forty minutes that great thesis from the Toronto stock exchange. Listen just for a little while to the common people of Canada on the other side of the track—which I know you would not understand.

I want to ask my hon. friends from Toronto if they have read item 92—you people, who are going to blast your way into the markets of the world and who are going to have no truck or trade with the Yankees.

Mr. MILLER: Have you done anything for your voice tonight?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I ask my hon. friend from Manitoba if, after reading tonight's paper—which was not so gratifying to the Toronto stock exchange—the policy of the Minister of Agriculture with respect to wheat has not proven to be the correct one for the people of Canada.

Mr. SKEY: Are you supporting him for leadership?

Mr. HARTT: The same as the Tories are supporting you.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Much as I appreciate the help from Montreal, I do not need any assistance in handling Toronto.

As I said before, we have gone for twenty years with one leader; we do not change every six months. You are all fighting over there now, including the hon. member for Stanstead, to make sure that you will be in the running. I understand that there are four in the running now.

Mr. MANROSS: We are not in the trouble you are about our leader.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You change them every six months.

Mr. MANROSS: We have one now.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It is only such measures as the one being brought in now by the Minister of Finance that have enabled British Columbia to dispose of her products. We are paying sixteen cents a quart for milk, and nobody emphasized that price more than the party over there. The hon. member who has just spoken does not say anything about eight cents for a bottle of coca-cola.

Mr. MANROSS: No advertising; do not use trade names.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Just let me take care of the berries.

Mr. MANROSS: I will take care of the pop; you take care of the berries.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I believe that, because all you do is to pop up over there.

Mr. MANROSS: I will take care of pop and mom too.

Mr. KNOWLES: Get back to the nuts in the shell.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I presume the hon. member for London knows all about kumquats. I do not even know what you do with them. I presume they come from Ontario.

Mr. MANROSS: How do you spell that?

An hon. MEMBER: This is not a kindergarten.

Mr. MANROSS: What are you doing here?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I ask hon. members kindly to remain silent while another hon. member is speaking.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I shall be serious now because I have had fun with hon. members over there. They have been talking all night and have said nothing. We in British Columbia do not believe that, in connection with the disposal of our crops, we can depend upon the Marshall plan. We believe that a friendly government in the United States will be of material assistance to the province, but we believe also that it is only through such legislation as this bill that we can have any hope of disposing of our future crops. We realize the foreign exchange situation and that we as Canadians must do our part. I as the member for Fraser Valley believe that it is our only hope at the present time with the emergency situation we now face.

Mr. ARGUE: When the minister was dealing with the amendment a moment ago he stated in no uncertain words that he was opposed to the principle of the amendment which would permit discrimination. As I understood him, he gave as his reason that Canada was greatly dependent upon the United States for such things as oil, structural steel and one other item which he mentioned but which I could not get.

Mr. ABBOTT: Cotton. There are a dozen or more essential commodities.

Mr. ARGUE: I am admitting that Canada is dependent upon the United States for a great many commodities.

Mr. ABBOTT: And they are in short supply in the United States now.

Mr. ARGUE: I think the minister will agree that under the Geneva trade agreements, the basis of which is non-discrimination, Canada as a signatory is allowed to discriminate under certain conditions until January 1, 1949. I believe that the United States believes in non-discrimination and will live up to the Geneva trade treaties. I should like to know how the United States can discriminate in connection with the export of certain things to Canada, things that are essential to us.

Then I have another question. The minister implied that the United States was giving Canada some special favours. How can Canada be given special favours by the United States if that country is living up to the Geneva trade agreements which say that no exporting country can discriminate? If the United States is giving special favours to Canada, then that would be discrimination against other countries.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is very easy to answer. The United States or any other country is free to impose export controls; they have them now in the United States, but they are not enforcing them against Canada. We have export controls on feed grain which we are enforcing against the United States. For certain reasons the United States is not enforcing her export controls against Canada with respect to steel and oil. She is entitled to exercise those controls under the Geneva and other agreements.

Mr. ARGUE: Would you say that is discriminatory?

Mr. ABBOTT: It all depends upon how one defines "discriminatory". Under the Geneva agreements, one is not permitted to pay export subsidies, and the United States are not paying export subsidies. However, one is permitted to exercise export control over commodities in short supply in the country of origin, and that is what the United States are doing today. However, they are not exercising those export controls against this country and never have done so.

There is one other feature I did not touch on in discussing this matter. This is only my personal opinion which may or may not be shared by others, but I feel that, while the European recovery plan is under discussion in congress, which is a far-reaching and generous plan on the part of the United States and which we understand contemplates the use of the United States taxpayers' money to purchase supplies in other countries, it would be most unfortunate if her next door neighbour were to adopt a discriminatory policy against her.

Mr. IRVINE: It is warmer in the chamber this evening than it was yesterday afternoon, and there is a little more humour. Both of these conditions appear to be welcomed on all sides because they help to break the monotony. I am glad to feel so much heat and see so much interest and hear so much humour. During the debate tonight on the amendment, I think some of those who have defended the amendment and some who have opposed it have gone farther than the case warrants.

I wish to say a word in favour of the amendment, but I want to say also that I am not a preferentialist. I think there are some good principles embodied in the Geneva treaties which were signed by twenty-one nations. There are in those treaties certain general principles with which I think this committee agrees. We believe in multilateral agreements. The more multilateral they can be, the better. But there are realistic positions that have to be taken into consideration. The agreement itself and those who drafted the agreement recognize that a country like Canada might find itself in a position where it had to protect its currency, and so provision was made for that very purpose so that until a certain date in 1949 we could take advantage of the discriminatory clause.

All that we are saying in this amendment is that we want to take advantage of that discriminatory clause which was put into the Geneva agreement, and thus we are not violating its principle. We are simply taking care of our own people and protecting our own interests in the best way we possibly can.

As has been pointed out, I think very ably by the hon. member for Eglinton, such a policy need not and, I believe, would not affect our relationship with the United States one little bit. If it did, it would not be to the credit of the United States. Most decidedly if their dollar was in jeopardy or their exchange was in the position of ours they would not hesitate for one moment—and I do not blame them—to take advantage of the discriminatory clause. We are merely asking that, because we are banning certain goods from the United States under certain conditions, we shall not ban those goods from Britain or from the dominions or from any other country that might want to supply us with them. By so doing, we would make it possible for the people of Canada to secure from Britain and the dominions the goods we have found it necessary to ban from the United States. In the second place, we would improve our exchange position with the United States, and ultimately perhaps would have more to expend in the United States and might shorten the period for which this legislation is necessary, assuming that the government's predictions are correct that it will be only a temporary measure. But may I say that I doubt its temporary character.

I am one of those who believe that, whether we like it or not—and we are not blaming the government for this—the world situation is such that there may be a reorientation of the whole business of international relationships and international trade, and what we think today may be only for a brief duration of a month or two may be merely the beginning of a long period of very much different relationships among the nations of the world in matters of trade.

And so, having in view, in the first place, the needs of our own people in respect of goods, and having regard, in the second place, to the actual financial problem with which this nation is confronted, I and those on this side who support the amendment cannot see what harm could come to our relationship with the United States by adopting the amendment. But we can see that great good can come to this country and to other countries in Europe which might be glad to make exchanges with us. So I urge the government to accept the amendment, and if they will not accept it I hope we shall be able to carry it anyway, and thus materially improve the legislation which the government is proposing.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the amendment on its merits, I should like to reply to the arguments advanced against it by the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for New Westminster.

In opposing the amendment, the Minister of Finance based his argument almost entirely on the premise that to adopt it could be interpreted only as being directly discriminatory against the United States. That, to my mind, is losing sight of the main purpose of this legislation, which is that Canada is suffering from a shortage of United States dollars—that is not our fault—and in taking steps to relieve that shortage is not discriminating against the United States, but in essence is trying to protect our own position.

But what it seems to me is discriminatory and directly discriminatory, is to go on from there and say that, because we have to take measures to restrict our imports from the United States, we shall also apply those measures to the other countries of the world. That is discrimination against the other countries of the world, whereas the original measure, which apparently was acceptable to the United States, is not discriminating against them, because in essence it is something that was simply forced upon us to protect our own position. If, then, the United States are willing to accept the fact that we have to impose an embargo on trade with them it seems to me that they will not ask that we do the same thing which would hurt our trade with the rest of the world in the same way that we hurt our trade with them. If, as the minister says, they are good neighbours and realize our difficulties and have accepted the fact that we are reluctantly compelled to do this, they would not say: Then you must do the same thing to the rest of the world that you are doing to us. That, I am certain, is not the position which the United States would take, as the minister suggested to justify the stand which the government has adopted as a result of its doctrinaire belief in the policy of non-discrimination. It cannot be interpreted in any other way.

The hon. member for New Westminster advanced, I think, a more cogent reason against accepting the amendment if his argument had been correct, but it was not correct. He dealt with the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver South that the embargoes contained in the bill are damaging to our trade with the United Kingdom. The hon. member for New Westminster said: Let us look at schedule I; and the hon. member for Fraser Valley did the same thing. They picked out a few items such as turtles and nuts in the shell and out of the shell, and so on. Of course it is a very easy thing to pick out three or four items from a schedule of eight pages and say: These articles do not come in here from the United Kingdom and therefore this bill will not hurt our trade with the United Kingdom. But if you will look at schedule I a little more carefully and compare its items with the goods which the United Kingdom is prepared to supply, it is obvious that this bill would damage our trade with the United Kingdom and the British commonwealth extensively. I should like to name just a few articles.

On December 11 the British government published a list of articles which it was prepared to supply in quantity to Canada in 1948. They include lighting fixtures, office furniture, domestic laundry machines, refrigerators, movie projectors, electric clocks, camera and photographic accessories, domestic electric appliances—all substantial articles covering a wide variety of trade. These are the articles which the United Kingdom is prepared to supply to Canada in quantity in 1948.

Schedule I contains a list of goods the importation of which is prohibited, and at the bottom of page 9 you will find this item: kitchen or household hollow-ware. There is a category of kitchen articles. On page 10 of the bill appears "refrigerators, domestic or store, completely equipped or not; motion picture projectors for use with films; lamp shades and shade holders; electric light fixtures or parts." Then two-thirds down the page a whole category of electric appliances, domestic electric appliances such as are covered in the list that the United Kingdom is prepared to supply. On page 11 of the bill, still in schedule I, item 519 is as follows, "house, office, cabinet or store furniture of wood, iron or other material", and so on. These are not items of trade lightly to be dismissed as the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Fraser Valley tried to dismiss them. They are substantial items of trade. They are not like nuts or turtles or anything else one wishes to name. They are items of importance to the United Kingdom, which is striving so earnestly to increase her exports to us, and which we should be encouraging to increase its exports so that we might enable it to pay us in dollars for what we must sell to it.

This situation is one which has been forced on us by circumstances; and if, as the minister says, the United States is willing to recognize our position, and not to hold it against us then—and I repeat the argument put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard—the minister's first duty is to the people of Canada. His first duty is to minimize—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what I am trying to do in proposing a non-discriminatory bill.

Mr. FULTON: That is exactly what the minister is not doing in proposing a non-discriminatory bill. He calls it a non-discriminatory bill, but that does not make it so. Actually it is a discriminatory bill, unnecessarily discriminating against the commonwealth countries, France, Belgium, The Netherlands, Luxembourg, the Scandinavian countries, and all the other countries in the soft currency areas which need not be included in this bill. It is discriminatory against them, and to that extent it is unnecessarily injurious to the Canadian people and the Canadian economy. If the minister and hon. members opposite would see the matter in that light, which is a logical approach to the question, and if, as he says, and as we believe, the United States is realistic about the matter, then it could easily be seen that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kindersley is acceptable. It is simply making what is otherwise an unnecessarily cumbersome and harsh piece of legislation into a good, workable and realistic piece of legislation.

Mr. ABBOTT: Would it be possible to put the amendment tonight?

Mr. GREEN: No.

Mr. McMASTER: Sitting on this side of the house, I cannot speak for the policy of my party. I can follow the policy of the party when we come to one. So far as I know, the policy of this party has never been to uphold this amendment. I believe it would be a mistake if this amendment were to carry. It seems to me that there is no particular reason why it should carry. This is a bad bill. I spoke about it when it was up for second reading, and this amendment will not make a bad bill any better; I think it will make it far worse. The effect of this amendment will be to do something that will be injurious to us as a country. I can only wish that the debate which has taken place in the last two hours had not taken place at all.

Somebody spoke about what happened in 1930. The year 1930 is not a long time ago so far as I am concerned; it is comparatively recent history, but a great many things have happened during that time. So far as I am concerned, I will oppose the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. BENTLEY: No, Mr. Chairman. I do not see any reason why this vote should go through tonight.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are just on the amendment. We are not asking that the section be passed tonight. Why cannot we vote on the amendment tonight?

Mr. BENTLEY: Because we hope some day the minister will give up his self-opinion and bow to the will of the majority of the people of this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: This will not be one of the cases.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Let us find out where the majority is in the committee.

Mr. BENTLEY: There have been a lot of interjections from the other side of the house. Some of them have been quite unfair. The Minister of Trade and Commerce deliberately refused to give some information to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He then threw across the house the statement that he was just flag waving again. Is there anything wrong with flag waving in this connection? If a flag is the symbol of nationhood, and if we have any pride in our nation, is it not better to stand on our feet than to go down on our knees to somebody?

I do not know whether the United States want this or not, since some people say they do not and others say they do. But from appearances, this is influenced by the United States. I think the minister is heavily influenced by them in this matter, and to me it can be reduced just as simply as this. An individual owes money to his storekeeper. He has not been able to pay his bill because of some circumstances in his business that cut down his earning power. He goes to the storekeeper and says, "I owe you more money than I can pay for some time; therefore I will have to cut down on my purchases from you." The storekeeper would simply say, "Certainly you will have to do that", and it would be an amicable agreement. But if the individual who owed the storekeeper money was associated with some other person who owed him money and had some goods that the debtor of the other storekeeper could use, and the merchant to whom the individual owed money were to say, "If you do not buy from me you cannot take anything in payment from another person," I would say that that would be an unfriendly act on the part of the merchant who was the creditor of the original person of whom I spoke. Mr. Chairman, would you call eleven o'clock.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bradette): I am in the hands of the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ABBOTT: Has my hon. friend much to say on that?

Mr. BENTLEY: I do not know.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member is not ready to vote on the amendment?

Mr. BENTLEY: No.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: As the Prime Minister announced, and as was agreed to, apparently by all hon. members, tomorrow we shall revert to the debate on the address.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Veterans Affairs when the motion to set up a special committee on veterans affairs will be moved? Will it be tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No, that will not be tomorrow. The arrangement that was made was that we would revert to the debate on the address tomorrow, and we cannot do more than one thing at a time.

Mr. GREEN: I know that. May we have any idea when that motion will be put to the house?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the house were prepared to have the motion adopted as a routine motion without any debate it could be put at once; but the information we have is that some hon. members desire a debate, and a debate which may be quite protracted. We shall have to consider when time can be made available for that debate.

Mr. GREEN: The minister cannot say tonight?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No, I cannot say tonight when there will be an opportunity for that debate, because there was some hope that the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne would be concluded next week and that we could then take up something else. I can assure the hon. member that the motion to set up that committee is one which is looked upon as having a high degree of priority in the business to be dealt with.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 13, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

THE MINISTRY

CERTAIN POWERS OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO BE EXERCISED BY MINISTER OF RECONSTRUCTION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to table copy of order in council P.C. 529 of February 10, 1948, passed under the authority of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, relative to certain powers of the Minister of Transport to be exercised temporarily by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INTERNATIONAL BILL OF RIGHTS—APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Perhaps at this time I might answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), as follows:

Has Canada made any recommendations as yet to the united nations with respect to the composition of the international bill of rights, or with respect to any rights which should be included therein?

At the time my hon. friend asked the question I had not noticed that there was a question much to the same effect already on the order paper, asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which reads:

1. Has a copy of the international bill of rights, which was approved by the commission on human rights at its meeting in Geneva, been received by the Canadian government?

2. Has Canada been asked for comments on this international bill of rights before it is submitted to the general assembly of the united nations?

3. Have such comments been given?

4. If so, what is the nature thereof and will parliament be given an opportunity to express itself on this matter?

I can answer both questions at the same time, as follows: Canada is not a member of the commission on human rights which was charged by the economic and social council of the united nations with responsibility for drafting an international bill of human rights. The government, therefore, has not had occasion to consider the draft.

The international bill of human rights has recently been formally submitted in draft form to member governments of the united nations for their comment. It is the intention of the government to have the draft referred to the joint parliamentary committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms for its consideration, when the committee has been set up.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: May I ask a supplementary question? Have any of the provinces made representations to the dominion government against the acceptance of any of the principles embodied in the international bill of rights?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am informed that the Minister of Justice has been in communication with the attorneys general of the provinces, but I am not able to say at the present time what answers the minister has received. Perhaps I might direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the hon. member's question, and have it answered later.

HYDE PARK AGREEMENT

STATEMENT IN REPLY TO REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 3 the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) asked a question about the Hyde Park agreement. At that time he asked if there were any details about it unknown to parliament. I answered immediately that I was not aware that there were any, and that the Hyde Park agreement had not been set out in any document other than the communication to the press of April 20, 1941, which had been tabled in parliament.

Since that time there has been an exchange of notes between the government of the United States and the government of Canada in May of 1945, which I think I should table, so that hon. members may have not only the details relating to the Hyde Park agreement itself, but anything that has flowed out of the agreement since that time.

As a result of the Hyde Park agreement, joint economic committees were formed, composed of interested officials of both countries, the function of which was (1) to achieve more efficient utilization of the combined resources of the two countries in the production of the defence requirements; and (2) to reduce post-war economic dislocation consequent upon the changes which the economy in each country had undergone. The joint economic committees were set up on the Canadian side by orders in council P.C. 4500 of June 20, 1941, and P.C. 7227 of October 4, 1941. While these committees were successful in achieving their first object, little progress was made in regard to the second, and by mutual agreement they were dissolved in 1944, Canadian action being taken by P.C. 2586 of April 11, 1944, following an announcement made to the press on March 14, 1944.

A year later, on May 7, 1945, a note was received from the United States embassy proposing that the general principles of the Hyde Park declaration be continued on a fully reciprocal basis for the remainder of the war and that the same spirit of co-operation between the two countries should characterize their treatment of reconversion and other problems of mutual concern as the transition to peacetime economy progresses.

In our note of May 15, 1945, the Minister of National Defence, who was then the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, replied welcoming the assurance of the government of the United States that it would continue to deal with the problems of the transition from war to peace in the spirit of the Hyde Park declaration. Further, it was stated that the government of Canada, on its part, desired to assure the government of the United States that the same spirit of co-operation which was manifested in the Hyde Park declaration would characterize the Canadian government's consideration and treatment of the problems of the period of transition which are of mutual concern.

At the instance of the United States, publication of these notes was withheld at the time, although the substance of the understanding evidenced by the notes was communicated to the press in Ottawa and in Washington on May 21, 1945. From then until last October the notes were treated as confidential; but in response to a request from the United States Department of State permission was granted by Canada in October last that they be released to the United States Senate small business committee. And I understand that they have since been published in the United States.

I should like to table them. Perhaps it would be convenient to hon. members if they were printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings so that they may have the exact terms. If that is agreeable to hon. members I would ask that that be done.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the minister leave of the house to table these documents?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. SPEAKER: And is it the pleasure of the house that these memoranda be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to ask a question arising out of the tabling of the exchange of notes in May, 1945, regarding the Hyde Park declaration. Is it a fact that as a result of these notes the United States is now precluded from placing an embargo on oil or steel or coal so long as the Hyde Park declaration is in effect?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I was advised many times from the other side, even when I was Minister of Justice, that I should not venture to express any legal opinion in the house.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not asking for any.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The notes have been tabled and the house has agreed that they be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings. I think the hon. member will wish to draw his own conclusions from the terms of those notes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It all depends upon what the intentions of the government were. The minister should know.

CATTLE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF EMBARGO ON SHIPMENT TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. LEWIS MENARY (Wellington North): Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 986 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question about flax, which was answered; but he did not answer my question respecting the policy of the government concerning the export of cattle to the United States. Will he answer it now?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Export permits are issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce on the advice of the wartime prices and trade board. The policy with regard to cattle is not administered by the department for which I am responsible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SHUTDOWN OF SAINT JOHN DRY DOCK—CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS DREDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have already sent him a copy of a telegram I received from the business agent of the shipbuilders union at Saint John, New Brunswick. It sets out that the Saint John dry dock has closed down, affecting some 800 employees. Can the minister inform the house why this shutdown has taken place, and whether he will consider the construction of a public works dredge which, I understand, is now available to this firm?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can hardly imagine why my hon. friend addressed his question to me. I am not aware that there has been a shutdown at the Saint John dry dock. There are many reasons why it might be shut down for a day or two in the middle of winter, but I know the government recently awarded a contract to that firm in excess of $2,000,000. I was told in Halifax that whereas the waterfront workers in Halifax were idle, the waterfront workers in Saint John were working night and day. Any matter with regard to a public works dredge or action under the dry docks act should be addressed to my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. GILLIS: In explanation I may say that the minister is mentioned in this telegram as having made the statement that there would be no layoffs in ship repairs, et cetera, for at least eighteen months.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should ask his question; he should not make a statement.

Mr. GILLIS: Will the minister pass on the telegram and the question to the appropriate minister for a reply?

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to do that.

TAFT-HARTLEY LABOUR LAW—COMMUNISTS IN U.S. LABOUR UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of immigration or to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken note of the charges recently made by Senator Taft of the United States, which charges are reportedly backed by C. H. Millard, that the Taft-Hartley labour law is driving communists out of United States labour unions and into Canadian unions?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have seen the statement to which my hon. friend has referred and I may say that the matter is one that will receive attention.

Mr. LOW: It is reported that some of these men are now active in mining unions in northern Quebec. I was wondering if the government had taken any precautions against their entering Canada, or is contemplating any action to get those who have come in out of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question of communists entering Canada has been under consideration by the department of immigration, and also, to a limited extent, by the government.

SEED GRAIN

QUESTION OF PROVIDING BANK OF SEED FOR SPRING SOWING IN EAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. TUSTIN (Prince Edward-Lennox): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Because of weather conditions last year the farmers of eastern Canada had very light crops, particularly of grain. Will the government give consideration to providing a bank of seed grains at reasonable prices in time for spring seeding by the farmers of eastern Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The matter of providing seed grain to the farmers in the different provinces has always been taken care of by the provincial governments. So far as I know up to the moment we have had no applications from eastern provincial governments for any action.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, February 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. A. Dion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned on Wednesday I was replying to a statement which had been made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). I had expressed the view, which I know is held by the majority of the members from the maritimes, that it was to be regretted that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and other members of the C.C.F. group had gone to such lengths to decry the possibilities of the maritimes, particularly of the province of Nova Scotia.

In his remarks the hon. member for Cape Breton South had questioned the accuracy of statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) when he spoke to the Halifax board of trade last Monday evening. He had also referred to a statement which I had made that considerable work was to be carried on at the port of Halifax, and he likewise questioned the accuracy of that statement. I inquired of the hon. member whether he was in position to indicate whether the statement I had made was correct, and he replied, as reported on page 1105 of Hansard:

> I do not know anything about it. But if it is on a par with the statement issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then it leaves a question in my mind whether it will relieve the situation which I know exists down there.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South went on to give a dreary and dismal picture of conditions in Halifax and Nova Scotia generally; and he referred to the fact that I was a member of the reconstruction committee which sat in 1942. He was very sure of that statement. While I did not correct him at the time, I wish to state for his benefit that I was not a member of that committee in 1942.

I should like to deal now with the hon. member's statement about coal. This is one subject which the hon. member for Cape Breton South should know something about because he comes from a mining district. Hon. members of the house who are not as familiar with the subject expect him to give us information of a helpful nature. I recall that this question was discussed last April when something like 13,000 miners were out on strike. At that time I said I felt that greater production would be helpful, and that it was necessary for us in Nova Scotia to make the best possible use of our coal. Having suggested that increased production would help I was reminded that that strike cost the province of Nova Scotia something like one million tons of coal which otherwise would have been produced during that time. I also took occasion to suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government that if possible a scientific research centre should be set up in Nova Scotia with a pilot plant to look into the possibilities of developing the by-products of our coal industry. I said that if that were done I believed it would have a marked effect on the future of our coal operations. I stated that I was throwing out that suggestion to the cabinet, at the same time hoping the hon. member for Cape Breton South, with his knowledge of the coal industry of his own native province, would co-operate and offer some constructive suggestions which would help solve the difficulty which existed.

As I say, I was hopeful that the hon. member would offer some constructive suggestions in regard to the greater use of our coal. But apparently he was not as much concerned about that as he was in sowing seeds of discontent and creating the impression that our province was backward and had very few possibilities.

A week or so ago, on Tuesday, January 27, the hon. member made a speech in this house and again referred to the question of coal. He was speaking on the import and export regulations which had been brought into effect. At page 596 of Hansard, referring to the industrial centres in Ontario and Quebec, he said:

> All the United States has to do at any time at all, if she wants to cripple and paralyse this country, is to withhold her fuel. By withholding her coal she can close down every industry in this country within a very short time.

Mr. GILLIS: What's the matter with that?

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member nods his head and states that that is so. We are all interested in hearing what the hon. member has to say about coal, but I was certainly surprised at that statement of his. I wondered if he had endeavoured to look into the facts before making it. I was sufficiently interested to go into the question fully in order to get the facts accurately, and so I made inquiry. My question read:

> What proportion of industry in Canada is operated by (a) steam, produced from coal; (b) electrical energy produced by hydro; (c) fuel oil?

What did we learn? We learned that in the area the hon. member no doubt had in mind, the industrial centres of Quebec and Ontario, only 9·4 per cent of industry in Quebec province is operated under steam produced by coal; 2·7 per cent by oil, and 87·9 by hydro. I think the hon. member should be more careful of his statements.

Mr. GILLIS: May I ask a question?

Mr. ISNOR: I shall be pleased.

Mr. GILLIS: That 9·4 per cent represents the basic industries, and if they were closed down, the other ninety per cent of industries which are fabricating would have to close down.

Mr. ISNOR: I will give the hon. member some further information.

Mr. GILLIS: I am giving you some now.

Mr. ISNOR: I will give him further information so that he will not spread all over the country extravagant statements which are not in accordance with the facts. The figures for Ontario are just about the same as those for Quebec: steam, 15·4 per cent; oil, 3·8 per cent; hydro, 80·8 per cent. That is in central Canada where electrical energy is largely used. The same is true of Manitoba: steam, 10·5 per cent; oil, 5 per cent; hydro, 84·5 per cent.

The hon. member will no doubt ask about our own maritime provinces. During the time the hon. member was on his feet speaking of coal we were not producing enough coal to supply the demand in our own maritime provinces. That is to be regretted, and it is why I am very anxious to see production rise to the highest possible peak. I was indeed pleased the other evening to read the figures given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in Halifax, showing that there was an increased production in the Cape Breton fields and in Nova Scotia mines which would help to relieve the situation.

I will now give the corresponding figures for New Brunswick: steam, 45·2 per cent—of course coal is produced right in that province; oil, 5·2 per cent; hydro, 49·6 per cent. Prince Edward Island: steam, 49·7 per cent; oil 20·5 per cent; hydro, 29·8 per cent.

In our own native province which the hon. member for Cape Breton South and I, along with other members have the honour to represent, we have a big field but as yet we have not developed the use of coal to the extent which I hope will be the outcome of present research activities. The figures for Nova Scotia are: steam produced from coal, 57·3 per cent; oil, 8·1 per cent; hydro, 34·6 per cent. There is still a field for the greater use of the products of our coal mines even in our own province, and I do not think it helps the situation for the hon. member for Cape Breton South to go round making statements belittling the possibilities in our own section of the country.

Mr. GILLIS: Are you opposed to developing our own industry?

Mr. ISNOR: I am very much in favour of it.

Mr. GILLIS: That is exactly what I was arguing for, but now you are making the case bad for us.

Mr. ISNOR: If the hon. member will do the same as I do, listen and then reply or ask intelligent questions, I shall be pleased to answer him.

Mr. GILLIS: Try to do something for the 4,500 unemployed in Halifax.

Mr. ISNOR: I am glad the hon. member mentioned the unemployed. I was interested in a statement made by Mr. N. L. Rolfe, whom I am sure the hon. member knows. He is president of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and he says that there were 900 communists in the city of Halifax who are not at all concerned about getting or seeking employment. Like the hon. member for Cape Breton South I am anxious to encourage industry in every possible way, and that is why I offer constructive suggestions from time to time instead of simply criticizing.

The hon. member mentioned the situation at Sydney in coal and steel, particularly steel. He has no love for Dosco, and I hold no brief for Dosco because it is well able to take care of itself. I should like to put on record a statement made by Mr. Anson, the general manager of Dosco at Sydney: He says:

A $4,000,000 construction on a battery of 53 coke ovens of the "most modern design" will start early in the spring.

Mr. GILLIS: Early in spring—just like the causeway.

Mr. ISNOR: I regret you cannot take it. The report continues:

Mr. Anson said the new project would replace "part of the present set-up which has outlived its usefulness."

The ovens to be replaced by the new battery had been in operation about thirty years, Mr. Anson said, although average life was twenty-five years. The new battery of fifty-three ovens will produce as much coke as seventy-five or eighty-five ovens of the present design, Mr. Anson stated.

Mr. Anson estimated the construction work would take about eighteen months. It is estimated the project will employ an average of 150 men a day.

Mr. Anson's announcement was the biggest story in Sydney steel in years, and added fuel to the fires of speculation that the sprawling Sydney mills are on the verge of a far-reaching expansion program.

During recent weeks the coke ovens situation has been the cause of concern, and according to reliable reports the domestic coke supply will be limited this winter.

Which we know to be true. I continue:

But before operations bogged down as a result of the coke ovens "operational difficulties," production records were cracked in the open hearth, and in fact new all-time marks were registered.

[Mr. Isnor.]

I felt, Mr. Speaker, that I should put that on the record to show that the company—even though it is not held in very high regard by the hon. member for Cape Breton South—was endeavouring to help industry and bring about better conditions and more employment in that part of my province.

Mr. GILLIS: There are 2,200 veterans in that area.

Mr. ISNOR: There is another matter to which I should like to refer. I mentioned a moment ago that last April I suggested that a scientific research centre be set up in Nova Scotia. I am pleased to note that in this same publication there appears a dispatch from Halifax which reads as follows—

Mr. GILLIS: Just for the record, what is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. ISNOR: I think I might say to the hon. member I am quoting from a publication that is not particularly unfriendly to him. It has done him very good service in the past and is continuing to do so.

Mr. GILLIS: What is it?

Mr. ISNOR: It is called, "Business-Grams issued by The Halifax Herald and the Halifax Mail. The Voice of Nova—The Choice of Nova Scotia." Has the hon. member any objection to that source? The quotation is as follows—

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to give the Herald credit on the record.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member will be able to give it credit in a minute; that is why I am reading it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member for Cape Breton South that it is against the rules to interrupt an hon. member who has the floor without his permission.

Mr. GILLIS: On that point, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member for Halifax make his speech to the house through you, and not to me.

Mr. SINNOTT: It is getting under your skin, is it?

Mr. WINTERS: A little too pointed.

Mr. ISNOR: May I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a further dispatch in the publication to which I refer, which reads as follows:

Halifax's new national research council laboratory, designed to serve the three maritime provinces, will be a three-storey structure erected to the east of the science building on Dalhousie university campus at a cost which might run as high as $300,000.

This announcement was made recently by Dr. G. H. Henderson of the physics department at Dalhousie, and Nova Scotia member of the national research council, following his return from a meeting of the council at which further plans for the institution were formulated.

The building, larger than originally proposed, will be 90 by 50 feet with an ell in the rear for flexible provision for use of pilot plants in the work of the regional laboratory's 50-man staff, half of which will be composed of professional scientists.

I was pleased to note that, Mr. Speaker, because it brings into being something I suggested last April and which I have every reason to believe will be of real benefit not only to the particular section represented by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, but also to the whole of the province of Nova Scotia and perhaps to the maritimes in general.

Mr. GILLIS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ISNOR: I am glad to hear the hon. member say "hear, hear". At last he is beginning to realize that there is something of a constructive nature being offered.

There was a further dispatch—and I shall quote this for the benefit of the hon. member for Cape Breton South—which appeared in the Truro Daily News of Monday, February 9, 1948, and which reads as follows:

Coal Resources Will be Developed

Halifax, Feb.8—Inauguration of a long-term program designed to develop Nova Scotia coal resources was announced here Saturday by Dr. Robert D. Howland, vice-president of the Nova Scotia Research Foundation, following a two-day conference sponsored by the foundation.

Dr. Howland said one of the aims of the program would be to encourage substitution of Nova Scotia coal for American fuel oil.

The research program will include the following:

1. Geographical surveys to determine more exactly the extent and nature of provincial coal deposits.
2. Physical and chemical surveys to determine the quality and burning characteristics of various Nova Scotia coals.
3. Investigation and adjustment of combination equipment to promote the wider use of Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. GILLIS: That will be next spring.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Cape Breton South said it will be set up by next spring. For the benefit of the hon. member may I say that they are working on it at the present time. In fact they have already set up a pilot plant in Ottawa to be ready to take over as soon as the building is completed in Halifax.

Mr. GILLIS: That was set up three years ago.

Mr. ISNOR: I do not know how much of my time remains, since I began my speech on Wednesday; but I want to deal briefly with the functions of the industrial development bank as they apply to the maritimes.

In central Canada, more particularly in Quebec and Ontario, borrowers are close to the head office; and they are able to make their applications and present their cases in person, and they receive, perhaps unconsciously, greater consideration than do the applications in the section of the country which I and others represent.

I regret that my time has elapsed. I wanted to develop that point, and I shall do so in just one or two minutes if I am permitted. I would ask that greater consideration be given to applications for loans, and that loans should be viewed not only from the point of view of the traditional test of whether the loan is good or not, but also in the light of the question whether the proceeds of the loan will be used to contribute to the welfare of that particular section of the country, the maritimes in my case.

In that regard I should like to extend my thanks to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) who has travelled all over Canada and who visited us in the maritime provinces. I believe he has done a good job in making known the possibilities of industry in our section of the country. I should also like to have referred to writers who have done a good job in making known the possibilities of Nova Scotia. I have particularly in mind an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine written by Blair Fraser, entitled: "Men by the Sea." Articles such as these do more good than speeches made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South which paint a dreary and dismal picture of conditions in our province. I for one when I stand here and talk about my province wish to paint as bright a picture as possible in order to encourage further industries to come to that section of the country.

Mr. LEWIS MENARY (Wellington North): Mr. Speaker, since I come from an agricultural district I should like to take part in this debate, and my remarks will be brief.

Can the government or the income tax department devise a simpler method of compiling income tax returns? There are very few farmers or even businessmen who can make up an income tax return on the present forms. In the small towns and villages there seem to be only one or two men who can compute an income tax return, and the farmers leave the computing of their taxes until the last moment and very often do not get the returns in in time. If the forms could be simplified, it would be better for all concerned.

I would like to say something about the feed companies. In the period between August 1, 1947, and January, 1948, the farmers were unable to buy grain to feed their hogs and poultry. That is one reason why the farmers sold their brood sows and laying hens and pullets. Now we are told that the elevators and the grain companies in the west held this coarse grain in storage awaiting the rise in price that they knew was coming. The farmers lost hundreds of thousands of dollars by selling this stock, much of it in an unfinished condition. Then you came along with a rise in price on all these grain products. You did not inform the farmer, but you allowed, I understand, approximately four million bushels of grain to get into the hands of the elevators in the western provinces at the low price.

Is it true that cars were held waiting for your announcement of this increase in price? Now, I understand that the farmers of the west are demanding from the government that they be paid an increase in price amounting to some $4,000,000 which they lost in selling this grain, possibly through lack of storage and need of money. Owing to this same shortage of feed the farmers of Ontario were compelled to sell a great many of the pullets they had raised for the producing of eggs during this fall and winter. The birds were brought in to the processing plants by hundreds. There are a number of processing plants in my riding, and truckloads of these birds were coming in every day. There were about fifteen hands employed in each of these plants, and they were really taking in a good many fowl. These birds cannot be replaced.

The same can be said of hogs; and sows, even close to the farrowing period, were allowed to go to market. One trucker in my district took sixty-five sows out to market in one week. Other districts no doubt did the same. Later this grain came into Ontario at an increased price. There seems to be no guidance given by our government to the farmers. These farmers, who had to sell their laying hens and brood sows, will suffer a heavy loss. The birds cannot be replaced.

Another announcement should have been made by the government with reference to the question: Why were hogs not raised to $24 per hundredweight on October 1 as promised in the last session? If this had been done the farmers would not have sold their young pigs and sows, since this rise in price would have helped to offset the increased price of food.

[Mr. Menary.]

Mr. GARDINER: Are the questions that are being asked by the hon. member addressed to me, or are they questions that were asked of him by someone?

Mr. MENARY: It is from Hansard of June 18, 1947. I am not asking the question of the minister now.

I want to say something regarding the veterans of the first great war. These men went through untold hardships in the fighting in France and Belgium. For hours they stood up to their knees in mud. I think there should be a re-examination of the position in which these men find themselves today. In my district a veteran of the first world war was carrying on a little business. He had a wife and two children. He was forced to give up his business because of illness. He was getting a small pension on which he was unable to live and keep his wife and family. The wife went out to work in order to help out. This came to the attention of the Department of Veterans Affairs and she was told that she could no longer work. Now, even veterans' families must eat to live. They must have coal and fuel to keep warm. When a veteran does not own his house he must pay rent, and he must buy clothing. I went to see this particular veteran on different occasions, and the poor chap simply sat there, unable to do anything, though his wife was willing to go to work in order to help out, because she could have obtained a position as an assistant in a store, as she had done before. In fact, they were getting along fairly well, because when she came home at night she would help with the housework.

I think the government should be more generous to these returned soldiers. Can they not institute a more humanitarian method of dealing with our veterans, who have given so much to the people of this country?

I want to mention another matter affecting the veterans, and that is the Veterans Land Act small holding plan. There are many returned men in the towns in my riding who would like to get a small piece of land on which to build a house. They may be carrying on a business or engaged in some other activity in these towns. They find that the Veterans Land Act branch increased from half an acre to three acres the acreage they must buy, and three acres of land is too much for any man to take care of who is in the position of these men I am discussing. I would ask the department to allow these veterans to take up half an acre or less and build houses for themselves, at the same time carrying on their business in the small towns or villages. Since coming here I have received several letters from one veteran who filed his application in plenty of time before the act was changed, but like thousands of other veterans he got the run-around from the department. It has been said recently that the government may reduce the required amount of land to one acre or less. This seems more reasonable when the veteran is fully employed at some other occupation. He can look after half an acre but he cannot take care of three or four.

I come from a riding where the population consists of many nationalities—English, Irish, Scottish, Poles, German and Mennonite. In the great melting pot of our races these people are Canadians. There are few ridings that have sent more boys, in proportion to population, to fight for and to save our democratic way of life. Of this we are proud. I was at a gathering of returned soldiers recently at which there were 125 of these boys, and I was struck by the number of foreign names among the lads who came forward to receive gifts. It is a great thing that people can mix and become assimilated in that way.

Before coming to attend this session I was asked a question by a father who had four sons overseas, one of whom made the supreme sacrifice. I may say that he had been overseas himself. This father asked, as many more fathers and returned men would like to ask: Why did the Minister of Trade and Commerce make the statement he did—see page 5727 of Hansard of July 16, 1947—namely, that the Premier of Ontario, who had arranged to bring 10,000 people from the motherland to Ontario, could not land them on Canadian soil? He stated that Mr. Drew might make arrangements to land these, our people, in the United States, but they would not be allowed to land in Canada.

A great many of the veterans in my riding resent that statement. It may be that the Minister of Trade and Commerce never thought it would cause trouble, but these veterans resent the statement because they were used so well in England. They were taken into the homes of the people there and treated with great kindness. I am sure that if the minister had given the matter thought he would not have made that statement. Let me say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the people of Canada will not soon forget those words. The people of England treated our boys with great kindness, as I say, shared their food with them and entertained them in their homes. Not only that, but England for two years stood alone. France collapsed early in the war and the United States did not come in for some time. We owe to England a debt that we cannot repay. I say to the minister: You have been given great power—yes, I repeat, great power. Let us look back to world war I, from which emerged a paperhanger, I believe with the rank of corporal. Look back and see what happened year by year. His power grew; and through him the world was plunged into the greatest war of all time. Nations were destroyed; thousands died of starvation. I do not believe a democratic government should place this power in the hands of any man, since power grows day by day, and the common people are pushed aside and made vassals of the state.

(Translation):

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains): Mr. Speaker, the government has embarked upon a policy of restriction, which it has asked and is asking parliament to ratify. Some of these restrictions are extremely severe. There is no reason for subjecting the necessities of life to such austerity measures. Because of these restrictions, demand far exceeds production in Canada. The precarious state of our economy can no doubt be explained otherwise, but the basic reason of our present state, to my mind, can be found in these restrictions. This panacea was born of the war. Not five years have gone by since the government was paying the wheat grower to cut down production, a restriction which now deprives the eastern farmer of the grain necessary to produce wheat, butter and cheese and which leads to a shortage of goods, as well as to inflation.

Is it reasonable, in a country like ours, to pay so much for bread and all other food products? We should mind our own business more than we do. Our domestic policy is well worth looking after. Otherwise we shall witness the collapse of our economy.

It is all very well to draw up treaties and multiply international conferences, but it is more logical to watch over our financial position. Chambers of commerce, banks and all expert economists have forewarned the government of the danger of such long-term contracts with European countries. They have told them how urgent it was for Canada to obtain United States dollars. But the government had long ago pledged themselves to help Great Britain. And in order to restore the latter's finances, they are asking this nation to make sacrifices which today take on an odd character of solidarity and austerity. Why is Canada's fate always bound to that of Britain? Why should we, in our economic evolution, feel the effects of the slowing-down, the recession and even the stoppage of the financial life of a country to which we have given what was the best in our economy? Finally setting aside fiction and confusion, the government now submit to parliament the result of protracted discussions in order to convince it that what was prosperity has ceased to be so and what was balance has become economic lopsidedness.

Is this an attempt to lower the cost of living? Such decline is not yet apparent. On the contrary, everything is being bought at a ransom price. One has the impression of living in an environment where unfair advantage is being taken of everybody and where such exploitation is equalled only by the entirely false complexion of our financial and economic situation. Producers as well as consumers face innumerable hardships, of which the adoption of these emergency measures is sufficient proof. These are expedients which have already been tried without success. They have always favoured and will still favour a small number of individuals, because of the shameful practice of the black market. The wartime prices and trade board is the most striking example of such expedients. Does the government hope to cure the evil by slowing down or cutting off our imports of raw materials, as it is doing in many unjustifiable cases? A nation's economy cannot be restored by such means. On the contrary, there is great danger of it being destroyed, through a lack of the necessities of life, as well as of raw materials. Prices show it is not a question of devaluating our dollar. Such a remedy would be ineffective, because of its temporary character. In a nation all economic factors are interdependent. We should keep up the volume of our United States imports and exports. We should have increased them steadily, as plain common sense dictated to our leaders. The United States have been our best customers for years, and still are. Yet, the government sacrificed part of our trade with the United States in favour of Britain, upon which we showered gifts and interest-free unsecured loans.

That policy has brought about disastrous results that will long be felt. Protests pour in from all quarters. Farmers, workers, financiers, manufacturers and all the other social classes are alarmed at the present situation. Not a day goes by but I receive resolutions from agricultural associations of my constituency, protesting against the scarcity of mash and feed grain and against the removal by the government of certain subsidies that are so necessary in this critical period.

[Mr. Lacombe.]

The balance between the cost of production and the sale price of farm products has been disrupted. Yet, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) anticipates for next year an even more acute scarcity of agricultural commodities. He also warns farmers that there will be a shortage of fertilizers in the near future. Such is the picture drawn by the very members of the government. Should all those predictions materialize, what will follow? A slow-down in production, food shortages, substantial increases in the price of essential commodities and a whole network of restrictions.

Yesterday, in the name of the four freedoms of the Atlantic Charter—a hoax, according to the former president of the United States—our country was dragged into the path of military imperialism. Tomorrow, no longer in the name of Christianity, it will be drawn in the wake of financial imperialism to fly to the aid of a godless Russia that holds sway over the Balkans in staggering Europe. The appeal will be to save the sterling pound and the Empire's capital assets, which are vanishing in a world ruined by wars that have settled nothing. The secondary powers have been sacrificed to communism by the strongest nations of the world. Also Soviet Russia is therefore bringing the whole of Europe under her sway. One had to be blind not to foresee such a development. But nations like individuals are prompted by selfish motives. The dreadful conditions prevailing in the satellites of Soviet Russia have been fostered to a large extent by the greed of financial imperialism. Let those who have brought about such a sad state of affairs assume their proper responsibilities.

Once more orders in council have been enforced by the government without the advice of parliament. This encroachment upon the prerogatives of the House of Commons has been laid down as a policy. The representatives of the people have so often been ignored on behalf of irresponsible bureaucrats that this infringement of members' rights passes unnoticed by too many people. Not long ago, milk producers were deprived of their subsidy by an order despite a majority vote of parliament in favour of maintaining this assistance. There is no money left for granting subsidies to producers and consumers. There is no money left for building homes for already begun to close down, crushed by the burden of taxes and restrictions. At a time such as this, when our production should be reaching new heights, it would seem that not a stone is being left unturned to restrict and discourage it. You cannot build anything with restrictions. It is a policy which tires out and further weakens this country. The real builders succeeded because they sought to stimulate commerce, industry and agriculture. The basis of all life, as of all prosperity, is to be found in the development of natural resources. This principle is as old as the world itself.

The Canadian people are at the mercy of financial dictatorship. The government cannot persuade anyone that they could not foresee the increase in the cost of living now weighing so heavily upon low-income families. However, they removed subsidies to producers and consumers at a time when both groups had the greatest need for them.

Before concluding, I wish to draw the attention of the house to the flag that floats over these parliament buildings. That flag continues to give to all the impression that Canada remains under the guardianship of another nation. It reduces this country's stature by asserting our bondage. I do not believe in the sincerity of those who advocate the unity of this nation and who in the same breath refuse to play the game in the building up of a free and sovereign country. The government should thrust away the obstacles raised by those who deny Canada the right to small wage-earners and their families. Let war break out tomorrow, and there will be as many as you wish to continue undermining the economy of this country. Such is the result of an overdone war effort. This austerity program indicates the plight of our financial situation. It shows how anxious are the government and their financial advisers.

The new restrictions will tend to discourage middle-sized and small industries, which have grow up. They should meet them with the assertion of a truly national spirit and fight down colonialism, which is the very negation of a Canadian motherland. They should forthwith proclaim the adoption of a significant and distinctive flag. Otherwise, the government will go down in history as having denied Canada a truly national and essentially Canadian flag.

Mr. DECHENE: Hear, hear.

(Text):

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the house to the serious plight facing many veterans, particularly those on pensions and allowances, as a result of the discontinuance of price controls in this country. A large number of the 800,000 veterans in Canada are in dire need because of excessive living costs. Many are unable to purchase the necessities of life because of their high cost. The recipients of disability pensions, the widows of non-pensioners and those in receipt of allowances of various kinds, including veteran students, are hard hit because of the government's policy of decontrol of prices before there was a surplus of consumer goods available on the market.

No provision has as yet been made by parliament to assist these people who are the unhappy victims of ill-advised government policy. Every member of the house should be concerned in this matter, if for no other reason than that veterans live in every federal constituency. But concern ought to be shown more particularly by government members, since they are responsible for the dropping of price controls, which has resulted in so much distress among young and old veterans alike from one end of the country to the other.

Pensions and allowances remain at the same basic rate at which they were struck in 1926, when the cost of living index in this country stood at 121·8 as compared with 148·3 today. Although this increase in living costs should call for an increase of twenty per cent in the basic pension rate, nothing has yet been done by this house to relieve the situation facing the thousands of veterans concerned.

A dollar in 1926 will buy less than 80 cents worth of goods today. If only clothing and food are concerned—and certainly a large portion of the pensioner's cheque goes for those commodities—the 1926 dollar is worth less than 60 cents. With a one hundred per cent disability a single ex-private would receive $75 per month. With the buying power of the dollar reduced to at least 80 cents it is apparent to all that his cheque will now buy only $60 worth of goods. The reduction in his monthly cheque is the equivalent of $15.

However, the situation is even worse than that, since few veterans actually receive 100 per cent disability. Most of them receive very much less than that. Of the 152,731 pensioners as of December 31, 1947, as indicated in an answer I received to a question in the house only a few days ago, just 7,165, or 4·7 per cent, are receiving 100 per cent disability, while 96,662 veterans, or over 63 per cent, are receiving small pensions of 24 per cent disability or less. It is true that many of these veterans have other incomes from jobs, but the pension granted is based on the fact that their earning capacity has been lessened by disability. They are handicapped, otherwise no pension would be provided. With no upward revision in pension rates they are actually being subjected to a pension reduction because of the dollar's smaller buying power today.

These pensions are very small indeed. A 24 per cent disability pension for a single ex-private amounts to $18 per month. With today's inflated prices that pension has a buying capacity of only $14.40 or less. Last session I appealed to the then minister of veterans affairs to increase pensions by twenty per cent, as had been done in the United States. I now appeal to the present minister to grant a twenty-five per cent increase, because living costs, particularly clothing and food, have increased substantially since last year.

Veterans in this country are suffering because of the high prices of the ordinary things of life, the result of a too hasty decontrol of prices. Veterans should not be subjected to the effects of an ill-conceived policy of this kind. After the first world war Sir Robert Borden, Canada's prime minister of that day, said "Our soldiers shall never want after fighting so gallantly." But thousands suffered in the depression of the thirties, and thousands are suffering today because of an inability to buy the necessities of life due to excessive costs. Their pensions and allowances are inadequate to meet increased living costs. Something must be done to relieve their plight. Something should be done without delay by this house.

We have been informed by the press that a proposal has been made by the government of a $10 a month increase in basic pension rates. If such an increase is made it is at least a recognition on the part of the government that something should be done. A flat increase across the board is inadequate and certainly is inequitable. It is indeed a crumb from Canada's table of plenty.

I feel that the whole approach to this problem is wrong. A veteran's pension is not a gratuity and has never been considered as such. It must be accepted as the wages of war. It is a small payment by the nation on a debt which cannot be reckoned in dollars and cents, a debt due for lives lost and bodies shattered wherever our boys fought in defence of this land. We cannot replace war-torn minds and bodies or bring back loved ones who are gone, but we can make some monetary compensation to the bereaved families and to disabled veterans. That much it is within our power to do. The very least this country should give to the disabled veteran and his dependents is the equivalent of lost earning power in the form of a substantial pension. A grateful people can do no less than that. Canada should compensate these folk for everything they have lost when the ruthless hand of war uprooted them from their niche in the economy of this country.

Before the government makes any attempt to reduce taxes or declare surpluses it should meet, in part at least, the greatest debt it owes, the debt to the men and women who made sacrifices in order that all Canadians might have peace and security in a land of plenty. I repeat that an increase of $10 a month would be inadequate. I make that assertion because of official government figures issued by the bureau of statistics which show that there has been an increase of more than 20 per cent in living costs since 1926 when the present pension schedule was established. The cost of living is still on the upgrade, as is indicated by the 2·3 points increase in the index. It will need at least a 25 per cent advance in pensions and allowances to avert a reduction in the pensioners' standard of living below that which they are entitled to enjoy on the basis of the 1926 rates. This is especially true when we realize that most of the pension is expended on food and clothing, in connection with which the index now stands at 180 and 160 respectively, indicating much more than a 25 per cent increase in these prices.

The proposal in the February issue of The Legionary does not provide for any supplement to wives and dependents. This is where the proposal in inequitable. It is assumed, no doubt, but wrongly, that the $10 a month increase is sufficient to provide for both the veteran and his family. It is most difficult to understand the basis for such an assumption. The greater the domestic responsibility of the pensioner, the smaller the percentage of increase seems to be the plan. On the basis of a $10 increase the single veteran will receive 13⅓ per cent more on his pension, but the disabled veteran with two children would obtain an over-all increase of only 6·5 per cent, or about one-half as much. This is grossly unfair to the pensioners with family obligations. It does not make sense.

It seems only fair to suggest that all the beneficiaries under the act should receive the twenty-five per cent advance in pensions. This would then include dependents as well as the recipients of various kinds of allowances, which is as it should be. Such a revision would be equitable because it would be based on the increase in living costs since the schedules were set up and would include all those veterans and dependents affected. Anything less than a twenty-five per cent increase is equivalent to a corresponding decrease in the scale of pensions set up in Canada twenty-one years ago, which even at that time was considered inadequate by many people. And if something is not done by this parliament to arrest the upward trend of prices, further adjustments may be required.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this might be done by allowing an increase of one per cent in basic pension and allowance rates for each point rise in the cost of living index, adjustments to be made quarterly. By the same token, reductions in the pension rate could be effected when prices recede, as they inevitably must.

The recipients of war veterans allowances also have a legitimate complaint with regard to the proposal to increase their allowances by $10 a month for single and married pensioners alike. This is inequitable in that the single man receives a greater percentage of increase than the married recipient. In order to be fair the single man should receive a minimum allowance of $50 per month and the married man with his greater domestic responsibilities, should be given $85 a month. These amounts would bring the rates somewhat nearer to actual minimum living requirements.

For the same reason the widow's allowance now payable under the War Veterans Allowance Act should be increased to at least $40 a month. This is little enough. It has been said in this connection that the increase should be based on established need. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that need has been recognized, since widows now receiving the allowance have been subjected to a means test which establishes their right to assistance.

Some reference should be made in a speech of this kind to the difficulties being experienced by the 33,000 student veterans who because of the high cost of living are being forced in many cases. to discontinue their studies or are struggling along with financial worries, to the detriment of their work. The maintenance grants set by the Department of Veterans Affairs in 1944 of $60 for a single man and $80 for a married man have long been considered to be insufficient to meet the needs of the student veteran. Surveys have repeatedly shown that these allowances were barely enough to cover board and room even before living costs rose to the present high level. The veteran has always had to provide for transportation, books, laundry and clothing out of his own savings, which now in most cases are gone.

The situation has been aggravated by the removal of price controls which were in effect when the rates of his allowance were set. University of Toronto students have figures to show that a $60 cheque now buys only $36 worth of goods in Toronto as compared to its purchasing power in 1944. The married veteran's cheque of $80 in 1944 has dwindled to $58 today in its value to purchase consumer goods there. To bring back the purchasing value of the student veterans' allowances of 1944, a twenty-five per cent increase in the allowances is imperative.

The cost of living index in 1944 stood at 118 points when the schedule of allowances was set up. Today the index stands at 148·3 points, or an increase of 30 points, representing an increase in living costs of over 25 per cent since 1944 when the schedule was first drawn up.

It was recently reported in the press that up to August last thirty-one per cent of the student veterans have discontinued their courses of training because of financial stress. If this statement is correct, Mr. Speaker, it is a most alarming situation. Everyone must be aware that all veterans attending institutions of higher learning are not so fortunate as to have parents who can assist them financially. Therefore many are forced to leave school inadequately trained to meet the stress of competitive job-seeking in a society which is demanding trained personnel.

The national conference of student veterans, which embraces students from every Canadian university, is now appealing, and I am glad to join in that appeal, for an increase in student veterans training allowances. On the basis of increased living costs a single veteran should get $75 a month and the married man $100. This would compensate for the 30 point rise in living costs since 1944. Furthermore I feel that the increase should be made retroactive to September, 1947, the beginning of the university fall term. Even such increases will barely meet average living costs, according to a survey conducted amongst veterans on the campus of the university of Saskatchewan. There it was found that a single man averaged $87 and a married man $124 for living expenses per month, and living costs in Saskatoon, the seat of the university of Saskatchewan, are not by any means the highest in Canada.

Canada needs trained men and women. The young student veterans, the cream of this country's youth, gave years of their lives in service to this country, while others profited. They sacrificed and fought for our democratic way of life. Our democracy should now show some gratitude for those sacrifices by giving them an opportunity to complete their courses of training so that they will be able to secure decent positions on an equal basis with those who did not serve their country in the same way. Surely the student veteran is entitled to this much at least. All that he is asking is a square deal. The late Theodore Roosevelt once said:

A man who is good enough to shed his blood for his country is good enough to be given a square deal afterward. To more than that, no man is entitled, and less than that no man shall have.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that most Canadians will subscribe to the sentiment expressed in those words. The student veteran and every other veteran is entitled to a square deal, and it is within the power of this parliament to provide it. Canadians have not forgotten the sacrifices of these young folk. Canada cannot afford to be niggardly in the training allowances which are provided for them. Their future can be assured only by a 25 per cent increase at this time in their living allowances.

In conclusion I wish to emphasize again the pressing need for making an upward revision in pension rates and allowances to veterans to meet the present inflated living costs. Canada has a heavy obligation to the people who carried the torch of freedom in two world wars. Let us now meet, in part at least, that obligation by providing pensions and allowances adequate to meet present difficult living conditions.

Mr. GREGG: Before the hon. member concludes his speech, may I ask him a question?

Mr. McKAY: Yes.

Mr. GREGG: Did I hear the statement correctly that thirty-one per cent of the veterans had discontinued their courses on account of lack of financial assistance?

Mr. McKAY: In answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the press reported thirty-one per cent, and I used that figure in my speech. If that figure is right, then it is a most alarming situation. I do not know whether it is correct or not.

Mr. GREGG: I know the hon. member would like to be fair, and I assure him, Mr. Speaker, that that is not true. The figure is much less than that.

Mr. McKAY: Will the minister give us the figure?

Mr. GREGG: I shall be glad to submit it later.

Mr. D. S. HARKNESS (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I should like most heartily to join with the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. McKay), and other hon. members, in their pleas to the government for better treatment of our veterans and their dependents at the present time, in view of the marked increase in the cost of living. I had intended to speak at some length on this subject, but it has already been covered so extensively that I shall leave it with just that remark.

For the past three sessions I have spoken on the oil industry in Canada, and have brought to the attention of the house and the government the measures which the oil men of Alberta have thought should be taken in order to encourage the search for oil, to expand the drilling program, and thus the production of this vital commodity. Up to the present time I am sorry to say that the government has not accepted many of these suggestions, and as a result, at its door lies the responsibility for the fact that our oil production in Canada today is not considerably greater than it is. However, the current shortage of fuel oil and the demand by some United States senators and congressmen that all exports of oil from the United States be stopped, has focused public attention on our oil situation in Canada and has thus created conditions which I hope will make the government more receptive to suggestions of the oil men.

The present shortage of oil in the United States and the warnings by various high officials of its government that, in the future, domestic supplies of crude will not be sufficient to meet the demand, particularly in the case of a war, coupled with the advice that plants should be started immediately to make gasoline from coal, has made it apparent to everyone in Canada that we can no longer depend upon the United States to supply us with the greater part of our oil requirements. This makes it an urgent matter to us to make sure of our own supply by developing our own resources.

There are three ways in which that can be done. The first is by finding and bringing into production new oil fields; the second is by utilizing the oil resources of the McMurray tar sands in northern Alberta, and the third is by the erection of plants to make synthetic gasoline from coal. The most immediately promising of these three methods is the first; and I am glad to say that the search for oil is now going on actively in widely separated parts of the Dominion of Canada, and particularly in Alberta. That search is being carried on, not by the federal or any provincial government, but by oil companies risking their shareholders' money, and today they have put into their efforts to find oil many more millions than they have received back from successful oil wells. Furthermore, most of this loss which they have experienced has been due to government taxation in one form or another. Under these circumstances I believe the government should encourage the movement of capital into the search for oil by meeting the reasonable requests which the oil men have made for tax, tariff and other concessions. On July 18, 1946, I made five suggestions to the government as to how exploration and drilling programs could be encouraged. Only one of these suggestions has been carried out to date, and I should like now again to bring them to the government's attention.

The first of these suggestions had to do with the fifty per cent tax deduction allowed on what are known as deep test wells, drilled in the foothills area of Alberta, where you have to go many thousands of feet to discover an oil well. Oil men have asked repeatedly that this concession be extended to all oil wells drilled in that western country, particularly to the wells drilled in the plains areas where it is not necessary to go so deep, and also to completing abandoned wells. The adoption of a policy of this kind by the government would, I think, without question result in the expansion of the drilling program.

The second suggestion was that there should be a greater depletion allowance. At the present time operators are allowed a depletion allowance of 33⅓ per cent. In the United States, oil men, with whom, of course, our oil men have to compete, and from where large numbers of them come, are allowed up to fifty per cent depletion allowance, and this can also be moved backward or forward, so that a company having no net income in any particular year is entitled to a depletion allowance, and may carry it forward or backward to apply against future or past profits.

The third suggestion was that all drilling costs permit and leasing expense, geological and geophysical costs et cetera, be allowed as deductions for tax purposes and, further that these expenses may be claimed as and when desired, so that large expenditures over two or three years may be deductible when production is secured, and spread over the period of production, which is ordinarily some time. The first three years of an oil well's life are ordinarily the most productive years.

The fourth suggestion was that the present income tax regulations covering exploration and development, which are on a year to year basis, should be made part of the permanent tax structure, so that operators may be able to make future financial plans under definitely known tax conditions. That would be of particular help to smaller operators, in that they would know where they stood and were likely to stand in the future so far as tax regulations, exemptions from sales tax on their equipment and so on, are concerned.

The fifth suggestion was the removal of the subsidies being paid at the time on crude oil. That was the only suggestion which the government has adopted. It did remove the subsidy and price ceilings and the price of crude oil has risen considerably. I should like to illustrate the extent to which it has risen, or how it has risen, and comment on the effect of it. I hold in my hand a bulletin of the Western Canada Petroleum Association, dated January 9, 1948.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. HARKNESS: Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is each one of these suggestions within the competence of the federal government to fulfil, or would they involve the provincial governments as well?

Mr. HARKNESS: I think they are all within the competence of the federal government, without having any connection with the provincial governments.

The bulletin to which I have referred contains a little table showing what crude oil prices have been in Alberta. They are as follows:

	Per barrel
May 1, 1944	$1.66
January 1, 1946	2.11
January 15, 1947	2.61
April 1, 1947	2.96
October 28, 1947	3.16
December 12, 1947	3.66

Quite a material rise.

The effect of this price rise has been marked in encouraging drilling. In the middle of 1946 there were twenty-eight large oil drilling rigs standing idle in Turner valley. In the middle of 1947 these rigs were all at work drilling in various parts of the province. This change in the drilling picture was partly due to the encouragement which the oil men received through the discovery of the Leduc field; but if the price of crude had, by government action, continued at the artificially low rates which prevailed up to the beginning of 1947, the heavy risk involved in drilling would not have been taken by many of the companies which now have wells either in production or going down.

In addition to the suggestions I have mentioned, which I believe the government should follow at this belated time, I asked that the special concessions made to the gold mining industry in 1946 and 1947 be extended, in a modified form at least, to the oil industry. That also should be done at this session, as well as continuing to exempt from the sales tax, oil drilling machinery and pipe which is at present so treated, and extending this concession to all oil production.

At the 1947 session I asked that this concession be extended to a piece of machinery known as heater-treater used for separating oil as it comes from the well from the sand and water with which it is mixed in the plains-wells area. The government refused to take that action, and that is another thing they might very well do at this session.

If the government considers that the development of Canadian oil fields is now vital to our economy, I call upon it to take the steps I have indicated, which would unquestionably increase drilling and thus production.

I should like to mention the extent to which Alberta oil production has met the oil needs of the three prairie provinces, and what can be expected in the immediate future. Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba at present require 40,000 to 42,000 barrels of oil daily. Production at the end of 1947 was approximately 24,000 barrels daily, or a little more than half the amount required and used. Of this, approximately 14,000 barrels come from Turner valley and the other 10,000 barrels from the other newer fields. These fields, on their present known size, can be expected to double their output in 1948. However, Turner valley production is decreasing, and is expected to be down to 2,000 barrels a day ten years from now. These present known fields must be extended, and probably new ones found, if the west is to be self-sufficient in oil in two years' time. This is the position which oil men are confident will be attained. If several new fields comparable with Leduc can be found in Alberta—and there is every hope that they can be and will be—production to meet a major part of Canada's requirements will be secured.

A very large amount of exploratory work is going on in western Canada at the present time. Some twenty-eight geophysical crews of about fifteen men each are in the field now, and they will cover hundreds of thousands of acres this year. On the basis of the data they gather, many new exploratory wells will be drilled. At the moment they are drilling or rigging up in Alberta, exclusive of the Lloydminster area, which straddles the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary, some seventy-four wells, which will be going down in the course of a few weeks. Of these, twenty-eight are in the Leduc area and nine in Turner valley.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Most of the other thirty-seven are being drilled in efforts to find new fields. In other words, they are drilled as exploratory wells, and there is every hope that some of these thirty-seven will lead the way to new fields such as Turner valley and Leduc.

The promising oil picture in Alberta at the present time should not, however, be used as a reason for doing nothing on the other two methods I mentioned at the outset, methods which are open to us to make ourselves self-sufficient in oil and its derivatives. Research and experimentation to develop an economic method of extracting oil from the McMurray sands should be carried forward vigorously. It is a great pity that the dominion government gave up the work they were carrying on there during the war. I believe it was a short-sighted policy to do so, and that mistake should now be rectified. Another pilot plant should be started immediately.

The Alberta government, I am glad to say, is continuing its work on these tar sands, but the development of a method which would give us a supply of oil for the whole dominion from these sands is a national responsibility, and that responsibility should be assumed by the dominion government as it was during the war. If the dominion government, at that time, thought it was good business to try to discover means of utilizing these tar sands and extracting oil from them, I suggest that, in view of the present world situation and the oil short situation in the United States, it is even more necessary to continue that work now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The Alberta members are deeply interested in this subject, and I was wondering whether the hon. member would suggest to the dominion government that it grant Alberta a considerable amount of assistance so that they can go forward with their project more rapidly than they are doing. Would the hon. member be prepared to do that?

Mr. HARKNESS: I should be very happy at any action the dominion government might take to carry forward experimentation on these tar sands; but whether it is done by a grant to the Alberta government or through the erection of its own plants I do not care, so long as it is done. Certainly it must be done.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is a national problem.

Mr. HARKNESS: It is undoubtedly a national problem and should be dealt with on that basis. The erection of plants to produce synthetic gasoline is also a national problem.

Apparently the United States government are going to erect such plants in their country as a defence measure and, in view of our own dependent position as far as gasoline is concerned, I think we should be taking some steps in the same direction. We have abundant supplies of the chief raw material, coal, and I may say that we have that in good quantities in at least three widely separated areas in the country.

The liquefaction of coal may well prove to be the means by which our rather badly distributed supplies can be economically used throughout the country, particularly in the central section. It would seem to me that the expenditure required for one or two pilot or test plants would be an excellent investment in Canada's future, and an insurance against the position we may find ourselves in, if denied oil from the United States. An embargo on oil exports from the United States would be an absolutely crippling blow at our whole economy. If such an embargo were put into effect we would really have austerity, and it would be Austerity with a capital A. When I say that I am not thinking so much of the fact that all cars would disappear from our highways as of the fact that a large part of our farm lands could not be seeded and the crops harvested or got to market, and the consequences in other industries would be nearly as serious.

I shall leave this subject by saying the government can no longer delay taking vigorous steps to ensure an oil and gasoline supply from our own resources. It can be done, and I say it must be done and done now.

I should like to touch upon another subject, the sales tax. At its current level and in our present circumstances, this tax should be eliminated on a number of commodities and reduced on others. I am not talking of liquor, tobacco or other commodities which are luxuries or non-essentials—I am referring to that great range of articles of food, clothing, household cooking utensils and so on, that everyone in this country must buy in order to live. The sales tax causes a rise in prices much greater than is apparent on the surface. It is a double-barreled weapon in that it increases the cost of producing nearly every article manufactured in this country, while on the other hand it raises the cost of the finished article to the ultimate consumer. When the profits of the distributors are pyramided, along with the tax, you have a cost to the consumer altogether out of proportion to the amount the government collects.

In addition, the tax is applied in a discriminatory way in some cases. The tax on newsprint used by newspapers is an example. Daily newspapers are in competition with both Canadian and United States magazines for their chief source of revenue, which is advertising; yet neither Canadian nor United States magazines pay this tax. In fact the tax does not apply to newsprint used by week-end newspapers which do not have a news section. For example, the Toronto Star Weekly has no news section, so that it does not pay the tax. On the other hand, other week-end newspaper editions with news sections have to pay the tax on all the newsprint used in the edition. Furthermore, the newsprint used to produce comic books and pulp fiction is not subject to this tax, though the government considers such publications so unessential, and many people consider them harmful, that under the present restrictions on imports they are banned from Canada. The unfairness of the eight per cent tax on newsprint, as at present applied, I think is quite manifest. In addition to this unfairness, it has entered into the increased cost of newspapers. Last year the two Ottawa newspapers increased their price from three cents to five cents a copy and, as I remember it, the main reason given was the increased cost of newsprint. Newsprint now runs at over $80 a ton. Thus the tax is well over $6 a ton, which is not an inconsiderable item. It has been an important factor in the increase of 66⅔ per cent in the price the consumer in Ottawa pays for his daily paper.

There are one or two other matters on which I should like to touch briefly. The new farmers' income tax form and income tax and account book have been dealt with by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller), so that I need say only a word about the matter. I have been wrestling with the wretched thing for the last two weeks, and I can assure the minister that not one farmer in a hundred will be able to fill it out correctly. I have had considerable bookkeeping experience of one kind and another, and I would say the betting is very much against my getting that form filled out correctly. So that I am quite sure the average farmer, who has had no bookkeeping experience, will be completely lost. It is a very nice form, and from an accounting point of view the book is well set up, but one of two things is needed to make it a success. One would be a course for farmers in how to operate the thing and how to carry on bookkeeping. The second would be a complete change in the nature of our farmers. Since neither of these would seem to be possible, I suggest to the minister that his department try to get something else which will be workable.

I want to mention one other matter because it concerns the Indian affairs branch, and for some considerable time I have been identified with an effort to improve conditions for our Indians. I have received information—which I hope is not correct, though I have reason to believe it is—that there is a certain amount of political interference and finagling in connection with civil service appointments in the Indian affairs branch. In the interests of our Indian population, I do not think anything of that kind should be allowed in this country. I understand that the position of chief inspector of agencies became vacant when Mr. Christianson, the former inspector in Saskatchewan, was retired after having held that position for some time. A competition was announced, and a number of the senior officials of the department applied for the position, together with the private secretary of the Minister of Mines and Resources. The selection board of the civil service commission, or whatever it is called, conducted the competition and recommended for appointment Colonel Randle, superintendent of the Six Nations reserve at Brantford, which is the largest Indian reserve in Canada, where Colonel Randle has carried on successfully for a number of years.

I am informed that this recommendation was not accepted. Another competition was announced, and for this competition the qualifications were changed a bit, apparently to make it easier for one of the other candidates to obtain the appointment. Once more the competition was held and once more the selection board recommended Colonel Randle on the basis of his past record, his wide experience and so on. For the second time the recommendation was not accepted, and now I understand that another competition is to be held or has been held. For this competition they have changed the title of the job. They are not going to call it chief inspector of agencies; they are going to call it executive assistant; I suppose that gets away from the necessity of having experience. They have also changed the qualifications, and I understand the general idea abroad is that all these changes have been made for the purpose of securing the appointment of the minister's private secretary. I know the private secretary. I have a very high regard for him and nothing in the world against him. But I think a job of this kind, particularly in the Indian affairs branch, should be given to a man who has acquired, over years in the department, the experience which is necessary in order to carry on the work. I object most strenuously to any fiddling of this kind with appointments in the Indian affairs branch, and I would ask that the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) make a statement in connection with the matter.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. RENE N. JUTRAS (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne and to point out that they were both constructive in their speeches. I assure you I shall endeavour to follow the example they have set.

Today I wish to deal more particularly with the wheat question in this country. It is still one of our basic industries, at least out west, and it takes on added importance because I think it is commonly agreed that most agricultural products are directly or indirectly affected by the price of wheat in Canada. So from this point of view it is one of the most important questions facing parliament and the country at the present time.

We have heard a great deal about wheat. Much was said in the short session before Christmas, and more has been said since we resumed our sittings in the New Year. I suppose one of the greatest points of contention thus far has been in connection with the wheat agreement signed in 1946. I hold the view it is hardly fair to judge it because, after all, it has run only about half its course. However, many people have been busy in the last few years trying to discredit these agreements, and the policy of the government.

Some have been doing it as a matter of principle, because it did not meet with their general ideas of trade. That is their privilege. Others, however, have been going into the country and, through the press, have tried every means possible to discredit the agreement in order to gain political capital or to improve their political stock. There are others, too, who have followed the same practice throughout the country because the agreements interfered with their personal profits or businesses.

I believe this criticism begins and ends almost exclusively with the propaganda which has been put out through the medium of the research department of the Searle Grain Company of Winnipeg. Every second week they have sent out a letter. I have no doubt members of parliament and many other people throughout the country have received them. Those letters have been sent out in an effort to convince the farmers that they have only one group of friends in the country, only one group of benefactors, and that all these gentlemen were in the grain exchange at Winnipeg. This propaganda has pointed out that through the present policy the farmers had lost colossal sums, amounting to millions upon millions of dollars, and increasing every day.

The propaganda is impressive in many respects. First of all, it is put out by an old and reliable grain company which has been operating for many years. It is also expensively printed and a well-turned out job. As they point out from week to week, it is supposed to be the product of a research department. Therefore it is only right to assume that the average man reading this propaganda would take it for granted that these facts and figures bear at least some resemblance to actual facts.

Before I begin taking this propaganda to pieces, let me make it clear that I have no personal animosity toward any grain company or, so far as that goes, toward the grain exchange. However, I suggest that this company has taken upon itself a tremendous responsibility when it goes out to feed the public deceitful propaganda and uses fictitious figures based upon an imaginative and unreal situation, in its effort to raise a protest throughout the country. This is more particularly true when the farmers, not the company, are the losers, should the inflated bubble presented to them explode in their faces.

The objective is quite clear. The company wishes to have the grain exchange reopened. As I have pointed out, the methods thus far followed are those of dangling inflated prices and boldly to give the assurance that these prices can be had, if the farmers would only pass their business through the door of the exchange. Not a word is said about what took place prior to the day the exchange was closed.

Fortunately, thus far the farmer has been cautious; so much so indeed, that one is almost inclined to reach the conclusion that at least at the beginning he has been somewhat suspicious. I believe it is true to say that a great many, if not all of the official opposition in the house, have swallowed the propaganda—paper and ink. If one looks at the record he will find that many of them have quoted these letters regularly. Even that reputable newspaper, the Winnipeg Free Press, has occasionally given a certain amount of publicity to those figures in its columns, although, generally speaking, it has maintained a guarded attitude and has left responsibility for the accuracy of the figures on the shoulders of the company issuing them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Do you dispute the accuracy of them?

Mr. JUTRAS: I certainly do, and I will spend the next thirty minutes in disputing those figures.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is an invitation. Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. JUTRAS: Certainly.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Does the hon. member dispute the accuracy of any of the figures contained in the Searle index put out each second week?

Mr. JUTRAS: I just said so; that is what I said. And I will spend the next thirty minutes in disputing those figures.

Mr. KNOWLES: Apparently the hon. member for Souris accepts them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He certainly does.

Mr. JUTRAS: The hon. member for Souris has so consistently placed those figures on the record that one must inevitably come to the conclusion that, had he the responsibility of administering the affairs of the country and of the farmers, he would place the faith of the farmers entirely in the hands of the Searle Grain Company in the next few years.

I believe I have here all the letters of the Searle Grain Company issued in the last two years. Of course I have not time to read them all, but I shall take as an example the one of June 5, which appears to be a summary of the letters preceding it. It states:

Out of this fog of sentimental delusion about the future emerge—

And I ask the house to note this:

—certain cold harsh facts which now adversely affect the farmer's income and his pocketbook.

If I were to read the entire letter it would be clear that, again and again, the experts use the expression, "A simple calculation will show." With them it is always a simple matter to prove their figures. As I read these letters from week to week in the last year, I could not help being reminded of Lord Haw-Haw, at the time when he lectured the people in Great Britain. I remember one evening he spoke over the radio about twelve o'clock and, to impress the people that he knew what was going on in England, he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, to show you that I know what goes on, let me tell you that this very minute Big Ben is two minutes slow." That was twelve o'clock at night; England was in a blackout; no one could check the clock until next morning, and by that time many people assumed that the timekeeper had set the clock right. I know from the reaction of the public that he did manage to impress a great many people with the belief that he actually knew at any given moment what was going on in England. Mr. Strange, who, I understand, is the one and only and, as a matter of fact, the entire research department of the Searle Grain Company—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is not a fact either.

Mr. JUTRAS: I beg your pardon.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is hardly a true statement either.

Mr. JUTRAS: Well, he computes all these letters, and has the entire responsibility for them. That company has set this out on many occasions in its letters. When he went to England later on, that part of the letters was suspended until he returned. We now come to the details, and this is the first line of the propaganda:

American farmers just across the international line are today receiving the equivalent of $2.18 for their wheat.

Then it goes on to compute that on the basis of the $1.55 payment. That letter is dated June 5, 1946. If one takes the trouble to check the Chicago market for that day he will find that there is no quotation of $2.18 or anything like it. If you check back you will find that there was a quotation of $2.18 in the beginning of May, but it dropped after that.

That is another point to be noted. In his distorted statement he says that the United States farmer just across the international border is receiving that price. This gentleman has not reached the realization that the United States farmer never did receive that price, and I do not suppose he ever will. Even if Chicago had quoted $2.18 on that day, there would not be a single farmer in the United States who would have got $2.18 for his wheat. The same thing applies here. When the Winnipeg grain exchange shows a certain quotation on a certain day there are very few farmers who will get that amount for their wheat. At the very least he would have to deduct the amount of freight from his farm to the exchange. To come out boldly and say that the United States farmer actually gets $2.18 is absolutely erroneous.

I took the trouble to check with the United States department of agriculture to find out what the United States farmer received. The bureau of agricultural economics of the United States department of agriculture puts out an interesting publication entitled, "The Wheat Situation". That contains the average prices received by the farmers, not by the grain exchange, not by the companies dealing in grain, but by the farmers. What do we find? Since this letter is dated June 5, 1946, I suppose it would be only fair to take the average for May, 1946, and this average was $1.70.

[Mr. Jutras.]

That is the average price received by the United States farmer in the month before this letter was published. I point out again that this figure of $2.18 is purely an imaginative or entirely fictitious figure.

I shall not spend any more time on this letter. A year later, the wheat board started computing a No. 2 price and then this company immediately dropped the figure of $2.18 as a basis of its calculations. It adopted the class 2 price of the wheat board. Before I leave this $2.18 figure, may I say that a reputable institution like the Winnipeg grain exchange put out a series of advertisements which appeared in the most important newspapers of Canada and which were based on this $2.18 price. I shall not read the whole advertisement, but there is one sentence right in the centre in large letters which I should like to read because it is the only one that makes sense. This sentence reads:

The whole thing doesn't make sense.

That is about the only true statement in the whole thing. It ends with:

Act—Protest—and protest loudly and long.

And again:

Demand that your elected representatives secure for you justice and equality of prices. If not—protest. Protest.

That advertisement was put out on the strength of a fictitious argument advanced by an official of one country and it was distributed throughout the country.

Mr. MILLER: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. JUTRAS: Certainly, but hurry up as I have not much time.

Mr. MILLER: What is the difference on which that loss is computed? The $2.18 is the high point, but what is the other figure?

Mr. JUTRAS: They take the $2.18. They make no bones about it. They do not take the average.

Mr. MILLER: What is the low figure? Where is the difference?

Mr. JUTRAS: The hon. member must be under a misapprehension.

Mr. MILLER: You are.

Mr. JUTRAS: I did not give the lowest figure. No one here has submitted the lowest figure.

Mr. KUHL: What was the corresponding Canadian figure?

Mr. JUTRAS: I gave the average price received by the farmer in the United States.

Mr. MILLER: You said that the losses were computed on a false figure, and you mentioned that as being the figure of $2.18. What is the figure you had that it was computed on?

Mr. JUTRAS: I shall come to that later. I cannot deal with four things at the same time.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He is just the new wheat expert.

Mr. JUTRAS: There is no use in continuing with the calculation based on $2.18 because they dropped it. I am going to take their other figures.

Mr. MILLER: What do the farmers clear in your riding? How much do they net?

Mr. JUTRAS: I shall give you that in a few minutes if you will only give me time.

I come now to another letter. I believe this is the latest, although there may be another one that has come in since. It sums up the propaganda in the first line by saying:

> From August 1, 1946 to December 31, 1947, a period of 17 months, the loss taken by our wheat growers on the wheat they have delivered to country elevators comes to the following staggering sums, all as compared with what farmers would have received had they enjoyed the full world price set daily by the Canadian wheat board itself for class 2 wheat.

That letter is dated January 21, 1948. Another sentence reads:

> (a) On the wheat hauled by farmers and intended for shipment to Britain, 296 million dollars.

First of all, let me say that I am surprised that the Searle Grain Company put any faith in a price set by the board. All through these letters they attempt to show that any time the government or the board sets a price it is only a fictitious price, one that will not endure and consequently one that has no value. Yet it is on that very basis that they attempt to show these losses.

The hon. member for Souris, in line with the Conservative party's propaganda, tried to establish the fact that the No. 2 price of the wheat board was the true world price. Personally I wish it were, and I am sure that a great many people in this country do, because then all our troubles would be over. The wheat situation in this country would then be very simple. All we would have to do is to close all the exchanges and have one of the three officials of the board take a pencil, look at the Chicago market quotation, add the protein value of our wheat and its intrinsic value —I believe in class 2 there is also a small allowance for market variation—and then we would have the price of Canadian wheat.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): How is the price arrived at now?

Mr. JUTRAS: We shall deal with wheat first. Don't change the subject if you don't like it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am asking how the price is arrived at now?

Mr. JUTRAS: I was going on to say that the situation is not that simple. You cannot just take a pencil and figure out the price. If you want the world price, there are all kinds of world prices at the present time. Let us go back to 1946-47. In the United States they have a system of computing what they call a parity price and they try to maintain the market at 90 per cent of that price. I have all the figures here on that parity price. The average price to the United States farmer in 1946-47, as given by the department of agriculture, U.S.A., was $1.91.

In Canada, during the crop year 1946-47 we had three prices: first, the domestic price, due to change in the middle of the year, averaged $1.40. The price under the United Kingdom wheat agreement was $1.95. All these prices are based on Fort William. The average class 2 price in Canada has been $2.44. Which of those prices is the world price? That is the question.

Australia sold some wheat to Britain at $2.72. On the other hand, it sold a considerable amount to New Zealand at 92⅔ cents, and it sold some to India at $2.96. Wheat for domestic consumption is 98 cents for poultry feed and 79 cents to feeders. On the average, the farmer would get $1.56 for wheat produced in Australia.

In New Zealand the farmer receives $1.28. On the other hand, New Zealand bought some wheat from Australia at 92⅔ cents.

In the Argentine—I am taking countries competing with Canada in the export market —wheat sold at $3.60 and some at $5, no doubt a small amount. They sold some to Brazil at $4.85 and wheat for home consumption at 77 cents, and the farmer is supposed to receive, on the average, from $1.45 to $1.65.

Out of this conglomeration of prices, who can pick one price and say that is the world price when there is no exchange in Liverpool, no exchange in Winnipeg, and it is only in the last few months that the Chicago exchange can be said to have been operating freely. If we average the prices what do we find? Australia's price is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1.80. Then, if we take the average price in the Argentine, and add them together and divide we get an average price of $1.89. I do not suggest for one minute that that is a price which has any real value, but it gives one an idea how utterly impossible it is for anybody to arrive at a true world price of wheat. Probably the best criterion and the one most commonly used in this country is to take the United States price as compared with Canada's, and this I propose to do. As I said before, on No. 1 they figure a loss of $296,000,000. That is for the wheat shipped to Britain.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The Searle index.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Based on government figures, too.

Mr. JUTRAS: No, not at all. I am going to show just the opposite. The wheat sold to Britain in 1946-47, covering a period of from twelve to seventeen months, amounted to $168,000,000. The average price received by the United States farmer, according to the index I have just quoted, is $1.91. On that portion of our wheat which went to Britain we received—I might say that in my district we have to deduct twelve cents for freight, and I am deducting fifteen cents to get the net price to the farmer in that vicinity—we received $1.40, or fifty-one cents less than the average price received by the United States farmer. Multiply fifty-one cents by 168,000,000 and you get a loss of $85,000,000.

Then, taking the crop year again for 1946-47, 53,000,000 bushels went to bread eaters for home consumption, and the United States farmers received $1.91 and the Canadian farmers $1.25, or a loss of sixty-six cents, so that the total loss to the farmers on those 53,000,000 bushels was sixty-six cents multiplied by 53,000,000, or $34,000,000.

Then there is a third price in Canada. There is a class called class 2. Our average export since the beginning of the wheat agreement for 1945 and 1946 was 74,000,000 bushels for those two years, and the net price to the Canadian farmer would be $2.29, as compared with the United States price of $1.91. That will give the Canadian farmer an advantage of thirty-eight cents on 74,000,000 bushels, or a total of $28,000,000. There is another important factor that should not be lost sight of. When the Winnipeg grain exchange and the Chicago exchange were working on a free basis I am given to understand, and the minister stated in a speech not very long ago, that there was always a difference of approximately thirty cents a bushel between the Chicago and the Winnipeg price. We know there is a difference of about thirty cents at all times, and even today there is that difference between the Minneapolis and Chicago exchanges. I am given to understand that this difference of thirty cents a bushel has always existed with the exception of a few years here and there in the past. Therefore, irrespective of the fact that we have a monopoly board at the present time and that wheat has been handled exclusively by the board, even if we had a free exchange we would have had that difference of at least thirty cents a bushel.

If we multiply 261, which is the Canadian production, less the No. 2 export which we have just calculated, we would be left with a difference of $78,000,000. Therefore, after the simple calculation is finished we get a difference of 3·8 cents between the amount actually received by the United States farmer and the amount received by the Canadian farmer.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Oh, oh.

Mr. JUTRAS: I know the hon. member for Souris is surprised, because he has been advocating something entirely different, and singing an entirely different song. I do not claim that these figures are exact, because I have not all the facts and figures, but I can certainly make the claim that they are as accurate as I could possibly make them. I have tried to be as accurate as I possibly can. I have tried to check the method of computing the 1944 crop, for which we have a complete statement, and to my surprise I was away below what was actually received by the farmer. I hope that I am below the amount in this case.

To continue with this propaganda it says here:

> It will be remembered, too, that prior to the start of the wheat agreement August 1, 1946, the government had marketed our farmers' wheat for several years at less than the world price. These losses to farmers for the years 1943, 1944 and 1945, come to an additional $409 million.

I have quoted from the Searle Grain Company Limited letter. I am going to oblige the Searle Grain Company; I shall not only go back to 1943, 1944 and 1945, I shall go back to 1942 and 1941, because in 1942 the grain exchange was in operation, and the grain exchange was in operation in 1941. It will be very interesting to look at the past, as they said, prior to the close of the grain exchange, and during the time the grain exchange was open. What do we find in the year prior to the wheat contract, of 1944-45? In 1944-45 the grain exchange was closed and the wheat board bought all the wheat at an initial price of $1.25 a bushel. Later on, it paid a participation certificate of 18·6 cents, making a total of $1.436. The average price received by the farmers, according to the index, was $1.41, as against $1.43. The $1.41 is the price received in the United States by the farmer; whereas I am quoting $1.43 Fort William. Therefore we shall have to subtract fifteen cents from $1.43, which will show us the ratio for that year between the price received by the United States farmer and the price received by the Canadian farmer. The ratio is thirteen cents.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Oh, oh.

Mr. JUTRAS: I see that the hon. member for Souris is laughing. I do not know why. These are statistics—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I wish he did not have to laugh.

Mr. JUTRAS: These are statistics published by the government.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Send copies of the speech to the farmers in my riding.

Mr. JUTRAS: I will do that. In 1943-44 the minimum price paid was $1.25, and then a participation of twelve cents was paid, making a total of $1.37. The average price received by the farmer in the United States was $1.36. The ratio there was fourteen cents.

We now come to 1942-43. At that time the wheat board and the grain exchange were operating. In that year the board received 68 per cent of the marketing, and the remainder of the crop was handled by the grain exchange. The minimum price at the time was 90 cents and a participation of 12½ cents, making a total of $1.02½. The average United States price to the farmer was $1.09; the average price in Canada over the exchange for that year was 94 cents; therefore, through the medium of the board the ratio was 22 cents; whereas had they all sold through the exchange the ratio between the United States and Canada would have been 30 cents. Furthermore, had all the farmers sold their wheat to the open market on that average price they would have lost $24,000,000.

Then, again in 1941-42 the initial price was 70 cents, the participation 15 cents, making a total of 85 cents. The average United States price was 94 cents. The average market price in Winnipeg was 76 cents, which meant that through the board the ratio was 24 cents; through the exchange, 33 cents. Had all farmers sold their wheat through the open exchange, they would have lost $21,000,000.

In 1940-41 the minimum price was 70 cents; participation, 6 cents, making a total of 76·2 cents. The average United States price to the farmer was 68 cents; the average market price was 74 cents. Here again, had all farmers sold through the open exchange, they would have lost $9,000,000. In addition to that, the wheat board paid $6,000,000 in storage to the farmer. I do not know whether I can give all the years. It is the same story all the way through.

Mr. MILLER: May I ask a question? I want to know first what the hon. member is reading from. I want to know that in order to follow him.

Mr. JUTRAS: I am reading from my own figures.

Mr. MILLER: The hon. member is the expert.

Mr. JUTRAS: No. All these figures will be on Hansard and the hon. member can check them against the wheat board report, which is an annual report. The other set is taken from the publication which I mentioned a while ago. It is the average marketing price per month and per year issued by the department of statistics.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but he has exhausted his time.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Let him carry on.

Mr. SPEAKER: If he has the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Go ahead.

Mr. JUTRAS: I must apologize, Mr. Speaker. I thought I had until six o'clock, and I was trying to get along on that basis. Unfortunately I must have started before 5.20 p.m. However, I shall try to sum up. As I said, I could go on with all the previous years, but I wish to bring to the attention of the house the year 1936-37. That is one of the few years in which the grain exchange functioned on an individual basis. What I mean is that in that year, as the house will recall, the minimum price of the board was applicable only if the market fell below 90 cents.

The wheat was marketed through the Winnipeg grain exchange and there was no board that year. There is an interesting factor here. I have the amount of wheat that was marketed per month; if you take the amount marketed by the farmers during the first four months of that year, you find that 78·5 per cent of all the wheat produced by the farmers in that year was marketed during the first four months of the year, and the average price for the first four months was $1.06, whereas the average price for the other eight months of the year was $1.30. Here again, if we wanted to make a comparison we could well say that the farmers in that year received $32,000,000 less than they would have, or, to put it in another way, that they lost $32,000,000.

Just to show how ridiculous these calculations made on theoretical figures can be, it is interesting to note for instance that if we base our calculations on the price the United States farmers are receiving, on No. 2 price, the United States farmers could be said to have lost $381,000,000 because our No. 2 price is above the United States price; and if we compare the price to the United States farmers with the price received by the farmers in the Argentine, $5, we get the colossal loss, on the part of the United States farmers, of $3,467,000,000.

In conclusion, I should like to make a few recommendations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I know the minister has already announced that he intends to raise the initial price, and I think it is commonly agreed that it is high time the initial price of the wheat agreement was raised. The government recognized that necessity in the past. It has raised it on one occasion and I know it will raise the price again. I would point out to the minister that the price of domestic wheat should be raised without further delay to at least the level of $2. For a great many years the domestic market in this country accounted for only 15 or 20 per cent, whereas today—I have the figures but I have not the time to quote them—the domestic market takes so great a proportion that it is an important factor in the framing of our policy. I therefore urge the minister to raise the domestic price of wheat without further delay, even before the No. 2 price to Britain comes into force.

Mr. GREGG: On a question of privilege, earlier in the afternoon the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. McKay) quoted from a report stating that thirty-one per cent of the veteran students at universities had discontinued owing to lack of finances. I interjected that I knew that report to be incorrect. The hon. member asked that I submit the correct figure, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to do so now, because I feel it is important that such an exaggerated report should not go out. Out of the 32,000 veteran students in universities, the closest check indicates that the number of students who have discontinued their courses, with lack of finances as the main reason, stands at sixty-three students since the beginning of the plan, or, in other words, approximately one-fifth of one per cent.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Jutras.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. W. MURPHY (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, for a moment or two I should like to touch on the tourist industry; as usual, my subjects are non-partisan. When I spoke in this house during my first session here, in 1945, I urged the desirability of greater recognition of what I thought was our greatest potential industry in this country; that is, the tourist industry. At that time I suggested that this industry warranted a cabinet minister without too many other responsibilities. I believe it is the opinion of many that this would be most desirable. At the moment it does not seem the tourist bureau is doing justice to what we have to offer in this country, and I would suggest to the government that there are other ways in which this industry might be stimulated. They might have a deputy minister to look after it, or they might have a commission. Those provinces which are paying a great deal of attention to that industry are benefiting from their efforts. If we could have a tourist commission representative of all the provinces, which would be a permanent body, it could more or less correlate the work necessary really to promote the industry. We have representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce in all parts of the world to develop our export trade, but I think many hon. members will agree that we are not taking advantage of what we in this country have to offer by way of attractions for tourists.

When I spoke in 1945 I said we had and would continue to have a need for United States dollars, and this is one way in which we can obtain those dollars without exporting goods. Instead, we have emissaries of good will who go back to their own country and bring more tourists here. At that time I think I showed that all segments of our society benefit from this industry. Everyone, no matter how he may derive his income, benefits. Of course we did not try to promote this industry during the war, but the war has been over for two or three years, and I think it will be generally agreed that some lead should now be given by the government to co-ordinate the work of the different provinces, because it is to the benefit of all. At that time I illustrated what I had in mind by a little story. Nine men sat down to a table which was covered with good things to eat. Their arms were tied in such a way that they could not raise their forks or spoons to their own mouths. They solved that problem by having each man feed the person to his left. If the dominion and the provinces could co-operate in somewhat the same way it would increase our supply of the much required United States dollars and benefit all.

I have had some returns brought down by the department in connection with this industry, and from them I see that most of the money to be spent on the development of this industry has been spent on advertising. I am not quarreling with the way in which the money has been spent; I believe the department should have more money for other purposes, and I also believe that if we had some government leadership such as those indicated, more attention would be given to this industry. For instance, in a return brought down just the other day I notice that last year the travel bureau under the Department of Trade and Commerce spent $768,000, of which $618,000 was for advertising. If we are in business we know that if we have a good product to sell we must certainly advertise it. I for one believe that if more attention were given the tourist industry our revenue from that source would increase immeasurably. According to the same return, I notice that total expenditures in Canada by United States citizens was $214,000,000 in 1946. I see no reason why we should not develop this industry to the point where these tourists will spend a billion dollars annually. We have everything to offer, even more than Switzerland, where the tourist industry is practically the only source of income.

I suggest to the minister now in charge of this department that steps should be taken to promote this industry. I believe one way of doing so would be in connection with films we get from Hollywood. We could arrange a barter. We might have films made in each province of Canada and, in addition to the advertising we do in United States publications, by means of this barter we could have these films shown throughout the United States, advertising our scenery and natural playgrounds. I notice also, according to this return, that the only person in that bureau who speaks on these matters in the United States is the director himself, whereas I believe they might well have ten, fifteen or twenty speakers travelling through the United States, speaking to service clubs and other organizations and we would be well rewarded. The first people these Americans meet when they enter our country are very important to them, because the first impression is usually the one that lasts. I should like to pay tribute to the customs and immigration officials we have in our employ in the Dominion of Canada. They are courteous and efficient. I believe the department should give careful consideration to the wages or remuneration these men are receiving, in view of the duties and responsibilities they have to perform.

In all fairness to these employees, the department should consider what United States immigration and customs officials are getting, because we on the border—and this applies to all border points—have Canadian customs and immigration officials going into the United States and coming back to the border by train. Then, we have United States customs and immigration officials coming into Canada, and returning to the border. On those same trains are either American or Canadian engineers and conductors. If we make a comparison I believe we shall find that the remuneration of these railway employees compares favourably with each other, and I suggest that there should also be a fair comparison between the pay received by Canadian customs and immigration officials and that received by those employed by the United States.

I regret to say that a comparison of pay between Canadian and American customs and immigration officials at the present time does not disclose that our officials are as well paid. I have not time to give details of figures, but I want the house to know that these men are not drawing much more than 60 per cent of the amounts drawn by United States customs and immigration officials; yet they are doing the same work. I do hope that these men will receive the consideration they deserve.

In the next few minutes I should like to deal on a non-partisan basis, with the Veterans Land Act, and the general subject of VLA housing. However, before going into details of what I purpose saying I should like through you, Mr. Speaker, to express to the new Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) the wish that the people of this country will have as high a regard for his administration of the department as they have for his honour in achieving such a splendid war record.

What I have to say is factual. I appreciate that the present minister was not in the government until recently, and I trust that he will not take as a personal attack any criticism which I may have to offer, because I shall be fair in what I have to say. May I also emphasize my high regard for the deputy minister of veterans affairs, a man who holds the respct and good will of veterans throughout the country. It seems to me that the administration of the Veterans Land Act may be the only blot on the department; and I believe I am expressing not only the wish of veterans, but that of many other people when I say that I hope the department will now endeavour to correct the injustices which the veterans justly allege, and which I allege, have been perpetrated on them in the past.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding, let me point out that on February 4, 1947, I spoke in the house and demanded a royal commission. After having recited certain particulars, which have since been verified to the satisfaction of a great many people, I said:

> I demand that a royal commission be appointed to inquire into all contracts for purchases of land acquired for small holdings under the Veterans Land Act, to inquire into all contracts for the building of homes for veterans under the Veterans Land Act and contracts for the construction of roads the installation of water mains and other costs involved in the purchase of these homes.

I repeat that demand tonight. And I am going to add to the demand for a royal commission the request that it inquire into the administration of the Veterans Land Act. I hope the few remarks I shall have to make will warrant the government's granting this demand.

When on that occasion I asked for a royal commission, we did not know as much as we later learned; and certainly did not know what we know today. I sincerely believe we were entitled to a royal commission at that time; and certainly I believe today—and there can be no question about the sincerity of my belief—that the veterans of this country are entitled to a royal commission to inquire into the facts of the matters the investigation of which I have sought.

It must be borne in mind that these veterans were young lads without homes. They wanted homes as badly as did other people, and most certainly they were more entitled to them than were many others who had them. In all fairness to the government, I must say that it did provide roofs over the heads of these veterans, and provided them at low monthly payments. I would be most unfair if I were to rise in my place in the house and say otherwise.

I should like to bring the house up to date on what has happened. In the first place, I entered this scrap for no political purpose. I entered it on behalf of the veterans; and I have told them that when they are satisfied I will quit, and that I will not quit before they have had a fair deal. At this time I should like to pay tribute where tribute is due. I do not think we would have had this matter before the public accounts committee, where so much information was revealed with respect to what has already taken place had it not been for the support of the press across this country. And in this connection I pay special tribute to the press of western Ontario including the Windsor Star, the Sarnia Observer, the London Free Press and many others. At this moment I should like to pay special tribute to one who is most responsible for the matter being brought thus far. As a matter of fact, he is now in the press gallery, and is none other than the representative of the Windsor Star, who brought this matter to my attention in January, 1947.

As the house knows, I was approached in January by some veterans who had received an ultimatum from the department, and the particulars of that ultimatum were recited by me at that time. They were told that either they would agree to buy their homes within a week or they could stay in until May 1 and pay rent, but by the end of May they would have to vacate. I investigated the houses, but I shall not recite now what I found out. Hon. members will recall the details I gave in February, 1947, and can read what came before the public accounts committee. Along with contractors I investigated these houses in Sarnia and Windsor and I am prepared to say that I advised the veterans to seek a new contract. I thought, and I think everyone who is fair will agree with me, that they were entitled to that. I think I should take this opportunity to say that the veterans are grateful for the support they received from other hon. members on this side of the house in their demand for a royal commission.

At that time I was not aware that there were other areas in Canada as bad as either of these two areas, but it was afterwards admitted before the public accounts committee by the director of the Veterans Land Act that other areas were just as bad as Sarnia, which, of course, was terrible. He referred to such places as Sackville, New Brunswick; Boucherville, Quebec; and Braefoot, British Columbia, as being in the same category.

I think it was on March 3, 1947, that the veterans in these areas who had not signed up received another ultimatum which was dated Toronto, March 3, 1947. This is set out on page 529 of the proceedings of the public accounts committee and it reads in part:

> This application was signed by you in the presence of a commissioner for taking affidavits and the department can only assume that you completed this document in the best of faith.
> In spite of the above, you refuse to sign the agreement of sale which was presented to you in the course of the past few days, and in view of this, the department has no alternative but to take steps to make the home in which you are presently residing, available to another veteran who is agreeable to completing the agreements presented.

And further down:

If however, you still are not prepared to sign, you may vacate the premises within one week from the date shown on the letterhead.

The former minister of veterans affairs gave his assurance in this house that the veterans would not be asked to sign purchase contracts until the repairs were made. The repairs had not even been started when authority was given to send out that ultimatum. I sometimes wonder if the director of the Veterans Land Act did not assume too much. I have stated publicly on different occasions that I did not think the Minister of Veterans Affairs or his deputy were aware of what was taking place with respect to these various ultimatums. When I see the amounts that have been spent in administering the Veterans Land Act I realize that somebody must assume responsibility in all V.L.A. matters and, of course, that must be the government. In view of the assurances which had been given by the minister on the floor of this house, I make no apology for having advised these veterans not to sign.

Immediately after that the deputy minister of veterans affairs and two others visited these homes, and in fact I was in Sarnia when they came there. They saw the houses for themselves and the deputy minister was kind enough to assure the veterans that they would not be obliged to sign contracts until repairs had been made. Then, a royal commission not being set up, the matter was brought before the public accounts committee. One reason I suggested a royal commission is that, while this matter might be brought before the public accounts committee, our experience last summer showed that it would take hundreds of hours to hear the evidence of the complaints from the different areas. I submit that these veterans are entitled to have their cases reviewed by some tribunal.

When the public accounts committee was dealing with this matter, it took some four or five sittings of the committee to elaborate upon the details of faulty construction I had given the house. That is why I say that the public accounts committee could not go into the complaints from all these projects across the country. That committee served a useful purpose, and I should like to quote one or two recommendations it made, as reported on page 708 of the minutes of the public accounts committee for 1947. They are:

Your committee regrets that this matter was not brought to its attention in time to have evidence by veterans of other projects. Your committee hopes that remedial measures taken as a result of its report may satisfactorily adjust defects which may have occurred in other projects.

And again:

Your committee recommends that a board of three men be appointed consisting of real estate and building experts, none of whom shall have had previous connection with the Department of Veterans Affairs, or with any other governmental building projects, to pursue the work undertaken by your committee, with a view to giving justice and fair treatment to veteran purchasers and all parties interested in this question, and to recommend to the minister any remedy it may consider fit to correct the situation.

Such board should first investigate the Sarnia project, as your committee considers it important to clarify the situation there at as early a date as possible.

Subsequent to its investigation of the Sarnia project, the board, in the opinion of your committee, would do well to examine other projects which may be brought to its attention.

That is a definite recommendation by a parliamentary committee composed of a membership proportionate to the representation in this house.

I come now to the third ultimatum which was sent from the London office. When I speak of Windsor or Sarnia the two are parallel because what happened at Windsor also happened at Sarnia and the proceedings taken by the department in the one area applied also in the other. This ultimatum which is evidence of the director's capacity for surprise is dated London, Ontario, September 9, addressed to W. T. Cleave, Sarnia, Ontario, and is signed by H. L. Armstrong, District Superintendent. It reads:

You have now been in residence and occupying house—

I will not give all the details.

—for a period of ten months.

It goes on:

If you do not wish to be established in a home under the Veterans Land Act, we ask that you vacate within seven days after the date of this letter.

If you decide not to sign agreement to purchase, and do not vacate within the date as stated, September 17, 1947, the department have no alternative but to charge a monthly rental of $48 per month, payable in advance.

I attended a meeting at the request of the veterans in Windsor as a result of that ultimatum, and I assured them that this could not be action that the minister or the deputy minister would take. I attributed the responsibility to the director of the V.L.A., and I think I am justified in that conclusion, but of course we all appreciate that the government must accept the responsibility. Some repairs had been made, but not completed. I shall refer now to a return tabled in the house last year. This is further evidence to corroborate the necessity for a royal commission. I quote from sessional paper No. 1351, in reply to questions I asked. I shall quote only one question:

What was the cost per unit overhead and how was the same made up?

The answer was:

Average per unit at Sarnia, $1,736.22.

Before giving the remainder of the answer to that question, let me say, so that there may be no doubt about it, that we discovered, before the public accounts committee, that the houses at Sarnia cost the department $10,106 and, may I say, they are still not completed. The drainage work has still to be done. With the additional work to be done and administration overhead, the cost of all houses built under V.L.A. will probably be in excess of $11,000 or $12,000.

I now will give the remainder of the answer to question No. 6, to which I have just referred.

Project overhead includes the following items:

Temporary buildings, salaries of staff located on the project including superintendents, accountants, bookkeepers, stenographers, timekeepers, material checkers, first aid attendant, watchman, and water boys—

Water boys for eight houses! One water boy was not sufficient. It goes on:

—miscellaneous expenses incurred at job office in direct relation to the project include travelling expenses, telegrams, and telephone calls.

I inquired what the unit overhead cost was in Windsor but have not yet received that information, nor have we received answers to many other questions placed on the order paper regarding the project overhead or the unit overhead of various projects.

Another return was tabled last fall, 135F, in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Stephenson). The question asked was:

What has been the total cost for administration of the V.L.A. from its inception up to February 28, 1947?

The answer to that question is given in the return:

Approximately $8,903,000. To some extent the same staff is engaged in Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Act and other work on which the administration is engaged. The figure given is a close estimate, and includes $331,256.93 for legal fees and $563,568.50 for taxes.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the evidence before the public accounts committee, and evidence such as I have given here tonight, and the concrete evidence of the construction itself and the admission by the director of V.L.A. and by the minister and the deputy minister of defects in construction, the careless supervision and huge amounts spent by the director of V.L.A. for administration purposes, we should certainly inquire how that money was spent and how the administration of the Veterans Land Act spent the moneys allocated to them.

We know there is going to be depreciation in homes, and the more badly the home is constructed, the greater the depreciation There is the probability of gradual declines in home values, beginning three or four years hence, if not before, on well-built homes. On poorly constructed homes the decline in value and the depreciation will be much greater.

The director of V.L.A. admitted that these houses were of poor construction, and not only these but the others to which I have referred. I say here that the veterans are entitled to an opportunity to enjoy decent well-built homes at fair prices. The government has defaulted in its obligation to carry out this principle. Inflationary factors in the current situation arising from liberal credits and from other governmental policies are such as to keep the potential demand high in relation to housing supply, and for that reason the government let it be known that many veterans now without homes will be glad to move into these homes.

The minister stated, as reported at page 589 of Hansard—and I am not going to deal harshly with his statements—that these defects were inevitable. I contend, in view of the evidence we had submitted to us, and it is obvious to anyone who has inspected these houses, that there was no occasion for them to have had these defects, and I am sure the minister will agree that is in fact the case. As reported at page 589 of Hansard he said:

When the defects became apparent, my predecessor said on the floor of the house that the houses would be placed in first-class condition at no cost to the veteran.

We appreciate that. Yet the veterans were asked to sign contracts before the repairs were made and the repairs are even yet not complete.

In the few minutes I have left I want to compare cost of other houses with these V.L.A. houses. We know that a committee of three valuators has given a valuation on these veterans' homes. I said a moment ago that the public accounts committee recommended that none of those chosen as valuators should have been in any way connected with government building projects; but I understand, although it does not prejudice me in my thinking, that one of these valuators did build several hundred or about a thousand homes as a government project.

I am going to compare the prices of a recently completed project in the Toronto area with these V.L.A. homes. These homes in Toronto area are of solid brick, constructed at 1947 prices, and the houses are just completed. The houses have 18,000 cubic feet and are from 10 to 15 per cent larger than the ones built under the V.L.A. The V.L.A. used the same nine or ten plans all across the country. The cost of this project in the Toronto area for home, excluding land, is $5,280; that is, without the upstairs being completed. These houses were of brick construction, with basements, hardwood floors, excellent kitchens, hot air heating, built-in baths, built-in cupboards in the kitchens, tile floors in the kitchens, plastered walls, and are completed in a satisfactory manner; much better homes than the V.L.A. homes.

In view of the fact that the minister referred to the new valuation of these houses I did wish to compare the prices.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; I am sorry, but I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has exhausted his time.

Mr. MURPHY: I would appreciate two or three more minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the house he may proceed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. MURPHY: I thank you for that courtesy, Mr. Speaker. The valuations that were made by this committee were made last December. The houses were under construction in 1945, and I think the house will agree with me that in that period the cost of construction had increased some twenty-five per cent at the very least. I believe the government figures will show that the increase in building costs are much higher for that period. I regret to say this, but it is nevertheless necessary that I should, because the minister in his statement emphasized that the valuators had never seen the prices previously quoted by the Veterans Land Act administration. He said, as reported at page 590 of Hansard:

> I want to make it absolutely clear that this independent appraisal committee set their prices without any reference to the prices previously quoted by the Veterans Land Act administration. They did not have in their possession the prices which the veterans had originally been asked for the houses.

I do not say this unkindly of the minister; I think he will appreciate that. I shall deal with the Sarnia area first. I want to call the attention of the house to the fact that the reduction in valuation ran from some $853 to $1,619 per house. The over-all reduction was $1,228 per house. I must also refer briefly to some two or three of the valuations of the Windsor area rather than give the figures. The information is available in the report which the minister tabled. On a great many of the houses there was a difference of only a few dollars, $10, $12, $15 and $25 which would indicate to me, or to anyone else, that this committee certainly must have had this report, because it is almost physically and mentally impossible for valuators to valuate one hundred houses and come within $10 $15, $20 or $25 of the price which the government had set as the price to the veterans. In fact the prices charged to the veterans were available to the public.

I wish to say, in fairness to the minister, that he has provided the veterans with an opportunity of renting if they so desire. I maintain that these veterans really have to buy these houses. I do not blame them for buying them, because they can have them at a low monthly payment, and by buying them they have a roof over their heads. They are more or less forced into it. They are tired out. They have had so many investigators and inspectors around that many of them have decided to buy and take their medicine.

In conclusion, I am going to say this. I have the authority of my leader to tell this house that if these veterans do not get justice from this government, and if we are fortunate enough to form the next government and I expect we shall, we shall review and revalue these houses and see that the veterans get the justice that this government denied them.

When I began my remarks I asked for a royal commission. I want to repeat that. I think we are entitled to it and, on behalf of these veterans, I expect that this government will grant the royal commission.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, to me this has been the most interesting session that I have attended since I became a member. We are living in troubled times. The papers carry such contradictory headlines as, "spiraling prices", "crashing prices of commodities", and such headlines as I found in the February 3 issue of the Vancouver Sun on the editorial page, "Homeless, workless, hungry", in speaking of the plight of the single unemployed of Vancouver, which has been becoming worse each year since the war ended. In part it says:

> Neither explanations nor regrets ever put a meal in a man's stomach or a pillow under his head.

Some of the attitudes expressed by various members of the government have been good, but some, I believe, are due for criticism. The February 9 issue of Time magazine quotes an interview that some housewives had with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) protesting the high cost of living.

When one of the ladies said she had eight children Mr. Abbott cracked, "You must do pretty well out of the family allowance."

When he was on his visit to the United States in order to obtain the $300 million loan he gave a press interview in which he spoke of Canada's austerity program. He spoke about the nutritious value found in home-grown beets and turnips. I can see that, from a business angle, that was a good approach. There he was, going to our masters on Wall street asking for a loan, and in this interview he said, "Look gentlemen, I can drive the standard of the Canadian people down to that of the eastern European peasant and make them like it. You can easily give me a loan. I can exploit it out of the Canadian people." The hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) has a solution. He goes one better than Marie Antoinette who told us to eat cake when we had no bread. The hon. member for Vancouver North now wants to put margarine on the cake.

The attitude expressed by the minister may sound glib; it may sound cynical. I would suggest that if he wants to take that attitude some day he give us the diet of that great liberal figure who discovered the nutritional value of ordinary lawn grass, Nebuchadnezzar. He might as well make it ridiculous and be done with it.

Let us see what is actually happening in the realm of action by the government in its handling of costs that have to do with the standard of the working classes. I hold in my hand correspondence from local 360 of the International Brotherhood of Papermakers, Ocean Falls, in which they inform me that the company, Pacific Mills, asked the rentals control board to send one of their administrators because they wished to raise the rents. Mr. Lobley went up for the department. He stayed there for two days and interviewed about twenty tenants out of a total of about five hundred, and then he left.

According to the information from local 360, rents are to be raised from two per cent to forty-eight per cent, with an average rise of twenty-four per cent. I wrote a protest to Mr. W. L. A. Pope, deputy administrator, rentals administration of the wartime prices and trade board, Ottawa, over the matter, because I thought that if an administrator were to go into any ordinary community and take a Gallup poll of the people and then raise all rents because he had interviewed twenty persons, there would be a howl and we would hear about individual justice. But because he went to a company town he took it for what he thought it was by his attitude, a slave compound, and once he got a cross-section of it he let it go at that.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Houses are standardized, are they not?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Yes, they are standardized. But remember that not one of these people is standardized. They are all individual souls.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Wages are standardized too, at about $1.50.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: What the hon. member wants to do is to stamp them all in the same mould. But he will not make that stick.

In answer to my protest I received a letter from Mr. Pope, and this is what he said:

For your information I enclose herewith a copy of the decision made by Mr. Owen Lobley, which you will notice is approved by Mr. K. W. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board.

This decision is self-explanatory.

I am going to put this decision on the record. I may say that this document is something marvellous to read:

Rentals Administration,
490 Sussex street, Ottawa.

In the matter of the housing accommodation situated at the place known as Ocean Falls, in the province of British Columbia, of which accommodation Pacific Mills Limited is the landlord, employees of the landlord are the tenants:

Whereas the landlord has requested me to increase the maximum rentals of the said accommodations by the exercise of the discretionary power vested in me;

Whereas I have heard the representatives and representations of the landlord and the tenants;

Considering that all the land and buildings of every kind situated at Ocean Falls are the property of Pacific Mills Limited;

Considering that all places of dwelling at Ocean Falls have been constructed by Pacific Mills Limited for the accommodation of its employees because no one else would provide this accommodation—

No one else would provide the accommodation! Have you ever tried to put up a building in a company town? It is a physical impossibility. Even the legion there had to fight to put up their own building. Perhaps the only building that is not owned by the company is the post office, and sometimes I wonder if it is not owned by them. To continue:

Considering that the leases of the employee-tenants of these accommodations can be terminated under the provisions of the laws of the province of British Columbia, and that the termination of these leases is not affected by the orders of the wartime prices and trade board;

Considering that in this community the amounts deducted from the tenant-employee's pay in consideration for the living quarters provided for him by his employer cannot cause inflation, nor can it affect the housing shortage in Canada:—

That is a fundamental statement.

Considering that the amount of rental-deductions from the pay of the respective employees in the said community is not related to the purposes and objects of Canadian rent control—

Now here it is:

Now therefore, I, Owen Lobley, rentals administrator, by virtue of the power vested in me, do hereby exempt all accommodations situated in the place known as Ocean Falls, in the province of British Columbia, from the provisions of order number 294 of the wartime prices and trade board as amended.

Dated at Ottawa, this 5th day of February, 1948.

Who is this egotistical, stupid, frustrated little man who is taking on himself the power of royalty dispensing largesse? I read this order number 294, and the only institutions I could find that could escape the laws of this dominion were religious institutions and institutions given to charity. I do not believe that anybody in British Columbia could possibly call the Pacific Mills a charitable or a religious institution; yet this little man takes all that power in his hands and this is foisted on these workers, whether they like it or not.

I have never in this house criticized the civil service because I believe they are doing a good job; but there is a limit, and this is the limit, and that is one action that the government is going ahead with.

I should like to give some other actions of the government by way of comparison. Let me state some of their actions in the last few years.

In the realm of taxation, on April 29, 1947, there came out in the budget an income tax reduction of $12 for married men with an income of $1,600.

On April 28, 1947, in the same budget, there was an income tax reduction of $733 for a married man with an income of $10,000.

Take another comparison. On May 27, 1947, the government voted down the C.C.F. proposal to raise the income tax exemptions to $1,000 for single men and $2,000 for married men.

On December 31, 1947, the government completely removed the corporation excess profits tax.

On June 1, 1946, the governmnet subsidy of two cents a quart on milk was removed. On October 1, 1946, the government subsidy of fifty-five cents per hundredweight on milk was removed.

On February 14, 1947, there was a contract signed retroactive to January 1, 1946, to provide a subsidy of $7,200,000 in 1947-48 to Dosco on steel production, the same to Algoma, granting a subsidy of $1,600,000 and lesser amounts to other corporations.

In 1947 the government gave $400,000 to Crane Limited as an incentive bonus.

This government, you know, does not believe in subsidies, but you have to watch it. It is like Peter. It denies more than three times the thing it has faith in.

On July 17, 1947, they failed to pay the cost of living bonus suggested by the C.C.F. to superannuated civil servants, who in many cases receive less than the old age pension.

On June 30, 1946, gold mines whose profit margin was $4 an ounce or less were exempted from tax.

On July 30, 1946, the bill to tax co-operatives was passed.

On August 17, 1946, Bill No. 250 to increase the pay of judges to $20,000 was passed.

On July 7, 1947, a bill was passed to provide diplomats with pensions up to $7,000 a year for life.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I voted against that.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Thank heaven you did. On June 26, 1947, the government voted down the C.C.F. amendment to the old age pensions bill to provide $50 a month instead of $30.

On April 1, 1947, an order in council was passed allowing Dionne to go to Europe to import 100 immigrants.

On May 6, 1947, the Chinese immigration bill was passed, discriminating against Chinese.

On January 1, 1946, new gold mines coming into production on or after this date were given three years tax exemption—Hansard, page 1017.

On February 6, 1947, there was an increase of two cents a gallon on gasoline and other petroleum products sold on the prairies.

On March 1, 1946, the cotton and wool subsidies were removed or reduced, affecting men's and women's clothing.

On March 30, 1946, there was an upward price adjustment for primary Canadian steel mills, approximating $5 per net ton of ingots produced.

On March 30, 1946, creamery butter increased by four cents per pound; dairy butter followed suit on April 13, 1946.

On April 2, 1946, ceiling prices of men's and boys' shirts, pyjamas and flat cut underwear increased by 25 per cent at the retail level.

On April 11, 1946, the ceiling on Canadian farm machinery and parts was raised 12½ per cent.

On April 15, 1946, a variety of goods and services was removed from price ceilings: cement, fertilizers, office supplies, et cetera.

On May 16, 1946, manufacturers' prices of certain types of metal beds and furniture increased by from 10 to 12½ per cent.

On May 20, 1946, corn syrup increased by approximately two cents a pound.

On May 29, 1946, prices of wooden and upholstered household furniture of all types increased; consumers will pay seven to thirteen per cent more.

On January 1, 1947, depletion allowance for gold mines increased from 33⅓ per cent to 40 per cent of profits earned.

On April 30, 1947, removal of butter fat subsidy of ten cents a pound and cheese subsidy at thirty cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): No wage increases in all this time?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Nothing to correspond to these increases. During the recess the Ottawa Citizen stated that prices had gone up twice as fast as wages had increased.

In June, 1947, Alberta nitrogen products plant sold.

On July 1, 1947, Bill No. 339 passed, fixing old age pensions at $30 a month.

On July 8, 1947, voted down amendment to Civil Service Act which would have extended the veterans preference to merchant seamen.

On July 11, 1947, increase in senators' allowance, Bill No. 443 passed.

On October 22, 1947, feed grain subsidy of twenty-five cents a bushel on wheat and barley and ten cents a bushel on oats removed.

In November, 1947, publicly owned nitrate plant at Niagara sold to American Cyanamid Company after the government had assured the C.F.A. that it would be retained for production of fertilizer under public ownership.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the best example I have yet seen of what is known as class legislation. You are trying, so you say, to instil into the people respect for democracy; yet the democracy you are dealing out is just to one small segment of the people of this country.

Mr. HARKNESS: What are these classes you talk about, that you say we have in this country? I did not think we had any classes here.

[Mr. Archibald.]

Mr. BURTON: You go into a company town and you will soon find out.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I cannot help it if the hon. member has not been around enough to find out what the score is. I went through that depression, when the doughnuts hung high, and I know what classes are. No doubt being a lawyer—

Mr. HARKNESS: Don't worry; I worked in the logging camps on the west coast long before you did.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Well, you don't show it.

Mr. HARKNESS: I think I do.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): His callouses are in a different place from yours.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: In all my remarks I have been dealing with and criticizing the government, but do you notice how they get together? Immediately I talk about the Liberals the Conservatives come to the defence of the government and those fellows over there sit quietly. I made up my mind that from now on, when I had any interruptions on the floor of this house from the Conservative party I would just let them go, because as a political force they could not fight their way out of a paper bag.

Mr. HARKNESS: I asked a very simple question, what were these classes? I have not yet had an answer.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: You had a very simple and direct answer.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was simple, all right.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: You will find the only way to get the answer is by experience. Take up your bed and walk; go and find out.

Mr. HARKNESS: I suggest that you should get the experience; apparently you have not yet had it.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I leave you to the tender mercies of Calgary at the next election. However, I should like to point out—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You may be worse off than ever then.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I do not mind ordinary interjections in this debate, but when these fellows get their big feet in somebody else's business they bog down like a gumboot in an oily bilge.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, before I was so rudely interrupted—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask one question?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Oh, no. I want to finish my speech very quietly, because I am a very modest fellow and detest trouble. I just want to go on and point out that this is class legislation. It will not give our people faith in our institutions. It will build up bitterness, fear and hatred. We wish to sell our democracy abroad, but if this sort of thing continues we shall not be able to do so. If we are to instil faith in democracy into the peoples of the world and into our own people we have to feed and clothe them properly; we have to give them a sense of security, a sense of being a part of Canada. If we do not do this we shall meet more trouble ahead. We shall have to go through all the agonies people have gone through in countries where there have been upheavals. Some of us are trying our best to bring about the change in a peaceful fashion, to bring about a society where real justice and freedom will reign.

At the present time there is one program which would meet the immediate situation. It has been placed on record previously, but I wish to put it on record again. There must be immediate reimposition of price controls on all the basic necessities of life, including food, clothing and fuel; renewal of the subsidies on milk, butter, bread, feed grains, cotton and wool; the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange and the elimination of speculation in essential foods; the restoration of the wartime prices and trade board on a permanent basis in such a manner that it will be able adequately to administer price control; continuation of the excess profits tax, which was discontinued on December 31, 1947; the rationing, if necessary, of any essential commodity which is in short supply, so that all Canadians may get their fair minimum share.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Now will the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You spoke about company towns. As you are aware, there is a good deal of coal mining in Alberta; and in Nordegg, west of Red Deer, you probably know there is the best housing of any town in Alberta. Yet it is a company town, where the houses are wholly owned by the company. Laugh that one off if you can.

An hon. MEMBER: Is that a question?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I asked the hon. member if he knew that to be a fact. That was the form of my question.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: When the hon. member for Calgary West speaks of a company town where the housing is wonderful I am reminded of that song about the bird in the gilded cage. People are not happy just because they live in beautiful surroundings. They want their freedom. They want to be treated as individuals. In the case I mentioned they are being treated en masse like slaves in a compound. That is the answer. They are free Canadian citizens; and even if they are living in good houses, as they are in Ocean Falls, they still want that basic freedom.

Mr. MITCHELL: Would the hon. member permit just one short question?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL: Has he any knowledge of the contractual relations between the labour organizations and the employers in the pulp and paper industry?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Yes, I have a knowledge of the contractual relations, if you mean the ordinary contract they draw up each year. They have good contracts.

Mr. MITCHELL: Certainly they have; among the best relations in industry in Canada.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Several days ago you asked the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) whether or not the unions would have their wages fixed. Those fellows have fixed their wages, and now they are having their wages hijacked out of them because of these increases in rents.

Mr. MITCHELL: I say to my hon. friend that the speech he has just made was made in Moscow; it was the worst thing I have listened to in a long time.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: On a point of order, I want to answer that man. I shall not ask him to withdraw it; I never ask for mercy in this political game. That man is trying to dam the free movement of Canadian people. He knows very well my history, and that I fought communists more than he did. In the last election he had Tim Buck around his neck; and just because you have gone ahead with spy trials, and sent a bunch of dewy-eyed fellow travellers on a one-way ticket, and sent Sam Carr down to Mexico for a rest cure, you can't pull that stuff on me.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, I think the Minister of Labour should withdraw the statement he made. That is not a proper statement to make about any member of the Canadian House of Commons or any member in any legislature in a democratic country. I think that statement should be withdrawn. I doubt if the minister realized just what sort of statement it was. I am sure he would not object to withdrawing it.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Speaker, I knew the paper makers' organization before this young fellow from Skeena was born. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: You don't act like it.

Mr. MITCHELL: There are no better relations on the North American continent.

Mr. GREEN: On the point of order—

Mr. MITCHELL: You wait a minute.

Mr. GREEN: I am not complaining about that part of it at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver South to state his point of order.

Mr. GREEN: The point of order is this, that the Minister of Labour has accused a member of this house of making a speech which was made in Moscow. That is the part which I submit to Your Honour is quite out of order and should be withdrawn.

Mr. MITCHELL: I will withdraw that, and I will say this, that speeches like that are made in Moscow. I would say this to my hon. friend, that if my young friend would take his political diapers off he would get along better. And I say to my hon. friend that when the hon. member for Skeena said that this government sent Sam Carr down to Mexico, that is a perversion of the truth.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Vancouver South has raised a point of order and the minister has withdrawn. Would the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) proceed.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, after looking over the geography of Canada, and having something in the backs of our minds which made us think that those who came from Skeena were from a broad and strong part of the country, and would not lend themselves to anything which would not go down very well in the system of those of us who like to think we are strong men of the north, may I say that my conception of Skeena has not been raised very much this evening by the exhibition which I have witnessed, and to which I have listened within the last half hour.

When I think of a loquacious Irish schoolteacher of a decade ago who represented that great constituency in such a charming manner, a man who never harmed anyone; then, when I think of the incumbent who immediately preceded the present one, a man who came to this country from Sweden, without a dollar to his name; when I think of his wholesomeness and of the private enterprise in which he took part; when I think of the example he set to so many who have come to our shores, and how proud we were to know him; and when I think of how we on all sides of the house learned to love him, I must say that tonight I feel let down, after listening to the remarks of the present hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Archibald).

I hope, as he grows a little older, that perhaps he may mature a little. We all do. We do not like to, but we must admit that that maturing does take place. We hope that he will mature, and that he will take a viewpoint of Canada which is much broader than that narrow viewpoint which sets one group of our people against another. I belong to both groups, to the group who work for a living, and to the group who are honoured and privileged to have others working for them—and I have working for me several hundred—without strife. I love to know their families and their children, although they have become so numerous that it is not easy to keep track of them.

Yet we have a man rising in his place in the house and referring to those people as stupid, frustrated little men. I do not hear quite so well now, Mr. Speaker; and when I thought I heard him say that, I thought he was referring to himself. We do not want little men—and I do not speak as to stature—we do not want little men, men small of mind, in this country of ours. Whether they weigh 100 or 200 pounds, we want them to be big and broad men; because we have a big country, a broad country, and we are charged by Providence with the responsibility of developing this country for our children. The only ones who can develop it are men who will speak from their hearts and their minds, and will not read into the columns of Hansard theses which perhaps took weeks, or perhaps only a few moments to prepare. I wonder sometimes if those theses are the thoughts of the men who deliver them in the house, or are they the thoughts of others?

Until such time as young men in this honourable house, sir, have something to say which comes from within their own minds, which flows from their breadth of experience, from their reading, from their study, not from some essay handed to them by some outsider, or some outside organization telling them what to say I am wondering if this is really a parliament. Is it a parliament, or is it a chamber in which the views of others from outside can be placed on the record?

We are in parliament and, according to my idea of things, we speak for our constituents, and for what they think. And if you cannot say what you think, then I doubt very much whether you have a right to be in this chamber.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Pretty cheap.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order. I had thought that, after the generous way in which the Minister of Labour withdrew his remark, we would not have further remarks of that kind tonight. I call Your Honour's attention to Beauchesne's, second edition pages 98 and 99, where we find set out a list of unparliamentary phrases; and we are told that no member will be permitted to say of another that the house has a right to know whether that member meant what he said. We are also told farther down that no member can suggest that another member does not believe a statement he has made. If I interpret correctly what the hon. member for Danforth is now saying, he is casting doubt upon whether or not the hon. member for Skeena was expressing his own thoughts. That is getting pretty close to the line. I shall not make an issue out of it at this time, but perhaps it might be better if the hon. member for Danforth were to get on with his own speech.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I am very happy to submit to the suggestion of my learned, honoured and reverend friend. Perhaps the words should not have been used. If they are withdrawn I suppose I shall be in order; I suppose it is a case of whether it was good taste to call someone a stupid, frustrated little man. However, I am the last one that would want to say anything that would disturb any hon. member in this chamber. However, when I listen to someone talking about fifty-five cents a quart when he means 55 cents a hundred pounds I begin to wonder whether he is quite sure what a quart of milk is or what a hundred pounds of milk is. That is what led me to think that perhaps he was not just sure of what it was all about.

Let me get to the subject before us, the speech from the throne, the vehicle which permits us to say something on behalf of our constituents, to make our requests, to tell of some of our difficulties. After having had four constituencies during the last two and a half decades, I think at this stage I might be permitted to say something about my own community.

Before doing so, may I express to the government my great disappointment with regard to the speech from the throne. I am thinking of what was in the minds of the Canadian people when it was presented. I am thinking of the words in the speech from the throne, how it bristled with one outstanding feature, the rise in prices and the high cost of living. My next two or three sentences may be out of order, Mr. Speaker, but I pray your indulgence. When the speech from the throne was introduced the committee on the cost of living was not functioning.

The people of Canada, reading this speech from the throne delivered on December 5, were happy that something would be done. By whom? By their elected representatives. The elected representatives hoped that each would have an opportunity of saying what he would like to say about this matter. However, that hope is gone because we now have this committee set up. On behalf of the Canadian people I wish every success for the committee.

In what I am going to say now, I call to witness one or two of my hon. friends on the other side. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Gladstone) served diligently on a committee day after day and month after month. I wonder what his thoughts are now as to the success of that committee. I wonder what are the thoughts of other hon. members in this chamber who, in days gone by, have served on committees. This committee is simply a stopgap; it is a waste of time. The government waited for something to happen but they were frustrated.

They did not get very far with the department. The staffs of the departments, having been engaged in parliamentary business all their lives, know more than the ordinary member of the House of Commons. Even though members of committees work with great diligence, they are not trained in that particular field. They are unable to match wits with deputy ministers and deputies' deputies and their deputies and their deputies behind them. They have nothing but parliamentary procedure in their blood, and the net result is that this committee will, in my opinion, not be able to give our people the satisfaction they are hoping to get. In the meantime we as members of the house are not able to discharge our responsibility to our people as we would like to discharge it.

What is the cause of some of these difficulties in connection with the austerity program and the loss of exchange and conditions generally? It is the tardiness of the government in facing up to these problems. It all stems from the one tragic financial error which was made in July, 1946. I would want to be known as a sound money man. When in July, 1946, I saw the United Kingdom exchange at $4.03 and ours come back to a dollar I thought to myself, "What have we got?"

There is more trade done throughout the world in sterling than there is in United States dollars. Sterling will be here when the United State dollar slips and slides, when they have panics and what not. In my opinion, there are just two world currencies. Of course we know there is silver in India and China and in some other countries, but the main currency blocs are sterling and United States dollars. Before July, 1946, our dollar was at 90 cents and the New York dollar was at par, with London quoted at $4.04. In my opinion, the greatest mistake that this administration ever made was to change the value of our dollar to dollar for dollar. I say that for economic reasons and for reasons of trade. I say it for the reasons advanced by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy), who said that we needed more tourists.

Can you visualize the millions of dollars we have lost since July, 1946, because tourists did not come over here to spend their United States dollars? Can you realize the United States dollars that we should have received and did not, thus being forced into an austerity program? This action was taken when it was too late. It would not have been necessary if we had had that extra $10 per $100 from the tourist traffic.

Canada is a great producer of primary and secondary products, as the statistics show. We have all heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) brag about this wherever he goes. I do not blame him because we are all proud of it. But think of the extra $10 in every $100 that we would have got from the country south of us, a country which never imports enough from us and which was restricted from importing from us because we did not get our $1.10 for every dollar's worth of raw materials and secondary products that we drew from mother earth.

I wish to say a word about something else which appeared in the speech from the throne. There were two or three paragraphs about plenipotentiaries and what they had done. For 12,000,000 people, we have done a good deal, and I respect my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacKinnon) for the great work that he did in South Africa. A good job was also done in Canberra, Australia, and in New Zealand, by all our agencies overseas. These are necessary in an exporting country. But I sometimes think we have pretty well reached the saturation point for plenipotentiaries and that we, a nation of 12,000,000 people, should be a little more cautious in expressing ourselves to 2,200,000,00 people.

I want to endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) with regard to pensions for returned men. I bring to the attention of the house in common with him that the cost of living has gone up and that something should be done about these pensions and done quickly. I also endorse what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) in that regard, and by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), particularly with regard to non-pensioned widows. The money is in the treasury. We are extracting it from the Canadian people on a wartime basis, although we are supposed to be on a peacetime basis, and the money will come back to us. Let us be fair to those who served us during the time of war, and let us look after them quickly in the matter of pensions and keep them so much better satisfied.

With regard to housing, I think of my hon. friend the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Warren). Coming as I did from lot 3, concession D, Scarboro, from a little farm many years ago, I should like to see many more of our people go back to these little farms. There are thousands of very fine homes, particularly in Ontario, which need just a little rehabilitation, in which families could be established.

In that connection I wish to make another suggestion arising out of what happens in the Montreal area. I saw a question on the order paper by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), asking what the transport board is doing to give a steam railway service into metropolitan centres like Montreal and Hamilton, so that those living some miles away from the large industrial centres where they work might be able to get in and out of the city without crowding the streetcar and bus lines, such as there are around the island of Montreal.

Speaking of the transport board, I want to make a little suggestion regarding my own constituency. We have there a level crossing and 100,000 people live within three-quarters of a mile radius of that crossing. It is on the main line of the Canadian National Railways. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) to do everything he possibly can, by way of the railway grade separation fund and through his transport commissioners, to eliminate the hazard of that crossing. Two weeks ago today a young man from Montreal left my home at two o'clock to go to the hospital to visit one of my family, and he wanted to take my family with him. But I said "No, you go on ahead in your own car because you have other business to attend to afterwards, and I will take the streetcar to my office". Fifteen minutes later, when the crossing gates were not closed because the caretaker had gone to get some coal, this young man's car was hit by an engine travelling forty miles an hour and was thrown twenty-five feet in the air. Fortunately he was not killed. My own family might have been in that car if I had not taken the streetcar. I point out the hazard which that crossing is to 100,000 people, including a lot of school children who have to cross Woodbine avenue in my constituency. My constituency has never had and has never asked for enough improvement of this kind from this great parliament of Canada for a quarter of a century and in the meantime the population of my constituency has grown so fast that there are now four constituencies where it was my pleasure to represent one. We have the same little ding-dong Danforth station. You could not put fifty people in it to shelter them from the weather. We need a new station at Danforth to serve close to one-quarter of a million people.

We also need a public building in Danforth riding to house the income tax department. My hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) knows how important it is to get the income tax in. Why should a quarter of a million people have to go fifteen miles before they come to a government public building? I have a constituency to the right of me, a constituency to the left of me, a constituency in front of me, and lake Ontario to the south, and none of them has a public building. We require a public building for income tax, customs and excise, and all the other purposes for which a public building is used. Within the last ten or fifteen years scores of industries have been built up in that particular part of the city of Toronto.

While we are on railway matters, right across from Danforth station there is an acreage of five or six acres which is controlled by the Canadian National Railways and the board of transport commissioners. This acreage lies idle and has nothing on it but rubbish. It is at the corner of Main street and Danforth avenue, in the centre of that beautiful constituency. As I travel on the trains to Ottawa and Montreal, I see green lawns and trees and shrubs planted around many a railway station to make it look attractive, but that five acres is nothing but a garbage dump. I make this plea by way of Hansard, and with the indulgence of the house, to the railway officials who pay one dollar a year to the crown for that five acres. If it were turned over to the Gerrard-Danforth Businessmen's Association or to our Kiwanis, Rotary and Lions clubs, so that they could have the use of that five acres and beautify it and turn it into a community centre, which is so much needed by the youth of our city—it is the same old field where I learned to play hockey when I was ten or eleven years old, and which is now lying idle, covered with rubbish—it would be appreciated by the youth of our community and by all my constituents. I put that on the record in order that the suggestion may be given consideration and the red tape cut through to bring it about.

One further representation I do not really need to make on my own behalf, but I put it forward on behalf of the new Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg). I am very happy in the choice that was made to fill his portfolio. I am sure that he has an understanding heart for the veterans. I do not know who else might have been given the post; but, now that he has the responsibility, I want to say through you, sir, and with his indulgence, that in an emergency, the emergency being the overcrowding of Christie Street hospital, the East General hospital gave services to those coming back among them, as the minister and his predecessor well know, to the extent of 171,699 patient-days until the Sunnybrook hospital was ready. Unfortunately these voluntary workers spent more money than they received. They lost $105,998 in servicing 171,699 patient-days. They were happy to do it. It was a privilege and pleasure for the whole community to wait on the patients and see that they got four meals a day. The girls in the bible classes played cribbage and other games with them; they sang with them, played cards with them, and were happy to do it. The hon. member for Wellington South knows all about it. He knows what a beautiful institution we had there. Of course the bloom was knocked off it. We are not asking anything for the bloom that was taken off one of the finest institutions in Canada. But we are asking the minister—and I say it now for the benefit of the members of the cabinet who may be members of the treasury board—to give some consideration to this loss. After reviewing and auditing the statements, you came to the conclusion that you owed us $44,000. I am asking the treasury board and all the juniors who read Hansard, to think about those private citizens who are out of pocket $44,000 after an audit, which is the responsibility of this institution, and that they give it consideration in order that we may clear that statement up and be happy about the service which we have been able to render.

I appreciate the opportunity I have had to mention this. I feel a little humble at this time. This is the first time in many years that I have said anything on behalf of my own constituents, and it is the first time in years that I have asked for something on their behalf. I hope that I am one who, when he asks for something, believes he should have it. I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to my hon. friends in the cabinet and to those who are responsible in any degree, that anything I have suggested or asked for, I feel I am sound in my request, sound in my judgment; and until such time as they can show reason why they will not acquiesce in these requests, from now until that time, I am determined that some consideration shall be given to the constituency of Danforth.

(Translation):

Mr. PIERRE GAUTHIER (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, you have no doubt noticed, that after a shower, storm-tossed clouds gradually melt away and finally let a sunbeam filter through which sets the human mind at rest. Just now we were caught up in a storm, marked by a shower of epithets, into which the previous speaker rushed fearlessly and, with your help, Mr. Speaker, he managed to restore peace. As he spoke, the clouds vanished, and now that he is through, you will allow the sun which usually follows, to shine once more—tonight in the shape of the beautiful, sweet, noble, delectable French language.

Mr. MICHAUD: Hear, hear!

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of the address, the hon. member for Lake St. John-Roberval (Mr. Dion) whose eloquence, which flows like a flashing stream, we thoroughly enjoyed. We derived no less enjoyment from the fruit which he described to us with perfect knowledge and as ably as a painter with his brush. I compliment him for having uttered choice and convincing words first toward the house which he was addressing and for having spoken with the dignity which characterizes him, and secondly for having spoken convincing words on behalf of those who do him the honour of electing him as their representative in this house. Those who sit here have no doubt recognized the truth of his allegations and noted the moderation with which he views things and, especially, the eloquence of the words by which he expressed his deep gratitude to the people who have done him the honour I mentioned a few moments ago.

I cannot but make a special mention of the seconder of the address, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey). I listened to him with attention and I especially appreciated what he said in my own language. As we are now going on with the same debate, permit me, Mr. Speaker, to quote the following excerpt from his speech:

> Mr. Speaker, my election to this parliament will, I believe, afford me, among other privileges, an exceptional opportunity to appreciate and improve my knowledge of fellow citizens whose language I speak with, of course, great difficulty, but among whom, I am happy to say, I have close and valuable friends.

There you have evidence of what broad-mindedness is needed to achieve co-operation between the citizens living within the four corners of this wonderful country. I am sure this example will be followed by all those who do not entirely share our views and opinions or who cannot speak our language, so that we may achieve the measure of understanding which we so badly need, which the whole of Canada so deeply needs to remain a great country, to become greater if possible, and to hold the place assigned to it by Providence in the course of past and coming centuries.

The following statement is found in the first paragraph of the speech from the throne:

> In many countries, political and social unrest is serious. Failure to agree on peace settlements with Germany and Austria is preventing the recovery of Europe.

No wonder such a situation exists, especially when, in many countries, the powers that be entirely lack good faith and, instead of striving to spread among the nations of the world a spirit of goodwill necessary for an enduring peace, seek rather to promote a dubious philosophy, philosophy they seek to spread the world over, so as to achieve an aim envisioned by the followers of that theory since its inception: to crush under its iron heel humanity which yearns only for peace and mutual understanding.

We are surprised at the delay in the signing of peace treaties. But such delay is only normal. See what is happening in Europe and in several countries I could mention. After the war, Russia got more in the way of war reparations than was obtained by any other allied country from the nations which fought under the swastika. Russia received larger reparations than some countries which have probably suffered more than she did. Further, not content with accepting, taking, extracting from these countries the amount of money required, Russia bleeds them white, throws their industries out of gear, undermines their culture and, to reward them, tries to spread within their borders the questionable philosophy of communism which I mentioned at the beginning of my speech. Such is the reward bestowed by the hammer and sickle.

Another paragraph of the speech from the throne reads as follows:

> In view of the price fixed for the 1948-1949 crop year under the wheat agreement with the United Kingdom, you will be asked to consider a measure to provide for an increase in the initial payment to producers.

If my understanding is correct, this means that we will be asked to pay western wheat growers a certain sum of money because under the British agreement they did not get a fair price for their wheat. The eastern farmers will be good fellows as usual and, through their representatives who will co-operate with the western members, they will compensate those who claim that they have been plundered—strong language, perhaps, but this is how I feel at present. As I say, we shall be good fellows, but I hope that when the time comes to take steps that will benefit our Eastern farmers and workers, those same Western farmers will also be good fellows by asking their representatives to act as we did, and will not hesitate to comfort our farmers with grateful words. The Western farmers will understand that if they sometimes find themselves in a critical position, the Eastern farmers also have to cope with similar difficulties, especially as far as the dairy industry is concerned. In that connection, we hope our farmers will receive the same consideration as Western producers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): The other day I mentioned a project put forth by an official of the Quebec Department of Agriculture; the same idea has been advocated by the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell) who described it as a wheat or grain bank. I feel it is an apt description and I am pleased to accept it. I hope our Western brothers will support us when we officially request that the Government or the Department of Agriculture help our Eastern farmers, by providing them, all year round, with the grain they do not produce or do not grow in sufficient quantity, so that they will not have to await the freight cars that are often late in arriving, and will not be at the mercy of the Winnipeg Pool, of the Grain Exchange or any other concern.

I quote another paragraph found in the speech from the throne:

> You will be asked to consider plans for a low rental housing project for veterans.

This I fully endorse, Mr. Speaker. I feel that our veterans are entitled to every consideration since they risked everything to save democracy and Christianity as well as to prevent national socialist or fascist ideas from taking root in our country. Heaven grant that we be spared the need of resorting to similar methods in order to stop communist ideas from spreading in our country, following the activities we have uncovered and which I shall discuss again later. However, we must think not only of our veterans but of the rest of the population, of all those who are homeless.

At long last, let them build homes for our people. In the province of Quebec, especially, veterans as others, have families of five to ten children or more. What good, therefore, are those tiny postwar houses? Despite the legislation designed to promote harmony between industry and labour and between large and small farm producers, true co-operation will not be achieved among our people unless they are provided with decent shelters for their families. Many of the dwellings built after the war are by far too small for large families. Why not be realistic? Thank God, in the province of Quebec large families are not and will not for a long time yet be things of the past. We are not depending upon immigration to increase our population and, as I said before, we need houses large enough to provide our families with a decent standard of living.

If the bill passes or when private builders and building concerns are granted housing contracts, I hope that the plans approved by the government will take into account large families which are also to be found in other provinces. They are very numerous in Quebec, but I know they also exist in the other provinces. Such plans should therefore be suitable for all the provinces in this dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): Let me read another paragraph of the speech from the throne:

> A measure similar to the one introduced at the last session of parliament to provide more effective machinery for the adjustment of differences between employers and employees will be submitted for your consideration.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if recrimination on the part of both employers and employees is of the kind we have been hearing tonight, such co-operation is very unlikely to prevail. I am not used to hearing very bitter discussions between industrialists in my county, and I am grateful for it.

My constituency is half-agricultural, half-industrial. I believe that the agricultural element is the larger of the two, but nevertheless one will find there a mining region which is unfortunately closed down as an aftermath of the war. The quarrying industry is flourishing in two districts, at Rivière-à-Pierre and Saint Marc, whence comes the limestone of which I have spoken. Portneuf has roofing and kraft paper industries at Portneuf Station and at Pont Rouge, plus two newsprint plants, one at Saint Raymond, the other at Donnacona.

We are not used to strikes in my constituency. To my knowledge, we have had but one strike. That lasted one week and was settled to the satisfaction of both parties, as far as I know.

I do not remember any strike ever having taken place at Saint Raymond. There was one at Donnacona, and it lasted only one day. At the present time I may say that the lowest salary paid there, that is to the labourer, is 85 cents per hour. The most perfect co-operation exists between industry and labour. We have but one labour union, the "syndicats catholiques" which, I believe, have more than 800 members. There is perfect agreement between the company's management, civil cause—I say so with some reluctance but with the knowledge that it is true—because there and church authorities and labour leaders. The company even affords advantages to those workers who wish to join the union. Why does it do so, some one may ask? Simply because before letting any disagreement come to a head, they meet, negotiate and manage to come to terms. Strikes do not occur when things are done that way.

Why do not like conditions always prevail in other parts of this country? Simply beare people who profit from strikes, who seek to divert workers from their jobs by turning them against their employers, because it fits in with their design—I do not hesitate to say it—their design to foment revolution. That is perhaps premature in Canada; I sincerely hope so, but in other countries, talk of revolution was sometimes thought premature but it burst upon them like a hail-storm.

At Donnacona or anywhere else in my riding, there are no trouble-makers, in other words no communists. That is why we have no strikes. We have people who were not born in our constituency, people who were born in other countries. They are not trouble-makers, they are good citizens who get along well with native Canadians. Why? Because they do not entertain dubious philosophies, because they know they have the right to work, and they are not unaware that if they have rights, they also have duties to perform.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): And, because both employers and employees understand their rights and duties, there is co-operation between them and these good people's sole ambition is to live in peace together and to secure for their families, whether large or small, the necessary food and clothing, the degree of welfare which every human being is entitled to in this world.

That is why strikes are unknown in my district. This condition is due to the full understanding and co-operation which mark industry and labour relations. Tonight I was anxious to pay this tribute to the fine county of Portneuf which I have represented for nearly twenty-one years. There was, it is true, a nine-month gap but I have forgotten it and I have continued to serve those who do me the honour of electing me.

In the speech from the throne mention is also made of the proposed amendment to the Indian Act. I shall only make a few brief remarks on this subject, and I ask the government to review the situation of Indians in Canada most closely and from all angles. Among other things, I request that in the case of any given area, when a religious denomination has a majority and the establishment of a hospital, or a first aid station is contemplated, the government should at least send to that area physicians, nurses and attendants of the same faith as the majority in the locality. I feel that such a request is only fair.

Mr. BRUNELLE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, not long ago it was reported in the press that some immigrants had found their way into this country using spurious passports. The latter, which they had obtained in England, were English passports illegally secured in the name of British subjects born in the British isles; and, with such spurious passports, these illegal immigrants violated this land of ours and well intended to remain here. It is our reasonable right and privilege to ask ourselves what kind of citizens these gentlemen could have become here in Canada. There surely were reasons for their not being able to enter legally; however, I shall not deal with them at length tonight, but I may be given an occasion of discussing them later on, in another debate.

Under the circumstances, it therefore affords me great pleasure to very heartily congratulate the hon. the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Glen) on his firm stand with respect to these immigrants.

Mr. MICHAUD: Hear, hear!

Mr. GAUTHIER: And I trust that he will continue—to quote an expression much in use amongst French Canadians—to stand up and resist the influences which will no doubt make themselves felt on behalf of these illegal immigrants, and that he will not rest—no more than we will in fact—until they have gone back where they belong.

Once again I hope that the Minister of Immigration will remain adamant and that the arguments and reasons he has advanced in support of the firm stand he has taken will be accepted by all.

Canada, he says, has provided for the entry of a considerable number of displaced persons from Europe, of which a large proportion, having been examined and accepted, are patiently waiting for the necessary transport facilities. It would be inconceivable that advantage be taken of these people by a recourse to illegal means. Any other decision would not only be unfair, but would encourage these people to again resort to the same tactics and to benefit financially and otherwise from such illegal ventures.

Again I am not the only one to congratulate the minister. I am sure that the Canadian people will also give him credit for his courage in taking this attitude which I feel he will preserve until justice has been done in this particular case.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): In fact, current events justify the minister and his officials for being adamant in the choice of immigrants to whom Canadian citizenship is to be granted.

I have here a picture taken from the Montreal Gazette of February 13, 1948. An accompanying article tells of the seizure by provincial and city police of certain documents, lottery tickets which show that the communist party is not to be found only in Moscow or in the Cominform, the new organization set up in lieu of the Comintern. Those lottery tickets came from Italy. This picture shows first Tim Buck, of Toronto, leader of the Labour Progressive party, and, just under, one of those lottery tickets, the proceeds of which were to be used for the consolidation of the Italian republic. Lower down, I read these words which I translate as I go along: "This subscription is in favour of the Italian communist party to promote elections to the national assembly. In spite of my limited knowledge of the Italian language, I can give a literal translation. We are fully justified, Mr. Speaker, in asking that the Immigration Department or division be more adamant in these matters. Those lottery tickets were surely smuggled somehow into Canada. In Montreal, they were distributed in several places. There is evidence that the communist party is supplying funds for the Italian elections next April. Are we not justified in asking the authorities, federal, provincial and municipal to be on the alert and to work untiringly in order to unearth the subversive propaganda with which we are literally swamped in Canada? I am not afraid to speak frankly. Those documents have been seized, but how many more are circulating in the country and in our homes.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that any or all of our government authorities will not stop investigating nor relax their vigilance and thus spare themselves our censure for their guilty weakness and apathy. In 1937, when I mentioned communist activities in this country, all I got was more or less derisive laughter from the house. That happened just a little over ten years ago and yet, today, in Canada, we find a communist party that styles itself labour progressive. What matters, however, is not its name but the fact that it has recognized leaders and is extremely active. I do not claim that we should ban these radicals in order to curb the party's activities in the most effective fashion, but I do contend that we must be well acquainted with the communist theory in order to fight it successfully. For Christians, the best way to oppose communism is to live a Christian life. We must not hesitate, even in public, to show that we are Christians, nor must we refrain from studying this questionable philosophy, for when we have become familiar with it, we shall be better equipped to fight it, the weapon of knowledge being even more effective than that of legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): The whole population, however, can perhaps not understand the rather obscure philosophy of Marx or Lenin. Others will have to explain their teachings. Nevertheless, let those who really believe in a sound democracy such as we acknowledge in Canada, come to the vanguard and make themselves the apostles of this theory. Let them not fear to draw a parallel between the communist doctrine and our sound democracy. With these methods, we shall surely triumph, and triumph all the more easily if, by judicious and fair legislation, we provide our people with the well-being which they have a right to expect.

(Text):

Mr. F. T. STANFIELD (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like, first of all, to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply upon the able manner in which they acquitted themselves. I am sure, if one may judge from their contribution to this debate, they have bright futures in the political life of our country.

Much has been said in this debate about wheat and hogs. In fact, some nights when I go home I fear that I shall dream of hogs and wheat. Therefore this evening I feel that I would be justified for a few moments if I were to set out the merits of the old province of Nova Scotia, and to say something about the fine people who live by the sea.

Nova Scotia is a pleasant spot indeed in which to live; and the people who live there are the finest to be found anywhere on this globe. They live in a very happy and pleasant way. Contrary to what many people think, especially to what you may read in some papers, most Nova Scotians live in lovely homes. They are proud of their homes and they take great interest in them. They have civic pride in their properties and they keep them in the best repair possible. I think the homes in Nova Scotia compare favourably with those in any other part of Canada.

The people of Nova Scotia enjoy life. They do not chase the dollar quite as hard as do the people of Ontario and Quebec. When they want to go fishing, they go fishing; when they want to play golf, they play golf; when they want to dance, they go to a dance, and they have the privilege of dancing with as many beautiful, gifted and charming ladies as there are any place else in the world.

A lot of people think that we are paupers there, that we are poor financially. I am quite willing to admit that there are other parts of the world which are more prosperous than we are, that possess more of this world's goods, but those people do not enjoy life any more than we do. We have never had to ask for a great deal of assistance. I should like to point out to some of these western bronchos who do so much talking about wheat and hogs that a few years ago when the price of wheat and hogs was not so high as it has been of late years many of the towns in Nova Scotia sent carload after carload of clothing and other things out to the people who were suffering from such hard times in the west. We have a great fondness for western Canada because many Nova Scotians have gone out there to settle.

The people of Nova Scotia are very thrifty and conservative by nature. You understand, sir, that I use the word "conservative" to denote their thriftiness, not their politics. We in Nova Scotia are proud of our educational system. We have Dalhousie University; we have Acadia University and we have St.

Francis Xavier University. Then there is King's College, which is really affiliated with Dalhousie. We educate our people down there in order that they can help to build up the rest of the world. Perhaps it is too bad that many of our people leave the province, but Nova Scotians are great people to roam. They like to go away and see the world. Everywhere you go you will find Nova Scotians and you will find also that most of them have done very well indeed.

Just a word about our countryside, our picturesque scenery. We have heard a great deal about the scenery in Ontario and British Columbia, but I do not think the countryside of Nova Scotia has to take a back seat to any area. Let me tell you that it makes you feel good to be alive to take a drive along the Dartmouth lakes on a fine, bright autumn afternoon, when the leaves of the hardwood trees have turned to red. Then there is another lovely drive from Hawkesbury to Hastings. When you go through there in the evening just as the sun is about to set you would almost think you were in Switzerland. Then there is another lovely scenic drive around Cabot trail. I think all who have taken that drive will agree that the scenery is picturesque. In fact our province is just one picture after another. I invite those who do not believe me to come down to see for themselves.

The climate of Nova Scotia is quite bad in the spring and we can offer no excuses. We are not very proud of that weather, but for the other nine months of the year the climate is most delightful. At times it may have its drawbacks, but most of the time it will compare favourably with the climate in any other part of the world, yes, even in Ottawa.

We have good roads in Nova Scotia. Perhaps we have to thank the Liberal government for them. I hate to do it, but that is the fact. All our main trunk roads are paved with asphalt. We have no four-lane highways like there are in Ontario and Quebec, but our main roads are all paved and our secondary roads are rapidly being paved. The province of Nova Scotia is a natural set-up for the tourist trade.

It may be said that we have not sufficient tourist accommodation in the province. Let me mention some of the best. There is a grand summer hotel at White Point beach; then there is The Pines at Digby, and then there is the Keltic Lodge in Cape Breton. Those tourist resorts are as fine as you will find any place, and we are proud of them. Additional hotels and tourist camps are being erected all the time. I am certain that Nova Scotia has a very bright future as far as the tourist trade is concerned, and in saying that I am not forgetting that we have enjoyed a very good tourist business in the past. However, with our good roads, our lovely climate and our hospitable people, I am sure our tourist business will continue to grow.

As I said before, I realize that perhaps there are more prosperous places in Canada than Nova Scotia, and I should like to point out a few ways in which I think our province could be helped to better its economic position. I am not one of those who believe that Nova Scotia should not have entered confederation. I believe our place is in confederation, but perhaps we should have received better treatment. Some of the fault may lie with ourselves because we are not as aggressive as we might be; but, be that as it may, we have not received as much consideration as we should have.

For instance, in order to get to the island of Cape Breton you have to cross about a mile of water. There are about 150,000 people on the island of Cape Breton and they have to go back and forth on a ferryboat. I believe, and so do most Nova Scotians, that a bridge should be built across the strait of Canso to connect the island of Cape Breton with the mainland. It is my belief that if 150,000 people were living on an island in lake Ontario, separated from the mainland by only a mile of water, they would have had a bridge long ago. We may be told that it would cost a lot of money to build that bridge because of the swiftness of the water and ice conditions in the spring of the year. That is true, but I am sure that the difficulties are not insuperable, and bridges have been built over harder places than the strait of Canso. Suppose it does cost $15,000,000. Today we have become so accustomed to talking in terms of hundreds of millions of dollars that $15,000,000 in comparison seems very small.

I would also suggest to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) that a faster train service be provided between Montreal and Halifax. I know you cannot change geography, but the time can be shortened that it takes a train to go from Montreal to Halifax. I realize that the roadbed from Montreal to Halifax is not as good as that between Montreal and Chicago and that the Halifax train cannot, therefore, make as fast time, but I have a suggestion to make to the minister which would speed up the service. Instead of running three trains around to Campbellton and away down the St. Lawrence river, I suggest that one train, after it leaves Moncton, be routed over the Grand Trunk Pacific and go through Fredericton, Edmundston and on to Montreal. I understand that this route would shorten the running time by four or five hours between Montreal and Halifax. I would also point out that the people of Fredericton and Edmundston and all the way along that line have a very poor train service to Montreal, just as poor as anything could be. If my suggestions were adopted, not only would the running time between Montreal and Halifax be shortened by four or five hours, but these places which I mentioned would have a first-class rail service to and from Montreal. The other two trains could run over the present route to serve that traffic. I believe that the people of Moncton and the province of Nova Scotia are entitled to ask the Minister of Transport to look carefully into this suggestion to see if it is not feasible.

There is one subject on which there has been no discussion at all in this house, and it is that of our great forest industry and allied industries. It comes next in importance to agriculture combined with our dairying industry. I realize that our forests are in the care of the province, but still it is the duty of every citizen of Canada—and this house is a very important body of Canadian citizens—to look after the welfare of our forests. The forests of Nova Scotia have been greatly depleted in the last twenty years; yet they are of untold value to our province; and, while selective cutting, reforestation and the care of our forests are in the hands of the provincial government, it is my conviction that this government should do everything it can to foster and speed up the care of our forests. They are the second greatest form of wealth we have across Canada and are being depleted by fire, insects and ruthless cutting. The forests are vanishing more quickly than they should be. But with proper cutting and reforestation practices we would have in Nova Scotia enough lumber to last us forever. I think 500,000,000 feet of lumber are being cut lately every year, besides pulpwood, hardwood, et cetera, from the forests of our province. If we took as good care of our forests as Sweden and other countries do, our children would never need to worry about the income to be derived from the forest wealth of our province.

There is another way in which our province could be helped. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) has been speaking on behalf of the marshlands for many years. These lands have practically gone to waste, from many causes into which I shall not go at the moment. But when you see elsewhere in the province small farms being settled on land suitable for growing only a few spruce trees and then see those rich marshlands flooded out and the buildings falling down on the adjacent upland, with only a few cattle here and there trying to pick up a living, I sometimes wonder what is the matter. The marshlands cannot be reclaimed by the settlers or farmers themselves because it takes heavy machinery to do it. In the old days that work was all done by hand. In 1750, the Tantramar marshes under the French settlers were built. They were assisted by prison labour brought out from France. They did not know what a steam shovel was; all they had was oxen and a hand shovel. But today we have bulldozers and all the necessary equipment for rehabilitating those marshlands. I am afraid, however, that the marshlands constitute more or less of a political football, and I am not blaming the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), because I believe he is sympathetic toward rehabilitating those lands.

I should like to say a word or two on the deficiency of the United States dollar, a situation into which we run every ten or twelve years. I believe we should have a long-term national policy whereby we could make in Canada a great many of the articles we now import from the United States, thereby building up our country and providing more employment for our people. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that some of these industries be established in Nova Scotia. We shall welcome the help of the dominion government in having new industries established in our province. Somebody may say that these industries could not be run down there. I should like to point out that in Nova Scotia there are many industries which have prospered for many years and sold their products across this fair land of ours. I can assure this house that industry can be run profitably in Nova Scotia. Therefore I would ask the house to lend us its support to see if some of these industries cannot be established in Nova Scotia to make the products that we have been buying across the border so that the deficiency in United States dollars will not keep on recurring.

I think I have spoken for twenty minutes, Mr. Speaker, and that is a long time for me; therefore I shall take my seat.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have all enjoyed the speech of the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Stanfield) telling us of the beauties of the maritimes. I can agree with him. I have had an opportunity of visiting the maritimes several times during the last two or three years and I know of no place in Canada where there are more beautiful scenes than in that part of the country. I would say it would be a very good trip for any Canadian to spend a week or two in the maritimes in the fall of the year when everything looks so beautiful down there.

However, the hon. member for Colchester-Hants is not quite so optimistic as the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) with respect to the maritimes. He realizes that they have difficulties down there and thus it is necessary for some action to be taken to solve some of these difficulties. The senior member for Halifax apparently thinks the difficulties are all solved and when other hon. members from the maritimes suggest that there are still things which might be done down there he chides them and indicates that everything is quite all right.

Mr. ISNOR: Like yourself, they do not know conditions.

Mr. WRIGHT: It was amusing to me to read an editorial in his own paper, the Halifax Chronicle, printed on the day that he made his speech in the house. I think I should put it on the record, because it does not bear out what the hon. member said here. In fact it says this:

> Some Cheer Would be Welcome
> In his press interview of last week end the Right Hon. C. D. Howe ran the gamut of the political octave in respect to Nova Scotia with remarkable optimism, and made a number of very plain statements. Specifically, to the question as to whether he had anything to say to cheer the citizens of Halifax, in view of the prevailing unemployment situation, the Minister of Trade and Commerce queried whether any cheer is necessary and suggested that a considerable number of our unemployed are seasonal workers who have alternative means of getting a living when their normal trade is slack.
> National employment service here could probably disillusion Mr. Howe on this point. There are, admittedly, odd jobs here and there that men can take. But they do not fill the dinner pail, and they come nowhere near to the point of absorbing even temporarily the total number of unemployed. Over the week end, according to officials of the freight handlers' union, not a single stevedore or freight-handler was employed on the waterfront at the time of year when work should be most plentiful. A lack of steel has thrown many out of work at the shipyards. Men with skills such as these unemployed have are hardly the types that ought to be set to work shovelling snow. That is like putting an unemployed architect to work laying bricks.
> The trouble at bottom is that, while these men are losing work, the province is in some danger of losing industries which have been built up painfully during the war. That is not merely a local problem. It is one which, if not rectified soon, will have permanent repercussions on various branches of industry all over the country in the future. It is the part of wise statesmanship to foresee such tendencies and to take steps to forestall them. Mere optimism will solve none of our problems here or elsewhere. We need wise planning and fast action.

That is exactly what the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) was suggesting in this house. To solve some of the problems in that part of the country, it is necessary to take action and to take action immediately. The senior member for Halifax said that certain western members had gone to the maritimes to tell the farmers there how to make money. I can assure the hon. member that the farmers of the maritimes know their business quite well enough without having to take any advice from farmers from any other part of the country. They are quite efficient in their methods of operation. If they had not been they would not have stayed in business during the thirties.

In my conversations with farmers in the maritimes, I found them very much the same as farmers all over Canada. All they ask for is an even break in this economy of ours, and they are prepared to do their bit in providing the food that is necessary. They, along with farmers all over Canada, are anxious about the present situation. When they find that ceilings have been placed on the goods which they have to sell, while no controls are placed over many of the things they have to buy, is it not enough for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to rise in his place and say, as he did the other day, that we have in this country a guarantee in the form of an Agricultural Prices Support Act that will guarantee in the future that agricultural prices will be maintained at a stable level. The Minister of Agriculture said as reported at page 807 of Hansard the other day:

> The policy which protects the consumer is sound because we have said in the prices support legislation that if the time ever comes when the bottom falls out of prices we will ask every taxpayer in this country to help to the extent provided in the Agricultural Prices Support Act, that is, $200 million, to maintain the price levels.

The Minister of Agriculture knows quite well that is an act set up for the purpose of maintaining floor prices under agricultural products during the transitional period; it sets out quite clearly in the act that it is an act to protect prices during the transitional period from war to peace. When these subsidies are all removed and we are through the transitional period, at the very time when it will be necessary to give some support to agriculture this act, according to its own words which will be found in another place in Hansard, will be ultra vires, if maintained at any other time than during the transitional period. That is one of the points which we in this group have been urging on the government. We have been asking them to make this legislation permanent legislation and provide that these floor prices will be maintained when they are needed.

On motion of Mr. Wright the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I know the Minister of Finance is ready on Monday with both Bill No. 3 and Bill No. 7, dealing with the gold subsidy. There have been requests from many members of the house on both sides that the latter bill be taken up at an early date. The Minister of Finance is not here today. He had official duties that called him elsewhere, and I am sorry not to be able to say in which order he intends to proceed, but he is ready with both of them for Monday. I hope that the order which he will select will be one that will be convenient to hon. members.

Mr. GREEN: Either Bill No. 3 or Bill No. 7?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Both are ready. There were some hopes that both might be disposed of, but I am not able to say which order he will prefer.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 16, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SINCLAIR—TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MEMBERS BETWEEN RESIDENCE AND OTTAWA

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson), myself, and every member in the house who comes from a distance to attend parliament. At the beginning of the last session we went to the accountant of the House of Commons and submitted our travelling expenses, along with receipts, in accordance with the Senate and House of Commons Act, section 43(1) of which states:

> For each session of parliament, there shall also be allowed to each member of the Senate and of the House of Commons his actual moving or transportation expenses, and reasonable living expenses while on the journey between his place of residence and Ottawa, going and coming, once each way.

When we applied to the House of Commons accountant for payment of those expense accounts we were informed that Your Honour had ruled our accounts out of order. No reason was given, but the inference was that because we travelled by air our accounts were not in order.

I submit that the House of Commons Act makes no limitations as to the type of transportation to be used. When the first British Columbia members came here they came by sailing ship to San Francisco, across the continent by rail and then north by stage, for a matter of twenty-six days. Since that time we have had rail transportation; and since the advent of the Trans-Canada air lines, cabinet ministers, businessmen and civil servants have travelled back and forth by air. But we have been limited to travel by rail. If Your Honour will examine the public accounts for 1944 you will find that one Vancouver member travelled by air and at Easter adjournment in 1946 and 1947 members travelled by air. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) informs me that he regularly travels by air and his accounts are approved. For the pre-Christmas session, the British Columbia members who travelled by rail had to spend eight days travelling to attend a session lasting eleven days. Moreover, those who went home by rail arrived only the day before Christmas.

We suffer enough by being absent from our homes for six months without having to drag ourselves across the continent by rail, and as a member of parliament I request that Your Honour give the reason which you gave to the accountant of the House of Commons as to why the expense accounts for the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and myself were refused.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may be assured that due consideration will be given to the matter.

Mr. SINCLAIR: With all due respect, you have already made your decision. I am only asking that as a member of parliament I be afforded the same courtesy as is given the accountant of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the attention of the hon. member to a very well known rule, that the Speaker should not be questioned from the floor of the house. I have noted the remarks made by the hon. member, and he may be assured that due consideration will be given them.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONS AND STUDENT TRAINING ALLOWANCES —STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the house with respect to pensions and student veterans' training allowances.

On the 19th December, 1947, I made a statement in this house respecting veterans pensions in the course of which I said that "in the case of disabled veterans and pensioned widows, the government will introduce legislation during the present session of parliament to amend the Pension Act, in order to provide for an increase in rates of compensation", and that such "increases will be made effective as of October 1, 1947".

During the recess of parliament the government continued to give careful consideration to the adequacy of the pensions in respect of disability and death, and particularly to the provision for dependents. Representations were received from the national organizations of ex-service men and women, and the entire situation was reviewed by the Department and by the government.

I am pleased to announce that a bill to amend the Pension Act is now virtually ready for introduction. I am prepared at once to give in outline what the government intends to propose:

(a) The basic scale of pensions for total disability and death will be increased and, for all ranks up to and including that of captain, the compensation will be at a rate in excess of that at present being paid on behalf of captains.

(b) The additional pension which is being paid on behalf of the wives and children of disability pensioners, and the children of pensioned widows, will be substantially increased, as will the awards to orphan children.

(c) The maximum award to the eligible parent or parents of a member of the forces who has died will be correspondingly increased.

With the consent of the house I shall now table a schedule reflecting the upward adjustments I have outlined. It is estimated that these adjustments over present rates will involve a total increase in cost of approximately $12,000,000.

These increased rates will, to a greater or lesser degree, affect over 400,000 persons and in accordance with my original announcement, will be effective from October 1, 1947. The government is anxious to have these retroactive payments made as early as possible. Although everything possible will be done to enable this to be accomplished, it will necessarily be a matter of some weeks, after authority is received, before the adjustment cheques can be ready.

The government has also been giving close and sympathetic consideration to the position of veterans in training, both vocational and university. It has been decided to change the schedule of training rates to provide increases to married veterans, and to those with dependents, in conformity with the rates in this schedule which I now table.

The effect of these increases will be as follows: A married veteran while taking training will receive $90 per month instead of $80. In addition, there will be payable on behalf of the first child $18 instead of $12, and for the second child $14, with proportionate increases for succeeding children, so that a married veteran with three children will receive $134 per month instead of $114. In addition to these rates, tuition fees will continue to be paid.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The increased rates are effective as from January 1, 1948. It is hoped that the increases will overcome many of the difficulties being experienced by married veteran students.

Mr. PEARKES: Is provision being made for increases under the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act are still under study, and the proposals will be completed before the end of the present week.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question based upon his announcement that legislation is proposed with respect to an increase in veterans' pensions and allowances. I understand that the increases cannot be made effective until the legislation has passed through parliament. If that is so, may I suggest to the Prime Minister that when the legislation is brought in we give it priority. We give priority to veterans generally, and I think we should give priority to this legislation.

Mr. GREEN: A further question along the same line: Is it the intention to send that amendment to the Pension Act to the special committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To send which amendment?

Mr. GREEN: Is it the intention to send to the special committee being set up to consider veterans affairs the bill amending the Pension Act?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot give an answer at the moment, but I will have a reply later.

[Later:]

Mrs. STRUM: The Prime Minister mentioned married student veterans. Does that mean there will be no increase in the allowances to the unmarried man or girl veteran?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can speak for the unmarried man; there will be none for him. My hon. friend, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, may speak for the ladies.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mrs. STRUM: Student veterans.

Mr. GREGG: It is correct; there is no increase indicated for the unmarried veteran.

Mrs. STRUM: Or the girls.

Mr. GREGG: Veterans, men or women.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): The Prime Minister indicated in his announcement that the increase in the veterans pension payments would total $12,000,000. Does that include the $7,500,000 he announced on December 19, or is it in addition to that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say to my hon. friend it does include it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE, GENEVA, 1947

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): In conformity with the provisions of article XIX of the constitution of the international labour organization I desire to table the authentic text of the conventions and recommendations adopted at the thirtieth session of the International Labour Conference at Geneva in June and July last; also copy of P.C. 287 setting out the legislative jurisdiction involved therein.

DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN HIS MAJESTY AND THE PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 12, I indicated to the house that I would examine the press articles referred to by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Hamel) in his question of that day in connection with the new letters patent governing the office of Governor General of Canada. I have now had an opportunity of doing so and also of reading a subsequent article published in Le Devoir on February 13. This last article bears the title: "Mr. St. Laurent quite annoyed at the leakage of the state secret."

I hope I did not display any annoyance—which I certainly did not feel—though I was concerned to find that there had been any leakage about confidential correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the secretary of His Majesty the King in his capacity as King of Canada. My concern was not over the contents of the correspondence but over the impropriety of publicity about something which, not only by tradition and by courtesy but also by proper constitutional practice, and even by the implication of the ministerial oaths of office, has always been and should be treated as highly confidential.

Of course it could be no secret that there must have been correspondence in connection with the new letters patent since it was apparent they were signed by His Majesty himself in London and authenticated under the Great Seal of Canada and countersigned by the Prime Minister of Canada in Ottawa. But the form and tenor of that correspondence was just as confidential as would have been their conversation if the Prime Minister of Canada had approached His Majesty in person at Buckingham Palace or elsewhere and the completion of the letters patent been arranged orally.

Nor was it any secret that though the terms of these letters patent made it legally possible for the governor general, on the advice of Canadian ministers, to exercise any of the powers and authorities of the crown in respect of Canada, without the necessity of submission being made to His Majesty, including among others, royal full powers for the issuance of letters of credence for Canadian ambassadors and foreign ministers, there was no legal necessity to alter existing practices and that it would be the responsibility of the government of Canada, in any prerogative matter affecting Canada, to determine whether the submission should go to His Majesty or to the governor general.

What I have just stated was made perfectly clear to the press by the Prime Minister on October 1, 1947. What gave me some concern is the publication of garbled and speculative accounts of when this correspondence is supposed to have been exchanged and what it is supposed to contain.

Though the publication of the correspondence would at once dispel all this, the government is not disposed to take that easy way of dispelling it, because at best it would be discourteous to His Majesty and because of its possible effect as a precedent on confidential exchanges of views between the sovereign and his responsible advisers in relation to public affairs prior to decisions or actions for which his advisers themselves and they only have full constitutional responsibility.

Le Devoir in its article of February 13 narrows its alleged disclosures to one assertion. After discussing the Prime Minister's communication to the press it says in so many words:

> The only new fact asserted by Le Devoir is the existence of a personal communication of the king expressing the desire that our ambassadors' letters of credence continue to be submitted to him for signature. It is precisely this royal communication which constitutes the state secret which it was desired to keep inviolate.

After making that assertion, the paper states:

> The Canadian people have the right to know if King George VI did express, in a communication to the Canadian government, a personal desire which would amount to an intrusion of the government of Great Britain in our foreign politics. The Canadian people also have the right to know if the king expressed this desire before the issuance of the new letters patent or only during the last weeks.

I feel I can say this much: There has been no communication whatsoever from His Majesty referring to the manner in which it would be agreeable to him to have letters of credence to Canadian ambassadors and ministers dealt with since May, 1947 and there has been no communication at any time which would amount to an intrusion by the government of Great Britain in our foreign politics.

Any suggestion that His Majesty may have been acting on advice of the United Kingdom ministers in the course of the correspondence with the Prime Minister of Canada about these letters patent is fantastic. I will merely recall, because it is too clear to require any comment, that the right to advise His Majesty in prerogative matters affecting Canada resides exclusively in the government of Canada.

The conference on the operation of dominion legislation held in London in 1929 to provide for the implementation of the declaration of the imperial conference of 1926, made the following declaration:

> It is the right of the government of each dominion to advise the Crown in relation to all matters relating to its own affairs.

The report of this conference was approved by the imperial conference of 1930.

This was followed by the statute of Westminster, 1931, which refers to the declarations and resolutions set forth in the reports of these conferences and makes the legislative provisions required to ratify, confirm and establish such of these declarations and resolutions as it was necessary to deal with by legislation.

The new letters patent in increasing the powers of the governor general represent a very significant constitutional advance in line with the declarations of the conferences and the statute of Westminster. To suggest that there has been anything whatsoever which could be regarded as retrogressive in connection therewith or in connection with the practices thereunder is absolutely unwarranted.

What I have already said disposes also of the assertion in the article of the Chicago Tribune referred to by the hon. member. With regard to the references in that article to the appointment of Mr. Edmond Turcotte, I need only say this: The correspondence relating to the new letters patent and to what was intended to be the practice thereunder took place several months before Mr. Turcotte's appointment. Moreover, Mr. Turcotte was not appointed ambassador or minister. He was appointed consul general, an appointment of a different character, which was made by order of His Excellency the Governor General in council on the 27th of October last.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MEMBERS ON RETURN TO HOUSE AFTER ILLNESS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been pleased to observe that the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) is in his seat today. I think I may venture to say, on behalf of all parties in the house, that we much regretted the indisposition which caused his absence from the house during the past ten days, and we are pleased indeed to see him again in his seat.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say that in this matter the Prime Minister speaks I think for all members of the house. I am glad to see the leader of the C.C.F. party back in his seat.

Mr. R. M. WARREN (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw attention to the fact that a friend of ours, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), who has been absent from the house for some time on account of illness, is with us again today. On behalf of the back benchers I wish to welcome him back to his place in this house.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE ON WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, to authorize the board to provide pensions for members, officers and employees and to make provision for the increase of the fixed minimum price on wheat deliveries; to extend the control of interprovincial movements of wheat products and to empower the governor in council to extend the present system to oats or barley.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO RENTAL CEILING INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether there is any truth in the statement in the press that the government is contemplating an increase in the present ceiling on housing accommodation?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Obviously the question is one of government policy, which will be announced in due course.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS IN HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour of which I have given him notice? The radio this morning announced that there were 7,500 unemployed in the city of Halifax, with a possible layoff of 2,000 more within the month. Has the minister been advised of this? Is his department taking any steps with regard to employment or relief measures in that city, and has he checked with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), who might have a solution?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the employment situation in certain sections of the maritimes, including Cape Breton, New Glasgow and Halifax, has been receiving special attention for several weeks past. The situation at Halifax has considerably worsened in the last few days on account of the sudden drop in shipping.

The rather unfavourable situation in the maritimes is explained by a number of circumstances. The freight traffic through the maritime ports has reached an all-time low since before the war.

Mr. FRASER: That is government policy for you.

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall not say what I might have said. The cut of logs for lumber has been lighter this year and lumbermen have not been in as great demand as heretofore. Shortages of material, especially steel, have affected work in the shipyards and layoffs have occurred. Other industries have also had to curtail on account of the shortage of material. On Saturday the Halifax shipyards laid off 300 men. For the first time since the war the textile plants report sufficient staff and there are no vacancies other than for skilled workers.

With regard to the immediate situation in Halifax city and county I was advised at noon today that there were registered in our Halifax office a total of 4,187 men and women seeking employment. That is a drop of 3,000 from my hon. friend's figure.

Mr. GILLIS: My figure came over the radio this morning.

Mr. MITCHELL: You cannot believe everything you hear, even over the radio. Unemployment insurance benefits were being paid to 2,728 of the persons registered for employment. This, of course, does not mean that some of the others who are not being paid are not eligible for benefits. They may have been laid off in the last few days. It simply means that in many cases they have not been out of work long enough to claim the benefits. In addition, there are 1,800 stevedores on the stevedores' register, and there were fewer than 400 working today. The department has been giving close attention to the situation particularly that which has existed in Cape Breton and New Glasgow. Men out of work, and some women too, have been offered free transportation to other parts of Canada. This offer has, in fact, been standing for several months. Up to date 2,632 persons have been moved by the department.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Never send another notice or you will get more of this.

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall tell the whole story, and leave nothing to the imagination.

While I am on the subject I should like to state that a good deal of construction is being planned in the maritimes. Halifax city has under consideration a housing project, of 300 units. A new pier and emigration shed at east Saint John is at the planning stage. East Saint John has a plan underway for a housing project.

Contracts have been let to the Saint John Dry dock company for a wharf construction job to cost $2,500,000. The provincial governments are planning for a heavy program of highway and bridge construction for the coming season. Two of the brickyards have closed down and are remodelling so that they can increase their production. The Nova Scotia power commission has announced a $5,000,000 program of hydro development. All of these things lead one to believe that the present situation is largely seasonal in character.

There are some very encouraging things that should be reported; for example, close to one million crates of New Brunswick seed potatoes have been shipped from the port of Saint John to Argentina and other South American countries during the past three months, the arrangements for which shipments were due to the activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

There has been a very brisk movement of maritime woodsmen to the United States for lumber work, and many Canadian workers have taken advantage of the offer of employment in the United States and will be returning with a considerable number of United States dollars.

An hon. MEMBER: That will help.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let us have some pleasure, gentlemen. We do not want all misery. I know my hon. friends opposite want misery; I like something constructive.

Mr. KNOWLES: We are getting it now.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are trying to get sunshine out of cucumbers.

Mr. MITCHELL: We are not getting any sunshine out of the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think you are, but perhaps you are not.

Mr. MITCHELL: Sardine fishermen landed record catches in 1947 and enjoyed a very successful year, due in part to the high December auction prices which brought double the usual prices.

Generally, labour management relations have been good. There has been no interruption of work in the coal or steel industry and, while several negotiations are under way at the present time I hope they will result in satisfactory agreements.

Mr. GRAYDON: What are hon. members applauding about?

Mr. HOMUTH: That settles the unemployment problem in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BRACKEN: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, arising out of the statement he has just made. As I listened to it I gathered that some 2,600 unemployed workers have left Nova Scotia to accept work elsewhere in Canada under the government's plan of assisting them to find work elsewhere. Will the minister state what period of time that movement of 2,600 workers covers?

Mr. MITCHELL: I would say about the last six months. I am speaking now from memory. I may say this to my hon. friend—and I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) will agree with me—that by the very nature of things during the war there was a heavy concentration of labour in Halifax. Inevitably when you change from a wartime to a peacetime economy there must be a shift of labour forces in that part of the country. I think that should also be taken into consideration.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the minister indicate later how many persons left Nova Scotia under that plan prior to the time the 2,600 left?

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the numbers, and where they went, perhaps tomorrow.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Minister of Labour a supplementary question with respect to the movement of labour from Nova Scotia? Does he not think that this would be a good time, when there is need of work in that part of the country, to begin construction of the Canso bridge?

HUMAN RIGHTS

REPLIES RECEIVED FROM PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL AND LAW SCHOOLS TO LETTER SENT OUT BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In regard to the replies which have been received since November 1 to the letters sent out by the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms to the attorneys general of the various provinces or to deans of law schools, will he table these replies?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Yes, some additional replies have come in, one as recently as three or four days ago. Tomorrow I shall table all the replies that have been received.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO BRAEFOOT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): Will the Minister of Veterans Affairs give an answer to the question I asked on January 27 regarding the appointment of a special committee to inquire into the Braefoot project?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the persons who are carrying out the investigation are meeting in Victoria today. I shall give the hon. member a further reply tomorrow.

BARBARA ANN SCOTT

WINNER OF EUROPEAN, OLYMPIC AND WORLD WOMEN'S FIGURE SKATING CHAMPIONSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair that before I put my question to the Prime Minister I should pay particular tribute to a lovely lady from Ottawa who has become the queen of the skating world, Barbara Ann Scott. As the member for an Ottawa seat, the one in which the Minto skating club is located; and also as the owner of the first pair of fancy skates worn by Barbara Ann Scott. I am proud indeed to pay tribute to the fairest lady of this country. My question to the Prime Minister is whether any suggestions have been made to him with regard to the tribute to be paid to Barbara Ann.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when Miss Barbara Ann Scott won the European championship and the Olympic championship I sent her a telegram on behalf of the government and people. Yesterday I sent another one to her, this time on the winning of the world championship. Hon. members would, I am sure, wish it to appear on Hansard. It is as follows:

Dear Barbara Ann: All Canada is prouder of you than ever. Once more warmest congratulations upon winning for the second time the world championship in figure-skating contests. Your triumph is shared by all your fellow-Canadians who now await your return to accord you a truly national welcome. I extend these congratulations on behalf of the government as well as on behalf of the people of Canada. In the world arena of sports you have indeed brought high honour to our country and to yourself.

W. L. Mackenzie King

I may say to my hon. friend that I have had some suggestions as to the recognition that might be given to Miss Scott when she returns; among others the communication from himself, received only a few minutes ago, and no doubt there will be other suggestions made. By the time Miss Scott returns I hope it may be possible to have general agreement on the form of recognition by the capital of Canada, representing the people of Canada, which it would be advisable she should receive.

Mr. McIVOR: I should like to ask another question. Would it be possible for her to appear before the House of Commons or the Senate?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I think I might promise to take my hon. friend and introduce him privately to her any time he wishes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): On Friday night there was some debate as to whether Bill No. 3 or Bill No. 7 would come on this afternoon. Will the Minister of Finance give even a tentative date when Bill No. 7 will be called? Will Bill No. 3 have to be concluded before Bill No. 7 is proceeded with?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have not taken any definite decision, but I had assumed that we would try to conclude Bill 3 before passing on to Bill 7 or the other measures in connection with the dollar conservation program.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed from Thursday, February 12, consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 3—Goods not permitted import.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose on Thursday night it was considering an amendment moved by Mr. Jaenicke, seconded by Mr. Knowles:

That subsection 1 of section 3 of Bill No. 3 be amended by inserting after the word "Canada" in line nine on page one of the said bill, the following words:

"from any country requiring gold or currency of the United States of America in payment or settlement of their purchase price."

Mr. MacINNIS: There has been a very long debate on this bill, not only on the second reading but in committee. I have taken no part in the debate so far but I wish to intervene for a moment to support the amendment moved by the member for Kindersley.

In order that I may make as logical an approach as possible in my support of the amendment, I wish to say just a few words as to the purpose of the bill.

The reason for the introduction of the bill now before us is that we have a large adverse balance of payments with the United States. It is hoped that by restrictions of imports from the United States, as well as in other ways, that adverse balance may be corrected. This part of the measure deals mostly with the restrictions of imports.

The debit trade balance with the United States for the past year, according to the dominion bureau of statistics figures, is over $918 million and about twice the amount of our trade balance last year. On the other hand, we have a credit trade balance with the United Kingdom of almost $565 million. Now here we have an adverse trade balance with one country and a favourable trade balance with another, and the government's policy in dealing with the two is the same, that of imposing restrictions. That sort of policy does not make sense to me. There may be sense in it somewhere, but it does not make sense to me. The government, in two different situations, applies the same policy. I suggest that a realistic solution of the problem calls for restrictions of imports in the one case and encouragement of imports in the other. I believe that sort of policy is indicated from both the long-term and the short-term point of view.

Just a few words in regard to our trade with the United Kingdom. Our exports to the United Kingdom last year had a value of over $750 million. That is no mean market, and it would have been much more if we had been able to supply all the goods they wanted and if they had been able to pay for more goods than they did.

After the war we made large loans to the United Kingdom to enable her to buy our goods. Now we place restrictions on imports from the United Kingdom. As I said before, no matter how I look at this situation it does not make sense. Furthermore, it does not make sense when one takes into consideration the statement made by the Minister of Finance himself last Thursday evening when discussing this matter. I am not going to quote it but it will be found at page 1165 of Hansard. The statement was that United Kingdom exports to Canada are as good as United States dollars. If United Kingdom exports to us are as good as United States dollars, why not do everything we can to encourage imports from the United Kingdom instead of putting prohibitions on them? For the life of me I cannot see why a Canadian citizen should be denied the right to buy goods in non-dollar countries with which we have a balance of trade in our favour just because we cannot afford to buy them in dollar countries.

I know that the minister on several occasions said that the restrictions on United Kingdom imports or imports from non-dollar countries were more imaginary than real, and that while we were adopting a non-discrimination policy there were ways in which we could get around it. Personally I do not agree with that attitude. If we adopt a non-discrimination policy I think we should abide by it, both in letter and in spirit. But if we do not do that, then the thing to do is to take advantage of the section in the Geneva trade agreements which allows us, in an open and aboveboard manner, to adopt a policy of discrimination. As I said before, the situation which arises when we apply to countries with which we have favourable trade balances the same principle as we do to countries with which we have unfavourable balances is to me a curious one, and is one which can only arise out of the government's non-discrimination policy.

During some of the debate on this measure some unwise critical remarks were made with regard to the United States. I do not think we need to make any criticism at all of the United States. If she wants to drive a hard bargain with us, that is her prerogative. I think the criticism should be directed at our own government for not presenting our case forcibly enough to make the United States government appreciate our position. I am anxious that we should maintain the good relations that now exist and have always existed between this country and our southern neighbour. Because of the existence of that good relationship, I am sure it is possible to get the United States government to see our position.

Let us consider the situation in the United States. Before the congress of that country now there is a measure to help European countries in the sterling area by means of a huge loan. The purpose of that loan is to rehabilitate Great Britain and the other European nations, and get them on their feet economically. The non-discrimination principle which prevents us from trading with those countries takes away with the one hand —in a small way, I admit—what they are trying to give with the other. So surely if our government put this situation realistically before the United States, I am satisfied that there would be no difficulty with regard to the question of non-discrimination.

As I said in my opening remarks, I realize that this measure is made necessary because of our adverse trade balance. I am also convinced that the trade balance can be remedied in only two ways, by restricting our imports and increasing our exports. Again I say that we cannot restrict our imports without treading on somebody's toes or hurting somebody. What we should have in mind is to hurt people as little as possible; instead of doing as we are doing, if the goods can be bought somewhere else, we should make that also as easy as possible. I hope the committee will accept this amendment, because so far as this group is concerned I think it is our major objection to the bill before us.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know whether any other hon. member wishes to speak on the amendment; if not, I have one or two facts which I should like to place before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. LOW: I do not want to delay the committee for more than a minute or two, Mr. Chairman, but I thought I should say a word before the minister speaks. I have been giving some consideration to the amendment now before the committee. After weighing both sides of the question—and I admit that there are definitely two sides to it—I must say that I find myself more in favour of the amendment than I was when it was proposed the other night. As I say, I realize that there are two sides to the question and I have given consideration to the side which the minister has indicated in a number of his speeches with regard to the things that might make him fearful about having such an amendment passed. I think the minister indicated last week that action of the house in passing an amendment of this kind would possibly be looked upon by the United States as a breach of faith on Canada's part. They may do so, Mr. Chairman, but certainly not reasonably. The Geneva pact recognizes that where a nation finds itself with an adverse balance of trade, such as Canada now does, that nation may have to use the escape clause that is provided in the pact and restrict imports from all their creditor nations. Surely no fair-minded person or nation would regard as a breach of faith the action we are now proposing to take. If the authorities in the United States hold to the principle of non-discrimination and are favourable to the insertion of an escape clause for nations that have an unfavourable balance of trade, surely they expect us to use it if we get into that position. Likewise, I think the United States would not consider the amendment that is before the committee as a breach of faith, if we should carry it, particularly in the light of the fact that that great nation has never yet been seized with a sense of her own responsibility to balance her trade in the interests of world peace. I cannot believe that the United States would resort to retaliation, as has been suggested, if we took action to protect our dollar reserves and our trading position while at the same time we take perfectly legal action such as is envisioned in this amendment to protect our own people, and do it under the terms of the Geneva pact. No one can argue that it is not protection of our own people to swing some of the trade that is being lost, through restricting United States imports, to sterling countries from which we can get a certain quantity of the things which cannot come into Canada now under these restrictions.

At one stage in this debate the minister stated that the amount of business we could swing to sterling countries as a result of the restriction on United States imports would be comparatively small. If that is so—and the minister nods his head—then it is one more good reason why it would not be looked upon as a breach of faith if we were to accept this amendment. In the light of the suggestion that the amount of business might be comparatively small, I do not see why the United States would be expected to retaliate against Canada by restricting exports from that country to Canada, including essentials, such as oil, steel, cotton and other products.

I am sure if the minister would assure the United States that the restrictions against her goods would be removed as quickly as Canada can get herself in a safe position, so far as trade is concerned, into a position where our dollar reserves were not in jeopardy, and would come clean with them, the United States would understand and certainly would not consider that, in passing this amendment, we are committing a breach of faith.

One further point before taking my seat, and it is this; we are going to have negotiations in future with the United States government. I believe it was a good thing to have the amendment offered in committee last week if for no other reason than to bring home to the people of the United States the fact that we take a serious view of this whole business. I should like to have it impressed upon those good folk down there, for whom I have the greatest respect, the obligation they take upon themselves when they assume leadership in the world trade. Something has to be done to bring home to the American people that they have an obligation to do things to balance their own trade, and thus to help lesser nations industrially, to balance theirs, so as to take care of their own people.

Whether or not the amendment is accepted, I contend that the salutary effect will be good, and particularly if a substantial portion of this House of Commons votes for it—as I propose to do. I believe such action would strengthen the hands of the minister in his future negotiations with that great nation to the south of us; and for that reason, along with many others, I propose to support the amendment.

Mr. CHURCH: Coming from Ontario I should like to call attention to the importance of Bill No. 3, to which an amendment has been offered by the hon. member for Kindersley. He has moved—

> That subsection 1 of section 3 of Bill No. 3 be amended by inserting after the word "Canada" in line nine on page one of the said bill the following words:
> "from any country requiring gold or currency of the United States of America in payment or settlement of their purchase price."

[Mr. Low.]

The subsection would then read:

> No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada from any country requiring gold or currency of the United States of America in payment or settlement of their purchase price any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II or III.

If the section in the bill is followed it is good-bye to any trade with soft currency countries, including Great Britain, France, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and the rest of them.

I should like to make one or two comments about this bill, because thus far I have not taken part in the debate. I did not read the bill until a few days ago. In my view this bill takes us back to where we were years ago. When I asked about the Geneva charter on February 7, I was told nothing whatever about it. This whole thing came in November last like a bolt from the blue. Those people who sat at Geneva were free traders—and they assembled in a good place. What they have done in these pacts has caused disaster to both small and large business in Canada.

We are back to where we were in the days of Gladstone, when Great Britain was a free trading country, and when Liberals in this house were free traders. We find that the first schedule of the bill is the prohibitory schedule, while schedule II gives the quotas and schedule III the permits. Anyone who will look at Bill No 3 will see that it is based on the Geneva charter; and if we look into the definition of "charter" we find that the bill includes something which was never intended by the writers of the Oxford dictionary. According to the Oxford dictionary a charter was a grant from the sovereign or from a legislature. That definition was stretched at the time of the Atlantic charter to embrace the visionary hopes of the late President Roosevelt on behalf of the United States.

If we look at this bill, what do we find? I asked about it last February. A meeting was held at Geneva while parliament was in session here at Ottawa, but on February 7, the government said it did not know anything about it. The government has not yet been able to sell this program to the country, because both large and small businesses are affected. Some of them have been practically ruined by it. They want to import commodities such as fresh vegetables from the West Indies, but they are not permitted to do so. They say America would claim this is discriminatory. Mr. Churchill spoke about the matter yesterday, and his statement is reported by the press in this way:

> Turning to home affairs, Churchill attacked socialist planners who he said "keep the British bulldog running around after his own tail till he is dizzy and then wonder that he cannot keep the wolf from the door."

That is what we are trying to do in Canada. We are trying to keep the wolf from the doors of large and small manufacturers. But we are lucky in this country to be permitted to breathe the fresh air without first having to get a permit under this bill.

I believe this has been overdone; the government of the day and the Liberal party for two generations on trade policies has done everything by fits and starts and nothing long. In the matter of trade, I can remember when the Canadian council of agriculture came here to Ottawa, in 1923, the first year the Drury government took office, and they said protection was an unmitigated evil and they would get a spade and dig up the last remnant of it in Canada. They claimed that the grain growing industry was not an east and west industry, but a north and south industry, to serve the United States rather than England, France, Italy, and the allied countries who were with us in the first war.

I can tell you this, that the government of the day has no mandate for this bill. Where do they get their mandate for everything that has been done to upset the whole fiscal and economic system of this country set up in Canada since confederation? Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding were two of the founders of the preferential system, and it is too bad that that was dropped by the United States-Canada treaty in 1938. I was one who along with the Social Crediters opposed the Bretton Woods agreement and showed the folly of the American loan, because I saw then the disaster coming from Geneva last summer. I saw it coming back in 1945. I knew what was going to happen. In my address with respect to the Bretton Woods agreement I predicted that we would have the very state of affairs that has developed, and we could go back to the days of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States covering every article of trade and commerce and upsetting our whole fiscal system. Considering the natural resources and the raw materials of Britain it is strange to me that the mother country and the dominions did not stay together, in peace as in war. Unless they hang together in trade and commerce and defence and migration they are going to hang seperately, because no dominion can go it alone. We will find this out during the coming summer and fall if this bill passes.

This Bill No. 3 is no protection by any means whatever. What has happened since we came into this house? Before and during the last war there were nine or ten different forms of protection applied to the farming industry of this country. I admit that some were necessary. There were those in this house who said that protection was an unmitigated evil, yet during the war we gave the farmers seven or eight kinds of protection. In fact for years Canada paid them a bonus not to grow crops at all.

When I saw the war coming I spoke in the house and suggested to the Minister of Agriculture and the government and asked that storage reservoirs be built in the old country in which to store our grain. In January 1938 the British Medical Association said that hard grains and wheat could be stored scientifically below ground and kept for ten years. But they would not do that at all. They paid people not to grow crops; they had acreage bonuses and all that kind of thing, all by protectionist measures.

I take exception to this third section of the bill because it is not protection in any sense of the word. It ruins any chance of protection for the small storekeeper, the small importer of goods, the industrial worker and the farmer. It contains many discriminatory clauses. This Bill No. 3, section 3 and the three schedules, ruin any hope of the people in the soft currency countries of doing any export business with this country.

These are all discriminatory agreements. They go beyond our national policy. What is our national policy? Sir John A. Macdonald in 1878 laid it down and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding adopted it. They were the authors of preferential trade which was abrogated to the United States in 1938. Because of that we had soup kitchens all over the country. Our policy was to have our own markets for our own products and our own work for our own workmen. The United States pulled themselves up from the dark days when the commercial travellers from Great Britain went through their land selling goods. They are today the greatest industrial country in the world and they achieved that greatness by having the highest protection of any country. Now they want to extend the Hyde Park agreement which is not an agreement at all, which is simply a verbal agreement. I am opposed to the trade pacts made in Geneva. I am against the whole idea of multilateral trade agreements and the manner of putting through this bill.

No conference was held last January before the February Geneva meeting. New Zealand asked for a conference and so did the mother country and Australia, but what did Canada tell them? We had the reply, when I raised it in the house, that the government did not intend to hold such a meeting. They sent Mr. Wilgress over there and he is down in Havana now at a trade conference of twenty-one countries. According to a dispatch published in the press last week he said in Havana that 800 amendments have been proposed to the Geneva charter, not one of which can be accepted because it is all signed, sealed and delivered by twenty-one countries; not a line of it can be changed.

By this Bill 3, clause 3, the various subsections of clause 3 and three schedules we are only holding a post mortem. We are just caretakers and undertakers. That is what we should turn ourselves into, because that is all the power we have over this particular bill. It has been signed, sealed and delivered by the twenty-one governments and by the permanent officials. The government of the day will have to take the responsibility.

As I say, there was no conference before Geneva. New Zealand, Australia and Great Britain wanted a conference. The United States should have been told that preferential trade was a family matter and would not be open for discussion at Geneva. If that had been done we would not have had the situation we have today.

By the Geneva pact the Liberal party has gone back on everything Sir Wilfrid Laurier did. What did he say in 1897 when he was first in the diamond jubilee procession over there? He said, "If you want our aid, invite us to your councils." We were invited in February, 1947, to the councils of Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand, as to Geneva, but we would not even attend them before Geneva. We are simply hanging all hope of preferential trade in the future on the sour apple tree with John Brown's body. The action of the Liberal party puts me in mind of the old song, "Rocked in the cradle of the deep, I lay me down in peace to sleep." That is what happened at Bretton Woods and Geneva; they were rocked in the cradle of the deep and they laid themselves down in peace to sleep. They did the same thing at Geneva.

I am not here to criticize the United States; it is a great land and what they did in the war was wonderful; but I think they would appreciate us more if we told them the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth about where these bargains are going to land this country.

Canadianism defeated continentalism at the polls in 1911. Canada's victory on the reciprocity issue should have cleared the way for the working out of a protectionist system that would protect the consumer against unjust prices just as truly as that system would protect the manufacturer against unjust competition. Canadianism has been perverted more and more into a system of taking care of the producer and leaving the consumer to take care of himself. The desire of the milling companies and the middlemen to inflate the price of their securities on the market is much more conspicuous than the desire of these milling companies to pay the farmer a fair price for wheat or to charge the consumer a fair price for flour. Greed on the part of manufacturers and Ottawa's failure to restrain their greed has weakened the whole principle of Canadianism in this country's trade and industry.

Someone mentioned the flag the other night in connection with this party. In 1922 I said that it would be better for the Conservative party to remain out of power under the union jack of Canadianism than to be returned to power under the white flag of unrestricted reciprocity or the yellow flag of free trade.

This Bill No. 3 is going back to the days of Gladstone and the old free trade way of doing business when we started up as a country. It is brought in under the guise of an emergency but it is going to be here for a long time. We are giving up all hope of ever restoring the preferential system of trade with the British empire. I am opposed to this internationalism and multilateral trade. I have opposed it before because it has brought this country only a minimum of trade as compared with preferences. True, we had a policy once of favoured-nation trade with twenty-eight countries, and that was a good system, although it encouraged trade with some countries only, not with the vast majority. National combinations can be more easily controlled from Ottawa than international combinations or cartels can be restrained or suppressed from Washington.

Away back in 1923, I brought up the question of a Canadian national coal policy which would have saved us millions of United States dollars. I brought it up almost every session. I also brought up the question of developing oil from the tar sands, and the question of asbestos. All our coal should be mined under the British flag, from Wales, the maritimes and Alberta. In 1913, 1914 and 1915 we had ships coming into Toronto harbour loaded with coal from Swansea, Wales. They had come all the way across the ocean and up the St. Lawrence and docked in Ashbridge's bay, owned by Baldwin's, with which the late Stanley Baldwin was connected. That just shows what can be done. Ten years later millions of tons of coal were brought in under that policy from the same three places, and we could have ten times as much if only we solved the transportation problem by water and rail and all rail.

I came across an article today proposing to stop the flow of our minerals in their raw state to the United States, to be manufactured there into finished products. The Hon. T. A. Crerar in an address to the Canadian Club at Hamilton said that Canada was over-industrialized. I pointed out that Canada's yearly imports of products from the United States which under a proper policy could be bought in Canada amounted to $400 million, and showed that $9,000,000 worth of raw asbestos exported from the province of Quebec is shaped and fashioned by United States hands into a finished product worth $60,000,000. Think what it would mean if that work were done in our own country. I also pointed out that in processing this asbestos, 15,000 United States citizens were employed, receiving wages of $25,000,000 per annum and supporting a population across the line of 75,000. My address was commented upon in an editorial written by John R. Robinson, a great editor, in the Toronto Evening Telegram of May 14, 1924. I also pointed out that the number of workers in the United States employed in the manufacture of exports of raw materials from Canada was 120,000, and that the United States population supported by the sale of these exports was at least 700,000. Think of what such a policy would mean today when we are short of United States dollars. I believe the time has come when we should raise this issue. We are going to have trouble in respect to trade with the Argentine. Agreements have been made for the purchase by Britain of Argentine cattle and food and grains. We should have stayed with preferences to the mother country and the sterling area and then we should not have had all this trouble. Although things may look dark in Great Britain, she is not going to be crippled for ever, and we should do everything we can to build up our trade with her.

I am going to vote against the Geneva agreements. I do not believe in them. They upset the whole economic policy of this country since confederation and will cause wide unemployment. They are not in the interests of Canada, not in the interests of our farmers, or industrial workers, not in the interests of the mother country, and not in the interests of the empire. We should stick to the British preferential system which did so much for us after the dark days after the first world war. This Geneva business means the ruination of this country and will lead to widespread unemployment here. The government of the day should have an election on this issue. They have no mandate from the people of this country to overthrow our whole traditional policy. This country is heading for disaster the moment we throw overboard the trade policy we have followed since confederation.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I assure you my remarks will be brief; but after listening to the debate I did feel that I should express the views of one from the maritime provinces. During the debate we have heard a great deal about trade between the United States and Canada. I am sure that if some hon. members who have taken part in the debate had lived and were living in the maritime provinces they would take a different attitude.

It is all right to talk about trade in the sterling areas when you have articles that can be traded in those areas; but when you have a perishable article it is difficult to trade in other countries. Figures were put on the record today by the Minister of Labour showing that last year in Charlotte county the sardine catch amounted to almost two million cases. These were caught in the southern part of Charlotte county. Nearly a million and a half cases were sold in the United States. Those that were canned in Canada were to a great extent exported; but I want to point out to the committee that down where I come from the people will resent any measure or regulation that interferes with trade between the United States and Canada.

During the discussion I have also heard remarks such as the one we heard away back in 1911, "no truck or trade with the Yankees". When you give expression to those views in the maritime provinces you find a people there who take a very different view, and I believe the same applies all over Canada. Another thing that strikes me is that on many occasions in this country we forget too quickly. In listening to the discussion I often wondered if we ever thought back to the last war. I am thinking particularly of the canning industry. I realize that I talk mostly about fish, but I am once more thinking of the canning industry. During the war, from 1940 to 1945, if it had not been for the help of our southern neighbours, the canning industry in Charlotte county, and in fact in the whole of the maritime provinces, would have been closed. We depended one hundred per cent on our United States friends for tin plate. I am sure hon. members realize that during the war tin plate was in very short supply. We had none at all in Canada. In the canning industry we did not lose a single day on account of a shortage of tin plate, thanks to our United States friends to the south.

Edible oils are used extensively in the sardine industry; in fact it is utterly impossible to carry on the industry without them. There again we depended one hundred per cent on our United States friends. Prior to the war we imported cotton seed oil from Great Britain. During the war the only thing available in the way of edible oil for canning purposes was soy bean oil from the United States. Not one single day was lost in Charlotte county on account of a shortage of edible oil.

When we are speaking of our neighbours to the south there is one other thing we should keep in mind. During the period of the war they were supplying us with gasoline. The rations that the people of this country were given compared favourably with and in some cases were better than those given to their own citizens in the United States.

When mention is made of interference or a suggestion of interference with the trade over that border I say that it would not meet with the approval of the people of the maritime provinces. I for one am firmly convinced that the freer goods move over that border both ways the greater the prosperity in the maritime provinces, and I shall oppose any measure, any regulation which in any way interferes with the traffic we have enjoyed for years and years.

In closing I would ask hon. members to give this matter very serious thought. As I have explained to hon. gentlemen, down where I live we have a perishable article to dispose of. It must go to the United States market. The United States fishermen in Maine have for years and years tried to convince the powers that be in Washington that Canadian fish and fish products should not go into the United States in competition with their own. Regardless of the arguments put forward by these fishermen we still enjoy that market, and without it today the fishing industry, not only in my own county of Charlotte but in the maritime provinces as a whole, would be practically worthless.

Our lobster industry last year was fairly prosperous. I should like once more to put the figures on record. One company alone in a little town where I live exported $4,000,000 worth of lobsters to the United States market in 1945. Less than four per cent of that amount were sold in Canada. That will give the committee some idea of what the United States markets mean to the fishermen in the maritime provinces. I would therefore ask hon. members to think carefully before supporting this measure, because the people down in my part of the country will very much resent any regulation which will in any way interfere with that international trade.

Mr. PROBE: I listened with interest to the hon. member for Charlotte, but when he concluded I was not sure whether his argument was meant to oppose the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kindersley or to oppose the main motion.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I think I made myself quite clear.

Mr. BENTLEY: The hon. member said "this measure".

Mr. PROBE: The hon. member is opposing the amendment.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): Absolutely.

Mr. PROBE: I think possibly he is a bit inconsistent in this regard. We are all sold on the need for having trade on a two-way street. That is perhaps the one reason why the federal government has got itself into the currency jam which requires the introduction of a bill such as Bill No. 3.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): May I ask a question?

Mr. PROBE: Yes, if it is relevant.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): Does the hon. member believe that the shipment from Canada to Britain of goods which could have been sold to the United States for cash has had anything to do with the dollar situation in Canada today?

Mr. PROBE: The best way to answer the question is this: We cannot get the currency of the United States through the form which our trade has taken in past years. With the exception of a few years during the war the United States have sold on this market more goods than we have been able to supply them in return; and it is to correct that deficiency, I presume, that the Minister of Finance has introduced this measure and the others which are to follow.

The hon. member for Charlotte of course is quite correct in his argument, and I agree with him, except that he does not carry it to its logical conclusion. Undoubtedly we want to sell to the United States as much as they sell to us. Apparently that is the only way in which international trade can be carried on at the present time, because the British link on which we relied before the war is broken for the time being. That, of course, is the crux of the whole situation, and I think the government would be first to admit that it is true.

In this bill the Minister of Finance has presented three schedules. Schedule I includes lists of goods which are under complete import ban; schedule II includes goods which are permitted to be imported on a quota basis related to the pre-war imports from the countries of origin; schedule III allows all imports by permit only.

The argument of the Minister of Finance in turning down this amendment—because I presume that is what the government proposes to do, or it would have accepted the amendment long ago—is that the goods involved in the three schedules, goods which are under import restriction from the United States and from the soft currency countries, will give us imported articles from the soft currency countries in excess of what we would get from the United States.

The minister gave us certain figures when he introduced the bill, but the unfortunate thing is that these figures are not complete. I would ask the minister, before he turns down this amendment, to give us an assurance that before the bill is finally concluded, before we have considered the individual items in the three schedules, he will prepare a concrete table enumerating the items in the three schedules and indicating what will be the dollar effect of his ban in the form it is taking in relation to United States imports and from the point of view of future imports from other countries. He has indicated that the various items, for example, in schedule II which are subject to quota based on the 1939 import experience will be less unfavourable to the soft currency countries than would appear on the surface. I think it is only fair that the minister should give us a detailed table before the bill is concluded. That is what I would ask at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: When we come to the consideration of the schedules I shall furnish such data as can be made available showing the extent to which the prohibitions, quotas and permits would affect imports from the hard and soft currency countries.

Mr. BENTLEY: When the minister is preparing that table will it be possible, in the matter of schedule I and the quotas of schedule II, to set opposite those items which ones can be imported from the soft currency countries, which we could have if they were not banned or under quota?

Mr. ABBOTT: I will see what accurate data I can give on that. In my speech introducing the bill, particularly at pages 333 and 334 of Hansard, there is a good deal of information on that subject, and I will see what additional information I can give.

A good many hon. gentlemen have expressed concern that the exchange conservation measures which the government has introduced, and in particular this bill, will have an adverse effect on British exports to Canada, and on several occasions I have expressed the belief that the reverse will be the case.

In the first place, I direct the attention of the committee to the statistics which have now become available for December, 1947, that is, the first full month during which the program was in effect. In December, 1947, the total Canadian imports from the United Kingdom were valued at $20,254,000, as compared with $11,664,000 the preceding December. The increase was about 73 per cent. I might add that the December, 1947, figure is higher than that for any previous month in the year and, I am informed, in no other post-war month have commercial imports, exclusive of Canadian war materials returned from the United Kingdom, been so large.

I do not believe the fears that this conservation program will injure our trade with Britain are well founded. It is evident, I think, that they are not based on experience to date, and I am confident that future figures will emphatically dispel that fear.

Mr. GREEN: Is it not an obvious fact that if these restrictions and quotas were not in effect, imports from Great Britain and the other non-dollar countries would have been even larger than the figures the minister has given?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. They would have been smaller, because prohibitions and quotas against the dollar areas are so strong that they enabled British goods to come in during that month and will continue to allow British goods to come in, which otherwise would have competition from United States products, textiles in particular. The competition would have been such that it would have excluded British products.

Mr. GREEN: I said that if the prohibition against goods from Britain had not been in effect there would have been more imports from Britain.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot agree with my hon. friend for the reason I have given, that the effect of the quota system was such as to enable Britain to export to us in the month of December, and she is continuing to export to us, goods she would not have been able to send on a competitive basis with the United States; and the comparatively minor prohibitions have been very much more than offset by these added imports. That is assertion, I know, but it is based on information. Let me finish this statement and I will answer any further questions later.

Mr. GREEN: The minister missed the point entirely. The point was that if the prohibitions had been in effect against the United States and other dollar countries but not against Britain and other soft currency countries, then the imports from those countries would have been greater, of necessity, than the figures the minister gave.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is true, no doubt, if the quotas had been on a different basis. But one must take the program as a whole. You cannot take schedule I and ignore schedules II and III. The point is that the net effect of schedules I and II is to stimulate trade from the United Kingdom and the soft currency country areas as against the dollar area. Nearly all consumer products which Britain is in a position to send in volume are listed in schedule II and accordingly, as I said before, British exporters are afforded an opportunity and a strong incentive to step in and fill the gap which results from quota restrictions on competitive imports from dollar countries. The quotas under schedule II are non-discriminatory in form. But of course they take pre-war imports as the base, and by assisting Britain to regain her pre-war share of the import market they are in fact of tremendous benefit to her. The complete prohibitions of schedule I did affect British trade but only to a slight extent. As I said on January 30, the prohibited list then covered only about two and a quarter millions of United Kingdom imports, and even this figure has since been reduced to some extent by the amendments which I have subsequently announced. The amount is less than 1½ per cent of the total imports from that country to Canada.

Hon. members will note that in respect of textile products, which is the most important quota category, imports from schedule countries, namely, the hard currency countries, are being cut down from $130,000,000 to $40,000,000. On the other hand, the non-schedule countries, primarily the United Kingdom, are given an incentive to increase their exports to this country from $52,000,000 to $120,000,000. Similar opportunities on a smaller scale are afforded other British goods by quotas applicable to such things as prepared food, leather products and miscellaneous products including glassware, cutlery, sporting goods and toys. I can only repeat that I am convinced that the effect of this bill will be to help Britain to trade with Canada instead of injuring her under existing circumstances.

Amendment negatived: yeas, 42; nays, 49.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): On section 3 of this bill I want to follow up something I took up early in the session in connection with the importation of fruits and vegetables. While the hon. member for Charlotte was speaking I was thinking that, while he talked about the freer trade with the United States as the Liberal policy, never in the history of this country have tariffs been so high as they are at the present moment, and more are proposed. It is a case of talking in one way and acting in another. The Minister of Agriculture has now admitted that the agricultural policy during the war years and since, when our farmers were denied the United States market for their products, was not a marketing policy on the part of the government but a price control policy, and the farmers were the victims of it. In some of these schedules that are being introduced the farmers are again becoming the victims of that policy. It is not a policy of developing the natural resources of this country. We have thousands and thousands of idle acres that could be growing the food which we import from the United States, but who dares to go into that business, because nobody knows when this particular dollar conservation program may end and unrestricted importation of food from the United States will ruin those men who have gone into that business.

We have an immigration policy, if it can be called one, under which we are bringing in people from Europe, many of whom are skilled in the production of fruits and vegetables. I am thinking particularly of those who come from Holland. They could very well turn their skill to the production of many of the things we have been importing from the United States. We could establish them on land. But what is the use? In a matter of months, the minister said, the policy will be over. We should arrive at something definite. We cannot be going in two directions at once. We should have a policy under which our farmers can go ahead, plan their future, and know whether they can expand their operations or not.

While this committee in investigating prices I suppose mention of that matter should not be made, but I just wish to refer back to the thirties. A great deal has been heard here about cheap food. Back in the thirties we had cheap food; eggs were eight cents a dozen; wheat was thirty-five to sixty cents a bushel; milk for cheese purposes ran from fifty-six to sixty cents. What happened? Thousands of people were walking the streets looking for jobs. Why? Because farmers could not purchase the things which are manufactured in our cities. So let us not enter into some plan that will bring about cheap food. The day we have cheap food we shall have idle men.

I would say that this policy is a two-faced one. It is designed to discourage United States trade, so the minister says; and then he says it is designed for freer trade. I wonder what will happen. One minister says it is a long-term program and the next minister says it is a short-term plan. What are we to believe? The minister has said that he will not protect Canadian producers. He also said that the 25 per cent excise tax is designed to protect United States manufacturers who were exporting to this country. I wonder just whom the cabinet represents. Does it represent United States producers of the goods which we have been importing, or does it represent United States farmers who have been sending in thousands of carloads of farm produce to an agricultural country. If I had known different, I would have thought I was listening to Clinton Anderson, the Secretary of Agriculture in the United States or Averell Harriman, Secretary of Commerce in the United States, instead of our own cabinet minister.

Mr. FRASER: You likely were.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): Canadian growers are not asking for something impossible. They are just asking for an opportunity to grow and to market the things they can produce in this country. Let me give an illustration of what is going on. Here in my hand I have two letters sent out by organizations which are dealing with fruits and vegetables. One is issued by the Ontario food council and is signed by M. M. Robinson as manager. This is special newsletter 5B, dated May 23, 1947, and is dealing with the importation of lettuce. It was designed to advise growers and importers with regard to the situation as far as that one particular product was concerned. It says:

Lettuce available June 2.

We are now informed, after a careful check, that head lettuce will be ready for harvest in the Leamington area June 2 with some supplies available the end of next week.

Favourable growing conditions during the last few days have brought some early vegetables on with a rush. Conditions during the past week for growth could not have been better and the original expectation that lettuce would not be available until June 9 has had to be revised.

There is a lot of head lettuce in the Leamington area and generally it is of excellent quality so far. Actually, the weather could not be better for lettuce and cabbage.

Please co-operate by calling off imported lettuce deal as quickly as possible.

Actually what happened after this information had gone out was that importers brought in as large a quantity as it was possible to buy of head lettuce and stored it, and practically ruined the Canadian growers who had passed out this information that it would be available so that they could have protection for the time it was necessary to have it. That is one of the results of "kindly co-operate". The government did not. The grower did.

I have here also a letter from the Canadian horticultural council, which quotes the Washington food report issued by the American institute of food distribution in New York city. This is a quotation from what was stated by the American institute of food distribution, in New York city. It is headed "Tariff Gossip", and states:

Exports of dried fruits, fresh and canned fruits and vegetables, packaged cereals and many grocery specialties will be increased by tariff concessions secured from 17 nations with whom we are now bargaining.

Canada will permit us to make larger shipments of fresh fruits and vegetables at lower duties, except during approximately two months of Canadian harvesting. Canada will also open the way to receive larger quantities of canned fruits and vegetables from us which it does not pack itself. It will probably concede lower duties on dried fruits which were kept fairly high under the 1939 agreement because of the empire preference.

Now, with the Geneva agreement, those preferences will be done away with, and we find ourselves in a difficult position. Would labour or industry permit such tactics to be employed to undersell Canadian manufacturers and the products of Canadian labour? They would not submit for one moment to the importation from the United States of large quantities of goods produced here in Canada by Canadian industry. Yet, that is done, so far as the farmer is concerned, and they get away with it.

Bill No. 3 has been referred to as a program, but it is not a program at all. It is an expedient. It is a hoax without faith, and without vision. I say to the committee that you cannot be a great nation on a carload of lettuce. We hear a howl from the cities for these greens. This country was built up on pork and beans, and I am not a poet either. We have the climate and the people to produce these things.

I have mentioned immigration. We could put these immigrants to work. But we must have some assurance that once they make some investment, and make plans, they will be able to reap some profit from those plans.

The minister says that this program is non-discriminatory, so far as other nations are concerned; but it is certainly discriminatory so far as Canadians are concerned. In history we make reference to B.C. and A.D. I expect very shortly we shall be referring to A.A.—After Abbott.

If the minister were a fruit and vegetable grower in this country, what would he do right now?

Mr. ABBOTT: Shovel snow.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): I should like to say a word or two about the Geneva treaties as they apply to vegetable and fruit growers. They are the victims of a squeeze play. Certain fruits and vegetables are allowed in for a certain time; but under the Geneva treaties the length of time United States produce is kept out, because of our production in harvest time, has been narrowed. One vegetable which was prohibited previously for fifty-two weeks is prohibited now for only ten weeks. In other words, the Canadian grower is penalized for forty-two weeks.

In this connection let me refer specifically to a few items. First, cranberries, which were protected fifty-two weeks under the old plan, and with a tariff of not less than 1½ cents are now protected for only twelve weeks with a tariff of three-quarters of a cent. Many other tariffs have been reduced. Green peas which formerly were protected for fourteen weeks with a duty of five cents are protected now for only eight weeks, with the duty reduced to 3½ cents. In respect of onions Canadian producers have lost protection for twelve weeks. Rhubarb was formerly protected for fifty-two weeks with a tariff of 1½ cents, whereas now the time has been reduced to ten weeks, and the tariff to one-half cent. Tomatoes were protected for fifty-two weeks; that is now reduced to thirty-two weeks.

Therefore our farmers are the victims of a squeeze play, particularly in southwestern Ontario. We have two huge United States markets in Buffalo and Detroit. When the United States growers see that a surplus is piling up in cities other than the two I have mentioned they will consign the surplus to Detroit and Buffalo. Canadian truckers go over there, buy that distress produce, bring it into the Canadian market and lick the Canadian farmer. That has been going on for years.

The government should take this matter seriously. They are in power because of the confidence of the people, and I say they are losing the confidence of the Canadian farmer. Farmers have been given no guidance as to what they should do, either in the next year or in the next five years. The month of March is just around the corner, and many of the growers about whom I have been speaking must make their plans in March and early April. I am asking that guidance be given to those producers as soon as possible, so that they may have products to sell—produced by Canadians and for Canadians and to save United States dollars.

Mr. SKEY: I rise to express what perhaps might be described as a word of admonition. In a recent exchange the minister asked me to make some recommendations. I made two, one that we should have a 90-cent dollar, and, second, that the minister should consult those skilled in finance. Both of those suggestions were rejected. Finally, in a gentle fashion, the minister admitted that he would keep an open mind, and that he was not prepared to say that his was the only way of solving this problem.

The minister was in Toronto last Friday and spoke to the Rotary club, at which time he is reported as having stated that the depreciation of the Canadian dollar would have an immediate and widespread effect on the basic cost of living in Canada.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but I must rise to a point of order, due to the fact that I did it in respect of someone else in this debate. I suggest that it is not in order to discuss devaluation when section 3 is before the committee.

Mr. SKEY: I have very little to say today. Perhaps if I looked through the section I could find something to which my observations would apply. However, if the minister will be patient for a moment I will complete what I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN: Perhaps the minister will permit the hon. member to proceed at this time, but I hope that other members will not take advantage of his generosity. I trust that other hon. members will stay strictly within the rules.

Mr. SKEY: I would not continue this discussion except that we have been on this subject for so long. I think it is unfair for the minister to state just one side of the question. There are at least five other factors which have increased the cost of living far more than the depreciation of the Canadian dollar by ten per cent would have done. There is the present inflation which has caused price rises; there are the reckless loans which have been referred to already in the United States house of representatives; there is the unchecked government spending; there is the 25 per cent tax, and there are the restrictions which invariably cause rises in prices. To tell the Canadian businessman that a ten per cent devaluation would cause these price rises is most unfair. The government are getting into trouble. They are making political issue out of this thing and some day they will regret it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to deal with something which I am sure the minister will agree is within the terms of the subsection. Although we made a beginning with this the other night, we did not get very far. I want to talk about permits because, after all, they constitute the very root of this bill. The minister's colleague spoke of this the other night. What I complain about is that the minister of reconstruction seems to consider this from the point of view that it is entirely natural and, no doubt in his mind, a desirable thing that the ordinary life of the community should be invaded. Let me reassure the minister that I am not going to repeat my speech on arbitrary power. Nevertheless I want to reiterate that the business life of the country is being invaded to an extent which six months, or let us say nine months before the minister began to consider this, he probably would have thought was just as intolerable as I hope he does still.

The minister of reconstruction talks about this as if it were the most natural thing in the world. It seems to me that this question of permits must be considered rather particularly. This is a thing which we all deplore. I say "all" because I am sure that all of us do deplore this action which the government has considered necessary and which, under the circumstances, I suppose the rest of us have to admit is necessary to some minor extent. However, I believe that this committee and the people of this country are entitled to know just to what extent it is necessary. What I complain about is the way in which the minister of reconstruction talks blithely about permits and then very optimistically goes on to talk about the huge exports to the United States which he is arranging. The minister referred the other night to aluminum exports, and then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as reported on page 1162 of Hansard, said:

> When shall we get that kind of discussion?

To which the minister replied:

> I do not think you will ever get it on this bill.

I think the minister had better leave hon. members to make up their own minds as to what they are going to decide on this bill. I wish he would come here to listen to these things. Not that I think they would make any impression on him, but I should like to know that he had at least heard me say them. We got to the point where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said:

> When shall we get that kind of discussion?

To which the minister replied:

> I do not think you will ever get it on this bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: You must have a permit to have a discussion.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes. I have no desire to press this point, but in passing may I say it is just an illustration of the kind of thing to which I am objecting. Here we have a man who has become so used to the exercise of power in wartime that he thinks he is going to do exactly the same thing in peacetime.

An hon. MEMBER: He is doing it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): He is doing it; that is right. I think we need to have a real discussion on this permit business. I know the Minister of Finance would like to get this through and I do not regard myself as an obstructor, but I want to tell him that we are going to stay here until a different attitude is adopted by the minister of reconstruction from that which he adopted the other night. The other night his attitude was: treat them rough and tell them nothing. He is not going to get away with that. He should be ready to come here and treat us as serious people who are entitled to get what information is properly available. That is all we are asking for. Unless that is done, we shall be here for a long time on section 3.

I am not the only one on this side who feels like that. Incidentally, the information which the minister of reconstruction has given us can be divided into two categories. First, there is that which he will not give and, second, there is that which he gives but which appears to be nearly all wrong. He gave me some information on Thursday evening about the motorcar industry. Since then I have been trying to check it and, as far as I have been able to get along with it I find that it is all wrong.

Mr. ABBOTT: My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here because I think he anticipated that the main discussion on this section of the bill would come on schedule III. I am sure that when that schedule is called he will be here ready to give such information as he has and to answer any charges which any hon. member may level against him. It is very difficult for both the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself, or for all ministers to be in the house at the same time. Hon. gentlemen opposite know that there are many duties devolving on a minister. I think, in fairness to my colleague, it should be said that he did not expect that schedule 3 would be discussed this afternoon, and it is that schedule which deals with permits. There will be a full opportunity on schedule 3 to deal with permits.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My point is that if we deal with this permit matter and it is behind us, then when that time comes we shall find that we might just as well have saved a lot of breath on schedule 3. It will be just good, clean fun. I hope the minister of reconstruction will be here shortly because I think there are some others who want to ask questions.

The minister also said that he was not getting very far with his regulations, but apparently he had some with regard to the automobile industry. He said that he would be glad to get them and place them on Hansard. He said he had sent for them. In deference to the minister who is here, it seems to me that the fact that we were in the midst of this discussion—we were diverted by the amendment—should make it necessary for the minister of reconstruction to have been here. That is what I want to say at the moment. It is only an intermission as far as I am concerned because, when the minister is here, I want to question him about the information he gave us and which, as far as I can make out, is all wrong.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am in exactly the same position. I intend to withhold what I have to say, but in order that he may be appraised of what I want to ask him may I say now that it can be found on pages 1164 and 1165 of Hansard. I am hoping the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the minister in charge of the bill can both be here, because I am inclined to think they will need a little collaboration in order to answer some of the questions I intend to ask.

May I say I appreciate the difficulties in the way of a minister being here. I was greatly amused the other day, although it was only for about a minute and a half, when I noticed that the only person on the front benches was the hon. member for Cartier. I did not know he had been designated to lead the government.

[Mr. Abbott.]

The CHAIRMAN: It occurs to me that the committee might desire to allow several sections to stand until the Minister of Trade and Commerce is here.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that the formal clauses of the bill concern the Minister of Trade and Commerce so much as the details of schedule III. I shall try to be in position to answer all questions with respect to articles prohibited under schedule I and the articles under quota under schedule II. Those are administered by my department. However, permits which are issued for so-called capital goods are issued under schedule III, and that is the section of the bill for which my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is responsible. I shall try to answer such questions as may be asked about administrative details, but there may be some questions which might be asked under this section which would have to be held over until he is here.

Mr. FULTON: I do not see how we can confine ourselves to schedule II, because section 5 deals with goods in schedules II and III.

Mr. ABBOTT: Possibly when we arrive at section 5 we can have paragraph (c) stand.

Mr. GREEN: Section 3 refers to all three schedules, and therefore to the portion of the bill which is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He should be here. It is his business to be here. We cannot go on now because the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am asking for the co-operation of the committee. My colleague has pretty heavy responsibilities along with some of the rest of us; and the detailed information, if the committee wishes to co-operate, can quite properly be given under schedule III. The essence of this section is that no goods shall be admitted into Canada which are listed in schedules I, II or III, except under permit. The permit under schedule II is with respect to the quota. In the case of prohibited goods the only exception is the particular hardship section, and under schedule III comes the individual or group permit. I am simply suggesting that if the committee wants to discuss details and to know how many motorcars or printing presses or other items of capital expenditure are to be allowed entry into the country we can properly deal with that under schedule III. But to use the standard phrase, I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. GREEN: The minister is completely wrong in that statement, because when we get to the schedules we can deal only with the particular items in the schedule before us and we cannot have a general discussion. The Minister of Finance himself should be able to answer questions with regard to automobiles, because they come in under quotas under schedule II and formerly were under schedule I.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, they are under schedule III.

Mr. GREEN: Formerly they were under schedule I, which is the total prohibition schedule. The minister should be able to answer these questions himself. It is not the responsibility of the opposition, of course, to have the Minister of Trade and Commerce here. Nevertheless he should be here to explain the sections of the bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is very ready to make statements that so-and-so and such-and-such is the case, but if he will look at page 27 of the bill he will find that, under schedule III, item 438a covers automobiles and motor vehicles of all kinds, electric trackless trolley buses and chassis for all these.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We are not discussing this or that detail but the basis on which the permits are to be issued. The minister has told us that regulations were to be made, but he has not completed them yet, with the exception of the motorcar industry. I am not going to make a speech on arbitrary power but, with all due deference, I think the Minister of Finance in his conciliatory manner is trying to lull us into a situation where we shall be talking about these permits as if they were ordinary things, whereas they are, we hope, extraordinary and temporary things, and we are entitled to have a good look at them. However, just to show that we are ready to co-operate, there is a further point in paragraph (a) which I think the minister might be prepared to discuss in the absence of the other minister. I would also draw attention to the last line but one of section 3 (1), which says that this omnipotent minister may, among other things, "issue, vary or revoke permits". I raise this question only on the understanding that we can come back to this question of permits and discuss it in its broad implications. I am not saying whether or not this power of revocation is necessary. Maybe it is, but there should not be a wide-open power to revoke just according to how the minister happens to feel. There should be some qualification on this power.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is quite right when he says that the committee are entitled to ask questions on these sections and to know the conditions under which permits are to be issued, whether under schedule I, II or III, but I do not anticipate that we shall pass this section immediately and the questions might stand until this evening when no doubt it will be possible for my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be here. As to the use of the words "vary, or revoke," that language is taken from the Export-Import Act, which is now in force. It is more or less standard legal language.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is pointed out to me that permits under schedule II take the form of quotas, and it is essential under that schedule to have this power.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I would have thought that the circumstances there were quite different. I could see more justification for revocation there than here.

Mr. FULTON: This discussion seems to me to bring clearly to the fore the fact that we are apt to get more and more into this kind of situation if more and more portfolios are to be added to one minister. I am glad to see that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just come in. Before we deal with the general question of permits and their administration, I notice that in section 3 the word "minister" is used for the first time, and it is not laid down in the bill what "minister" means, or at least I have not been able to find it.

Mr. GREEN: That is provided in section 6.

Mr. ABBOTT: Section 6(2).

Mr. FULTON: We shall have to look to orders in council to find out what minister is in charge of what.

There is another point I wanted cleared up. I take it that the whole of this program is being administered under P.C. 4678. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce issued any permits yet? Or have all permits been issued by the Minister of Finance, who is the minister responsible for foreign exchange control. How is that being worked out?

Mr. ABBOTT: Permits under schedule II are issued under the direction of myself. Permits, if any, under schedule III, or an order in council equivalent, would be issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who will be able to answer how many permits have been issued. I must correct myself. The present situation is that permits are issued under the Foreign Exchange Control Act and, since the responsibility for that act is by its terms vested in myself, permits under schedule II are issued by the foreign exchange control board on my authorization after consultation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to maintain the proper legal form. But, in practice, responsibility for the administration of that rests with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who will have the sole responsibility when this bill becomes law.

Mr. FULTON: There must be consultation under the present P.C. 4678.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. FULTON: Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce should be in a position to tell us what regulations he has laid down, if only for his own guidance, which will apply in the administration of the act in the future. He has appeared to be reluctant to tell us what the regulations are.

Mr. HOWE: Just a minute; prove your statement.

Mr. FULTON: Well, I refer to the discussion which took place last Thursday night.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Surely he would not deny that.

Mr. FULTON: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has already referred to it and the minister will find it on Hansard tomorrow. He told the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, "We will not have any discussion of that type on this bill."

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I interrupt for just a moment? That is the wording that appears in the daily edition of Hansard—never any discussion of it on this bill. The newspaper reports say the minister said that we would never get any discussion on this matter.

Mr. GREEN: That is what he did say.

Mr. JACKMAN: Hansard is changed too much.

Mr. FULTON: What we want at the moment is to find out what regulations the minister follows in the issuing of these permits; what regulations he has laid down as to the conditions under which permits will be issued.

Mr. HOWE: Actually, permits for the importation of capital goods are not required at the present time; they will be required after March 1 on certain commodities. Progressively thereafter, permits for use in clearing through customs will be required to an increasing extent. We are now issuing project approvals. The plan there is to screen the project for unnecessary United States dollar expenditures, then to determine the value to the Canadian economy as far as dollar exchange is concerned, and either to grant or to refuse the project approval, depending on whether or not the project is helpful to the exchange situation. A good many projects have been disapproved; others have been approved, and others are approved, subject to screening.

Hon. members will appreciate that, once a project is approved, the permits required for the project to the extent authorized will issue automatically. Certain permits have been approved to be used at such time as they are required; for example, for off-the-road motor vehicles, motor vehicles used in logging, in mining, and certain other permits of that type are being issued. At the moment there is no requirement under the Capital Goods Act, because the first order in council making effective part III of this act becomes effective only on March 1.

Mr. GREEN: What does the minister mean by the "Capital Goods Act"?

Mr. HOWE: Capital goods schedule, schedule III of this bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the minister what he means by "screening"?

Mr. FULTON: The only criterion there is at the moment with regard to the granting of permits under schedule III is the minister's own personal decision as to whether or not the project is one which he should approve. I am correct in this assertion, am I not? There will be no general regulation describing the type of project for which a permit may be sought, or is the decision to be reserved personally to the minister without prior indication as to the type of project which might be approved?

Mr. HOWE: The type of project has been generally indicated by statements that have been issued from time to time. The act does provide discretion to the minister as to the type of project that can be approved. There is really no other way to determine which projects are desirable or otherwise. If a law could be passed that would fit every situation that would be very well indeed. Before the automobile schedules were issued, it was necessary to discuss the situation with every group of manufacturer and manufacturers of parts, to make up a formula to fit their particular industry, and to make sure that we were not putting Canadians out of work.

Mr. FULTON: Perhaps I can point out that I did not mean that we should have a law saying—I think this bill is bad anyway, but that is so much water under the bridge—this and that type of project; but the bill itself provides that the governor in council may make regulations with respect to permits. That is what I was thinking of. Is there to be any general indication to industry as to the type of project, circumstances and method by which they can apply for and receive their permits, or is the whole thing to be in the personal discretion of the minister?

Mr. HOWE: There will be regulations applying to specific industries. Regulations that apply to the automobile industry probably would not suit the electrical industry. Each industry is being studied and regulations are being issued as applying to that industry. So far as projects go, the general principles have been laid down as to the type of project that can proceed under present-day conditions, and the type of project that cannot proceed.

My hon. friend asked what we meant by "screening". A construction project is examined to see whether United States content is being used unnecessarily. For instance, if the specifications calls for Indiana limestone where the material might just as well be Queenston limestone the substitution is required to be made. If it is a steel structure where the project could just as well be reinforced concrete, that change is being required before approval can be given. But there must be a measure of flexibility. Regulations can only issue as all sections of the Canadian economy have been examined and those engaged in the industries consulted. All I can say is that there are certain regulations now and there will be more as the capital goods sections are put into effect.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has referred to projects approval.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Am I to understand from that, that approval is given, for example, to the construction of a dam or a building or some other construction project? Can the minister tell us under what authority he can now issue what are called approval projects? I cannot find any authority for approvals of that kind in order in council P.C. 4678. It may be that there is some other authority; but, as I read this order in council, it gives power to issue a permit only for the importation of goods. Apparently the minister has some other sort of document he issues called a project approval. I should like to know under what authority he is now issuing those project approvals.

Mr. HOWE: I assume that the minister has authority to write a letter to someone. A project approval is, in effect, simply a letter from the minister saying that if a project is going ahead and involves so many dollars of United States exchange, based on plans which he has examined, he will be prepared, when the time comes, to issue permits for the required United States imports to be brought in for that project.

A project approval is not a document which can be used for any other purpose; it is simply an undertaking that the person can proceed with the projects with the assurance that the department will issue the permits necessary to allow him to carry out that project.

Mr. GREEN: I thought that was the picture. There we have the whole complaint of the official opposition on the manner in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce and Reconstruction and so on is carrying on. That just makes a farce of our whole statute law and even of the powers to legislate by order in council. It also makes a farce of parliament. We are in this position. The minister has not any authority whatever to issue these documents known as project approvals. He has just admitted that they are merely letters from himself. What is the sense of a scheme like that? If the minister required these powers the government should have come to parliament and asked for them; or, if it could be done under order in council, that is another way in which they could have moved. But here we have a minister of the crown arbitrarily deciding whether or not projects from one end of this country to the other can go ahead. Instead, he writes a letter without any authority whatsoever behind him.

That, Mr. Chairman, is an impossible situation and I am amazed that the government of Canada or of any other democratic country would allow business to be done in that way. We might just as well find out now where we are going, and whether this is the way in which the country is to be run. The man who wants to start a project is entitled to know the authority under which he can be stopped or the authority under which his actions can be controlled, and there is not a vestige of any such authority at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: Look at 43 (d) of the order.

Mr. GREEN: Of what?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of the present order, the regulations with respect to foreign exchange control. It is number 4678.

Mr. GREEN: I have it here 43 (d) of 4678 provides that, until otherwise directed by the Minister of Finance, acting on the advice of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, permits may be granted for the import of goods and equipment of the classes described in appendix nine. That is the only authority this government has at the moment to prohibit these goods, the capital goods. The procedure outlined there is for the Minister of Finance to issue a permit, and all he has to do is to get the advice of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Instead of that course being followed, the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply is arbitrarily taking all the power and writing letters called project approvals, and not giving permits at all for importation. As the hon. member for Rosedale says, where are we? It just means that the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, plus a lot of other things, is doing whatever he wishes, without any curb on him by legislation or by the government, and the people across the country are having to do as he tells them. That I must protest against. It is an intolerable situation and should be remedied without further delay.

Mr. HOWE: I have never heard a more ridiculous statement than the one just made in this house.

Mr. GREEN: You always say that when anyone criticizes you.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member must know that a minister of the crown writes letters on a great many subjects in the course of his duties, and the government is bound by the letters the minister may write. A man is entitled to know whether the project he wishes to start on now is one that he can complete in the course of the dollar program. He writes to the department to find out. He is called in; his project is examined so that a letter may be written giving the information he wants. After the project has been examined, the letter is written, saying it is or it is not a project that can be proceeded with under the present regulations. It is perfectly absurd to say that special powers are required for that. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. GREEN: On that point—

Mr. HOWE: Don't be silly.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. GREEN: I do not mind the minister's remarks of that type. It shows what little concern he has for parliamentary procedure or laws or anything else. That is just the difficulty, and that is exactly why we are in the position in which we now find ourselves. The minister has complete disregard for any sort of legislation or regulation. All he wants is the power to go ahead and do what he thinks should be done, and he attaches absolutely no importance to the formalities that must be gone through. That shows a complete disregard of our whole parliamentary system.

Mr. HOWE: Explain to me the formalities that should be gone through.

Mr. GREEN: Well, you should have some law authorizing you to do these drastic things. You have no power at all to do them. You are just doing them on your own, without authority at all.

Mr. HOWE: But I have the power to stop them.

Mr. WARREN: Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver South would like to take on the job.

Mr. GREEN: I will tell the hon. member for Renfrew North that I do not believe there is another minister in the cabinet who would act as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been doing. I do not believe there is a private member in this house in any party who would undertake to carry on in the way the Minister of Trade and Commerce is doing. with absolutely no authority.

Mr. WARREN: Will the hon. member agree that he did a fine job for Canada?

Mr. GRAYDON: What is under debate anyway?

Mr. KNOWLES: I think the committee should pause a moment to consider the effect of the treatise on parliamentary methods which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just enunciated.

Mr. GRAYDON: Parliamentary?

Mr. KNOWLES: In fact, it is as unparliamentary as it can be. It is a negation of the whole principle of responsible government. The minister stands in this house and says that ministers write letters every day and the government is bound by those letters. I know that my files are full of letters, and I am sure every member has such letters, from ministers telling us time and again they were sorry they could not do so-and-so because they had no authority under the act that parliament had passed. Many times we felt that it was an excuse, that they were not availing themselves of sections in the act or of ministerial prerogatives, but we have had to accept it.

Mr. ABBOTT: That does not apply here.

Mr. KNOWLES: Ministers are bound by the statutory provisions enacted in parliament, but now the minister says that ministers write letters every day and the government is bound by those letters. It is not good enough for the minister to say that the hon. member for Vancouver South is silly.

Mr. PROBE: United States or other foreign exporters to this country are as much interested in the basis on which the permits are being issued as are Canadian importers, and it seems to me that this would be an appropriate time for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to loosen up a little with information and take us into his confidence. He should tell us the over-riding policy under which he would or would not do certain things. I should like to know, with respect to the issuance of permits, particularly in connection with the third schedule to the bill, whether the minister intends to adopt a policy of making certain that every possible portion of the imported commodity has incorporated within it as large a percentage as possible of Canadian material to complete the assembled product; whether or not he is to make it obligatory or conditional with respect to permits in certain lines—and I am thinking of automobiles—that there be an expansion of United States branch plants in Canada; whether or not he is taking any steps to see that the proceeds of the Canadian sale be not immediately transferred to the funds of the foreign country; whether or not a portion of those proceeds should remain on deposit in Canada.

I think these are conditions which the minister might elaborate on. He might tell us whether he is insisting, in order that the imported product be readily accessible on the Canadian market, that for the future the exporters, or our foreign friends, shall take definite steps to import comparable quantities of Canadian products, either for disposal in toto or for processing for inclusion in such articles. Take the automobile industry for example. If it were made obligatory that United States exporters of automobiles to Canada should take the full amount, or a very large amount, of the dollar value of the imported automobile in terms of those parts of that automobile which we are already making in Canada, or which our people could readily make more or less to balance the exchange position, that would be a valid stand for the minister to take. Will he tell us whether or not there are any linkages with other trade plans such as the Marshall plan, or whether or not conditions will be made to permit United States exports to this country; that is, to have a quid pro quo whereby the Americans accept Canadian substitutes in some of their other foreign markets? It seems to me that those are things on which the minister could readily elaborate when he is asking for our approval.

There is perhaps one other thing which the Minister of Finance might indicate. To what extent do we make certain, through the foreign exchange control board or the export board of Canada, that the proceeds of all our Canadian exports to hard currency markets, the hard dollar returns, are, in fact, always brought back to Canada? Those are things that are not clear in my mind. Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce reply as far as he can with respect to the policy questions I have posed?

Mr. LOCKHART: I wish to speak just briefly now. I had intended to make some extended references—

Mr. PROBE: May I not have an answer from the minister?

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps I might reply to the hon. member for Regina City. The purpose of the policy is to use the minimum amount of United States dollars for imports and to earn the maximum amount of United States dollars through export. All the regulations are framed with that in mind. The regulations governing the automobile industry have been published. If my hon. friend will study those I think he will have the general pattern that is being applied to Canadian branch plants manufacturing a wide variety of articles.

Mr. PROBE: Does the minister imply that there are other than press reports covering that? That is all I have seen in connection with the automobile industry.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to table tomorrow a copy of the letter of instructions that has gone out to the industry.

Mr. ABBOTT: To answer the second part of my hon. friend's question as to what steps have been taken to ensure that proceeds of exports in United States dollars are returned to Canada, it is and has been for some time the regulation of the foreign exchange control board that goods can be exported to the United States only for a purchase price in United States dollars, and that those dollars must be brought back to Canada and sold to the board. So far as I know, that regulation has worked effectively.

Mr. LOCKHART: Just about one minute is all I desire at the present time. I had intended to make some extended references along somewhat the same line as those made by the hon. member for Middlesex East; but, after his clear elucidation of the matter of the importation of certain fruits and vegetables, I shall content myself by asking a question. I do not know which minister to appeal to, but I should like one of them to tell me what steps will be taken to clear up the situation which has occurred almost every year. When this proclamation was issued by the government we started off by having no cabbage one day and having them the next.

Mr. WARREN: Who wants cabbage?

Mr. LOCKHART: A little sauerkraut might do for the hon. member. What I should like to know, and I think probably that either minister could answer, is this. Reference has been made to the issuing of permits to allow the importation of many things which have already been referred to and I shall not enumerate them again. With regard to those permits that may be issued, will steps be taken to see that we do not have a repetition of the perennial flooding of our Canadian markets just prior to the time that our own produce comes on the market? If we could just have that flooding eliminated, it would be a tremendous help to the growers.

Mr. ABBOTT: The situation at the moment is, of course, that virtually all or at least a great majority of fresh fruits and vegetables are completely prohibited. There is no seasonal aspect to it at all.

Mr. LOCKHART: There are some quotas.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. The announcement stated that potatoes, onions, cabbages and carrots are to be allowed in under quota or permit. I announced as long ago as early in November that, when it was necessary to do so to insure adequate supplies of those four staple vegetables, permits would be issued. So far, special action has been taken only with respect to cabbage. It will no doubt be necessary to take action in the not distant future with respect to carrots.

Mr. LOCKHART: Can the situation not be controlled in some way, so that just prior to the time that our own products come on the market, we shall not have fifty cars of some product flooding the Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg markets? The products just come in; their arrival seems to be so timed. Surely that can be controlled.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may have been the case in the days before these prohibitions were on, but that can be controlled now.

Mr. FRASER: It will happen in the future, because that is what has happened in other years.

Mr. ABBOTT: There was no prohibition of imports then. There is now. It has been indicated that there will be only a limited exercise of the import of fresh vegetables into Canada, namely, on the four staples I have mentioned—onions, carrots, potatoes and cabbages—if necessary. Virtually all other fresh vegetables are prohibited. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no immediate intention of changing that prohibition. I think it can be taken for granted that permits for the importation of cabbages, potatoes, carrots and onions will not be issued in such a way as to hurt domestic producers of those vegetables.

Mr. FRASER: I have had complaints.

Mr. LOCKHART: There will be no flooding of the markets?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. FRASER: I have had some complaints from my own district. The vegetable men there are wondering if the Minister of Agriculture could not let them know what the situation is to be, so that they could order their seeds for planting in the spring.

Mr. GRAYDON: You will have to get a project approval from the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, I know.

Mr. KNOWLES: Get them to write you a letter.

Mr. FRASER: The farmers here in Canada produced enough vegetables—carrots, cabbage, celery and other things—to hold over until about April of the following spring, until this government came along, gradually kept flooding the market and squeezing the truck grower out of business. They do not want that to happen again.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask only a question or two for the clarification of certain things in my mind. In order that the minister may understand the position—I hope better than I do—I shall read briefly from the bottom of page 1164 of Hansard, where it says this:

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that it may surprise my hon. friend to know that the Canadian automobile industry is not a drain on balance—that is the industry manufacturing in Canada is not. It does not constitute a drain on American funds. Value of exports are in excess of value of imports. The net balance does not represent a drain.

Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario): Does the minister mean a net balance in American funds?

Mr. Howe: The net balance of exports.

Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario): That has not anything to do with this.

Mr. Howe: I say that it is much the same thing. However, it would take all evening to explain that to my hon. friend.

Perhaps I might pause there to say that that was the treatment accorded the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. Then, on the same page of Hansard, speaking to the hon. member for York West, the minister concluded:

That is probably too deep for the hon. member.

Then, speaking today to the hon. member for Vancouver South, the minister told that hon. member that what he was saying was ridiculous, and then added the gentle remark, "Don't be silly."

It seems to me, judging from the last three occasions upon which the minister spoke—and I have placed what he said on record—it is about time he learned there are some people here with at least a trifling bit of ability—that is, of course, aside from himself. We assume that he treats members of the government with the same contempt as he treats us; and that, of course, is just a little bit more power gone to his head.

Then, to quote again from page 1165 of Hansard, the minister said:

As a matter of fact, dollar exports to the United Kingdom at the present time are just as good as exports to the United States, in obtaining American funds, because the balance in excess of the loan is paid for in gold—that is American funds.

If the minister intended to convey that, taking the statement as it stands, dollar exports to the United Kingdom were just as good as exports to the United States, then he certainly misled me, until I had an opportunity of looking into the matter. If we take the words at their face value, he has misled the House of Commons and the country, and for this reason. On the following page the Minister of Finance did explain the matter, because at the top of page 1166 he said this:

If the British take automobiles, they will take them instead of aluminum; that is the answer to that.

I think the statement made by the Minister of Finance is the correct one, although I am sorry he selected aluminum.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was just by way of illustration.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think, as a matter of fact, that Great Britain gets her bauxite from British Guiana.

Mr. ABBOTT: She gets her aluminum ingots from here, though.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think the minister was quite correct in saying that if we got that gold for motorcars, then we simply did not get it for something else. Therefore no one can argue that this whole policy is not a restrictive one. It seems to me that we should be bending our efforts to help rather than to hinder countries like the United Kingdom, which are in difficulties similar to our own. As yet I have heard no reason advanced—certainly no satisfactory reason—as to why we have shut off these exports from elsewhere, because it is now admitted that we have the power to do this. But, lest the Minister of Finance should regard himself as not a sufficiently great authority in the matter—and I think he is—let me quote some observations by the Prime Minister in the house on December 18, as reported at page 423 of Hansard:

In the arrangement for the provision of supplies, however, Canada has not been asked and will not be asked to go further than her financial situation permits. Likewise the United Kingdom will itself decide how to dispose of its present limited financial resources in the way most effective for its recovery.

So that there may be no doubt about the position at all, having the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce leaving the general impression that exports made to the United Kingdom are as good above $45,000,000 in United States dollar value as exports made to the United States, we must all remember that when the British pay for motorcars in gold, as they may in one month or in a series of months, it means that they do not export other articles to us. In other words, this has been a restriction. And one might be quite safe, I think, in using the expression that to a considerable extent it has been a bar to importations from Great Britain to this country.

In view of the fact that, in reply to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, the minister and the hon. member became involved in the matter of balances, as well as that of currency, I consider it worth while to look into the situation with respect to our foreign trade. I have in my hand three documents to which I shall refer by their numbers. These documents are numbered 10-4110, 10-4120 and 10-4130. I am not going to read any portions of them to the committee, but I shall summarize as best I can what they mean. They mean this, that to the end of last year our balance of trade from all countries, excluding gold, was $237·8 million. The gold was practically $100 million—I believe the exact figure is between $90 million and $100 million. This means that we had close to $350 million, or perhaps nearer to $340 million.

As shown in the documents to which I have referred, for the ten months ending January 1, 1948, our net credits extended abroad were $376 million. On that basis, if you take the twelve months it would be approximately $450 million. Therefore, our credits that we extend exceed the over-all balance which we have. I think what I have said gives us a really true picture of what our trading position is.

We have been carrying on this program, austerity or otherwise, and it seems to me that what the government have done is to waken from a sound sleep where they have not been watching with their usual care the mounting trade balance against us, the dollar position which was constantly getting worse. For three months they have operated under this program. To speak broadly, the bill which we have before us does not purport to do more than they are doing at the present time under the authority which is theirs or which they have assumed to be theirs under the order in council passed under the Foreign Exchange Control Act. That act does not expire until sixty days after the meeting of parliament in 1949.

When we remember the draining from the reservoir of goods which took place during the war; when we remember that inventories have been increased exceedingly quickly since the war and certainly very much so within the past eighteen months; when we remember that there has been a heavy stocking up of inventories in view of rumours of the possibility that the action which was taken would never be taken, it brings to my mind the thought that perhaps it would have been better for the government to carry on for another twelve months or for a period prior to the expiry of the act on which they base their present authority, and then the house might not have been bothered at all with this bill.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

The circumstances which I have mentioned, namely, the stocking up by merchants—by merchants, I mean all people selling goods—was such that I believe that within twelve months the situation would have rectified itself to a very large extent or, in any event, would have reduced itself to a trend that was fairly flat. We would have had a much more accurate idea of what our position was in that respect.

It seems to me that what has been done is reminiscent of what was done by Mr. Schacht, who was in charge of things financial in Germany prior to the war. He had to do two things. He had to develop the economy to run the ordinary needs of the country, and he also had to prepare a great armament program. What he did was this. He simply said, "We will estimate the things we need to live and the things we need for the armament program. Therefore we will take control of all foreign exchange arising from German exports and these will be allocated strictly along the lines I have indicated."

Is that not exactly what we are doing here? We are taking charge of all foreign exchange and allocating it through the judgment of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to specific purpose within our own country.

I am not smart enough, I am not sufficiently experienced, nor do I have the knowledge to say that ultimately in Germany, had there not been a war, that action would have failed probably just as quickly as it did because there was a war. What I am trying to say is that the government has been tried and not only has it been found wanting, but it has led us to disaster and chaos. Do not let any one say that I am predicting that for this country of ours. What I am saying is that it is basically wrong.

It is true that we are told these are only temporary measures. If they be but temporary measures, it seems to me that it should say so somewhere in the bill. The bill is entirely silent with respect to that.

I hope that no one in this country will accept the view which, by inference, may plainly be taken from the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely, that exports to Britain in United States dollars are just as good as exports to the United States. I am not saying that it was done deliberately, but that is a complete distortion of fact. The minute they use their limited supply of gold to take care of motorcars, then they have to give up something else. What we would have accomplished is this. It is true that they may do the allocating of their limited supplies of gold, but it is equally true that we choke off these people and rid them of all chances to re-establish themselves by trading with us, their sister commonwealth.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to say something more about this question of permits, and I should like to return to what the minister said on Thursday night last. I should like to read just a sentence or two of what he said. We are talking about the automobile industry, to which the hon. member for Calgary West has referred, and the minister said, as reported on page 1165 of Hansard:

> However the point I make is that it seems to us that the industry is capable of contributing much more in American funds than it has been doing, and the regulations are framed with that in mind. I shall be very glad to get the regulations and either put them on Hansard or send them to my hon. friend. I have sent up for them.

I want the minister to tell us about these regulations, and then I want him to give more detailed figures of purchases, imports and exports by the automobile industry. I am not able to find figures which bear out what he said. Even giving the words he used the most favourable interpretation, while I agree fully with the hon. member for Calgary West, it is entirely improper to allocate gold against the motorcar industry and say that is as good as United States dollars and therefore we have a surplus. What I want to know is whether, even on that basis, we have a surplus. The figures I have show the contrary. I should like to hear the minister's figures.

Mr. HOWE: Since this is not my bill I have not all the figures before me. I sent for them on the day in question and I had them here, but by then nobody seemed interested, so I put them back in the file. I shall have them here after three o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The figures for the motorcar industry are closely in my mind. I happen to have been examining the position of imports and exports in dollars, and I must say that I was surprised myself to find that, on balance, the exports produced more than was represented than by the drain on dollars through imports.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Does that include tractors?

Mr. HOWE: No; motor vehicles. Tractors are made in Canada only to a very limited extent.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was the minister talking about automobiles, trucks and parts?

Mr. HOWE: That is right, of a class or kind made in Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then I am going to suffer a great disappointment tomorrow, because I cannot be here to hear the minister's figures, and I know they are wrong.

Mr. FLEMING: Section 3 (2)(a) refers to goods that have not been delivered but were in the possession of a common carrier before November 18, 1947, and were in the course of continuous and uninterrupted transportation to Canada on the day preceding that day. That provision is a counterpart of the provision in P.C. 4678. I suggest that that provision ought to be liberalized, if one may use that expression with a small "l" without any political connotations. Many cases of genuine hardship must have been brought to the minister's attention, arising out of the strict enforcement of that provision, and I submit that the provision itself is not a suitable one.

It is axiomatic, as I believe the Minister of Finance will agree, that new legislation ought to avoid any interference with existing contractual obligations unless there is some over-riding principle involved. In the transactions of the kind I shall refer to there is no question of exchange involved. They are cases in which purchases had been made of United States goods before November 17; the money had been paid, and there was no question of exchange involved. In some of the cases of which I have personal knowledge, the goods had been warehoused or had made perhaps the first leg of a journey, but were not in continuous and uninterrupted transit on the day the government chose to put the new program into effect. Those cases were automatically excluded by the act, even though no question of exchange was involved.

Here is Mr. Jones who has the good fortune to have his goods in movement towards Canada, whereas Mr. Smith alongside him had also completed his purchases of United States goods but was waiting perhaps for the proper season or because he did not have storage room or for some other perfectly good business reason, and so his goods were not in continuous and uninterrupted transit at the moment when the new regulations came into effect. I hope that the minister will treat these as cases of hardship.

I do not believe that it will open the door to fraud if you enlarge the exception to include cases of goods purchased and paid for which were not actually in uninterrupted transit on November 18. Surely to goodness, ample proof can be had that a transaction had been completed, ownership had passed and the purchase price was paid. I cannot see that there would be any difficulty in policing transactions to that extent.

There is another feature to this provision. Take the case of the Canadian importer who perhaps has stretched his means to the limit to complete a purchase in the United States. He has been wanting to bring the goods in here and has stretched his financial resources to the limit. He has completed his purchase. He is prevented from moving the goods to Canada. He has, therefore, to sell his goods at the best price he can obtain for them over there, to sacrifice them, being at a disadvantage, or in the other case he is up against an equally serious disadvantage in performing his contractual obligations. I wish the minister would give the committee a clear assurance that, in cases where purchases had been completed and there can be no question whatever of any other requirement of United States dollars being involved, the mere fact that the goods were not in continuous and uninterrupted transit at one minute after midnight on November 18, will not prevent importers from bringing in goods which are theirs in fact, and where there is no question of United States dollars being involved.

Mr. ABBOTT: That question was given most careful consideration before the provision was put in the order and a test of continuous and uninterrupted transit was accepted as the one which should be followed. The particular hardship clause is there to be availed of in cases where the importer would suffer exceptional hardship by reason of the fact that he could not bring the goods into Canada because they were not in transit at the time the order came into effect. In the case of the importer who had paid for the goods in the United States, he, of course, became the owner and he could warehouse them there if he wanted to, or he could sell them and bring the proceeds back into Canada and that would represent a conservation of United States dollars. The provision was based on the experience of other countries in imposing similar restrictions. Sweden had to take similar action last March, and where they attempted to recognize existing contracts the restrictions did not become effective until six months after being put into force. There has to be a line drawn somewhere, and there is the hardship clause to take care of exceptional cases. As I said to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, a considerable number of permits have been issued under the hardship clause, some 5,000 odd, representing goods of a value in the order of $7,000,000.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. FLEMING: In section 3(1) the minister is given power to "issue, vary or revoke permits for the import of such goods". I have looked carefully through the act many times to find a provision which clearly defines the conditions under which the minister may revoke a permit, once granted. It seems to me, with respect, that once a permit has been granted, it should not be revoked except under clear circumstances, for instance, where there has been fraudulent misrepresentation to the minister in support of the application. There ought to be clear provisions in the bill some place, not necessarily here, dealing with the matter, and it should not be left simply to regulations to define the circumstances under which the minister may revoke a permit which he has issued.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was discussed to some extent this afternoon, and I pointed out that it is the language which is used in the Export-Import Act. The question of revocation of permits relates more particularly to the quotas which are, as the committee appreciates, a form of permit. For instance, if a quota holder should go bankrupt, his permit, consisting of a quota, should be revoked. If he fails to distribute the goods equitably in the district in which he is doing business; for instance, if he has a quota of import oranges and does not distribute them equitably we should have the power to revoke his permit. Suppose an importer in Halifax, for example, has a large quota of import oranges, and distributes them all in the Halifax area, and does not send any over into Sydney—I am just using that as an illustration—it is desired to have the power to revoke his permit if he does not distribute his quota fairly. I think under a permit system, unfortunate as it may be, it is necessary to have the power to revoke accompany the power to issue. I agree with my hon. friend that it would probably be as well, in drafting regulations, to try to indicate as explicitly as possible the conditions under which permits would be issued, varied or revoked; but in the very nature of things it would probably be impracticable to foresee all the circumstances under which it might be necessary to exercise that power.

Mr. FLEMING: I should think, Mr. Chairman, that while there may be difficulty in achieving an exhaustive enumeration of all the circumstances under which it may be necessary to preserve the power to revoke a permit once issued, nevertheless there should be provisions in the act which define the principles under which the minister may proceed in revoking a permit.

A fundamental criticism of this bill—I do not need to repeat it because it has been said times without number—is that it simply puts power in the hands of the minister to do a hundred and one things, and it does not contain clear statutory provisions as to the limits within which he is to proceed. All the provisions are designed to put power in the hands of the minister, and there are no clear limitations on the power or effective statutory directives made by which he is to proceed. There is too much power left in his hands. While I well appreciate, as I have indicated, the necessity for reserving the power to revoke, I do say most earnestly that this bill ought to contain a clear statutory definition of the terms on which the minister may revoke.

Mr. ABBOTT: This subject of revocation is an important one. I agree with my hon. friend that it would be desirable to try to spell out just as completely as possible in the regulations what these conditions are, but hon. members will recall that during the war it was necessary to have control measures of this kind. Unfortunate as it may be under ordinary circumstances, it is necessary to their effective administration in the interests of the public that there should be a considerable measure of legislation by regulation.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Bureaucratic control.

Mr. ABBOTT: One may describe it as he likes. I am afraid it is inevitable, and one cannot make these control measures work without them. I do not like them any better than anyone else. I had hoped we would be out of these things long before this; nevertheless sometimes it is necessary to do unpleasant things. This legislation is an unpleasant necessity, and if it is to work, and work smoothly and properly, there must be the flexibility that is necessary to enable it to be done. One of the methods is by the enactment of regulations which are made public, which have to be published in the Canada Gazette, and which the public know. But to attempt to spell it all out in a statute, to foresee all the various circumstances which will arise in a statute, I suggest is completely unrealistic. It would defeat the very purpose which we are trying to accomplish.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have not taken any part in this discussion and I do not intend to take much now. I had occasion this afternoon to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce dealing in his usual cavalier way with questions asked by the opposition. I can quite understand the attitude of the minister, because he had been flitting from power to power, until today he believes that, as far as parliament is concerned, it is just an institution before which he appears from time to time. But when asked questions he uses the usual method he has of referring to the statements made by those in the opposition—

Mr. HOWE: Thank you very much.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, I am glad to receive at least thanks from the right hon. gentleman. That is quite different from the usual—

Mr. HOWE: Was it something you wanted to know after all that?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: All I have to say, sir, is this. My right hon. friend invariably resorts to abuse when asked questions that are reasonable and fair. I can quite understand his attitude. He has passed through one dictatorship to the other. He took over radio; he controlled air, and now he controls wheat marketing in this country; and finally he is going to control the entire economic development of our country. I point out this in connection with what the hon. member for Eglinton said, when we place in the hands of a minister the absolute power that has been placed in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, surely parliament has a right to ask that these powers shall be exercised in accordance with law and statute passed by parliament or regulation which parliament knows of. I ask the minister this question: is that an unrealistic suggestion?

Mr. HOWE: I am afraid my hon. friend gets himself mixed up with parliament as a whole.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: As a matter of fact, sir, when I see the powers that are conferred here I look back and I read what the Prime Minister said in 1933, and I ask myself, has democracy so changed in this country? In the session of 1932-33 the question of the allocation of power to the executive was under discussion. and the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 3187 of Hansard:

> If this parliament parts with the power of parliamentary control over legislation generally and places that power in the hands of the executive, I say, we shall find very soon the contention being made in different parts of the country that if one individual or executive can exercise all the powers of government then a class can just as well do the same.

Sir, I suggest this to you, never in the history of this country, and even today in Britain under socialism, has any minister been as powerful as the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this government today. It is not very long ago in the city of Toronto that he made a great speech after coming back from Britain. He pointed out the great danger of placing almost absolute power in the hands of one man. He spoke of its danger and how such a condition of affairs would not be permitted to exist in this country.

Mr. HOWE: When was this?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That was in a speech made in Toronto in October last.

Mr. HOWE: To whom?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: To the board of trade of the city of Toronto, after the minister's return from abroad.

Mr. HOWE: I never addressed the board of trade in the city of Toronto in my life.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It just indicates how the minister forgets some of the statements he makes.

Mr. HOWE: I never addressed the board of trade in the city of Toronto in my life.

The CHAIRMAN: May I suggest to the committee that they discuss the powers under this act and not go so far afield. At present the hon. member is discussing a speech that was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce before he was Minister of Trade and Commerce and before this act came into effect. I suggest to the committee that if we are to make the progress which the committee desires we should stay within the rules of the house and discuss the clauses which are before the committee.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is what I am trying to do, and I wish to thank you, sir, for having pointed out that there is reason for the minister's change of attitude, because I was referring to statements made before he became Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does Your Honour say to me that, in connection with the question of powers, I may not refer to some of the lessons of democracy given this house on occasion?

The CHAIRMAN: I think it would be more strictly in accordance with the rules, now that we are in committee, that members should discuss only the clauses before us, and not discuss other questions which, though relevant to this question, are not strictly before the committee at the present time.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: As long as you keep me directed so that I shall stay within the rules, I will try to do so.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. HOWE: When do we come to fundamental rights and freedoms?

An hon. MEMBER: Every time we deal with you we come to them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Fundamental rights and freedoms. That expression coming from my right hon. friend is just a series of words, not practised by him at any time.

Now, for the purpose of building up what I have to say, may I finish the quotation? Incidentally, may I say to my right hon. friend that I said that it was the board of trade, and that this was the only institution he spoke to in Toronto after he came back from abroad. I believe it was the businessmen of Toronto.

An hon. MEMBER: The Liberal businessmen.

The CHAIRMAN: Again, I cannot see what that has to do with the clause under consideration. I believe the committee does want to proceed with its work and I again ask the hon. member to discuss clause 3.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have sat here and listened to the debates that have gone on and have not had anything to say, and I heard a discussion this afternoon, and even this evening, which I considered relevant to the section in question, as were the remarks that I was making. However, Your Honour rules this committee and I bow to your ruling.

I was dealing generally with the question of controls, and I am sure Your Honour will not consider me astray if I refer to a statement made by the Minister of Finance a few moments ago in regard to bureaucratic controls.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was my hon. friend's phrase, not mine.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, but accepted with approval by my hon. friend.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily with approval.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He certainly does not disagree. You know, sir, we have come to this point in this country. All along, those on this side have spoken about bureaucratic controls and how the people have been strangled and stifled by them, and now the minister admits the necessity of bureaucratic controls this evening.

Mr. ABBOTT: Controls, anyway.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He admitted the necessity of bureaucratic controls. As a matter of fact, that is a long cry from the Prime Minister's statements of a few years ago. I am sure he will admit what the advisory council of the national Liberal federation enunciated at the recent convention. Here for the first time is an admission by those who direct that party that bureaucratic controls are, in fact, necessary in Canada. I read from the section dealing with fiscal policy:

> The advisory council of the national Liberal federation reaffirm its faith in the system of free enterprise, accepting the proposition that government of bureaucratic control or regulation may become necessary in an economy based upon a system of free enterprise.

It gives various reasons why bureaucratic control is necessary, and finally declares:

> . . . to overcome a crisis developed by a temporary emergency.

That, sir, is the greatest admission we have ever been able to secure that there is, in fact, in this country, and has been, bureaucratic control, and it is part and parcel of the policy of this government.

May I ask this question? When did the Minister of Finance first seek an opinion regarding the use of the Foreign Exchange Control Act for a purpose which parliament never intended?

Mr. ABBOTT: My recollection is, early in August.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Early in August. At that time the amount of our foreign exchange was gradually going down. It had diminished to a great extent at that time. The situation was dangerous. I will not give quotations on this occasion; but not only did the hon. member for York West warn the government in June last, but throughout the summer newspapers in the country were warning them. Yet, did the government act? In August, the minister admits, he realized the situation, because if he had not realized it he would not have gone to the law officers of the crown to find out if there was not some way whereby he could get around that situation. I say, with all the respect I have for the Minister of Finance, that no more serious insult to parliament has been committed by any minister than by the Minister of Finance when he admits that parliament was led by the government to believe that this act would be used for one purpose only, and the government, in the face of the promise to parliament, endeavoured to ascertain whether they could circumvent an act passed by parliament for one purpose in order to achieve another purpose.

That indicates how far this government was prepared to go in order to circumvent parliament. If the situation was serious in August, why then did the government wait until November 17? Why was parliament called? Why was parliament not called during that period? Why was it necessary to do something that has never been done before in history, to impose taxation by order in council? Why, if this government intended to respect parliament, was not something done between August and November 17 to convene parliament? That is the question to which I think the minister will have to give a better answer than the rather offhand, haphazard answer that he has given up to the present time.

I am now going to ask the minister certain questions, and they can be answered either at once or later as the case may be. How much United States currency is it estimated that during the period of a year will be saved on prohibition; that is, on commodities directly prohibited? And on commodities subject to quota—on automobiles, and on tourist expenditures in the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have given some of that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: You have not given all of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I can give some of them. As I have said before, we estimated tourist expenditures at $30,000,000 to $40,000,000; but that can only be an estimate. I think I can probably give the prohibitions and quotas right now if my hon. friend will wait for just a moment.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Very well.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is estimated, between prohibitions and quotas, at approximately $300 million. I do not know that I have a breakdown of the articles on the prohibited list and those on the quota list. That is based on last year's importation of those articles.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is a full year?

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be operating for a full twelve months' period; that is correct. I can perhaps give that in a little more detail tomorrow or a little later on.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what the anticipated savings of United States exchange will be on capital goods that ordinarily would have come into the country but for the refusal on his part to grant permits in individual cases. What is the estimate in that connection?

Mr. HOWE: It is impossible to make an estimate. We can make estimates in various individual fields only as we study them. For instance, the estimate that has been given to me by our economics branch in the automobile field is $70,000,000 per annum. But until other fields are studied, a formula devised and estimates prepared, it is impossible to say what the over-all position will be.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The ministers apparently held a joint press conference in November last. Is it not a fact that they stated at that time that, on the basis of figures which they had before them as far as capital goods were concerned, at least $200 million would be saved thereby?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I recall that at the time, following the discussions which we had with our officials, it was felt that any estimate as to capital goods would be perhaps not a guess but pretty nearly a guess, because it is so difficult to know at what rate people would want to go ahead with capital expansion, what portion would be absolutely essential to be allowed to go on, and so on. So we never felt at any stage that any accurate estimate could be formed as to what would be the savings on the capital goods side of the program.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Was there not an estimate given?

Mr. ABBOTT: I remember that at the press conference we were careful to state that the estimates in that particular field, and in the others too, were only estimates and should be taken as such.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And the estimate given was $200 million?

Mr. HOWE: On capital goods?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: What are the other items? The hon. member has the statement there.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The other items are: on prohibitions, $150 million, and quotas, $120 million. That is $270 million in all. The minister now says the estimate would be approximately $300 million. Automobiles were given at $35,000,000 in that case; tourists at $35,000,000 and capital goods at $200,000,000. There was also an estimate, was there not, on how much gold production would be increased in this country?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think so.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I obtained my information from the London Free Press of November 19, and the estimate on new gold given on that day, as reported, was $50,000,000. I should also like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what have been the savings to date in those various items. I do not know which minister to ask. Possibly I will ask the Minister of Finance. What have been the total savings to date under those various items?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is impossible to say, because we have had only a couple of months of operation. Any estimate of the savings must be made on the assumption that the volume of imports, on both prohibited goods and imported goods, would continue at the same rate as they had during the preceding twelve months. The best criterion or a partial one is the position of our exhange account which I gave the other day. At the end of January it was approximately $514 million, up from a low of $461 million, I think, on December 17. But it is hard to pinpoint the savings in this group or that group. We shall have monthly figures under tariff item classifications for the prohibited items and for the quota items.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister has none of those yet?

Mr. ABBOTT: We may possibly have the December figures. I shall have to check on that. We would not have anything later than the December figures, but we may possibly have a breakdown on those. I would have to check on that and see.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If the minister has those, he will let us have them?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On the occasion of this conference the Minister of Trade and Commerce allegedly stated that certain industries in this country were to be given priority because they are capable of expanding exports to the United States; in other words, in the granting of permits for the importation of capital goods, certain particular industries were to be given priority. Has any determination been made as to which these industries are? Are there any regulations which indicate that a definite policy in that regard is being followed?

Mr. HOWE: I have stated several times that in the issuing of project approvals, approvals are given for industries which are improving the United States exchange situation. A good many have been granted. I suppose my hon. friend will ask to whom they have been granted. I cannot give him that information just now, but it is a routine procedure. A considerable staff is engaged in exactly that work of determining whether the project is one that will improve Canada's United States exchange position. If so, the approval is granted. If, on the other hand, it is a project that will be a drain on the United States exchange position, the project approval is not granted.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But are there no regulations?

Mr. HOWE: Definitely.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Are no definite principles enunciated?

Mr. HOWE: Definitely.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister lay on the table of the house a copy and let us see the general principles on which he acts? I am sure he will agree that that should be the case. If that is not so, the situation lends itself to discrimination on the part of the minister. In other words, it places the minister in a position where he can say to one manufacturer in a certain industry that he will give him no permit and to another manufacturer of a like product that a permit will be granted. Unless there is something of a definite rule, the minister might very well find, however he might back up and be adverse to this being considered, that political fitness would become the qualification for the issuing of permits. It is in that respect that I ask the question.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is taking that from the sewer of his own mind.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is that?

Mr. JACKMAN: You are doing that from the sewer of your own mind.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Chairman, that is a typically polite remark on the part of the minister, and I ask for an immediate withdrawal of that statement.

Mr. HOWE: In the last eight years I have had probably more opportunity than any other man in public life to favour my political friends and punish my political enemies, but never on any occasion have I had an insinuation that it is a thing that I am likely to do; and I will not take it from my hon. friend or anybody else.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am accepting the minister as being the custodian of all perfection. Nevertheless, I want that statement withdrawn.

Mr. HOWE: I will not withdraw it.

Mr. WARREN: I suggest that the hon. member for Lake Centre withdraw his insinuation.

The CHAIRMAN: Probably the language on both sides has been quite strong. The Minister of Trade and Commerce used the word "sewer" which, I think, is probably too strong. Perhaps he would like to change that word.

Mr. HOWE: There is no reason in the world why I should. This is not my bill. There is no reason why a member of the opposition should get up and make insinuations of that kind, which are wholly uncalled for. Why should I apologize?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, the minister has said that the thoughts of the hon. member for Lake Centre as expressed, were from the sewer of his own mind. No one in this house can get away with a remark of that kind. It should be withdrawn, without qualification.

Mr. WARREN: I suggest that the insinuation that the minister was ever guilty of the suggestion made ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. MacINNIS: Strictly as a neutral, and possibly to throw some oil on the troubled waters, may I say that I was listening carefully to what was said by the hon. member for Lake Centre. While the minister might have felt that the language used by the hon. member was provocative, I do not believe that it was, actually, in the context in which it was used. As I heard him, he was not referring to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce might do. What he was saying was what this legislation would give the minister power to do—and that is an altogether different thing. Perhaps it is unfortunate that the minister has to take some of this, but I think the minister's statement was uncalled for, in the way it was put.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, I was sitting in the committee like any other member, and the hon. member rose in his seat and proceeded to read me a lecture. But if what the hon. member for Lake Centre said is what the hon. member for Vancouver East has just said, there was no call for my remark.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is it withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN: The minister was under the impression that the hon. member for Lake Centre—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was under the impression that the hon. member for Lake Centre was suggesting that he was using his power improperly. I think it is clear now that the hon. member for Lake Centre had no such intention. In view of that, I would suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should withdraw his remark.

Mr. HOWE: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate that.

Mr. HOWE: Just address yourself to the Chair, not to me; I am tired of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not talking to you.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask hon. members to address the Chair.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate that—

An hon. MEMBER: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: The remark has been withdrawn.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am pointing out, as the hon. member for Vancouver East stated, that without regulation executive tyranny is possible in a case such as this. The minister has now stated that under no circumstances should such a thing be said. Then I ask him what possible objection he could have to accepting a regulation so that each industry would know whether it qualifies to receive a permit for the importation of capital goods from the United States. In that way every suggestion that unfairness is possible, that caprice has been exercised, that injustice has been done by way of discrimination will be removed entirely; for each and every one who applies will realize that in certain industries permits will be granted, if extensions will meet the exchange situation, whereas in other industries permits will not be granted, regardless of circumstances.

After all, the identity of the individual minister of the crown is not at issue here. The matter at issue is that parliament is asked under this legislation voluntarily to give up and to surrender its rights and to place them in the hands of one or two ministers to determine for an indefinite period.

It started off with the minister's statement that in a few months everything would be well. But since this debate has started, that "few months" has become an indefinite date in the future. We in this parliament are asked to give power which might not be of an emergency nature, and which may be permanent; for all the record of the last few years has shown that when parliament has surrendered a power temporarily, in the ordinary course of events that power has tended to become permanent, and a complete loss on the part of parliament, and its right.

Will the minister not reconsider the situation?—I make an appeal—and if I cannot make it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then I make it to the Minister of Finance—to reconsider this, and to tell the committee in some businesslike detail, so that he who runs may read and understand, what general principles are to be adopted. So far as permits are concerned, in respect of capital goods, those industries which will not receive permits should be designated, and those which will receive them should also be placed on the list, showing that applications from them would in ordinary circumstances be affirmatively accepted.

On the occasion of the press conference—and I have various press reports here—the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated, as it is reported in the Ottawa Journal of November 18, that the government would encourage and increase the production of coal. And he indicated that, in order to increase the production of coal in Canada, the government might be more generous in the matter of subsidies. Then he went on to say that it would even consider assistance in the export of Canadian coal, if paid in United States dollars. I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what, if anything, has been done to carry out the suggestion or plan enunciated on that occasion.

Mr. HOWE: I did not hear the reference. The hon. member referred to the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It was a statement made at a press conference.

Mr. HOWE: Every pound of coal that has been produced in Canada has been marketed, and every encouragement that I know of, has been given. If a subsidy was required to move boats, or to move coal by ship, such subventions have been provided. If boats have been required, assistance has been given to obtain boats.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Have there been any subventions since November 18?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Extra ones?

Mr. HOWE: Nothing outside the scope of the subventions, but there have been new applications.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Probably the minister could tell us which companies received extra subventions since November 18?

Mr. HOWE: Dosco.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And who else?

Mr. HOWE: That is all.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is all?

Mr. HOWE: Those were the only subventions required.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Were there any other applications?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No other applications?

Mr. HOWE: What clause is my hon. friend speaking to now, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. WARREN: That is what I want to know.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am speaking to the question of a permit. After all, we are granting certain powers to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but we in parliament do not seem to be able to get a complete answer to these questions.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not believe the question of subventions is involved in this, although the question of permits is.

Mr. GRAYDON: Surely that is part and parcel of the general situation we are discussing.

Mr. HOWE: Coal subventions, do you mean?

Mr. GRAYDON: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: What section in the bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: It could apply to the constructive part of the program, but it has nothing to do with the restrictive side of it.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 3 carry?

Mr. FULTON: The minister has just taken exception to a remark made. I wonder if he could explain the necessity for what seems to me otherwise a quite unnecessary and indefinite state of suspension in connection with Canadian industries. He spoke earlier this evening of a list of what he called project approvals. As I understand the proposition, the Minister of Finance is in a position to give a permit to anyone who applies for imports. Why should the minister of reconstruction take it to himself; why should he have the power, or why should he follow the course of writing a letter saying, "Your project is one in connection with which I might give a permit," or "I will give a permit when the permits come into force." Why could the Minister of Finance not simply get the approval or advice of the minister of reconstruction and give the permit now? Why put the thing on the precarious basis of a letter which says, "At some time in the future I may give a permit"?

Mr. HOWE: A project might require a vast variety of permits. It might require a permit for the importation of structural steel, a permit for specific items of machinery and so on. It is all very well to give permits, but the applicant is not ready to specify his requirements, and there is no purpose in asking him to file under every tariff item that may be involved since the assurance can be given that if and when he needs permits he will obtain them.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I rise to a question of privilege. This morning no less a person than the Prime Minister extended greetings to the leader of the C.C.F. party. The hon. member for Renfrew North extended greetings to the hon. member for Selkirk. I want to extend greetings to the hon. member for Greenwood who has returned for his annual visit. I hope he is fully recovered in health.

Mr. GRAYDON: That was totally uncalled for, if I may say so.

Mr. FULTON: Do I understand the minister to say that he then gives tentative approval for applications which may be received in the future? Is that the effect of the letter of approval?

Mr. HOWE: A manufacturer may want to erect an industrial plant, and he desires to know that if he undertakes a project of that kind he will be able to procure the United States contents required by the project. He asks that simple question and he obtains from the Department of Trade and Commerce either a yes or no answer to his question. If the answer is yes, he is able to proceed with the project knowing that he will obtain his United States contents. If the answer is no, he does not start his project and get himself involved because he has received pretty fair assurance that he will not be able to build it.

Mr. FULTON: Is this letter a tentative application?

Mr. HOWE: Call it that if you will.

Mr. FULTON: I am just trying to find out what reliance the manufacturer or the person who is considering a project can place on that letter if he has not made application.

I am trying to find out upon what basis the minister says that he will or will not give permits when application is made.

Mr. HOWE: The application is made on a form and the facts are examined by the appropriate officers. If the project is of any considerable size the applicant appears before the officers of the department and gives them any explanations they require. Then the facts are presented to me with a recommendation and a letter is issued accordingly, or approval is issued accordingly in the form of a letter. My hon. friend wants to know if it is binding. The man does not have to go through with his project because he gets approval and therefore it would not be binding on him. If a minister of the crown writes a letter, it is binding on the minister.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I understood the minister to say earlier in answer to the hon. member for Lake Centre that at least one reason for his being hesitant about making regulations along the line which were suggested by the hon. member for Lake Centre and which seem to me to be absolutely sound was that it was still too soon to determine just how much currency could be allowed to this or that industry. If the minister is not sure, when project A comes in, that he will allocate so much to the steel industry or so much to the motorcar industry or so much to some other industry, how is he able to decide on the project? How is the man who is undertaking the project to know whether this is decided on some general principle, or whether it is just the absolutely uncontrolled decision of the minister, based upon no reason that anyone can hold the minister to?

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps he will not be able to decide that, but at least he will know whether he can go ahead.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I imagine it is really a waste of time.

Mr. HOWE: I think so.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But maybe it is time we have to waste. The minister is supremely uninterested, absolutely uninterested in the idea of people having rights. The minister laughs. I think the idea of rights is something that he considers rather ridiculous. Apparently his colleagues have given him this power. We have objected in this house to order in council government, but we have got away beyond that. We shall soon be looking back to the days of order in council government and thinking that that was a good time, that we had the judgment of at least a dozen men, some of them good men; but now we have only the judgment of one minister, even though he has a lot of portfolios.

We have not yet been able to interest the minister in our idea. I know very well the minister regards this house as being a tiresome place. He is bored when he has to come here to talk to us. He regards it as a waste of time and he shows that by his demeanour, I will not say never, but he seldom tries really to answer our questions in a way which will satisfy us, as some of his colleagues do. His whole attitude is that it is rather impertinent to ask questions. That is the impression I get. But I am going to ask this question and I am going to keep on asking it until the minister answers it.

Mr. HOWE: I understand that my hon. friend thinks it is the inherent right of any man to build anything he likes, provided that he has the money to pay for it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is just a rhetorical answer.

Mr. HOWE: You asked me a rhetorical question.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, I did not. I recognize that we have got into strange times, partly due to the action of the government, if you like, but I will not emphasize that; I recognize that we have reached a point where we have to use some unusual expedients. All we are asking is that we have some remnant of the liberties under which we used to live. I think there are some ministers here who would like to leave us with some residue of those liberties, but, so far as the minister of reconstruction et cetera is concerned, I do not think he is interested in the idea.

I think we should stay here until we either get him interested or get somebody else interested. The hon. member for Lake Centre asked a reasonable and sensible question. He asked if there were any regulations, if there was anything anyone could appeal to. I put that up to the minister. He asked me if I thought any man in Canada could build anything he liked just of his own sweet will. That is not a serious contribution to the situation. All I am asking is whether there is something short of the minister's uncontrolled jurisdiction, whether there are some means whereby a man will have some rights other than those granted by the minister's sweet will.

Mr. HOWE: Now we are getting on common ground. I more than any man in this house believe that people should have the widest possible freedom to spend their money as they like, and I have explained to the committee the difficulty of administering building control on that very ground. The present regulation has reference to only one view point. Is the project helpful either in earning more United States dollars or in saving United States dollars? That is the test. If it is a factory, what does the factory make? Is it something that can be exported? Is it likely to save dollars by avoiding an import? Is it likely to be convertible into an export? If it cannot meet two of these tests there is every reason why the project should not proceed. If it simply adds to the amenities of living the permit is not issued. If it simply adds somewhat to the comfort of the situation it is not likely to be issued. We have a larger capital expenditure program planned than this country can afford. It must be cut back. Its cut back is dependent on the value of the project in the present economic situation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think that is a sensible explanation and we are getting on common ground at last. But I cannot believe that is the exclusive test, because the minister himself the other day said a thing that, I imagine, is correct. He said that, so far as individual items are concerned, if it is a replacement of a worn-out part, the permit would issue automatically. That is in contravention of what the minister has just said, because it would apply to any company whether producing United States dollars or not. There must be other regulations as well. That does not come within the four corners of what the minister said a moment ago.

Coming back to what the member for Lake Centre asked, we have asked repeatedly that the regulation shall be published so that people will have some knowledge of what their rights are. I do not think that is an unreasonable request. The minister is going to bring down tomorrow the regulations for the motorcar industry. That may give us a pattern which can be applied elsewhere.

Mr. HOWE: I think I explained earlier that we are drawing up regulations for industries as rapidly as we can; but, naturally, before publishing the regulations, we have to test them carefully. It might be all very well for some of our officers to sit in an ivory tower and plan regulations for a great industry having ramifications all across the country. Those regulations might look good here in Ottawa; but, until they are tested against the industry as a whole and the repercussions of their application are estimated, it would be dangerous to file them. It might do a great deal of unnecessary harm.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister said that the project will be approved according to whether it earns or saves United States dollars. For what period of time does the minister suggest that this test should be applied? Must it earn or save United States dollars within a matter of six months or a year, or is it five or ten years ahead, or something of that kind? Can the minister say what is in his mind now as to the period of time that will govern his judgment in making a decision?

Mr. HOWE: It must be obvious to my hon. friend that the time must be flexible. The last project I saw that came up for approval was a pulp mill on Vancouver island. It will not earn United States dollars for eighteen months, and yet it will contribute to the permanent solution of the problem we are tackling. I hope my hon. friend will not quote me now as saying that it must be eighteen months. If it is six weeks, so much the better.

Mr. MERRITT: We had made a little progress. We find that a project which might earn United States dollars in eighteen months will get a permit. Is the minister thinking further ahead, of long-term additions to capital expenditures on development of the country, whether or not they would save United States dollars? During this period of restrictions, will capital development be permitted only if it saves United States dollars, or might there not be circumstances under which an industry suitable to Canada, but which does not replace United States products, would be permitted to be constructed?

Mr. HOWE: If my hon. friend will mention one industry I shall try to give him an answer.

Mr. HATFIELD: Has this program not resulted in a shortage of United States refrigerators and boxcars coming into Canada which might have been used for the shipment of Canadian goods back to the United States, thereby securing United States dollars?

Mr. HOWE: Does my hon. friend want cars to ship potatoes?

Mr. HATFIELD: There used to be 1,000 cars a day come in from the United States loaded with fresh fruits and vegetables and other produce. Immediately this order went into effect, these cars stopped coming into Canada, which cut off our supply of cars for the shipment of Canadian goods back to the United States, thereby preventing the shipment of Canadian goods across the line which would have brought in United States dollars.

Mr. HOWE: I would be very sorry to know there were shipments of Canadian goods which were not crossing the border because we had not the cars. I thought we had an ample number of cars for our shipments to the United States.

Mr. HATFIELD: I may inform the minister that there is a great shortage of cars, especially refrigerator cars which come up from the United States loaded with fresh fruits and vegetables. We used to ship back in those cars potatoes from Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and probably Ontario, which brought in United States dollars. The same is true of boxcars. As soon as this order went into effect, the Canadian railways refused to allow their cars to go across to the United States, because they did not want them to come back empty. Only coal cars are coming in now from the United States, and they are not suitable for shipping Canadian goods such as newsprint, potatoes, pulpwood and many other goods which would have brought in United States dollars. As soon as this order went into effect, it created a great shortage of cars.

Mr. MERRITT: To refer to my earlier question, what about machinery for a sawmill or logging machinery imported from the United States for use in the lumber industry? These would not necessarily come in under permit for definite projects. It cannot be decided that the importation of any one of these articles is certain to produce more United States dollars. There must be a closer definition than the one he gave to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario; there must be a closer definition than the simple criteria. How is he to know whether the approval he gives earns more United States dollars than the money spent for the equipment?

Mr. HOWE: To my simple mind, if a lumber dealer wishes to bring in more machinery I would assume that that machinery would have the effect of increasing the exports of lumber from Canada, and thus be an earner of dollars; therefore I would give the permit. My hon. friend might have doubts, but I think that would be a reasonably clear case.

Mr. MERRITT: But surely a great deal of the lumber cut by such machinery would be consumed in Canada; a great deal more would go to the United Kingdom, and a great deal more to Australia, and the amount of lumber which that mill might send over to the United States might be negligible as compared with its total cut. Is that not a correct statement? The minister will know that as well as I.

Mr. HOWE: It might be reasonable to my hon. friend, but, as I say, the simple souls who administer this would say that lumber was for export, and therefore the importer of lumber machinery would come within the class of goods for which permits are issued.

Mr. MERRITT: Do I understand from that, for instance, that an unlimited number of lumber carriers would be allowed in? If the mill showed the minister that it needed these carriers in the ordinary course of its business, would permits issue automatically for these things, or is there some other restriction the minister has in mind that he might apply in the event that too many people applied for the importation of such goods?

Mr. HOWE: If the machinery was required it would be demonstrated that logging machinery was required, and if it was not available from a Canadian source the permit would issue. I will go that far dogmatically. I hope the hon. member will not cross-examine me too much on it.

Mr. FLEMING: After an experience of sitting in this House of Commons one does not expect to find consistency in the government; one does not expect to find consistency in their statements. For instance, in almost every debate in recent times in this house in which the government has taken a position of some kind or other, it has been possible to turn up speeches made by the present Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition, in which precisely the opposite position was taken by him. In what we have heard tonight from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and others, we have just about a complete contradiction of the things that the same right hon. gentleman has previously said.

You recall, Mr. Chairman, April 1, 1946, in this house. You recall that the same right hon. gentleman made a statement of some importance at that time concerning building control in Canada. I am going to read you the statement in a moment, but, before I do so let me remind you what the minister has just said by way of justifying the pyramiding of a system of control throughout the length and breadth of Canada over these capital projects, pyramiding to an apex on top of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is himself squarely perched.

This is one paragraph from the speech made by the right hon. gentleman on April 1, 1946. It will be found at page 411 of Hansard of 1946. He said:

During the war years, the Department of Munitions and Supply maintained a rigid control of construction for the purpose of providing material for the war. During that period our citizens accepted this control as necessary for the successful prosecution of the war and its regulations were observed. However, after the end of the war, construction control regulations were no longer observed to the same degree.

Mark these words if you will, Mr. Chairman:

It was recognized by the department that it was impossible to judge from Ottawa the essentiality of different projects and the local conditions which necessarily must govern each decision.

Just let me remind you of these words, Mr. Chairman:

It was recognized by the department that it was impossible to judge from Ottawa the essentiality of different projects . . .

The whole basis of the case put forward by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in asking parliament to vest him with these powers that might have made Mussolini swoon with envy is that he may be completely trusted to exercise these powers not only without favouritism but also with complete perspicacity, complete ability to judge what is essential and what is non-essential. One need do nothing more than to offer to the right hon. gentleman his own words that it is impossible to judge from Ottawa the essentiality of different projects.

Mr. ABBOTT: There was no simple test then as there is today, though.

Mr. FLEMING: No simple test then as there is today?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. The simple test today is whether it will get us United States dollars.

Mr. FLEMING: The Minister of Finance has not been following what I am saying. The minister's statement was not made during the war. This is the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then the minister only of reconstruction and supply, on April 1, 1946, with reference to the situation which followed the war.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know.

Mr. FLEMING: In the first sentence he talked about the war. Then he goes on to say, now with the war over, it is impossible to judge from Ottawa the essentiality of building projects, and for that reason he abandons the construction controls which were the means he had in his power at that time for channeling into the construction of houses available supplies of building materials. He turned his back on that responsibility and said, the whole reason is this, we cannot tell from Ottawa what is essential and what is not; therefore we will withdraw from the field.

Mr. ABBOTT: We can tell from Ottawa whether a project will save United States dollars or not.

Mr. MERRITT: I bet you cannot.

Mr. FLEMING: What is the difference in essence between a national emergency arising out of a shortage of houses and a national emergency arising out of a shortage of United States dollars? The principle at stake here is precisely the same. If it was impossible in April, 1946, for the minister to judge the essentiality of building projects at Ottawa, just how much easier is it for him in February, 1948, to judge the essentiality of capital projects in the matter now before us.

All this talk we have had tonight about trustfully leaving to the minister and his judgment to decide what is good for the country and what is not simply does not hold water. The fact of the matter is that we are back to the same old situation from which we thought that democratic peoples had emerged several centuries ago, where justice was measured by the length of the chancellor's foot. In this case, apparently, the essentiality of measures of this kind, capital projects, is simply to be measured by the particular notion that the Minister of Trade and Commerce entertains at the time the particular application comes before him.

In what I am about to say I am not necessarily being unkind to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Human nature being what it is, there is not a man, I do not care who he is, the minister of reconstruction or anybody else, who is so constituted, that, given powers of the scope and breadth of these powers which he is seeking in this bill, can dismiss from his mind all vestige of whim, caprice and favouritism when applications come before him. What is bad in this measure can be cured only if the minister is stripped of those dictatorial powers, and if what is necessary to meet an emergent situation is dealt with in terms of statutory provisions that cannot be applied otherwise than equally to all people, regardless of who they are.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the clause carry?

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he is to have any control over projects which do not require United States material?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. GREEN: It is clear that there is control only over projects which will require at least some United States material.

Mr. HOWE: How would the other projects come to me? Why would they come to me?

Mr. GREEN: Well, things, both good and bad, seem to have a way of coming to the minister. I was just wondering. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Last week there was some discussion with regard to the possibility of the government taking some steps to promote the purchase of goods in Canada, or from soft currency countries, to replace purchases from the United States. At that time the minister was not clear as to what steps the government was taking. Can he explain to the committee tonight what is being done along that line?

Mr. ABBOTT: The principal encouragement is, of course, the way in which the quota system is working. There is a decided incentive to Canadian importers to search for commodities and merchandise in soft currency markets, because the size of the quota is such that they can bring these in readily. There is no effective limitation of certain lines for the time being. Textiles is perhaps the outstanding example in that field, fresh fruits being another; and, as far as automobiles are concerned, I believe there is a fairly generous quota. I am told there have been continuous discussions with representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia and other soft currency areas to see what additional imports can be made available to Canada, and the trend is upwards, as the figures I gave this afternoon indicate. I am confident that this will be tremendously accelerated over the next two or three months, and we are particularly anxious that it should take place in textiles, which used to be a traditional export from the United Kingdom to Canada. For the past two or three years we have had to replace them with expensive textile imports from the United States. There is an indication that what I have indicated will be achieved.

Mr. GREEN: What about an effort being made to have Canadian goods purchased to take the place of goods prohibited from the United States? I have two of the minister's advertisements, and in neither is there any forthright suggestion that Canadians should endeavour to purchase Canadian goods. No emphasis is put on that.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have been urging that. Perhaps it would be desirable to advertise along those lines. The purpose of the advertisements to which my hon. friend refers was that they should be more in the nature of directives, that they should be informative.

[Mr. Green.]

I approved the copy myself. I wanted it to be non-controversial and not to be considered as propaganda for the particular policy, but we found from the letters that there was a considerable amount of misunderstanding as to where people should go for information, and just what the program covered. Therefore those two advertisements were put in the papers across the country, the intention being to clear up some of these misunderstandings. I have not decided whether to spend more money on that sort of thing. That decision has not been taken.

Mr. GREEN: The minister will agree that there is little indication of a change in the future whereby Great Britain will be able to supply us with United States dollars as she did before the war.

Mr. ABBOTT: But she can supply us with goods, which is just as effective.

Mr. GREEN: There is not much indication that in the near future there will be a drastic change in the present general position; and if we maintain these prohibitions against goods for a certain period and then lift the prohibitions, we shall be right back in the spot in which we now find ourselves. I suggest that some steps should be taken to reach a permanent solution of the problem, and one way would be to persuade the Canadian people to buy their own Canadian goods or goods from soft currency countries.

Mr. ABBOTT: We hope they will do that.

Mr. GREEN: There is one other question I should like to ask the two ministers. In one of these advertisements there is a picture of an oil drum, a coal scuttle, a bale of cotton and a steel rail, and it says: "To keep our industries humming, our living standard high, we need petroleum, coal, cotton, steel and similar essential things." I take it that these are the four products which are primarily responsible for our shortage of United States dollars.

Mr. ABBOTT: Those are the four products which we import in substantial quantities. Steel products of all kinds ran to something like $500 million last year. I am speaking from memory. Cotton runs to a large figure, and petroleum is something like $250 million or $260 million. These are tremendous items; they are all essential, and they have to be paid for in cash.

Mr. GREEN: Those are the four commodities which we purchase in the largest quantities from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is correct, yes.

Mr. GREEN: What plan has the government in mind to produce petroleum, coal and steel in Canada? I realize that we cannot produce cotton, but what plan has the government in mind to produce the other three items? I know, and I presume every other member in the house knows, that we have the potentialities for producing large quantities of each of these commodities, and this is the time there should be an all-out drive to produce them. I should like to know, therefore, what the government has in mind in regard to some such plan.

Mr. ABBOTT: No doubt the Minister of Trade and Commerce could answer that better than I can. So far as petroleum is concerned, that depends on discovery. There were fortunately some important discoveries of petroleum in the Leduc field south of Edmonton about a year ago. Active exploration is being carried on by a great many who are interested, large companies and others, to see where further supplies of petroleum are located in Canada. Steel production is being expanded. As my hon. friend knows, the steel company at Hamilton is expanding its strip mill and Algoma is expanding. That takes some time.

Mr. GREEN: What about iron production?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid I have not much personal knowledge of that. We have all read, of course, of the explorations going on near the Labrador border, but some little time will elapse before the material will be available for active use in the steel industry. It would appear, however, to be quite an important discovery. All these things are going on. They will not solve the short-term problem, however, though they are of importance, as the hon. member has pointed out, in the permanent fundamental solution of the question.

Mr. GREEN: What about coal?

The CHAIRMAN: We are getting beyond the scope of the bill, which deals with restrictive measures and not constructive measures. I do not think the discussion we are having at the present time is relevant to clause 3.

Mr. GREEN: I am reading from the government's own advertisement with regard to the austerity program; we have to get at production of those commodities before we can get out of our present difficulty. I submit that both the minister and I are in order in discussing these commodities.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion, both hon. gentlemen are out of order at the moment. The hon. member for Vancouver South is dealing with another program, a constructive program, and the minister has replied. I think the committee must deal with the bill which is before us at the present time, the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act, which deals with restrictive measures entirely.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would not the question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South relate to exchange; for instance, coal of which we import a large tonnage? We have to pay for that in United States currency. Does that not come under the problem of exchange?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member could deal with permits respecting the importation of United States coal.

Mr. MacNICOL: At the moment in Toronto, on Yonge street, in the store of A. Welch and Son there is a demonstration being shown to the public in the burning of Alberta coal.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think that is in order at the moment. The hon. member will have plenty of opportunity to discuss that question.

Mr. JACKMAN: I wish to make one or two observations and to ask some questions. When we impose controls we seldom know where there will be repercussions, and I think it should be brought forcibly to the attention, not only of the committee but of the people generally, that we find as a result of these controls, as my colleague, the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton pointed out a shortage of freight cars coming into the maritime provinces from the United States to take back certain vegetables grown there. The Canadian railways do not want to send their cars loaded with Canadian produce to the United States, because they do not know what, if anything, will come back in that type of car; and the Americans are just not sending up as much by way of railway freight as formerly. So there is a shortage of cars, something that the government could hardly have been expected to think of.

The hon. member for Vancouver South asked the minister of reconstruction if permits were required only for imported materials which would be used in construction. That is clearly the case. May I just ask for some opinion from either one of the ministers on the effect on the price of certain construction projects in this country. If I may call them that, when you have certain domestic supply, let us say of steel for construction or of machinery, and the excess requirements which we do not produce in our own country we import from the United States. In order to save the trouble of going to the minister and getting a permit, you naturally try to get your requirements in the domestic market, and surely the temptation is to bid up for quick delivery and avoid the uncertainty, and difficulty of going to the minister. Therefore I should think another reaction we shall have from these controls, particularly in the capital goods industry and under schedule III of this bill, is that we shall find an increase in price, because it is more convenient, if you have the money, to pay more and avoid going to the ministers for a permit.

I have a question of a more general nature which I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will he expand on those general principles which guide him in giving an O.K. or refusal to applications? He said as he has said before in this house, that the principle was whether or not an application would save United States exchange or produce United States exchange. I tried to call to mind the things which would be the subject matter of applications and, in view of the fact that our economy is so closely integrated with the United States economy, I wondered just what we would import or what would be the subject for the application for exchange that would not either create United States exchange because we would export something made by the machinery we got in, or would not save us United States exchange? What is there in our own economy here that we cannot, by way of substitution, get from the United States, or what do we make in our own country that we cannot send to the United States? I wonder just how this rule is to be applied as a sound rule, and it is the substance of this whole measure. It seems to me to be broad in its application. I confess that I have had of course, no experience with applications. The minister may have had sufficient, though, to give the committee a little more information. I think the general opinion throughout the committee is that we are putting a tremendous amount of power in the hands of one or two men, a power which we do not like to see in their hands, particularly in peacetime when we should be able to get along and still preserve all our fundamental rights. So I would ask him to elaborate on that matter.

I should also like to ask how much exchange we are expecting to save altogether. As I recall it, it was $300 million under consumers goods and $200 million under producers goods, or about $500 million in all. That figure was certainly given press publicity; whether or not it had any authenticated source, I do not know. We know that we are running behind on United States exchange by about $1,000 million a year.

Mr. ABBOTT: We were.

Mr. JACKMAN: We were. It may be that they are stopping the flood which was due to the fact that we over-indulged ourselves during the summer months and in the fall; however, time alone will tell. But $500 million is not as much as we should like to save if we are to balance the account and perhaps restore the surplus of $1,500 million that we had a year ago of United States exchange in gold. So, in the absence of rules under this bill, and no business knowing whether or not it is to be put out of commission in order to save more exchange, I feel that the government should give all the information possible and try to give some indication of whether or not we are to be faced with further austerity. The Minister of Finance may well say that it depends on just how the exchange balance is during the next few months. I think it would be interesting for the businessmen to know whether or not they are in a business—and I am thinking particularly of the importing business—which might be blitzed, because further austerity measures are necessary in order to bring about some financial balance.

Just to close my remarks, I should like to make a suggestion to one minister, and perhaps to both of them, particularly with regard to schedule III: It is that whenever a decision is made, it should be published; that a body of laws or a body of rules—call them administrative rules if you like—should be published, so that the Canadian businessmen who have to make these applications will know how other cases have been dealt with, will know if their case is on all fours or on three legs only with a case which has been decided, and will be able to tell approximately what to expect. It will also be a useful guide, if I may say so, to the minister himself, because he will have his previous decisions before him; he will have the reasons for having decided thus and so; it should simplify his judgments for him, just as for a court of law which relies on precedents in order to make its judgments. If this power is taken by the government—an unprecedented power of great magnitude, and one which we all are sorry to see them take, even if it is necessary—I hope that they will publish their decisions and give a brief statement of the facts. As the Minister of Finance will recall, at the head of the report of a legal case there is a brief review of the facts, a few paragraphs, and then the decision.

I suggest that the same procedure be followed here so that there will be some guide, some check and some precedent for the public to follow, by which their actions may be guided.

Mr. McLURE: On this matter of permits and controls I should like to ask one question which has been put up to me by several manufacturers in this country. It is this. Will Canadian-owned goods now being processed in the United States require a permit to bring them back to manufacturers in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that some manufacturers can get an export permit to export steel, have it processed in the United States and bring it back into Canada again through the customs. Although it may be on the prohibited list, they will get an export permit to have it sent to the United States to be processed, and brought back in here in a finished state.

Mr. McLURE: I might cite just one item that is owned by the government, namely, 11,000 or 12,000 fur seal skins. They are now being processed in the United States. I cannot find in any of the schedules where a permit has to be issued to bring those back to be manufactured in Canada. The Canadian manufacturers are anxious to find out whether they can bring those back in.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall take note of my hon. friend's remarks. I believe it is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to ask a question with reference to the bringing in of machinery. I have had information from certain firms respecting job sawmill machinery required for the keeping of sawmill saws in order. Up to the present time they have been unable to get permits, owing to their not being ready. Is there some reason why the permits are not ready? If so, when will they be ready for the admission of such machinery? It is quite an inconvenience to these people.

Mr. HOWE: When do they want to bring in saws? They can bring in all the saws they like at the present time.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not saws; machinery for the sharpening of saws.

Mr. HOWE: They can bring that in too at the present time.

Mr. HATFIELD: Are permits being issued for the importation of green vegetables from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: Cabbage only.

Mr. HATFIELD: None for lettuce?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. WARREN: Cabbage is good enough.

Mr. CASE: By the terms of the bill before us I am convinced—and I believe this must be in the minds of hon. members generally—that this is a great step toward departing from democratic government. I have listened to the questions asked and the answers given, and I am just about as confused now as are those who have been giving the answers. No one knows exactly what we are heading for, although it has been suggested that we are heading for a dictatorship. We have the whole framework right here, sufficient completely to wreck our own democratic system.

This just did not happen overnight. We have had, during the course of this debate, sufficient evidence to prove where the government made its fatal error. On July 5, 1946, the then minister of finance placed an artificial value on the Canadian dollar. That was the date when the natural flow of goods between nations was prevented.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CASE: What I am saying has a direct bearing on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: As the hon. member says, it has a direct bearing on the bill, but not on the principle of the bill.

Mr. CASE: We are discussing import controls.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The principle of the bill has already been accepted. We are now dealing with section 3, and the discussion must be related directly to that section. I would ask the hon. member not to proceed with a discussion of the principle of the bill.

Mr. CASE: If we are to confine ourselves to section 3, then I still say that we are delegating to the minister extraordinary powers which he will have great difficulty in administering fairly. I think that can be said, in fairness to the minister himself.

How are people to plan any project, when they have to come to Ottawa to find out what the score is. There exists a terrific state of confusion, which all results from the fact that the government is interfering with the natural process of regulating trade and commerce. One simple method of avoiding all this was already in existence.

What yardstick is the minister to use when he must determine whether or not a permit is to be granted, when he must determine that a permit is to be revoked, or that a person who is in possession of a permit cannot dispose of his business and his permit as well? He has no equity in the permit, according to the terms of the bill. So what method can any businessman employ to determine how best he can carry on and make a contribution of United States dollars—and that would appear to be the purpose of the bill? That man has no security in the bill, except at the pleasure of the minister—one man. What method does the minister propose to employ to determine what course shall be pursued?

Mr. HOWE: It is so easy for a businessman to put his problem before the department and to obtain a ruling, that I suggest it would be much easier to do that than for me to answer a theoretical or hypothetical question on the floor of the house. I do not know just how to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I should like to ask a question arising out of a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He said that so far as building or construction projects were concerned, those responsible for building the projects would be told to use Queenston limestone instead of Indiana limestone. If the minister is going to say to construction companies that they must use Queenston limestone instead of that from Indiana, the Queenston quarries might not be in a position to supply the required amount of limestone. It might take years to reach a position where it could be supplied in quantity.

I asked the Minister of Finance a question a few days ago, but he did not answer it. I ask it again. Are these suppliers to be given no security? If they expand so as to build up a big business in an effort to supply limestone for these projects, they might find that these restrictions would be taken off overnight, and a company which has spent huge sums of money to expand might be swamped. Can not the government say to the producers and to the manufacturers of Canada how long these restrictions may last. It is important that this question should be answered. It is a question I am sure private members who are supporting the government as well as the members of the opposition would like to have answered if they have factories and producers of goods in their own constituencies.

I am wondering if the government are not finding themselves in this position, that the government having agreed to the terms of the Geneva trade agreement for freer trade, this bill setting out restrictions is just the opposite; the two courses of action are counter to each other? In the terms of the Geneva conference we have agreed to freer trade; yet the government is now in a position where it is putting on restrictions. For that reason the government will not say to the people of Canada, "This will be in force for six months" —or two years or ten years, as the case may be. I think it is important to every member of parliament and to the people of Canada as a whole to know how long this program will be in effect, in order that they may make provision to take care of short supply. If they do build up a business they should know that they will not be wiped out again by the lifting of restrictions. Surely the question I have asked is a reasonable one.

[Mr. Case.]

Mr. HOWE: It illustrates the difficulty of answering a hypothetical question. I used Queenston limestone as compared with Indiana limestone as an example. The saving of United States dollars would not be great, because neither Indiana nor Queenston limestone is used in such large quantities. So, for that reason, the hon. member has me in a somewhat awkward situation.

However, I would say this, that I think any business which expands to take care of the immediate situation, thinking that it will last more than a year or two, is making an unwise investment. I hope it will not do that. Unless an industry is expanding on a basis that will survive under normal conditions, it would be unwise to expand.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The Minister of Finance says that this is not a protectionist policy, that it is an emergency policy. I agree in principle that the government is adopting a program which should have been adopted in this country twenty years ago. I know the government will not adopt a conservation policy because the Conservatives have advocated such a policy. I believe that if a policy of this kind had been inaugurated twenty years ago we would have built up industries in this country, thereby creating employment and preventing the exodus of our people to the United States. If we had in Canada a conservation program we could process our own natural resources, instead of just trying to preserve United States currency spent for imports, and we would be doing something constructive for Canada.

Mr. GRAYDON: Hon. members have been waiting patiently for some announcement from the government, because in previous times when the people in other parts of the country have spoken the government has made announcements with respect to by-elections. I wonder if the spokesman for the government would give us the results in Huron?

Mr. MARTIN: They cut down the majority greatly.

Mr. HATFIELD: How many extra customs officers will have to be appointed under this bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not the figures at the moment. Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue could give that information later on.

Mr. SKEY: Getting back to the point raised by the hon. member for Durham with regard to industry, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a particular question having to do with importers. I have had an inquiry from a company which is in position to build up a business in Canada in mirrors. They have spent some money on capital goods, and then to their surprise they find that their place in the schedule has been changed and that mirrors are being imported from the United States. They are afraid that their capital expenditures will be a loss. The first definite guidance we have had was when the minister spoke a moment ago and said that he hoped new industries would not be built up as a result of these restrictions and embargoes. Could the minister elaborate on that statement and let the committee know whether it applies to all categories of industry and whether it is his policy not to build up Canadian industry behind tariff barriers?

Mr. HOWE: I have read in the papers about doing it with mirrors, but I do not understand what my hon. friend is doing with mirrors. The principle is simply this. If an industry wishes to establish itself in Canada; if it is one which in normal times would be able to operate profitably; if it is an industry which will assist in building up exports or in conserving United States dollars, it will be welcomed. But if it is an industry being built up simply to take advantage of the temporary prohibitions, it will not be welcomed. For instance, if someone wants to come in here and build refrigerators in Canada for no other reason than that the importation of refrigerators is temporarily banned, that industry will not be welcomed. If we recognize it for what it is, it will not be permitted.

Mr. SKEY: The minister says "come in." This is the case of a Canadian company wanting to expand into new lines. They admit frankly that they cannot compete with large producers in the United States who can export to Canada over the tariff barriers.

Mr. LOCKHART: I just want to follow up the argument advanced by the minister in connection with the development of industry. He is warning against it. A great deal of coping, window frames, door frames and that sort of thing has been imported from Ohio and Indiana. Many buildings are finished with that type of finish. The Queenston limestone plant has been in existence for a long time.

Mr. HOWE: I am sorry I mentioned it.

Mr. LOCKHART: You have mentioned austerity and there are a lot of things you are going to be sorry over before we are through. Queenston limestone is a marvellous stone, but it is about four times as difficult to mill as other limestone because it is so much harder.

Mr. HOWE: I advise you not to buy it.

Mr. LOCKHART: You have to have coping and trim of all kinds, even in new structures. I wanted to take up this matter privately with the minister. Some new construction was being considered and the first thing asked about was the use of Indiana limestone. I told them that it looked as though they would have to use Queenston stone, which would cost them more money. What is the position of the Queenston quarries so far as going ahead and stimulating production is concerned? In the face of what the minister said tonight, they will be right back in a short time to where they were before. The inconsistency of his statement is apparent on its face. I cannot see where the minister's argument holds at all.

Mr. HOWE: It is nice of you to do the worrying for the Queenston quarry.

Mr. LOCKHART: It is not just the Queenston quarry I am worrying about; it is that the principle behind this thing is all wrong and I just want to point that out to the minister.

Mr. FLEMING: There is one matter that has been discussed recently in this house with some fervor on the other side, namely, beneficial results of publicity being shed on transactions of a certain kind. I wish we could discern in the remarks of the ministers the same zeal for publicity with respect to government business and policy under this act as they have shown in connection with publicity in the affairs of others.

What assurance have we under this bill that favouritism will not be exercised in its administration? The Minister of Trade and Commerce says that we can trust him, but that is not a good enough answer. There is nothing in this bill that says there shall be a statement given to the public as to what permits are granted, what permits are denied and what things are permitted to be brought in by way of permit.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I should think, Mr. Chairman, that the question is out of order because it does not pertain to section 3.

Mr. FLEMING: We are dealing with permits under section 3, and there is the clearest provision there that:

No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II or III except in accordance with a permit issued by the minister.

I do not like the system set up by the bill, and section 3 is the core of the bill. I would think the minister should be very glad to improve his measure somewhat by at least giving us assurance in statutory form that star chamber methods will not be practised in the administration of this measure. What is there in the bill that gives any assurance to the public that everybody is to be treated alike, that all persons who come or send to Ottawa for permits will receive equal treatment of their application on their merits? There is nothing in the bill which says the minister shall give any publicity to whatever he does under it. When it comes to reports to parliament—and this is what the Postmaster General had in mind—section 9 provides:

The minister shall lay before parliament, within fifteen days after the commencement of each session thereof, a report on the administration of this act during the preceding fiscal year.

That means that the minister can go ahead for the whole of 1948 without having to make a report to anybody—not until fifteen days after the commencement of the 1949 session. In the meantime, permits could have been granted to one and denied to another in equal circumstances and the public would know nothing about it. That situation is not one that can be tolerated by any democratic parliament in the twentieth century. Methods of that kind we thought were discarded three hundred years ago. Where do we get any assurance in this bill that it is not just a case of star chamber methods that are to be practised with respect to applications under the bill? It is time we had some assurance from the government, not that the affairs of individuals shall be disclosed to the public, but that there will be published regularly, at short intervals, statements with respect to the commodities imported under permit, so that the public can have some idea of what is going on under the bill when it is passed, and have the assurance that the full benefit of publicity is being cast upon the administration of the measure with respect to the issuing of permits and that it is not being used to cover up favouritism.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have already answered that question several times. After most careful consideration, it was felt that in the case of capital goods the only system which could be made to work was a permit system, and that involves the exercise of discretion. Under the quota system, that is done automatically. The government may determine from time to time what the base period may be and the percentage of imports during the base period, but that applies right across the board. As to capital goods under schedule III, reflection will show that by its very nature, this does not lend itself to any general rule which would be applicable in all cases. It has been indicated that in certain categories there will be regulations—the automobile industry is one—and so far as possible that will be done. But there are bound to be a great many cases in which there will have to be an exercise of discretion. Suppose some newspaper decides that it must have a large new printing press. You cannot lay down a general rule for that. Permission will be given or refused upon the merits. If some other way could be found no one would be more relieved than the members of the government, but our dollar situation is such that we cannot continue to allow the uncontrolled import of capital goods into this country from the United States.

Mr. FLEMING: If there is any justification for the permit system, then surely, there must be the need for publicity and no reason why full publicity should not be given to the granting of permits.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot see any objection to publicity. I do not know just what my hon. friend has in mind—monthly reports or something of that kind. I think it might be possible.

Mr. HOWE: We were looking into the question of permits and under one item alone, 427a, the basket machinery item, we estimated that some 15,000 permits would be issued. If my hon. friend wants all those published I will arrange for it if he will pay for the cost of publication.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister is treating the committee with his customary levity and derision. I do not suggest that every permit should be published, or that the private affairs of individuals should be disclosed, but there should be disclosure of the capital goods that are permitted to enter. It should not require too much ingenuity or labour on the part of government officials to make reports on what capital goods are being admitted. That would give people who are interested in that type of goods an opportunity to know whether they were being treated the same as the next man. I was very glad to hear the Minister of Finance say that he would take the suggestion of publicity into consideration, because I think it is highly desirable that the public and the house should be reassured by some measure of that kind such as regular reports.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think any reports that could be published would demonstrate that everyone was receiving exactly the same treatment. You could give figures as to the categories of goods brought in and the permits issued, but the man who was refused a permit might still wonder why he was not getting the same treatment as the other fellow.

Mr. FLEMING: Should he not have something by way of information to go on? For instance, if he sees that other people are getting permits for importations under the basket machinery item while he is refused a permit, he will ask why permits are being granted to others and not to him.

Mr. HOWE: It all depends on what they are using the machinery for.

Mr. SKEY: The minister mentioned 15,000 permits under the basket machinery item. Can he give the committee any idea as to how many permits will be issued altogether for all the items?

Mr. HOWE: I gave one estimate because I happened to know that item.

Mr. SKEY: If it is 15,000 for one item, it is probably half a million for the lot.

Mr. HOWE: Not that many.

Mr. SKEY: How many would the minister say?

Mr. HOWE: It might be 25,000.

Mr. SKEY: And 15,000 under one item alone?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know and neither does my hon. friend, so why pursue this further? I was just giving a general idea.

Mr. SKEY: It is strange that the minister could make an estimate in regard to one item but has no idea how many permits will be requird in another item. I think the committee is entitled to a little more information. If he has to hire a staff of two or three thousand people to pass on these items it may require months to get an item through. If that happens, the whole business will be held up while his small staff struggle to cope with the flood of requests for permits. I think the minister should give the committee some idea.

Mr. HOWE: Twenty-five thousand permits a month would be a fair idea.

Mr. JACKMAN: This matter of reports of what the minister does is of the utmost importance to the country. As I have said before, the minister is arrogating to himself tremendous power, the power of life and death over a great deal of Canadian industry. It is an important matter, and if it costs a bit of money to publish the information about the decisions I do not think the committee will have any objection to it. Surely the Minister of Finance, who is familiar with reports, understands what it is that I am after and what a good many other hon. members have in mind. All legal cases are not reported. The 15,000 county court cases or the 25,000 division court cases are not reported. Nobody is interested in them because the principles are well laid down. But on cases which make law, important cases, someone makes a digest of them consisting of three or four paragraphs; it may be a couple of pages if it is very difficult, and that information is given to the public. If a summary were made of the decisions it would give the people who are applying for these import licences some idea of just what the government has in mind when it is applying this one simple principle, does it earn or does it save United States exchange? The principle is so simple that the minister said, in reply to my colleague, the hon. member for Eglinton, it could readily be administered from Ottawa; whereas the deciding of whether or not a particular piece of building construction in some other part of Canada could not be decided from Ottawa.

This is a relatively simple matter. The object is very simple. There will be a few hard cases, undoubtedly, until we get a body of principles. If it is to be such an important matter to Canadian business, we must know what the law on this principle is. It will not go to rest in the mind of the minister and have my support in this house, and I do not think it will have the support of many others on this side of the house, if the minister is to have the matter in his own control and discretion and we are not even permitted to know after the event, much less before.

Mr. MERRITT: I do not think we have got very far this evening in finding out how this principle is to be administered. Even at the cost of repetition, we might well pursue it farther. As I understand the situation, at the present time we have a very simple principle, whether it earns or saves United States dollars. If one may judge from some of the answers the minister has given, the principle is so simple it is like a sieve; anything will go through it and it is not a safe principle to work on at all. The minister himself will not be able to pass judgment in his own mind just on that one principle; otherwise it would be impossible for him to do more than guess whether a thing would earn or save United States dollars. In practice, he will have to formulate a series of sub-principles or sub-classifications under which goods will be allowed in.

I want to ask him this question. Is it to be: first come, first served? Suppose, for instance, the minister were to make up his mind that the over-all quota for capital goods was $750 million in a year. The first lot of applications comes along, and he approves up to $750 million on the basis that these goods are going to earn or save United States dollars. Then someone else comes along with another project which, in the minister's opinion, will earn or save more United States dollars than one of the schemes he has already approved. Will he then cancel one of the earlier ones to which he has given approval and thereby enable this greater saving to be made, or will he stick to what he has already done and force Canada to do without the project which would have saved more dollars than what he has already approved? Can the minister comment on that?

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend asked a long question based on a hypothetical theory, the theory being that we are going to say we shall spend $600 million and no more. We are not going to do that; therefore the whole question falls to the ground.

Mr. MERRITT: I am, of course, not satisfied with that answer at all, and I shall wait here until I get an answer to the question. I shall ask my question in two parts, so that the minister can understand it. The minister was not listening before—

Mr. HOWE: I listened to it.

Mr. MERRITT: The first question I shall ask is this. Is it a question of first come, first served, and those who come after the over-all quota has been used up are out of luck, regardless of how useful their scheme is?

Mr. HOWE: That question falls to the ground because, as I have explained before, there is no over-all quota. If we can get a great many products that will produce substantial quotas of United States exchange we shall be glad to take them.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then the whole thing is a grand guess.

Mr. MERRITT: In that case why have the schedule at all?

Mr. HOWE: Why have this debate at all? I cannot imagine why my hon. friend rose in his place.

[Mr. Merritt.]

Mr. MERRITT: We are in this position now. The minister has said that any capital goods project will be permitted. That is the sum and substance of what he said, because the test he applied in an earlier question I asked was ridiculous. In the case of many capital goods, he cannot tell whether they will be used to manufacture goods which will go into the United States or will take the place of goods we would otherwise import. They may all go to soft currency countries. There is no way in which he can tell that; therefore if his answer is that he has no over-all limit, and, so far as I can see, the whole thing falls to the ground completely. Is the minister not really in this position, that any capital goods which will increase the production of goods in Canada he will approve. Is that not the case?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. MERRITT: Will the minister give an example? He has been asking us for examples. He must have some knowledge of these things. Will he give us an example of the capital goods which he will not approve?

Mr. HOWE: If a man wanted to build a factory to make billiard tables, for instance, I would say no, we do not want that business.

Mr. MERRITT: Then the minister is putting it on the basis of luxury goods, apparently.

Mr. HOWE: You asked me to name one and I named one.

Mr. MERRITT: I am speaking of a classification. The minister will not allow a Canadian to manufacture luxury goods—

Mr. HOWE: Why not class billiard tables as sporting goods as well as luxury goods? My hon. friend is really putting on a very silly performance. I enjoy it, but it has taken a good deal of time.

Mr. MERRITT: I shall have to take my chance on whether it is a silly performance or not. We may get somewhere this way. Has the minister made any attempt or have his officials made any attempt to classify these capital goods as a guide to the exercise of his discretion?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. MERRITT: He has made no attempt, then. I think that answer is a pretty good exhibition of what we are getting in this bill. The Minister of Finance said earlier it would be very difficult and almost impossible to make this classification.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a matter of appreciation of the facts in individual cases. Surely that is self-evident.

Mr. MERRITT: It is quite apparent from what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just said that the government has made no attempt to bring out a list of regulations which would be a guide to themselves and to Canadian businessmen as to what goods should or should not be imported. It is one thing to say that it is impossible; it is another thing to say they have not made an attempt to do so. I submit that before this committee approves a section of this kind, giving these arbitrary powers which we have talked of so much, at least the government, if they still pretend to have any respect for parliamentary institutions, should attempt to produce a statute which is in line with previous parliamentary practice. If they had come in and said that they had tried and failed and that this was a great emergency condition, we might be more disposed towards this scheme. But when they come and say they have not even tried, then I think an attempt should be made before we approve the section. I wonder if the minister will answer this question. Has he made any attempt, since he cannot codify those things he will let in, to codify those things he will not let in?

Mr. HOWE: That is the opposite of the other.

Mr. MERRITT: Would it not be a shorter list, the ones he will not let in?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know.

Mr. MERRITT: You do not know. The great mind has not been exercised. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is a man who has been resourceful in everything for the past seven or eight years. I should think that if he would exert himself and set the great mind in motion he might produce something which would satisfy the members of the committee. I do not like this situation where no attempt is made to bring into the house a bill which would accord with proper parliamentary practice.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think this is an unedifying and, in a way, a rather humiliating proceeding. I do not think we are an unreasonable lot of people over here. We have been asking for information and, as far as the minister of reconstruction is concerned, with the exception of one brief interlude when he has tried to help us, he has been in the highest degree unco-operative.

I think section 3 should stand over because, in any event, the minister of reconstruction has to bring in information which he should have had here tonight. He says he will bring it in tomorrow. Second, I hope the Minister of Finance will consider the point brought up with regard to the word "revoke". If he will not consider the point, we shall have something more to say about it.

In the third place, I want to add to the point made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. We are not suggesting that there must not be discretion. We recognize that there must be. But what is being done is, in effect, appointing a committee with no terms of reference. We are asked to vote for this absolutely blindly, without any restriction, although I would point out that the bill itself does not contemplate that. In section 5 it is provided that the governor in council may make regulations governing the issue of permits for the import of goods listed in schedule III. I presume the order in council will not be merely a statement that the minister of reconstruction shall issue what permits he likes. I should hope it would not be that, and it is highly reasonable that we should ask now, before voting for this section, remembering always that this is an extraordinary invasion of our rights, that some attempt should be made, as apparently it has not yet been made, to lay down at least certain principles. As a matter of fact, some of the things the minister says tonight make one feel that there has been no attempt at all. I do not think that is quite true, because on the other hand he has told us that there have been regulations, though we do not know what they are like, in the automobile industry. If there have been, I see no reason why there cannot be framed certain general regulations, the principle of which would be effective in other cases.

I am suggesting, therefore, that this section be stood over. If the minister will not accept my suggestion I shall regret it. If he says it cannot be done tomorrow, I see no reason why the bill should not stand over another day. We are well within our rights in asking that an attempt be made to have at least the terms of reference or something equivalent to that. I therefore suggest that section 3 be stood over for the reasons I have given.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no desire to rush the section through if anyone wants to discuss it, but I may as well say now that I do not think it will be possible to give to the committee the full regulations which will have to be prepared and drawn up under the enabling powers contained in section 5.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want the minister to make me look unreasonable and dogmatic. The minister speaks of the full regulations which will be needed in order to make it operative. I do not think I said that. I said, some general principle. I used the words, "terms of reference", something in the nature of a guide of some kind, which up to the present time we have not had. At present we are asked to sign a blank cheque.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is a fairly good guide in schedules I and II. Schedule I is a straight prohibition and schedule II is the quota. It is true that the regulations will establish the base period. It is now done under the existing order in council, and it will establish the percentage of imports during that base period. That is automatic. That is the principle, so that the discussion this evening is related almost entirely to the individual permits, if I may so describe them, under schedule III.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I agree.

Mr. ABBOTT: Literally they will be legion. You may have groups like the automobile industry, where regulations can be drawn up, laying down a principle. But so far as the rest of the schedule is concerned, it must be essentially a matter of the exercise of discretion by the minister. I am fully aware of the objectionable features of that, and the discretion must be exercised in this way, that it involves the appreciation of facts in a great many individual cases. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce will agree with me that in categories where one can lay down general principles, such as the automobile industry, which is a good example, regulations can be adopted and made public so that everyone can know them. But I am certain that, after all that is done, when one has examined a number of industries where that can be done, there will be a large residuum of cases where you simply cannot lay down a general principle, and there will have to be an exercise of discretion. I am almost sure that will be the case.

We gave a tremendous amount of thought to this matter when the legislation was contemplated and, as I believe I said before, we reluctantly came to the conclusion that the only way in which schedule II could be made to work would be under the permit system. That, I know is a general explanation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister has conceded, I think, a good deal of what I said. I do not disagree with his statement that there will be many that cannot be brought within a definite rule. On the other hand, he has agreed that there may be a great many that can. What I complain about is that, so far as I can see, except in the case of the automobile industry, no attempt at all has been made to do it. I see no reason why we should be asked to vote on this section until that attempt has been made. If it was even the case that the minister was coming in and saying, "Look, we tried to draft these things and found we could not do it", that would be something. But we are not even in that position. We are told that in the automobile industry that has been done. We are to see that. A moment ago the minister suggested, if I understood him correctly, that in other large and important areas it might be done. We are asking to have that done; that is to say, we are asking to have whatever can be given in the way of a general yardstick or of general rules. We do not intend to be unreasonable and say that you have to dot your i's and cross your t's; but, as I said a moment ago, at the present time we are being asked to sign a blank cheque. There has been no attempt to do what we are asking. I must say frankly that what has been done so far has not been wholly reassuring because, according to the figures I have, the minister's statement with regard to the automobile industry is wrong. Tomorrow it may turn out that my figures are wrong, but I do not think so. Therefore it is not reassuring to go ahead and sign this blank cheque at the moment.

Mr. ABBOTT: On this particular section, I do not know that one can give much more information than has already been given. It enunciates the general principle that imports require a permit when they come from certain areas. There is no trouble with regard to schedules I and II.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not think there is any trouble there.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I said before, one must freely admit that under schedule III there must be a wide measure of discretion. The situation at the present time is that no permits in fact are being required for the capital goods group, and they will not be required until March 1. That delay is in order to work out a good deal of this detail which I think my hon. friend is perhaps referring to—to look into such cases as that of the automobile industry and some of these others and see what the regulations will have to be for the exercise of the discretion which must be exercised in connection with these schedule III cases. But at the moment individual permits are not required.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am coming back to my point. The minister has not yet said anything which makes me feel that even he thinks my request is unreasonable. My request is for what general rules there are that can be laid down. There are some. Perhaps when we get the regulations in the motorcar industry the thing may look a little bit clearer.

I wish to ask one other question here. The minister says that no permits are required until March 1. Is it not correct that, while that is no doubt strictly true, in fact have not people been warned that they must watch their step with regard to any undertaking they are contemplating now just as if the regulations were in effect? In other words, are the regulations not, to all intents and purposes, in effect in respect of any work which people are taking up now which requires imports from the United States? Will the minister say if that is correct?

Mr. HOWE: It has been announced publicly, over the radio and in various statements in this house, that if anyone is contemplating a project which requires imports over a considerable period of time, particularly after March 1 next, he would be wise to have his project approved and to make sure in advance that he will be permitted to import from across the line the materials which he requires.

Mr. MANROSS: Which minister has charge of issuing the permits under schedule I? Is it the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Finance?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have.

Mr. PEARKES: The agility of my younger friends enables them to rise to their feet more rapidly than I am able to do, but I had intended to ask a simple question. What happens when goods arrive here which are in schedule I and are not permitted to enter? I have a simple example. It is in connection with a small shipment of goods ordered from Scotland last summer. Two days after the issue of these orders or prohibitions, they sailed from Scotland, passed through the Panama canal and have now arrived at Victoria. They are being held at the customs at Victoria. They are urgently required by the firm which ordered them. They are of no use to anybody else, because the firm's name is stamped on the packages. Are they to be thrown into the sea?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. On the facts as my hon. friend has presented them, a permit would be given under section 4 of this measure and the corresponding section of the order in council. It is a case which would be treated as one of hardship. The goods would be useless in the other country and they would be allowed to come in.

Mr. PEARKES: How would the firm go about getting them in?

Mr. ABBOTT: Write a letter to the emergency import control division, Sussex street.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, it is not carried. I said to the minister that I thought this section should stand, because we still have to get certain information in regard to the regulations with respect to the automobile industry. I am confident that the Minister of Finance will take some action along the line I suggested with regard to regulations.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know what action can be taken. Of course the section will have to stand. It can be talked on until eleven o'clock. I was hoping that we might make some progress. There are other sections of the bill under which I think any information could be given which could conceivably be wanted. But I am in the hands of the committee. I thought that in six hours we might get one section through.

Section 3 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ADAMSON: What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. ABBOTT: The same thing as today.

Mr. KNOWLES: The same thing all over again?

Mr. ABBOTT: Tomorrow we shall continue the discussion on this measure.

Mr. HOWE: Hon. gentlemen opposite will ask the same questions again.

Mr. GREEN: Maybe the ministers will have the answers.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 17, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MERRITT—TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MEMBERS BETWEEN RESIDENCE AND OTTAWA

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, referring to the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), as a matter of the expense of travelling by air is important to all members coming from distant parts of Canada. I wonder if Your Honour would inform the house of the reasons for the decision to which reference was made.

Mr. SPEAKER: I expect to be able to give an answer tomorrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MR. WYLIE AND DR. BEAUCHESNE ON RETURN TO HOUSE AFTER ILLNESS

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, yesterday there were expressions of good will in respect of members who had returned to the house after an absence because of illness. I should like to make similar reference to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Wylie) who has just returned after a serious illness. I hope his health has improved.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, I know I am voicing the sentiment of every member of the house in saying that we are very glad indeed to see the worthy Clerk of the House back to his post. I also express the hope that his health is permanently re-established.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NAVY, ARMY AND AIR FORCE OFFICER TRAINING AT ROYAL ROADS AND ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be the wish of hon. members that I should make a statement drawing to the attention of the house and the country the arrangements made for the training of officers for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

During the war, combined operations under unified command brought victory to the allied side. Considerable progress has already been made in the unification of the Department of National Defence and in the co-ordination of the three services.

As a beginning in co-operation we have decided to require the same entrance qualification and to give the same general education at the same places for cadets in all three services. This arrangement has been worked out after studies of educational experience in this country as well as in Great Britain, the United States, Australia and elsewhere.

The naval college at Royal Roads was this year extended to include air cadets. In September it will also be open to candidates for the army. Royal Roads will have a two-year course, corresponding closely to the first two years in engineering at a university.

Also in September of this year Royal Military College, Kingston, will reopen for cadets for the three services. The first two years will be identical with those at Royal Roads and there will be a further two years, making a four-year course in all. On the completion of their course at Royal Roads cadets for all branches of the three services will go on to complete their course at Royal Military College except that cadets for the executive and marine engineering branches of the navy, after two years at Royal Military College or Royal Roads, will take special training before being posted as sub-lieutenants.

Entrance requirements for both Royal Roads and Royal Military College will be senior matriculation or its equivalent. Candidates must have reached their sixteenth but not their twentieth birthday on 1st January preceding entrance. Naval applicants, except in the case of candidates from classical colleges, must not have reached their nineteenth birthday on 1st January.

The standard achieved will be approximately the same as that in a four-years arts course and three years towards an engineering degree. Following graduation from Royal Military College, students in technical and engineering subjects will be carried on for an extra year at a university to give them a university degree.

During the summer months students will do three and half months' practical work with their branch of their service. At the end of the course they will thus have completed almost a year's practical training in addition to their general education, which will be on a broader basis than ever before.

The second source of officers is the universities. Arrangements have been made with twenty-two universities under which undergraduates may join the Canadian officers' training corps or university naval training division. Under these arrangements, students will receive theoretical training during the college term and will spend three and a half months in the summer doing practical work together with the cadets from Royal Roads and Royal Military College. At the completion of their university courses, in addition to their degree, they will have had additional theoretical military work and the equivalent of a year's practical training with their service. Similar arrangements are in effect for the air force.

Under all these plans, the pay received during the summer months will make a substantial contribution towards the cost of tuition and other expenses during the college term.

The third source of officer material is in promotion from the ranks. It is hoped that as many as twenty per cent of officers will be selected in this way. Officer cadets from the ranks will attend either one of the Canada service colleges or the universities at government expense.

These arrangements for officer training are in addition to service schools for training in the use of weapons and trades schools in all three services. A number of schools are of an inter-service nature, such as the joint army-air school at Rivers, where all aspects of army-air force co-operation are studied, or the winter warfare school at Churchill, where all three services and the defence research board are studying techniques of winter warfare. There are as well army and air staff colleges, and the national defence college for senior officers and civilian officials opened at Kingston on the 5th January last.

Further, all three services have specialist officers undergoing post-graduate training at universities in Canada.

Another educational scheme of importance is the institution of language training. The army is putting into effect French classes in every command and training centre. At headquarters 178 officers are taking voluntary courses in French. Provision is also made for training in languages other than French. The navy and air force will soon implement similar plans.

[Mr. Claxton.]

Modern war requires technical abilities of the highest order. Should an emergency arise, the outcome may well turn on the professional skills and qualities of leadership of the staffs and fighting formations of every branch of every service. For this reason we are trying to ensure that the Canadian defence forces will be led by men who will live up to the fighting reputation of Canadians and who will also have the intelligence and knowledge to develop and use the weapons and skills that may be necessary for the effective defence of our country.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted a question, on completion of the courses at Royal Roads and the Royal Military College or subsequent training at a university, will there be any obligation on the student to join one of the active forces of the crown?

Mr. CLAXTON: The cadets will be obligated to join either the active forces or the reserve forces.

Mr. PEARKES: Not the active?

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING MOTOR VEHICLE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I desire to table, as requested last night, a letter addressed to the Minister of Finance containing the advice of my department as to regulations applying to the motor vehicle manufacturing and parts industry. I may say that the Minister of Finance has placed these regulations in effect. Copies will be available to hon. members for purposes of the debate later this afternoon.

UNITED NATIONS

PALESTINE COMMISSION'S WARNING TO SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the grave warning made by the Palestine commission to the security council yesterday that "a tragic and dangerous precedent" will be established if force or the threat of force is allowed to thwart the decision of the united nations, is the government prepared to accept its share of responsibility in such action as may be taken by the security council with a view to averting further bloodshed in Palestine and implementing the assembly decision?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the question the hon. member has just put, because it was not quite in the terms of the notice I was handed just before I came into the house. In answer I can only state that Canada accepted full responsibility under the charter of the united nations and has at all times been pressing to have all the organs of the united nations set up in accordance with the charter and in such a manner as to make the charter fully effective. There is no intention of not complying with the requirements both of the letter and of the spirit of the charter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MOVEMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA RESIDENTS TO EMPLOYMENT ELSEWHERE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) asked me to give details of the movement of residents of Nova Scotia to work elsewhere in Canada.

A group movement plan was authorized in January 1947, but most of the new placements were in the autumn months of that year. The total, men and women, was 2,642, of which 2,354 were men. Of these, 1,627 were transferred from Sydney, 341 from New Glasgow, 183 from Halifax, 175 from Amherst, 16 from Yarmouth, 6 from Bridgewater and 6 from Liverpool.

Through the national employment service, 254 went to gold and base metal mines in northern Ontario, 211 to a nickel refinery, 761 to farm implement plants; and the remainder were absorbed by foundries, paper mills, textile mills, other manufacturing and construction.

Of the 288 women and girls transferred, 257 came from Sydney, 27 from New Glasgow and 4 from Amherst. They found work in shoe, textile, rubber, and food processing plants. Under this plan transportation and medical examination costs were paid by the federal government.

In addition, jobs were found for residents of the maritimes individually. It is estimated 1,200 men and women were thus referred to vacancies offered by employers elsewhere during 1947.

There were other organized movements, largely confined to the east, with transportation paid by employers and workers.

In the potato picking season, 600 New Brunswick residents were found jobs in Maine and 700 Nova Scotians were found jobs in Prince Edward Island. For apple picking, 1,500 Nova Scotians were registered and found jobs in the Annapolis valley; 200 New Brunswick residents were transferred to pea vining operations in Maine. More than 400 woods workers were transferred from New Brunswick to Maine. This is a total of more than 3,400.

Mr. BRACKEN: Does the statement make clear what period of time these figures cover?

Mr. MITCHELL: I said that, I think, Mr. Speaker. While the policy was approved early in the year, it was in the latter part of the year that the movement got under way.

Mr. BRACKEN: These figures apply to the latter part of the year?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, of 1947.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO ULTIMATUM GIVEN TO VETERANS AT VILLE ST. LAURENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, and also to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? It concerns veterans occupying some 400 wartime housing units in Ville St. Laurent in Montreal. Has any ultimatum been given to these veterans to move? If so, can the minister give the assurance that no further action will be taken to evict or move them until the committee which the veterans themselves have appointed has had time to make recommendations and bring them before the minister?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the matter has not been brought to my attention. I shall make inquiries and endeavour to give my hon. friend an answer tomorrow.

WAR SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

QUESTION OF EXPEDITING HANDLING AND CLEARANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Owing to the fact that it takes from two weeks to two months from the time a war savings certificate is handed into a chartered bank for collection before the proceeds are forwarded to the bank from the Bank of Canada, will the minister check with the officials of the Bank of Canada to see if the handling and clearance of these certificates can be speeded up so that the holders can get their money promptly without loss of interest?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. GRAYDON: Isn't that a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. ABBOTT: It was a statement, I think.

Mr. GRAYDON: A question, I think.

Mr. FRASER: Why should it take a month or two for a certificate to be cashed at the bank?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I shall look into the representations.

Mr. GRAYDON: Apparently the minister is going to take as long to answer as the banks take to cash them.

Mr. FRASER: Has this no priority?

FLAXSEED

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR 1948-49

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to outline government policy in connection with the handling of flax seed for 1948-49? If not, how soon can a statement be made?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not in a position to add to the statement which I made in the house on February 12. As indicated at that time, an announcement with respect to the handling and marketing arrangements for flax covering the crop year 1948-49 will be made at the earliest possible day.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REPLIES FROM PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL AND DEANS OF LAW SCHOOLS TO LETTER SENT OUT BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Lake Centre asked me to table the remainder of the correspondence with attorneys general and deans of law schools regarding the power of this parliament to enact a national bill of rights. I am today tabling all the correspondence that has not been already tabled.

[Mr. Fraser.]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

REQUEST FOR TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF $300,000,000 LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he yet in a position to inform the house of the exact terms and conditions of the $300 million loan on the Export-Import bank, or a private loan, if any?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that statement has already been made. The information is available.

Mr. CHURCH: He that goes a-borrowing goes a-sorrowing.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO BRAEFOOT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): May I refer to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes). As the minister responsible, and after a study of the background before my time, I have felt it important to get from technical advisers up to date information regarding several aspects of the Braefoot project, and as I said in the house yesterday, the work on that is now going on.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed from Monday, February 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources —Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 3—Goods not permitted import.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask a question with respect to paragraph (c) of subsection 2 of section 3. Under this section, a Canadian who had visited the United States before November 18, 1947, is permitted to bring in under the $100 clause prohibited goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. FRASER: Has the Department of Finance or the Department of National Revenue done anything to acquaint Canadians who are visiting the United States with this bill, showing them what articles they are not permitted to bring into Canada on their return? If that has not been done I suggest that when a Canadian leaves Canada he be handed a slip showing what articles are prohibited. There has been a great deal of confusion.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that that information is given to persons leaving Canada when they arrange for their form H at the bank. Of course that does not affect people who were in the United States when the regulations came into force; but I am told that when a person makes arrangements at the bank to obtain his form H steps are taken to provide him with information as to what is on the prohibited list.

Mr. FRASER: Are they given a list or a form showing what these articles are? I doubt it.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I am told they are not given a slip. They are told, really, not to buy anything to bring back. If you look over the prohibited list you will see that pretty nearly everything that a tourist may bring back with him is on the prohibited list.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Cabbages, turnips?

Mr. ABBOTT: It also applies to the quota list; it is pretty comprehensive.

Mr. FRASER: It covers a wide range.

Mr. ABBOTT: It covers the waterfront.

Mr. FRASER: From coast to coast. I think Canadians should be given some guide.

Mr. ABBOTT: The guide is this. There is practically nothing that a tourist can purchase down there and bring back which is not either on the prohibited list or the quota list; which means there is very little he can bring back with him in his suitcase.

Mr. BENTLEY: He may bring back a scuttleful of coal.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been suggested that he may bring back a scuttleful of coal.

Mr. FRASER: He can bring back luxury goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. FRASER: If you check over the list you will find that there are a few.

Mr. ABBOTT: There may be a few, yes, but a very few.

Mr. FRASER: I still claim that they should be given a list of what we have before us here.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Last evening the Minister of Trade and Commerce promised, according to page 1255 of Hansard, the figures with respect to motorcar imports and exports, upon which he based his statement which appears at page 1165 of Hansard.

Mr. HOWE: I am sorry to say that I have not the figures at the moment. I have just sent for them and I think I shall have them in ten minutes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Thank you. While I have the floor I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. I have received a number of communications. When I was at home I saw a considerable number of people who are interested in two things in the vegetable line. I have in mind the statement made by some responsible minister that in the regulations, prohibitions and quotas, health was one of the primary things in mind and was being looked after. One of the complaints that I received was that fresh vegetables, tomatoes, celery, lettuce and so on were required by persons suffering from high blood pressure. I made some inquiries on my own recently with respect to that, and the information I got did not confirm the statements that were made to me, but I am very far from being an authority. Certainly these people believed that fresh green vegetables were necessary for their health. The other complaint I received was in respect of diabetics. I have made no inquiries on that, but I have had at least half a dozen letters and a number of calls from persons suffering from diabetes who claim that their physicians have informed them that these things are absolutely necessary to those who are so suffering. Perhaps the minister of health might be interested in the matter, and I am calling it to the attention of the Minister of Finance in case they have not been specifically considered and suggesting that that might be done, and an answer given. Perhaps if he could find out from some authority that these things are not necessary it would at least put at rest the minds of many people who now think that they are not only inconvenienced but are actually suffering because they have not been able to get these articles.

Mr. ABBOTT: One or two special permits have been given on medical grounds, but I will look into the points raised by my hon. friend to see whether it might be desirable to issue a general statement.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not want clause 3 to carry without getting the figures the minister promised with respect to motorcar imports and exports.

Mr. ABBOTT: Those figures could be given on 5 (c), which deals with regulations governing the issue of permits.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That might be tonight or tomorrow or the next day. You may infer from my voice that I am anxious to get away from here as quickly as possible. May I give you the figures I have. On page 1164 of Hansard the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply made this statement:

> Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that it may surprise my hon. friend to know that the Canadian automobile industry is not a drain on balance—that is the industry manufacturing is not. It does not constitute a drain on American funds. Value of exports is in excess of value of imports.

That is the statement I have in mind. The figures I get from the bureau of statistics covering the months of October, November and December of 1947, leaving out hundreds of thousands and such smaller sums as we over here can understand, and dealing only with millions, of which I have very little understanding, show that the total imports of automobiles, trucks and parts are $46,000,000—it is really $47,000,000, but I am using round figures—while the exports during that same period were $18,000,000, still using the lower and round figure, leaving a difference of at least $28,000,000. These figures come from the bureau of statistics and they are the figures the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario had in mind. If they are correct, and I assume they are, then it does seem to me that the minister's statement on page 1165, that "value of exports is in excess of value of imports" needs a bit more consideration, and perhaps a withdrawal of the statement he made then.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend has taken all imports of motor vehicles, not limited to the companies who are manufacturing in Canada. In that event, certainly the import of motor vehicles not manufactured in Canada constitutes a drain. I was referring to branch plants actually manufacturing in Canada. The significant factor there is the American content of the import and the value of the export, and I hope to be able to give full details accordingly. The reason I have not the information is that my officers are preparing complete details. Certain figures were available at my office this morning. I have asked for additional information and perhaps my hon. friend will withhold judgment until my figures are available.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I will do so, but on this one point it is difficult to withhold judgment, that is, that the value of exports is in excess of the value of imports. The minister will admit that he is quite wrong. I do not see why we do not often admit that we are wrong. The same minister did so last year when he admitted that he was wrong about a certain airway company, and I am giving this as general advice to the House of Commons. We cannot prove that we have always been right since 1867, and a few frank confessions might be good not only for our souls but for our business. In this case it would be helpful if the minister would admit that he was wrong in the statement and let it go at that.

Mr. HOWE: It would be wonderful if people who would like to debate these questions were in the house when previous debates took place. Had the hon. member been in the house he would know that I was speaking about the manufacturing industry, and my remarks pertained only to that. If he had finished reading the sentence of which he quoted a part, he would find it set out in that statement. Perhaps he will withdraw the remarks he has made in the last few minutes about someone being wrong.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let me straighten the minister out on that. On the previous occasion I was sitting in the house in exactly the place I am in now, and he will observe that my name appears in Hansard both before and after the report of the statement he made which I have quoted. I really was not attempting to be at all critical of the minister. In fact I flatter him, for he is the only member I have known, sitting in the treasury benches, or anywhere else, who has ever admitted being wrong since the House of Commons was formed.

Mr. HOWE: I am getting old enough to be fussy about who gives me a dressing down. I am very particular now about who gives me a dressing down, and I do not appreciate your remarks at all. They are usually funny but they are not funny now.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sorry to hear the minister say that, but I remember a very old remedy I heard of when I was a boy—my mother told me about it—and that was that when you are chafing in a particular spot a little bit of wet baking soda is good for that feeling.

Mr. MILLER: This question may have been asked of the minister before, but my recollection of his remarks in the pre-Christmas sitting is to the effect that they could not take into consultation various industries for fear that they would disclose their hand, not with respect to this, but as regards the imposition of the 25 per cent tax. I was wondering if the minister, before putting these tariff items in schedule I, had caused full inquiries to be made to see whether there was some source, either in Canada or somewhere else apart from the hard currency countries, where these articles could be secured. I am thinking particularly of flashlights. I doubt if there are enough flashlights or flashlight batteries available in Canada to begin to supply the Canadian market. If that is so, it seems to me we would all have to admit that flashlights and flashlight batteries are more than a luxury now, being rather an essential. I mention this only to ask, first of all, whether consideration has been given to an alternative source of such supplies. If consideration has been given and there is no alternative source, would the minister consider taking that item from schedule I and putting it in schedule II?

Mr. ABBOTT: Replying to the general question which my hon. friend has put, as to whether consultation was had with outside interests to find out what should be included in the prohibited list and what should not, the answer is no, for reasons which all members of the committee will appreciate. Advance discussion was not possible. In selecting the articles which were to be included in schedule I, the prohibited list, or schedule II, the quota list, exhaustive study was given to trade statistics and production statistics in Canada, import records, and all that sort of thing, by an inter-departmental committee headed by Mr. Taylor, to which I referred a few days ago. Speaking generally, where things on the prohibited list are in the category of necessities or desirable items, they would not be put there unless it was felt that the source of supply in Canada was reasonably adequate. I think that would apply to flashlights, which were mentioned by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. I think there is fairly adequate production of flashlights in Canada. I am speaking from memory in discussing the schedules generally, but that was the general practice which was followed in preparing that list. Since the list was announced we have had, of course, a great many representations from persons in the trade and from consumers. Those representations have been carefully considered and as a result a certain number of changes have been made. For instance, a number of things have been moved from the prohibited list into the quota list; a few have been added to the prohibited list, but not many.

Mr. MILLER: If it is disclosed later that there is no available supply of flashlights or flashlight batteries, I presume that under the powers which have been taken they would be moved to the other schedule?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. Power is being taken in the bill to relax these restrictions, but not to make them more onerous. The government is not asking for any power in the bill to add to the list of prohibitions, but it is asking for power to move articles from the prohibited list into the quota list or to take them out of the restricted list.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister state if the money derived from the sale of Canadian-made automobiles to other countries is in United States dollars or their equivalent in pounds sterling?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the case today. Canadian motorcars exported to South America or these other markets will be for sale in either United States dollars or convertible currency.

Mr. HACKETT: Have we sold any substantial number of automobiles to hard currency countries? I thought our sales were largely restricted to sterling areas.

Mr. ABBOTT: My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce will know better than I do about that. But of course a number of sterling area countries in these days are required to pay for certain imports in convertible exchange; and although automobiles might be going in, let us say, to Malaya, Uruguay, or some other South American country, the payment would have to be made in convertible exchange.

Mr. HACKETT: But the result of that requirement is that the trade has ceased to be as fruitful and abundant as it was in the past; is that not so?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is hard to say. I am told that the export demand is still substantial, curious as it may seem.

Mr. FULTON: Have any other commodities been traded for which sterling or soft currency areas are required to pay us in dollars or convertible currency?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is probably as familiar as I am with the basis on which accounts are now settled between sterling area countries and Canada. The United Kingdom holds the reserves for sterling area countries. If a product is sold, let us say, to Australia, New Zealand, Egypt, India or any other country whose currency is sterling, settlement must be made for that sale unless credit terms are arranged. Over the past couple of years a substantial portion of the deficit of the sterling area countries has been financed out of the Canadian credit, and that credit is still operating during January, February and March. But the deficit has always been taken care of out of either gold or convertible exchange. It is the net deficit. That was true last year and it is true now. The importing country, if it is in the sterling area, must decide how much it can afford to import from hard-currency countries. It will take into account its reserves of gold or other hard currencies, the extent to which it will be able to export goods, and so on.

Mr. FULTON: I was under the impression that it was a Canadian requirement that payment for automobiles must be in dollars or convertible currency. Am I wrong there? Is it the United Kingdom which decides, or is it the individual country which decides?

Mr. ABBOTT: Obviously the Canadian exporter cannot use sterling to pay his wages. If he makes his contracts with a sterling area country, he must be assured that he can be paid in something he can use to pay his wages. It is up to him.

Mr. HACKETT: I ask this question of the Minister of Finance, although it is not his statement. If he is not prepared to answer it I shall understand and shall wait for an opportunity to ask the question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. ABBOTT: The Minister of Trade and Commerce is here.

Mr. HACKETT: Then I will ask the question of him. He stated, speaking of automobiles manufactured in Canada, that the value of exports is in excess of the value of imports.

Mr. HOWE: Of the three companies manufacturing in Canada.

Mr. HACKETT: My question is whether the minister is talking in terms of United States dollars.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. HACKETT: I can readily understand that the value of exports in pounds exceeds the value of imports in dollars, but not being convertible they do not help us much. That would not help us much out of present difficulties.

Mr. HOWE: We sell nothing for inconvertible currency. Anything that we sell to sterling countries is for convertible currency. It is true that we make a loan to these countries, but that does not alter the fact that whatever we sell to a British country is sold for convertible currency.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. HACKETT: I understand that that is the rule which the right hon. gentleman is applying at the present time. What I was endeavouring to ascertain is the accuracy of the statement that the value of exports is in excess of the value of imports. That may be what he hopes will come about when the policy he is applying has come into effect. But I accept with some doubt the accuracy of that statement if the United States dollar is to be the basis. I doubt the accuracy of it as to the past; and as to the future, we do not know because there is no experience on which to base a reply.

Mr. ABBOTT: I can answer that if I may, because it is a semi-financial question. We have been paid for everything we have exported to any country, whether it is a sterling area country or otherwise, except to the extent that the exports have been financed out of credits, except to the extent that the trading deficit of these countries has been taken care of out of credits which have been extended to them under the Export Credits Insurance Act or otherwise. That has been the situation up to the present time. What the situation will be when credits are no longer available and convertible exchange has to be paid for exports, of course, no one can foresee. That is the situation today.

Mr. HACKETT: But what is the basis for the statement?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is an accurate statement up to the present time.

Mr. HACKETT: Is there anything of record which will justify the statement that the value of exports is in excess of the value of imports in United States dollars?

Mr. HOWE: Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope to give detailed figures just as soon as I can get them. I am waiting for them. They were promised to me by 3.30; it is now 3.50, and I hope to have them shortly.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Owing to the restriction on the importation of cars wholly manufactured in the United States by companies having no branch factories in Canada many dealers will find that they can bring in only about one car for every seven they brought in during the basic period. That will have a serious effect on a great many dealers who have these agencies throughout Canada. Has the minister made any survey to ascertain how many of these dealers in Canada will be affected, and what their position will be? Will it put them out of business, and is any consideration being given dealers who have these agencies?

Mr. HOWE: Usually if an agent loses one line he takes on another. I cannot say what the effect will be, but I do not think you can make omelettes without cracking the eggs.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I know, and the effect is that it practically cuts off the dealers. I have been in the automobile business, and I know that in practically every town and city these popular car agencies have been allotted already, so it will not be possible for these dealers to pick up another agency. To my way of thinking these people are going to suffer, and I was wondering if the minister made any survey as to the effect it will have on them.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would like to ask a question in reference to bringing fruit into the country. A short time ago I was in the city of Windsor, where I met a gentleman, whom I knew well, who had just come from the customs house. He had been on a trip in Michigan and had purchased a dozen oranges. By the time he reached Windsor he had eaten nine and still had three in a bag on the back seat. He did not think for a moment he would be charged duty on the three oranges, but the customs officials told him he would have to pay duty.

Mr. ABBOTT: He should not have let them in at all.

Mr. MacNICOL: My friend just picked up the bag with the three oranges and threw it in the river. Later the same day I was talking to a newspaper man, and he said it was simply amazing what was going on at the customs house. I am sure neither of the ministers wants that kind of thing to happen. What instructions, if any, are sent out to the customs people at the border in regard to bothering people in this way?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those of course are the unfortunate incidents which I suppose cannot be helped. They can only be mitigated by customs officers exercising as much tact and courtesy as possible. The situation is that oranges are on a quota. A great many other things are prohibited. No visitor returning from the United States may bring in anything which is on the prohibited list or on the quota list. If an article is on the prohibited list no one is allowed to bring it in. If it is on the quota list the only persons allowed to import it are the holders of quotas. So unfortunately if a person goes to the United States and buys two or three heads of lettuce, as happened when I was coming up from New York a couple of weeks ago, or oranges as mentioned by my hon. friend, unless the customs officer wants to look the other way he has to enforce the law and say, "I am sorry, but those are on the prohibited list and you will have to give them to some friend before you cross the line. You cannot bring them in." That is one of the unfortunate necessities of this unfortunate law; but it is very difficult. It would not be reasonable to give the thousands of customs officers across the country power to exercise discretion, to allow one man to bring in a prohibited article and refuse to allow another to do so. So their instructions are that if the article is on the prohibited or quota list it cannot be brought in by a person returning from the United States. That is one of the unfortunate features, but we have not been able to think of any way of avoiding it.

Mr. MacNICOL: The last time I was home I had occasion to visit a hospital to see a friend of mine who was seriously ill. His beard required shaving, and the nurse said to me, "I cannot shave him with these so-called safety razors." I replied, "Why don't you use an electric razor?" She said, "Well, we cannot buy them." I see that electric razors are on the prohibited list. I do not know whether they are made in Canada, but if they are they should be available.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told they are made in Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: Anyway, I thought that was pretty tough on the nurses who have to shave their patients as well as look after them otherwise.

Mr. ABBOTT: I wonder how these people got shaved before the electric razor was invented. I suppose they had to let their beards grow.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister might indicate also what instructions have been given in reference to bringing in fresh fruit and vegetables. Certainly vegetables do not grow here in winter, except in the greenhouses, and they are required in hospitals and people like to have them in their homes. Considering the small amount of duty that would be saved on carrots and vegetables of that kind, and the great deal of good they do the people who eat them, it seems to me a big mistake was made in prohibiting the importation of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mr. ABBOTT: As far as fruit is concerned, citrus fruits are under quota; and due to lower prices prevailing in the United States this year than last, since it is a dollar quota, I believe the quantity of oranges and grapefruit imported is just as great as it was last year, and the price compares very favourably. Of course they can also be imported from the sterling area. There is no shortage of citrus fruits this winter, and the prices are pretty good. On the question of fresh fruits and vegetables, I announced when the policy was brought in that if shortages developed, adequate supplies would be made available of the four basic vegetables, potatoes, onions, carrots and cabbages. My hon. friend is a bit older than I. I am sure if he casts his mind back he will realize that this diet of imported fresh fruits and vegetables in the winter is something of comparatively recent growth in Canada. Fifteen or twenty years ago we did not bring in fresh fruits or vegetables in the winter, from the United States or anywhere else.

Mr. FRASER: We grew our own.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not in the winter time. We put them down in the root cellar, but we did not grow any fresh lettuce in the winter time, or any of the other things that have been mentioned. When I was a boy I never saw a bit of fresh lettuce or any other fresh vegetable or fruit from fall until spring—the hon. member for Stanstead nods his head—and the health of the country did not suffer in those days. Our mothers used to put up all the vegetables, peas, beans, tomatoes and so on, and they were just as nutritious as these colourless things that are brought in from Mexico or somewhere else. I have had occasion to say this before but I make it now as an assertion, and I am pretty sure it is true: that the health of a single individual in Canada will not suffer because we are not bringing in $3,000,000 worth of American lettuce this winter, or some of these other pleasant, desirable but expensive things which are not essential for health purposes. When you do not have the money you have to go without some things, and that is the position we are in today quoad the United States. I will say, too, that a great many rural areas in Canada today never see a bit of fresh lettuce in the winter time, or any other fresh vegetables. They are restricted to the larger centres, where the wholesale fruit and vegetable trade can readily distribute these delicacies. But it is not general throughout Canada during the winter.

Mr. FRASER: Lettuce in the House of Commons restaurant today at 30 cents a head!

Mr. HOWE: There seems to be some urgency with respect to the data on imports and exports of motor vehicles. I now have before me a statement from Mr. J. H. Berry, who is in charge of the capital goods program. It states that the three major Canadian manufacturers of passenger cars and light trucks have advised him of certain figures covering their operations in Canada during the twelve months ending October 31, 1947. The statement goes on to say:

The figures giving the value of exports are the invoice value of goods exported by them.

1. Vehicles produced in Canada for domestic sale	169,093
2. Vehicles produced in Canada for export	71,969
3. Total production	241,062
4. Cost of imported productive and service material and accessories	$74,059,986
5. Invoice value of exports	$79,618,398

This shows a balance in favour of exports of about $5,500,000.

Mr. HACKETT: I have listened attentively to what the minister has said, but I do not think he has given an answer to the query I addressed to him. Were those exports paid for in American dollars? That is what we are trying to ascertain—whether or not the automotive business is a drain on our American dollars. The minister has just said that we have paid over $74,000,000 in U.S. dollars for parts imported from the United States, and that we have sold motor vehicles to the value of $79,000,000. Were we paid in United States funds?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall have to answer that, and I shall give the same answer I gave before. We were paid for everything we exported from this country last year, except to the extent that those exports were financed out of the British credit or the credits which were extended under the Export Credits Insurance Act. Balances over and above the credits were settled in a convertible currency.

Mr. HACKETT: Then, that means that to the extent of the credit we advanced we lost U.S. dollars on the transaction?

Mr. ABBOTT: You may say that the credit was used to pay for wheat, and they used the cash to pay for automobiles. You may take your choice. But there were substantial cash payments received by this country in addition to credits which were extended.

Mr. HACKETT: All I am trying to establish is the accuracy of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I fear that my challenge must stand, because it has not been established that the answer given was an accurate one.

Mr. WRIGHT: I notice that under tariff item 415a in schedule I there is reference to refrigerators, and I would understand from the item that the importation of refrigerators into Canada is entirely stopped. There is one type of refrigerator, an oil-burning variety, which is not made in Canada. It is used extensively in the rural areas. Possibly seventy per cent of the people in rural areas have no electricity available to them on their farms, and this is the only type of refrigerator suitable for their purposes. What consideration has been given to the importation of this type of refrigerator? What were the importations last year; and will the minister give us any other information he may have on the subject?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid it would not be possible to give my hon. friend figures as to the importations of that particular refrigerator, because it comes in under the general tariff item relating to refrigerators. The statistics would not be broken down between that type of refrigerator known, I believe, as the Servel, and other types, so those figures could not be made available. I can say, however, that consideration was given to the factors referred to by the hon. member for Melfort. It was felt that the importation of refrigerators as such constituted such an important item that they would have to be prohibited. It was felt, further, that exception could not very well be made in respect of one type of refrigerator. That may result, of course, in that particular type of machine being produced here in Canada; I cannot say as to that.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is there any indication that it is likely to be produced here, or is there any other source available in soft currency countries? If there is not, then it seems to me there is discrimination against a certain group in our community. That is particularly true when we realize that the people in Canada who have electricity available to them can still purchase refrigerators, but those who have not electricity simply cannot obtain them.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the situation is somewhat the same as that referred to the other day by the hon. member for Swift Current in regard to propane stoves manufactured in the United States. We are looking into these matters continually, and where it is possible to make relaxations it will be done. Hon. members will understand, however, that it would not be possible to have absolute equality right across the board. There are bound to be situations such as the hon. member has indicated, where there would appear to be some temporary discrimination. But, as I say, in the old days, in the country, even kerosene refrigerators were not available.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is true, they were not available, and it is only within recent years that this particular type of refrigerator has become available in rural areas. Under section 4 the minister is given discretion in cases of exceptional hardship to make certain concessions. It seems to me this is a genuine case which he might well consider. I do not think the amount involved would be very great so far as American currency is concerned. Unless the minister has some assurance respecting the establishment of branch plants in Canada, I suggest he give this matter further consideration.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, in these times of so-called austerity I am in full sympathy with the Minister of Finance, although I cannot say I am in full agreement with him. The other day one hon. member, speaking about trade, said that our trade with the United States was not as important as that with the United Kingdom and the rest of the empire. He did not make the necessary distinction. The distinction should be made between real and fictitious trade. Whether it be larger or smaller than our trade with the British commonwealth, the fact is that our trade with the United States is real trade, because the goods are sold and paid for on both sides of the border. Trade with the rest of the world is fictitious. At the present time we are living in the clouds, and the trade with the rest of the world is not at all real. Why? Precisely because of that obstacle known as the American dollar. The American dollar has become the obstacle to our trade with Americans. Surely that is incredible. The American government has been hoarding gold for a long time at Fort Knox so that it may have supremacy in trade over the whole world. It has been their avarice which has caused our difficulty and the difficulty of other countries.

The other day I made a suggestion which I believe, was quite in order; it was that we substitute barter for our present fantastic and imaginary trading processes. That would be an experience; any policy adopted for a short time is an experience. Here we are entering upon an experience in trade, and Canada has become a verboten country, as Germany was at the time of Hitler. You cannot go across the border; it is forbidden. You cannot take in any money; it is forbidden on account of our shortage of United States dollars. If you want a cheap refrigerator or washing machine you cannot buy it. You have to pay a tax of 25 per cent more because we have not enough reserves of United States dollars. I mention that because for a long time I have advocated sound trade policies, and I was considered unpatriotic to do that.

I find that the whole set-up of the Department of Finance is wrong. The question should not be to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act but to get rid of it altogether. Some hon. member advocated that either yesterday or the day before when I was not in the house, but I read it in Hansard. He said that we should dispense with the Foreign Exchange Control Act. We can say a lot about imports and exports. Our import trade is an honest trade, just the same as our export trade. It affords a living to a large number of people who import goods from other countries and sell them here. But now they are precluded from doing that, precisely because we have spent too much during the war—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The committee is considering clause 3 which deals with goods not permitted import. The hon. member is dealing in his remarks with the general principle of the bill. I would ask him to confine his remarks more directly to the clause under consideration.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking of the principle of the bill. I am speaking only of this clause, the title of which is "import control" and the marginal note, "Goods not permitted import". My view is that we should dispense with this clause, dispense with the whole bill, and dispense with the foreign exchange control board.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the point I raised with the hon. member. On second reading the house adopted the principle of the bill; therefore it is not in order to discuss the principle at this time. The principle has been accepted, and now we are dealing with the details of the bill, at the moment with the details of clause 3.

Mr. POULIOT: I certainly do not wish to dispute with the Chair. I have too much respect for the Chair and for you personally, sir, to indulge in that kind of thing. But here we have clause 3, the first paragraph of which reads:

> No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II or III except in accordance with a permit issued by the minister, and, subject to this act and the regulations, the minister may issue, vary, or revoke permits for the import of such goods.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

I do not object at all to the present minister exercising these powers, because I believe in his fairness and I believe he is a great Liberal. That is why I am in full sympathy with him. I realize that at times it must be pretty hard for him to defend a measure like this. But he has my entire confidence, and it is just because I want to help him that I warn him of the danger in this kind of legislation. You know very well, sir, that without speaking on the principle of the bill I can warn the committee of the danger that exists in the main clause of the bill, and if this is the main clause it is hard to make a distinction between the principle of the bill and what is contained in this clause.

What I am saying has nothing whatever to do personally with the minister or the staff of the foreign exchange control board. But I find it is bad. The best tradesman cannot expect to do a fine piece of work with a bad tool. The foreign exchange control board is a bad tool, and no one has realized yet that it is that body which keeps the whole reserve of gold and securities belonging to the Dominion of Canada. They are the ones who have all the guarantees that we can give for the Canadian dollar. It is not the Bank of Canada that prints the notes; it is the foreign exchange control board that holds the fortune of the country, and that organization is not able now to meet our international financial obligations to the rest of the world. What is wrong with it? It is precisely because of the unwise management of the foreign exchange control board that that institution is unable now to render the same services that were rendered by the minister and the Department of Finance before the Bank of Canada and the foreign exchange control board were established. That is why we cannot import. There are many items in which we have no more freedom of trade. It is just as simple as spring water. This is what I object to.

How is it that if I want to buy a washing machine in the United States I have to pay from $150 to $175 for that same machine in Canada? It is because of taxation that I am compelled to pay on the supposed Canadian-made or Canadian-adjusted machine to cover our deficiency of United States dollars. It is not a complicated matter. Those who tell you this whole matter is complicated are those who will pose as experts afterwards and tell us that this subject is so very difficult that no one can understand it. Let us get down to fundamentals. Let us realize that Providence has made different climates in different countries so that the goods of those countries will be different and so that there will be an international exchange of goods, so that there will be an inducement for men to deal together in fraternity and co-operate together. When I see obstacles made by man to prevent other men from getting what they want legitimately I am opposed to that, and I am opposed to it because I am a Liberal, and there must be a change made soon in that organization.

It is not a question of discussing the principle of the bill. It is impossible to speak on this matter without mentioning the things I have already mentioned. Of course, I am open to conviction and if something is said that will satisfy my mind I will say: Well said; I agree. But so long as such explanation is not made to me my mind is not satisfied, sir, and I say that on behalf of all the Canadians who want this country to be a free country, who want this country to be at least a country where men can trade freely with their neighbours. And mark you, sir, how is it that I cannot buy any goods from the United States because of the United States dollar when I can get the same thing from the United Kingdom, from Belgium, from France, from The Netherlands because they are not on the same currency? We pay much more for what we buy from these countries than we would pay to the United States. We have to spend more money not to use United States dollars. It does not get into my head.

I may be dumb; I may not understand the intricacies of international finance and high finance, but I do not see why I should gain nothing, why I spend twice as much to get the same thing in Canadian dollars. I cannot understand it. It is beyond me, and it is beyond the average man. Nobody understands it except the wizards in the Department of Finance, and I congratulate the minister for not being one of them. There could be no greater compliment paid to him than that. I consider him a man who means well and who wants to make a success of his department; but I am very sorry to warn him that so long as he has the same wizards around him—and I do not particularly mention the good looking gentlemen who are in front of him now; I speak of the whole organization—he will have trouble. I said that when Bennett was in power, and the same men are there today. Some newcomers have been added to the staff; but it is the same men who run the show, who are considered essential and who cannot give a satisfactory explanation to anyone.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you, sir.

Mr. LENNARD: Some time ago the hon. member for Davenport mentioned that three oranges were taken away from a traveller at a border point. In reply the minister said that the law was there and that the border officers had no discretion in the matter. Well, all I can say is that it is about time some discretion was given to them. I know of scores of cases—but I am not going to burden the committee with that sort of thing this afternoon—where the necessities of life have been taken away from people at border points. I am referring to travelling necessities. I know of one instance in which they went into a man's pocket and took away a few cigars. I do not say they are travelling necessities, but I know that travelling necessities have been taken away from people at the border. It is about time that some discretionary powers were given to these border officers and that they used a little more tact in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I rise to support the hon. member for Melfort with regard to the necessity for the importation of kerosene refrigerators for people in isolated districts. The minister in reply to the hon. member said we did not have kerosene refrigeration twenty-five years ago. In this connection I think the minister is giving insufficient consideration to the people who live in the rural districts and away from electrical power. The people on the farms are producing food, the miners at isolated points are producing very necessary minerals, and the woodsmen working in isolated camps are producing urgently required lumber. In my opinion these people should get every consideration. I want to remind the minister that twenty-five years ago we had few American films imported into this country but we have many today. I suggest if it is necessary to preserve foreign exchange then it would be better to keep out of the country some of the putrid films that are poisoning the minds of our young people and permit the import of kerosene refrigerators for people who are producing wealth for Canada.

Mr. CASE: This afternoon the minister said that they seek to do business in convertible currencies. I believe that is the term.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. CASE: My question is this. We have the Bank of Canada as a national institution. Is there any machinery provided by which we can convert sterling into Canadian dollars? In other words, would it not be good business to store up a surplus of sterling as a hedge against the day when the United States dollar slumps? We have put too much emphasis upon the United States dollar. Three-fifths of the business of the world was done in the sterling area in days gone by, and I have confidence that it will come back. Someone must be paid when he manufactures goods for export. May we not convert sterling into Canadian dollars? Are there any facilities whereby we can build up a surplus of sterling as well as United States dollars?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have substantial quantities of sterling now. We have made loans of something over a billion dollars. We have a loan without interest which is still outstanding. The effect of accumulating sterling, which is what my hon. friend has referred to, is simply to advance additional credit to the United Kingdom. You do not have to accumulate sterling notes in order to advance credit. It is far simpler than that. A better way to do it is by an entry in the books, and that is exactly what we have under the British credit. The net effect of exchanging Canadian dollar bills for sterling notes, to use the example given by my hon. friend, is simply to advance that much more of a loan to the United Kingdom. The Canadian producer has to be paid in Canadian dollars. If the British importer sends over a thousand pounds to pay for something he has imported, somebody has to provide four thousand Canadian dollars to pay the Canadian exporter. If that is done by the Canadian government it is a further loan of $4,000. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. CASE: I understand that, but the United States dollar situation does not enter into that transaction. You are going to convert it to Canadian dollars as an additional credit to the sterling area. It does not have any relationship to the United States dollar there. That is correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: The net effect is that for the time being you are lending the goods to whoever is importing them.

Mr. CASE: It has no relationship to the United States dollar situation.

Mr. ABBOTT: None whatever, except to the extent that it is something we could sell somewhere else for United States dollars.

Mr. CASE: Is there any restriction on the importation of fuel oil?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not under this, no.

Mr. CASE: There is a scarcity of fuel oil.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are anxious to get all the fuel oil we can. It is a vital item in our economy.

[Mr. Case.]

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce before the hon. member for Huron-Perth can give the bad news about the provincial by-election; I am sorry the hon. member for Huron-Perth has such bad news to bring back to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I support the argument advanced by the hon. members for Melfort and Kootenay West. Is any consideration being given to the establishment of industries in Canada to produce kerosene refrigerators? A great many farmers have been using these refrigerators in recent years, and Canada was able to establish settlers all across the north country where we had refrigeration during the war. It seems a pity to discontinue the making available of this type of refrigeration to rural communities if by any means it can be continued. Is this one of the industries that may be started?

Mr. HOWE: I have no information on the subject. I have not been advised of anyone attempting to start that line of production, but I shall make further inquiries.

Mr. NICHOLSON: During the war at Churchill, The Pas and at other outlying places across the north we were able to establish refrigeration for any people who came there. If the minister went at his present job as he went at the job of establishing air training schools with modern facilities, we would not have to discontinue the supplying of these essential commodities which are used by many people in frontier places.

Mr. WRIGHT: What is the position with regard to parts for servicing this equipment that is already in Canada? Are the parts still allowed to be imported?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are allowed in. I would not want the committee to get the impression that I have no sympathy for conditions such as have been described, but the position is a difficult one. When you have to take a long list of imported articles and select some which must be temporarily excluded, one cannot avoid what might perhaps be considered as discrimination. As I have said so often, however, this is not a permanent policy. Perhaps six months or a year from now it may be possible to relax somewhat, and that might be one of the first items that could be considered. But when you have a definite shortage of the means of paying for essential imports from the United States, you have to defer some of the less essential if you are to follow the principle set forth in this bill.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the minister any information as to where this type of goods can be got? Is it available in soft currency countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: I will make inquiries.

Mr. TIMMINS: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said something about the regulations which will be brought down with respect to the motorcar industry, and he has told us about the manner in which building construction will be handled by means of projects. I am speaking for the middle class of businessmen, who ought to know now how they will be able to carry on in the time to come. I am thinking of the engineering and machine work business of the country, which went ahead 100 or 200 per cent during the war. These industries are geared to handle as great a production as they did during the war, and unless they are able to carry on with steel and iron and all the other elements that enter into their work, there will be unemployment in these industries. Last evening the minister said, referring to projects:

> If the project is of any considerable size the applicant appears before the officers of the department and gives them any explanations they require.

That, I submit, is predicating the conduct of business on Ottawa. It is bringing into business throughout Canada the Wellington street complex. In other words, everything is based on Ottawa, and I suggest that the man living in Halifax or in Vancouver and who is in business just as anyone else is ought to be able to know just how he is going to carry on. Is it the intention to arrange for teams of departmental officials to attend in these various centres with a set of regulations? If we do not know the regulations, someone must know them. How is business in Canada going to carry on in these various engineering projects? I know some firms that are engaged in the manufacture of meat-stringing machines and packaging machines. As business grows in this country, these machines will become more and more a part of the fabric of industry. If the minister does not give us the regulations, what guide will he give so that industry may know where it is going?

Mr. HOWE: This is not the first time that question has been asked, but I can assert with some degree of knowledge that businessmen in this country do know where they are going, and if they do not know where they are going and care to ask a specific question, an answer will be furnished. They can get a prompt answer by writing in. I suggest that instead of the hon. member attempting to tell industry where it is going, he should let industry tell him. He will find that they know where they are going.

Mr. McKAY: I support what the hon. member for Melfort has said in his opposition to the restrictions that have been placed against kerosene-burning refrigerators. I recognize, as most members do, that we have to conserve American dollars, but this particular restriction affects those who live in the country, who, as has been pointed out, are often a long distance from electrical energy. This is probably the only method of refrigeration they have, and I suggest that if further restrictions have to be applied on other things to make up the dollar shortage here, we might ban the importation of high-priced automobiles. We are making three models of cars in Canada, and that should be sufficient for the demands of the public in the period of so-called austerity. We ought to admit some of these refrigerators that rural people require.

I wish to ask a question, a partial answer to which I believe was given last night. Can the minister say just how long it will be before quotas on imports of component parts that go into the manufacture or the assembling of manufactured goods in Canada—I refer particularly to electrical appliances—will be announced? How soon will the minister be able to announce when these quotas will be set up? I know from conversations with certain industrial heads that they are inconvenienced and sometimes visibly worried over the fact that they do not know what the quotas will be and therefore cannot make contracts with the dealers.

One further question I would ask in that connection. Perhaps the minister cannot answer it now, though I wish he would give some sort of answer as a guide. Will the dollar allotments to be provided be set on the basis of imports of those particular commodities for 1947?

Mr. HOWE: The formula governing imports of electrical parts is under intensive study at the moment. Meetings are being held with branches of industry. I cannot say positively when the quotas will be announced, but it will certainly be before the first of April, and possibly before the first of March, although I doubt if the latter date is possible. As for the standard period, that is being considered. It would hardly be the calendar year 1947. It will be some specific period which the trade will agree is fair to all branches of industry.

Mr. SKEY: Would this be the right time to discuss import permits as far as the aircraft industry is concerned, or should that come under the tariff items?

Mr. HOWE: That should come later. Consideration has not been given to that item.

Mr. SKEY: It is in the bill.

Mr. HOWE: I know it is in the bill, but I suggest that it be left until we come to the tariff items.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

An hon. MEMBER: On division.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—No permits for goods in schedule I—exception.

Mr. MANROSS: I want to ask two or three questions. I know that barber chairs are prohibited, but I suggest that there ought to be one for the Minister of Finance, who has to get up and down so much. I do not suppose there is a standard formula for deciding what "hardship" means. Is each case decided on its own merits?

Mr. ABBOTT: That has to be pretty much the rule.

Mr. MANROSS: What is a hardship, and who decides the question? Is it decided on the ministerial level, or by men in the departments?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is a departmental committee consisting of Mr. Taylor, the assistant deputy minister of finance, who is chairman, Mr. Gordon, representing the foreign exchange control board, Mr. Sim, representing customs and excise, Mr. Taggart, representing the Department of Agriculture, and Mr. Mackenzie, deputy minister of trade and commerce. All requests that come to the emergency import control division for treatment under the hardship provision are examined first by the officials of the division. They are considered by this committee, and if they fall into a pattern which has been recognized as constituting hardship they will be granted without reference to myself. If the case is unusual, and that has often been so, then the matter is referred to me with the recommendation of the committee, and I make the decision. I probably discuss the matter for some time. In one or two particular cases we had, we discussed them for nearly a week before we came to a final conclusion. Under the provision of that order in council now and under the act as drafted, I am the final judge. As I said the other night, I have to exercise something in the nature of a judicial function there. After having all the facts put before me, I have to decide whether it is a case of exceptional hardship which merits consideration under this section.

Mr. MANROSS: I suppose, if a company gets a letter back from an individual in the department saying that he does not see there is any hardship, there is still a further appeal?

Mr. ABBOTT: They can always appeal directly to the minister, if they want to; a great many have.

Mr. MANROSS: There will be more. I have not yet had time to dictate the letters. With regard to the refrigerator problem which the hon. member for Melfort mentioned, I was going to mention that again under section 4 because I thought that was where it should be dealt with. In certain cases it does create some hardship, especially in rural areas where in the last few years these cold storage plants have been put in. Encouragement has been given to the farmers to freeze their fruits, vegetables and meats; and they have to come down to get these things at the refrigerated storage. Once meats are frozen, they must be used quickly or be put in a refrigerator. People living out on a dirt road ten or fifteen miles from a cold storage plant have to bring back more than enough for one meal or for one day. These refrigerators which are operated by kerosene or gas flame are not imported in great quantity, but they are used in homes in towns where they are vitally necessary, more so than in the cities where there is an available ice supply or hydro supply. The hon. member said something about importing them when they were available from other countries. Of course these refrigerators can be purchased from Sweden, but they are antiquated and by the time you get them here they cost about four times as much as those being imported from the United States.

As to the possibility of making this type of refrigerator in Canada, I think it is beyond the realm of all practical possibility because it is a welded job, self-contained inside, one tube inside another, and it would be necessary to tool up to make them. The factory which makes them in the United States makes about 300,000 a year. The potential demand for refrigerators in Canada is probably about 15,000, so it would mean that the cost of your tools and dies would have to be absorbed; and it would take about fifty years to absorb the cost of your original set of tools and dies, and they would have been obsolete many years before then.

The minister said that probably this might be the first item considered. I hope he is right. I have no connection with any refrigerator company any more, so it is nothing to me personally. I have none of these outfits in my riding. I am just rising here because I know the market and I know where they are used. When the minister is giving consideration to hardship that has been created for certain people in rural areas, I think he should consider this at least to the extent of allowing some quota or of making some provision for gas and kerosene refrigerators for these rural territories. He said that electrical refrigerators or refrigerators come in under item 415a, which covers gas and electric. But if the department will look the matter up I think they will find that these entries of kerosene refrigerators have all been made at one port, and it would be easy to distinguish between electrically operated ones and kerosene operated ones.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I said, I will look into that question. Total imports of refrigerators last year were something of the order of $4,000,000. It may be, as my hon. friend suggests, that we could pick out the kerosene ones and see what they amounted to. As I have said, I will give consideration to relaxation as soon as it is possible to do that.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Matthews) brought to my attention a problem which is similar to one I have in Halifax. I think it could be termed a hardship in so far as this particular type of consumer is concerned. I refer to the working man who uses overalls and smocks. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce will look at the figures of exports and our total production in Canada he will find that, whereas the total consumption of textiles was 486,000,000 square yards, the Canadian production amounted to only 268,000,000 yards. Of the remainder the United States supplied 213,000,000 yards. In the projected program there is provision made for only 51,000,000 yards from the United States. Needless to say, that will not fill the consumption requirements as outlined in the figures I have already mentioned.

I am making a plea for the small manufacturer who is endeavoring to produce that type of work clothes, and I would ask favourable consideration by the minister for permits to import United States denims, if applications for such permits are brought to his attention. The same argument applies to denims used in connection with sails for sailboats, awnings and other things. They are imported to a large extent. I have particularly in mind a new manufacturer in Halifax, the Maritime Canvas Converters, who employs thirty-five men at the present time. If they do not procure the necessary yardage for the making of sails—and their export business requires sail making—the sales concerned will be cut off. This is a new business for our end of the country, and I am particularly interested in seeing that nothing be done to stop any export business or manufacturing there.

While I am on my feet, there is one other item I think I should bring to the attention of the minister in the hope that nothing will prevent a firm making rock-wool insulation from getting the material they require. The insulation is made to a large extent from seaweed, but they require a tar wrapping and this is procurable only in the United States. They are unable to sell their products for insulating purposes unless they have a proper covering such as a tar covering to protect the product. They have already made application which has not as yet been accepted. I trust the minister will give this application favourable consideration. So that there will be no mistake about it, the product is rock-wool insulation, made by Guilfords Limited, of Halifax, a fine firm. I do not know just now as to the number of men they employ. It is a new industry in our section of the country and something that is giving employment not only to men in the factory but to men on the shore, the fishermen who collect the seaweed and ship it to Halifax. Will the minister be good enough to take under consideration these two items, namely, United States denims and this covering for the product which I have mentioned?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to look at the case which the senior member for Halifax has brought to my attention.

Mr. MANROSS: I am sorry to hark back to refrigerators again, but there is one more thing I want to ask the minister. Another refrigerator manufacturer made refrigerators last year and shipped them out short of certain parts because they were not procurable. The parts have since come in. They are in bond and are paid for by the retail customers in the field or the householders; but the collector of customs will not let the manufacturer clear them out of bond because they are now on the prohibited list. They come under item 432b, which is hollow-ware, vitreous, which is prohibited right now. The manufacturer in the United States cannot take them back because they are obsolete with him

Mr. ABBOTT: I will look into the matter myself. But if it is brought to the attention of the division, it sounds like a case in which a permit could be given.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to ask the minister a question or two in reference to his recent transfer of certain British goods from the prohibited to the quota list. That was announced in the press this morning. I am a faithful reader of the Montreal Gazette; I have the statement here which was made last evening by the minister, or issued on his behalf. What was the reason behind these transfers? Was it to expand trade with the United Kingdom by permitting them to sell more to us?

Mr. ABBOTT: In those cases it was found they were items which were available in the United Kingdom which could be transferred to the quota list without involving any substantial imports of like items from dollar areas. In other words, to put it bluntly, we could allow substantial quantities of United Kingdom exports of that kind without the necessity of allowing any comparable quantities of similar goods from dollar areas. There have been a number of cases of that kind. We have been continually in discussion with the British high commissioner and the British trade authorities, looking into cases of that kind where, without appreciably affecting the expenditure of United States dollars, we could so arrange the quota list or the prohibited list as to enable certain commodities to be imported. There were such things as jams, prepared foods and so on.

Mr. FULTON: Silverware, glassware and other items.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. I mentioned a number of times previously that a number of items which at first blush might appear to be luxury items were coming principally from soft currency areas where we have extended credits, and where it was desirable that we should encourage exports.

Mr. FULTON: That seems to bear out the statements which have been made from this side, to the effect that the non-discriminatory principle of the bill was a poor principle and that we should not have applied the whole scope of this legislation to soft currency areas when we applied it to the United States. I would go a little farther and say that on December 19, the last day of the pre-Christmas session, I forecast that the government would find it necessary to relax these restrictions against sterling countries if they expected them to continue to buy from us and so expand our trade. So I am glad to see these transfers being made. If the minister has the information available I should like him to tell us the number of items so transferred from the prohibited list to the quota list, and the number of items which have been released altogether from restriction.

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave this information the other evening, but speaking from memory I think some fifteen categories have been taken from the prohibited list, and most of them have been placed on the quota list. I would have to refer to my previous statement to give the exact number, but I believe some fifteen categories were removed the other day from what will become schedule I and placed in schedule II.

Mr. FULTON: Then I should like to know why we cannot take off the restrictions altogether as far as the United Kingdom is concerned. It would not cost us anything in United States dollars. Why, then, can we not relax the restrictions, particularly with respect to such things as electrical appliances, which we need?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have argued this point day after day and night after night. A number of hon. members, some forty-two, did not agree with me, but I thought we had dealt with the amendment of the hon. member for Kindersley, which would have taken the non-discriminatory principle out of this bill and inserted the discriminatory. That is over and done with.

Mr. FULTON: That is not my present suggestion at all. I say we could relax the restrictions, by transfers, if you like, or by amending the schedules as far as the United Kingdom is concerned. On the point that the United States might resent it, if the minister was going to raise that point, I certainly think they would be no more resentful against us for doing directly what we are doing now by this indirect method.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no indirect method about it. On examination of particular cases we are finding that we can transfer a category from the prohibited list to the quota list without causing what we consider would be too great a drain upon our United States dollar resources, and in such case we do it at once. You have to look into the trade statistics; you have to see what the result would be on the basis of last year's trade figures; you have to make a projection as to what it is likely to be this year, and then you make a policy decision. But that is what we have to do all the time, and I have tried to indicate that all the powers contained in the bill are so drafted to permit the relaxation of these measures by moving from a higher category to a lower one, but we cannot move them back again.

Mr. FULTON: But your whole trend is to relax restrictions against trade with the United Kingdom.

Mr. JAENICKE: Can the minister tell us how many permits have been issued already under section 4?

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave that information the other evening.

Mr. JAENICKE: I thought I was here all the time, but I missed that. If there are not too many could the minister classify them; that is, could he tell us what goods were affected and from what countries those goods came? I should like also to have some explanation as to how he exercises his discretion in regard to hardship. That is, is it to be a hardship on the Canadian importer, or the foreign exporter, or the Canadian public? I believe the minister mentioned one case when he introduced this bill, or on second reading, where he said the goods had been specially made for the Canadian importer, and I presume that would be a hardship case as far as both the exporter and the importer were concerned. I think the committee should have some explanation as to how this hardship is to be determined; that is, the discretion the minister exercises in determining whether or not there is hardship.

There is another question I should like to ask in connection with this section, and it refers to vegetables, which are prohibited under schedule I. About half an hour ago the minister made a statement in connection with this matter, but I believe at the present time tomatoes are being imported from the Bahamas.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was a hardship case.

Mr. JAENICKE: And from Jamaica. I am not complaining about that, by any means, but I should like the minister to tell us on what he exercised his discretion in that particular case, and who got the benefit of that discretion. Does he allow the importation of all the tomatoes that can be shipped from Jamaica or the Bahamas, or was it just one special case? I believe the committee should have an explanation.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps we had better take these questions by instalments, or I may forget some of them. As I said the other evening, permits issued under the hardship and unusual circumstances clause totalled 5,226 to February 7, with a total dollar value of $7,228,147. The great majority of those goods were from the United States. There were fifty-three permits in connection with other scheduled countries, that is other dollar countries; 446 from the United Kingdom and 169 from other non-scheduled countries. I could place two or three tables on Hansard if the committee wished it. They are longish, but not too long, giving some breakdown of the products, values, names of countries, and the like. Perhaps that would be useful to the committee. These tables give most of the information which has just been requested by the hon. member for Kindersley.

Mr. JAENICKE: Will these tables show the hardships?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I will come to that in a moment. They show the categories.

The tables follow:

As to hardship, that is a matter, as I said before, where in the final analysis I really have to exercise a judicial function. A hardship may be that of the importer or of the exporter or of both; or, in the third case he mentioned, a hardship suffered by some particular portion of the whole of the Canadian public. Any of these factors can be taken into consideration. But the question of hardship is qualified by the word "exceptional".

In respect of tomatoes, to which the hon. member referred, it will be understood that they were imported from Jamaica and the Bahamas. The circumstances were these, that the government of the Bahamas, through the British trade commissioner at that point, made representations to us that these tomatoes had been grown for the Canadian market, that there was no effective alternative market to which they could be sent, and that if they were not shipped to Canada a serious hardship would be caused to exporters in that country.

As my hon. friend knows, the Bahamas constitute a small community, and there are not many varieties of products available. After full consideration of all the circumstances, we came to the conclusion that import permits should be allowed for those products.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. JAENICKE: To whom were those permits granted?

Mr. ABBOTT: What happened was this, that the imports were arranged through Mr. Stollmeyer, the British West Indies trade commissioner. They were imported through regular channels of trade, and were put out on the mark-up control having regard to the cost to the wholesaler. The price is 37 cents retail, and the cost was $4.50 a lug of 28 pounds. The top price from the wholesaler to the retailer has been fixed at $6.

Mr. TIMMINS: Is that a continuing exemption?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; it covers just this crop. It was really just to take care of this emergent situation. It was represented to us—and we were impressed by the reasonableness of the representations—that when the restrictions were put on, the growers in Nassau, particularly, who had grown these tomatoes, had been relying upon this market, to which they had always exported.

Mr. JAENICKE: Were shipments allocated to the different wholesalers in the country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that was done by the trade, themselves. That is what has been done in other cases.

Mr. JAENICKE: What does the minister mean by "the trade"? Has the wholesale trade an association?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is the wholesale vegetable trade, and they have an association of which Mr. Burrows is the head, and which undertook to arrange for equitable distribution.

Mr. TIMMINS: Do the tables which the minister has put on Hansard include transfers of oranges, grapefruit, lemons, fruit juices and the like to the quota list?

Mr. ABBOTT: They were not taken out of schedule I; they were always in the quota list. Citrus fruits were always under quota; they have never been completely banned.

Mr. McLURE: Perhaps the minister would answer the question I asked yesterday. It was this:

Will Canadian-owned goods now being processed in the United States require a permit to bring them back to manufacturers in Canada?

Perhaps the minister could answer that now.

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe I replied to my hon. friend that I would have to look into the matter. I do not know that I would be able to give him an answer before consideration of the bill in committee has been concluded.

Mr. BENTLEY: I suppose it could be considered an exceptional hardship if one section of the public is deprived of something it has been in the habit of using as household equipment. There would also be exceptional hardship for the merchant who is deprived of that stock in trade. I will refer to the matter of propane stoves. Does either of the ministers have the necessary authority to say that a Canadian manufacturer of a similar product, one which heretofore has been under more or less of a monopoly or has been guided through special agents of those companies, may make his product available to other distributors, so that they will not suffer any hardship? Has either minister power to do that and, if so, will he exercise that power so that there may be some fairness in the matter?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know offhand where such power may exist. It sounds somewhat analogous to the equitable distribution measures which were in force during the war. However, I should have to give further consideration to the point just raised.

Mr. BENTLEY: Will you do that?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall look into it, and see what the situation is.

Mr. JAENICKE: The minister has put on record a list of articles.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have placed three tables on Hansard, and if there is any further information it may be made available.

Mr. FULTON: Under this section is special provision with respect to veterans in business made by the minister, or is there some other provision under which those veterans would come?

Mr. ABBOTT: The special provision with respect to veterans applies only with respect to quota goods. And either under this section or under section 5, which deals with the regulations, provision has been made where, in addition to quotas which have been established under the mathematical formula based upon last year's imports, there has been a special quota arrangement for veterans who did not have a record of business during the twelve months prior to the coming into force of the restrictions.

Mr. FULTON: In so far as goods in schedule I are concerned, they are in exactly the same position as anybody else.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, those are prohibited. They are prohibited to everyone.

Mr. McMASTER: As items are moved from schedule I to schedule II, or from schedule II to III as the case may be, how are the public notified of those changes?

Mr. ABBOTT: Up to the present it has been done by means of press releases and advice to the trade, if it is something concerning a particular trade. Then there is publication in the Canada Gazette. I should think that, after a short while, there would not be so many. The schedules will be finalized—if I may use a word which might be considered objectionable—and then, from time to time, as it is possible to do so, they may be moved from one schedule to the other.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Regulations governing issue of permits for goods in schedules II and III.

Mr. FULTON: In subsection 1 (g) the governor in council is given power to make regulations suspending the operation of the act with respect to any person or any goods or any class of persons or class of goods. Without going into all the arguments which have been made since this bill first came to the house with respect to dictatorial powers and discrimination, following what was said yesterday by the minister where he stated that he disliked legislation of this type as much as anybody else did, I was wondering whether he would consider confining paragraph (g) to goods and classes of goods, leaving out reference to persons or classes of persons, thereby limiting the discrimination?

Mr. ABBOTT: This is the purpose of that section. There must be some provision of that kind in order to enable exceptions to be made for institutions such as hospitals, or for trade fairs and matters of that kind. Admittedly it is a discretionary provision; I do not deny that. But it is very difficult to spell out any section of this kind so as to meet all the cases which one may wish to meet.

It will be noted that this is a relaxing provision. If authorized by the regulations, the minister may relax these restrictions. It is true that it would open the door to favouritism, if the minister were so inclined. But I really believe that, on balance, it is better to leave it in these general terms, thereby allowing reasonable freedom to the administration to relax these restrictions in cases such as I have mentioned, or in such other cases as it may be deemed proper to take such action. If the power were exercised unwisely, I should hope we would hear about it in the house.

I should have added that this can be exercised only in virtue of a regulation published in the Canada Gazette and tabled in the House of Commons, so that the public will be enabled to see in what circumstances these relaxing powers are exercised.

Mr. FULTON: I appreciate that, also the spirit of the minister's remarks, but I ask again whether he does not think the retention of the words "any goods or class of goods," gives him the discretionary power which he envisages.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not quite accurate. It has to be by regulation adopted on the recommendation of the minister by the governor in council and published in the Canada Gazette. What I would contemplate is this. It might be determined, for instance, that such-and-such articles contained in schedule I which are under prohibition are removed with respect to importations by hospitals, schools or other public institutions. That is the way in which the regulation would have to be drafted. I do not think there could be a general regulation exempting anybody that the minister might determine. This is purely an enabling power giving the governor in council power to exempt by regulation any person or any goods or any class of goods. I think it should be reasonably satisfactory with those safeguards.

Mr. JAENICKE: It is under this section that regulations will be established for quotas. The minister said that the first part of schedule II included foods, which would be allowed to be imported to the extent of 200 per cent of the 1937-39 period. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. JAENICKE: And textiles 400 per cent? I presume you will have power to raise or lower these quotas?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. That is why it is not put in the act but is to be done by regulation.

Mr. JAENICKE: How are these quotas to be allocated among the trade?

Mr. ABBOTT: The importer files his list of imports in the base period and is given a percentage of those imports, and the same percentage applies to every importer.

Mr. JAENICKE: How do you arrive at those percentages?

Mr. ABBOTT: In category 1 it happens to be 50 per cent; in category 2, it is 32 per cent. Those figures were arrived at, after consideration of the imports of these articles in the preceding period, on the basis of how much we felt we should try to save in the coming period.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. JAENICKE: What is the preceding period?

Mr. ABBOTT: The preceding period just closed, 1947. Our estimates of savings are based on imports for the base period projected into the coming period, following the imposition of restrictions but with the quotas in effect. In other words, the effect of the textile quota would be to reduce our imports to about 40 per cent of those during the base period.

Mr. JAENICKE: The minister has the power to transfer commodities from schedule I to schedule II, but he would have no power to transfer them from schedule II to I.

Mr. ABBOTT: The governor in council has the power.

Mr. JAENICKE: It has?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not from schedule II to I but from schedule I to II. We can relax but not make more rigid.

Mr. FULTON: Where is the power to transfer from schedule II to schedule III? I do not find that here.

Mr. ABBOTT: We can establish a quota for any article in schedule III if we wanted to under the regulation-making power given by section 5.

Mr. GRAYDON: The easier way would be as you usually do it, just have the Minister of Trade and Commerce write a letter.

Mr. FULTON: Would it not be advisable for you to give yourself the specific power to transfer from schedule II to schedule III? If you restrict a thing in schedule II to a certain percentage of imports in a certain period, I do not see how, by including it in schedule III, you have relaxed your restrictions.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall have to look into that.

Mr. CASE: Someone has said that everyone is expected to understand the law except a lawyer. The powers given by section 5 are so great that I am wondering what provision is made to protect the individual. Changes have already been made in the schedules. The government has removed certain restrictions and imposed others. How will the average individual be able to keep pace with what is going on? The onus of proof will be upon him. If he contravenes the law the responsibility will be his. Provision is made here that the minister can change the purposes of the section and rearrange the schedules and all the rest of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend will appreciate, the great majority of the people in Canada are not importers. Relatively speaking, the importers are a small proportion of the Canadian public, and they are pretty well on their toes to learn what these new orders and regulations are. The government is doing its best to keep them informed. I think every item in schedules I, II and III will be pretty well settled for a few months. There may be minor changes from time to time, but I do not think there should be too much difficulty in getting information as to them. In the advertisements I had published I emphasized the point that if information was wanted, they should go to their nearest collector of customs. There are a great many of these collectors at ports right across the country, in any place of substantial size, and up-to-date information is kept in the hands of the collectors, who act as agents of the import control division for the purpose of carrying out the act.

Mr. CASE: Yet by the terms of the bill the information has only to be published in the Canada Gazette, which has an extremely limited circulation.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is true; but, as my hon. friend knows, in practice we always issue a press release on matters of importance, and it gets into the papers. We would try to use other vehicles of information as well.

Mr. JAENICKE: Another matter is not quite clear to me. The minister said that the trade will be allocated according to certain percentages. Take textiles, for instance—

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not want to be misquoted. I said each importer was given a percentage of his imports during the base period. All importers are treated in exactly the same way. If Smith and Company imported $100,000 of textiles in the base period they would be allowed to import $32,000 worth this year, being 32 per cent of the quota, and every other importer would be treated in exactly the same way.

Mr. JAENICKE: Suppose all these percentages do not amount to the 400 per cent?

Mr. ABBOTT: The 400 per cent is a global quota. In the base period, textiles were imported to the amount of $10,301,000 from schedule countries, from dollar countries. Four hundred per cent of that is roughly $40,000,000. Imports in the base period were $128,525,000. Forty million divided into the figure I just gave gives us approximately 32 per cent.

Mr. JAENICKE: Is that imports from scheduled countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: Scheduled countries.

Mr. JAENICKE: What is the figure for non-scheduled countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: What figures have you in mind?

Mr. KNOWLES: That is a fair question.

Mr. ABBOTT: Here are the average imports of textiles in the base period 1937-39: scheduled countries, $10,301,000; non-scheduled countries, $30,591,000; total $40,892,000. These were the total imports from scheduled and non-scheduled countries in the base period of 1937-39. That is the average for these years.

Mr. FULTON: What is the total?

Mr. ABBOTT: The total is $40,892,000. That was the global quota. In 1946-47 the imports were, from scheduled countries, $128,535,000; from non-scheduled countries, $52,402,000, or a total of $180,937,000. The global quota is 400 per cent of the average imports in the period 1937-39, and taking the scheduled countries, which are the ones we are interested in, the dollar countries, 400 per cent of $10,301,000 is approximately $40,000,000, something in excess of $40,000,000. Some rapid calculator can figure it out. Forty million is approximately 32 per cent of $128,000,000, and that is the way the quota is arrived at.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is just as clear as mud.

Mr. TIMMINS: Subsection 3 of section 5 is a peculiar one. Perhaps the minister can explain it. It reads as follows:

> Where the governor in council is of opinion that any goods not included in schedules I, II or III, are being imported into Canada for use or consumption in substitution for any goods included in those schedules, respectively, the governor in council may by regulation prescribe that such goods shall be deemed to be included in schedule I, II or III, as the case may be, in which the goods for which the said goods are so substituted, are included.

What is the import of the subsection? Is it a case of there being some subterfuge in the importer bringing in goods which will defeat the purposes of the act, or what?

Mr. ABBOTT: Broadly speaking, that is about right, yes. That is pretty much a standard provision in all customs acts at the present time. If you prohibit the import of an article you have a provision in your act to the effect that if something is manufactured which is in effect a substitute for that, although it may not come within the technical definition of the tariff item, it is then treated in exactly the same way. In other words, substitute goods stand on the same footing, prohibition or quota, as the case may be, as the goods which are set out specifically in the tariff item.

Mr. TIMMINS: The basis of this bill is to save United States dollars. The minister is now stating practically that its basis is protection, is he not?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, if the scheduled articles include refrigerators and somebody produces something that performs the function of a refrigerator but which would not come within the tariff definition, it should be excluded just as much as the refrigerator. In other words, we had the same sort of thing in the administration of the prices regulations during the war. You would put a price ceiling on a certain article. Well, by changing it slightly, or by getting a substitute you would perhaps try to get a higher price ceiling. I am told that this is a provision which is contained in the Customs Act, in the Excise Act, and in all these acts in order to prevent what my hon. friend has said would amount to an evasion of the regulations by the use of a substitute product.

Mr. FULTON: Has the minister considered the point I raised in regard to down-grading from schedule II to schedule III?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have been answering a lot of other questions and I am afraid I have not had time to give consideration to it. If my hon. friend has no objection we can let it stand and I can come to it later.

Mr. ADAMSON: I want to ask a question similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Parkdale. Who is the judge of substitution, the minister? If so, what minister?

Mr. ABBOTT: The section provides that the governor in council must be of the opinion, and may, by regulation, prescribe. It would presumably be on the recommendation of the Minister of National Revenue, if it were brought to his attention in the course of his customs officers seeing these goods coming in through the customs, or on my recommendation, if I were informed of it. It is the governor in council that must take the responsibility.

Mr. ADAMSON: The field is wide open.

Mr. TIMMINS: Because I may not have another opportunity of asking this question, I shall turn from the side of the bill that we have been looking at to the positive side. I am wondering whether I should not get some information from the Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to the positive side of this bill. In other words, it has been said here in the committee that, although we are prohibiting and putting quotas on imports, on the other hand we are also creating industry to produce commodities and so on in this country. Can the minister give us some information in concise form, or can he put on Hansard those industries which have been touched by reason of the positive side of this bill, or those projects which are now brought into being because of the influence he has exerted on industry to create certain new products which formerly were imported from the United States or other hard money countries?

Mr. HOWE: This bill deals only with the restrictive side of the program. There is another side that is being actively pursued. At present the most important development is growth of the manufacture of parts. The pressure for additional parts and components from Canadian sources has been so great that the government has decided to review the stores of machinery held by Canadian arsenals, and to rent out machines that can be useful to various manufacturers in expanding their operations. Everywhere in Canada, any space capable of making components is being explored and picked up by Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. TIMMINS: We are not dealing with that positive side of the matter in this bill. In what bill will we be dealing with it? Do we deal with it under P.C. 4678, or is it just some nebulous thing that we are talking about? Where is the legislative authority, or where is the bill which brings up this discussion and which affects industry?

Mr. HOWE: Fortunately we do not need to pass legislation to encourage new industries or expand existing industries. We can do that without legislation. We are not passing a bill for expanding industries. That takes care of itself.

Mr. TIMMINS: The minister said something about it in his speech. I took it that it was a policy which had been brought down by the government, under which the minister was authorized to bring about these changes and stir up industry along new lines. I remember earlier in the session the minister mentioned something about that.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask the hon. member to deal with the section of the bill that is now before us.

Mr. TIMMINS: I may not have another opportunity. I will not labour it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member can hardly offer the excuse that he may not have an opportunity. I must remind him that speeches in committee must be strictly relevant to the clause under discussion.

Mr. TIMMINS: Without labouring the point, might I ask the minister if he will give us some information, or when we might expect it?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The difficulty is that when the committee branches off into a discussion like that, if one member does it other members will also want to do it. The rule is intended to prevent that sort of thing, so that the committee can deal specifically with the clause under consideration.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops is a good one and might be met by inserting an additional provision as (g) in this subsection 1, reading:

Providing that any goods included in schedule II shall be deemed to be included for the purposes of the act in schedule III in place of schedule II.

In other words, a corresponding provision with respect to schedule II goods. If that is acceptable I will ask the Minister of National Revenue so to move.

Mr. McCANN: I move accordingly.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. members have heard the amendment. Does it meet with the approval of the committee?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. JACKMAN: Will the minister give an opinion on the request made by several members on this side as to the publication of the decisions particularly under schedule III, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Was any conclusion arrived at by the ministers?

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps that can be considered when we come to section 9. I have given some thought to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Rosedale and, in so far as it is possible to do it, I am sure it would be desirable that it should be done, but I question whether it is really practicable. I do not quite see how it would work out except for broad categories such as the automobile industry or the electrical industry. Where an application is made to import a printing press, I find it hard to see how one could lay down a general principle, except the principle of the appreciation of all the circumstances, first, as to whether it is necessary in Canada, and, second, as to whether it would contribute either to greater export trade or to production in Canada which would save imports.

Mr. JACKMAN: It merely protects the liberty of the individual, which is the paramount consideration.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is speaking in generalities. I am as much interested in the liberty of the individual as anyone else in this house; but I am trying to look at the matter from a practical point of view to see what we can do, and speaking from legal experience I do not see how one could set up case law in the administration of a schedule such as schedule III. If it were possible I would be glad to do it.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask a question about a suggestion I made to the minister, which has been described as trading cattle for cabbages? The minister knows what I refer to; but to refresh his memory, I may say it occurred to me that he would be the gainer under the act if he were to allow a certain number of cattle to be exported to the United States and, with the proceeds received from those cattle, he could purchase $8,000,000 worth of cabbages, lettuce, beets, carrots, and one or two other vegetables which I enumerated on a former occasion. There would probably be a net United States income in the result, and among the premises on which I based the suggestion was the fact that when people are as much accustomed as the people of Canada are to a certain diet and cannot get salads, they choose some substitute other than more potatoes or additional bread. They eat more meat or fish and such fruit as can be imported. So that if the meat that would otherwise be consumed and would not be available for export to Britain, and the fish as well, were sent to the United States, where there is a hungry market for these commodities, we would have funds with which to supply the normal and nutritious diet which the Canadian people expect and rightfully expect. The minister knows of the suggestion, and I should like to know what the departmental officials have said regarding it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have listened with attention to my hon. friend's remarks and I am afraid I have no special comment to offer on them.

Mr. JACKMAN: I should like to have an answer to the suggestion. It is a constructive one and, as far as one can see without having all the details of administration presented to one, there is no reason why it should not be considered. I do not make this suggestion for the simple purpose of speaking, and I wish to have an answer.

Mr. ABBOTT: Like all my hon. friend's suggestions, it will be considered.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister does not realize the nature of these regulations. If he had some idea of what constitutes the normal healthy diet of the Canadian people—not the diet he said he was brought up on, so healthy and apparently so adequately, but the normal diet recommended by his own colleague the Minister of National Health and leading nutritionists—he would realize that among the articles specified are fresh leafy green vegetables daily. That is recommended by nutritionists throughout the world. The minister endeavours to make out a case on the theory that, because our forefathers did not have certain things, we do not need them. I might remind him that the turnip was discovered by Lord Townshend for the express purpose of feeding cattle over the winter. Otherwise, cattle had to be slaughtered, but he developed turnips for this purpose, and that is why we can keep stock in cold climates from one season to another. The world progresses. I do not wish to take up time unduly, but if the minister does not give me an answer I shall be compelled to enumerate some of the principles of nutrition as outlined by Parran, surgeon general of the United States, and other nutritionists throughout the world. If the minister undertakes to get an answer from his officials in regard to the suggestion I made, of trading cattle for cabbages, I shall be glad to resume my seat and keep it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid we shall have to listen to my hon. friend's views on nutrition. I cannot give and do not intend to give a further answer.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Ministerial power to prescribe procedure, forms, etc.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, before this clause is taken up by the committee, might I be given an opportunity to say something by way of privilege at this time, concerning a matter which, I am sure, is very close to your heart, as it is to mine. It could not be brought up in the formal session of the house, having regard to the established amenities of parliament, but I now crave the indulgence of this committee for a moment or so.

The press gallery of this parliament is an integral part of our parliamentary institutions and our parliamentary machinery. Its members are very close to us in our work, in our friendships and in our affections. There have been few instances since I came to the house, or since you came into it, Mr. Chairman, in which we have lost one of the members of the press gallery while the house was actually in session, and because of the cloud which has been cast over the parliamentary scene by the death yesterday of an outstanding correspondent, the late Mr. Kenneth Cragg, I should like to pay a tribute to his memory, if I may do so on this occasion.

He was a very close friend of yours, Mr. Chairman, as he was of mine and of many other members on all sides of the house. Mr. Cragg was an outstanding journalist. He was a widely-read author; a kindly and witty philosopher; a fine public-spirited Canadian; a devoted husband and father. The sudden passing yesterday of this illustrious Canadian removed a man while he was yet in harness; and perhaps he died in the way in which he would have wished.

He was parliamentary correspondent for the Globe and Mail for five years and, while in that position, as in previous positions which he filled so well, he had built up a high reputation for newsy, accurate, fair and broad-minded writing and reporting from here and elsewhere. Throughout his journalistic career his agricultural background kept peeping out from behind in almost every story he wrote for public consumption. I think that added to the richness and the value of the contributions he so liberally made to the public in general. Written under the handicap of most indifferent health, his most recent volume called "Father on the Farm" has cheered the lives and revived the memories of many thousands of Canadians whose interest in agriculture has never flagged nor failed, regardless of the avocation to which they later went during their lifetime. That work is in a class of its own and its author has made a contribution of a signal character to the Canadian literature of our time.

The press gallery will miss one of its most popular personalities; the Globe and Mail, one of its high-class journalists; parliament, one of its most honest and interesting commentators, and Canada, one of her finest native sons. Hon. members on all sides of the house this afternoon will, I am sure, want to pause to pay tribute to the life and work of Kenneth Cragg and to extend to Mrs. Cragg, Brian and Katherine, his father and his aunt, our deep and genuine sympathy in this their sad hour of trouble and sorrow.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the close association which Mr. Cragg has always maintained with agriculture I wish to speak, on behalf of the government and I am sure I speak on behalf of all members on this side of the house, in agreement with all that has been said by the hon. member for Peel. Since coming to the House of Commons, I have never been more shocked than I was yesterday when it was announced to my office that Mr. Cragg had passed on. He was in my office just shortly before, as he has been often ever since he has been associated with the gallery during my time in Ottawa. Scarcely a week has gone by that he has not been in to inquire with regard to agricultural matters. I wish to say that all the reports he has made on matters having to do with agriculture, and more particularly with regard to anything that has been said in this house, from any side of it, on behalf of agriculture, have been made in a manner which not only did credit to the paper for which he wrote but showed a consideration for and understanding of farmers throughout Canada—and throughout the world for that matter—which is shown by very few who write on public matters.

On one occasion I had the privilege of driving with him over a considerable part of the province of Manitoba; and at other times over other sections of Canada. I always found him most anxious to become correctly informed as to the life of people on the farm. Anyone who has read his delightful book cannot avoid being impressed with the knowledge which he himself had through experience with persons who are typical farmers. Anyone who has had the home experience that he must have had in order to make it possible to write a book of the kind, is in a position to speak for and of farmers in a manner which few others can. I think not only this house but Canada, and more particularly that section of Canada for which he wrote daily, has suffered a great loss in the passing of this revered late member of the press gallery. I join with everything that has been said by the hon. member for Peel in paying our respects and tribute to him and in passing on our sympathy to his immediate family.

Mr. MacINNIS: Might I be allowed, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of this group to join in the expressions of sympathy to the family and relatives of the late Mr. Cragg. Mr. Cragg was one of the few members of the press gallery whom I could call my personal friend. It was always a pleasure to meet him and to talk with him. Such was his nature that I think he would be indeed surprised to hear the comments that have been made today in this house in regard to his character. I am glad to be able to associate the members of this group with what was so well said by both the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. LOW: I feel that I should associate the group I represent with all that has been said so well by other speakers in connection with the untimely passing of this member of the press gallery. Being one of the newer members of the House of Commons I did not have the privilege of knowing Mr. Cragg very well. But I feel sure that I am expressing the sentiments of all my group in associating ourselves with what has been said and in expressing our sincere sympathy to those who are left to mourn him.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee will now revert to the consideration of the bill. We are considering section 6.

Mr. JACKMAN: Section 6, subsection 1, paragraph (c) reads as follows:

(c) in particular cases or classes of cases, from time to time, prescribe terms of, and conditions to a permit or the permission granted in a permit additional to those prescribed by regulation.

Will the minister, if he will, explain the necessity for taking power to vary the terms or conditions of a permit in addition to those which are prescribed by the regulation? Surely he will be able to do all he wants to do under the regulation, without taking this additional authority.

Mr. ABBOTT: The difficulty there is this. As my hon. friend points out, the section is fairly broad in its terms. Here is a case where it is felt that it may be necessary to issue a ministerial direction. A quota holder has a certain quota for oranges or whatever you like. He proceeds to sell those in an area close to home, where perhaps it is a little more profitable, and he does not continue to supply the customers he has been in the habit of supplying. It is similar to the provision we made for equitable distribution during the war, where the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation, in importing goods, took steps to see that there was equitable distribution through the normal trade channels. Then again a man may have a quota—I am just citing examples—on textiles, which is a dollar quota. Instead of importing staples such as denim for overalls, and so on, he may go into high-grade textiles for bedspreads, or something like that. I am advised it is almost essential that there should be some power to impose, as a condition of the continuance of the quota, that it should be exercised equitably in relation to the import of goods by other people. It might be possible to phrase that section in a better way; I do not know. I have been worrying about it myself, but I have outlined to the committee why that power is needed. I freely concede it is one which can be abused; there is no doubt about that, but I am afraid that is also true of some other provisions.

Mr. HACKETT: I think this is a startling departure. It shows how easy it is to follow the downward path. There was a period when we were, scandalized, I was going to say, by government by order in council. That seemed a radical departure from the rule of law as we understood it. This section empowers the minister who is in charge of its operation to follow his own whim. He does not even require an order in council; he does not even require a regulation. In fact there may be a regulation or an order in council to the contrary, but in the exercise of the discretion which is his he may determine what transaction may be entered into. But it does not stop there. If the minister is otherwise occupied anyone else who is in his service may exercise these extraordinary powers for him.

I submit that it is time to call a halt. Whatever may be the emergency—and I am not going to worry my hon. friends opposite with the ease with which they produce emergencies—arising out of this situation, it is an unimportant matter compared with the urgencies of war. Yet when the country's very existence was in the balance the government did not ask for the latitude which is exacted and taken in this section.

Mr. HOWE: We had far more latitude during the war. We did not even require an act.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister is quite a latitudinarian, I admit, and we could probably find instances in which his interpretation of the law has been generous as far as his own powers were concerned. But I would be very much amazed if the minister could point to any statute in which a similar provision appears. This paragraph (c) of subsection 1 gives the minister power to act against the law and in spite of the law; I suggest to the government, with such seriousness as I can command, that it abandon this final encroachment upon the liberty of the citizen. The citizen must know the law; he is supposed to know the law; it is his duty to know the law. What opportunity is there for him to know the law? Somebody has said the law is fickle, but here the law is nothing but the whim of the departmental employee who exercises discretion under the minister. I submit that this means there is no possibility of knowing the law or of complying with the law. It is the negation of the rule of law.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not suppose this will command this provision to my hon. friend, but there is a similar section in identical terms in the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. HACKETT: Would the minister be good enough to point it out? I am always looking for light.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. It is section 36 (1):

> Subject to the provisions of this act and the regulations and under the control and direction of the minister, the board may
> (b) in particular cases or classes of cases, from time to time prescribe terms and conditions for permits additional to those prescribed by regulation or prescribe special forms of permits in cases where none is prescribed by regulation.

Mr. HACKETT: Surely the minister is not going to argue that the passage he has just read is comparable with paragraph (c) in this bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: Almost word for word. That is where it was taken from.

Mr. HACKETT: I would point out to the hon. gentleman—and he is far from lacking in powers of observation—that the board is, to begin with, something quite different from the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: The board is the creature of the minister, the agent of the minister.

Mr. HACKETT: We have had reason to complain of that, too; but the board is supposed to be a composite entity which meets and keeps minutes of its deliberations and has to put them on record. This paragraph reads:

> Subject to this act and the regulations, the minister may
> (c) in particular cases or classes of cases, from time to time, prescribe terms of, and conditions to a permit or the permission granted in a permit additional to those prescribed by regulation.

If that means anything it means the minister can tear up the regulations whenever it pleases him. I submit, with great deference and respect to the hon. gentleman who is conducting this bill through the house, that the provision which is found in the Foreign Exchange Control Act, and which has gotten us into enough trouble, is altogether different, altogether more restricted than the clause before us at the moment.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were dealing with section 6.

Mr. KNOWLES: In the drafting of this bill, or since, has consideration been given to altering this section so as to make it read that these regulations would be made by the governor in council?

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I should explain that the regulations are made and must be approved by the governor in council. This section covers acts which the minister may do, apart from regulations. The first of these is to prescribe the procedure to be followed in applying for and issuing permits. That is pretty much an administrative job, namely, filling out form number so and so. Then, it is to prescribe forms necessary for the administration of the act.

Before the dinner recess we were discussing paragraph (c) which contains, I concede, very broad powers to be exercised by the minister in dealing with individual cases. It is a power similar to that contained in the Foreign Exchange Control Act, the board in that instance being the agent of the minister.

I have given, personally, a great deal of thought to this paragraph, wondering how it might be framed in terms which would lay down some definite criteria as to the basis upon which the minister may act. But this is an extraordinarily difficult thing to do.

As I have said, the purpose is to enable fair treatment to be exercised between different importers. Perhaps by way of illustration I might read to the committee an alternative section which I had drafted, and which might commend itself as being less objectionable in form than the one which now appears in the bill. It would read in this way:

(c) In particular cases or classes of cases, where it is advisable in order to ensure that

(i) the import of goods by a person pursuant to a permit is carried on equitably in relation to the import of goods by other persons to whom permits have been granted, or,

(ii) goods imported pursuant to permits are distributed so as to be available equitably to consumers prescribe, from time to time, terms of and conditions to a permit or the permission granted in a permit additional to those prescribed by regulation;

That would set out the cases in which the minister might exercise that discretion in conformity, of course, with the provisions of the act and of the regulations which have to be approved by order in council. As I say, after discussing the matter thoroughly with those who were charged with the administration of similar provisions under wartime measures, and who will be charged with administration in this instance, it was felt that it is almost essential for the efficient administration of the act that discretion should be vested in someone to deal with individual cases.

In the case of the foreign exchange control board it is vested in the board which, after all, is merely the agent of the minister. It did seem to me that it was better here to place the responsibility squarely upon the minister. It is true that in practice it would be exercised by some one whom he would delegate to do it. In the particular circumstances we have here, the head of the emergency import control division is one of the assistant deputy ministers, Mr. Taylor. That is the explanation of this paragraph (c).

I believe it is fair to say that it is the only subsection here which, in form, is objectionable as perhaps conveying somewhat too broad powers.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister has said two things which, it seems to me, strengthen our argument that this power should not stay solely in the hands of the minister. He has indicated that it will be difficult to indicate the criteria to be laid down; and he has also admitted that paragraph (c) as it now stands gives the minister very broad powers indeed. For these reasons it seems to me that the minister himself should want the protection of at least having to take this matter to his colleagues in the cabinet.

Things have moved a great deal in this parliament. It is not long since we were blasting against the idea of government by order in council. But here we have reached the point where so much power is being placed in the hands of a minister that we would welcome a return to the earlier days when ministers had at least to get the definite and specific approval of their colleagues in the cabinet in the form of orders in council.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would gladly do that. I raised exactly the same question my hon. friend has raised when I was discussing the matter with my advisers. I said, "Surely these cases would not be so numerous that I could not make individual submissions to council each time in respect of hardship cases or cases of inequitable distribution". They assured me that in practice it was found, when similar questions arose in connection with wartime prices and trade board regulations, that, of necessity, there must be discretion in someone to act promptly in these individual cases.

It is not desired to have this power in order to be arbitrary in the administration of the act. It is to enable hardship cases to be dealt with promptly and to make sure that, if a man has a quota and he is not living up to his obligations under it, he can be forced to do so.

As I say, in view of my own philosophy in these matters, I am just about as much worried—or probably I should say bothered—by the broad general powers as is any member in the committee. But I cannot avoid being influenced by the advice I am given by people in whose judgment in these matters I have implicit confidence, because I have seen the responsibilities they have to carry.

If the committee felt that this should be a matter to be dealt with by regulation, which would mean individual submissions to council, I do not know that I could resist too strongly. I think I should be bound to say, however, that I believe it is more desirable to do it the other way.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am glad to know the minister is bothered about it the way it stands. My further submission is that underlying this whole business of placing so much power in the hands of the minister is the notion that this is an exceedingly temporary piece of legislation. I am afraid that the disequilibrium of world trade is something that may be with us for some considerable time, or until we take more effective measures than these to deal with it, and that it is unwise to go ahead on that premise.

There is always the danger—and it does work out that way—that powers which we give to individuals temporarily, stay there for a very long time. I hope the minister will give the matter further thought.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will. This very paragraph is primarily directed against quota permits, or the administration of the quota permits system, which has some complexities in its day-to-day administration. As I say, I have a suggested alternative to paragraph (c) which I think lays down pretty definitely the criteria which must govern in the exercise of these discretionary powers. But I do urge strongly that the committee leave that discretion in there because, as I repeat, I am assured by those who have the onerous task of administration that it is an essential thing to the smooth and effective administration of the act, in the interests, not of the people who have the administration of it, but rather in the interests of those who are subject to its administration.

Mr. JAENICKE: I appreciate what the minister has said respecting the administration of the act. I also appreciate what was said by the hon. member for Stanstead and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It seems to me that paragraph (c) of subsection 1 of section 61 is particularly objectionable because of paragraph (d), whereby the minister can delegate these extraordinary powers to some person who is not responsible to parliament. Might I suggest to the minister that he delete paragraph (c) altogether, or, if not, that he add by way of amendment the following words: "except as to the powers of the minister granted in this section".

Mr. ABBOTT: I would not object to accepting that last suggestion. I think it is desirable under the administration section to give the minister power to delegate his authority but not power to exercise discretionary powers conferred by section 6.

Mr. JAENICKE: That was my suggestion. Would the minister move an amendment accordingly?

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps in order to cover it I might ask one of my colleagues to move the more restrictive language which I indicated to the committee by way of amending paragraph (c) and a consequential amendment to paragraph (d) to exclude from its operation the discretion exercised under paragraph (c).

Mr. GREEN: Just what would paragraph (d) cover?

Mr. ABBOTT: The actual granting of the permit and other routine details in connection with administration. Perhaps that is necessarily implied; I do not know. I am told that it is usual to have this provision in the administration section. There is a great deal of routine work such as the signing of permits. There are some 7,000 quotas, I am informed. It is that sort of thing. I would hate to have to put my signature to all these quotas.

Mr. GREEN: Would not the power to sign permits be covered by section 6 (1) (a), which gives the minister power to prescribe the procedure to be followed in applying for and issuing permits? On the other hand, this very wide power given in paragraph (d) authorizes any person under the minister's control and direction to act for him. That is a wide-open power to delegate, and I suggest that it is not necessary.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is qualified by the words, "under his control and direction". The minister must always take the responsibility. He must accept responsibility for the acts of those whom he appoints to act for him. Section 3 (1) provides that the minister may issue, vary, or revoke permits, and so on and so forth. I do not think that is a dangerous provision. Frankly, it did not give me special concern. But, again frankly, section 6 (1) (c) did. I felt that it was including broad discretionary powers which were pretty sweeping.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest, in support of the hon. member for Kindersley, that the minister make his amendment to 6 (1) (c) and delete 6 (1) (d) altogether. I do not think any harm will be done to the efficient administration of the act by deleting paragraph (d).

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that a similar power is contained in a great many acts, and not only war emergency acts. The treasury solicitor tells me that. I cannot speak from personal knowledge, but I would hesitate to strike out the paragraph without consulting the legal advisers to see what the possible effect might be. Perhaps in the meantime my colleague would move the amendment to paragraph (c).

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I move:

That paragraph (c) of section 6(1) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(c) in particular cases or classes of cases, where it is advisable in order to ensure that

(i) the import of goods by a person pursuant to a permit is carried on equitably in relation to the import of goods by other persons to whom permits have been granted, or

(ii) goods imported pursuant to permits are distributed so as to be available equitably to consumers prescribe, from time to time, terms of and conditions to a permit or the permission granted in a permit additional to those prescribed by regulation."

Mr. MacINNIS: The amendment is long and somewhat involved; if the minister has not copies available I suggest that it stand until copies can be printed and circulated, and we can come back to the clause later this evening.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is proposed that 6(1)(c) stand for the time being.

Mr. ABBOTT: And there was a consequential amendment to 6(1)(d), Mr. Chairman. I would ask my colleague to move it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I move:

That 6(1) (d) be amended by adding thereto the following:

"except in the exercise of the powers conferred by this section."

Mr. ABBOTT: That can stand until tomorrow.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister give any further instances in which this power under paragraph (d) would be required?

Mr. HOWE: If we attempt to decentralize, which we must in the administration of capital goods schedules, and permits were to be issued, say in Vancouver, it would be necessary to delegate to someone in Vancouver the powers of the minister to issue permits. My hon. friend smiles, but there will be about 15,000 permits a month required. They could not all be issued from a central office. The department has branch offices today which are being equipped to issue permits.

Mr. GREEN: The power the minister requires is given under 6(1)(a), by which he may prescribe the procedure to be followed in applying for and issuing permits.

Mr. ABBOTT: A legal question is involved. I do not think it would override the specific provision of clause 3, "except in accordance with a permit issued by the minister." It is open to question; I do not know.

Mr. MILLER: I take it that the minister has in mind appointing someone to act under himself as a sort of head of a permit issuing body. May I suggest that any such official should be restricted in his powers of making what are virtually orders in council such as was done under the wartime prices and trade board. Their orders were issued over the signature of Donald Gordon. I have no doubt he had the orders drawn and submitted them to the minister, who gave them his blessing on the say-so of Donald Gordon and then gave them the force of law by order in council. We have often pointed out on this side of the house that in too many cases the ordinary rights of the individual to defend himself in court were taken away by those orders.

I urge that the minister in administering this part of the act should make certain that when orders in council are drawn creating regulations these regulations should be gone over by his law officers or by the law officers of the crown, and carefully considered, and that they should not be the brain child of a single individual who may be as smart as any child of Adam could possibly be. I suggest that the regulations which are made by orders in council should be carefully considered, possibly not by the minister who will not have time to do that, but at least by more than one law officer of the crown. In the past, under the wartime prices and trade board regulations the orders in council were, in my opinion at least, the brain child of some expert who did not know all that he thought he knew.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I say to my hon. friend, from experience extending over five or six years during the war, with fairly close contact certainly with the wartime prices and trade board regulations, all these regulations were pretty carefully considered not only by the law officers of the crown but by the minister, and in many cases by his parliamentary assistant, and that they were not in any case the brain child of any one individual. Here there is no power on the part of anyone to make regulations. The regulations have to be adopted by the governor in council. The wartime prices and trade board particularly had power as a board to make certain orders. That, of course, is not the case here.

May I revert for a moment to the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South. I am advised by the treasury solicitor, who is in front of me, that the only power which the minister would have to delegate under section 6, paragraph (d), with the amendment as proposed, relates to the issue of the permits. There is no other power in the act which he is given and which he would have the power to delegate.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister be willing to put in paragraph (d) that the power is only to apply to the issuing of permits?

Mr. ABBOTT: It relates only to permits; it might relate to the detail in connection with the issuing of permits. It might cover a little wider territory than the actual signing of the permits. I have already proposed an amendment which excludes from its operation the exercise of this discretion conferred under paragraph (c). That must be exercised by the minister personally if the amendment which I propose carries; therefore I am informed that the remaining discretionary power in the minister as minister is in connection with the issue of permits that he can delegate, subject to his control and direction. But that is the only power given to the minister as a minister as distinct from what is to be done by order in council. Therefore, subject to check, I think my hon. friend's point is met.

Mr. FRASER: If a person or firm makes an application for a permit and is turned down, is there any appeal from that decision?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, there is in this sense. If he is turned down in the ordinary routine course by the officials of the emergency import control division, then there is an appeal to the minister, and I have had a good many cases of that kind.

Mr. HACKETT: Under what section?

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not have to be under any section, because I am the only one who has the power to issue permits. It is the minister who does it. If the applicant is not satisfied with the action of the minister's subordinates he is entitled in every case to go to the top.

Mr. FRASER: If an applicant felt that he had something further on his case he could go to the minister?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is being done every day.

Mr. HACKETT: That was the type of administration that was criticized I think in the Pioneer Laundry case. It was said that the appeal to the minister from the finding of his department was, in reality, not an appeal. I believe it was argued there that the discretion exercised had to be a judicial discretion. I do not see anything of that description here. I suppose that finding meant that reasons had to be given; that the department had to give reasons which would satisfy a court.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend knows that the Pioneer Laundry case was a taxation case which related to the principles on which depreciation would be allowed. The finding of the privy council was, as I recall it, adverse to the crown. While the principle may have been the same, I think the circumstances are really quite different here. Here it is the power of discretion. The minister exercises his discretion almost as a judge, taking into account questions of fact, and in the case of quotas it is on a mathematical formula. There is really no discretion there at all, except to the extent that the governor in council may change the percentage or the basis on which quotas are issued.

Mr. HACKETT: May I ask the minister if the answer to the question put by the hon. member for Peterborough West should not be, no, there is no appeal?

Mr. ABBOTT: Legally there is only one man who settles it, and he is the minister.

Mr. CASE: There is no appeal from the minister.

Mr. GREEN: The minister may change his mind?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. Even officials might change their mind. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard will remember the famous merry-go-round case.

Mr. MILLER: A few moments ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that there might be 15,000 permits a month. Would that be under schedule III only?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is it the intention of the committee to permit paragraph (c) to stand? There is an amendment before the Chair.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it is desirable in any event, regardless of what happens to paragraph (c).

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is the amendment acceptable to the committee?

Mr. HAZEN: Section 6 was not to pass until we were given a copy of paragraph (c).

Mr. ABBOTT: I have a few copies of the amendment here which I shall distribute.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Paragraph (c) stands for the time being.

Mr. ABBOTT: We shall take up another paragraph.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Section 6 stands and we shall go on to section 7.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask a question about subsection 2 of section 6, which reads:

> In this act, "minister" means, with respect to the issue of permits for the imports of any goods, the minister charged by the governor in council with the administration of this act with respect to those goods.

Why is that section not drawn to give the Minister of Finance power over the goods listed in schedules I and II, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce power over the goods listed in schedule III? It would seem that the way the section reads now there could be changes made from day to day; one minister could be given only half of schedule I, and all kinds of changes made. It would seem more sensible to define actually which schedules the ministers are to deal with.

Mr. ABBOTT: The thought behind it was this. The intention at the outset is, of course, first, that the Minister of Finance will be charged with administering schedules I and II which relate to consumer goods, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce schedule III, which relates to capital goods. However, it was felt that perhaps it would not be well to name these ministers as such in the act. If amendments were made it might be desirable, for instance, that some other minister such as the Minister of Agriculture might be charged with restrictions on that type of goods. So that it was felt there could be no public harm in leaving it to the executive to determine which member of the cabinet should be charged at a given time with the administration of a particular section of the act. As the committee knows, at the present time, and so far as we foresee in the future, schedules I and II, consumer goods, will be under the Department of Finance and capital goods under the Department of Trade and Commerce, which already has an export and import division.

Mr. GREEN: Is it the intention that in one schedule one minister may be responsible for half the goods and another minister for the other half? As this section is worded, that is possible. I suggest that at least the section should be so worded as to apply to schedules, so that a minister may be in charge of one whole schedule or a number of schedules. Is one schedule to be divided up among any number of ministers? Is that the intention?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. The intention is that the schedules will be administered, I and II by myself and III by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. An order in council will have to be passed confirming that, and that will be published in the Canada Gazette and tabled in the house; but I think the sections should be left in such form that that could be changed by executive order rather than having to wait, in case parliament was not in session, for an amendment to the act. I do not believe that any publicity must be given it. It is certainly not the intention to split up the schedules between two or three ministers.

Mr. GREEN: Then I suggest that the minister should move an amendment so that the section would read that in this act "minister" means, with respect to the issue of permits for the import of goods in any one or more schedules, the minister charged by the government with the administration of this act with respect to those goods, or with respect to that schedule. Then you put it on a schedule basis rather than on the basis of goods as it is at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would have to consider that.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not want to butt in, but if my hon. friend is through I will respectfully submit the following. In the first place, I renew the expression of respect for and confidence in the minister, and I believe that for the operation of this kind of legislation he could find in his department no better man than Mr. Taylor. He is fair and he does well. But regarding this section, we are going round and round. We are in a vicious circle and we are coming back to the same place. Formerly, each minister submitted his proposals to the cabinet and the whole matter was decided by the cabinet as a whole. Afterwards, during the war, there were committees of the cabinet, and now we are delegating the powers of the government to a single minister.

An hon. MEMBER: No; several ministers.

Mr. POULIOT: No; a single minister at a time. Therefore the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture or any other minister will, in due course, have the powers of the whole cabinet, powers which were exercised before by order in council, to decide upon certain matters, and that minister will be given a blank cheque.

I submit that the work of the government should be done by the whole cabinet or a quorum of the cabinet, so that all parts of the country would be protected in the decisions reached by the cabinet. This is not a reflection upon any minister particularly. They are good men and they deserve all the confidence that has been given to any minister at any time. But I wish to consider the question from a broad point of view. Is it physically possible for any minister to decide personally all the questions that may arise regarding matters that are within the sphere of his department? It is a physical impossibility. Then, naturally, the matter will be decided by some minor officials in the name of the minister and the minister will be just a rubber-stamp for decisions made by some major or minor officer in his department. This is the situation as it stands, and as one who is a strong supporter of responsible government I cannot accept that kind of legislation.

Perhaps I shall be called regressive. They will say that I am not a modern, that I am obsolete when I say there are certain ancient things that we should keep in mind, things that are ageless. They do not belong to some other age because they belong to all ages. For example, there are certain fundamentals of law which were promulgated three thousand years ago and which are still accepted by the legal fraternity and by the bench in these modern times, and one of these principles is that of responsible government. The minister is for it, and I would be greatly surprised if the Minister of Trade and Commerce were not for it also. We are all for it. Then let us practise it.

There is a good way of being in order, Mr. Chairman, in discussing any part of this bill; namely, to move that some clause be struck out; the matter will be decided and anyone will have an opportunity to say anything he has to say. I forecast some time ago certain things that would happen, and today they have come to pass. But I was not the only one. There was a member of the press gallery, the president of the press gallery last year, who wrote splendid articles in his paper, and I said what I had to say in the House of Commons. Now it has come true.

In these times of so-called austerity how is it that we can buy chocolates which are imported from Europe and which sell at $2 a pound? How is it that in these times of austerity we are offered certain biscuits at $1 a half-pound? These are times of austerity and there are other commodities that are needed. For instance, if we go to a store to buy a head of lettuce having five or six leaves, we pay thirty or thirty-five cents for it, or about five cents a leaf. They are good to look at but not to buy. Nothing has been said about that.

We cannot take all the individual facts with regard to all possible imports, I know; but I cannot understand how it is that certain imports are so expensive, for one reason or another. For example, a bottle of French brandy bought for $1.50 in France is sold in Canada at $6.50. It is very expensive, because we cannot buy brandy from the United States. And so on.

I am ready to accept any explanation which I can convey to my constituents to satisfy their minds about this legislation, because at present they are angry. I am sure the minister is not responsible for the drafting; but he is responsible for the bill, and I make that necessary distinction. I give him credit for anything for which I can give him credit. I sympathize with him. I regret that he has to sponsor this legislation. I will tell you more than that, Mr. Chairman. I do not consider that I, as a Liberal party man, am bound by this legislation any more than I was bound by the foreign exchange control legislation, because I was never consulted about it. I consider that I am bound by the policies of the party to the extent that I, as a member, am consulted with the other members of the party and the decision is reached according to that of the majority of the party. Unless that is done, I do not consider that I am bound by any policy which comes before this house or which is promulgated or announced over the radio, unless I am a party to it. I shall be ready to stand by the decision of the majority who have made that policy. Inasmuch as I have the privilege of making my point before the majority or before all my party, then, even if the policy is not one with which I am satisfied, I have to stand by the party and accept it. But so long as that is not done, I do not consider that I am bound by the Foreign Exchange Control Act policy or by this act which is an amendment to it, because I had not been consulted about it when it came out.

Mr. MILLER: I rise just to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver South as to an amendment. It seems to me that I might add this further suggestion to the minister. I think the point taken by the hon. member for Vancouver South is well taken, because in the preceding sections the minister has the power to switch goods from schedule I to schedule II and schedule III and so on, but not back the other way.

Mr. ABBOTT: Only by order in council.

Mr. MILLER: Yes, by order in council. Under section 3 the minister can add additional goods to the schedules and so on. It seems to me that if the suggestions made by the hon. member for Vancouver South were followed and the amendment was worded so that you describe the power by schedules, you would be on much safer ground.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not want to argue the amendment because, without being offensive, may I say that I do not think it really accomplishes a great deal. If the committee feels that it would be clearer to specify for the time being which minister has charge of the particular schedules, I have no objection to that. Under the Transfer of Duties Act, of course, as the committee knows, it could be changed tomorrow morning. With that in mind, this amendment would probably meet the case. I will read it and ask one of my colleagues to move it:

That subsection 2 of section 6 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "In this Act 'Minister' with respect to permits for the imports of goods (a) in schedules I and II means the Minister of Finance and (b) in schedule III means the Minister of Trade and Commerce."

Mr. GREEN: That is much better.

Mr. FRASER: It may be better, but it is still "pretty worse".

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The committee has heard the amendment, moved by Mr. Howe. Does the committee agree to this amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Shall paragraph (c) carry?

Mr. MILLER: I understood that this section was being held over for paragraph (c). Might I ask one more question of the minister, in spite of the possibility of being considered a nuisance to him tonight. Is it in the mind of the minister that we need to engage many additional employees? If so, will they be customs officials, or will they be under the civil service? Can he give us any indication at all as to what his intentions are in that regard?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that there will be a certain number of additional customs employees, or additions to the staff of the customs department at the outports. So far as the administration of the division here is concerned, some of the staff who were formerly with the wartime prices and trade board have been taken over. This is principally clerical staff who will be carrying on this work. Appointments since November 17 to February 9, 1948, are as follows: to the wartime prices and trade board, 86. I should have said that is a transfer from the wartime prices and trade board of 86. To the emergency import control division, 64; or a total of 150. Those are all now under the Department of Finance. The total staff of the emergency import control division today is 149, made up as follows: new appointments, 64; transfers from existing staffs, 85; making a total of 149.

Mr. MILLER: Does that include any additional employees taken on in the other department, the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I have no figures as to that.

Mr. MILLER: Were there any taken on?

Mr. HOWE: We believe there will be no additional staff necessary for the reason that we have at the moment a parallel organization issuing export permits.

Mr. MILLER: Were all these new appointments under the civil service?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are mostly clerks. We engaged them through the civil service commission.

Mr. MILLER: Would they be temporary at the moment?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are engaged by the board.

Mr. HACKETT: Does the minister's answer imply that there will be no additional staff required along the boundary?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I answered that I thought there would be some. There were some. There have been additions, I am informed.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Is the committee now ready to deal with paragraph (c) of subsection 1? Shall this amendment carry?

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: Even as amended the clause may not be satisfactory to all those on this side, but certainly it is an improvement on the section as it appeared in the printed bill. So far as the amendment is concerned, I would say it is acceptable.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not want this amendment to be carried without going on record and expressing my opposition to it. There is not a great deal that I can say, and I realize that what I say, which will be little, will have practically no effect on this committee or at least on members who sit on the government side. I see little difference between section 6, paragraph (c) of the bill and section 6, paragraph (c) as amended. If you will turn to section 5, Mr. Chairman, you will see that the governor in council may make regulations,

(d) prescribing conditions to the issue of permits, and terms of, and conditions to permits or the permissions granted by permits, and terms of and conditions to the continuation of permits in effect.

Then, when we turn to the proposed amendment to section 6, subsection 1 (c), it reads that the minister, not the governor in council, may:

(c) in particular cases or classes of cases, where it is advisable in order to ensure that
(i) the import of goods by a person pursuant to a permit is carried on equitably in relation to the import of goods by other persons to whom permits have been granted, or
(ii) goods imported pursuant to permits are distributed so as to be available equitably to consumers, prescribe, from time to time, terms of and conditions to a permit or the permission granted in a permit additional to those prescribed by regulation.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think it was, earlier this evening pointed out the fact that we had been complaining of order by governor in council. Now we have piled on top of order by governor in council, power to give the minister the right to amend the orders in council as he sees fit. It seems to me that this is going too far altogether. As the hon. member for Stanstead said some time ago, the whole procedure is unconstitutional, and it seems to me that it should not be permitted for one instant. It should not be permitted in this or any other act. Under the proposed amendment, the words are, "in particular cases or classes of cases," but there is no definition in the act saying what those words mean. I should like the minister to define those words for us and let us know just what he means by them. Further on, these words are used: "is carried on equitably;" that the import of goods by a person pursuant to a permit is "carried on equitably." What does he mean by those words? There is no definition in the bill, and I think we should have more light thrown on it. This afternoon and this evening I have been glancing through the report of a committee on ministers' powers, I think known as the Sankey report, made in 1932 by a committee of the British House of Commons. In the course of that report, which it quite voluminous and interesting, I find this:

The truth is that if parliament were not willing to delegate lawmaking power, parliament would be unable to pass the kind and quantity of legislation which modern public opinion requires.

But it goes on to point out:

We doubt, however, whether parliament itself has fully realized how extensive the practice of delegation has become, or the extent to which it has surrendered its own functions in the process, or how easily the practice might be abused.

There are contained in the report certain recommendations, of which this is No. 2, at page 65:

The precise limits of the lawmaking power which parliament intends to confer on a minister should always be expressly defined in clear language by the statute which confers it, when discretion is conferred; its limits should be defined with equal clearness.

I submit that the section, with the amendment now proposed, does not define with any clearness the limits of the discretion it is proposed to confer on the minister. The terms could not be broader. There is no limitation whatever. Altogether apart from that, however, I submit that this legislation is vicious and unconstitutional, and I am not prepared to vote for it.

Amendment (Mr. St. Laurent) agreed to on division.

Section as amended agreed to on division.

On section 7—Customs officers' duty to enforce.

Mr. MacNICOL: A moment or two ago, in reply to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, the minister gave the number of changes in the staff of the department in connection with the administration of this measure.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was in Ottawa only, in the Department of Finance.

Mr. MacNICOL: Later on, I thought I heard the minister say that not many had been added to the staff along the border.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said there were some. I understand that quite a number were added.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was just going to say that I found the border posts cluttered up with officials. Is there any record of the number who have been taken on at the customs posts along the border as a result of this new legislation?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would ask my colleague the Minister of National Revenue to answer that, if he will.

Mr. McCANN: Approximately 250 have been added to the customs officials all across the country, of whom 100 are women.

Mr. MacNICOL: All across Canada?

Mr. McCANN: Yes; all coming under the civil service.

Mr. MacNICOL: I suppose we cannot hope to ascertain what that is going to cost the country. I have been thinking perhaps the cost of the administration of these new regulations along the border will take away a good deal from what the minister hoped might be accomplished in the way of increased revenues.

Mr. ABBOTT: We pay them in Canadian funds, though.

Mr. MacNICOL: I suppose some day we shall be able to get the cost of the increased staff along the border and in Ottawa to administer this bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: I imagine we shall have that when the estimates are brought down.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 8—Permit not transferable.

Mr. CASE: I should like an explanation from the minister. This clause says "A permit is not transferable by the holder thereof to any other person," and so on. Does this mean that a person in business and holding a permit could not dispose of his business and transfer the permit? Are his hands tied so that he has no equity in the permit?

Mr. ABBOTT: He can dispose of his permit and the quota will go with it if the purchaser buys the business as a going concern. The purpose of the section is to prevent trafficking in quotas, as distinct from the business itself.

Mr. JACKMAN: When I learned about this a couple of weeks ago I was informed by a friend that there was a certain amount of trafficking in these permits in the city of Toronto, and he suggested that perhaps something should be done to stop it. Later, I was talking to him on the telephone and said that, on reflection, I did not know whether it would be worthwhile trying to take up the case here in Ottawa to see if I could have the practice stopped because, as far as I could see, it amounts to this, and this is why I mention it to the minister to see whether or not there is any value in retaining this section. A man who has a quota and, therefore, a permit to import a certain amount of textiles, let us say, can import those textiles if he wishes. If he does not want the textiles he may accept a bid, which may be quite substantial in money, for his permit. That would be breaking the law under section 8. On the other hand, if a man wants to profit by reason of the fact that he has a quota and, therefore, a permit, there is nothing in the law, and the minister is taking no steps, to prevent that man from importing the goods and turning them over to the other man who does not have a quota, of course at an advance in price. May I ask the minister if there is any difference between the two things, the man selling his permit and the man importing the goods himself, maintaining his quota and his right to future permits, and then selling the goods to someone who wants to make use of them, at a mark-up which would be exactly the same as the price he would have received had he sold his permit in the first instance? In other words, I should like to know the purpose of this section when it is so easily defeated.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know; I have not given that aspect very much thought. Of course, as my hon. friend points out, there is nothing to prevent a man with a quota from bringing in the textiles, say, and if he does not want to merchandise them himself turning them over to somebody else at an appropriate profit, and letting the No. 2 man sell them. I am told by those who are charged with the administration of these quotas that the fact that this can be done does not lead to widespread trafficking in quotas, where a man might just go out and try to sell his quota to the highest bidder, and get out of business. He must stay in the business in order to avail himself of that quota. His quota is based upon his record of performance during the last year; so that I think in the great majority of cases the importer will continue in the business that he has been in, because in nine cases out of ten that is his livelihood.

Mr. JACKMAN: The fact is that there are permits for sale, and I am told that the going rate is about ten per cent of the value of the imported merchandise. If they are going to traffic in these things, why not make it simpler and get the price down?

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Report to parliament.

Mr. FLEMING: Last night I asked the minister if he would give consideration to adding some further requirements to those found in section 9 with reference to the publicizing of grants of permits under the act. Could the minister give an answer tonight?

Mr. ABBOTT: Figures could certainly be made up either monthly or quarterly as to the number of permits issued. I do not know offhand that there would be any objection to that. Certainly, when the house is sitting information could be obtained any day by asking a question in the house. It was not thought, in drawing up this section, that provision needed to be made for the publication of quarterly statements. However, there would be nothing secret about the information. It would be information which could and should be made available at any time it is asked for. Probably I could give an undertaking that monthly statements could be prepared as to the number of permits issued. I do not know that it would be wise to spell out in the bill all the details which should be given in those statements; but certainly any information which could be of use to the general public and would not be damaging to individual traders could be made available.

Mr. FLEMING: Would the minister be prepared to include in that report statements of commodities covered by the permits?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. FLEMING: Would it not be practicable to issue those statements monthly? The purpose of the publicity would be better served if it were on a monthly basis. Would the minister consider putting it in part II of the Canada Gazette, which contains orders in council and orders passed under similar powers?

Mr. ABBOTT: Would my hon. friend leave that with me? I hesitate having to say what one should put in the bill about it. I readily agree that the fullest possible information should be given as to the number of permits issued and the categories they cover. I should hope, however, that the details might be left to be worked out by those who are administering the measure. Then, if my hon. friend is not satisfied with what is done, we shall be here for three or four months yet and I would invite him to get after me in the house about it.

Mr. FLEMING: If I have an opportunity, under the rules of the house. But there might not be adequate opportunity. Before the committee concludes its deliberations on this bill, would the minister be prepared to give some detailed indication to the committee as to what undertaking he might give in this respect?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall do that. I have already placed on Hansard the number of permits issued to date, and I placed on Hansard today three tables showing the countries affected, and the commodities. That sort of information could be given at regular intervals. I shall give some consideration to the matter and make a statement, before the bill has passed through all stages, as to what I suggest might be proper information, and at what dates it might be made available.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Offences and penalties.

Mr. MILLER: I wish to state an objection to section 10 as briefly as I can. It looks to me as if it is another one of those sections under which, in prosecutions, accused persons will not have a very good chance of succeeding. What I object to in respect of these prosecutions—and it is becoming altogether too prevalent not only in connection with federal statutes but also in connection with provincial statutes—is that the old British practice of proving mens rea, or guilty mind, or guilty knowledge, is too often being ignored. I maintain that it is being ignored purely and simply because of laziness. I think it is laziness on the part of crown officials or police. Surely to goodness, it is not any more difficult to prove a man guilty of an offence of this type than it is to prove him guilty of any other criminal offence.

For years and centuries it has been the right of every man to be presumed innocent until he is proven guilty. And he can be convicted only if he is proven guilty of an offence with a guilty mind, with the intention of doing wrong. Beyond any question of doubt, cases which have gone to the courts of appeal now hold that a mere innocent infraction of a section such as this makes a man, a citizen of this country, liable to the heavy penalty provided by the section.

So far as I am concerned, I would never vote for a section like this until the minister agreed to put in a safeguard incorporating the old principle of mens rea, stating that that principle must be proven; that the burden of proof must be assumed by crown officers, and that a man who innocently disobeys one of these regulations—and there were thousands of them under the wartime prices and trade board—must have mens rea proven against him. Under the wartime prices and trade board I believe there were about 35,000 orders in council under which people could be prosecuted. It was absolutely ridiculous to imagine that a private citizen of this country; yes, it was ridiculous to imagine that even lawyers could have any possible conception or knowledge of a half, a third, a tenth, a twentieth or even a hundredth of those regulations. And the poor man could be brought up in court—and I have defended lots of them—and the court might know that man was innocent, and I would know he was innocent, so far as his mind and heart were concerned. But they were convicted, and were virtually made criminals with criminal records, although, in their hearts and minds, they had no intention of wrongdoing against the laws of this country.

I think we must take a stand; and I plead with members of this committee, and especially the legal members, to give some thought to this matter. It is getting too serious. Citizens of this country should not have to run the risk of innocently disobeying laws of which they may have no knowledge whatsoever. The promulgation of them is such that it could not be possible for them to have any such knowledge. Those people, in my humble judgment, should not be convicted of offences against the laws of this country and be tagged virtually with criminal records.

I strongly object to section 10 in this bill unless the burden of proof of guilt is clearly, by the section, placed upon the crown officers.

Mr. ABBOTT: I bow to my hon. friend's superior knowledge of criminal law, with which I cannot claim to be expert. However, I feel it might meet his objection if the word "knowingly" were inserted, so that it would read, "every person who knowingly" does so and so.

Mr. JACKMAN: Consciously.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the word "knowingly" would be preferable.

Mr. MILLER: That would do it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I anticipated an objection similar to this one. Analogous provisions are found throughout the criminal code in connection with the excise regulations, narcotics, and other matters, and a good many of them are statutes which have been on the statute books for a long time. Broadly speaking, the fundamental rule is that the burden of proof rests upon the person who is asserting guilt in a criminal case. There are two exceptions which are recognized in English criminal law. The first is where it requires a person to prove a negative, which is frequently exceedingly difficult, although proof of positive facts may not be so difficult. The second case is where facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party.

Anyone here would know whether he had a permit or not. In these acts which require a permit, and this applies to a greater number of provisions in the Excise Act, the Narcotic Drugs Act, and in the criminal code, the onus is on the person charged with the offence to show that he does possess a permit. That has been particularly necessary in cases where, as here, permits are issued from one side of the country to the other by customs collectors acting as agents for the foreign exchange control board, or by some other government agency. I am quite willing to add the word "knowingly" to meet my hon. friend's point, so that the onus would be on the crown in the case of an innocent person who inadvertently contravenes the law. I do not think anybody can quarrel very much with that. I think that should go a long way toward overcoming the objection.

Mr. MILLER: Yes, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then I will ask one of my colleagues to move the amendment.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I move that section 10(1) be amended by adding after the word "who" in the first line the word "knowingly".

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HACKETT: The enactments which are found in the Customs Act and in the Excise Act and in most of the acts in which the crown is the victim of illegal practices are drawn in such a way that the burden of proof is shifted to the accused. I suggest to the minister that legislation of that type, which is age-old, and with which people have had years to become acquainted, is hardly on a parity with these rules and regulations and orders in council which can come into existence without notice and frequently, as hon. members will recall, without even the knowledge of the minister. I do not wish to be facetious or to trifle with the difficulties of administration which confront the treasury benches at this time; but everybody must admit that legislation such as is being passed tonight is an invitation to irregularity, an invitation to the smuggler, an invitation to those who will profit improperly by this enactment. We are not seeking to protect a body of malefactors; but there is something that should be protected, and that is the innocence of a person who may be improperly charged with breaking the law.

The law is going to be the regulations, modified as indicated by the minister. It is absolutely impossible for the people at large, and I was going to say for the ministry itself, to keep abreast of all these regulations and their modifications. Modifications will take place in one part of the country which will not be known in the other part for some time. We are exposing the population of Canada to a loss of confidence in the courts and in the judiciary if we place upon any person who is apprehended the burden of showing he is not guilty. It seems to me that, in the Customs and Excise Acts, it would be better for everyone if the rules were abandoned and if we relied upon definite proof of ill-doing before assuming that a crime had been committed.

We have here section 10(1) (a), (b) and (c), which provide that anyone who fails to comply with the act or a regulation under it shall be guilty of an offence. We know how volatile are these regulations, and how heavy are the penalties imposed upon a person who has broken them. We are placing it within the power of an individual to make the law, and to change it without notice of any kind, and then we place upon the individual charged with its infraction the burden of proving his innocence. That is a drastic rule to apply at any time, even when the law is old and the people are well acquainted with it; but to apply that rule to legislation, passed in camera and arising out of an emergency, is so harsh as to imperil all respect for the law and to create ill-will and suspicion in the people as a whole.

I suggest to the minister—and I tell him that I have no confidence in the act itself—that he modify this severe and penalizing aspect of the act and that he treat any infraction of it as an ordinary infraction of the law is treated, and that he place upon him who lays the charge the full burden of proving intent to breach the law.

Section 10 as amended agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

[Mr. Hackett.]

On section 12—Burden of proof on person charged.

Mr. HAZEN: I move, Mr. Chairman, that section 12 be deleted.

The CHAIRMAN: That would hardly be in order. It is a negative motion. If the clause does not carry, it is deleted automatically.

Mr. ABBOTT: The remarks I made a few moments ago with respect to the burden of proof apply to section 12. There are similar provisions in the Excise Act and the Narcotic Drugs Act and scattered through the criminal code. The point which the hon. member for Stanstead has made is that these infractions should be treated differently, because a good many of the provisions will be in the form of regulations. I invite the members of the committee to look at section 12. In the first place, there is a burden on the crown. The burden is this. The crown will have to prove, when a person is charged with an offence, that the person did an act for which a permit is required under this act. That is the burden of proof which the crown has to discharge. The crown having done that, then it is within the knowledge of the accused whether he has a permit or not; and I refer to the well recognized principles of British criminal law, that where the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, and where the rule, if it were strictly followed, would require a person to prove a negative, which is an exceedingly difficult thing to do, the burden can be shifted.

Under the administration of this particular act, where a man is charged with importing goods without a permit the crown will have to prove that he imported the goods; that they were goods of a category which required a permit, and it would be alleged that he did not have one. The burden would then be shifted to the accused to show that, in fact, he did have a permit and that he did knowingly contravene a provision of the act. I think that is quite in conformity with a long line of statutes where circumstances are similar to this, and I do not think it is breaking new ground at all. I believe it is an entirely appropriate provision for a statute of this kind and I feel confident that it should remain in the statute.

Mr. MILLER: I am inclined to think there is some merit in what the minister has said; I do not know whether that will strengthen his conviction or not. I was wondering whether he would not consider striking out of section 12 the following words which appear in line 5:

. . . or had not been exempted from the applicable provisions of this act.

And also the following words in the last line but one:

. . . or had been exempted from the applicable provisions of this act.

I do not see the point in these exemption words. If the minister will consent to an amendment to that extent I think it might be satisfactory to hon. members.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think there is any objection to that, because any exemptions would have to be by regulation, and under these circumstances I think these words can be safely taken out. I would be glad to have one of my colleagues so move.

Mr. HOWE: I so move.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Does the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Does the section as amended carry?

Mr. ADAMSON: Surely, if this section carries it gives mandatory authority to all officials, such as customs officials, to prosecute minor infractions without giving the accused an opportunity to testify. A man goes over to the United States and brings back a small quantity of the embargoed goods. He is adjudged guilty without the opportunity of really defending himself, is he not?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; there would be no such provision. A charge would have to be laid in the regular way. The accused would have to be summoned before the court; the charge would have to be read to him. The crown would have to prove that he had imported the goods, and then the burden of proof would be on him to show that he had a permit. He would have to show either that he had a permit or that he had some other legal ground for bringing in the goods; but he could not be condemned unheard. There is no suggestion of that. This section merely relates to the burden of proof; and the crown having established that an act has been done for which a permit is required, the onus is then shifted to the accused to show that he, in fact, has a permit.

Mr. ADAMSON: The crown must establish that the act has been done before the accused can be prosecuted.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; the crown must establish affirmatively that something has been imported for which a permit is required, and then the man who has the goods must show that he has a permit.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 13—Coming into force.

Mr. MILLER: Can the minister not now give us the date?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, it is a little difficult. We want to have the regulations all completed and drawn so that they can be available concurrently with the coming into force of the act. Perhaps I had better not risk a prediction. I am always very careful about that. I will say as soon as possible, as soon as we can have the regulations drafted the act will be proclaimed and the order in council will lapse.

Mr. CASE: The act is actually in effect now, is it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. The import restrictions are now being effected under an order of the foreign exchange control board, passed pursuant to the Foreign Exchange Control Act, and as soon as this special statute comes into force, is proclaimed, then these orders will be revoked.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Foreign exchange control regulations revoked.

Mr. FLEMING: I think this section requires a little attention. What it says in effect is that P.C. 4678, dated November 12, 1947, is revoked, and then is validated by this proviso:

. . . that any act or thing done or permit granted before the commencement of this act by or on behalf of the Minister of Finance or by and on behalf of the foreign exchange control board pursuant to the provisions of the sections and appendices (of P.C. 4678) aforesaid shall be deemed to have been done or issued by or on behalf of the minister under this act, and all acts, things or matters commenced thereunder (under P.C. 4678) shall be continued under this act and all acts or things done.

It does not say by whom, whether by the minister or by the administrative officials or by the public.

—before the commencement of this act while the sections and appendices aforesaid (that is before P.C. 4678) were in force, which if done pursuant to this act would be valid, are hereby confirmed as if done under this act.

There is a good deal of complexity about the provisions of this section. In the first place, I think they require clarification.

In the next place, it seems to me that in part at least, I do not say altogether, what the committee is being asked to do here is retroactively to validate P.C. 4678. So far as I am aware, the minister has not given the committee the text of the memorandum which he received from the law officers of the crown purporting to find in the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Control Act authority in favour of the governor in council to establish by order in council the kind of restrictive regulations which are embodied in P.C. 4678. If that opinion is sound, and certainly the government has in the past three months gone a long way in the supposition that it has the power to pass P.C. 4678, then I do not think the government ought to come to parliament at this late day and say, will you please validate, as far as validation is necessary, everything that has been done under the terms of P.C. 4678? If the opinion is sound, and if the government have followed the proper course in putting into effect a restrictive program of this kind, more restrictive than any single program ever put into effect in this country in peacetime before, without the slightest reference of it to parliament, then I think they should be left to support what they have done on the basis on which they have purported to justify it, namely, the opinion of the law officers of the crown that they have this power under the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

If there is doubt on the part of the government as to the powers that it purported to exercise—and I can only read this section, in part at least, as proceeding on the basis that the government has doubts as to whether it has acted properly and validly—then certainly, before the measure proceeds further, the government should come forward and tell parliament frankly that it has such doubts and account for the fact that it has proceeded in the past three months in the way it has.

Several days ago, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Calgary East, the minister, as I recall his remarks, and I was in the house at the time, said that an opinion had been sought by himself last August, and that the opinion had been given at least in the first instance orally and had been followed by a memorandum. I understood that the minister was considering making the memorandum available to members of the house.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I said I would show it to the hon. member for Calgary East and I did.

Mr. FLEMING: I have not seen it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said, at the time it was asked for, I did not know whether it was proper for legal opinions from law officers of the crown to be produced in parliament. I discovered later that it was not; but my hon. friend said he would like to look at it himself. Knowing what a good lawyer he was, I had no objection to showing it to him, and I did give him a copy of the memorandum the other day.

An hon. MEMBER: Between friends.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps that was improper; I do not know. In any event, I did it.

Mr. FLEMING: I might express the view in passing that I do not see why opinions of the law officers of the crown, which are as important as this one is in purporting to find in favour of the government's power to proceed in this extraordinary way, should not be tabled in the house. It will be recalled that at the last session, when the opinion of the law officers of the crown was sought in connection with the wheat board matter, that opinion was given to the house by the present Minister of Justice, and certainly in a matter as important as this I do not think the house would be encroaching upon the realm of privileged communication between the law officers of the crown and the government in asking that a legal opinion, an opinion on a legal question whether there was power under the Foreign Exchange Control Act for the government to do what it has sought to do under order 4678, should be made available to the house.

However, to come back to this question, that opinion, giving full respect to the source of it —the law officers of the crown—was proceeded upon in breach of a solemn undertaking given to this house by the then minister of finance in the 1946 session when he introduced the Foreign Exchange Control Act in this house. Here was a solemn undertaking given to the house or, if you like, a representation made to the house by the then minister of finance, the present Minister of Justice, as reported at page 2547 of Hansard of 1946:

> We have no intention of using this exchange control legislation to restrict anything but certain types of capital movement.

What has been done under P.C. 4678 is to throw that undertaking or representation out of the window completely, to ignore it, a representation that was solemnly given to parliament, a representation that certainly entered into the consideration given that bill by many members. The committee will remember that the house spent some time on the bill when it was up in 1946. In the banking and commerce committee its sections were reviewed with some care, and that undertaking of the then minister of finance was an undertaking upon which the banking and commerce committee and this house proceeded in their deliberations upon the bill. Had that undertaking not been given, I am sure the bill would have had a different reception both in this house and in the banking and commerce committee. And to my hon. friend the present Minister of Justice may I just say in passing that I find it very difficult to understand how he can submit to continuing to be a member of the present government when the present government has completely ignored and repudiated the solemn undertaking which he gave the house in the session of 1946.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend should be careful of his language. There was no solemn undertaking given by any minister of the crown. My predecessor as minister of finance said, and I made a somewhat similar statement in the banking committee, that it was not the intention of the government to use the Foreign Exchange Control Act for the purpose of imposing import restrictions on imported goods. I dealt with it at some length in my broadcast address when announcing this policy and have done so subsequently. I may be criticized for it, but I take exception to the statement that the then minister of finance gave a solemn undertaking, because he did no such thing.

Mr. FLEMING: I wish to state quite as positively, if I may do so, that the statement I have quoted, given by the present Minister of Justice and then minister of finance, was a solemn statement given to the house. It was part of a prepared statement.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am saying that it was not a solemn undertaking. That is all.

Mr. FLEMING: It was part of a prepared statement which he submitted to the house when he brought the bill in and asked the house to give it second reading.

Mr. ABBOTT: No one is contradicting that.

Mr. FLEMING: And it was on the strength of that assurance, that the government would not use this legislation, the Foreign Exchange Control Act, to restrict certain types of capital movement, that the house proceeded to deal with the bill as it did. That assurance underlay all the deliberations of the house on that measure. It underlay all the deliberations of the banking and commerce committee on the measure. There can be no gainsaying that fact. It was an undertaking of the highest importance to the house and to the banking and commerce committee, and surely, when important legislation is introduced and well considered statements, prepared statements, are submitted to the house by ministers speaking in the name of the government, statements containing assurances as plain and as solemn as that, this house is entitled to believe that the government will not repudiate such a promise or such an undertaking without first coming to the house. But there was nothing of that sort in this case. The government sent two ministers on the air, two ministers after the Prime Minister, to announce in effect that, regardless of this undertaking, regardless of this solemn assurance, the government, without coming to parliament and saying so much as "by your leave", would blindly go ahead and by order in council, in the face and the teeth of its undertakings, put into effect in peacetime the greatest restrictive program, the greatest measure of strangulation applied to our economy, ever imposed in time of peace.

The measure before us, Bill No. 3, would be bad enough under the best of circumstances. That the government should ask parliament to clothe it with powers so dictatorial, so vast, powers that can be so arbitrarily exercised, as the government in this bill is asking parliament to clothe it with, is bad enough. But when that measure follows by some months the putting into effect by the government of an order in council so drastic in its effect, and so completely in the teeth and in defiance of solemn government undertakings, I say, Mr. Chairman, that not only has a grave wrong been done to parliament, but there has been a complete slap in the face to all fundamental conceptions of democracy.

Mr. HOWE: Question.

Mr. FLEMING: The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply does not like any references to democracy. Perhaps if he listens to a few more he will begin to grasp a few of the rudiments of democracy.

Mr. ABBOTT: What are they?

Mr. FLEMING: One cannot hope in his case to take him beyond the elementary rudiments, but if we could only get him as far as that, what a complete transformation we might hope to see in the right hon. gentleman. If we could only inculcate in him some elementary appreciation of what democracy means, what a change there would be; if we could inculcate in him some elementary appreciation of what the rights and the prerogatives of parliament mean. But of course it is of no use. Any such attempt would be perfectly futile.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am almost as good as you are.

Mr. FLEMING: The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Howe) said yesterday—and this was in connection with a request under schedule III—that a minister's written letter was binding on the government. Here is one representation that appears in Hansard, uttered in this house; true, it is not over a minister's signature, but it is certainly out of his mouth and is as solemn an undertaking as could be given by a minister on behalf of the government. Yet they simply tear it up as a scrap of paper.

If anything further could be done by way of showing complete disrespect for parliament it would be for the government, after all this—after treating parliament with disdain, with contempt, through all these months—to come back now to ask parliament to pass a section which among other things—and I do not say this is the only effect of it—purports to give statutory validation retroactively to everything the government have purported to do under P.C. 4678. If they are so confident that they have the powers under the Foreign Exchange Control Act to do what they have done in, through and by virtue of P.C. 4678, why have they not the courage to stand by their convictions and see it through? But apparently, notwithstanding all the talk, all the radio broadcasts, all the speeches in the house, and all that has been said by way of the sufficiency of the opinion of the law officers of the crown, we come back to this situation, that the government, three months after the Minister of Finance made his radio speech—and that was made three months ago tonight—has to come back to parliament now and ask parliament to give retroactive statutory validation to the things they have been doing under P.C. 4678. If you can imagine any more complete farce than that, Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to hear about it.

Having said that, I should like to say just a word about some of the other things in the section. I hope the minister will be prepared to take the committee into his confidence on the point I have just sought to establish. In connection with the concluding provisions of this section, I should like to offer one or two brief observations. In view of the routine that has been established with boards and officials, I can appreciate that it is desirable that, where applications have proceeded up to a point, when this act comes into effect it would be a grave hardship on many of these people if they were compelled to start all over again. To that extent I think there is much to be said in favour of the concluding provisions of this section. Where persons have been compelled, in order to carry on business, to submit to the provisions of P.C. 4678, certainly they should not be compelled now to back up and start all over again. To that extent I think we shall need some such provision as is found in the concluding lines of section 14.

Then, in conclusion—and I think this is my final word on the section, Mr. Chairman—the provisions beginning at line 39 are, I think, ambiguous; they certainly need clarification. The sentence starting at line 39 reads:

. . . and all acts or things done before the commencement of this act while the sections and appendices aforesaid—

That is, of P.C. 4678.

—were in force, which if done pursuant to this act would be valid, are hereby confirmed as if done under this act.

Is that intended to refer simply to the acts or things done by or on behalf of the minister under P.C. 4678, or is it intended to apply generally to things done by the public or by everyone who has had occasion to make application for a permit under any of the provisions of the act? I do not know which of the two meanings the sentence is intended to have; but, whichever it means, I seriously urge on the minister that it requires clarification.

Mr. ABBOTT: To deal with the points raised by my hon. friend, down to line 39 to which he has referred in the section, the provisions are the usual continuation provisions, and I do not think any serious objection could be taken to them on any ground.

His second point was as to the interpretation of the latter part of the section, which reads:

. . . and all acts or things done before the commencement of this act while the sections and appendices aforesaid were in force, which if done pursuant to this act would be valid, are hereby confirmed as if done under this act.

Obviously these could only be acts which parliament could confirm. I would think that would apply to acts done by the minister or by the officials of his department or acts done by the public in accordance with the regulations or with the section of the foreign exchange control order and the appendices referred to. I had not given the interpretation point any consideration before my hon. friend raised it, but the language is certainly comprehensive: "all acts or things done before the commencement of this act." Of course it might have been much shorter, after putting the continuation provisions in it, to have just said that this act shall be deemed to have been in force since such and such a date.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. FLEMING: On division.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 15—Expiration.

Mr. FULTON: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that section 15 is the final insult in an unwise and damaging act, to every provision of which strenuous objection has been taken by the official opposition and by nearly all opposition parties. The objection has perhaps been most forcefully expressed by the hon. member for Eglinton in the remarks he has just made; so once again I shall not recapitulate everything that has been said. Particularly as the minister himself has agreed that emergency legislation of this sort putting complete discretion in the hands of the ministers is undesirable and dangerous, I think we are entitled to expect that some definite time limit might have been included in the last section of this act, which is section 15; or, if not a definite time limit, at least that after a certain time, if it were necessary to continue it, the government would come back to parliament and ask by way of motion that the act be continued, as has been done with regard to every other emergency act that I have had experience with since I came here, and as was done with respect to others that I have read. Would the minister consider changing section 15 to that effect?

Mr. ABBOTT: The reason why no time limit is put in this act is that, by its very nature—with prohibitions, quotas and a permit system; particularly schedules I and II relating to prohibitions and the quotas—if a definite time were fixed, or if it were thought that the act might expire at a certain definite time, obviously it would make for speculative opportunity on behalf of some people. It is almost in the nature of a budget change. It seems to me that certain sections of this bill need to be handled almost on the basis on which one makes changes in existing tariffs, and there should not be any possibility of anyone having any real advance notice as to when that is likely to take place. That is why no definite time is fixed in this act as to when it shall expire; and I think there are the most compelling reasons why there should not be any such time fixed.

Mr. FULTON: I would point out that there is a definite time limitation in the Foreign Exchange Control Act, which I believe is March 31, 1949.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, I know there is, and I objected quite strongly to that time limit. I think my objections were good. They were not quite as compelling as in this case, because there is not the same opportunity to speculate in goods, but at the time I felt and said both in this house and in the committee that I thought it was a mistake to put a definite time limit in that act.

Mr. FULTON: I do not recall the details of the minister's objection, but obviously it was felt that it was not strong enough to over-ride the greater objection of leaving these powers for an indefinite period in the hands of a board, in that case, and in the hands of one or two ministers in this case.

Mr. ABBOTT: This is by proclamation, not by a minister.

Mr. FULTON: It transforms what is described in the title as emergency legislation into permanent legislation, unless there is some such provision. I should like to see a provision that at the end of a year, say, the government shall come back to parliament for an address to continue the act. Failing that, could we have a provision included providing that by joint resolution of both houses the act could be terminated, or something to that effect to make it quite clear that parliament has the right, when hon. members think the time has come, to terminate the legislation?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, it seems to me that this is even better than a joint resolution. It could be terminated even between sessions; it would not be necessary to wait until parliament was in session. I feel quite strongly that, because of the nature of the prohibitions imposed here, no term should be fixed for the operation of this act. Of course it is always open to parliament to move a resolution repealing it.

Mr. JACKMAN: One reason the minister has given the committee for not having a definite date of expiration, or an ultimate date, is that speculation might take place under the act. At first blush I am at a loss to understand how you could possibly speculate in articles which are not available, articles which are prohibited. Would the minister explain what he means by speculation?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, you could buy goods, accumulate them in the United States, ready to bring them in.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask how you could buy goods when you cannot get any money?

Mr. ABBOTT: You could probably get them on credit.

Mr. JACKMAN: You cannot incur loans in the United States. Another of the restrictions Canadian businessmen are up against is that they cannot incur loans in the United States where money is much cheaper than it is here. As far as I can see and as far as the minister has explained, there is no possible way in which speculation could take place under this act. That is the only reason he has given for not putting a definite termination period in this legislation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, that section 15 be amended to read:

This act shall expire upon a date not later than fifteen months after the coming into force, unless renewed for a further period by parliament.

Mr. HACKETT: I shall not detain the committee with many observations. I merely point out that in this act we are taking two additional steps toward the complete annihilation of parliament. We have been under a system of order in council. We have graduated from that to legislation by a minister. That is the first step which should be pointed out as characterizing this legislation. The second is that all emergency legislation enacted up to the present time has been for a short period, to cope with an emergency. Here we are giving to legislation passed to meet an emergency the characteristics of permanency. For the first time we are delegating the powers of parliament for an indeterminate period. We are legislating parliament out of existence for all time so far as the subject matter of this legislation goes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think I can add much to what I have already said.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister has not dealt at all with the question of putting a ceiling limit on the duration of the act. What he has said in effect is that we should retain the power to repeal the act by proclamation. But he has not touched on the point of putting a ceiling limit on the act.

Mr. ABBOTT: I intended to, if I did not. I intended to express the view that I do not think we should indicate in this act how long it is likely to remain in force.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that would be creating an improper impression. I do not think we should do it; and, as I said before, it would lend itself to unwise speculation.

Mr. JACKMAN: Here we are being treated by a minister of the crown to an expression of opinion which can be nothing more than that, because, if it is not a guess, the minister will elaborate to the committee so that we may understand what he means. How can you speculate under this act?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. JACKMAN: But you have not said anything at all, except to guess.

[Mr. Jackman.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I am under no obligation to give my hon. friend lessons in any particular subject. He is entitled to his opinion; I am entitled to mine.

Mr. JACKMAN: Certainly the minister is under an implied obligation, though it may not be found in the textbooks, to give a committee of parliament such information as he has at his disposal for the guidance of parliament in dealing with these measures. The minister has at his beck and call the paid servants of the crown. He has them in front of him now; he has them in his offices. How are members of parliament, members of this committee of the whole, to know whether or not there is any justification for a particular section or for the bill itself unless the minister gives us some information? I made a reasonable request of him, asking why he wants this section. He wants it so that he may have unbounded power without stint as to time. He gives a reason. I challenge that reason, and he says I am not entitled to ask for information, that I can go elsewhere for it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have given the reason. My hon. friend can accept it or not, as he pleases.

Mr. JACKMAN: You say because of speculation, and I ask you to point out how speculation can take place under this act.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend would know that better than I.

Mr. JACKMAN: I dare say I should, because I have made a study of the matter. That was why I gave my opinion and asked the minister if I was not right, because he is or should be in a position to know. But as far as one can see, he is merely guessing at these matters and asking the committee to accept his opinion. He has not a scintilla of evidence, not the substance or even the shadow of a fact. All he is asking for is an indefinite time, as he did when the Foreign Exchange Control Act went through, but which the other place had the good sense to change. He has given no reason whatsoever here. Surely there is a reason. We hope to be reasonable people in this committee; yet the minister will tell us nothing whatever on which to base our decision.

Amendment (Mr. Jackman) negatived: yeas, 29; nays, 40.

The CHAIRMAN: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the section carry?

Mr. ADAMSON: I had told the minister that I had intended to move an amendment similar to that moved by the hon. member for Rosedale. I do say that surely this bill cannot be operated after the lapse of the foreign exchange control measure as there is no need for it then. Would it not be wise to insert in section 15 the provision that this measure will terminate with the expiry of the foreign exchange control measure? Surely they run hand in glove, and one is not enforceable without the other.

Mr. ABBOTT: I had not considered that aspect of the matter. However, I would say it is my view that this measure could stand completely on its own feet, without any assistance from the foreign exchange control measure. I do not think the two are necessarily complementary.

Mr. ADAMSON: If you lift any embargo on exchange, surely you make extremely difficult the enforcement of this act.

Mr. ABBOTT: The administration might be more difficult. People might be able to pay for the goods, but they could not get them into the country. It might not do them much good.

Section agreed to.

On schedule I.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to say a few words with respect to schedule I.

Mr. ABBOTT: Before my hon. friend makes his remarks, may I point out that the printed bill has been distributed, with the changes in the schedule to which I have referred. However, that has never been formally moved. The reprint which hon. members have before them contains the revised schedule; but, in order that we might be strictly within the rules. I believe I should ask one of my colleagues to move that schedule I, as it appeared in the original bill which was read a first time, should be deleted, and that the attached schedule be substituted therefor. Hon. members do not need to look at different prints; they have the reprint with the amended schedule in it.

Mr. HOWE: I move:

That schedule I to Bill No. 3 be deleted and the attached schedule substituted:

In this schedule where a tariff item of schedule "A" to the customs tariff is listed without being preceded by the word "ex" all goods included in that tariff item shall be deemed to be included in this schedule and where a tariff item is listed and preceded by the word "ex" only the goods described thereafter are deemed to be included in this schedule, and words and expressions in this schedule have the same meaning as in the schedules to the customs tariff.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the motion carried?

Mr. KNOWLES: No.

Mr. FLEMING: May I ask that you call the schedules at least page by page, if not item by item, because there will be individual items hon. members will wish to discuss.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Eglinton suggests that the schedules be called page by page. Does that meet with the approval of the committee?

Mr. GREEN: I think that would only lead to confusion; they should be called item by item.

Mr. FLEMING: Better still.

Mr. ABBOTT: All right, but it would be a long procedure.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the committee decided upon what procedure it will follow? I shall carry out its wishes. We are dealing with schedule I.

Mr. KNOWLES: Perhaps I should explain that my purpose in rising was to move an amendment to schedule I to delete three items, namely items 87, 92 and 96, which are the main items covering fresh fruits and vegetables.

[Mr. Howe.]

If the committee prefers to follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver South, namely to call the items one by one, then it would simply mean that we would call a vote when we reached those three items. May we have a decision as to what procedure we shall follow?

Mr. ABBOTT: The total imports of those three items were valued at $17,000,000. When you come to vote on it, bear that in mind.

The CHAIRMAN: I would suggest that we should call the schedules page by page, and see how we get along by that method. If it does not work satisfactorily we can try some other method.

Mr. GREEN: I would point out that when tariff items are being passed it is done item by item. These schedules are based on tariff items, and I submit that there is no precedent or rule providing for dealing with items page by page. The procedure ever since I have been here has been to take them individually. Not only is that the proper procedure, but also from the common-sense standpoint it is the most orderly way to proceed and will prove to be the most expeditious.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Eglinton suggested the other way.

Mr. FLEMING: I said page by page, if not item by item. I would prefer to have it item by item.

The CHAIRMAN: Then, I shall call the schedules item by item. Schedule I, tariff item No. 7.

Customs tariff—7. Meats, fresh, n.o.p.

Mr. GREEN: In respect of these items would the minister give us the figures? I believe the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked the other day that that information be prepared.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have the information on any individual item. We could probably give it.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister give it on each item as it is called?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall do my best.

Mr. ADAMSON: And would the minister give the period for which the figures are given?

Mr. ABBOTT: The information I shall now give will be an example of what is available. From scheduled countries we imported $2,000 worth of fresh beef and veal, and $1,000 worth from non-scheduled countries, making a total of $3,000. Of fresh pork we imported $767,000 worth from scheduled countries; that is, dollar countries. Then, of fresh meats, not otherwise provided for, we imported $2,000 worth from scheduled countries. And of edible offals, fresh, which come under this tariff item, we imported $170,000 worth from scheduled countries.

Mr. ADAMSON: What is the base period?

Mr. ABBOTT: The twelve months ended June 30, 1947.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—8. Canned meats, poultry or game.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister give us the figures for each item?

Mr. ABBOTT: I can give them, but it would take considerable time. Could we not have the information printed in Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. MacNICOL: Put it on file, so that we shall not have to take up the time of the committee in listening to figures.

Mr. ABBOTT: All this data is a matter of public record. It is to be found in information supplied by the bureau of statistics in trade reports. Mind you, that covers another period, and the information would have to be extracted. It might be more convenient for hon. members if I were to place it on record. It would be necessary to take the last six months of 1946 and the first six months of 1947 from the figures supplied by the bureau of statistics. Those are, of course, available.

Mr. JACKMAN: Put them on Hansard.

Mr. ABBOTT: I could do that, but they are very lengthy. However, if the committee feels it is necessary we could put them on Hansard. What I now hold in my hand is on the prohibited list, and is an extract from published figures.

As we go through this list, if there are any particularly significant ones hon. members could ask for the information, if they are especially interested.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps the minister could put the figures on Hansard and then, as he suggests, if any member is interested in a particular item he could get the figures.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister the figures for the months preceding November 18?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have not extracted those, but they are, of course, available. The dominion bureau of statistics publishes all these figures, which are made up from the import returns, and anyone experienced in using these figures could take this bluebook and get the figures for any given period. This is a long and complicated table, but perhaps it had better be printed somewhere, although I had thought it might not be needed. It contains the imports from scheduled and non-scheduled countries for the year ending June 30, 1947—

Mr. FRASER: What I was trying to get at was what was brought in before November 18 and what came in after that date. Some came in after that date because the goods were in uninterrupted transit before that date.

Mr. ABBOTT: Someone asked what our latest figures were. The figures for December will, I understand, be available next week. If the committee wishes, this table might be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard. [See page 1339.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

Items 8, 9, 9a and 10 agreed to.

Customs tariff—16. Eggs in the shell.

Mr. GREEN: Could the minister give us the figures on that?

Mr. ABBOTT: There were $245,000 of imports from scheduled, that is dollar countries, in the base period.

Item agreed to.

Items 18a and 22 agreed to.

Customs tariff—27. Coffee, roasted or ground, when not imported direct from the country of growth and production.

Mr. ADAMSON: I understand that coffee in the bean or ground can be imported direct from the growing country, but that this schedule does not permit such coffee from any other countries. Roasted coffee or prepared coffee must be imported direct from the country of origin. This item does not include raw coffee. The coffee exchanges are still functioning, and raw coffee and coffee in the bean come in through the New York exchange.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. ADAMSON: But roasted coffee or prepared coffee must be imported direct from the country of origin. Are the countries of origin, which are nearly all South American republics, not still in the scheduled dollar area? I know that all the Central American countries are.

Mr. ABBOTT: This schedule prohibits the importation of roasted and packaged coffee.

Mr. GREEN: The minister did not answer the hon. member's question with regard to South American countries. Are they being classed as scheduled or non-scheduled countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: Most of them are non-scheduled countries. There is no restriction here on the importation of coffee beans or raw coffee. It applies only to packaged or roasted coffee, which, as a rule, I do not think is brought in from the country of origin.

Mr. ADAMSON: No; but if it was brought in from the countries of South America where it was grown and if it was packaged there, it would be allowed in under this schedule, despite the fact that that country might be a schedule country.

Mr. ABBOTT: Under tariff item 28 we import coffee beans which are processed or roasted, and that tariff item is not on the prohibited list.

Item agreed to.

Items 29a, 31, 33, 36-37, 38, 42a, 43, 45-46, 47, 48, agreed to.

Customs tariff—63, 63a. Rice, cleaned.

Mr. FRASER: Why does the minister find it necessary to prohibit rice from coming into Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: Only cleaned rice is prohibited.

Mr. FRASER: Practically all our rice comes from the United States.

Mr. ABBOTT: The total imports were $204,000 in the base period, all from the United States.

Mr. FRASER: Was that cleaned or uncleaned?

Mr. ABBOTT: Cleaned rice only.

Mr. FRASER: How much uncleaned came in?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not the figures here, but uncleaned rice is not prohibited.

Mr. FRASER: I know, but have you the figures on that?

Mr. ABBOTT: We can get that information.

Mr. GREEN: Why this different treatment between cleaned and unmilled rice?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that the greater part of our uncleaned rice comes or did come directly from the country of origin, Burma, in former days. Now it sometimes comes from the United States. It is a cheaper way of getting it. It saves United States dollars to bring it in uncleaned and process it here.

Mr. FRASER: We get little uncleaned rice from Burma now. Does not most of it come from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: It does at the moment, but uncleaned is a cheaper way of bringing it in and have it processed here.

Mr. FRASER: For some years we have been getting it from the United States.

Mr. ABBOTT: Since the beginning of the war.

Mr. FRASER: And even before that.

Mr. GREEN: Is there still a control on rice? I understand that there was some sort of international control. Is there a control now?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think rice is on international allocation now.

Mr. GREEN: Is that control still in effect? Just what is the situation?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that there is no such control. As the committee probably knows, about the only things that now remain under international allocation are oils and fats.

Mr. FRASER: The reason I brought this matter up is that rice has been fairly hard to get. Even if you have to pay the present prices, rice is a cheap food and is easy to prepare. Therefore I do not think it should be on this list.

Mr. ABBOTT: Rice is not on this list. We can bring in all the uncleaned rice that can be obtained, and process it here. This relates only to a comparatively small quantity of cleaned rice.

Mr. GREEN: I would suggest that the minister look into the whole rice situation. The effect of the present provisions is that only two or three mills in Canada can handle rice. They get all the rice business. For some time, cleaned rice has been prohibited. I suggest that the minister look into the whole situation with regard to rice.

Mr. ABBOTT: If the committee is interested in rice I have some figures here. In eleven months of 1947 uncleaned, unhulled rice was imported to the extent of $2,217,302.

Mr. GREEN: What year is that?

Mr. ABBOTT: The year 1947, eleven months to the end of November. That is the latest figure we have. In the base period cleaned rice imported from the United States amounted to only $204,000; therefore one can see that the great proportion of the rice which is used in this country entered in an uncleaned or unhulled form.

Mr. GREEN: I think that is because of the continuation of the wartime controls. Can the minister give us figures for the years before the war and some idea of the comparative amounts of cleaned and uncleaned rice?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have figures for three typical years before the war. Rice cleaned amounted to $194,000 for the first year and $211,000 in the second year, or a total of $405,000 in these two years. I beg your pardon. The three-year average before the war from both scheduled and non-scheduled countries was $405,000.

Mr. GREEN: Of the cleaned rice?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of cleaned rice, yes. I have no figures for the other.

Mr. PEARKES: Rice forms a staple food of many of the oriental Canadian citizens on the Pacific coast. Can the minister assure us that there are adequate quantities of rice coming in to look after the British East Indians and the Chinese in British Columbia?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure that adequate quantities of rice are coming in. There is no restriction on what has always been the major type of rice imported into the country, namely, the uncleaned or unhulled rice, which is processed here, and no restriction is put on it. The only class we are restricting here is the comparatively small quantity of cleaned rice which was imported from the United States.

Mr. PEARKES: It is the uncleaned rice which is used by the oriental.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right; it is cleaned and processed here in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Items 65, 66 and 67 agreed to.

Customs tariff—79b. Flowers and foliage, natural, cut, whether in designs or bouquets or not, n.o.p.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister give us the figures for this item?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. There were $364,000 worth under that item in the base period and $2,000 from non-scheduled countries.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—87. Vegetables, fresh, in their natural state: asparagus, green beans, brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, beets, n.o.p., cauliflower, eggplant, celery, cucumbers, lettuce, parsley, green peas, rhubarb, spinach, tomatoes, watercress, whitloof, endive, and fresh vegetables, n.o.p.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, had we taken schedule I all at once, I would have moved an amendment asking that this item be deleted. Since we are now taking the schedule item by item, all I can do is to ask the committee to vote down item 87, which has to do with fresh vegetables. I remind the committee that when we were on second reading of this bill we from this corner of the house indicated the precise reasons for our objections to the bill. One of the reasons which we indicated at that time was the government's unwillingness to reconsider its ban on fresh fruits and vegetables. The reply of the minister to that point when he concluded the debate on second reading was that it did not invalidate the principle; that it was only a detail which we could deal with when we got to committee.

Now that we have come to this detail in the committee, I hope that we shall deal with it fairly and objectively and not just have it pushed through. In fact, it seems to me that this item and also item No. 92 are items on which the government ought to permit a free vote of the committee. I point out, Mr. Chairman, that there are many items in the schedule which we in this group and other members of the committee might have sought to make an issue out of, but we accept the general principle that the government has to do something along the line of restricting imports to overcome our shortage of United States dollars. In other words, we are not going through the schedule and picking out item after item so as to upset the whole program; but we are picking out these two items, fresh fruits and fresh vegetables, because we believe they are important to the health of our people.

The minister has already today made remarks to the effect that we did not have these things in the wintertime in Canada twenty-five or fifty years ago. I submit that that answer is not good enough. The fact is that during the past quarter of a century, and especially during the last century, the age to which Canadians live has been extended, and it just may be that, in part, that is due to what we have learned about nutrition. No one will deny that from a nutritional point of view it is exceedingly important that we have fresh fruits and vegetables in this country, particularly so in view of the wintry climate that we have in Canada. I would suggest that we have no way of telling what injury we may do to the health of the Canadian people in years far distant by the action of this committee if the majority supports these two items and cuts down on the quantities of fresh fruits and vegetables that are available to our people. When I indicated a moment ago that we were prepared to make an issue out of these items, 87, 92 and 96, the minister gave me a figure as to what the total amount of these three items came to last year. I think he said $17,000,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: Approximately $17,000,000 for out-of-season vegetables, not fruit.

Mr. KNOWLES: I believe that the figures which the minister has given with regard to this whole program of import restrictions is something of the order of $300 million. I agree that if we were to go through the list and pick out item after item it would total $50 million, $100 million or $200 million, and we would then certainly be defeating the whole program of the government; but $17,000,000 does not upset the program that the government is trying to put through; and I submit it is more important that this committee concern itself with the health of our Canadian people. I know that I am speaking for hon. members in all parties, for all of us have received strong representations from individuals and from organizations back home. This is another of those occasions where I feel the government should permit a free vote of the committee. I am sure that if a free vote were permitted and hon. members voted the way they know the people back home wanted them to we would delete item 87. We would do the same thing with items 92 and 96 when we get to them. Mr. Chairman, I call upon the committee to vote down item 87.

Mr. LOW: May I ask the minister a question? Could not substantial quantities of the products mentioned in item 87 be brought in from the British West Indies and other countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told not. We can get from the British West Indies and other countries fruits which are under schedule II, under the quota. There is no effective limitation at all. Onions come from Bermuda. These are quotas, and there is no effective limitation on the import of onions from Bermuda.

Mr. LOW: Tomatoes?

Mr. ABBOTT: Tomatoes we have allowed in from the Bahamas under the special hardship clause. There are none available from the Bahamas because we have taken the crop.

[Mr. Knowles.]

What the situation may be next year it is hard to say. That is true of Montserrat and Jamaica.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Like myself, he has been to Great Britain, and I understand that he is greatly in favour of the planned economy they have in that country. The last time I was there I never saw an orange; I never saw imported vegetables; I never saw the things one sees in vast quantities in Canada. And I speak not as an authority; I am repeating statements made by the Ministry of Food in Great Britain, when I say that the British people have never been healthier. I think that in a comparative sense it can be said that we are well off in Canada, and I do not think it is a great hardship, for a few weeks in the year, in order to protect our economy, for us to deny ourselves these things that we got along without, at any rate when I first came to this country, which is not very long ago. I think that is a fair statement to make. Comparatively speaking, the British people are in the same position as ourselves, for they are trying to protect their currency and they have found it necessary to deny themselves in this way for years, ever since the outbreak of the war; nevertheless the British people, it is said, are healthier today than they have ever been.

Mr. CLEAVER: I come from the centre of one of the most important sections in Canada growing fruits and vegetables, and I want to suggest to my hon. friend who objects to this item that the amount involved in out-of-season fruits and vegetables—he is only giving half the picture—is closer to $40,000,000. I admit at once that, on account of the suddenness with which the emergency came upon us, our growers have been caught out of their stride, but I want to assure him that the Ontario and British Columbia fruit and vegetable growers will supply him and his family with all the fresh fruits and vegetables they can eat. It is true we are short of cabbages and celery and all these things now, but that is only because the emergency came upon the country in an out-of-crop season and there was no opportunity for the growers to prepare for it. You will have all the cabbages, carrots, beets, celery, spinach and all these other vegetables next winter, grown in Canada. I do not think anyone's health will suffer because we are denied strawberries three or four weeks ahead of time or denied asparagus three or four weeks ahead of time. Our asparagus is better than the United States asparagus, if you wait for it.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: British Columbia has been mentioned. I do not think the Fraser valley can supply any whitloof—I do not know what that is—and Saskatchewan may have to be denied watercress for a few weeks in the year.

Mr. FRASER: The minister said the other day that carrots would be allowed in. I understand that in Ottawa they are in short supply and the minister's home town will be out of carrots this week. I agree in part with what the hon. member for Halton has said. This emergency was thrust upon the people of Canada, and if the farmer had known three or four months before, he would have been able to supply the market. He should have been told. Even at the present time, the truck farmers do not know what the program is for next year, and they will not be able to supply the market unless they are informed at once so that they can buy the seed to plant this year; because, as the Minister of Agriculture will tell you, the seed is generally bought either in December or January, and it is getting late now to buy seed to supply the people of Canada with the fresh vegetables they need. Fifteen years ago the farmers of Canada supplied enough vegetables to the people of Canada right until April. They were stored in their basements. We have rhubarb which is now imported, or was imported from the United States.

An hon. MEMBER: Nonsense.

Mr. FRASER: Pardon me, it was, in the winter. But rhubarb for winter consumption was first grown in Canada, and first grown by the uncle of the hon. member for York East in Hamilton, Ontario, in his basement and shipped from Canada to New York. On the menus there it appeared as fresh rhubarb imported from Canada. I do not agree that this whole list of things should be cut off in item 87. There are some of these things we can do without; but what I am afraid of is that if this is wiped out, when our own farmers are bringing in their crops next summer, or when they are about ripe, the government will allow an influx, a flood of things from the United States, as they have done in the last few years.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame.

Mr. FRASER: Yes. Strawberries have been mentioned. Strawberries have flooded this country just a few weeks before our own Canadian strawberries have gone on the market. They killed the appetite of the Canadian people for our own strawberries, and our own producers were not able to get a proper price. If our own farmers are given proper protection we shall have enough vegetables in Canada, but they demand protection and should have it. I think the Minister of Agriculture should get together with the Minister of Finance and state the policy in regard to vegetables, and state it at once.

Mr. STEPHENSON: With reference to the statement of the hon. member for Halton, that we can supply in this country a lot of these fresh fruits and vegetables which we are importing from the United States, I have asked a question two or three times in the house, and I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he put it to the government. Perhaps they will answer him, but they will not tell me. Can these growers in Canada be given an assurance that this program will not be limited and that the United States product will not come here and flood this market after our growers made an effort to produce the things we need? Will he ask the government that?

Mr. CLEAVER: I have discussed the problem thoroughly with our growers and I am told that there is no need at the present time for any such assurance. The growers will grow to the fullest extent of their capacity to take care of the Canadian public for the first part of the crop. We have two crop seasons; and so long as our growers have an assurance not later than the thirtieth of April, they will produce all the vegetables needed for the Canadian public next winter. I have already suggested to the minister that it would be in order to give such an assurance, and between now and the first of May you can rest assured that it will be repeated.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The first of May will be too late.

Mr. CLEAVER: No, it will not be too late.

Mr. STEPHENSON: The growers must start to make preparations.

Mr. FRASER: They have to buy fertilizer and seed.

Mr. CLEAVER: Our growers do not wait until Monday to buy the fertilizer they need on Tuesday.

Mr. PEARKES: It is not a question of waiting until Monday to buy fertilizer. We on Vancouver island are sowing vegetable seeds now, in the month of February. I appreciate the government's difficulty. I see their desire to save a considerable sum of money. I also appreciate the point of view put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The health of this country is threatened if the people cannot get sufficient fresh vegetables. Surely the answer is simple. Surely one of the ministers of the government can assure the vegetable growers of this country that for this growing season, whether the vegetables are sown in the month of February or in the month of May, they will be able to harvest their vegetables and supply the people of Canada without having unfair competition placed upon them by the sudden opening of the market to United States vegetables. I am certain—and I have discussed the matter with vegetable growers this year; in fact, I discussed it last Christmas—that they are prepared to make a considerable outlay of capital, bring more acreage under cultivation, invest in newer equipment, so that they can cultivate their vegetables in sufficient quantity to supply the people of Canada. They are prepared to do all that if they can be given some reasonable guarantee as to the security of their market. I ask for this year that the government, if they want to save that amount of money, at least assure the vegetable growers now that they will not be subjected to unfair competition at harvest time.

Mr. COTÉ (Matapedia-Matane): I had not intended to speak in this debate, even though I represent a rural district and have been a member of the committee on agriculture and colonization. Having listened to the hon. member for Nanaimo, I should like to know if it is possible for him to give us for all Canada, with the exception of Victoria and Vancouver island, a sort of formula by which it would be possible to bring in cucumbers, tomatoes and so on during the winter months.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Move to British Columbia.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like the Liberal members of the house to realize the position that the country is getting into under this whole program. The Minister of Finance has protested strongly against our claims that this whole bill was protectionist in nature. Once or twice he said it was the highest form of protection.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not protested. I myself have said it was highly protectionist.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister said both things.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not said both things. From the beginning I have said that it is highly protectionist.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. KNOWLES: In answer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, the minister said it was the highest form of protection. But to me, on second reading, the minister said that it was not intended to be protectionist; that it was intended to be restrictive.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): All things to all men.

Mr. KNOWLES: We have a proposal that these fresh vegetables be prohibited at the present time. The hon. member for Halton gets up and assures us—and I have no doubt he knows of the assurance that he is giving—that the vegetable growers in his part of the country can step up their production to meet this changed situation. It means that a year or two from now, those vegetable growers, having built up their production—whether economic or otherwise—behind this highest form of protection, will be coming to the Liberal government and asking the Liberal government to keep this kind of protection in effect.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We shall still be in power.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't brag.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Liberal party may still be in power but its Liberalism will have vanished completely. The hon. member for Fraser Valley who, I think, believes to a considerable extent in free trade, will find it difficult to continue to support a government which not only has brought in the highest form of protection but finds itself in the position of having to keep that wall of protection there. It is the same old story that we have had throughout the whole history of Canada. I am talking to my Liberal friends now, not to the Tories. The Tories like this. It is the same old story of protection for an infant industry, and then the infant industry needs that protection for all time. In my view, there are many other ways in which this government has discriminated against the agricultural industry of this country that it must overcome. But this is not the way. This, in the long run, reduces the standard of living of the Canadian people; it reduces their purchasing power; and when the standard of living of the Canadian people goes down, the section of the community which suffers the most is the agricultural section. This course is completely "il-Liberal", and the demonstration we have had tonight shows that the minister's claim that this is just a temporary measure is just so much eyewash. It is the beginning of a wall of protection; and once you get it built up, the tendency is for the people who have enjoyed that protection to want it to be built still higher. I submit that that argument falls to the ground and that the argument with regard to the health of the Canadian people is the one which this committee should consider. I think we should vote down this section. I agree with those who have said that there are one or two things in it such as watercress, endives, eggplant and so on which, so far as I know, are not of particular importance from the point of view of health. But I can see the great difficulties that we might get into in this committee if we went through the twenty odd items and tried to make amendments to strike out a few of them. This section deals with the banning of fresh vegetables in general, and I think the members of this committee should take this opportunity to speak for their constituents and vote it down.

Mr. JACKMAN: I regret that I have to put a proposition up to the minister again with regard to item 87. I am speaking particularly of certain vegetables within the clause. I will enumerate them because they are common vegetables, and I hope my suggestion may get the support or at least the commendation of the members across the way and of my hon. friends to the left. I am speaking particularly of the importation of these essential vegetables: cabbage, carrots, lettuce and tomatoes. The others are not quite so important. The total of the imports of those four vegetables during the eleven months ending November 30 of last year was $8,000,000 odd. That is not a large sum.

The first point I should like to make in my proposition is this. In another room in this building we have sitting a prices committee which is investigating the high cost of living. The proposal which I shall make is one which will reduce the cost of living to the Canadian people. That result arises in this way. If we allow the importation of the vegetables I have mentioned, the people who handle those vegetables in Canada, the wholesalers and the retailers, will not have their volume cut, as it is at the present time, down to 60 per cent of normal. They will have their ordinary volume. If they do not have their ordinary volume, they must charge all their overhead and wage costs against the domestic production which is available during the short crop season in our own country. Allow these vegetables to come in from the United States and the housewives of Canada will get cheaper vegetables.

The second point is this. We were told by the hon. member for Halton that if the market gardeners in Canada were given sufficient notice they would be able to provide all the fresh vegetables required. Our domestic production of cabbages cannot be kept beyond January. Lettuce cannot be kept for more than two weeks.

Mr. MITCHELL: Oh, no.

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not know how expert my hon. friend is, but my information comes from a man who handles these products, and I believe it is thoroughly reliable. Lettuce cannot be kept for more than two weeks. I also understand that the market gardeners of Canada would prefer that these fresh vegetables be allowed to come in during the winter months, because people develop habits in eating as in other things, and if they are able to get vegetables during the winter they will be likely to continue eating them during the summer. That is sound reasoning. Furthermore, it is sometimes difficult to get children to eat certain vegetables, and if they are away from them for four or five months out of the year it is hard to get them to eat them again.

May I now say something about the nutritional aspect, which was mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We have heard some very offhand expressions about having done so well over the past twenty or thirty years, as far as nutrition is concerned, when we did not have these imported vegetables. That has been told us not only by the Minister of Finance but also by the Minister of Labour a moment ago. I am not at all certain that the people in Britain may not get fresh vegetables from some of the south European countries where the currencies are weakened. Certainly they have their Brussels sprouts; there is no doubt of that. In regard to the value of present-day diets, which we are not able to maintain because of these restrictions, I should like to read from the proceedings of the national nutrition conference for defence, held at Washington on May 26, 27 and 28, 1941. I refer to the concluding address by Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the United States public health service. This, I think, will establish that, while we existed, and not badly, in years gone by, we have greatly improved our standards. Surgeon General Parran says:

> In the past two decades there have been breath-taking discoveries on many nutritional fronts. To find a parallel to this swift advance in knowledge we must go back to the epoch-making time of Pasteur, whose germ theory of disease made possible a half century of progress against preventable infections. Without Pasteur and his co-workers and disciples, mankind still would be plague-ridden. He made our civilization vastly different. Tomorrow's civilization can be made vastly different, and far better than today's, if we put to work now, what we know now, about the nutrition of human beings.

In the past half century we have added twenty years to the average span of human life—

I hope the Minister of Finance will remember that.

—largely by saving the lives of babies and of young people. But life expectancy for those of us beyond the age of forty has not increased since Pasteur's time. On the contrary, many diseases have increased because more of us grow old enough to acquire them. Deaths have increased from cancer, heart conditions, kidney conditions, mental illness—in fact, from all of the so-called degenerative causes. It is easy to say that this is the strain of modern life. Yet every disease, every malfunction of an organ, results from a derangement in the functioning of the individual body cell. The individual cell functions properly if it is properly fed; and if it is not killed by the invasion of bacterial, virus, or chemical poisons, or by endogenous toxins. The food available to each of the body cells probably determines to a large degree the health of that cell, its proper functioning, its reciprocal relations with other cells, which make up organs and systems of the body.

Then later:

Doctor Sherman has told us that if we replace an average diet—

Such as the Minister of Finance no doubt had, and under which he flourished so well.

—with an adequate diet we get a ten per cent increase in the active, virile life span.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is quite easy to see that I am good until at least eleven o'clock.

Schedule I stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: As previously arranged, tomorrow we go back to the debate on the address. If we should complete that we shall return to the emergency legislation, this measure being first.

Mr. GREEN: Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether we shall continue with Bill No. 3 on Friday if the speech from the throne is not disposed of before that time?

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be my intention, Mr. Speaker.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 18, 1943

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MEMBERS BETWEEN RESIDENCE AND OTTAWA

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) stated on the floor of the house on Monday last that the chief treasury officer who performs the duties of accountant of the house had refused to pay his travelling expenses by air and also those of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson). He said:

I request that Your Honour give the reason which you gave to the accountant of the House of Commons as to why the expense accounts for the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and myself were refused.

This was the first time I heard there was any trouble in connection with these expense accounts; but I took no exception to the hon. member speaking on this matter at the time because he started by saying he rose to a question of privilege. By the time he was through I saw that the main object of his statement was a complaint against a part of the house's administration which is under my control. I then said:

I call the attention of the hon. member to a very well known rule, that the Speaker should not be questioned from the floor of the house.

I nevertheless assured the hon. member that due consideration would be given his remarks.

It is a well known rule laid down in May's 14th edition, page 334, that:

Questions dealing with matters within the jurisdiction of the Speaker should be addressed to the Speaker by private notice.

Payment of members' travelling expenses has always been under the control of the commissioners of the internal economy of the house, who, for the present session, are the hon. ministers of Justice, External Affairs, Finance and Fisheries. Section 16 of the House of Commons Act provides that those hon. ministers shall act together with the Speaker, and section 18 of the act says:

All sums of money voted upon such estimates (the estimates of the house), or payable to members of the House of Commons under the Senate and House of Commons Act shall be subject to the order of the commissioners, or any three of them, of whom the Speaker shall be one.

The commissioners have often considered the members' travelling expenses but they have not yet discussed the advisability of applying section 43 (1) of the Senate and House of Commons Act to travel by air. A meeting of the commissioners was called two weeks ago and had to be postponed because ministers were too busy attending other official business. I will make it a point to submit to them the cases of the hon. members for Vancouver North and Comox-Alberni, which in my opinion deserve the most serious consideration.

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the statement Your Honour has just made I note that the hon. member for Vancouver North in making his statement said this:

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) informs me that he regularly travels by air and his accounts are approved.

I know the hon. member does not wish to misrepresent me, but he must have misunderstood me. I did not want him to understand that I regularly travel by air and that my accounts were paid. Occasionally when the adjournment of the house was so short that all of my time in going from my home and returning would be spent in travel, I have travelled by air and presented the accounts to the accountant of the house, with vouchers, and they have been paid. But that was not done on more than two or three occasions, and it is not the regular procedure.

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I can certainly substantiate that. That was the effect of the communication I received from the hon. member for Yukon, which I think makes our case all the stronger in that there should be no differentiation between ridings. On this matter of privilege, as a member of parliament, I did consider that when the accounts of a member of parliament were submitted to a servant of parliament and were refused, it was quite proper to draw Your Honour's attention to that fact in the House of Commons. I can also say that as a member of parliament I think your statement is not very satisfactory.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

*FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL—U.S. FUNDS FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

Mr. McMASTER:

What was the amount of American dollars acquired by the foreign exchange control board in the period beginning January 1, 1947 and ending on the last day of November, 1947 from the following sources: (a) export of merchandise; (b) export of gold; (c) tourist and travelling expenditures by visitors to Canada; (d) interest and dividends; (e) freight and shipping; (f) the United Kingdom; (g) any other country; (h) from other sources, specifying, if possible, the more important ones?

What were the sources of the sums acquired by the foreign exchange control board which increased their reserves from $461,000,000 on December 17, 1947, to $514,000,000 on January 31, 1948, divided under the following headings: (a) export of merchandise to United States; (b) export of gold; (c) tourist and travelling expenditures by visitors to Canada; (d) interest and dividends; (e) freight and shipping; (f) the United Kingdom; (g) any other country; (h) gold acquired and held; (i) from other sources, specifying if possible, the more important ones?

Mr. ABBOTT: May I be permitted to answer these questions orally? I wish to point out that the information requested involves estimates of Canada's balance of payments which require a great deal of statistical work, and it is customary to make such estimates only on the basis of the calendar year. To attempt such estimates for broken periods, particularly for such a period as is referred to in the second question, would involve at least a very large amount of additional work, and the information could not be made available for a considerable period of time. A definitive estimate of Canada's balance of payments for the year 1947 will not be available until the report of the foreign exchange control board is published. However, I have requested that provisional or tentative estimates should be prepared, subject to correction later as all the details are available, and I trust that it will meet the purpose which the hon. member has in mind if I table now a copy of these provisional estimates for the year 1947, which have been prepared at my request.

TORONTO AND DISTRICT SUBURBAN TRANSPORTATION SERVICE

Mr. CHURCH:

1. When will the Toronto district be given a steam suburban service by both railways with commutation tickets and new equipment?

2. Why are not steel cars available on the Canadian National Railways to replace the wooden type now in use to Oakville and Brampton?

[Mr. Sinclair.]

3. Why has the transport board not acted under its powers under the Railway Act to give the Toronto district the same type of suburban service as for years has been available on Montreal island and district by both railway systems?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:—

1. Commutation fares are available: (a) between Toronto and Oakville and intermediate points, (b) between Toronto and Weston and intermediate points, (c) between Toronto and Port Union and intermediate points, (d) between Toronto and Downsview and intermediate points.

With the number of first-class highways in the vicinity of Toronto paralleling railway tracks and the availability of other forms of transportation, additional steam railway services are not considered necessary to serve suburban communities.

2. Every effort is being made to distribute available passenger coaches of modern construction in the most effective way, and replacements of cars of the older type will be made as rapidly as circumstances permit.

3. The Board of Transport Commissioners advise as follows:

No application is before the board for an order requiring a change in the type of suburban railway service in the Toronto district, and there is no material on the board's files which would justify the board in issuing such an order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL

Mr. HANSELL:

1. How much coal was used by the Canadian National Railways for each of the years 1945, and 1946 and what is the estimated value of this coal?

2. How much of this coal was imported from the United States during these years and what is the estimated value?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:—

1. 1945—6,310,751 net tons—cost $38,432,474; 1946—6,082,395 net tons—cost $38,744,856.

2. 1945—4,336,688 net tons—cost $29,167,064; 1946—4,138,017 net tons—cost $29,751,724.

The above-mentioned costs include mine cost, foreign freight, duty and expense of handling through chutes and are exclusive of any charges for transportation over Canadian lines.

WAR ASSETS—SHEEPSKIN-LINED COATS

Mr. STUART (Charlotte):

1. Did War Assets Corporation, during the period February 1, 1947 to January 31, 1948, dispose of a quantity of army sheepskin-lined coats (a) with parkas; (b) with collars?

2. If so, were tenders called?
3. What are the names of those from whom tenders were received, showing quantity and prices?
4. Were similar goods disposed of through the Montreal office?
5. If so, what price was received for similar lines?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. (a) Yes. (b) Yes.
2. No.
3. Not applicable. See answer to question No. 2 above.
4. Yes.
5. Prices received for similar lines range from $1 per garment for badly worn coats up to $10 per garment for new coats.

VETERANS BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL LOANS ACT

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia):

1. How many applications have been made each year, by provinces, for the Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act?
2. How many of these applications have been granted, by provinces, to date?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. To December 31, 1947:

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT—LAND DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. TIMMINS:

How many projects with respect to land development have been commenced under the amendment to the National Housing Act of 1947, being new section 11B?

Mr. McILRAITH: As of February 10, 1948, agreements have been executed between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the sponsoring lending institutions for six land development projects pursuant to the provisions of section 11B of the National Housing Act. Development has commenced on all six projects. The location, acreage involved, and number of residential lots expected from each project are as follows:

Mount Royal district, Montreal, 20 acres, 146 lots.

North York township, 122 acres, 383 lots.

Burlington, Ontario, 30 acres, 154 lots.

St. Boniface, Manitoba, 37·5 acres, 205 lots.

South Edmonton, Alberta, 12·6 acres, 75 lots.

Hastings townsite (suburban Vancouver) 9·6 acres, 96 lots.

Five other projects are at present under negotiation.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS AT AJAX, ONT.

Mr. CASE:

1. How many buildings have been rented at Ajax, Ontario?
2. To whom were they rented?
3. How much floor space, in each case, was rented?
4. How much rental per foot was charged for such space?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Four buildings plus an area containing approximately 180 buildings.

2. Two buildings to Visco Petroleum Company, Toronto; one building to Gross Machinery Company Limited, Toronto; one building to Novelty Shoe Company Limited, Toronto.

Approximately 180 buildings in an area leased to the University of Toronto.

3. Two buildings—Visco Petroleum Company—24,000 sq. feet; one building—Gross Machinery Company—56,000 sq. feet; one building—Novelty Shoe Company—1,364 sq. feet.

The floor space occupied by the University of Toronto cannot be computed without considerable time and expense. The lease to the university covers a certain land area in which the buildings are situated and numerous changes have been made from the original layout.

4. Visco Petroleum Company—24,000 sq. feet at 2c per sq. foot; Gross Machinery Company—56,000 sq. feet at 2c per sq. foot; Novelty Shoe Company—1,364 sq. feet at 2c per sq. foot.

All above space unheated. Charge shown above is per month.

The lease with the University of Toronto covers an overall annual charge of $50,000 without reference to floor area.

VETERANS BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL LOANS ACT

Mr. McKAY:

1. What is the total value of loans made under the Business and Professional Loans Act since its inception?

2. How many loans have been made under this act in each of the provinces?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. $5,211,661.47 to December 31, 1947.

2.

NAVY AND AIR FORCE—FILM BUREAUS

Mr. FRASER:

1. Does the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force maintain film bureaus?
2. If so, how many people were employed in each of these bureaus during the year 1947?
3. How many of these people were members of the armed services?
4. How many were civilians?
5. What was the total cost of carrying on each of these bureaus during the year 1947?
6. How many films were produced by each service?
7. What were the names of these films and what were they used for?
8. Are these film bureaus connected, or affiliated with the national film bureau?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. The navy and air force do not maintain film bureaus as separate units. Co-ordination of requirements is carried out by personnel of the training branches. Procurements and distribution are effected through the supply branches in the same manner as for other technical equipment.

2. Navy: Two, part time; Air Force: two, full time; two, part time.

3. Navy: one petty officer photographer part time; Air Force: one staff officer (full (time), one leading aircraftman (full time), one corporal (part time).

4. Navy: one (part time); Air Force: one (part time).

5. Navy: $3,900; Air Force $7,175.

6. Navy: one now being edited; Air Force: none.

7. The above navy film is confidential and for service instructional purposes only.

8. No. A joint service film bureau is now being organized to cover requirements of the department.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL—ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

Mr. KIDD:

1. How many enforcement officers are employed by the foreign exchange control board?
2. Who are they?
3. What date were they appointed?
4. Where are they located?
5. What salary does each receive?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The foreign exchange control board as such does not employ any enforcement officers. Under section 12 of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, "the Bank of Canada in its capacity as fiscal agent for the government of Canada shall, without charge . . . (a) provide the board with such officers, clerks and employees . . . as may be required by the board . . .". Under section 36(1)(e) the board may "plan the organization of the board, appoint the officers, clerks and employees furnished to the board by the Bank of Canada to offices or positions under the board and authorize such officers, clerks and employees to act on behalf of the board in the conduct of its operations."

The officers so provided to the board who are engaged wholly or to a considerable extent in enforcement work for the board at the present time, the dates since which they have been engaged on this work for the foreign exchange control board, and their present locations are as follows:

Name—Date—Location

G. Bousquet, June 1, 1947, Montreal.
W. A. Cameron, Sept. 16, 1939, Montreal.
H. Cree, Oct. 29, 1947, Toronto.
N. Fergusson, Oct. 15, 1947, Ottawa.
J. R. B. Graham, July 18, 1940, Vancouver.
R. Lang, Sept. 22, 1939, Ottawa.
J. S. Lockie, Jan. 1, 1945, Windsor.
G. Longman, Sept. 23, 1947, Ottawa.
J. L. MacCallum, Sept. 24, 1945, Ottawa.
E. M. MacFarlane, April 9, 1942, Toronto.
M. Popovich, Sept. 5, 1947, Windsor.
C. A. Rowe, June 2, 1947, Ottawa.
J. E. Rowe (Miss), Sept. 22, 1947, Ottawa.
R. H. Tarr, Jan. 1, 1942, Ottawa.
F. Walsh, Oct. 30, 1947, Ottawa.

In addition, under the Foreign Exchange Control Act all customs officers and members of the R.C.M.P. are officers for the purpose of the enforcement of the act.

5. As the officers provided to the board are employees of the Bank of Canada, their salaries are not a matter of government record.

WHITEHORSE FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

When will the government build the federal building at Whitehorse, Yukon, for which plans and estimates were prepared two years ago?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Sketch plans and estimates only were prepared in 1946 for use in determining the magnitude of the project. The whole question of when projects such as this one shall be proceeded with is one that depends largely on the supply of labour and materials, which, at present, are being directed primarily to veterans' housing, and, secondly, to the expansion of industry.

The priority that is given to the construction of new public buildings is very low. The present policy is to restrict new construction to an absolute minimum and to proceed only with maintenance and repairs of existing structures. At a later date, when the aforementioned demands have been satisfied, attention will be given to the construction of new public buildings.

This is the policy that is being followed with relation to new buildings throughout the country. As the building at Whitehorse is a new project, it is felt that it should remain in the deferred class as there is no greater urgency for this particular structure than for others of a similar nature throughout the country.

R.C.A.F.—RESCUE ACTIVITIES

Mr. WINKLER:

1. In the last year, in how many rescue attempts employing aeroplanes, did the Royal Canadian Air Force participate?

2. How many were rescued?

3. Were lives lost in attempting rescue? If so, how many?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. 41 (Period 11th February, 1947, to 11th February, 1948).

2. Four persons. In addition 10 lost marine vessels (number of personnel aboard unknown) were located by R.C.A.F. aircraft.

3. No.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—"EYES ON CANADA"

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. Has the Canada Carries On release, "Eyes on Canada" been banned in the United States of America?

2. If so, on what grounds?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. No. The Canada Carries On film "Eyes on Canada" is the January release in the series. Normally the Canada Carries On films are exhibited in Canada before being exhibited in the United States. It is expected that the usual bookings for the film will be made in the United States. No ban has been placed on this film in the United States or elsewhere.

2. See answer to No. 1.

INTERNATIONAL BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. Has a copy of the international bill of rights, which was approved by the commission on human rights, at its meeting in Geneva, been received by the Canadian government?

2. Has Canada been asked for comments on this international bill of rights before it is submitted to the general assembly of the united nations?

3. Have such comments been given?

4. If so, what is the nature thereof and will parliament be given an opportunity to express itself on this matter?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I presume that this question will be dropped in view of the answer given by the Prime Minister on Friday last to an oral question put by the hon. member for Lake Centre on the orders of the day.

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, it was answered.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS, VARIOUS COUNTRIES

Mr. TIMMINS:

What was the amount of our exports and imports respectively, in the year 1947, with each of the following countries: Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Panama, El Salvador, Switzerland, U.S.S.R., United States of America and its possessions, Venezuela?

Mr. McILRAITH:

Calendar year 1947	Import (Thousands of dollars)	Export
Cuba	$ 23,751	$ 7,502
Dominican Republic	8,186	1,914
Guatemala	9,488	1,630
Haiti	227	1,366
Panama	2,107	1,882

NORMAN WELLS—WHITEHORSE PIPE LINE

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. What disposition is being made of the pipe line laid during the last world war from Norman Wells, N.W.T. to Whitehorse, Yukon?

2. What disposition is being made of the oil refinery erected at Whitehorse, Yukon, during the last world war?

3. Were said pipe and said refinery imported to Canada? If so, from where?

4. If said pipe and/or said refinery are remaining in Canada for use elsewhere than in Yukon will the purchasers or users thereof be charged customs or other duties thereon as on other foreign goods?

5. Are customs or other duties or charges being or to be charged or made to the users in British Columbia and Yukon, Canada, of piping imported and installed in British Columbia and Yukon during said last world war known as Canol project No. 2, and remaining in use there, as on foreign goods?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. The United States government sold it in October, 1947, to the L. B. Foster Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Albert and Davidson Corporation, Brooklyn, N.Y.

2. The United States government sold it, in August, 1947, to Imperial Oil Limited, Toronto.

3. Yes. The United States.

4. Under the exchange of notes of November 7 and December 30, 1946 (tabled in parliament on December 9, 1947), and at its request, the United States government was authorized to transfer ownership of these facilities without the latter being subject to import duties or excise taxes, it being considered desirable to facilitate the disposal of these facilities by the United States government as it had had to expend considerable sums in their construction.

5. The United States government has made no similar request with regard to this pipe line since it still has title to it. In the circumstances, if and when the pipe line is leased or rented by the United States government for any period to a private individual or corporation, customs duties and excise taxes will be required to be paid.

GENEVA AGREEMENTS—SHIPMENT OF CATTLE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. Into what classifications are the beef cattle which will be allowed into the United States of America from Canada under the new trade agreements, divided?

2. Which, if any, classes will be allowed into the United States through (a) public markets; (b) private sales?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Schedule XX—to the general agreement on tariffs and trade signed at Geneva on October 30, 1947, being the concessions extended by the United States provides:

Tariff Act of 1930 paragraph 701.

Cattle weighing less than 200 pounds each or 700 pounds or more each (rate of duty) 1½c per lb.

Provided, That not more than 200,000 head of cattle weighing less than 200 pounds each entered in the 12-month period beginning April 1, in any year, and not more than 400,000 head of cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each (other than cows imported specially for dairy purposes) entered in any such period, but not more than 120,000 head of such cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each entered in any 3-month period beginning April 1, July 1, October 1, or January 1 within any such 12-month period, shall be dutiable at 1½ cents per pound; and any of the foregoing cattle not subject to that rate of duty shall be dutiable at (rate of duty) 2½c per lb.

Provided further, That the preceding proviso shall be effective only upon the expiration of 30 days after the President of the United States, after termination of the unlimited national emergency proclaimed on May 26, 1941, shall have proclaimed that the abnormal situation in respect of cattle and meats has terminated.

2. At the present time no cattle for slaughter are permitted for export to the United States. It is impossible at this time to prognosticate future policy.

VETERANS LAND ACT—REPAIRS TO HOUSES—DISTRICT SUPERVISORS OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. PEARKES:

1. Is any construction or repair work being carried out by day labour upon V.L.A. projects?

2. If so, what officers of the Department of Veterans Affairs are responsible for the supervision of this work?

3. How many district supervisors of construction, and how many building inspectors are employed by the department?

4. Where are these usually located?

Mr. GREGG:

1. Yes.

2. Supervisors of construction (building inspectors) who are responsible to district supervisors of construction.

3. District supervisors of construction—9 supervisors of construction (building inspectors)—97.

4. A district supervisor of construction is located in each district office as follows: Vancouver, B.C.; Edmonton, Alta.,; Saskatoon, Sask; Winnipeg, Man.; Toronto, Ont.; London, Ont.; Ottawa, Ont.; Montreal, P.Q.; Saint John, N.B..

CANADIAN ARMY—SPECIAL PACIFIC CAMPAIGN PAY

Mr. PEARKES:

1. When was the special Pacific campaign pay authorized for the Canadian army?

2. When was it discontinued?

3. How many officers and men of the Canadian Army received this Pacific pay?

4. How many of these served in a Pacific theatre of operations?

5. How many served only in Canada or the United States when in receipt of this Pacific pay?

6. How many officers and men of the Canadian Army served in a Pacific theatre but did not receive this special pay?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. June 1, 1945, under conditions given in return to order of the House of Commons tabled on May 28, 1946, containing similar information to that now sought.

2. Entitlement automatically ceased on return of recipients to Canada.

3. Approximately 325 officers and 1,300 other ranks.

4. None.

5. (a) In Canada—none. (b) In the United States—325 officers and 1,300 other ranks. The Pacific force was undergoing special training in United States for Pacific warfare when hostilities terminated. Training was discontinued and the forces returned to Canada as soon as possible.

6. 221 officers and 2,198 other ranks, none of whom were members of the Canadian Army Pacific force. This is exclusive of the Kiska force but includes personnel who served in various capacities in the Pacific but not forming part of the Canadian Army Pacific force.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PERSONNEL IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES—MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. WINKLER:

1. By stations, what is the number of personnel of External Affairs Department at the following points: Oslo, Norway; Copenhagen, Denmark; Stockholm, Sweden; Berne, Switzerland?

2. Apart from clerks, what are the appointments?

3. Are medical officers on the permanent staff?

4. Are local medical doctors employed to examine prospective immigrants to Canada?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. Oslo, Norway, 6; Copenhagen, Denmark, 5; Stockholm, Sweden, 3; Berne, Switzerland, 7.

2. Oslo, Norway, minister; Copenhagen, Denmark, minister and foreign service officer, grade 2; Stockholm, Sweden, foreign service officer, grade 1; Berne, Switzerland, minister and foreign service officer, grade 6.

3. No.

4. Yes. Roster doctors are appointed by the mission.

OILS AND FATS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Referring to Mr. F. H. Lehberg, Oils and Fats Administrator, wartime prices and trade board, when and where was he born?

2. When did he come to Canada to stay?

3. When was he appointed Oils and Fats Administrator and on whose recommendation?

[Mr. Pearkes.]

4. Where and for whom did he work before and what was his experience (a) in oils and (b) in fats?

5. What was his education?

6. What is his salary?

7. What is his particular jurisdiction regarding the administration of oils and fats?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Mr. F. H. Lehberg was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, February 18, 1908.

2. Answered by 1.

3. Appointed administrator of oils and fats, April 1, 1945, on the recommendation of the chairman.

4. Previously employed with the Board of Grain Commissioners, Department of Trade and Commerce, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Mr. Lehberg had over ten years experience in the oils and fats field particularly with regard to technological and economic aspects.

5. NORTH RUSTICO, P.E.I., HARBOUR

Mr. McLURE:

1. How much work was done at North Rustico harbour (a) in 1946; (b) 1947, to protect the property of fishermen and federal government, and at what cost?

2. Has the cribwork been satisfactory?

3. Was the work done by contract or day's labour?

4. Will the dredging of Rustico bay be done this year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. (a) Saw-tooth and sand fence, 860 feet long at cost of $3,515.06; (b) new cribwork on beach, 750 feet long at cost of $4,220.56.

2. Cribwork has proven satisfactory.

3. Day labour.

4. Matter of dredging receiving consideration.

BANK OF CANADA—CHARLOTTETOWN BRANCH

Mr. McLURE:

1. Was the branch of the Bank of Canada transferred or withdrawn from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island? If so, for what reason?

2. Were employees of said branch guaranteed similar positions and reimbursed for transfer expenses?

3. Where are said employees now located?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. Yes. The premises which were occupied by the agency, Bank of Canada, in Charlottetown are owned by the government of Prince Edward Island. Following repeated urging from the premier of that province, the Bank of Canada felt obliged to vacate the premises, notwithstanding that, as understood by the premier, this involved the closing of the agency and the withdrawal from the province because of inability to obtain other suitable quarters.

Arrangements have been made with the Eastern Trust Company to act on behalf of the Bank of Canada in connection with transfers and exchanges of government of Canada bonds. Facilities are also provided at the Eastern Trust Company for the registration of notices of intention to give security under section 88 of the Bank Act.

2 and 3. Not of government record.

C.N.R. MONCTON SHOPS—APPRENTICES FROM P.E.I.

Mr. McLURE:

1. Has a quota been established for apprentices from Prince Edward Island to learn trades in the Canadian National Railways shops at Moncton, New Brunswick?

2. If not, when will quota be established?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:—

1. No. Under the applicable wage agreement apprentices are engaged in ratio to craftsmen in the service. Applications are received and dealt with on a regional basis, with no quota established as between provinces.

2. See answer to No. 1.

WINNIPEGOSIS, MAN., GOVERNMENT DOCK

Mr. ZAPLITNY:

1. Has any work been done so far in connection with the reconstruction of the government dock at Winnipegosis, Manitoba?
2. If so, what amount has been spent to date on this work?
3. What is the estimated total expenditure on this project?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. Yes.
2. $18,415.30.
3. $22,065.14.

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—TIMBER LIMITS

Mr. ZAPLITNY:

1. Has the federal government acquired the timber limit previously owned or leased by the Northern Trust Company within the boundaries of the Riding Mountain national park?
2. If so, at what date?
3. What remuneration or other emolument was given to the Northern Trust Company as a condition of transfer?
4. Does the Northern Trust Company own or lease a timber limit anywhere else in the Riding Mountain national park at the present time?
5. Are permits for saw-logs now being granted or sold to the general public in the area formerly leased or owned by the Northern Trust Company?
6. If so, what fee is charged for such permits?

Mr. GLEN:

1. Yes.
2. May 1, 1947.
3. None.
4. No.
5. No, this area was not included in the current year's cutting operations.
6. See answer to No. 5.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—SCHOOLS

Mr. CHURCH:

What action does the government propose to take in connection with the recommendation of the committee on Indian affairs for an increase of 17 per cent for Indian schools?

Mr. GLEN: The department has no knowledge of such a recommendation having been made by the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs. Some time ago the churches operating residential schools asked the department to increase the per capita grants to take care of the increased cost of living. This request is now being considered by the government and it is expected that a decision will be reached shortly.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Mr. HAMEL:

1. Since September 1, 1947, how many ambassadors or diplomatic representatives have been appointed by the government of Canada?
2. On what date and to what position was each one appointed?
3. By whom were the credentials signed in each case?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:

1. Four.

2. Mr. E. J. Garland, September 11, 1947, as Canadian minister in Norway.

Mr. Emile Vaillancourt, December 30, 1947, as Canadian minister in Yugoslavia.

Mr. J. A. Strong, January 26, 1948, as special Canadian ambassador to the inauguration of the President of Venezuela.

Mr. Charles P. Hebert, February, 3, 1948, as Canadian minister in Cuba.

3. In each case, by His Majesty the King.

IMMIGRATION—DISPLACED PERSONS—MINING

Mr. HERRIDGE:

1. How many displaced persons have been brought to Canada to engage in mining work?
2. Of these, how many were found medically unfit upon examination at place of employment?
3. What provision is made by the government for further medical aid to such persons and placing them in suitable employment?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. 727.

2 and 3. Ten were found to be unsuitable for employment in mines; nine have been placed in other employment in co-operation with the national employment service; one is in hospital for observation under arrangements made by the Department of Labour.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—INVESTIGATIONS BY R.C.M.P.

Mr. KNOWLES:

1. Are recipients of unemployment insurance benefits subject to investigation while drawing the same?
2. If so, what personnel are used for the making of any such investigations?
3. Are any such investigations made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? If so, on what authority?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. Yes.

2. Personnel of the regional and local offices of the unemployment insurance commission in all parts of Canada and by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, when so requested by the unemployment insurance commission in certain remote areas of Ontario and the prairie provinces within the unemployment insurance commission's prairie regional division.

3. Answered by No. 2.

MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCTION—BUCKETS

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. Since 1936, has the government of Canada paid any sums of money or subsidies to the government of the province of Quebec in order to enable maple syrup producers to change tin buckets for aluminium buckets?

2. If so, what amounts have been contributed in each of the years 1936 to 1947 inclusive?

Mr. McCUBBIN:

1. Yes.

2. Fiscal year	Amount contributed
1936-37	Nil
1937-38	Nil
1938-39	Nil
1939-40	Nil

YOUTH ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—QUEBEC ARTS AND CRAFTS SCHOOLS

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. Has the government of Canada paid, in the province of Quebec, any sums of money for the building of arts and crafts schools, under the youth assistance program, during 1945, 1946 and 1947?

2. If so, how many projects have been submitted, what were such projects and what federal contribution did each one involve?

3. For what projects has the government of Canada now paid the contribution promised?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. Yes. Under Vocational Schools Assistance Agreement.

2 and 3. The following projects have been submitted and approved from April 1, 1945 to February 16, 1948. The amount of dominion contribution and the actual payments towards such contributions made are shown opposite each school.

SHIPMENT OF FOOD TO BRITAIN—GOVERNMENT BOARDS

Mr. CHARLTON:

1. What government boards are engaged in directing and/or sending Canadian food products to Britain?

2. What are the names and occupations of the members of the different boards?

Mr. McCUBBIN:

1. Dairy Products Board, Meat Board, Special Products Board.

2. Dairy Products Board—

J. F. Singleton, Associate Director of Marketing Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa (Chairman).

John Freeman, Exporter, Montreal, Quebec.

J. F. Desmarais, Producer, Iberville, Quebec.

Meat Board—

L. W. Pearsall, Associate Director, Marketing Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa (Chairman).

S. E. Todd, Managing Director, Industrial and Development Council of Canadian Meat Packers, Toronto, Ontario.

Dr. F. H. Auld, Retired Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Saskatchewan Government, Regina, Saskatchewan.

J. A. Proulx, Farmer and Employee of Canadian Farm Loan Board, Quebec, P.Q.

W. E. Tummon, Secretary, Ontario Hog Producers Marketing Board, Toronto, Ontario.

F. F. Baird, Marketing Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ontario (Secretary-Manager).

Special Products Board—

A. M. Shaw, Director of Marketing Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa (Chairman).

R. S. Hamer, Director of Production Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

W. F. Bull, Director, Export Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

R. W. Neely, Assistant to the Director of Marketing Service, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa (Secretary).

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Mr. HANSELL:

1. What disposition is made of the unemployment insurance fund?

2. Are these moneys deposited with the chartered banks?

3. Is any of this money invested and if so, what investments are involved?

4. Is any of this money used for any purpose other than benefits and administration of the act and if so, for what purposes?

[Mr. Cote (Verdun).]

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. The unemployment insurance fund is used for the payment of unemployment insurance benefits and any moneys in excess of the current requirements for that purpose are invested in dominion government securities.

2. Moneys received as contributions to the unemployment insurance fund are not deposited with the chartered banks. However, deposits of funds from the unemployment insurance fund are maintained in certain chartered banks throughout the country to redeem benefit warrants issued in the payment of unemployment insurance benefits and to facilitate the payment of these benefits by cash vouchers in certain designated offices.

3. All moneys in the unemployment insurance fund over and above the immediate requirements for the payment of unemployment insurance benefits are invested in securities of the government of Canada.

4. The wording of this question is actually not in accordance with the conditions in that no money is taken from the unemployment insurance fund to cover the cost of administering the act. The only purposes, other than for the payment of unemployment insurance benefits, for which these funds are used are to provide for the refunds of contributions made in error to the fund and to provide expenses in connection with the pledging of securities or advances to the fund as outlined in section 79 of the act.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SHIPMENT OF FOOD TO BRITAIN

Mr. CHARLTON:

1. What Canadian foodstuffs in the raw or processed state are under agreement of sale to Great Britain?

2. Are these foodstuffs shipped by private interests or by government boards?

3. If by boards, which foodstuff is shipped by each board?

4. What was the amount of the agreement for each product in each of the years for which the agreements were made?

5. What was the dollar value and quantity shipped of each product to Great Britain during each of the years for which agreements were made?

6. Are the proceeds obtained from Britain for these commodities collected by the boards?

7. If so, has any surplus of these proceeds accumulated in the hands of the boards?

8. How much for each commodity?

9. Will it be distributed among the producers?

MINERAL CLAIMS IN YUKON—SURVEYING

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Has the Minister of Mines and Resources authorized or instructed any official of his department, and if so, what official, to instruct the mining recorders in Yukon territory to notify the owners of recorded, unsurveyed mineral claims in Yukon territory that they must have said claims surveyed by a dominion land surveyor within one year from the date upon which such notification by the minister to do so may be sent to them?
2. How many recorded, unsurveyed mineral claims are there in Yukon territory?
3. How many dominion land surveyors are there residing and practising their profession in Yukon territory?
4. How many dominion land surveyors are there in Canada?
5. How many dominion land surveyors are available in Canada to survey said mineral claims within one year from the date of such notification by the minister?
6. During how many months in each year is it practical to survey mineral claims in Yukon territory?
7. How long does the minister expect it will take to have all of such mineral claims surveyed by the dominion land surveyors?
8. Have the same or similar instructions been sent to the mining recorders in the northwest territories?
9. If such surveys are not made, and if the returns of such surveys are not received and approved by the surveyor general within one year from the date of such notification, are the entries granted for such mineral claims subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the minister?

VETERANS LAND ACT—KOOTENAY WEST

Mr. HERRIDGE:

1. Under the Veterans Land Act, in the federal riding of Kootenay West, what has been the (a) number of loans made to veterans for the purchase of farms; (b) total amount of such loans for the purchase of farms; (c) number of loans to veterans for the purchase of small holdings; (d) total amount of such loans for the purchase of small holdings; (e) number of grants made to veterans settling on provincial land; (f) total amount of such grants made to veterans settled on provincial land?
2. What are the names of employees administering Veterans Land Act in Kootenay West in 1947, and what were the salaries, duties and expenses of each employee?
3. What amount was paid for rent of premises, and to whom, in 1947?

Mr. TUCKER: The records under the Veterans Land Act are not yet prepared by constituencies, and to give an answer to this question on that basis would require a tremendous amount of work. It is possible to give an answer for the sub-district of Vancouver which has its office in Nelson. I have spoken to the hon. member and he is satisfied to have the answer on that basis. Subject to that modification, the question might be passed as an order for a return.

YOUTH TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Has the government made any contributions in the nature of scholarships, bursaries, prizes or similar payments out of appropriations for its youth training program or from any other source to or on behalf of students attending universities or other institutions of training in the province of Quebec?
2. If so, what amounts and to what persons or on behalf of what persons in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947?
3. From which government appropriations were such payments made?

CIVIL SERVICE—TEMPORARY APPOINTMENTS

Mr. FULTON:

1. What is the total number of positions for which employment has been authorized or approved by the civil service commission on a temporary basis in each of the fiscal years, 1945, 1946, and 1947 to date?
2. What is the total of yearly salaries which would be paid in each full fiscal year as a result of these appointments?
3. How many of the appointments thus approved (a) have since been made permanent; (b) continued on a temporary basis; (c) discontinued and the service of the appointees dispensed with?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

TRANSPORT OF FREIGHT CARS, TRUCKS AND AUTOMOBILES BETWEEN BORDEN AND TORMENTINE

Mr. MacNAUGHT:

1. By months, in 1945, 1946 and 1947, how many (a) freight cars; (b) trucks; (c) automobiles, were transported from (1) Borden, Prince Edward Island to Tormentine, New Brunswick; (2) Tormentine, New Brunswick to Borden, Prince Edward Island?
2. What was the nature of the contents of the freight cars?
3. What were the total charges, by months, during the above-mentioned years on (a) freight cars; (b) trucks; (c) automobiles?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Return tabled.

BAGOTVILLE, QUE., AIRPORT

Mr. GAGNON:

1. What was the cost of the Bagotville airport, in the county of Chicoutimi, Quebec, including buildings, landing fields, etc.?
2. Has this airport been declared surplus assets?
3. If so, has the government disposed of it?
4. To whom?
5. At what price?
6. Were tenders invited?
7. If so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender?

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—PHOTOGRAPHS

Mr. FRASER:

1. Does the national film board employ a special staff for the taking and making of stills, (photographs)?

2. If so, how many are so employed?
3. What are the names of these people so employed?
4. How many stills were made in the year 1947?
5. Were any of these stills sold in 1947?
6. If so, how many were sold and at what price per print were these stills sold?
7. What was the size of prints in each case and state if black and white or coloured?
8. What was the total receipt from sale of stills in 1947?
9. What is estimated cost of taking, processing material, time, travel and other expenses in taking these stills during 1947?

Mr. WINTERS: Return tabled.

WAR ASSETS—MOTION PICTURE EQUIPMENT

Mr. HANSELL:

1. Did the government purchase any motion picture equipment during the war years for the purpose of war services, entertainment, etc.?
2. If so, what was the total expenditure on this equipment?
3. Has this equipment been disposed of and through what channel?
4. Were any war service organizations given any financial assistance for the purchase of such equipment and if so, what organizations, and what were the amounts of assistance given to each?

GRANTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. HAMEL:

What amounts were paid in subsidies, grants or otherwise to each of the provincial governments during the years 1946-47 and 1947-48, by the government of Canada?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER NORTH SHORE TELEGRAPH LINE

Mr. DORION:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons, during the last twelve months, regarding the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Return tabled.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE FOR DAUPHIN, MAN., JUDICIAL DISTRICT

Mr. ZAPLITNY:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Justice and any person or persons since January 1, 1947, regarding the appointment of a judge for the judicial district of Dauphin, Manitoba?

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the hon. gentleman wish to proceed with this? I wish he would allow it to stand. I do not think there are any letters at all except letters to the minister, and such letters have always been regarded as privileged in regard to judicial appointments. This appointment has already been made, and I thought the hon. member would drop the motion.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If the minister is not prepared to decide whether the letters should be brought down, I would ask that the motion stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stand.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE—APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF PURCHASES

Mr. FRASER:

For a copy of order in council under date of November 27, 1947, appointing W. D. Lowe to the position of director of purchases in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. McILRAITH: Return tabled.

REPORTS ON TRIBAL DESTROYERS

Mr. LENNARD:

For a copy of the reports on tribal destroyers submitted to the Department of National Defence in 1947 by the following officers: Lieutenant Timbrell, R.C.N.; Surgeon Lt. Robinson, R.C.N.; Rev. J. L. Graham, chaplain (P) R.C.N.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The motion calls for the production of reports made by three officers of the naval reserve after their service at sea. These reports are made by the officers concerned in the normal routine in the execution of their duties and are considered confidential. I have explained the situation to the hon. member and he has agreed to withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE OR CAUSEWAY

Mr. GILLIS:

For a copy of all correspondence, engineering reports, estimates of costs and other documents, from January 1, 1945 to date, related to the project, bridging or building a causeway over the straits of Canso, between Cape Breton island and the mainland of Nova Scotia.

SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS—COST-OF-LIVING BONUS

Mr. KNOWLES:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and memoranda exchanged between any organization representing superannuated federal civil servants and any cabinet minister or departmental official dated since January 1, 1947, with reference to a cost-of-living bonus or other supplement for retired federal civil servants.

SUSSEX MILITARY HOSPITAL

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, and other documents exchanged between the Department of Veterans Affairs, Ottawa, and any officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs in the province of New Brunswick, or any other person or persons during the past two years, regarding the closing of Sussex Military Hospital, and accommodation of veterans in Lancaster Veterans hospital, Saint John, New Brunswick.

Mr. GREGG: I have no objection to the hon. member's motion, with the proviso that documents exchanged between the Department of Veterans Affairs, Ottawa, and officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs in the province of New Brunswick shall not be disclosed. I am prepared to have the motion passed on that basis. I have spoken to the hon. member.

HONG KONG—EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE DUFF COMMISSION

Mr. BRACKEN:

For a copy of the evidence taken before the Duff commission in connection with dispatching Canadian armed forces to Hong Kong.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am informed that the evidence taken before the Duff commission in connection with dispatching Canadian armed forces to Hong Kong includes communications received through and from the British government, and that at the time they were received the United Kingdom made the information available only after the Canadian government had given an undertaking that it would not be published in any form even by the commissioner himself. The United Kingdom government has been asked whether it still objects to the publication of that information. We have not yet received a reply from the United Kingdom government. The government has been informed that we are anxious to receive a reply that I may inform the house of the exact position. I hope meanwhile the motion will be allowed to stand.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I make an observation in view of the Prime Minister's statement? I would suggest to the Prime Minister that this is allied in a sense to the letter, which is also under consideration, between the two governments. What I would like the Prime Minister to do, if he sees fit, is to give some indication to the British government that this government wants this evidence and this letter tabled. It is one thing to suggest to the British government that we do not care about it—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: —and it is another thing to indicate the desire of this government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: Oh, well—

An hon. MEMBER: You are out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member knows he cannot make a speech on the motion.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, am I to be denied the right to make some observations, in view of the Prime Minister's remarks? This is a most important and vital matter to people throughout Canada and I am not going to allow anyone over there to howl me down. I will allow you, sir,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, so long as—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. GRAYDON: So long as this noise is going on over there I will stand where I am. I am not going to sit down while they shout over there.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I will sit down when you people keep quiet over there.

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that these motions are not debatable.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, you allowed the Prime Minister to make an observation, and I was making one in return; I think I certainly ought to have that right. After all, if I may so suggest, Mr. Speaker, we ought to have this government say to the British government that they want these things tabled. It is not enough—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member knows the rules very well and he knows that these motions are not debatable. I thought it was his intention merely to ask a question of the Prime Minister. I cannot permit him to make a statement.

Mr. GRAYDON: I shall not make a statement now, but I have a right—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I have a right to call for a vote on this notice to produce.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion No. 11 was called and the Prime Minister said "stand", so that the motion is not before the house.

Mr. GRAYDON: Certainly the motion is before the house. The Prime Minister cannot determine what is going to happen to a motion. The house has to determine what will happen to it, and I am going to ask that this be put to the vote of parliament, because the British government ought to know at least that there are some people in this parliament who want this evidence tabled.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAYDON: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, neither the Prime Minister nor anyone else in this house has a right to say whether a motion of this kind shall stand or not. It is for the house and for you to determine, Mr. Speaker, not the Prime Minister.

An hon. MEMBER: Appeal.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, all I asked was if the house would allow the motion to stand, because I had not been able as yet to obtain a reply from the British government as to whether they would remove the objection they had, for reasons of their own, to the tabling of the evidence. I do not know what their reasons are.

An hon. MEMBER: Wartime secrecy.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am stating to the house the facts. The United Kingdom government gave certain evidence to the commission which the United Kingdom government asked that the commission itself should not make public. It was not this government that made that request. It was the government of the United Kingdom. They gave certain evidence to the commission and asked that the commissioner himself should not make it public. I maintain that particular evidence cannot be brought down until the British government themselves say whether they are agreeable that it shall be brought down, because it was given to the commission only on the understanding that it would not be made public. There are other things besides the Drew letter. As a matter of fact the Drew letter is not in the evidence.

Mr. GRAYDON: I did not suggest that it was.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is entirely a matter for the British government. Certain parts of evidence they did not wish to have disclosed. I certainly do not think that this House of Commons would ask the British government to disclose information which they themselves gave to us on the condition that it would not be disclosed, unless the British government itself is willing to remove that condition.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Prime Minister if he has suggested to the British government that this government wants this information brought down and placed on the table of the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the messages I have sent to the British government I said there has been a request for this information, that we wished to be in a position to table the information but before doing so we wished to know whether the government would remove the objection it had to its disclosure.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Prime Minister when it is expected there will be a return from the British government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish I could answer my hon. friend's question but I cannot. I have sent a couple of cables. Within the last few days the Canadian high commissioner has been here from London. Since he has been here I have asked him if he would again communicate with the British government and say that we were anxious to receive a reply. He has done that, but thus far the reply has not come.

Mr. ROWE: In view of the fact that Colonel Drew's letter—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROWE: I am not going to sit down until there is order on the other side.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: I have just as much respect for you as any other hon. member, Mr. Speaker, but until those on the other side stop yelling I will not sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat.

ST. MAURICE RIVER—FLOATING OF TIMBER

Mr. HAMEL:

For a copy of all contracts, agreements or leases concluded between the government of Canada, or any board or agency thereof, and the St. Maurice River Boom and Driving Company, from 1900 to date, with regard to the floating of timber on the St. Maurice river, in the province of Quebec.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES—INFORMATION FURNISHED TO MAYORS OF MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. HAMEL:

For a copy, in English and in French, of the information sent by the government of Canada, or any department, board or corporation thereof, on October 10, 1947, to the mayors of municipalities with a population of 5,000 or more, regarding the construction of houses.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT—QUESTION OF REFERENCE TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Might I give a reply to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) to a question he asked me on Monday, to which I said I would give him a reply a little later on. The question was whether it was the intention of the government to send to the special committee on veterans affairs the bill to amend the Pension Act. On consideration, the government feels that a decision on this point should be postponed until the bill has been introduced and has received second reading. The government is as anxious as other hon. members to get this legislation through all stages as quickly as possible, so that there will be no undue delay in making the retroactive payments to pensioners. It may well be that once the bill has received second reading, it will be the general feeling of the house that the interests of all would best be served by considering the bill in committee of the whole. In any event, the decision will be left until that stage is reached.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO ULTIMATUM GIVEN TO VETERANS AT VILLE ST. LAURENT

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I wish to reply to a question asked at the last sitting by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). It concerns veterans occupying some four hundred housing units in Ville St. Laurent in Montreal. I might point out that this is not a veterans project. It was built during the war to house munitions workers, and if there are any veterans in the project they have moved in to occupy the vacancies which have occurred since the war.

Mr. FULTON: There is a large number of them there now.

Mr. HOWE: The number is not very large. I have the number. There are not many.

On June 13 last an agreement was reached with the municipal officials concerned that the four hundred wartime housing units situated partly in Montreal and partly in Ville St. Laurent, and known as the Cartierville project, would be made available for sale to tenants. Prices ranging from $2,900 to $3,725, depending upon the size of the housing unit, were then established by the corporation. These prices include the cost of permanent concrete foundations which will be installed after sale.

The terms of sale are adjusted so that the monthly purchase instalment approximates the monthly rental that he has been paying. To date, sixty-two sales to tenants have been made or are in the process of completion.

It has been suggested that tenants have been told that unless they buy the houses they will be forced to vacate. This is not quite the case. If the tenant is unwilling to purchase the house, he may remain as a tenant, either in that particular house or in another house in the same project. In some cases, individuals in the project are anxious to buy certain houses, and exchanges are effected to look after the wishes of the purchaser by offering comparable accommodation to the tenant.

A committee of the tenants of the Cartierville project is today meeting with officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Montreal.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, February 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. A. Dion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): When the house adjourned on Friday last I was dealing with the position in which agriculture found itself in Canada today, and I may say it is a precarious one. There is a constant rise in the cost of production of agricultural products, and most of the major agricultural products are under what amount to price ceilings; therefore agriculture's share of the net income is being reduced. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has noted this and has stated that the protection which agriculture has is under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. As a matter of fact in a previous debate he said, as reported at page 807 of Hansard of the present session:

> The policy which protects the consumer is sound because we have said in the prices support legislation that if the time ever comes when the bottom falls out of prices we will tax every taxpayer in this country to help to the extent provided in the Agricultural Prices Support Act, that is $200 million, to maintain the price levels.

I was pointing out that in my opinion, under the Agricultural Prices Support Act as it exists at the present time that protection is not there. I have a copy of the act before me. It states that it is an act for the support of the prices of agricultural products during the transition from war to peace. No one knows just when that period may end. In all probability the greatest drop in agricultural prices will come at a time when that transition period is over.

Section 9 of the act, which is the operative section, states:

> In prescribing prices under paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection 1 of this section, the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

The whole thing is based on the assumption that agricultural prices will be supported during the transitional period. Further, in the act there is nothing to say how the government will determine what the proper floor prices of agricultural prices should be. I draw the attention of the house to the fact that this bill was introduced in 1944 at a session immediately preceding an election. In my opinion it was mainly a bill brought in by the government with the idea of fighting an election.

The bill is in very general terms. There is nothing in it to indicate what fair prices may be, or how they will be determined. Before the bill was introduced the minister stated that three factors would be taken into consideration in determining these prices. First, he said, there was the fact that agriculture had come through a long period in the thirties during which time it had suffered terrific losses. Secondly he said that agricultural prices fixed in the fall of 1941 were below the cost of production, and that agriculture had taken a loss during the first two years of the war. Then he said that consideration would be given to the cost of production. If those three considerations were taken into account, certainly we would have fair floor prices under agricultural products.

Under this act, however, a board was set up to find out for the government what those prices should be. The chairman of that board has made certain statements with regard to floor prices. If the statements appearing in the press are correct, his interpretation of the factors to be taken into consideration in determining floor prices is entirely different from that of the Minister of Agriculture. As a matter of fact if his statement as reported in the press is correct, one of the major considerations in his opinion was that no floor price should be fixed at a level which would encourage production of that commodity, or that floor prices must be fixed at a level which would discourage production of a particular product. If that is to be the factor which is to determine floor prices, then I cannot see that this act is much of a guarantee so far as agriculture is concerned. So far as I know, it has been used only in one instance, and that was in connection with fixing a floor price for potatoes in the fall of 1946. The floor price set at that time was at a level which indicated that the method suggested by the chairman of the board was used to establish the price, rather than the method suggested by the Minister of Agriculture.

I suggest therefore that at this session one of the things we should do is to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act. We should place in the act some formula which would determine the manner in which floor prices under agricultural products shall be determined.

In the United States in fixing their floor prices they use a formula. We in Canada have no formula; it simply is a matter for the government or the board to determine. If the same thing should happen in the Department of Agriculture as we understand has happened in the Department of Finance, then we might have a condition similar to that which arose in connection with price controls. We had a minister of finance who believed in price control and who built up an orderly decontrol policy. But when the time came to operate that decontrol policy, certain influences within the government or throughout the country were able to see that we had a new minister of finance who had not the same ideas with regard to decontrol in Canada. The result was that instead of orderly decontrol we got disorderly decontrol. At the very time we needed floor prices under agricultural products, the present Minister of Agriculture might be the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and we might have an entirely different point of view in the Department of Agriculture as to what should be the determining factors in setting floor prices under agricultural products.

I suggest that if agriculture is to operate with any degree of certainty, or if it is to go ahead and produce with some degree of security, certainly we should have in the act a provision such as I have suggested. We should have a definite formula which would be used in determining floor prices.

More than that, I do not think that this act can operate successfully in Canada until we have commodity marketing boards handling the major agricultural products. It would be very difficult to place floor prices under agricultural products, and to operate a floor prices policy successfully until agriculture itself is properly organized to assist the government in that legislation. And until we have agriculture organized on that basis I think it is going to be very difficult for the government to implement the Agricultural Prices Support Act. That is why we in this group have urged that we should have in Canada a dominion natural products marketing act under which agricultural products could be marketed. This group has urged on numerous occasions that that be done. In fact one of the first speeches I made in the house was to that effect. We should have a measure of that kind under which we could have cohesion among the different agricultural products marketing acts in the provinces. In that way the Agricultural Prices Support Act could be much more effective. The government has never seen fit to introduce any such measure, although it has been sought by all the major agricultural organizations.

I think the Minister of Agriculture is beginning to view the matter somewhat more sympathetically than he has in the past. I should hope that, at this session, either the present Agricultural Products Marketing Act might be amended so as to make it much broader in application, or a new act might be brought in which would enable agriculture to become more fully organized in the marketing of its various products. The present Agricultural Products Marketing Act is being carried on as an emergency measure and only by renewal from time to time. At the present time it is effective only until March 31 of this year. At that time we will have to renew it if we wish to carry it on for another year. That is not a very satisfactory situation. It is not satisfactory legislation to be used as a basis for our long-term contracts with Great Britain. Surely an act which we have to extend from month to month or from year to year is not sufficient for that purpose. We should have a natural products marketing act as a permanent measure on our statute book, under which our whole marketing system could be built up on a permanent basis. Until that is done agriculture is not going to be in a favourable position.

I should like now to deal briefly with the matter of coarse grains. I am not going to go over the whole story of the decontrol of coarse grain prices, the raising of the ceilings, or the placing of coarse grains on the Winnipeg grain exchange at a certain time. I do wish to point out however that the minister has said at various times in the house that our whole agricultural program in Canada, as applied to dairy and livestock products, is based on our ability to produce coarse grains. He has said that if we do not produce those necessary feeds our dairy and livestock production will go down. The minister is perfectly right when he says that. The whole basis of our dairy and livestock production rests on our ability to produce in Canada the necessary feeds. May I set out the position as it is today? We have today under our British contract for 1948 a guaranteed wheat price of $2 a bushel. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) announced a guaranteed price of six cents a pound for rapeseed. Last year we had a guaranteed price of $5 a bushel for flax, with an additional 50 cents, bringing the total up to $5.50. We do not know whether that is to be continued for another year, but if one may judge by the guaranteed price on rapeseed, the price will be about that on flax.

On the other hand coarse grains are on the Winnipeg grain exchange and the prices fluctuate from day to day. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to consider this question: Does he expect that western farmers will sow coarse grains when they have a guaranteed price for their wheat, flax, rape seed and other grains? The western farmer, I say, is more likely to sow those crops on which he knows the prices than to sow crops of the future prices of which he has no knowledge. One of the things that must be done at this session is to take coarse grains out of the speculative market and place them under the wheat board—and it is indicated in a resolution that that may take place. If they are placed under the wheat board, at the same time they should be taken out of the speculative market and fair prices established in relation to the prices of other grains produced in western Canada. Unless this is done we will not have the production of coarse grains that is necessary to give us the required quantity of dairy produce and meats. It is impossible to bring about the necessary increase in production in any other way.

This means that we have to take coarse grains off the Winnipeg grain exchange. Some time ago the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) made his annual speech in the house in support of the Winnipeg grain exchange. I disagreed with the hon. member, as I believe did many other hon. members. He offered some good arguments, but in my opinion he also offered some very poor ones. He admitted there were only three groups of people who needed the Winnipeg grain exchange legitimately in their business—that is, in their business as it is being carried on under our present system. Those were the farmers, the grain handling firms, and the millers. He also admitted these people could not use the Winnipeg grain exchange unless there was a speculator there to buy their hedges, and admitted that if the speculator went off that market the market would of necessity collapse.

I do not think that in Canada three of our major groups—farmers, millers and grain handling firms should be at the mercy of a bunch of speculators on the Winnipeg grain exchange. Surely we can devise intelligently some other means of handling our grain. But he made much of the argument that the co-operative organizations of western Canada, which handled more than fifty per cent of our western grain, use the Winnipeg grain exchange and have been using it for years. He said that they have seats on the exchange, and have their men on the floor. That is perfectly true.

Co-operatives in western Canada, operating under our present system, must of necessity use the Winnipeg grain exchange, either themselves or through the medium of a commission firm. It is much more intelligent for them to use their own people on the exchange than to have commission firms doing their business for them. But the hon. member for Calgary West did not say that the men who have headed those organizations for twenty-five years, who came up through farm organizations—first through their local pool committees, then as delegates and then as directors—were unanimous in saying that to use the Winnipeg grain exchange was not the best manner in which to handle our western grain.

I like the hon. member for Calgary West. He admitted that his only experience with the Winnipeg grain exchange was when a few years ago he took a flier on the exchange and lost a couple of thousand dollars. Yet the hon. member advised the house that we should continue the Winnipeg grain exchange. I would rather take the advice of the directors of our pools who have had twenty-five years' experience, who have bought and sold many millions of bushels on the exchange, and who are satisfied that it is not necessary for the successful marketing of our western grain. I say we should close the Winnipeg grain exchange, and that our grain should be marketed through the wheat board. If our coarse grains are to be marketed through some organization, then that organization should be either the wheat board or some other board set up by the government to do for coarse grains what the wheat board is doing for wheat.

[Mr. Wright.]

I should deal for a few moments with the question of seed grains. I am receiving letters from the west stating that there is a shortage of seed grain in western Canada—I am referring to registered and certified seed. There was more confusion last November in western Canada in connection with seed grains than there was over the matter of coarse grains—at least that was the condition in the part of the west in which I live, where we produce perhaps the greatest amount of seed grain.

We had been exporting our seed grain during 1946 under quota permits. In November the method of exporting under quota permits was changed to a blanket quota system whereby our exports of seed grain were increased tremendously. Some time in August we found in western Canada that the seed grain handling firms out there were sending men through the province in an effort to get contracts with farmers who were growing certified and registered seed. Apparently these men who were sent out had a list of names of all the certified and registered seed producers in western Canada. The result was that a tremendous amount of seed grain in western Canada was signed up under contracts at a price of approximately $2 a bushel. The farmers did not know at that time that the wheat contract price for 1948 was going to be $2 a bushel. They did not have the information the government had that there was going to be a tremendous demand from Europe for seed grain, a demand which was out of all proportion to demands in other years. For instance, I believe Switzerland placed an order in Canada for 10,000 metric tons of seed wheat, something that was unheard of formerly because Switzerland normally sows fall wheat. But because of conditions over there, they found that their fall wheat crop was a failure and that this year they were going to have to sow spring wheat, with the result that they placed orders in Canada.

I do not know whether these seed firms had prior information on this matter, but I do know it was mighty strange that these people proceeded to divide up western Canada and went out to get contracts from the farmers. As I said, they succeeded in getting contracts for hundreds of thousands of bushels of our certified seed wheat at about $2 a bushel.

Mr. HOWE: Was that seed grain exported outside the wheat board?

Mr. WRIGHT: Outside the wheat pool?

Mr. HOWE: Outside the wheat board.

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes, absolutely outside the wheat board. The wheat board do not handle seed grain.

Mr. HOWE: Then an export permit would be required, would it not?

Mr. WRIGHT: As I said, the wheat board do not handle permits on exports of seed grain, as I understand. This permit system was changed on November 10, if my information is correct.

Mr. HOWE: I would be very much surprised if export permits for seed grain are issued without the advice of the wheat board. That was the reason for my question. I intend to look into the matter in the department.

Mr. WRIGHT: I thank the minister for that. I certainly think it needs looking into. These firms signed up thousands of acres of this grain, some of it before it was cut and some afterwards, at $2 a bushel. Then the quotas were changed, and immediately these same farmers began to get letters from other firms offering as much as $3.65 a bushel for their seed grain. I think the government made a serious mistake. They should have notified the farmers of western Canada through the press that they were going to change the quota system and that there was a demand for seed grain. But apparently certain groups of people had this information long before the farmers, and made a nice profit out of it.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not want that statement to go out unchallenged. As a matter of fact, there was no discussion with anybody as to what the prices would be for 1948 until weeks after the date mentioned by the hon. member. Discussions did take place after I went to Britain at a much later date than that.

Mr. WRIGHT: What date was that?

Mr. GARDINER: Toward October.

Mr. WRIGHT: Then these people were doing a lot of good guessing, and from the information I have they held meetings at which they discussed the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: They were listening to the grain exchange and not to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WRIGHT: For once they made some money, if that was the case, but the farmers of western Canada lost thousands of dollars on their seed grain. This seed grain is now going into the export market and there is not enough certified and registered seed grain to supply our own western market. I suggest that the government made a mistake in allowing that to take place. There is certainly room for an investigation of what took place with respect to seed grain in western Canada this year.

I said at the beginning that the farmers were alarmed at the rising costs of production. Today three things largely determine the cost of production of agricultural products. These are farm machinery, gas and oil, and fertilizer. They are the three largest items that enter into our cost of production.

We have had a lot of talk about prices of farm machinery. A committee of this house inquired into farm machinery prices in 1937. I have here the evidence taken and the committee's recommendations and I may say that this is why we were suspicious of the effectiveness of the present committee inquiring into prices. We wonder if we shall not get the same results that we got from the farm machinery inquiry. That committee did at least make recommendations; the present prices committee cannot even go that far. I wish to quote a few of the recommendations of the committee on farm implement prices:

(4) That the companies engaged in the industry, over the period of their operations as a whole, have made substantial profits on the capital invested in each company.

(11) That freight rate increases have contributed to the increase in the price of farm implements.

(12) That the matter of freight rates is of vital importance to the provinces more distant from the manufacturing centres and this is emphasized by the fact that the three prairie provinces absorb at least two-thirds of all farm implements sold in Canada.

Certainly no action has been taken on that last recommendation. Indeed, the indications are that there may be another increase in freight rates, and there has been no indication from the government that if a freight rate increase is granted to the railways it will not apply to farm implements. Other recommendations of that committee were:

(16) That it is the opinion of the committee that the cost of cream separators to the consumers should be reduced and with that end in view recommends that this item be placed on the free list.

Cream separators were placed on the free list and the price went up. Another recommendation was:

(17) That reduction in the tariff should and does, in the long run, tend to lower the price level to the farmer, depending on the extent of free price competition in the industry.

I call to the attention of the house that last statement, "depending on the extent of free price competition in the industry". We have no tariff on farm implements now; yet prices have constantly risen ever since that time.

(19) That the provisions of the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff Act affecting the importation of farm implements should be clarified and simplified.

That is just as necessary today as it was then. The present customs tariff schedule on farm implements is antiquated. You can bring in an old cradle for cradling grain, but some of our newer implements in agriculture still have to pay duty. I had an experience of that last fall going home from the session. I went through the United States and bought for $108 a small gasoline engine such as is used on almost every farm. When I came to the customs officer at the border I went in to clear what I had. I thought I could bring in $100 worth of goods free anyway, and I told them I had a small gasoline motor. The customs officer asked, "Is it to be used in a pleasure boat?" Very foolishly I said, "No, I am going to use it on the farm". He said that if I had not mentioned that it was for use on the farm but in a pleasure boat it would have come in free. As it was, I had to pay a tax of 25 per cent plus 8 per cent sales tax, and it cost me $42 to get it across the border. Our tariff schedules certainly need revision.

Other recommendations of the committee were:

(21) That these regulations have resulted directly and indirectly in the retention in the United States of profits arising out of the operations in Canada of certain United States companies and that these profits have been subjected to income tax in the United States instead of in Canada.

I suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce look into that matter.

(24) That the companies should encourage the further standardization of replacement parts in the same implements manufactured by different companies and in addition standardization of the implements themselves.

Nothing has been done with respect to standardization. If anything, the position is worse today than it was then.

(28) That the profit to the farm implement companies on the sale of replacement parts is excessive and the price of these to the consumer should be materially reduced.

As a matter of fact, their profits have increased instead of being reduced:

(30) That over the period 1891 to 1936 retail prices of farm implements have been maintained at too high a level as shown by the financial returns to the companies engaged in the industry, during that period.

There is conclusive evidence that there was need for action then; yet no action was taken at all. At that time we had a Liberal government in the province of Saskatchewan which realized that no action was being taken; so the legislature set up a special committee to inquire into farm implement prices, and that committee in due course tabled its report in the legislature. I quote from this report:

Early in 1936, the companies announced an increase of price in farm implements amounting to 4·4 per cent as found by the Ottawa committee. It was this particular increase announced after a substantial reduction in the tariff from 25 per cent to 12½ per cent that gave rise to the Ottawa inquiry. Despite a further reduction in the tariff to 7½ per cent and despite the findings of the Ottawa committee that this increase was not justified, that the prices of farm implements had been, over the years 1913-1936, too high, despite, too, a definite finding that there was an excessive mark up over cost on cream separators and repair parts and that the prices of these should be particularly and substantially reduced, this committee finds that none of these findings were given effect to and that in addition further price increases occurred in 1937.

Later in the report the committee made recommendations, and I draw recommendation No. 2 to the minister's attention:

That the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act of the dominion appear to have been violated by the major companies in the industry and consideration should be given to instituting proceedings under the said act.

What action has been taken? So far as I know, no action whatever has been taken. After a committee was set up here and in Saskatchewan, and after recommendations were made, together with the statements that appear in the report that they believed there was a—

Mr. GARDINER: May I ask a question? The hon. member says that no action whatever was taken. Does he not know that the three provincial governments in western Canada did take action?

Mr. WRIGHT: Certainly they took some action to endeavour to get the co-operative handling of implements established in western Canada, but so far as this government is concerned, so far as investigation with regard to combines, with regard to tariffs and with regard to freight rates are concerned, over which the provincial governments have no control at all, no action has been taken. I am speaking in this House of Commons and asking for some action here and not in the provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: If my hon. friend studies the whole report he will find that the same kind of action was recommended here.

Mr. WRIGHT: Recommended!

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether he did as I did myself, but I bought shares in that particular company.

Mr. COLDWELL: So did I.

Mr. GARDINER: I think most hon. members over there did, and I think we are asking questions now as to whether or not they have done something.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am pointing out that this government has not done anything. Individuals have done something. We are trying to do something in western Canada for ourselves, but we are not getting much support here. What I am asking for is support here.

Mr. GARDINER: This government did the one thing it could do. It took all the duties off farm implements.

Mr. WRIGHT: After taking off the duties, the government did not see that the benefit went to the farmers and not to the companies. That is where the trouble has come in.

Mr. GARDINER: We took them all off, whether it benefited the farmer or the companies.

Mr. WRIGHT: That did not solve the problem, because prices kept on going up. Prices of farm implements are going up all the time. They went up 12½ per cent when the government—

Mr. GARDINER: So has wheat and everything else. It has been going up all the time until lately.

Mr. WRIGHT: We have a pretty close ceiling on wheat and a lot of other agricultural products. That is what we are objecting to. Other prices are going up. I hold in my hand a copy of the U.F.C. Information. In this issue one of the directors of the organization gives an indication of what is happening today.

Mr. GARDINER: Just to keep the record straight, there never has been a ceiling on wheat at any time.

Mr. WRIGHT: Well, I am not going into an argument with the minister on that. We have all heard the price of wheat discussed in this house.

Mr. GARDINER: Discuss the facts. There never has been.

Mr. WRIGHT: Hon. members know what the situation is. There is a pretty effective ceiling on farm products at the present time, as far as the farmer is concerned.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I must remind the hon. member that he has exhausted his time.

Mr. WRIGHT: If I am permitted to conclude this argument I shall take my seat, although I have several other things that I wish to deal with. As I said, the price of farm machinery went up 12½ per cent a year ago. Here is a report which shows that the price of—

Mr. TUCKER: May I ask the hon. member a question? He has coupled in with the taking off of the tariff on farm implements the price of farm implements today. I have heard that argument made by people before. I should like to ask the hon. member if he is against the removal of the tariff on farm implements and if he believes the rise in price was due to the removal of the tariff on those implements? By coupling them together, he must intend to imply that one had something to do with the other.

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member is just trying to draw a red herring across the trail. He knows the position of this group with respect to tariffs.

Mr. TUCKER: Why does the hon. member not answer?

Mr. ARGUE: Why does the hon. member not make a speech on coarse grains?

Mr. WRIGHT: He knows the position of this group with respect to these matters.

Mr. TUCKER: Why does the hon. member not answer the question?

Mr. ARGUE: Make a speech on barley?

Mr. WRIGHT: The hon. member has been making a lot of speeches in western Canada, but I doubt that they will have much effect.

Mr. TUCKER: Some of you people will not be back in the next house.

Mr. GRAYDON: I pity the western farmers.

Mr. WRIGHT: If I may continue I shall put on the record the most recent increase in the cost of farm implements. I have a list here compiled by a director of the U.F.C. in Saskatchewan, which shows that the price of a Cockshutt 80 tractor complete rose—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Prior to November 1 and since.

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes. This list shows that a Cockshutt 80 tractor complete was worth today in western Canada at the local dealer $2,258. Two or three months ago it was worth $1,703.90; a Cockshutt 6-foot tiller, 11 blades, on rubber $605, a year ago $545; a Cockshutt 12-foot self-propelled combine, $3,843 today, formerly $3,458.85; Massey-Harris 10-foot self-propelled combine, less cleaner, $3,328.75 today, formerly $2,739. I am not going down the whole list. The makes are all here including the John Deere. I quote the following from the report:

> The above figures show an average increase of 15·1 per cent on those particular implements over the price prior to early November of last year.

That is another increase of 15.1 per cent in the cost of farm machinery. Under present conditions that is unreasonable. I have evidence in my hand showing that the profits made by these companies have been increasing every year. The same thing applies to fertilizer. I do not need to go into the price of fertilizer. The price has increased to such an extent that the government has admitted it was unjustified. The government has said that the price should be reduced.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. WRIGHT: The government has not done anything to solve the problem. It has not done anything to see that the companies' wings are trimmed so that they cannot do the same thing again.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. I must remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. GRAYDON: He was interrupted.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. If the hon. member has the permission of the house he may proceed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would suggest five things that the government should do at this session. First, we should pass a dominion natural products marketing act, correlating the agricultural products marketing acts of the provinces to give agriculture an opportunity to organize itself to solve its own problems. That is all the farmers want. They do not ask the government to solve their problems for them. They want the proper legislation under which they can work to solve their own problems.

Second, we should amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and place in the act some formula for the determination of fair prices for agricultural products in Canada, so that the farmers will know that they are not dependent on the minister or the government. They will know that there is a definite formula which will establish these prices.

Third, I suggest that coarse grains should be placed under either some section of the wheat board or other board, and that the price should be fixed in relation to other grains, so that we can ensure the production of these grains that is necessary to give us the dairy and meat production which we should have in Canada.

Fourth, we should investigate methods of fixing prices. I do not say it is a monopoly, but there is certainly an agreement in the fixing of prices of agricultural machinery in this country. There is an agreement in the fixing of fertilizer prices, and there is an agreement in the fixing of the price of gas and oil.

Mr. TUCKER: Is the Co-operative Machinery Company a party to that price fixing agreement?

Mr. WRIGHT: Certainly they are not a party to it. I am suggesting that these things should be investigated so that in Canada we should know whether we are getting a square deal in these things. I know that these combines are international, but we have not even made an attempt in Canada to solve some of these problems. As a matter of fact, when they started to make an investigation in the United States and they found that they wanted information from Canada, I would say to some of our people from Ontario that they have apparently tried to do their best to stop them getting the information.

Fifth, I think the board of livestock commissioners should regulate the livestock industry in this country.

If these five things were done, I am sure agriculture would feel safer than it does at the present time.

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): I had not intended to take part in the debate, but one hon. member has referred to a matter relating to the administration of my department which I cannot allow to remain unanswered.

I have always had the highest regard for the member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness), but his action on Friday last in attempting to sully the record of a member of the department who next May will have completed thirty-five years of service is certainly not in keeping with the standards I had set for him. The hon. member knows, as all hon. members know, that statements carelessly made in the house or elsewhere, once given publicity, can never be fully retracted. The story spreads, becomes exaggerated, and the real facts never become fully known.

Notwithstanding the hon. member's reputation for fairness, he prefaced his remarks by stating:

> I have received information which I hope is not correct.

Then he proceeded to make statements which were wholly incorrect and the truth of which he could very easily have checked. The hon. member has always had free access to my own office or to any office in the department. I am sure he enjoys the same freedom of access to the civil service commission.

Mr. HARKNESS: On a question of privilege, the minister has just attacked my fairness in the remarks I made on Friday last in regard to a certain appointment in the Indian affairs branch. He has put my remarks on the basis of attacking a civil servant of thirty-five years' experience. I did not attack any civil servant in those remarks. I had no idea of attacking any civil servant; I made my remarks on a different basis altogether, the basis of improving the personnel of the administration in the Indian affairs branch, in which I have long been interested. The minister, I submit, has totally misread and misunderstood the remarks I made. I should like to read the remarks I actually made at that time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HARKNESS: To keep the record straight, I should like to read what I said at that time.

Mr. GLEN: I will read what the hon. member said.

Mr. HARKNESS: Oh, no. I will read it.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. It is not in order to interrupt any member who has the floor unless he consents to answer questions.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Privilege.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Just a moment. It is in order, if the hon. member is rising to a question of privilege, for him to state his privilege.

An hon. MEMBER: He did.

Mr. HARKNESS: I have stated the privilege. This is what I actually said—

Mr. GLEN: Order.

Mr. HARKNESS: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to a question of privilege, and I submit that I have a right to put on the record the actual words I used, which will be found in Hansard of February 13 at page 1198.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. gentleman has not yet stated any question of privilege. He is endeavouring to make a second argument on what he has already stated in the house and that is not a question of privilege.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Up to now the hon. member has not stated the q'estion of privilege.

Mr. HARKNESS: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that the minister has totally misrepresented and misinterpreted what I said in the house on Friday last, to which he was referring and stating that I was very unfair. This is what I said:

> I know the private secretary. I have a very high regard for him and nothing in the world against him. But I think a job of this kind, particularly in the Indian affairs branch, should be given to a man who has acquired, over years in the department, the experience which is necessary in order to carry on the work.

I submit that I made no attack on the minister's private secretary or on any other civil servant.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman was entirely out of order in his statement. May I read only one sentence on page 1198:

> They have also changed the qualifications, and I understand the general idea abroad is that all these changes have been made for the purpose of securing the appointment of the minister's private secretary.

If that is not a charge against the integrity of my private secretary I do not know what it is.

Mr. ROWE: It is against the minister and the government.

Mr. GLEN: I do not know what purpose he had in making this statement; but he has certainly accomplished his purpose, because it is now in the papers all over Canada, and I think the time has come, not too soon, when that damage should be repaired and the record set straight in regard to my private secretary. I think the hon. gentleman could have obtained, without any difficulty, the facts which I am now about to place before the house.

In 1936, when the Indian affairs branch was set up, it was thought wise to establish the position of general superintendent of Indian agencies, and Mr. Christianson, who at that time held the position of inspector of Indian agencies in Alberta—not Saskatchewan, as the hon. gentleman stated—was appointed to it. After several years' experience it was found that the duties intended for the position were too wide and overlapped the work of the heads of the other divisions. Mr. Christianson was therefore transferred to Regina, and until his retirement carried out the duties of inspector in the province of Saskatchewan. When the position he occupied became vacant the duties were changed to make them more workable and to fill the need for a senior officer in the head office of the branch to relieve the director of a great deal of detail work which was becoming increasingly burdensome. The civil service commission agreed with the new statement of duties and authorized the holding of a promotional competition among all the male members of the department throughout Canada. I should like hon. members to note that.

No attempt was made to restrict the competition, and the date fixed for the filing of applications closed in the summer of 1945. The commission, in accordance with the usual procedure, asked the department to rate the candidates, fifteen applications having been received. A rating board was set up, composed of the director of the branch, the secretary, and the chief executive assistant of the department.

The candidates were rated; the ratings were reviewed and concurred in by the then deputy minister of the department, Doctor Camsell, and then forwarded to the commission. Mr. Pratt was given the highest rating.

Mr. HARKNESS: Would the minister permit a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am asking a question of the minister.

Mr. GLEN: I am making a statement now.

Mr. HARKNESS: Will you not permit a question?

Mr. GLEN: No, not now. I am giving the history of this matter.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a one-way lane.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member will withdraw that remark. The rule is clear that the member who has the floor must not be interrupted unless he cares to answer a question. I am trying to be fair and I hope the hon. member does not mean to imply that I am not being fair in this matter.

Mr. GLEN: I am giving the history of these proceedings and I think I am entitled to make that statement without interruption. The candidates were rated; the ratings were reviewed and concurred in by the then deputy minister of the department, Doctor Camsell, and then forwarded to the commission. Mr. Pratt was given the highest rating. Mr. Randle, on whose behalf I presume the hon. member was speaking, was rated eighth in the competition. In his remarks, page 1198 of Hansard, the hon. member stated that the selection board twice recommended Mr. Randle for the appointment. This statement is wholly incorrect.

The civil service commission, which has the final say in promotional competitions, accepted the ratings of the rating board and notified the department of Mr. Pratt's selection for the position, subject to an appeal being entered by any of the candidates. Of the fifteen who entered the competition, Mr. Randle was the only one who entered an appeal. In accordance with the procedure established by the commission, a review board was set up and certain evidence was heard. In dealing with Mr. Randle's appeal, the board made the following recommendation:

> It is also recommended that Mr. Randle's appeal be denied as the board is satisfied from the evidence obtained, that Mr. Randle is not as well qualified as a number of others who have been given higher ratings than he.

This finding should, I think, satisfy my hon. friend that, regardless of anything else, no injustice has been done to Mr. Randle.

Having disposed of Mr. Randle's appeal, the review board, and I contend without any authority to do so, proceeded to review the ratings of the other candidates. In doing so they took it upon themselves to ascribe new duties to the position, different from those described in the advertisement. Then, without giving the candidate who had been rated the highest an opportunity of being heard, they recommended that that candidate did not possess the minimum qualifications. The commission approved the report of the review board and notified the department that the candidate who had been rated second should be appointed to the position.

Mr. HARKNESS: Why was he not appointed?

Mr. GLEN: He has had his appointment now. I will tell the hon. member why if he will allow me to continue.

The members of the house will readily appreciate how unfairly this procedure works against the candidate who received the highest rating. Having disposed of the grievance of the candidate who appealed, the board of review on their own initiative disqualify the first candidate and he is left with no right of appeal. Likewise the other candidates who might have complained of the first rating would have no opportunity of appealing.

The matter was discussed at a meeting with the commission in May, 1946. It was pointed out that the review board had erroneously enlarged the duties of this position and that they were much different from what the department had in mind. These duties were fully explained to the commission, and an agreement was reached at the meeting that they more closely fitted the duties usually performed by a general executive assistant. It was agreed, therefore, that the title should be changed accordingly and formal action to this effect was taken in August, 1946. The department then asked the commission to accept the ratings already made in the other competition and to appoint the candidate who had received the highest rating. It was the view of the officers in the department that the commission had before them the carefully considered ratings of the two senior officers and concurred in by Doctor Camsell. These officers were in the best position to judge the qualifications and experience of the candidates to perform the duties which they had in mind for the incumbent of the position and consequently no useful purpose would be served in rating the candidates again.

However, the commission did not see fit to adopt this procedure, and the matter dragged along without any action being taken until last December when notification was received from the commission that the candidates in the original competition should be rated again. Officers in the department as well as myself took strong objection to this proposal which, in effect, might likely subject Mr. Pratt to further injustices. Further, it was pointed out that officers were being asked to rate a second time the same candidates for the new position when the duties they had in mind for it were not much different from those intended for the other position. The ratings previously made had been ignored. What assurance would there be that the second ratings might not also be ignored?

The commission was therefore informed that it was the opinion of senior officers of the department that there was no other employee as well qualified or who had the experience that Mr. Pratt possesses to carry out the duties of the position. The commission accepted this statement and finally selected Mr. Pratt for the position, subject to any appeal that might be entered by any of those who were candidates in the first competition. I am informed that an appeal has again been entered by Mr. Randle and that a review board has been set up again to consider it. This is his right and no one can object to what he has done. I would have thought, however, that when it was made known to him that there were many other officers in the department who were considered to have superior qualifications and experience, he would not stubbornly persist in exercising this right and thus delay the filling of the position which it was hoped would contribute greatly to the more efficient administration of Indian affairs.

The hon. member has suggested that there has been political interference in the filling of the position. Does he suggest that Mr. Pratt was selected for the position because he is my private secretary, and since I am a Liberal, his association with me has brought him into the field of politics? If not, then I can only assume that he has in mind the fact that shortly before Mr. Randle was appointed to the position he now holds he unsuccessfully contested a provincial seat for the Conservative party and that because of this fact—

Mr. HARKNESS: I should like to say this, Mr. Speaker; I do not know Colonel Randle. I have never seen him. I have no idea as to his politics; and that has nothing to do with the matter as far as I am concerned.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. FULTON: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the minister in his remarks just said: "I would ask the hon. gentleman". He asked him a question in the course of his remarks. I suggest that gives the hon. member a right to reply.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I would suggest to hon. members on all sides of the house that they should not interrupt an hon. member who is speaking unless that hon. member consents to answer a question. The rule is perfectly clear.

Mr. HARKNESS: The minister asked me a question.

Mr. GLEN: As I was saying, I can only assume that he has in mind the fact that shortly before Mr. Randle was appointed to the position he now holds he unsuccessfully contested a provincial seat for the Conservative party and because of this fact—

Mr. HARKNESS: My answer to that question is that I did not know it. The minister has just asked if I was aware of it. I was not aware of it and did not know anything about it.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We grant that.

Mr. GLEN:—someone in the department, either myself or others, are attempting to prevent his advancement in the service. I am sure that if I suggested to the hon. member that this fact had something to do with Mr. Randle's appointment to the service, which was in the year when the Conservative party was in power, he would protest most vigorously and say that I was besmirching the name of a loyal civil servant who has given years of faithful service to his country; and I would agree with him. Yet this is exactly what the hon. member has done when he implied that there had been political interference with the filling of the position.

In his remarks the hon. member left the definite impression that because Mr. Pratt was a minister's private secretary he lacked the qualifications for the position. I only wish he had taken as much time in inquiring into Mr. Pratt's record and experience in the public service as he did in listening to the incorrect stories of alleged grievances to which he referred.

The members of the house who are acquainted with my private secretary and know his sterling qualities will expect me to place on record his service. I intend to do so, though knowing it will be embarrassing to him. Mr. Pratt was born at North Gower, Ontario, on September 13, 1896. He completed four years at high school before reaching the age of sixteen years. After attending classes which were equivalent of one year's university training, he first entered the service in the Post Office department, on May 11, 1913. In May, 1915, he qualified as clerk of the second division, subdivision B, ranking thirty-third in a competition in which there were several hundred candidates, many of whom were university graduates. In January, 1916, he was transferred to the registration branch of the Department of the Interior. In May, 1917, he enlisted with the divisional signals and after his discharge was transferred to the dominion lands branch in 1919. In 1922 he was appointed a principal clerk as the result of a promotional competition. In 1924 he was offered the position of private secretary to the Minister of the Interior, who was also the minister having charge of the administration of Indian affairs. With the exception of a few months he continued in this position until the government changed in 1930. From 1930 to 1935 he occupied the position of chief clerk in the national parks bureau. Following the change of government that year, he was brought back to the minister's office. In December, 1936, when the department was reorganized, Mr. Pratt was appointed to the position of assistant secretary and chief of personnel in the Department of Mines and Resources. At the same time he was appointed private secretary to the then minister and has continued to hold both positions up to the present time. It will be noted from this record that fifteen of the thirty-four years of public service were spent in work not in any way connected with the duties of a private secretary, his service in the latter capacity covering a period of nearly nineteen years.

I should like to point out that the respective ministers under whom Mr. Pratt served in the capacity of private secretary had the responsibility for the administration of Indian affairs. As private secretary during the period mentioned, he accompanied the different ministers on their inspection trips throughout Canada, and in this way acquired a personal knowledge of the problems concerning the welfare of the Indians in every province. Again, as private secretary he became acquainted with the complaints made to the ministers by the Indians, and often had to discuss their grievances with them. Many of the complaints had to do with the service of the field staff, and in this way an opportunity was afforded to judge the services rendered by the personnel in the field.

As I have stated, during the last twelve years Mr. Pratt has not only acted as private secretary; he has also occupied the position of chief of personnel in the department. It can be fairly estimated that one-half his time was spent on personnel and administrative matters, and probably more than this when the house was not in session. It has been one of his duties to interview the field staff when they came to Ottawa and to discuss their problems with them. As chief of personnel it was also his duty to act as the headquarters representative on civil service boards. He also took part in the final preparation of the estimates before they were submitted to treasury board. He had to perform many other duties apart from those as private secretary, but I need not take up the time of the house in detailing them. However, it will be appreciated that his work gave him a thorough and intimate knowledge of the administration of Indian affairs, especially the problems connected with appointments and changes in staff and the expenditures required for field operations.

I think it unwise to discuss in this house the relative merits of civil servants for appointments in the service. However, the hon. member chose to do so, and therefore I have no alternative—and it is a privilege and pleasure for me to do so—than to speak on behalf of the civil servant whose qualifications are being belittled. I can assure hon. members that I do not look forward with any pleasure to the possibility of my secretary leaving me. On the other hand, I am not going to sit idly by and permit his qualifications for a position in the department to be questioned. I will leave it to others to judge whether his long record of public service and the experience thereby acquired does not fit him for the position to which the hon. member referred. Knowing his modest and unselfish nature, as many hon. gentlemen do, I am sure the house will accept my statement when I say that never at any time did he ask me or any other senior officer to use influence on his behalf. I know personally that he did not seek the position and only reluctantly became a candidate when asked to do so. It is to be regretted that when he has almost completed his thirty-five years of service he should be subjected to all this unfair publicity.

I had hoped this matter would have been closed after making this reply to the statement made by the hon. member. However, as a result of his careless remarks, certain garbled and incorrect stories have appeared in the Ottawa Journal, suggesting that there had been favouritism in the rating of the candidates. It is clear that the writer of the first article had obtained access to the records of the proceedings of the first board of review.

Mr. HARKNESS: Why was the account garbled if he had access to these records?

Mr. GLEN: May I point out that these boards are set up by the civil service commission. The members are sworn to secrecy, and the proceedings are treated as confidential. The reasons for this are apparent. The second story which appeared in the Journal, incorrect as it was, again indicated that there had been disclosure of confidential information. I am drawing this to the attention of the chairman of the commission, and I have no doubt he will make a thorough investigation and that the necessary disciplinary action will be taken. If any member of the civil service has broken the oath of secrecy, he should certainly be punished.

After I had read the first newspaper story, I felt it my duty to discuss the matter fully with the two rating officers. In fairness to them and to all concerned, I wish to read to the house the statement each gave to me. This is the statement of Mr. C. W. Jackson:

> On instructions from the then deputy minister, Mr. Hoey and myself were asked to rate the candidates for the position. We accepted this responsibility and carried out our task, and as required certified on our honour that the ratings given were wholly on the basis of merit and without reference to personal or political considerations.
> I deny most emphatically that I instructed Mr. Hoey to agree to any of the ratings or that I influenced or attempted to influence him to give higher ratings to some or any one of the candidates. I also deny that I made this statement that "Mr. Pratt is the man I wanted appointed."
> In giving my evidence before the Board I did, however, strongly emphasize Mr. Pratt's qualifications and experience for the position. I mentioned very fully the reasons why we had given him the highest rating and I did say that I sincerely believed that he was the most suitable candidate. I protested without success against certain members of the board attempting to fix duties to the position which were never contemplated. As there was nothing new disclosed at the hearing to make me change my mind and it being obvious that the members of the board were not as well qualified as Mr. Hoey and myself to determine those duties or to judge the candidates, the story in the paper that the board "made little progress with me" is quite true.

I have also the statement Mr. Hoey has given to me, and with this I shall close:

> In the press of February 16 there was a news item in which statements in quotation marks credited to me appeared. I have no information that would enable me to discover the source from which these quotations were obtained. As suggested in the article, however, I did appear as a witness before a civil service appeal board in March, 1946. No report of my evidence was taken during the course of my submission and the members of the board acting under oath did not supply me with a copy of the proceedings.
> While it is difficult to recall with any degree of exactness the words or phrases used during an hour or more of cross-examination, I can say with the utmost emphasis that I did not at any time state that I was acting under dictation or coercion or that influence in favour of a particular candidate was brought to bear upon me at any time. I most emphatically deny that I stated at any time that Mr. Pratt knew "little about the actual work with Indians."

I have given the record as I have obtained it. I think it is strictly and technically accurate, and that Mr. Pratt has been militated against by this agitation created in the newspapers, and also by the speech of the hon. member. As I have said, I am satisfied that no public servant in the service today is more qualified than Mr. Pratt to undertake the duties of this office; and it is an office we wish to see filled because, like the hon. member for Calgary East, I am also very much concerned about the administration of Indian affairs. We felt that a position such as was being created was necessary for the interrelating of the personnel in the field, and that no man of all the candidates who applied had qualifications as great as those of Mr. Pratt. As I have said, I shall be sorry if the day comes when he may leave me, because I know of no more faithful or more conscientious civil servant, or any man whom it is a greater privilege to know than Mr. Pratt.

Mr. HARKNESS: If the minister would permit a question, could he give us the results of the examination conducted by the civil service commission when this competition was held? That is what I referred to in my speech. I am not familiar with all these various names, these rating boards and all the rest of it. I was speaking of the civil service examination held in connection with this competition. Could the minister give us the result of that and say who stood first, second, third and so on.

Mr. GLEN: As I have already stated, in these examinations Mr. Pratt was rated first, and the gentleman in whose behalf you spoke was rated eighth.

Mr. HARKNESS: You are referring only to the rating by your own departmental officials. I am asking for the results of the civil service examination.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Pratt was informed at one time that he was to be appointed to the position; then this other question arose.

Mr. HARKNESS: That was on the rating of your own departmental officials. You will not answer the question.

Mr. PARK MANROSS (London): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take only about twelve minutes of the time of the house. My remarks will be in two sections, unless there are any interjections, in which case there may be some subsections.

The other evening, in discussing a certain tariff item, I briefly mentioned the blind, but today I should like to elaborate a little on that matter because last week was "white cane" week. The white cane is the symbol of blindness. It signifies the desire of the blind for independence and responsibility. There are a few "do's" and "do not's" in connection with white canes; I am sure all hon. members know about them; but to refresh our memory, let me say that probably the most important "do" outside of watching carriers of white canes and being careful not to blow our horns or race our motors when stopping at stop lights if there is a white cane waiting to cross, is to remember that if you hear a white cane tapping it means the blind person wants your assistance, and you should go to him. That is probably the most important thing to remember.

Among the "do not's", after remembering not to leave tricycles, toys and children's cars on the sidewalks, probably the most important to remember is not to grasp a blind person by the arm and push him across the street. Let him take your arm; let him touch you. This is not because they are fussy but because it frustrates and excites them. They do not want anyone to push or shove them. So if you see a man with a white cane, especially if he is tapping it, just offer him your arm or coat-tail and let him tag along after you.

There are two blind organizations in Canada, which some people find confusing. There is the Canadian council of the blind, which came into being through the desire of many blind people to take an active part in the social life of their communities. Social readjustment is of vital importance to these people. The Canadian council provides local clubs and groups so that the blind may work together in organizing their own social and recreational programs. In the council the representatives of these local groups can pool their ideas; they can have discussions and make decisions, and this is evidence that these people are capable of thinking and acting constructively and taking their part as responsible, democratic citizens. In passing, I am happy to say that the president of the Canadian council of the blind at the present time, Mrs. Sadie B. Bending, resides in London, Ontario, while the directors are scattered across the country in the various provinces.

Many are apt to confuse the Canadian council with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. They are entirely separate organizations, though they work very closely together. The Canadian council is more or less the social, recreational and readjustment organization. The Canadian national institute is an administrative body, recognized by the governments of the dominion and the provinces as the official agency administering service to the blind and the work in connection with the prevention of blindness. This is the organization that provides teaching and educational staffs, field secretaries, librarians, departmental heads and so on to give the maximum of individual service to all registered blind people, to provide Braille and other educational facilities. At the present time they also establish refreshment booths in federal and other public buildings across the country, which afford employment for blind operators in these localities.

At the present time I believe there are about ten thousand registered blind persons across Canada, so that when we are talking about guiding allowances or additional pensions for the blind it can be seen that there is very little involved, and that no one is talking about the blind in this house for any political advantage, because there are only a few blind people in each riding. Blind citizens need better legislation. The Canadian council and the Canadian national institute are sponsoring a six-point program for the purpose of improving the economic welfare of the blind people of Canada. The provision of blindness allowances, which some of us call "pensions" and which is now termed "pensions", and of medical care for eye troubles is beyond the financial scope of any local organization.

The six point program of the blind is very simple. The first is the creation of a blind persons' act entirely separate from and independent of the Old Age Pensions Act. The reason for this is that for a blind person the blindness allowance is not an insurance against want in his old age, but rather a foundation or stepping stone for his future. The problems of blind people between twenty-one and seventy years of age are entirely different from those of old people over seventy who are getting the old age pension.

Then, of course, they prefer the use of the term "blindness allowance" and the elimination of the word "pension", because to them a pension means that you are pensioned off, that you are on the shelf, whereas the blindness allowance means that you are at the starting point, that you have a chance to get on in life.

Point No. 3 is that they would like the elimination of the means test, and I believe most of us will agree with that. In other words, the blind are interested in getting started. They do not think that when a blind person gets a pension at the age of twenty-one he should have to submit to the means test, because he is just getting started in life. He wants to get his education; he wants to learn Braille; he wants to learn a trade, and they believe the means test should be eliminated. After they have obtained their education or learned their craft, and have obtained employment, they want to be treated exactly the same as any other individual in Canada as far as income tax is concerned. They do not want any special treatment; but they do not believe they should have to undergo the means test.

Point No. 4 in their program is an increase in the blindness allowance in relation to the cost of living. They believe that, having in mind the increased cost of living, $40 is not asking too much, and they hope it will be made uniform in all the provinces. We do not think that is too much, either, because they have some expenses the ordinary person does not have.

Their next point is that under the pensions act there is a requirement that a blind person must be a resident of Canada for twenty years before becoming eligible for this blindness allowance. This is hardly fair. People have come here in good faith from other countries and, after living here for perhaps three or four or five or twelve years, have become blind through accident or some other cause and they find they can get no allowance until they have been here twenty years. They think that period of residence should be cut to five years, and naturally I endorse that.

They also want adequate provision for medical or surgical treatment for eye conditions to conserve or to restore vision and to prevent blindness.

I felt it my duty to present this blind program because I am closely associated with their work. I know that the blind as a whole are a happy family, friendly and industrious, and are anxious to become independent. They do not like to be looked upon as being wards of the country. In my own little church at home a young blind man reads the lessons from a Braille scripture book and walks blocks in the coldest weather to help serve in his community. I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) will give consideration in his estimates to helping carry out this national program for the blind, which, after all, will cost very little, and I am sure that members of all parties in the house will be glad to approve the expenditure.

Mr. PROBE: If the hon. member will permit a question, he mentioned two groups, the Canadian council of the blind and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind as being the only groups operating across Canada. Will he indicate whether or not that includes the Canadian Federation of the Blind as another organization which operates on a national basis?

Mr. MANROSS: The Canadian Federation of the Blind is another organization which is separate from the Canadian council of the blind and there is no duplication of services. The Canadian federation as a merchandising body and the national council work on a social and recreational basis for the blind.

A word about my riding and the city of London. Somebody will say: Where is that? London is located half way between Toronto and Windsor on the main lines of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway and on highway No. 2. It is not like Hamilton; you do not have to back into it. It is the beautiful forest city on the Thames river, with a population of approximately 90,000, and it has one of the highest percentages of home ownership in Canada.

Its industries are diversified. We have a lot of small industries but no really large ones. We do not have big booms or big drops, but things go on, on a fairly even keel. Our industries include printing, lithographing, paper boxes, electric refrigerators, four hosiery mills, paint spray guns, spray motor farm equipment, threshing machines, foundries and tool steels, power tools, radios, two shoe factories, underwear, overhead doors, hardware, concrete machinery, textiles, toys, die castings, fountain pens, financial firms, banking, two head offices of life insurance companies, and one brewery. We have the kind of industries in London that are perfect examples of what free competitive enterprise should be. In other words, it has not got out of hand, but has kept on its own feet.

An interesting survey was made recently of nine firms in the city of London. They are:

Empire Brass Manufacturing Company, Limited
Dennisteel Corporation, Limited
George White & Sons Company, Limited
Holeproof Hosiery Company, Limited
Kelvinator of Canada Limited
London Concrete Machinery Company, Limited
Richards-Wilcox Canadian Company, Limited
Scott-McHale Limited
Sparton of Canada Limited

It was interesting to see the results of this survey. The total sales of these nine corporations amounted, in round figures, to $17,000,000. Their total costs, including everything except wages, salaries and taxes, were $9,500,000. Taxes, including sales tax, amounted to $2,000,000, leaving to be divided the sum of $5,000,000. That is what was left after paying the taxes, cost of materials and overhead, and of that $5,000,000, $4,600,000 was paid to the workers and $290,000 to the shareholders, and the remaining $536,000 was reinvested in buildings from machinery and working capital. We were not satisfied with that, so we went ahead to break down the sales dollar to see where it went and we found that it went as follows:

56¼	cents	for materials, et cetera
11½	"	for taxes
27¼	"	to workers
1¾	"	shareholders for use of the property, machines and working capital
3¼	"	into new buildings, machinery, inventory, working capital and reserves, all of which increase employment
100

Of the $5,000,000 remaining after all costs and taxes were paid, the workers received 85 per cent and the shareholders 15 per cent. Less the 3¼ per cent, that went back into new buildings and machinery.

Our free competitive enterprise system in London is not a profit system but a proft-and-loss system, because there have been years when these companies showed an entirely different picture. There have been years in which they lost money and the shareholders got nothing. I thought I would give a description of these industries to show the kind of town it is. The people all work together, and through the community service of our chamber of commerce—I am not a junior any more—we were able to get this information and break it down.

[Mr. Manross.]

In addition, London is a cultural and educational centre. We are one of the few cities with a drama league that owns its own theatre—not a hall but an opera house. We have a library and an auditorium which is a fine example for Canada and the United States to follow. Many libraries on the North American continent are already being built based on the plans of the London library. It is a beautiful place, with a small auditorium at one end. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) is going to have the privilege of seeing that auditorium tonight because it is an excellent place for a small meeting, and he is speaking to the Liberal association there tonight. Personally I have to hire a hall or speak in the market place. The library is lovely, and I hope hon. members will not pass up any chance to see it. We have also a conservatory of music, fine collegiates, a large technical school, with auditorium seating 1,700; that is the one I use. We have also the University of Western Ontario, which is winning a great reputation in medicine and arts and rugby. For the benefit of my colleague the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Kidd), I may say that we are developing a junior rugby team so that Kingston will have somebody they can beat, for our senior rugby team has not been beaten since 1939. We have also Brescia Hall, for music and theory; St. Peter's seminary and De LaSalle college, which are turning out high-class graduates; also Springbank park of 1,900 acres at the edge of the city, and Port Stanley. We have many city parks, five high-class golf courses, and we are only twenty miles from lake Erie.

I want to appeal to the government, on behalf of the city of London, to unleash our business district. The city has grown, as hon. members will see from the few industries I have mentioned, and we need a bigger and better downtown area. But the government, through no fault of their own, but caused by progress, has us fenced in. Our industries have taken over buildings. In every town there is a main corner and a street crossing it. These are considered the two main streets. So it is with London. Our business is concentrated in that small district. At the bottom of the street that runs north and south, two blocks from the main corner in the city, is the subway of the Canadian National Railways. Half a block north of the main corner there is the naval training station and an old post office which is falling down, and an old customs house across the street which is being used by different departments. On the other corner there is a dominion public building. If you walk two blocks you will find a lot of government buildings. Going west from the main corner for two blocks, you run into the river and the jail. Nobody wants to go that way. Going east we have a fine wide street. It was widened a few years ago. Two blocks from the main corner you find the armouries. The armouries take up three-quarters of a block.

What we are asking the government to do is this. Dispose of some of these government buildings. Now is the time to dispose of property. We held an auction just recently on a small building. It was not as large as any of these buildings of the government. It was sold in four pieces by the auctioneer and brought in $436,000. The building was seventy-five years old. If the government would auction off some of these buildings they would get sufficient money to erect a new government building on a spot where there is parking space and away from congestion, but convenient. It would be an ornament to the city. The employees would do more efficient work and everybody would be happy. There would be room for expansion as well. I commend this proposal to the government, and I wish they would look into it. If they do anything about it they may take the credit for it, and that would be all right with me so long as we get rid of the old buildings there.

An hon. MEMBER: Do you not want a post office?

Mr. MANROSS: We have a fine post office. I arranged last year for it to be pointed.

I should now like to mention the Veterans Land Act. Various hon. members have made some reference to it in the past. In London we have some houses built under the Veterans Land Act. I agree with the recommendations that have been brought forward. Hon. members know that the administration of the Veterans Land Act cost about $9,000,000, and still some of the houses are not repaired. We have had some of these ultimatums issued. The minister promised the veterans that the houses would be fixed up and that they would not be required to sign anything. The administrator of the Veterans Land Act came along and issued ultimatums, saying that they would have to sign. In fairness to the veterans, this house should agree to the recommendation of a royal commission to investigate this matter fully, so that we shall all know where we stand and receive information that the veterans will be fixed up.

Mr. R. M. WARREN (Renfrew North): It is quite a long time since we listened to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I was accorded the honour of seconding the address on one occasion back in 1938, and I considered it a considerable task for a new member to be pushed into that position on his first visit. Like many other hon. members, I must congratulate the mover and the seconder on the creditable job they accomplished at that time.

My object in speaking on this occasion is not to utter a word of complaint or to make a request. I have no complaints to offer and no requests to make. I have not even any advice to offer. I am going to talk about some of the recent high spots of progress which have taken place in the riding of Renfrew North. I am not going to attempt to go into any detail with regard to my riding, but I will give the house a bird's-eye view of what has happened there recently in the way of progress. Perhaps what keeps communities content and happy is the organization of community groups. We are fairly well established in that respect. In our farming communities we have the federation of agriculture. We have credit unions, women's institutes and co-operatives. Recently we had organized in Pembroke a branch of the Women's Canadian club; a little less recently a Rotary club was organized in the little village of Douglas, and not quite so recently a branch of Rotary and a branch of the Canadian Legion was organized in the village of Eganville. Of course, in a town like Pembroke we have had for many years such institutions as the Kiwanis, Rotary, Kinsmen and numerous others. Then we have the Catholic Women's League, the Alexander club, and many other organizations. In my opinion these organized groups, and others such as the board of trade, are always taking an interest in the welfare of the community in which they are established, and they have a great deal to do with the maintenance of law and order. They have a great deal to do with raising the morale and the standard of living in the different communities.

No doubt all hon. members have heard of a new place called "Deep River". Deep River gets its name from the depth of the water in that part of the Ottawa river. I do not know whether it is true or not, but it has been said that the water was so deep in that part of the river that no person had been able to sound its depth. Not so long ago things began to happen at Deep River. There was a great deal of guessing and wonderment as to what was occurring when it was learned that a great construction operation was under way. In the course of time not only was there a huge plant constructed a few miles outside the village of Chalk River, but in addition a splendid modern little city began to take shape to house the workers and employees at Deep River. There are about two thousand people living in that modern little city. These people have all the conveniences that one could get in any city. There is a large hotel, a coffee shop, drugstores, places of worship, and so forth. There are also organized groups in the little city. To my way of thinking, it is one of the cleanest and most up-to-date little cities that one could find anywhere in Canada. If you wander around that place and have occasion to meet groups of men you learn that you have to address every second or third man by the title "doctor". I do not mean medical doctor. We have four medical doctors there, a supply of nurses and a good hospital. The doctors to whom I refer are doctors of science or doctors of something or other. One cannot help but be impressed with the fact that with so many highly qualified officials working in the laboratories of the national research council something must be taking place in that little city which will be to the benefit not only of the people of Canada but to the world as well.

If you go south from the village of Cobden a few miles you come to the village of Haley, and a couple of miles east of that village you come to another new station that has grown up within the last few years. At that plant the manufacture of a mineral or metal known as magnesium is being carried on. That site was selected because there is an inexhaustible supply of rock there easily obtainable which is suitable for the purpose for which it is required.

It is claimed that magnesium is 25 per cent lighter than aluminum and 75 per cent stronger than steel. It is a recent development, and no doubt in the course of time that metal will be turned to many thousands of uses not only in Canada but throughout the world. There is a fine modern community around that plant. The officials have all their necessary modern accommodations, and at the plant itself there is a splendid eating place with sleeping quarters for the employees.

Speaking of that particular plant, a gentleman said to me the other day that some day that place will be the Pittsburgh of Canada. The Ottawa river serves as the boundary for the riding of North Renfrew. We all know the deplorable shortage of electrical power; and it is some comfort to realize that at the Chenaux rapids close to Portage du Fort on the Ottawa river, which is a few miles south of the village of Forester's Falls, a few miles northeast from the magnesium plant, preparations are now going on to develop power there and when completed it will produce 160,000 horsepower. If you go farther west you will find yourself still in North Renfrew when you reach Des Joachims. Work has been going on there for a considerable length of time in the development of power and, when completed, there will be a production of 480,000 horsepower. That development approximates the development at Queenston on Niagara falls. Their nominal output is 500,000 horsepower, and when this development I speak of is completed it will produce, as I have said, 480,000 horsepower.

This required the clearing of 11,000 acres of land to make way for the backing up of the Ottawa river. The water on the Ottawa river will be backed up fifty-seven miles and will require the replacement or the moving of twenty-two miles of Canadian Pacific railway and twelve miles of highway No. 17. It is estimated that it will require the removal of 2,600,000 yards of solid rock, and to accomplish this there will be needed 3,000,000 pounds of dynamite.

Just now there are 1,250 men employed on the Ontario side of the development, and they also have their own modern community, their own hospital, their own recreation halls, and an excellent eating establishment. In fact, in that particular cafeteria there is a sign reading, "If you need more good food all you have to do is to ask for it". That is in North Renfrew. These are some of the highlights of the development, and the progress which is taking place in North Renfrew, and which I think should be generally known.

Hon. members know, of course, about Petawawa military camp. That camp is being transformed into a permanent military camp. I believe that Petawawa military camp is recognized as probably the best training centre in the world for artillery purposes. I do not think there is any better spot for the training of bridge builders. In my opinion Canadian artillerymen trained at Petawawa were unsurpassed during world war I and the last world war. I was interested to watch the training of those men in bridge building and later on to learn, when they came home, that many of them had been taken from Canadian corps and placed with other regiments of the British armies because of their expert knowledge of bridge building. During the last war they built bridges all over Europe, including the bridge across the Rhine.

The Petawawa military camp comprises 131 square miles. A part of that military ground, covering 95 square miles, was taken over in 1923 by the Department of Mines and Resources and it is used as an experimental forestry station. Too few of us know of the splendid work that is being carried on at that station. That work is of very great value. Experiments of all sorts are being carried on there, for example, in connection with the protection of undergrowth, the best methods to use in thinning the forest, or the proper distances to leave between trees so as to promote the best growth. There is also work in connection with fire protection and the study of insect diseases such as the spruce budworm, the white pine weevil, the heart rot in poplar, and white pine blister. If such diseases can be overcome we shall have accomplished a great deal in forest protection not only in Ontario but throughout the Dominion of Canada.

Speaking of that area of 95 square miles, during the war years an internment camp was erected at Centre lake. I think I am safe in saying that of all of the thousands of prisoners interned in that camp, not one who escaped was not returned in a short time to the camp. Of course a good deal of credit must go to the veterans of world war I who served as a security guard at the camp.

It was an ideal place for an internment camp. These prisoners of war cut their own wood for fuel; they did their own cooking; they looked after their own affairs, and besides that they helped to build roads and in a general way were kept busy. That, I think, was a good thing. At the forestry station, there is a nice community, proper sleeping quarters, and eating places and homes for the officials. A great many conscientious objectors were taken care of there, and much useful work done during their term. It is interesting to note that during the years sixty miles of road have been built through that forest, thirty miles of telephone line and two lookout towers, besides many bridges. But it would be a mistake to think all of that land was going to waste or was not in production during peacetime, because this timber was always growing. Every year a great deal of timber is sold to contractors. Of course any timber that is sold from there must be taken out under the supervision of the forestry officials who mark the trees which they will permit to be cut. Needless to say, all brush and slash must be burned at the time of cutting.

In Renfrew North we have types of soils ranging from heavy clay to light sand. In Petawawa township we have a type of sand suitable for the cultivation of tobacco and some day we may compete with Norfolk county in tobacco growing. In fact, Major Forgie of the town of Pembroke, who has been doing some experimental work, is fairly well convinced that some day we shall be producing tobacco on an unlimited amount of land in Petawawa township. In 1947 the farmers on the heavier lands were not quite so fortunate as those on the lighter soils. The farmers on the lighter soils in at least some cases had good grain crops, whereas many farmers on the heavier soils, as a result of the wet spring, did not. But if we lose one crop in Renfrew county we are not likely to starve. Every farmer, whether on heavy soil or on light soil, had a wonderful crop of hay. This year any farmer who did not want to feed his hay on his own farm had available a ready market at a fine price.

We grow a great deal of alfalfa. We have hammer mills which transform this alfalfa hay into a meal which is shipped all over the country and exported. It is one of the necessary ingredients of poultry feed, feed for young hogs and dairy feeds. As a matter of fact, I should not be surprised if some of it went as far as Fraser Valley.

Mr. ROBINSON (Simcoe East): Oh, no.

Mr. SINNOTT: It does not get even into Manitoba.

Mr. WARREN: All right. I thought the hon. member for Fraser Valley would appreciate having some of that alfalfa meal in his riding.

Mr. McCANN: There is the export market.

Mr. WARREN: Yes, it goes overseas; it goes to Australia.

Mr. ROBINSON (Simcoe East): You must have an export permit.

Mr. WARREN: Maybe so. Many scores of our women have turned to poultry and eggs as a sideline; and in many cases it has turned out to be a profitable one. These women, after careful study, have become expert in the handling of poultry and eggs. In Renfrew North this business has become big business. It is interesting also to note that in Renfrew county there was a substantial increase in hogs in 1947 over 1946, a substantial increase in the output of butter in 1947 over 1946, and a substantial increase in the revenue from beef production over 1946. If everything else fails, we always have something to fall back on. We have logging. In almost any community you can mention you will find a sawmill. I often wonder where the logs come from, but they keep coming. This year you may think there will not be any next year, but next year you find that there are just as many. Something that we sometimes lose sight of is the fact that trees keep on growing. The logging industry in Renfrew North is a wonderful sideline, not only for many farmers, but for jobbers and contractors as well. There is a market for such timber as poplar. We have such plants as the Pembroke Shook Mills in Pembroke and the Canadian Splint and Lumber Company. The better timber is always going out to various points throughout the country.

We have the most wonderful tourist attractions that can be imagined, almost anywhere one likes to go throughout the riding of Renfrew North. We have lakes without number, plenty of fish, splendid hunting grounds, unequalled scenery, good hotels, good accommodations and good tourist resorts. I would say to hon. members that if at any time they want to have a good day they should go up highway No. 17, or go to Golden Lake, or go in any direction they may wish to throughout the riding of Renfrew North, and I feel sure they will come back happy and pleased.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to spend some time this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, talking about a danger which is overhanging our country, a danger which is serious now, which could become disastrous, which I think few people correctly understand, and which, for reasons I shall try to make clear, the government seems unwilling to disclose and underline for the benefit of the public. I refer, of course, to inflation. Inflation is a dreadful thing. I want to quote briefly from the London Economist of January 17, 1948. After speaking about the slow realization in England of what they call the suppressed inflation there, they say this:

> . . . it is obviously true that inflation is the great problem everywhere else in the world.

Then, farther on, they say of England:

> Not merely is there an obvious inflation, but it is also clearly reaching the rampant stage.

We have to remind ourselves of what has happened elsewhere in the world. It is well to remember that inflation in Germany prepared the way for Hitler, because I suppose it is true to say it was the destruction of the middle class in Germany that eventually brought about the conditions of which Hitler took advantage. We are told that today the Russians hope inflation will win for them what they call the "cold war". In that connection it is interesting to read what was said just after the last war by a great economist who became famous, the late Lord Keynes:

> Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the capitalist system was to debauch the currency. By a continuing process of inflation, governments can confiscate, secretly and unobserved, an important part of the wealth of their citizens. By this method they not only confiscate, but they confiscate arbitrarily; and, while the process impoverishes many, it actually enriches some.

Mr. MITCHELL: What is the title of the book?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It is "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," at page 220.

Mr. MITCHELL: Thank you; I have read it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Whether we like it or not, we have a considerable amount of inflation in Canada today. Therefore it seems to me it is the manifest duty of the government to be impressing that upon us, to be warning us of the danger, to be calling upon us for the exercise of self-control. Instead of that, however, what do we actually find? We had a resolution introduced a few weeks ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) dealing with price spreads. Did that resolution have anything to say about inflation? I do not think the word was used in it. Three or four cabinet ministers, in addition to the Prime Minister, spoke during the debate; and while I will not undertake to say that the word "inflation" was not used by them, I will undertake to say that the point was not seriously made. I doubt very much if it was even mentioned by any of them as a prominent point. In other words, in my opinion that resolution deals entirely with results and not with causes. A witty American, writing about the witch hunt after price spreads, has said, "Inflation is the crime and the government is the criminal." What we actually find is that the government, I suppose because they have a sense of responsibility and wish to divert people's minds, had this committee appointed to deal with profits, hoarding and speculation, according to the terms of reference; all of which I believe have trifling, microscopic effects on the present situation. In other words, what they are dealing with, as I said a moment ago, are effects, while ignoring the causes; turning away from causes and looking for scapegoats, or a kind of decoy.

How is it, Mr. Speaker, that the citizens of Canada ever allow them to get away with that? I suppose the first reason is that we in this country have never been exposed to the full blast of inflation. With us it has never been anything more than an inconvenience. We think of inflation as a thing that happens in funny foreign countries where they do not know how to look after their affairs properly. Yet people like the Germans, after the first war, were sensible people and usually able to look after their financial affairs pretty well. I consider it well to remind ourselves that before the first war we in this country used to think about war in exactly the same way. We thought war was a thing that happened in funny, far-off countries, usually inhabited by coloured people, and we never really believed it would come to us at all.

Let us look back for a moment at this thing we call inflation. In our school books we used to read about the debasing of the currency and about kings who clipped the coinage. Well, we do not have that sort of thing today. In those days, debasing the currency was really much easier to detect. In these days, when we have paper money and the amount of money is limited only by the amount of paper produced by the mills, it is extraordinarily difficult to find out exactly what a government is doing; and, as I shall show, we have inflation now in a very substantial way. If we do not take care and take immediate steps we may have it to a very much greater degree.

The government of Canada at one time had a very sound view on the matter of inflation. I want to read a short passage from the budget speech in September, 1939, which I have no hesitation in saying was an able document. In that speech, after pointing out that, of necessity, a certain amount of inflation—I think it was in the form of borrowing from the banks—was to be used in order to get the economy moving, because, of course, in 1939 things were pretty dull, the then minister of finance went on to say:

> However, as soon as the expansion of employment and production gets well under way and certainly before it approaches its limits, further expansion of the supply of money and credit must be stopped if the danger of progressive inflation is to be avoided. With an economy at full production and employment, the only result of expanding money and credit is to raise prices without increasing production. At such a point commences the cumulative spiral of inflation with all its deadly consequences to the economy.

That was the view of the finance department in the autumn of 1939, and of course it is well for us to remember that was early in the war; that we could not expect to foresee the course events were taking, so that no fair-minded person would object to the fact that during the war the government was not able to hold fast to that sound principle.

Well, we all know in a rough and ready way what we mean by inflation, the phrase has become current; too much money chasing too few goods. A rather more dignified description given by an economist is this: "the situation where the flow of money incomes is greater than the goods and services available for purchase with such incomes at prevailing prices".

I have stated that there is inflation. Let us take a brief glance back now at what actually happened, and see how it arose. First of all, I want to give a few simple figures showing how money and its equivalent in terms of purchasing power have increased since 1939. Of course in that year the country was rather inactive. We should bear that in mind in making a comparison with 1939; otherwise we may reach an extreme view, and I have no desire to do that. The question is far too serious for anyone to want to exaggerate. Here are the facts. In 1939 the money in people's pockets, let us call it money in the till, money in the heel of the sock, or anything of that sort, amounted to $216 million. It is now a billion dollars, or multiplied almost five times. Savings deposits, which, of course, are also a means of payment, were then $1 billion. They have now increased to $3,800 million. Demand deposits in 1939 amounted to $800 million. They are now $1,300 million. In other words, the total of these three in 1939 was $2,100 million, and in 1947, $7,100 million; and as a matter of fact I have seen since then a somewhat larger figure.

You may ask whether I am suggesting that, because the quantity of money is up three times, therefore prices should be multiplied by three. No, it is not as simple as that; it is not a question in simple arithmetic. Nevertheless every serious student of money and the effect of money agrees that the quantity of purchasing power available has a profound effect, and therefore I wish to talk more about it.

By the way, a moment ago I omitted to say that in addition to the increase of from $2,100 million in 1939 to $7,100 million in 1947 there are also in the hands of the public $6,000 million in victory bonds, which, as anyone will see, really are a means of payment, readily available.

I should like also to say I think it was desirable that there should have been some rise in price from 1939. It is hard to say what would have been the ideal place at which to stop, but it is suggested that perhaps 1940 or 1941, or somewhere about the time when controls were put on would have been a proper time. That is a matter of opinion, and I am not committing myself. But, as I say, I believe we should not regard the situation in 1939 as ideal.

Now, how did that arise? The situation is very simple, as you look back. I read a minute ago the fine intentions as set out in the budget of 1939, that as soon as they got the wheels of industry turning further inflation should stop. But of course that was 1939, and we did not foresee the years from 1940 to 1945.

In those years what happened? We all remember that, because of the war, we got many billions of dollars. You all remember that we paid half of it out of taxation, and for that I give the finance department full credit. I think the way they put taxes on was to their credit. But of the balance, some four billions of dollars was raised by borrowing from the banking system; that is where the real inflation came in. And, again, I am not criticizing what was done during the war. It was what was done after the war that I am criticizing.

Anyway let us see what did happen. That four billions of dollars was borrowed; you get it in the figures I read to you. What did we get in exchange? Well, we got those things that the then minister of munitions and supply was turning out in profusion. We got aeroplanes and ships and guns and shells and munitions; we paid the armed forces; and we built factories.

Then, at the end of the war, in exchange for all that huge amount of money poured out, what did we have? The aeroplanes and the ships were practically worthless. We sold them for a song, if indeed they were still in existence. The shells had been used; the munitions had been fired; the guns had been fired. That was at the end of the war when we had a situation where very little was left, represented by that four billion dollars worth of purchasing power, with the addition of six billions in bonds.

I do not think any fair-minded man up to that time had any complaints about what was happening. We knew it had to be done, and we all applauded the then minister of munitions and supply. He went ahead and did it; he got the munitions of war, and we did not worry much about the cost. We wanted to win the war.

Then we came to the end of the war. There we were—and we were bursting with money, and at the same time short of all kinds of goods. We were short of houses, motorcars and all kinds of household goods which I need not take time to mention. In a word, there was practically an unlimited demand for goods. People's pockets were bursting with money, and we were in very short supply. In other words, one might say that we had material lying around for a prairie fire. What I complain about—and here is where my complaint begins, namely in 1945—is that, instead of damping down this fire, from that time on—and it is still continuing—the government have, in my opinion, added fuel to the flames. And that is very largely the reason we find ourselves in this situation today.

Why did they do that? As will be seen from the white paper of employment and income issued in 1945, they thought—and I do not think anyone blamed them at that time—that there would probably be a recession. They thought that all the devices which had been used in war would have to be carried forward into peace, and that we would have to have an easy-money policy to stimulate imports. If we read that white paper of the spring of 1945 we see that all the techniques which had been used in war for stimulating the raising of money and keeping exchange rates low were all outlined, in effect, in that memorandum, as something that would continue.

On motion of Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOWE: Tomorrow we shall continue with this debate and, if it is finished, we shall return to the emergency bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does the minister mean Bill No. 3?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 19, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West) presented the first report of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to continue and complete consideration and examination of the Indian Act, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Should we not have an opportunity to see the report before we pass it?

Mr. SPEAKER: The report was read by the Clerk Assistant.

Mr. CAMPBELL: We couldn't hear it.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

SENATE BILL—FIRST READING

Bill No. 59, respecting The Trust and Loan Company of Canada.—Mr. Pinard.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

VOTE OF STUDENTS WITH RESPECT TO GOVERNMENT AT OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether the government is aware of the decision taken last night by the students of the university of Toronto when, in a debate in which the leader of the opposition participated, they voted in favour of the establishment of a Progressive Conservative government at Ottawa.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): If my hon. friends opposite wish to have a reply, I would say that the students of Toronto, as I remember them, have always been very courteous. No doubt they intended their action as a mark of courtesy to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. GRAYDON: Speak to the Minister of Trade and Commerce about that.

WAR SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

QUESTION AS TO CASHING AT LOCAL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is rather supplementary to a question asked the other day by the member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser). Has consideration been given by the government, in the interests of convenience on the part of holders of war savings certificates, to the cashing of these certificates at local post offices? A number of representations have been received.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The question has been brought to my attention by a good many members, including the hon. member for Peterborough West, the member for Lake Centre, and a number of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house. The whole matter is being looked into, and I will try to make a statement in the course of a few days.

BEEF

PRICES—QUESTION OF ENSURING SUPPLIES FOR 1949

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received communications from western Canadian beef producers and feeders that prices for finished beef are falling, apparently owing to the meat packing companies' lack of interest in bidding for finished beef? Secondly, will the minister tell the house what measures he proposes to take to protect beef feeders from losses on their 1947-48 operations, and thus to safeguard beef supplies for Canadian consumers for the year 1949?

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have noted the question put by the hon. member for Lethbridge. The question will receive due consideration and an answer will be given.

Mr. KNOWLES: He should be a minister.

CATTLE

SHIPMENTS TO UNITED STATES—SHORTAGE OF U.S. DOLLARS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. E. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I would like to ask the acting minister of agriculture whether any further consideration has been given to lifting the embargo on Canadian cattle going into the United States, in view of the shortage of American dollars?

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): That question, too, will be given consideration.

Mr. ROWE: We did not hear the answer.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I said that that matter will also be given consideration.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Might I ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture this question: Has he been coached by the Prime Minister or by the Minister of Agriculture or both?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

INCOME TAX

EXPENSES INCURRED BY TEACHERS IN TAKING SUMMER SCHOOL COURSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister received any representations from the Manitoba teachers society, or teachers' organizations in other provinces, in connection with deductions from taxable income of expenses incurred while taking summer school courses? If so, is the minister prepared to give consideration to their request?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I have received no notice of the question, and have no recollection of any representations having been made. I shall inquire and will give an answer later.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I sent notice of the question this morning.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. J. A. Dion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Bracken, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I had begun to speak yesterday on the question of inflation, which seems to me a danger to our economy perhaps second only to that of the atomic bomb, and much more immediate. I pointed out the tremendous increase during the last eight years in the quantity of our money. I pointed out how that arose naturally during the war. I pointed out that the increase in money was not accompanied by any corresponding increase in goods. I pointed out further that that condition had been accentuated by the policy followed subsequent to the war, which I thought—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I dislike having to interrupt the hon. member, but I must point out to hon. members that there is so much noise in the chamber that it is disagreeable to the member who has the floor and, I am sure, to everyone who is trying to listen to what he is saying.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might say to hon. members that they had better listen now because it gets much duller as it goes on. This is the best part.

I just wanted to add that I had pointed out yesterday my belief, and the belief I have no doubt of everyone who reflects upon it, that notwithstanding the fact that this matter is of enormous importance, the government when recently putting before the house the question of high prices had entirely neglected this question of inflation; and I quoted the remark of an American writer to the effect that inflation was the crime and the government was the criminal, adding that our government was seeking to implicate other criminals so as to draw attention away from itself.

I wish to go on now and point out to you and to the house why I think that the policy pursued since 1945 has been wrong; why I think it is doing serious damage now, and, further, why I think that unless steps are taken to correct it there is more damage to be expected.

The diagnosis of 1945 was wrong. I said yesterday that I thought there was an excuse for the government, when coming to the end of the war, to believe that they might be faced with depressed conditions, and I did not think of blaming them for not realizing that they would be faced with a boom. But one can blame them, and blame them severely, for having continued for three years in their failure to recognize that what we are having now is a boom condition. The diagnosticians prescribed the wrong medicine. The condition which they foresaw and prescribed for was a condition of anæmia, whereas what we have had has been a fever. In plain words, they used artificial means to keep down the rate of interest and keep up the supply of money.

What are they doing now? They are confusing or trying to confuse the people of the country by leading them off on a wild-goose chase in the committee. As a matter of fact the proceedings of the committee have indicated already that it is a wild-goose chase. I think the government's own officials have given enough evidence to show the nature of this foolish proceeding which the government of Canada has embarked upon.

In case anyone suggests that I am putting forward some wild idea that we should wreck the economy of the country in order to bring down prices, may I say this. I notice the governor of the Bank of Canada the other day made the statement that he did not want to burn the house down in order to cook his pig. He has been reading Charles Lamb, I presume. I do not want to burn the house down either to cook the pig, but temperate, gradual means should be taken, and there is no sign, or precious little sign, of the government doing that in any way, shape or form.

Let us now deal with the question of low interest. Some people seem to think that if you talk about interest you are touching some sacred thing and that you will arouse every person in this country against you. I am not afraid of that. What is interest? What does artificially low interest mean? It is interest which is kept down by artificial means. It gives us easy money. What do we mean by easy money? Just what we say—lots of money, money easy to get, money easy to spend, encouraging people to borrow whether it is wise for them to borrow or not, so that the money can be spent.

In a moment I shall quote from an authority suggesting that perhaps a good deal of money has been spent incautiously, that some of the chickens may come home to roost. What is the remedy for this? What is the remedy which has been tested by the generations? It is that when we get into boom times the rate of interest should be allowed to rise gradually and naturally. As I say, that is a remedy which has been tested by the wisdom of men for generations. What has happened here? Our government has undertaken to set it at naught. What I say is that if one undertakes to set at naught the tried and tested results of experience, if one undertakes to say that he knows more than all other men know, then he must be right. One cannot afford to come back later on and say: We thought we knew more than everybody else, but now we find that we do not.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Was it not the rise in the interest rates that immediately precipitated the great depression of 1929?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I shall not try to answer that in a hurry, because there were a great many conditions that arose there. My hon. friend and I can discuss that at some other time; I have only twenty minutes left.

Let me come back to what I was saying. A rising interest rate is the corrective which has been recognized for generations. It has been set at naught, and what has happened? We have got into the deadly spiral. There are four well-recognized stages, you might say, in the deadly spiral. First of all, prices go up, and labour naturally asks for increased wages. Profits being good and demand being good, employers are inclined not to demur to such a request, and increases will be given to labour. As 85 per cent of costs consist of wages or services paid to other people who are self-employed, then prices go up. There is another turn in the spiral. But owing to the abundant means of payment, and the fact that prices are still soaring, these goods can be sold and so you have the deadly spiral which we are in the midst of now. In this atmosphere, expansion is in the air. This is in the psychology of boom; and if we go on allowing the psychology of boom to continue undisturbed, uncontrolled and uncorrected, we all know what will happen. We get a bust; and the longer it goes, the worse is the bust. What I charge against the government is that they are now refusing to allow the proper correctives to work, that they are stimulating and intensifying the situation and making certain that we shall have a bust. The government may say: Oh, we are not making these expenditures; private individuals are making these expenditures. In the main that is true. But what I charge is that the government is creating the wrong atmosphere. The government, by its credit policy, should not be making it easy for these people to go on expanding.

The other day a competent authority, Mr. Dobson, the president of the Bank of Montreal, stated as follows:

> Much construction is going forward now at costs so high that only continuous prosperity at present levels can make it pay.

In other words, unless we go on and on, and up and up, some of these chickens will come home to roost. We are all on the merry-go-round. I say that the ordinary correctives have been denied to the economy. The government has prevented them by its financial policy. I do not think we ought to believe for one minute that we are necessarily at the end of the road yet. Doctor James of McGill, who is a well recognized authority in the field of finance and incidentally I think was chosen by this government as one authority on its planning commission during the war, says this: "Tremendous forces for potential inflation still exist". That statement was made a couple of days ago. He says those forces still exist. In other words, if we go on at this rate the boom will turn into a bust. Some people seem to think we are on a verge of a bust now. Indeed I heard someone say the other day, "Is that not just the Prime Minister's luck? We are going to get a break in prices and he is going to be saved". What I say is this: if we have a break in prices even now it will cause enough disturbance and the government even now will have the responsibility because for three years we have had this wrong inflationary financial policy forced upon us.

I have already said that I believe that up to 1945 this expansionist policy was justified, or at any rate there was a great deal of reason for it, and that we certainly should not come back and try to criticize it. It is since that time that the mistake has been made. Lest anyone should say I am overlooking the fact that the classic corrective of higher interest does cause certain distress, let me say that I am not overlooking that at all. I know it caused certain distress and I know that in the community of today we must take care of that distress. We must see that by allowing what Keynes called the classic medicine to work, we do not disregard those whom it affects. But what I say is if we are to have a bust or anything like a bust because of this policy, twenty times as much distress will be caused as would have been caused by allowing the natural corrective of rising interest rates to work.

Whatever possessed the government, which is pleased with itself and which occasionally has won praise even from others, to get into this situation, I think, like a good many other things, it can be traced to the war mentality. We had order in council government during the war; and what we should remember is that order in council government does not really mean order in council government; it means minister government. It means that the minister gets endorsement of the cabinet, but naturally the minister must make his own decision. Therefore we come back to the Department of Finance which for years has had virtually unlimited power and unlimited money. When we came to the end of the war I think it was extremely difficult for them to understand that new circumstances had arisen, and they carried their war controls into peace controls. It is interesting to observe that the war controls on other things have been diminished and in some cases done away with; but the war controls on money are practically the same as they were. Indeed we know that since 1946 they have in certain cases been increased. How long is this going on? Is it going on for ever?

I come now to what is the key or the root of the whole matter, namely, the control of money, of its use and of its supply which goes on through the interest rate. It is another case of arbitrary power which I spoke about the other evening. As a matter of fact, while many people may escape the arbitrary power of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, nobody escapes the arbitrary power of the Department of Finance. It touches everybody. So we are especially interested in this power. The low rate of interest is owing to the fact that the Bank of Canada, by buying bonds in the market, keeps this rate of interest artificially low. They support the market for long-term Dominion of Canada bonds at a price of about $102 when these same bonds are selling in the United States at a discount of about sixteen points below par. I understand that in the United States these bonds are called orphan bonds. Incidentally, this discount is partly due to the utter unreality of the situation here. The truth is that the market for Dominion of Canada bonds in Canada is a sham. The only real buyer on balance is the Bank of Canada. I say it is a sham while the bank persists in maintaining this artificial situation. Those who ordinarily establish the rate, the dealers —and let us bear in mind that they are the very dealers who placed in the hands of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who bought in good faith huge amounts of bonds during the war—now, because of the arbitrary action of the government, have no basis on which they can form a judgment as to the true value of the securities in order to advise their clients.

In other words, as I say, the bond market is a sham, with the Bank of Canada on balance being the only real buyer. How are the dealers to know, under these artificial conditions, when the Bank of Canada is going to take another step, as it did a month ago, to disrupt the market? The step they took a month ago, when they partly withdrew support, caused the market to fall some two points, which is a violent disruption in ordinary times, I suppose the worst since September, 1939, or perhaps June, 1940. Now as a matter of fact everything is confused; no one knows what the bank is going to do. I noticed that at the annual meeting the other day the governor spoke of what they had done; nevertheless he indicated there was still to be some support. So apparently they allowed this little breath of reality to blow in upon the situation, but now again we are to have support, though no one knows to what extent. In other words the value of bonds in Canada at the present time does not depend, as it always has in the past and as it must again some day in the future, upon the judgment of hundreds of thousands of people buying and selling—because after all there is safety in a multitude of judgments; now it depends upon the judgment of the Department of Finance, the same judgment that made the decision in June, 1946, which so many people now regard as disastrous.

Of course, here as elsewhere one control leads to another. When the bank begins to control the price of Dominion of Canada bonds it finds it cannot stop there but has to step out, so that now, in the case of other financing, the Dominion of Canada has to come to the rescue. Just the other day I am told that in connection with a certain large issue of some $35,000,000 the dealers found, as they are finding in many cases, that there were not enough buyers unless Dominion of Canada bonds could be turned in as the purchase price. So what happened in this case was that fifty to seventy-five per cent of the buyers handed to the dealers as their purchase price Dominion of Canada bonds. The dealers then turned around and sold them, and to whom? They were sold to the only real buyer, the Bank of Canada. So we have reached the point where the Bank of Canada is now not merely underwriting Dominion of Canada bonds but other bonds as well.

It is high time, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada asked themselves how long this is to go on. How long is the department going to dam back the waters? The longer the flood is held back the greater will be the break; and there will be a break some day, a break which will bring tremendous unsettlement with it if no steps are taken to let it come gradually. In the interests of common sense I appeal to the Minister of Finance to begin to let nature take its course.

My time is running out, and I want to say just a word about the effect of this low interest rate. Of course it strikes a body blow at everyone trying to look after himself, everyone who is trying to save money against his old age. It strikes a body blow against those paying their money to insurance companies. I sometimes wonder whether it is possible that the official mind gets to the point where it does not want independent people, people who think for themselves. I do not know whether it is possible for them to get to the point where they want as many people as possible dependent on the government. Sometimes one almost thinks that must be so.

A moment ago I said that in a multitude of opinions there is wisdom. That is the only way we ever got on. Is there any reason to believe that in one department of government there is enough ability to set itself up against or rather substitute itself for, the common capacity for judgment of those who act together, who proceed by trial and error, making mistakes here and being corrected by other people there and eventually arriving at what is a sound view? That is the only way we can progress, as I suggest it is the only way we have progressed thus far. For what reason do they believe they are always right? They caused a great disturbance a month ago by what they did then. I am not going to go over again the disturbance caused in June 1946 by their embargoes and taxes and penalties and permits, and now our subjection to the decrees of the minister of reconstruction.

I have argued that this peril of inflation is something we cannot disregard. In other countries it has produced indescribable unsettlement; or perhaps "unsettlement" is not strong enough, so I would say it has produced indescribable distress. I said yesterday we here have regarded inflation as something which happened in funny foreign countries, something which could not happen here. Well, I see no reason why it cannot happen here if we do the things which made it happen elsewhere. There is no reason to think that if we act in time we cannot prevent it, but I see no action being taken by the government with that in view. Perhaps I should not say that; some action is being taken. The government has redeemed certain bonds in the last year, but I see no action worthy of the name being mentioned to deal with this situation. Do not let us provide a complete cushion for ourselves by just saying we cannot do anything because of the United States. I know the influence of the United States upon us is very great; nevertheless I was interested to read that after the first war one brave little country, as it was then and I hope still is, that is Czechoslovakia, managed to preserve its currency by proper measures taken within that country itself, even though it was surrounded by a sea of inflation.

What we need now is wise action by the government, and also moderation and self-restraint on the part of all, because if everyone, capital, labour, agriculture and so on, seeks his own immediate advantage—and I underline the "immediate"—I think there is incredible trouble waiting for us all. I have said more than once that I believe that so far the government has largely failed, and that it is now engaged in obscuring the issue. Someone wonders whether they are hoping that a semi-depression is at hand to cure the situation. But I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that this problem faces us; that I believe we are now on the wrong track; that what we are doing is utterly unreal, and I call upon the government to bring forth real remedies in time.

Mr. D. J. McCUAIG (Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I believe the speech from the throne is looked upon as a forecast of government policy and future economic trends. In the present speech from the throne I see no fundamental change from government policy in any other session of this parliament, or any change from the pre-war economy of Canada. It is my opinion that a definite national policy should be on the way, and that the Liberal party has fallen down in the exercise of the powers the people of Canada have placed in its hands. If anything, greed and dissension are more prevalent now than at any other time. The new order the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has spoken of, for which many laid down their lives, is nowhere in sight. The very spirit that spelled the doom of three powerful regimes in the past eight years still prevails and is becoming more intensified every day on this continent of North America, as the austerity program, the McCann income tax witch hunt, as I call it, and the Prime Minister's resolution will testify. The almighty dollar is still uppermost in the minds of men. It takes first place. The greatest of God's handiwork, men, women and children, take second place. Eighty-five per cent of the people of Canada, including the workers and the producers, those who produce the goods which keep us alive, the workers in our mines and forests and factories who make everything we wear and everything we have around us, those who serve the public and look after our needs, get but a small share of that great common heritage available for the use of all mankind. The eighty-five per cent found in those three classes are the salt of the earth; the nation's strength is measured by their welfare.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

It would appear to me that the two great world wars, with all their sacrifice of lives and property, have availed nothing and taught us nothing. But one thing is sure, that we are more enslaved to the great national debt and to the almighty dollar than we ever were before in our lives. The concentration of wealth in the hands of a few and the ever-increasing burden of taxation upon the working people violate every aspect of common interest among men.

It is becoming more apparent to me as time goes by that, if it has the welfare of the people at heart, the government will have to regard seriously the fact that the present economic policy does not take care of the interests of the majority of the Canadian people, and that the men who own and control our natural resources, our transportation systems and our financial structure hold the destinies of every soul in Canada in the hollows of their hands. These people defy government, and something will have to be done about it. With them, scarcity, lower costs and higher prices come first; the needs of the people second. They turn the key in the lock and they defy the government, as they did in connection with wartime contracts—costs plus five per cent. The British Columbia legislature had a taste of this when a ceiling was placed on the price of oil products. The oil concerns cut off supplies and sat back. There is no longer such a thing as competition among those big fellows. They are a brotherhood of exploiters, taking all that the traffic will bear, all the time. They defy governments and get away with it.

The things I see happening around me every day while sitting in parliament almost lead me to believe that the government ministers are part and parcel of the racket. Or perhaps they belong to the same school and do not know any better. Their world is a world of flat-top desks, adding machines and typewriters. They never rub shoulders with the realities of life and simply do not realize the struggles of the home builder or the very important part he plays in the building of the nation.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why don't you stop reading the manuscript written by Dave Lewis?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: If you wish to say something, get up and try it.

Mr. BENTLEY: It is smarter than anything you ever did.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that if the hon. member is going to abuse cabinet ministers and members on this side of the house, he should at least do it from his own thoughts and not from a prepared manuscript such as he has been reading since he began to speak.

Mr. FRASER: The Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) read all of his yesterday.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why did you not object, then?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Did you see the Minister of Mines and Resources reading his speech yesterday?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Why did you not object?

Mr. BENTLEY: Fine sports over there!

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that it is against the rules of the house to read his speech.

Mr. HOMUTH: He is using copious notes.

Mr. McCUAIG: I thank you, Mr. Speaker; I shall do the best I can.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; I must call the attention of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) to the fact that neither is it in order to smoke in the chamber.

Mr. HOMUTH: I humbly apologize. I wanted to speak to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) before going to a committee meeting, and had forgotten that I was smoking. I assure Your Honour my breach of the rules was inadvertent.

Mr. McCUAIG: Good homes and healthy families are the foundation of the nation. Can any man stand in parliament and say that we are not far behind in these things? Hon. members of the C.C.F. have repeatedly asked the government to continue wartime economies, or at least until such time as parity is reached between production and wages. The more scientific method has never been even attempted by the government. The whole economy of Canada has been thrown back into the lap of monopolistic institutions. The government should have known better. Those institutions have used this privilege both before and during the war, and parliament is well aware of what has gone on since that time. Those institutions—

Mr. SINCLAIR: You lost your place, did you?

Mr. McCUAIG: No one knows this better than the Prime Minister, who has said this:

> The war has shown us that the way of monopoly, of unrestricted power, is a way that leads to destruction, desolation and death.

Those are the Prime Minister's words as they appear in his speech delivered before the convention of the American Federation of Labor at Toronto on October 9, 1942.

The Prime Minister said this further, as reported in the press:

> I do not believe you can settle the labour question, the question of the relation of capital and labour, until you give the man who invests his life in industry the same say in control as you give the man who invests his money.

Those are the Prime Minister's words as reported in the Regina Leader-Post of October 10. 1935. The Prime Minister knows the score. And if all the things he had in mind are contained in his resolution of January, 1948, I shall be one of the most pleased men in parliament.

Let me repeat that if ever Canada is to become a prosperous and wealthy country, a more equitable distribution of wealth will have to be made. Certainly we do not have that equitable distribution in Canada today. The best evidence of this is found in the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), as they appear in his budget address of 1947. This was what the minister said:

> The exemption levels established last year are high enough to exempt completely from tax more than half the people earning incomes in Canada.

This is on the basis of $750 for a single man and $1,500 for a married man. If this shows anything it is that more than half the people of Canada, our producers, our workers and those who provide service for the public, are getting less than $750 a year. Over half of our population of workers are receiving less than the minimum required for personal and living expenses in 1944, according to the Toronto Welfare Council. In that year they set the figure at $1,850 and today it is close to $2,300. There is nothing left to build houses, to educate children and to provide for old age. The moment a married man gets above that figure it is taxed away from him. He can never build a modern house on what is left of $1,500; it is all taken up by his living expenses. It is only by our people having good homes and good health that we can become a nation with economic security.

I earnestly ask the government to raise the income tax exemptions to $1,000 for a single person and $2,500 for a married person. I am sure that if that question was put to the people's representatives in this parliament it would be carried on all sides. When it comes to a real issue like this, democracy does not work. Parliament is powerless.

I should like to deal now with agriculture, the most important industry in Canada. The weal or woe of agriculture affects every industry and every person in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has taken a lot of credit for the wheat agreements, and I am willing to let him have all the credit he deserves for what he put into the four-year agreement with the United Kingdom and the five-year agreement between the producers and the government. For a long time the producers, through their organizations, have been asking for stabilized prices for farm products and that the wheat board should market all grain. In my opinion the stabilized wheat price that has been provided carries with it too great a sacrifice in price. It amounts to a direct tax on the farmers or the wheat growers amounting to millions of dollars.

I claim to be a practical farmer; I am not a speech maker. I learned the hard way. As I say, agriculture is the most important industry in Canada but it has never been treated as such. The government's attitude toward the farmer, the tiller of the soil, has been one of contempt and discrimination.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Protection and subsidies.

An hon. MEMBER: No margarine.

Mr. McCUAIG: I leave all that to hon. gentlemen over there. In the depression of the early thirties agriculture took the worst beating of any industry or business in Canada. I am speaking mainly of Saskatchewan, of which I know the most. Wheat went down to 19 cents a bushel for No. 1 at the local shipping point.

Mr. GRANT: That was the Tories.

Mr. McCUAIG: What about 1935 and 1936 when the Liberals were in power? The price received for coarse grains would not pay the cost of harvesting, threshing and hauling, to say nothing of operating costs, repairs and depreciation. In 1936 and 1937 there was no market for stock. The government bought carloads, even trainloads at one and two cents per pound and shipped them to the packers and later on the public paid plenty for that stuff. The farmers' co-operative abattoir at Saskatoon was bypassed, it got none of that business. I contend that the government discriminated against that co-operative and was responsible in a large measure for its going under. The government's friends, the packers, did very well, but under that kind of economy the farmers went broke and were faced with an ever-increasing burden of debt. I should like to put on the record the details of how the government came to the aid of Canada's No. 1 industry. I have in my hand a food schedule which reads as follows:

Bureau of Labour and Public Welfare

Food Schedule
Local Improvement Districts
Rural Municipalities Villages

Maximum food allowance for one month

1 person	$ 6.40
2 persons	10.30
3 persons	12.40
4 persons	14.50
5 persons	16.50
6 persons	18.50
7 persons	20.50
8 persons	22.50
9 persons	24.50
10 persons	26.50
11 persons	28.00
12 persons	29.50

That is dated September 1, 1936. The amount provided for 20 persons is $38.40 or $1.922 per person per month. Then there is another statement which is underlined and which reads:

Important

Instructions to secretary-treasurer

1. If applicant has meat, deduct 15 per cent; dairy products 10 per cent; vegetables 10 per cent.

2. Secretaries should carefully check prices charged by merchants to see that only fair and just prices are being charged for commodities provided under food schedule.

We had short crops in 1936 and 1937. According to the dominion bureau of statistics in 1936, crop district 3 yielded 4·4 bushels per acre while crop district 4 yielded 1·2 bushels per acre. In 1937 crop district 3 yielded 0·2 bushels per acre and crop district 4, 0·1 bushels per acre. There were practically no crops in those districts in those two years. There were conditions existing in those years over which the farmer had no control, but his expenses went on just the same. In the spring of 1938 the farmers had to get seed to sow their crop. The wheat board still had wheat in the local elevators. It was government wheat, bought at low prices, and it could have been supplied to municipalities for seed at cost, plus handling charges. But that was too simple a way to do business. The wheat board and the grain exchange could function in 1938, the wheat board taking delivery of wheat when the price dropped below 70 cents f.o.b. the lakehead. That would be 50 cents at the local point. Naturally the grain exchange operated only when wheat went above 70 cents at the lakehead; but the two short crops started gamblers speculating and in February and March, 1938, wheat went up to $1.40 on the Winnipeg grain exchange, and the farmers had to pay $1.42 for their 1938 seed. It was purely a speculative market. I would say it was a deal between the government and the gamblers to impoverish a little more the already down and broke farmers, because in June, 1938, before some of that seed was even up, wheat was back in the 50's at the local points.

I should like to make this observation. In 1942 a delegation of 400 farmers came to Ottawa with a petition signed by 185,000 farmers asking the government to raise the price of wheat from 70 cents at the lakehead to $1. The government saw fit to raise the price to only 90 cents; and it stayed at 90 cents until September 27, 1943, and then wheat went up. On the open market and on the Winnipeg grain exchange it went up to $1.35. Then the government stepped in and closed the Winnipeg grain exchange and put a ceiling price of $1.25 a bushel on wheat. I want to make this point. In 1938 when the farmers had to buy seed, in other words were in the market to buy wheat, wheat went up to $1.45 on the Winnipeg grain exchange. The government went along with them. They did not put a ceiling price on then. The government went along with the grain exchange and charged the farmers $1.42 for the seed.

In 1943, as I said, wheat went up to $1.35, and for the first time the farmers had a chance to make something on their wheat, but the government put a ceiling on it. That is the way the government dealt with the farmers.

Hon. members have heard about the 1938 wheat scandal. When the C.C.F. got into power in Saskatchewan the first thing they did was to cancel on their own responsibility 50 per cent of the 1938 seed debt, knowing, as they did, the practical side of this business and the ordeal that the farmers had come through, and they asked the federal government to cancel the other 50 per cent. Did the federal government do that? No, they did not. They held on to the last cent with five per cent interest, and are still trying to collect, and have collected up to now, 100 per cent on this seed grain debt. Let me say further that this same government are still holding out for a 1914 seed grain debt on grain that was delivered from 1914 to 1923. Ninety per cent of the original recipients have gone, but they are still trying to squeeze it out of somebody else.

Compare this treatment with the hand-outs given to the big fellows, the manufacturers, transportation companies and finance companies, steel subsidies of millions of dollars, coal subsidies, aluminum subsidies, oil subsidies, farm machinery subsidies, and so forth. The manufacturers of farm machinery were permitted to raise their prices 12½ per cent at a time when their financial statements showed that they were making good money. A subsidy of $400,000 was given to the people who had a monopoly on bathtubs and toilet fixtures; a $60,000,000 loan to the C.P.R. was guaranteed by the government; subsidies were given to the gold mines and millions of dollars were given to the financial institutions through the issuing of currency privileges. The wheat deal was made with the same kind of discrimination, absolutely without soul, and I would say without human consideration. First the government took approximately 320 million bushels of wheat through the wheat board and sold it to the Canadian domestic trade for $1.25 a bushel, or 30 cents a bushel under the export price of $1.55.

If Canadian consumers should have cheap wheat then let all of Canada pay for it, and not make it a direct tax on the producer, which actually amounted to $300 on every 1,000 bushels of the 320 million bushels sold to the domestic users in Canada, who are the millers, the feeders and the distillers. The same thing can be said with regard to the deal with the United Kingdom. In the years 1946 and 1947 the government sold 160 million bushels in each year, or a total of 320 million bushels, to the United Kingdom at a price of $1.55 a bushel. This was well over $1 a bushel below the world price, because the world price had risen to $3.35 a bushel on the outside markets. If the United Kingdom was to have cheap wheat, again I say that all of Canada should provide it. It should not be a direct tax on the farmer and the wheat grower who pays all other taxes, a direct tax of $1,000 on every thousand bushels sold to the United Kingdom. What do you call that?—confiscation, taking it directly from the farmers? We hear about dictatorship in Russia. What would you call this?

I want to go back to the income tax business. I have reviewed the low prices and the crop failures through the thirties, and the discrimination in wheat prices. The farmer piled up a debt of operating costs and depreciation, losses on farm machinery, car and truck, unpaid interest on bank borrowings and mortgages, insurance, oil bills, store bills, doctors and hospitals, and back taxes. He got a crop in 1942. The proceeds of that crop have long been spent. It was not his money.

It was trust money belonging to the men who trusted him and carried him over the bad years, through bad conditions over which he had no control. But what happens? When he sells his 1942 crop he is told that he can deduct only the current operating expenses for income tax purposes; that none of his previous losses, operating losses, depreciation, or any other expenses of the low crop and the low price years can be carried forward.

I would ask the Minister of National Revenue to make a statement on the floor of this house to justify such a policy towards the farmer. I would ask him to name any other industry in Canada which has been dealt with in the same way.

Then the Minister of National Revenue comes along with his income tax guide and income tax form. I contend that not ten per cent of the farmers can fill out this form without help. I object to such questions. In plain farmers' language it means this: "How much money have you in your pocket? How much have you hidden away? What kind of stocks and bonds have you? Name them."

I have received letters from many farmers. I have here a letter from a farmer in my own constituency. It is first-hand evidence and I would like to read it:

Dear Sir:

No doubt you have already seen the new income tax forms T-1 prairie farmers 1947, and if not it will do you good to have a look at one soon. Most farmers thought that the old forms were complicated enough, but that was before the minister came out with this new masterpiece incorporating a quiz contest and a nightmare.

They require a complete opening and closing inventory for the year 1947. This information was not required before this and very few farmers if any will be able to go back a year and give an accurate and correct account of all grains on hand and the disposition thereof for the full year, including the exact numbers of bushels used for seed, feed, etc., number of bushels on hand at beginning and end of year, and it asks you to place a valuation on it all. I would suggest that the farmers engage the services of a teacup reader to determine what will be required of us next year so that we will not be again caught in a similar predicament, and perhaps a crystal gazer will be able to tell us too what amounts of grains we will require for seed and feed out of grains on hand. It wants to have you state separately the number of bushels of grain held for sale and for seed, and place a value on it. This will be rather tricky, as five days ago a bushel of barley was worth roughly 15 or 20 per cent more than at present, and what price basis are we to use in valuing it? At present few farmers have completed their seeding plans, largely due to the failure of our government in establishing a stable market for all farm produce, and especially coarse grains, yet the income tax department expects us to state the number of bushels and the value of it, of all grains we will be using for seed and feed for the entire year ahead, as well as for the past year.

I am surprised that our farm organizations have not taken this up already, as this is one thing that should be corrected and soon.

I am not capable of expressing myself well enough to do this thing justice, but I wish you would do what you can to have this mathematician's nightmare simplified.

This is a sample of the letters I have received. Many farmers are up in the air about the whole approach to the income tax situation as set out in this income tax form, and I hope that something will be done to provide a more workable one. If this procedure gets going in the west it will take more than inspectors to handle it.

On page 6 of "The Farmers' Income Tax Guide", prepared by the Minister of National Revenue, you will find the following questions and answers:

Question: What is farm income? On what theory is it worked out?

The answer is:

There is a great mass of laws about income, and an answer which will meet all varieties of cases is not a simple matter. However, in general, it is the difference between the annual receipts from all the work done on the farm and the expenses of doing the work. Personal and living expenses of the farmer's family cannot be included as expenses.

All the work done on the farm! All the garden work, milking cows, feeding calves, feeding pigs, chickens, and a dozen other jobs—all this is done before breakfast and after supper by the farmer and his family. It is not a matter of an eight hour day. It is a matter of putting in the hours that will get the work done, and no allowance is made for this. This shows how impractical the Minister of National Revenue is in making these laws.

The coarse grain received about the same treatment. When sixty per cent or more of the coarse grains were marketed the government took the ceiling off. The grain exchange took over, and overnight these fellows made more money than the farmers did in the whole year. The farmer took it for granted that the government would not change their policy.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. McCUAIG: Have I consent?

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): The hon. member may continue only with the permission of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: He has it.

Mr. McCUAIG: May I ask the Minister of Agriculture and the member for Rosthern this question: Who is going to reimburse the farmers for this loss on coarse grains? When will it be done, and how?

The stockmen got the same kind of deal. First, without warning, the subsidy was taken off, and then ceilings. The farmers found themselves in a business that did not pay. Young pigs went down to $1 or even fifty cents each. The farmers shipped all their breeding stock, pigs in all conditions, to the market, and as soon as this was done we heard that the price of pork and livestock had gone up, but too late for the farmers to take any advantage of this. It seemed to me that this was an organized deal. According to one report I heard, the abattoirs, the packers, made $10,000,000 on the quantity of stock they had at the old prices.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, during the time at my disposal this afternoon I intend to discuss external affairs, first, because I happen to be a member of the committee on external affairs; second, because the house seldom, if ever, has the opportunity of discussing external affairs; third, because of certain developments which are taking place in the world today, and last, because of a statement that was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) just before this house met after the Christmas adjournment. According to the press report on January 20, the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> The world was in an "appallingly dangerous condition" today. "Let us not speak of having entered upon an era of peace," Mr. King warned, "where all about us are evidences of strife."

Then the day before yesterday the leader of the C.C.F. party directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) in these words, as reported at page 1282 of Hansard:

> In view of the grave warning by the Palestine commission to the security council yesterday that " tragic and dangerous precedent" will be established if force or the threat of force is allowed to thwart the decision of the united nations, is the government prepared to accept its share of responsibility in such action as may be taken by the security council with the view to averting further bloodshed in Palestine and implementing the assembly decision?

I do not intend to read the answer made by the minister; neither shall I attempt to interpret it. But apparently it has caused speculation in the press. If, as some people seem to think, it means that Canada is to be committed to armed intervention in Palestine, I wish to put on record at this time the fact that I am absolutely opposed to it. May I refer to a speech that I made in this house two years ago last December. On December 17, 1945, speaking on external affairs, I said, as reported at page 3706 of Hansard:

> I have no brief for either Arabs or Jews—

I should have said "Zionists" there.

> —but it seems to me that the public hears only the Zionist arguments, never the Arab side of the question. As I have said, I have no brief for either side; my sole concern is to establish the truth, for just as truth and freedom are indivisible, so mutual faith in the given word is the basis of friendship, individual and international. Once that faith is destroyed or even impaired, trust and friendship turn to suspicion and hatred. But instead of historic fact, the Zionists base their case on racial, cultural and commercial superiority. These claims on behalf of a favoured nation and a chosen people are upheld especially by leftists and internationalists, by the very people who denounce racism and nationalism. They also are the people who claim especially to be the world's peacemakers but who, in the face of continued and fatal rioting in Palestine, are going out of their way to embarrass Great Britain in her efforts to maintain peace by encouraging tolerance by both Arab and Jew.

Then a little later on in my speech I said:

> Quite recently it was reported that the national leader of the C.C.F. at a public meeting in Washington, "urged the immediate opening of Palestine for Jewish immigration to the fullest possible extent so as to provide a refuge from the terror of their persecutors." In the light of the present critical conditions in Palestine, I would ask the leader of the C.C.F.: Can he assure us in making those demands that he is promoting the interests of world peace? Does he realize that such demands are calculated to embarrass Great Britain and if insisted on may lead to a clash of interests between the British empire, the United States of America and the U.S.S.R.? In the event of war in Palestine and the near east, is he prepared to commit Canadians to active service in such a war? If not, whom would he expect to fight it?

Those are the words I spoke here two years ago last December, I think subsequent events have justified what I then said. The question of partition is the one question which has come before the UNO upon which Russia is in agreement.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): That is not so.

Mr. JAQUES: I think that is a significant fact. On the other hand the British government—and I am not going to quote the exact words—made it plain enough that they are against partition. They are against the use of force and they are not in agreement with any settlement which involves the use of force. I cannot help wondering why it was that this government should have taken sides against the British government.

Mr. HARTT: Thirty-three other nations did so.

Mr. JAQUES: Well, I may come to that later on. I am making the statement that the British government—who have in all probability forgotten more about Palestine and the near east than all the rest of the nations put together—have refused to be a party to this partition.

Mr. HARTT: Certainly. They wanted Arab oil. It is oil, not Arabs. That is what it means. It is not the principle; it is the oil.

Mr. BROOKS: The United States wants votes.

Mr. JAQUES: I do not want to be personal, and I am not making a political speech. I do not even know that I have the agreement of everyone in this corner of the house. I was going to say that it does strike me as odd that the leaders of the C.C.F. were prompt enough to hail the labour victory in Great Britain as a victory for the C.C.F., but why is it that after two years or so of labour government in Great Britain the C.C.F. now are backing the policies of capitalist United States and are opposed to the foreign policies of the labour government of Great Britain? I think that is a good question.

Mr. KNOWLES: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. JAQUES: Well, I have quite a lot to get through, but all right.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is a very short question. Is the hon. member aware of the fact that there is now before the world a decision taken by the united nations, and that it was in support of this decision that the leader of this group asked his question the other day?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes, but my point is that before the decision was taken the British had no support, as far as I know, from either the government of this country or the C.C.F. party; and as far as Canadians themselves are concerned, according to a recent Gallup poll, while some fifty per cent of the people expressed no opinion, only nineteen per cent expressed sympathy with the Zionist cause. It was stated in the press that when the minister gave his answer yesterday there was applause from all corners of the house. Well, I wish it to be understood that I did not add to the applause; and I must say it was about the loudest silence I have heard for a long time. It must have been in a corner, because I heard very little of it. I do not wish to pose as an expert on this question, but I intend to put on record opinions which have been published by eminent Jews in the United States. I have been accused of anti-semitism and racial extremism because of my stand on this Palestine question. So I am going to put on record the statements of two American Zionists one of whom, Albert Kahn, visited this country a year ago and addressed a series of meetings. I take this short quotation from the press of that time. He said "the British in Palestine were worse than the nazis and should be driven into the sea". "Anti-semitism and fascism were raging in North America", and "the Jews must look to the Soviet Union for protection through the labour unions". I should say that is a libel on the majority of Jews.

I have here a copy of PM which I bought when I was in New York a year ago, containing an advertisement written by Ben Hecht, who is certainly a nationally known Zionist. I am not going to read it all, but it contains these words:

> Every time you blow up a British arsenal, or wreck a British jail, or send a British railroad train sky high, or rob a British bank or let go with your guns and bombs at the British betrayers and invaders of your homeland, the Jews of America make a little holiday in their hearts.

I say that is another libel on the majority of Jews; but certainly Mr. Hecht is a Zionist and a very strong one. That, I should say, is an example of racial extremism. Now I have a page out of National Affairs; I have not the date, but it was some time last summer. It bears a photograph, under which there is the title "U.S. Zionist in action." This Zionist is busy writing on the wall of the British consulate in New York the words "British following the nazis" and then painting the swastika on the building, and this occurred in other cities as well. That is another example, I would say, of racial extremism.

Let me now quote the words of one who was highly respected and eminent among the Jews in the United States, though he is dead now. I refer to the late Henry Morgenthau, senior. In his autobiography "All in a Lifetime", Mr. Morgenthau devoted a chapter to this question of political Zionism. He said:

> Zionism is the most stupendous fallacy in Jewish history. I assert that it is wrong in principle and impossible of realization; that it is unsound in its economics, fantastical in its politics, and sterile in its spiritual ideals. . . . The very fervour of my feeling for the oppressed of every race and every land, especially for the Jews, those of my own blood and faith, to whom I am bound by every tender tie, impels me to fight with all the greater force against this scheme, which my intelligence tells me can only lead them deeper into the mire of the past, while it professes to be leading them to the heights. Zionism is a surrender, not a solution. It is a retrogression into the blackest error, and not progress toward the light. I will go further, and say that it is a betrayal; it is an eastern European proposal, fathered in this country by American Jews, which, if it were to succeed, would cost the Jews of America most that they have gained in liberty, equality and fraternity.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the hon. member say what he is quoting from?

Mr. JAQUES: I thought I had done so. It was from Mr. Morgenthau's autobiography "All in a Lifetime." I tried to get it in the library but apparently they do not have it, though they promised to get a copy.

Now I come to the opinion of Mr. Benjamin Freedman, who is still living, of course, and who is an eminent Jew in the United States. He wrote an article which was published by the national economic council, incorporated, 350 Fifth avenue, New York; and this letter is dated October 15, 1947. This is what Mr. Freedman says on this question:

> The threat of political Zionism to the welfare and security of America is little realized. It is a dangerous mistake to think of it as a localized, Arab-Jewish struggle. There may soon take place in Palestine an explosion that will set off another world war. Every American citizen, every head of a family, all members of Christian churches, every non-Zionist Jew, should be brought to understand that the consequences can be fatally disastrous.
>
> The influence of the Zionist organization reaches into the inner policy-making groups of nearly every government in the world—particularly into the Christian west. This influence causes these groups to adopt pro-Zionist policies which are often in conflict with the real interests of the peoples they govern.

And further:

> This utterly immoral and unjust policy is producing an unanticipated result. An explosion is brewing and, as it approaches, Christian supporters of Zionism in our government—

That was the United States government, of course—

> —are almost panic-stricken. Yet they fear to reverse their position lest the democratic party be stigmatized by Zionists as "anti-semitic".

Then he adds that the next election is only a year away. Mr. Freedman then goes on to say:

> The ability of Zionists to have things their way stems from the organized pressure they can bring upon people who do not agree with them. By holding the threat of being called "anti-semitic" over men engaged in public or business life, they have been able to stifle opposition—even among American Jews such as the writer, who have no interest in forming a Jewish state and wish only to live and die as good Americans. It will take courage for Americans of whatever origin to think these facts through and take public positions upon them. They will be smeared. They will be slandered. Already, Zionists have been able to bring about the economic ruin of many Christians and Jews who have dared challenge their right to claim Palestine for a national Jewish state. But America and American Christianity stand at a crossroad. The majority must decide whether it will longer submit to being the tool of a small but ruthless and unscrupulous minority of a minority people. The great majority of American Jews also must choose. Will we all acquiesce in the program of political Zionism? Will we follow it out to its inescapable consequences?
> If we do, we shall be walking the road to ruin.

I could speak with sympathy and from personal experience as to the truth of what Mr. Freedman says about the smear of anti-semitism raised against those who are opposed to the policy of political Zionism. One reason I am speaking here this afternoon is that I have been refused space in the press. Only last week I wrote a broadcast which consisted chiefly of the quotations I have just placed on record. That broadcast was to have been given last Sunday in Edmonton. However I received a letter yesterday to say that the station refused to broadcast it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is that from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. JAQUES: I do not know the inner workings of radio. This was station CJCA in Edmonton, a private station. However, I should think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would be even less tolerant.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Oh, no.

Mr. JAQUES: That is my opinion of the C.B.C.

Mr. HARTT: They have a little bit of sanity; they are not all insane.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Maybe that is why they will not let it go over the air.

Mr. HARTT: Because they are sane.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Because they know that their bread is buttered on the right side.

Mr. JAQUES: I am sorry I have to refer to quotations this afternoon, but certain things have already been said or published. The statement to which I shall now refer concerns me personally, so I have no option but to call it to the attention of the house. This was published in an Ottawa paper on December 16, 1947, and states:

> Norman Jaques, Social Credit member of parliament for Wetaskiwin, informed that his writings have been banned temporarily from the Canadian Social Crediter, a party newspaper published weekly in Edmonton, said today: "It is exactly what the communists say."
> He declined to comment further.
> Gordon Taylor, managing editor of the newspaper, official organ of the National Social Credit Association of Canada, said Saturday the ban on Mr. Jaques' writings will remain in effect as long as Mr. Jaques persists in what Mr. Taylor called an "anti-isms" attitude. He referred particularly to what he said was Mr. Jaques' "anti-semitic attitude".

I can only suppose there is a misunderstanding there. As I have said before in the house and outside it, my attitude is not one of anti-semitism; it is one of anti-political Zionism, because for many years I have seen where it was leading. And the situation today in Palestine and the near east is surely a justification for the stand I have taken in the past.

There are two statements that I should like to quote, which were published in the Canadian Jewish Chronicle, which a Jewish acquaintance sends to me. One is dated Ottawa, January 9, 1948 and reads:

Leaders of the Social Credit party have finally announced a ban on the publication of anti-semitic articles in the organization's official organ, following conferences with Joseph H. Fine, chairman of the public relations committee of the Canadian Jewish congress.

In addition to the ban, party leaders forced the resignation of the editor and assistant editor of the publication, Social Crediter. Chiefly affected by the new policy will be Norman Jaques, Social Credit member of parliament, who has been using the magazine as one of his platforms for anti-semitic propaganda.

I want to say here that is the statement of the editors of the Canadian Jewish Chronicle. It is part of the smear campaign. My other quotation from the Canadian Jewish Chronicle concerns a distinguished man, the Right Hon. Ernest Bevin, minister of foreign affairs in the British labour government. This quotation is dated Jerusalem and is from the issue of February 13, 1948. It reads:

The name of Britain's foreign secretary Ernest Bevin has been vigorously cheered of late at meetings of the Mosleyite fascist fringe although the mention of any of his colleagues in the labour cabinet draws equally vigorous boos, Arich Gelblum, correspondent of the Hebrew daily Haaretz reports from London. Mr. Gelblum, one of Palestine's most reliable reporters with excellent contacts in Britain, says that intellectuals of the Labour party believe that in the event of a personal defeat in the Labour party, it is possible that the present foreign secretary will bolt his party and become the "fuehrer" of a new British fascist party in uneducated, discontended labour ranks for whom he holds a strong appeal.

According to these circles Bevin possesses some of the prime requisites for becoming the leader of a "nationalist" mass movement. He hates Jews, mocks Labourite intellectuals, some of whom are Jews, and enjoys an ever-growing popularity among those sections of the British labour who share his dislike of the intellectuals. Mr. Gelblum, who has spoken with top leaders of the British Labour party, says that in private conversation Bevin says frankly that he believes in the protocols of Zion, the notorious forgery used by anti-semitic fanatics all over the world as proof of a "Jewish world conspiracy," that Hitler was right as far as the Jews were concerned and that Jewish aspirations for statehood must be destroyed.

[Mr. Jaques.]

I am in good company. That is a fair sample of political Zionist smearing of those who dare to take a stand against their plans. Of course Mr. Bevin does not need me to defend him, but if that is not libel I do not know what is. Is that not calculated to stir up hatred among people?

Mr. LOW: It is anti-English.

Mr. JAQUES: It is designed to stir up ill feeling among the people of Canada, the United States and Great Britain. I repeat what Freedman said:

The ability of Zionists to have things their way stems from the organized pressure they can bring upon people who do not agree with them. By holding the threat of being called "anti-semitic" over men engaged in public or business life, they have been able to stifle opposition—even among American Jews such as the writer, who have no interest in forming a Jewish state.

Then I should like to quote from the official report of a communist convention which was held in Edmonton a year ago last November, as follows:

Social Credit government and movement cannot be called fascist (anti-communist). But strong pro-fascist (anti-communist) wing of Jaques, Bourcier and some others, who control C.S.C. which carries most vicious type anti-communist, anti-socialist, anti-soviet, and anti-Jewish propaganda. "We" should find means to bring us to Social Credit rank and file as friends . . . We must single out the reactionary pro-fascist group for unrelenting attack, must expose failure of Social Credit government to meet needs of people.

That agrees with the statements of the political Zionists.

And again:

The mayor of Edmonton, H. D. Ainlay, appeared at our opening session, and welcomed delegates to city. Ainlay nominee Civic Dem. Alliance, leftist inclined, or courting L.P.P. for votes, rather surprising he should officially give public blessing to our small party.

It is not surprising at all when you understand that Mr. Ainlay refused to be present at a dinner held by the Canadian Arab league. I quote the words of Mr. Freedman:

Soviet communism will succeed in its attempt to conquer the world in direct proportion to the support which America gives zionism. This may sound startling, but it is grimly true.

That is part of a letter to the economic council from which I quoted before. The statement that political Zionists have the support of communists in this country and in the United States is endorsed by the fact that the partition is supported by Russia, the first and only proposal that Russia has supported. The reason for that is obvious. If a united nations force is sent to Palestine it will include a Red army. Once the Red army is in Palestine I should like to know by whom and how it will be sent back whence it came. What is the good of trying to hold the line in Greece when it is opened wide in Palestine? I would think Palestine is much more important than Greece because it forms a bridge between Europe, Asia and Africa. I I do not wish to say more at this time because I hope the house will have an opportunity to discuss this question before a Canadian army goes there and before we are committed to war. An eminent United States columnist who has had considerable experience, who has a good reputation to maintain, said the other day that Armageddon will start the instant the British leave Palestine. I want to register my complete opposition to this policy to which apparently this country has been committed, and hope that something will be done so that we may avoid the terrible consequences of it.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): Will the hon. member permit a question before he concludes? I ask for the information and not for any wisecracking purposes. He made a statement that our policy was undoubtedly different from British policy. I think he went so far as to say that British policy was in opposition to the decision on Palestine. The reason given by the hon. member was that they said they would have nothing to do with it. My question is: what authority has the hon. member for saying that that is British policy?

Mr. JAQUES: Well, I have no official authority, of course, only what I have read in the press and in statements made by British ministers in the British house. As I understand it, the British are opposed to partition. They oppose any solution which is not acceptable to both Arab and Zionist, and they would be opposed to any solution which would need the use of force to implement it. That is what I understand.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): I wish the hon. member would quote me one declaration of British policy opposing partition, other than the statement he has just made.

Mr. JAQUES: I have not the statement with me but I shall be glad to oblige the hon. member at the first opportunity.

Mr. HARTT: May I ask this question: is it not true that it was the British government which submitted the Palestinian question voluntarily to the united nations?

Mr. JAQUES: I understand that is the fact. I did not deny that. All I said was that they are not willing to take part in the partition of Palestine, or in any other solution which will need the use of force.

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in my duties as a member from this corner of the house were I not also to offer my most sincere congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address on the excellent manner in which they carried out their duties.

At the outset I should like to remind this house that, whatever so-called privation or hardship we may find at present, we are still in this country living under the most favoured and privileged conditions in the world. It is well to remember, and always to keep in mind this fact, that having gone through the most devastating war in history, in the face of the misery and suffering which exist in Europe and Asia, and will exist for years to come, our problems are not those of a starving nation trying to rebuild its cities and rehabilitate its people in the midst of internal strife and revolution; but rather problems of adjustment of conditions of living to allow us to maintain a standard which has been very high indeed.

There are a number of problems facing us, problems relating to social welfare, wages and prices. I do not want to deal with all these; in particular I shall mention some only briefly and deal more particularly perhaps with conditions in the civil service. However, I should like to say that the present government, mindful of its responsibilities, has done more than any other to promote the social welfare of its people; labour laws, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, family allowances, to name but a few, are social laws sponsored by past Liberal governments. But other projects are waiting completion, and legislation may be introduced on them in the near future. These may include health insurance, assistance to the physically disabled, and amendments to the Old Age Pensions Act to provide proper security at an age below seventy on a contributory basis or otherwise. How soon may, of course, depend on the co-operation of certain provinces. It is well to keep in mind that if Ontario and Quebec had co-operated more closely in the past few years with other provinces and the federal government, these plans for the improvement of the conditions of living of necessitous or disabled people might now be in effect. The same provinces which are depriving their people at present of the benefits of tax agreements entered into between the federal and seven provincial governments are delaying the whole program of advanced social legislation for the whole country. It is high time indeed that something should be done to change the attitude of those provinces.

If I had spoken earlier, Mr. Speaker, I might have said something with regard to prices. However, in view of the fact that this matter is before a committee I shall have to confine my remarks to those of a general nature. The policy of the government, as announced from time to time, has been to allow private enterprise to resume business in the normal course after the war, unfettered by regulations and bounds which tend to discourage the initiative of the individual. But at all times also it has coupled its announcement with a warning that if undue advantage was taken of this relaxation of controls and the public was exploited or made to suffer, these regulations and controls would be reimposed.

Some time ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) announced that this government intended to take action against profiteers. This will greatly relieve the average Canadian wage earner who has had real cause to complain of late of the excessive prices charged for staple commodities in the face of exorbitant profits made by corporations. The government has been patient with these people but must act now. I believe that the prices committee is a step in the right direction.

However, before leaving the question of controls, I should like to bring to the attention of the house conditions which exist with regard to commercial rents. I strongly urge the government to consider its position with respect to commercial rents. If controls are left off altogether at the end of March many of the smaller business people are bound to suffer. At the present time landlords in this very city are asking increases of from 200 to 400 per cent, and those who suffer are not those who are able to pay, but the small businessman, the druggist, the shoemaker, the garage operator and so forth. In view of the fact that it is the tenant of the great number of commercial establishments who will suffer, I strongly urge the government that controls on commercial rents be kept on to a certain extent.

There is no doubt that demands for wage increases are greatly justified in many places, and I sympathize fully with the low-salary workers who must find a way to live under present conditions. The most unfortunate are, of course, those who belong to unorganized groups, whose voice is too faint and weak to be heard. They depend altogether on the good graces of their employer, and it is he who should keep faith with them. The only solution would be to revise the provincial labour law. The most important questions affecting employer and employee locally are the relations betwen the government and the civil service. The problems are numerous indeed. They not only affect wage increases; they also affect appointments, promotions, superannuation, conditions of work and recreation.

At the beginning of the session I put on the order paper a resolution calling for parliament to institute a special committee which would have power to investigate and discuss these problems and report back to parliament the conditions which they found to exist, and to make recommendations for the benefit of the civil service. I hope this resolution will be reached, and I think the government should look favourably upon it.

One of the reasons which prompted me to present this resolution was the fact that all the problems relating to the civil service are being discussed at different times by different bodies. Pronouncements come from different sources and things are accomplished piecemeal. If one body of men could hear the complaints or the representations on all subjects relating to the civil service, the relations between civil servants and the government; if one body could consider these questions at one time, and if the recommendations could be made all at the same time on all subjects, then I think it would give greater satisfaction and the problems might be solved for at least some time to come.

Let us take, for example, the question of wage increases. Everyone knows there is no more faithful body of employees than the civil servants. The government is altogether dependent upon them and they have not failed in their duty, either in the past or at the present time. During the war they accepted their extra duties without murmur, extra hours of work without pay, and many were frozen in their employment who could have sought much better reward in industry and commerce or even in the armed forces. However, when it comes to increases in wages the civil servant has always been in the same situation. He is always lagging behind industry and commerce. It seems to take a longer time to make adjustments for this class of employees than for any other.

The government has recently made some adjustments in the rates of pay for clerks, typists, stenographers and others, and it is proceeding to make similar recommendations for the other classes in the civil service. This is important in the case of technical personnel, for example, before we lose them.

Canada has been fortunate in keeping such a splendid staff of technical men in its employ, on a wage scale which is not comparable with that paid in industry or in the United States. If we want to keep these men and encourage others to come within the service, there should be an immediate adjustment on a greatly increased scale in their rates of pay.

In connection with this matter, certain representations have been made to me by employees who apparently are not considered as coming within the classifications where increases have been granted. It is my understanding that not only in this house but in many departments of government there are employees with salaries within the minima and maxima ranges set out in the statement made in the house on December 19 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and they have not yet received any salary increases. The reason given them on inquiry is that the necessary approval has not yet been authorized by the civil service commission and/or the treasury.

It is further intimated to these employees—and this is what really worries them—that unless such approval is given before March 31 next, the end of the present fiscal year, such increases under the present regulations cannot be effective as of October 1, 1947, the Prime Minister to the contrary notwithstanding, so they say.

These employees have every faith in the promise of the government; but they are fearful that higher officials, sticking to the absolute letter of the present regulations, will not find it possible to comply with the spirit and the letter of the Prime Minister's statement. I should like to have this question answered: Is it possible to give these employees an assurance that they will get their six months' back pay even if the civil service commission and/or the treasury officers may take longer than March 31 next to secure the necessary approval?

When the reclassification and proper adjustment in wage rates have been made throughout the service there may still be some need for further allowances by way of cost of living bonus if the living index keeps on increasing. That I suggest would be the proper way to satisfy the immediate needs of the employees from time to time. I realize that a bonus, variable in accordance with the living index, might be a hard thing to accomplish, but even if this adjustment were made every six months it would be more satisfactory to all concerned than a system which has been followed in the past whereby adjustments are sometimes made two years after a condition has arisen.

Other problems affecting government employees are those relating to prevailing-rate men, such as employees in the printing bureau and the public works department. There again the government has made some adjustments in the rates of pay to follow the general pattern of industry, but it is far from complete at present. Furthermore, in the case of public works employees, the men receive only one week of holidays, and they pay for the other week. In both the printing bureau and the public works department no sick leave is granted at all.

I am going to suggest to the government that a plan of contributory sick leave in which the government would contribute half and the employee half should be instituted immediately. I believe this would be welcomed by all employees, and it is only fair that the government should contribute, as is done in ordinary industry, its share for leave of absence on account of sickness for their prevailing-rate employees. There should also be two weeks holidays paid by the government for all employees who are outside the civil service commission.

We have at home here in this building another class of employees, the employees of the House of Commons. Last year there was brought down a resolution which, if passed, would have had the effect of bringing within the civil service commission, and under the Civil Service Act, all employees of this house. For some reason or other, and no doubt for very good reasons, this resolution was not proceeded with. I urge the government to give an opportunity to all employees of this house to come under the Civil Service Act, so that they may get the benefits of that act. What is happening at the present time is that some employees make certain representations and they receive better pay than others, and this condition should not exist if we wish to maintain a satisfied and efficient staff in this house.

Mr. McIVOR: Including the stenographers.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): The stenographers too. They are all on the same staff. I should not like to let this occasion pass without some reference to superannuated civil servants. No doubt hon. members will recall that last year I was one of those who urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to make some provision for a cost of living bonus or an increase for superannuated civil servants. I have heard of late that this matter is not at present receiving favourable consideration. However, I do not think the arguments advanced against giving this increase are valid because, as I see it, the government is putting itself in the position of a private concern.

It is true that an insurance company or any private company may not be in a position to give a cost of living bonus to its pensioners because it is in business to make money. But superannuated civil servants have contributed so much money to the pension fund that the government is in the business of making money out of the superannuation fund. I believe there is a sum of $30,000,000 accumulated there and it will go on increasing.

Since the government is not in the business of making money, I do not see that its argument holds that it should keep in reserve such a huge accumulation of pension money. From these statements, however, it will be more apparent perhaps to everyone how important it is to have a single committee set up to examine all these questions and to make recommendations thereon. I hope the government will give sympathetic consideration to the request I have made for a committee on the civil servants of this government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker—perhaps on another note—I should like to say that one of the greatest objectives at the present time is to instil in the people of this country a proper sense of appreciation of their Canadian citizenship based on mutual understanding and love of their country. It is well for us to do battle elsewhere and shout for the protection and defence of foreign minority rights, but it is more honest and more sincere to apply these principles at home. In one of his last speeches Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a man who understood the value of Christian ideals and the values of the human heart over the materialistic ideals of the common man, when addressing a group of young men in 1919 used these words:

> As for you who stand today on the threshold of life, with a long horizon open before you for a long career of usefulness to your native land, if you will permit me, after a long life, I shall remind you that already many problems rise before you: problems of race division, problems of creed differences, problems of economic conflict, problems of national duty and national aspiration. Let me tell you that for the solution of these problems you have a safe guide, an unfailing light, if you remember that faith is better than doubt and love is better than hate.
> Banish doubt and hate from your life. Let your souls be ever open to the promptings of faith and the gentle influence of brotherly love. Be adamant against the haughty, be gentle and kind to the weak. Let your aim and purpose, in good report or ill, in victory or defeat, be so to live, so to strive, so to serve as to do your part to raise ever higher the standard of life and of living.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): There are two matters, Mr. Speaker, that I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann); while he is not in his seat at the moment, I hope he will give careful consideration to both of them.

The first one is in connection with the amendment made last session to the Dominion Succession Duty Act, whereby the rates then in effect were doubled; under this amendment provision is also made whereby, when duty had been paid to a province, the estate would be entitled to a certain rebate from the dominion office. I should like to point out that in Ontario, on estates up to $25,000 which pass to the immediate family, there is no duty payable to the province; and in all estates up to $10,000 where the heirs are collaterals there is no duty. Under the arrangement as it exists under the Dominion Succession Duty Act, with regard to estates up to $25,000 and going to the immediate family, the estate is called upon to pay the dominion succession duty which was doubled a year ago. It appears to me that this is just another example of the estate of the man in moderate circumstances being called upon to pay double taxes to the dominion government. I am sure the minister will agree that this phase of the act is most unfair. It was pointed out to him; representations were made to him at the time the amendment was made, but he did nothing about it. But even now I hope he will reconsider the matter and see that this unjust and unfair discrimination against these small estates is corrected.

The second matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister is an amendment to the Income War Tax Act made last year in regard to taxation of co-operatives, whereby cheese factories for the first time are now required to file income tax returns and will be subject to tax. There has been a considerable difference of opinion among legal experts as to the correct meaning of this amendment, but from the correspondence I had with the minister, I am of the opinion that the ruling of the department will be that cheese factories will be subject to income tax. Because of this change, every cheese factory in the county in which I reside —and I think the same condition applies to all factories in eastern Ontario—are faced with complete re-organization under existing provincial co-operative legislation. A great deal of expense will be incurred. Each company will have to be fully re-organized, with a new charter. It will have to change its system of bookkeeping and accounting and will have to employ an auditor. If the department insists on going on and forcing these factories to make these returns and insists on taxing the profits of the cheese factories, I fear it will simply mean that many cheese factories which today are only able to get by and make a small profit will be forced to close, as a result of which a large amount of milk now going into cheese will go elsewhere. There is the further point that if the cheese factories are to be taxed, the department is then taxing the same money twice, because when the farmer makes his return he must show the total amount of money he receives from the factory.

Recently the cheese producers of Ontario presented a brief to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the Minister of National Revenue. I should like to read a few paragraphs from that brief, because it reviews the growth of small cheese factories which are operated on a co-operative basis and sets out certain conditions which affect them today. I quote from the brief:

> The immediate changing of a cheese factory bookkeeping system and the employing of an accountant will have a ruinous effect on farmer-owned cheese factories. In many cases it means the closing of more cheese factories, the safety valve of the dominion's $450,000,000 dairy industry, because at this date the following facts face us:
> 1. Temporary competition has caused cheese to fall from the 1945 production of approximately 187,000,000 pounds to the 1947 production of about 115,000,000 pounds or a drop of thirty-eight and a half per cent.
>
> 2. Many cheese factories, while they have been operating efficiently and are making a very high quality cheese (often preferred to the cheese made in larger factories), were built many years ago and are now requiring repairs and replacements of equipment. Such repairs and replacements might not be allowed as operating expense for taxation purpose.
>
> 3. Some cheese factories are in debt from a miscellaneous capital expense, for building a new factory, or from installing refrigerated curing rooms as recommended and subsidized by the dominion government. Our understanding is that money retained from earnings for the liquidation of such debt is taxable. Such a practice will discourage cheese factory improvement and cause more cheese factories to close.
> 4. If farmer-owned, co-operatively conducted cheese factories have their accounting expenses suddenly changed and greatly increased, as a result of having to make income tax returns, many more factories will close, with possible repercussions within the whole dairy industry.

The gentlemen who presented this brief went over the whole matter thoroughly with the two ministers. At the end of the brief they have this recommendation:

> Therefore be it resolved that we, the executive committee of the Ontario cheese producers' association, ask the dominion government for freedom from the necessity of filing income tax returns and from the paying of income tax for the years 1947, 1948 and 1949 for all farmer-owned cheese factories operating on a co-operative basis though not incorporated as such.

I sincerely hope that the minister will review the whole situation, and that he will not be guilty of any action which will in any way reduce the production of cheese in Ontario.

I see the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) is now here. I should like to point out to him that, in my opinion and in the opinion of many hon. members, it is most regrettable that, though we are now at the end of the fifth week of the session, the veterans affairs committee has not been set up, nor has the minister found it possible to introduce the legislation necessary to increase the basic pension rate. It is true that the Prime Minister made a brief statement in December, which was amplified on Monday of this week; but I am going to suggest to the minister that he recommend that we have a standing committee on veterans affairs, and I hope the minister is listening. If we had a standing committee on veterans affairs this pension legislation could have been dealt with at the December sitting, and probably the legislation would have now been in effect. The minister is a member of a government that saw fit to introduce a budget which imposed taxes the collection of which was commenced the next day. Apparently that was all right; but the veterans of this country, after waiting for more than twenty years for the increases to which they were certainly entitled, heard an announcement on December 19. Then some two months later, after great pressure was brought to bear upon the Prime Minister and his cabinet, we hear a further announcement and suggestion that it is hoped to introduce the legislation at an early day. The minister must be aware that it is during these hard winter months that the veterans need this increase, though now I doubt if they will get it before the end of April at the very earliest.

Then I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a condition which his predecessor promised to remedy. I refer to those veterans who are in receipt of disability pensions and who are at present attending universities and receiving educational grants as part of their re-establishment credit. I am sure no one will even attempt to argue that a pension for war disability is not given as a matter of right, or that a veteran in receipt of such a pension should not also receive the full educational grant. As I said a moment ago, the former minister of veterans affairs promised to correct this unjust discrimination, but today we find that veterans in receipt of disability pensions are not given the full amount of their educational grants. A veteran who is disabled does not have the same opportunity to earn money while attending university or during the summer months, because of his disability; and I think it would be a very good start for the minister if he would see that this petty chiseling on veterans allowances is stopped at once. I believe everyone feels that the fact that a veteran receives a pension should not be used in order to cut down his educational grant.

Under the present administration of the pension board, I feel that in many cases the veteran does not get the benefit of the doubt. On that point I should like to read section 62 of the act:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension the applicant shall be entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which shall mean that it shall not be necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim shall be entitled to draw and shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences and presumptions in favour of the applicant.

That seems quite plain; yet in actual practice we find that the reverse happens. It seems that in too many cases the pension board will go to extreme lengths to fight the veteran, to raise some doubt or objection. In legal procedure it is well recognized that the accused is always given the benefit of the doubt, and our judges lean backward to see that this is done. The pension board has a large staff of medical experts; it has all the benefits of science and research at its disposal, and all these are on one side against the veteran, who is often called upon to produce new evidence, medical evidence to disprove certain findings of these so-called experts of the pension board. I believe every application submitted by a veteran for a pension should receive the most sympathetic and careful consideration of the board. This pension board should have at heart more of the welfare of the veteran and less of the welfare of the treasury board. Many hon. members can readily recall instances in their own ridings of veterans who have been getting the usual run-around from the pension board, but in which the member was able to get some action from the board as soon as he took up the matter. It has always seemed to me that in such cases the board was quite ready and willing to appease the member in order to prevent these tragic cases from being brought up in the house. As I said before, the granting of a pension is a matter of right; so why should it be necessary for the veteran to have his member of parliament or anyone else take up the matter on his behalf with the pension board?

The pre-enlistment disability is another matter to which the minister might well direct his attention. In view of the fact that a man who joined the army and was placed in category A-1 was given a rigid medical and X-ray examination, it seems only fair to say that any disability incurred after he joined the army should be attributed to war service. But the board does not accept that principle. It goes to great lengths to dig up some incident, some injury or something that happened years before. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister if he does not think it perfectly fair and reasonable to say that any soldier who passed this careful medical and X-ray examination should have the assurance that any disability incurred would be considered attributable to war service. Yet we find on the pension board many doctors who make certain findings. They are not positive findings, but they make findings that a disability was due to pre-enlistment causes. I point out to the minister that these findings of the doctors are not positive; they are only opinions, and there is always doubt about them. They are not conclusive in any way.

These opinions and conclusions would never be accepted in any court of law, but they are accepted far too readily by the pension board. Too often they make the ruling that the injury or complaint complained of was not due to war service, but rather that the disability was due to pre-enlistment causes and was not aggravated by war service. I am sure the members of the pension board who coined that glorious phrase must be very proud of it.

The recent regrettable tragedy in Ottawa, when a veteran of the first war shot and killed a medical officer, must have brought home to the pension board a condition which should immediately be remedied; because it must be very difficult for the public of Canada to understand how it is possible for any veteran of world war I to have such an improvement in his disability that his pension could be materially reduced. It was only natural that, with the years passing, the disability would increase; and this principle is recognized in the provisions of the Pension Act; for there are automatic increases in respect of gunshot wounds as a veteran reaches and passes a certain age. I would ask the minister to see that the necessary legislation is introduced to continue all pensions to veterans of world war I at their present rate, and to have the principle of automatic increases applied to all pensions.

In the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) as to the basic rate of pensions, we see that there was an increase in the monthly allowance from $75 to $87. That was a step in the right direction; but I submit that the increase was totally inadequate to cover the increased cost of living of veterans. I would also point out that the increase is years overdue, yet it is made retroactive only to October 1, 1947. Members of this party have often advocated in the house that there should be a general increase of 25 per cent across the board.

I would draw the attention of the minister to the February issue of The Legionary, which was sent to all members. At page 10 we find a short article headed "Proposed increases are not adequate," and from it I should like to read this one short paragraph:

> The Legion's idea of an appropriate increase in pensions at this time would be an additional 25 per cent for all beneficiaries under the act.

And in dealing with war veterans allowances they make this recommendation:

> Our idea of a new rate for war veterans allowance would be $50 per month for the single person and $85 per month for a married couple.

I trust that the minister will give some further consideration to what the amount of the basic rate will be, and I hope, irrespective of what the Prime Minister said yesterday in connection with submitting this bill to the committee on veterans affairs, that the minister himself will recommend that the bill be submitted to the veterans committee for their study and recommendation.

The table of rates filed by the Prime Minister shows both the old and new rates of pension. If anyone took the trouble to look at those rates he would find there is a material difference in the amount of the basic rate paid to all ranks up to the rank of lieutenant. The basic rate was $900 a year. If one follows up the scale he will find that the highest basic rate for senior officers is $2,700 a year.

My personal belief is that the practice which has been followed of paying pensions based upon rank is entirely wrong and should no longer be tolerated in this country. Two veterans might be farmers, teachers, doctors, clerks or in any other employment, and may have suffered the same disability; but one may be receiving 300 per cent more pension than the other. Both veterans would have to re-establish themselves; they would have to acquire the same training or take the same degree. They would have to meet the same competition in civilian life. They would both have families to support, and there would be absolutely no difference in their situations in civilian life. They may both have suffered the same wounds and the same hardships. Now one of these veterans must suffer this unfair and unjust discrimination; for, after all, a pension is awarded to a veteran as a compensation to him for his decreased earning capacity, and for the extra expenses he may have in civilian life because of his disability. Why, then, is there this wide difference in the amount of pension between the $900 paid to a private and the $2,700 paid to an officer of higher rank?

If in this practice we are following the custom of some other country, then I say quite frankly the time is long past due when we should stop paying pensions based upon rank. Personally, I cannot think of a single argument in favour of the present practice. I hope that when the committee on veterans affairs is set up it will give careful consideration to and make recommendations concerning this matter to the effect that all pensions to all veterans will be paid at the same basic rate.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I wish, first of all, to express my disapproval of this disjointed procedure in carrying on the debate in reply to the speech from the throne. This lack of continuity decreases its value to members of the house, and in my opinion must be very confusing to people throughout the country who get their news through the newspapers.

During the time at my disposal I should like to deal with one matter, agricultural credit. Before doing so, however, may I point out that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) is in these words:

> This house regrets that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to use the powers provided by parliament to control prices, and by their actions have caused alarming increases in the cost of living and a dangerous lowering of the living standards of the Canadian people.

Before proceeding, may I say I heartily agree with the amendment to the amendment and I intend to support it when the vote is taken. But, in addition to the expressions of that amendment, I believe we have to go beyond the confines of administrative measures. I believe that if we are to have a satisfactory standard of living in this country the government will have to take more positive action with regard to production. I am going to refer particularly at this time to agricultural production.

In my reading of the throne speech I saw reference made to the fact that there is an extreme and acute shortage of food. I also found in the Christian Science Monitor of February 17, 1948, the following report from Lake Success:

> Shortage of food constitutes the greatest and most urgent problem now confronting the world, the food and agricultural organization reports.

And it has called upon the economic and social council of the united nations to take the initiative in immediate remedial measures.

During the time at my disposal I intend to deal with the question of the improvement of long-term agricultural credit facilities provided by present legislation. I am choosing this subject because I believe it is closely connected with the need for increased agricultural production and because it is of great concern to the farmers' organizations in my riding in the interior of British Columbia and is also of concern to a large number of worthy young Canadians who want an opportunity to farm but who are prevented by the present unsatisfactory legislation.

When we hear, as I have heard, hon. members from the maritimes speak of the large number of abandoned farms in that part of Canada; when we hear, as we have heard, during debates in this house, of the shortage of food in this country under present restrictions; when we see reports, such as the one I have just read, issued by the food and agricultural organization of the united nations, and when we know that a large number of young Canadians are anxious to farm in this country at this time I think we should give serious concern to checking and revising our legislation so far as agricultural credit is concerned.

Agriculture is a unique industry. It produces the raw materials for food, clothing and domestic use, three of the most essential needs of life. We all know that food is man's first need. The daily bread of the race comes from the soil and the farmer is the world's agent of food production. Next to food is clothing. The raw materials for textile industry come from the soil, and a part of the products of those industries may be included in any of the articles with which we furnish our homes.

An hon. MEMBER: Correct.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I am pleased to hear that I have a supporter on the government side. I hope he supports me later on in my address. Agriculture is a universal industry, and the existence and progress of all society, if we read history correctly, depends absolutely upon it. What is called civilization may be defined as the production of objects not biologically necessary for survival. As I read history, civilization first arose from the introduction of agriculture in the fertile deltas of Egypt and Babylonia. What promotes the welfare of agriculture, without question benefits mankind. The progress of agriculture and the progress of civilization go hand in hand.

[Mr. Herridge.]

In my opinion the provision of low interest long-term rural credits under better conditions than exist today, is necessary for the development of agricultural enterprise in this country, for the development of the agricultural resources of this country, and for the production of the food which we require at home and which is required abroad.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GREGG: On a question of privilege, with your permission, Mr. Speaker; this afternoon the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) said that my predecessor had failed to correct the complaint of veteran pensioner students in training. I knew that had been corrected by my predecessor, but I could not remember the exact date. It was last June, so that now the veteran pensioner student receives his full personal pension plus his full maintenance grant without any deduction.

Mr. HERRIDGE: When the house rose at six o'clock I was advocating the necessity for a better system of long-term credit for farmers in this country if we were to have the agricultural development that was necessary, if we were to provide the food that is needed in the world for our own people, and if we are going to provide an opportunity for many young Canadians who wish to farm. In that connection I believe I have the support of some hon. members on the government side. When the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) was speaking the other day I noted that he was critical of the present restrictive application of the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I am quite sure there are a good many other hon. members representing farmers in this house who will agree with much that I have to say this evening.

The number of persons engaged in agriculture represents a very large segment of the population, and I maintain that our industrial structure cannot remain sound unless it is based on agricultural prosperity in Canada. I am not going to deal with short-term credit for farm purposes this evening; that is, the credit which may be required by the farmer to purchase some machinery, finance the production of a crop and so on. I think under the provisions of the Farm Loan Act of 1944 and through the private lending agencies there are fairly satisfactory credit arrangements available in this country at this time.

But I do want to deal for a few minutes with long-term agricultural credit. Whether we like it or not, if we read history correctly, long-term credit has always been a necessity in the development of agriculture. From very early times, even reaching back into the feudal system, we know that moneylenders have exploited the peasants of central Europe, the peasants of China and of other countries for hundreds of years.

In dealing with this question I think we should be well advised to review some of the credit arrangements that have been made in other countries. It is from the experiments of the past, applied to our own conditions, that we are likely to reach satisfactory conclusions in this matter. The history of agricultural credit in Europe is a long and interesting one. Outside of the agricultural credit supplied by moneylenders, the first real credit schemes financed other than by moneylenders originated in Germany in 1770. These schemes provided for an association of borrowers for the purpose of procuring loans by the issue of bonds secured by mortgages registered collectively against their properties. They had in Germany a combination of co-operative loan banks and mortgage credit banks assisted by state banks. The general principle involved was one of mutual aid by state grants or loans to co-operative credit organizations; and within the limitations of their sphere they were extremely successful. The losses incurred were very small indeed; the good they did was great. Of course they were operating in a stable agricultural economy, in an agricultural economy which was largely developed. They were successful. They were successful because there was a close association of the farmers themselves, farmers' organizations and the state agencies that assisted them.

In France there were similar developments. As a matter of fact, in France the credit foncier has been the large lending institution that has lent money to co-operative credit organizations in France, and the stability of the French peasant was largely secured through that type of credit. In Italy, which, as we all know, is a country with very few advantages, not rich in natural resources, there was a tremendous extension of lending institutions. There again there were land credit banks, savings banks, and agricultural societies, in a somewhat different form, a system of state aid to co-operative organizations.

We all know the history of co-operative development in Holland and Denmark, where that type of organization was possibly brought to its highest fruition in modern co-operative lending institutions. Then we come to the Scandinavian countries, and in passing I want to pay tribute to the Scandinavian people because of the lessons they have taught us all in the development of co-operative organizations. Wherever you find a group of Scandinavian people in any rural community you will find sound farming practice and industrious people. You will also find soundly operated co-operatives and co-operative credit organizations. In Norway and Sweden a study of the history of their co-operative credit, which was a further development of the German system adapted to suit their local conditions, shows us possibly the highest development of the principle of the extension of long-term credit to farmers as a result of co-operation between farmers' organizations and the state.

All these organizations developed on sound lines and, as I said before, reading the history of them very carefully I found that there were very few losses and very few failures. I would say, Mr. Speaker. the lessons we learn in this matter from European experience throughout two or three centuries are: first, that the organization of farmers has been the basis of their success; second, that education has proceeded hand in hand with organization; third, that there was a strong personal supervision of loans by the farmers' organizations, and fourth, that those local and individual efforts were supported by state assistance through low interest loans to farmers' lending organizations.

When we come to Great Britain we have a somewhat different picture because of the different system of land tenure. There, until comparatively recently, land was held by a few landlords, the greater number of farmers being tenants. Development along co-operative lines commenced to some extent in 1901 in England, and in Scotland in 1905, when societies were established somewhat after the Irish pattern promoted by Sir Horace Plunkett in Ireland.

On the whole, long-term agricultural credit in Britain has been considered a field for private investment, and special corporations were organized under government regulation, but without government assistance. Under the provisions of the act passed in July, 1923, power was given the public works loan commission of Great Britain to lend money to associations for the purpose of making advances on farm mortgages at any time within five years after the passing of the act.

The co-operative credit developments in Europe which I have mentioned have not occurred to anything like the same degree in Great Britain, and that is largely because of the system of land tenure up to recent times.

In the Union of South Africa, for the purpose of promoting agricultural credit, the Land and Agricultural Bank of South Africa was established and advances were made to farmers' co-operative and credit organizations and, in some cases, direct to settlers. The history of the lending of money on long terms in South Africa is somewhat spotty, but I would say that, on balance, in the majority of cases it was successful and beneficial.

In New Zealand, for the promotion of agricultural settlement through government support, we find that, as far as the British commonwealth is concerned, arrangements have been worked out in greater detail with respect to the classification of land and the kind of security offered than in any other part of the commonwealth. There has been tremendous development in recent years of state assistance to farmers' lending organizations.

To come to this continent, there was great agitation for farm credit in the United States many years ago, and that resulted finally in the passing of the Federal Farm Loan Act in 1916. The federal farm loan board was then established, and since that time there has been great development of agricultural credit under the farm credit adminstration.

During the depression somewhat unusual and drastic measures were taken, not primarily, so far as I read, for the protection of the farmer, but for the protection of investors in organizations lending money to farm organizations or to farmers direct.

As far as Canada is concerned, credit has been necessary since the earliest days of settlement in this country. I understand that from 1663 to 1750 French settlers were brought out from France and supplied free with tools and food, and in some cases the King of France actually paid for the clearing of a few acres of land and provided a house and a few simple commodities such as flour until crops were reaped.

As far as British settlement in Canada is concerned, I understand that, particularly in Halifax, from the earliest days there were grants of land and financial assistance to settlers who, in the first instance, were largely members of disbanded English regiments. In the period in this country between 1763 and 1812 credit was advanced to farmers generally by the merchants of the country. From 1812 to 1840 credit was obtained from private sources and from colonization companies. About 1850, loan societies were established for long-term agricultural credit, and most of the capital for these societies, as far as Canada is concerned, came from Britain.

[Mr. Herridge.]

With the accumulation of Canadian capital, Canadian companies commenced operations in the latter part of the last century until in the beginning of this century, Canadian corporations had some $116 million invested in farm mortgages in western Canada.

The point I wish to make is this, that without question, the system which has given the greatest success and been the soundest, having worked to the greatest advantage of the farmers themselves and to the country concerned, has been the system in which there was co-operation between the agencies of government and the organs of the people.

Agricultural assistance in this country by the federal government was commenced, as far as I can find out, about 1876 by assistance to the Manitoba farmers for grasshopper relief. In 1886 there was assistance to the settlers of the Northwest Territories, and that was continued until the formation of the provinces in 1906. From 1909 to 1913 settlement in the west created tremendous demands for capital, and trust companies invested very large sums in western agriculture.

With the commencement of the war in 1914, borrowings from Great Britain ceased and there were greatly increased grants to agriculture in the west and in British Columbia.

As far as the provinces are concerned, in the maritimes there were various efforts to assist agriculture. I am speaking particularly of lending to farmers' organizations or to farmers direct. I recognize that much assistance was given through departments of agriculture, universities, and experimental stations, but I am referring especially to credit advanced to farmers or farmers' organizations. In Nova Scotia there was the loan act of 1919 providing loans for thirty years. In 1928 this provincial action ceased in Nova Scotia, and from what I can read there was little success in these schemes.

In New Brunswick there was no farm lending of importance, although there was assistance to British people who settled on the land. I understand that there were about 240 families established by 1926 and in 1929 these loans were refunded under the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Apparently, if one may judge from the large percentage of Scottish people in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, there is little borrowing done. In the latter province, in 1934 legislation was passed which prepared the way for the Canadian Farm Loan Act. This was the first provision for long-term agricultural credit in the history of the provinces.

Quebec, as far as I can read, has been the outstanding province in Canada for the development of co-operative credit societies by the farmers themselves, who from early days have received some assistance from government. I think the province of Quebec, as far as farm loaning organizations are concerned, has come closer to the European experience than any of the other provinces.

As far as Manitoba is concerned, there was a loan credit act in 1917, and there was the Manitoba loan association. Of the difficulties experienced, I am sure the leader of the official opposition knows more than I do.

In Saskatchewan there was the Saskatchewan farm loan act of 1917, but the results were not encouraging. Going west, we find crop failures and less stable agricultural conditions; and the lack of success in Canada, as far as long-term farm credit is concerned, is directly related to the question of the stability of agriculture and the assurance of continuous crops.

In Alberta tnere was the Alberta farm loan act of 1917, and in 1931 the establishment of the Central Alberta Rural Credits Corporation, the purpose of which was to consolidate and co-ordinate the operations of the credit associations of the province.

British Columbia has a somewhat different history. As a matter of fact, under this system, relatively speaking, that province has an encouraging history as far as assistance to agriculture is concerned. Co-operation has been fostered there since very early days. In 1896 we had the creameries act. In 1898 we had the agricultural credit society act; in 1915 the agricultural act, and in 1917 the land settlement board. Its activities are now very much restricted, and the type of work it was doing has now been largely taken over under the Canadian Farm Loan Act. In addition to that, the government of British Columbia has financed diking and drainage to the extent of $2,500,000. In recent years, as far as federal measures are concerned, from 1917 to 1919 we had the Soldier Settlement Act, the British Farm Settlement Act of 1924, the Canadian farm loan board, which was established in 1929; the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and the Veterans Land Act of 1942.

I now desire to refer to the Veterans Land Act, and I wish to quote from a report of the Canadian farm loan board for the year ended March 31, 1947, at page 3:

> Powers and Duties of the Board
> The board is a public corporation and an agency of the dominion government organized in 1929 under the Canadian Farm Loan Act for the purpose of administering a system of long-term mortgage credit for farmers on the security of farm lands. In 1934 the act was amended and part II of the act was added to permit the board to extend intermediate and short-term credit to its long term mortgage borrowers by way of supplementary advances secured by second and chattel mortgages. In 1935 the board was also empowered under the Canadian Fisherman's Loan Act to make loans to fishermen on the security of real property owned by them.

That outlines the powers and duties of the board. Then, on the same page under the paragraph headed "Terms of Loans" we find this:

> Under the Canadian Farm Loan Act the board may make mortgage loans only to farmers whose principal occupation is farming and who are actually occupying and operating, in person or by hired labour, the lands accepted as security for loan. The act does not authorize the making of loans on lands under lease.

I wish to refer later to that clause "whose principal occupation is farming," because I maintain that, as long as a clause like that is in the act, many of our young Canadians will be prevented from establishing themselves upon farms in this country. On page 4 we find a paragraph headed "Purpose of Loans," which reads:

> Loans may be granted to refinance existing farm indebtedness, to purchase livestock and equipment, to make improvements, including the erection of buildings and to pay operating expenses. First mortgage loans may also be made to purchase farm land but second mortgage loans cannot be made for this purpose.

I just want to deal with another paragraph or so. On page 6 there is a paragraph headed "Repayments of Principal of Loans," which reads:

> A considerable number of borrowers are taking advantage of the prepayment privileges previously mentioned in this report by repaying their loans in full before due date. Since inception of operations in 1929, the board has disbursed 27,875 first mortgage loans and of this number over 12,100 have been repaid in full prior to the final instalment due date, while of a total of 8,995 second mortgage loans disbursed over 7,600 have been repaid in full.
> Cash repayments of loan principal during the year under review amounted to $3,664,718 as compared with $3,802,455 repaid in the previous fiscal year. Cash repayments of loan principal since inception of operations in 1929 to March 31, 1947, total $34,100,122 against loans disbursed totalling $57,543,717.

My point is this. If we take the total of the loans disbursed we find that the Canadian farm loan board has been lending annually a sum of a little less than $3,000,000. We talk about an expanding economy and we hear a great deal about industrial expansion. We know of the large investments in industrial expansion caused by accelerated depreciation, special depreciation and so on. But when we examine this report we find that the loans granted by the board are diminishing in volume. In 1942-43 total loans were $34,000,000; in 1946-47 that figure is reduced to $22,000,000. At a time when we should be developing our agriculture, and when young men are desiring to go on the land and get going under the Canadian Farm Loan Act, disbursements are decreasing in volume.

I shall not take further time to examine this report except to say that I am not criticising the officials of the Canadian farm loan board. I would say they are operating the act in a conservative and sound way. But I maintain that the act itself is too limited in scope and its application is too restrictive. I criticize the act as not being satisfactory in general and as not being satisfactory in particular. I say it is not satisfactory in general because, according to government figures, the capital invested in agriculture at this time is approximately $5,000 million and the annual production of agriculture is approximately $1,500 million. Yet at the present time we are lending to agriculture, through government channels under this act, only something in the neighbourhood of $3,000,000 a year. I maintain that those figures are sufficient to prove that this act is not providing the flow of credit which is necessary for agricultural expansion in this country.

I said that the act's application was not satisfactory in particular. I am now referring to my own experience and my observation of difficulties which have occurred in my own district. This act does not provide the opportunity for a young man to take over forest land and develop the farm because, under the act, his principal occupation must be farming. I shall give one illustration, although I could give several. A young veteran returned from the armed forces. He had not served a year in the Canadian forces, so that he was not entitled to assistance under the Veterans Land Act. He buys 160 acres of good timbered land and signs an agreement for $3,000; he agrees to pay $500 a year. He does that for two years and then finds out that, by making $500 payments, he has but little capital left with which to go on expanding, clearing and doing the things he wants to do to improve the place. So he applies to the Canadian farm loan board for a loan over a period of ten years, to make his payments lighter. In the first place, no official visited the district. The head office in British Columbia is in New Westminster. No one bothered to go and look at the farm. In the second place, he submitted to the board evidence to show that he had a wood contract which provided him with an assured income of $500. He sells other wood besides. In fact he had an assured income of $1,000 a year from wood that he is cutting from the land he was clearing. He also told them he had a log home. I saw the home myself; I know it well. He had a well-built log barn. He stated all these facts. The people in the district know he is an excellent farmer settled on good land. He has proven that he is making good and is going to make a living, even if he does not have a dollar coming from crops. He has cleared a few acres. He has a few chickens and a few hogs.

His application for a loan was rejected. In the first place, his application was rejected because his principal income did not come from farming. How in the world could it come from farming if you are going to clear a forest farm? Second, reference was made to the fact that his buildings were only log ones; reference was made to his log home, log barn, log chickenhouse, log woodshed and so on. I think that that is a very unsound approach to his application. That young man is a skilled axeman, and I would prefer his log home to many of the jerrybuilt four or five thousand dollar homes I see in the cities. Here we had a capable young Canadian, who had seen service, seeking a loan. If ever there was a good investment for the country that was one. I mentioned that only as one case in my own constituency; yet under the terms of this act, because his principal income was not from agriculture to commence with, his application for a loan was rejected. I might add, however, that his credit was so good and the proposition was so sound that he was able to turn around and obtain the money from other sources, but not every person can do that.

Commencing farming today is different from what it was forty or fifty years ago. Then it was largely a matter of subsistence farming, and a man could take a good number of years to clear and develop his farm. That is not possible today; and I maintain that if we are to provide these young men with the opportunity to farm we must do more in the way of providing low-interest, long-term agricultural credit than we do under the present act. In my opinion if the conservation measures of this government, such as the proposed irrigation work, on the prairies and in British Columbia, the proposed diking in the maritimes and possibly British Columbia, the development that may take place in the Columbia river basin, and so on, are to be successful, they will have to be linked up with a satisfactory scheme of long-term agricultural credit. I believe this will require close co-operation between the dominion and provincial governments and the farm organizations, and also close co-operation between the various agencies of the government itself such as the Department of Finance, the Canadian farm loan board, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Mines and Resources.

While I am on that point, I must say I think there will have to be much greater co-ordination of departmental activities than there has been in the past. By way of illustration I might mention that I know of the case of a public works official who was proceeding to spend a few hundred dollars to take a dam out of a river. At that time it was pointed out to him that, by the expenditure of another $500 or so to lower the bed of the river by three or four feet at one point, some four thousand acres of agricultural land could be drained. The answer was, "That has nothing to do with the public works department; that belongs to somebody else." So I say we must have more co-ordination between departments, so that a case like this would be brought to the attention of the department concerned, which would be the Department of Mines and Resources, in order that our money may be expended to the best advantage.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but he has exhausted his time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I appreciate that very much. I would recommend to hon. members who are interested in this question—and I am sure most hon. members representing farm constituencies are interested in the development of agriculture—that they read the history of agricultural credit in various countries. I think they will agree with me that such an examination indicates that the most successful schemes are those in which the agencies of government are linked with the organizations of the people. The more we can enmesh the people in the administration of their own affairs, the more successful they will be and the more satisfactory will be the results. I believe we must use our potential wealth for these purposes—I would say our social credit, using that expression in its broadest sense. At the present time I believe there is something like $200,000,000 invested in the credit unions of this country. What would be the possibilities under a co-ordinated long-term credit scheme with the co-operation of the federal government, provincial governments and farm organizations with loan societies organized on a regional basis, and with the co-operation of dominion and provincial governments supplying the credit? We can surely all see the possibilities so far ar the expansion of agriculture is concerned.

Therefore in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the matter of long-term agricultural credit be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization, so that it may inquire into the operation of the Canadian Farm Loan Act in order to suggest amendments which will provide ample and satisfactory credit. I maintain that long-term agricultural credit on a satisfactory and co-operative basis, linked to a national natural products marketing act, will bring more security to our farmers, expansion to agriculture, and provide the food that we at home and those abroad so greatly need.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): As Your Honour well knows, a member taking part in this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne may deal with any subject or with a variety of subjects. This evening I propose to spend most of my time on veterans affairs; but before going on to that question I should like to say a few words about the position in which the people of British Columbia, my native province, now find themselves with regard to representation in the cabinet and also representation in the house.

I must strongly protest against the fact that British Columbia has had no representative in the ministry for a period of about one month. When this session commenced on December 5 of last year we had as our minister the Right Hon. Ian Mackenzie. He was the senior member of the cabinet, having been a member since the election of 1935. He had been made an imperial privy councillor, and was at the head of one of the most important departments of the government, that of veterans affairs. In addition he was house leader on behalf of the government.

Mr. SINCLAIR: He led it very well, too.

Mr. GREEN: Yes, I agree with my hon. friend. Then on January 19 of this year, just one week before the house met again, the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie resigned and was appointed to the senate. That was not an accident; that action was taken deliberately by this government. I suggest that Mr. Mackenzie should have been left in the cabinet until the government was in a position to appoint someone to take his place as the representative of British Columbia. He has been able to carry on. I see that he has been making speeches in British Columbia, and also that he has been making speeches in another place which seem to have involved him in a few beginner's lessons in conduct there. In any event he was obviously able to carry on in this house, and he should have been left here until someone could be appointed to take his place. We have had no representative since, and the interests of British Columbia are not being looked after by reason of the fact that there is not a British Columbia member of the cabinet.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: But we have some good men there.

Mr. GREEN: If the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) is not careful I will recommend him.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I would sooner go to that other place.

Mr. MacINNIS: Recommending him and getting him in are two different things.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps that is true. Our province is further removed from Ottawa than any other province. Our economy is not like that of any other province; it is quite different. I think it is impossible for a minister from another province to look after our interests in the cabinet.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And even—

Mr. GREEN: Now, if the hon. member for Fraser Valley will let me make my speech, I shall probably help him out a good deal before I have finished.

Our province is now third in population, having well over a million people. It is also third in production and in the amount of income tax paid. Judged by all tests, it is now one of the big three, the other two being Ontario and Quebec. And, by the way, it is growing more rapidly than any other province.

On the basis of present population it is very much under-represented in the number of members allowed in the House of Commons. I suggest that British Columbia should have two ministers in the federal cabinet; yet we now have none. And, Mr. Speaker, there is talk of an outsider being brought in, if you please. Surely that is a serious reflection on the sitting Liberal members from British Columbia. One of those members, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Mayhew), is the senior parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance.

Perhaps members from other provinces will have noticed that, regardless of their political affiliations, members from British Columbia work pretty closely together. We have a sort of camaraderie which I believe is unequalled in the membership from any other part of the country. I am sure I speak for members from British Columbia who are not Liberals when I say that we rather resent this slight to the four sitting Liberal members from that province. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, we intend to defeat the four of them in the next general election. We reduced their membership from ten to five in the last one, and we will finish off the rest of them in 1949, or whenever the election is called. But, meantime, we do not like to see them getting such a raw deal.

Mr. REID: I will give the hon. member an invitation right now to come into my constituency.

Mr. GREEN: I have a very good one of my own. But, speaking seriously, I think this holding open of British Columbia cabinet representation is done for political purposes, is an attempt to win the by-election in Vancouver Centre; I believe the objective is either to appoint some outsider to the cabinet and then run him in that riding, as was done in the New Brunswick by-election, or to hold out to the electors of Vancouver Centre the inducement that if they elect a Liberal candidate he might be made a member of the cabinet.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You could bring in George Drew; you never can tell.

Mr. GREEN: The holding open of this position is unfair to my province, and I repeat that we should have a cabinet minister, and without further delay.

Then, I protest also against the delay in calling a by-election in the constituency of Yale. The Hon. Grote Stirling represented the people of that riding for nearly a quarter of a century, and represented them in a most conscientious manner. I am sure all members of the house will agree with me when I say that when he resigned on October 4 he did so because he was physically unable to carry on as the representative of his constituency. When he found he could not be in the house; indeed, when he found he could not take part in the activities in his own riding, he resigned at once, something which I am afraid would be done by very few of the rest of us.

In view of that fact, if for no other reason, I should have thought the government would call a by-election at once, so that the people of that constituency could have their representative here during the present session. And that is particularly important during this session, because the question of the cutting down of the imperial preference, and questions connected with the new Geneva treaties, are of the utmost importance to the constituency of Yale.

Primarily it is a fruit district. The preference on apples has been done away with, and that particular fact may well mean disaster to the people of that riding. Furthermore, the tariff on United States apples coming into Canada has been greatly reduced. That, too, affects them seriously. The Geneva treaties affect other fruits, as well, from the sale of which these people live. And it is very important that they have a representative here in the House of Commons when these issues are under debate. Even if the by-election were called at once and the new member were not here until the month of May, he would perhaps have two months of this session in which to serve. I should think that would give him time to take part in the discussions on the preference and on the Geneva treaties. I suggest that in fairness that by-election at least should be called at once, regardless of what may be done in respect of the other constituencies which became vacant at a much later date.

Speaking of veterans affairs, I believe there is great resentment in my province over the way in which the government has been trifling with veteran problems. I have never known resentment among veteran organizations to be as great as it has been in the last few months, caused perhaps by the rise in the cost of living. In any event, that resentment is a fact, and I do not believe I shall be contradicted by any member for British Columbia when I say that.

Mr. MITCHELL: Would my hon. friend tell me any country in the world that has done better by her veterans than Canada has?

Mr. GREEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the excuse which is always thrown out by the government in a debate on veterans affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is not an excuse at all; it is a fact.

Mr. GREEN: I will tell the minister something. In the first place, Canada's position can be compared only with that of the United States, because other countries, such as Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand, are not in a position to do anything like what the United States or Canada can do. In many respects veterans legislation in the United States is very much more favourable to the veterans than is our legislation in Canada. And during the course of my remarks I propose to give one example of that.

I repeat that the government has been trifling and continues to trifle with veteran problems. First of all, I refer to the war veterans allowance. Three days ago, on February 16, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) said that the War Veterans Allowance Act was still under study, but he intimated that there would be further government proposals published or announced within the course of a few days. It is because of that fact that I speak first about the war veterans allowance. Once an announcement is made in the house, as has been done twice in this session by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), there is very little chance of getting any further improvement. It is then almost impossible to bring about any further alteration.

The final announcement with regard to war veterans allowances has not yet been made. I warn the Minister of Veterans Affairs that now is the time to put up a fight in the cabinet for better treatment of these war veterans allowance recipients. He will have a difficult time to live up to the fighting reputation in the cabinet of the former Minister of Veterans Affairs. Naturally I do not know what goes on in the cabinet, but I believe that on more than one occasion the former minister put up a fight. I believe that if he had not done so there are many amendments to veterans legislation which would never have come before the house. I point out to the present Minister of Veterans Affairs that this is a chance for him to win his spurs. He should get in and fight in the cabinet and see that this war veterans allowance legislation is made what it should be.

The war veterans allowance is simply a burnt-out pension, and that is what it is commonly called. It is paid to the veteran who has seen front-line service at a much earlier age than the 70 years necessary to receive an old age pension. Parliament considered that these veterans had been burnt out by reason of having been exposed to shell-fire, and this legislation followed. I think it has been very beneficial legislation. A few years ago it was extended to cover the widows of veterans who had served in an active theatre of war. There is quite a severe means test and, as hon. members know, the maximum which a single veteran or a widow can get is $30.41 per month.

I am not going to take up time in arguing that that is not enough to live on, because I do not believe there is a member in the house who thinks it is possible for these men or these widows to get along on an allowance of that size. It is interesting to read what happened last year during the debate on old age pensions. I have the Hansards here and hon. members may be interested to check the statements which appear on pages 4744 and 4864. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) was being pressed with regard to the adequacy of the old age pension of $30 a month, and finally he admitted that that figure was not enough to live on, that it was only a maintenance grant. Upon being questioned by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), he replied:

I do not say, and no one says, that $30 a month is enough for a person to live on.

Later on, he explained that that $30 was merely a grant towards maintenance and that the provinces must make up the difference in order to give the persons residing within their boundaries an amount on which to live. He put the responsibility for paying anything in excess of $30 a month upon the provinces. I would point out to the Minister of Veterans Affairs that the veteran is not the responsibility of the province; he is the responsibility of the dominion. That has been admitted time and again. Last year the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe) admitted that veterans housing was a responsibility of the dominion. There can be no question that the dominion cannot expect a province to pay an additional amount to the war veterans allowance recipient so that he can live; that responsibility rests with the dominion.

Some of the provinces are paying old age pensioners an additional $10 a month. My own province of British Columbia is doing that, and the situation there is that war veterans are going off war veterans allowance and on to old age pension because they can get between $9 and $10 a month more. It is a shameful situation that veterans of that province have to give up their war veterans allowance and take an old age pension when they and everybody else know that, in reality, they are the responsibility of the dominion government. The minister's own department is co-operating in changes of that kind, is making it easier for these veterans to switch from war veterans allowance to old age pension.

The government took some action when on December 19 the Prime Minister announced that there would be an increase in war veterans allowances, and I quote from his statement as reported on page 490 of Hansard:

The amendment will authorize the war veterans allowance board to grant supplementary allowances up to $10 a month—

It does not say they will get $10 a month; it simply says up to $10 a month.

—in cases of need for veterans and widows who, through age and infirmity, are unable to provide for their own maintenance. The board will be authorized to make the supplementary allowances retroactive to October 1, or to any subsequent date, as the circumstances of individual cases may require.

That applies to both single and married veterans. If a veteran is married he can get only up to $10 a month; he does not get anything extra because he is married. I suggest to the minister that there should have been an outright addition to the war veterans allowance of at least $10 without any further means test, without the front-line veteran having to go back to the war veterans allowance board for further investigation, without his having to get past a lot of officials before getting a maximum of $10, and he might get only $2 or $3. That was a ridiculous way to meet a great need. These men are in the greatest need of all veterans. With them it is not a matter of the cost of living, it is a matter of the cost of keeping alive. The proposal does not meet their position at all. I repeat that this is a case of trifling with a veterans' problem.

Another example is the increase in pensions. No cost of living bonus was paid to pensioners or to the recipients of war veterans allowance during the war years when the cost of living was going up. Last session various demands were made that these men be paid a cost of living bonus, but nothing was done. The cost of living index has now gone up until it stands at between 145 and 150, based on the 1935-39 period.

There was nothing in the speech from the throne about an increase in pensions. Mention was made that there would be some veterans affairs bills but there was no promise at all of increased pensions. However, protests from the Legion, from the Army and Navy, from the Canadian corps, from the Amputation and other associations, and protests from newspapers right across Canada were so strong that on December 19, the last day of the short session, the Prime Minister announced that there would be an increase in pensions.

It was not a very big increase but it was something; at least it was a start. The basic increase was $10 on a full disability pension of $75, which meant an increase from $75 to $85. There was no increase whatever in the allowance for a wife or for children or for parents. There was an increase of $10 for the widow. The increases were made retroactive to October 1. As all hon. members know, they were quite inadequate. They met with protests from one end of the country to the other, and now we have had a further increase which was announced on February 16, three days ago. But I submit to the house that the figure is still too low. In some cases it means an increase of about sixteen per cent. I do not think in any case it is over twenty per cent. The cost of living has gone up fifty per cent. The Legion, and the National Council of Veterans Associations, which includes the Army and Navy, the Corps, the Paraplegic Association, Canadian Pensioners', Sir Arthur Pearson Association and the War

Amputations, both asked for a greater increase. I think the legion asked for an increase of twenty-five per cent right across the board. The increase should have been given. There should not be all this haggling about an increase for the men and the dependents of the men who saved this country. It just does not make sense.

I would point out to the minister that even in Great Britain, hard hit as she is, increases have been granted in many cases up to forty per cent within the last few months. Yes, indeed Canada might very well have made a general increase of twenty-five per cent right across the board. The tragedy of the situation is that, throughout, the government has moved only after terrific pressure, which shows a failure to realize the plight in which the veterans of Canada now find themselves.

The third instance of trifling with veterans' problems is that of the veterans taking vocational and educational training. In December they were refused any increase whatever. Their claims were just brushed aside at that time. Now the married men only are given an increase of $10 a month. I would ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to correct me if I am wrong in any of these figures. That, I submit, should have been greater. Early in December I received a very good brief from the University of British Columbia branch of the Canadian Legion dealing with this question of an increase in the grants for student veterans. They asked that there be set a minimum over-all increase of $20 a month, which they stated was vitally and urgently needed by all student veterans with unemployable dependents; that is, those with children or wives incapable of working or who support elderly parents. In the brief they submitted figures to show that the average married student was going behind at the rate of $35.67 a month at that time. Their figures were carefully prepared and were accurate. They were taken from the student veterans living in what is known as Little Mountain Camp, a former army camp, where there are several hundred veterans running their camp as a small town, and running it exceptionally well. I am sure that the figures taken by them would be accurate.

This increase of $10 a month is not made retroactive to October 1, as was done with the pensions and the war veterans allowances. For some reason or another it was made retroactive only to January 1. That, again, I suggest is unfair. These men have been in university since September. They have had these expenses for these months. They had been going behind in each one of these months last year, and this increase should have been made retroactive to October 1.

The single man should not have been left out. A significant statement was given to the press on February 17 by the students of Carleton college in Ottawa. Among other things they said:

While the married student is slightly better off, the single vet is still marking time. We feel the government decision is only a half-way measure.

The need for this increase is obvious. In every case the cost of living has gone up for the single man, even though the first claim must, of necessity, be that of the married man. I suggest that the single man should also have had an increase. I point out to the minister and to his associate, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell), that in the United States less than a week ago President Truman signed legislation increasing the benefits of two million veterans attending college under the so-called G.I. Bill of Rights, which raised the monthly subsistence allowance for veterans without dependents from $65 to $75; those with one dependent from $90 to $105, and those with two or more dependents from $90 to $120.

This liability to the veterans is not a continuing one. We shall have it for only two or three more years, and I do not believe that the government of Canada could make a finer investment than it is making in helping these young men and women to obtain an education. They will be the leaders of this nation within a very few years, and it is of the utmost importance to Canada that they should receive the very finest training that can be given in Canada. I urge the government to realize the difficulties under which they are working and to make a further increase, so that there may be no doubt that they will all be able to carry through until they obtain their degrees.

Another instance is the difficulty under the Veterans Land Act. There again the government has been trifling with the veteran and his problems. I am not going to go into it in detail, because the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) did that and did it well the other evening. But I endorse his demand that a royal commission be set up in Canada to investigate all these small housing programs. I believe that the government has paid, or has incurred costs for repairs, over and above contract price, up to a figure of something like $3,000,000. I believe also that there has been very little of that collected from contractors; and all the contractors I know who had anything to do with veterans housing were in a position to pay for not completing their contracts. I cannot understand why the government should announce with such enthusiasm that it is going to pay $3,000,000 to make these houses right, and not give one little squeak about making the contractor pay that money. There is no reason at all why the taxpayers of Canada should be saddled with that expense. It should come from the pockets of the contractors. I repeat; a royal commission should be set up without further delay.

The fifth instance of trifling with the veterans' problems has been the treatment meted out by the government to the merchant seamen. They have been the completely forgotten men who took part in the last war. They were regarded by everyone as a fourth arm of the fighting services. Speeches to that effect were made by every cabinet minister from the Prime Minister down, lauding these men for the great things they were doing, and they were doing great things. The casualties in proportion to the numbers in the merchant navy were, I think, higher than in any of the other arms of the services; yet when it comes to the treatment of these men, the pensions, vocational and educational grants and preference in the civil service, they are treated as civilians. We battled that out on the floor of the house here last year. The government refused to include them in the veterans preference. A merchant seaman cannot get a pension unless he was wounded by direct enemy action. He cannot get educational benefits. He cannot get vocational training unless he takes it by way of training in the merchant navy. The merchant seamen are not being given a fair deal, and that is another position which must be remedied.

The final instance is the way that this proposed special committee of the house is being handled. The Prime Minister intimated to me yesterday, in reply to a question I asked, that probably the increases in the pensions would not be referred to the special committee which is to be set up. He said that it would probably be necessary to get that bill through in a hurry so that the veterans could get their money, and that, therefore, it would not perhaps be very wise to have the matter go to the committee.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs knows, and his parliamentary assistant knows very well that each time there has been a special committee set up to deal with veterans affairs it has been given very wide powers. It has been given an opportunity to review the whole field of veterans affairs. The committee has been as non-partisan as any committee in this house could be. Every member of the committee has considered it a privilege to serve, and the job has been well done. That was particularly true of the committee in 1945 and 1946. The veterans' organizations feel free to go before that committee and make representations, knowing that a fair hearing will be given and that the representations made will receive full consideration.

That, I suggest, is what should be done with the committee of this session. It was promised by the former minister of veterans affairs at page 4893 of Hansard of last year:

We shall have another veterans committee reviewing the whole situation as it did last year.

He made the same promise in Vancouver in November of last year, and we have always understood that the special committee on veterans affairs would be allowed to review the whole situation and do a proper job.

Mr. TUCKER: May I ask the hon. member a question? I am as much interested in this matter as he is. Is it not correct that if this bill went through this house and the other house and received the royal assent, these people would get the benefit of the increases much earlier, while that would not preclude us from going into the whole question of pensions, even after this bill had gone through?

Mr. PEARKES: Why wait?

Mr. GREEN: It might be that these particular amendments could be considered first and the other amendments later. The Canadian Legion and the other soldier organizations have asked that that question be referred to the special committee. Just this week, in fact yesterday, in the Journal the Reverend Sidney E. Lambert, president of the War Amputations of Canada said that his association had asked for an opportunity to appear before the parliamentary committee on veterans affairs on the question.

Mr. TUCKER: I do not think the hon. member got my point. Would it not be desirable to put the bill through at once and the matter could be considered by the veterans committee? They could go into the whole question even if the bill went through.

Mr. GREEN: If, in putting the bill through to provide for the increases announced, the government will say that these increases are only temporary, and that it will give any further increases recommended by the special committee, there might be something in the suggestion.

Mr. TUCKER: As the hon. member knows, the terms of reference to the committee would enable these pensions to be studied even if this bill did not go through.

Mr. GREEN: I repeat my suggestion. Mind you, if the government is willing to take the recommendation of that committee as to the amount of increase, I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member has said; but I am afraid the position is that the government has made up its mind that it will go thus far and no farther, and it is for that reason that it is willing to have the increases referred to the committee.

The committee should have been set up in December. The need existed then as it does now. Certainly it should have been set up at once when the house resumed on January 26, and I say it should now be set up without any further delay and should be given the power to deal with all these questions.

In conclusion, I warn the government that it must face each of these questions and it must face them at this session. There are other problems which I have not the time to deal with tonight, such as the question of pre-enlistment condition, the question of the benefit of the doubt, the fact that the wife of a veteran of the first war, married after the first of May, 1944, can get no allowance, failure to give imperial veterans war veterans allowance, and the need to give more assistance to such groups as the firefighters and auxiliary services, the young women who served in the Canadian Red Cross and the men who served in the ferry command. These are all topics which no doubt will be discussed by the committee and they, too, will have to be met during the present session.

There is this fact always to be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the veterans' problems can never be finally disposed of and put away in a filing cabinet. As long as there remains one veteran of either war alive who needs assistance, veterans affairs must be a main problem for the Canadian parliament.

I think it was a mistake to make such a fuss about getting out a veterans charter in 1946. I said at the time I thought it was unwise to do so, because it gave the idea that everything was settled. We had a charter; there were no new problems that would arise and we could forget about veterans. Actually, this charter was just a revision and a bringing up-to-date of veterans legislation, and a worthwhile work it was too. But the problem will never be settled, and no matter what we do to help out Canada's veterans, we cannot adequately repay them and their dependents for the sacrifices that have been made.

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): Some little time has elapsed since the speech from the throne was read on December 6 last. However, I wish to join with those who have taken part in the debate in complimenting the mover and the seconder of the address in reply. In rising to take part in this debate, I do so as one who considers it his duty to express what he believes to be the opinion of the great majority of the people he has the honour to represent.

The matter I wish to discuss in this debate was introduced by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) and the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor). It has to do with the Atlantic seaports. On February 6 the hon. member for St. John-Albert brought to the attention of the house and particularly the Department of Transport the discriminatory attitude which this department had taken with regard to shipping through the ports of Saint John and Halifax. The hon. member for St. John-Albert spoke in this debate, as I say, on February 6, and the following day the Saint John Telegraph-Journal published the greater part of his remarks. The Department of Transport was accused of "bare-faced trickery" and "double dealing" with regard to shipments through the port of Saint John. On February 10 an editorial appeared in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal. I will not quote it all because it is quite lengthy, but I will quote the last paragraph which reads as follows:

> It is good to have one of our representatives in parliament speaking out boldly on behalf of our ports and it is to be hoped that other members from the maritime provinces will realize that this issue transcends party lines and will support the vital cause with equal force. If politics is discarded and our spokesmen at Ottawa show a united front on this question the ports of Halifax and Saint John will at last win justice.

I fully realize that the members from New Brunswick and the maritime provinces should endeavour to co-operate in every way possible when a question of benefits to our province or to the maritime provinces is concerned. I regret, however, that I cannot agree with statements made by the hon. member for St. John-Albert or by the senior member for Halifax. If cheaper freight rates can be obtained through Portland, Maine, than through Atlantic seaports the exporter will certainly take advantage of that situation; and in order to divert this traffic from its economic course the Canadian people would be called upon to subsidize Atlantic seaports. It is a well-known fact that the volume of United States goods shipped through Canadian ports is much greater than is that of Canadian goods shipped through United States ports. Much serious thought should be given this extremely important matter before any action is taken by this government that might disrupt the national economic movement of goods between these two great countries. I am convinced that this would be an unpopular move. As has been argued on many occasions by hon. members sitting opposite, it is far better to let things such as this take their natural course than to interfere by substituting some artificial arrangement which at best would be only a temporary measure, not a permanent solution.

I might also add that if the same publicity is given in the press to my remarks as was given to those of the hon. member for St. John-Albert I have nothing to fear as far as my county is concerned. I am confident that I shall be expressing the views of the great majority of the people living in the county of Charlotte.

As hon. members are aware, Saint John is called a national port. We in Charlotte county believe this name should be changed, for this reason. If any Canadian outside the county of St. John makes an application for work at this port, he must pay an enormous fee, even though millions of dollars of Canadian money has gone in to build the port up. A citizen of Canada from outside St. John county must pay that fee. A citizen of St. John county is treated in an entirely different manner. The hon. member for St. John-Albert pointed out that a discriminatory attitude was taken by the Department of Transport with regard to shipments to Saint John port. I would ask him to explain the discrimination shown in this respect. It might be said that there is a selfish motive in the stand I have taken, and perhaps rightly so, because hon. members taking part in discussions of this kind usually speak for their own constituents who naturally have priority over all others; in many cases a general survey is not considered. This statement I believe can be borne out if we review the period when controls were being rigidly enforced in Canada. A control that was beneficial to an individual or his constituents received his support. Another that might be repulsive to him but of benefit to others was immediately condemned. In other words, we all supported controls on commodities we were obliged to purchase, but did not relish any interference with regard to commodities we might have to sell.

In my home town of St. Andrews we have for many years enjoyed the benefits of United States shipments through that port. It has also been an enormous source of revenue to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Each and every year hundreds of carloads of tin plate pass through this port to the state of Maine, hundreds of thousands of gallons of edible oils that are used in the canning industry, and thousands of tons of salt used also in this industry. These commodities pass through St. Andrews for one reason only: the freight rate from the western United States is cheaper through Canada than by United States railroads. Undoubtedly United States railroads have endeavoured to have these materials hauled over their own lines, and the same arguments have been put forth as were used by the hon. member for St. John-Albert and the senior member for Halifax. Regardless of political pressure and other influences, however, the canning industries in the state of Maine still take advantage of the cheaper rail haul, and, as I have said, much to the benefit of the county I represent, and to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. After the salt, oil and tin plate reach their destination, raw materials must be found before canning operations are possible. That is where Charlotte county comes into the picture again, because we supply two-thirds of the raw materials used in this enormous canning industry in the eastern state of Maine; and from the time this industry was first established, these raw materials, which are produced by Canadian fishermen, have entered the United States duty free.

To give hon. members some idea of the production and the value of this industry, I shall quote just a few figures. In 1947, sardine fishermen of southern New Brunswick produced 122,000,000 pounds of sardines; that would be approximately 2,000,000 cases of 100 cans each, or, 200,000,000 tins. The value to the fishermen was $1,547,000. Approximately two-thirds of this amount were sold in United States of America. One can readily see the value of this United States market to the fishermen in that locality.

The story, however, is not yet complete with regard to the exportation of the canned sardines. Hundreds of thousands of cases, when ready for shipment, again find their way back to St. Andrews from Eastport, Lubec and Robbinston, Maine, and are shipped to all parts of the United States by the Canadian Pacific Railway, giving employment to dock workers, marine freighters and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

It is true that the shipping through the port of St. Andrews would be a small item when compared with that of Saint John or Halifax; nevertheless it means a livelihood for several residents of the town and, indirectly, a benefit to many more. The limited amount of shipping through this port is, I may add, not for the want of a harbour, because we have in the St. Croix harbour one of the finest in the world. As to size, it would be much greater than Saint John and Halifax combined; Portland could also be thrown in with plenty of room to spare. We who live in Charlotte county cannot understand why no effort has been made to develop a harbour that nature has practically completed for us. The old adage that "the squeaking wheel gets the most grease" might apply in this instance, because millions of dollars of public moneys have been wasted in dredging in other Atlantic ports—

Mr. ISNOR: None at Halifax.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): —while this natural port, where dredging would be unnecessary, is being selfishlv neglected. Ships and cargoes valued at millions of dollars—and might I add that at the time those ships and cargoes were lost they were especially valuable; it was during the war—were lost inside Atlantic ports for one reason only, namely, compelling steamship companies and masters of steamships to navigate in harbours that are not, and never will be, safe for navigation.

Regardless of the amount of money expended in their development, St. Croix harbour has more to offer at the present time than any other harbour in the province of New Brunswick can ever hope to have. For many years the people of Charlotte county have endeavoured to have this great port developed, because it is recognized as one of the largest natural harbours in the world, in fact second to none. In Passamaquoddy bay the combined navies of the world could be moored in a landlocked harbour, the like of which cannot be found anywhere else on the continent of North America. During the war, when it was necessary to prepare convoys and arrange them before proceeding overseas, this wonderful harbour would have been of invaluable assistance, since it would have eliminated the necessity of loading freighters lying outside harbours in the open sea for many days awaiting the completion of the convoy, or awaiting berthing space. Many times during the war I criticized this practice, since I knew it was quite unnecessary. Many suffered through the selfishness of a few who sacrificed everything for personal gain.

I have had a few years of experience on the water myself, and I am well acquainted with the harbours on the Atlantic coast, having watched their progress over a period of years. So far, I have expressed my personal opinion as to the advantages of St. Croix harbour. At this point, however, I propose to put on record the opinions and recommendations of men far better qualified than I, who made a survey of this harbour in 1912 and 1913 at the request of the dominion government. At that time the citizens of Charlotte county were hopeful that something would be done in developing the harbour as a national port. One survey was made by Mr. A. D. Swan, member of the institute of civil engineers, and I should like to place his report upon Hansard. It is the St. Croix harbour report of 1912-13:

No. 406, Lake of the Woods building,
Montreal, March 4, 1913.

Hon. Robert Rogers,
Minister of Public Works,
Dominion of Canada.

Sir,—

St. Croix River, Charlotte County, N.B.

Having been honoured with instructions from you to examine into and report on the St. Croix river, in Charlotte county, New Brunswick, with a view as to its suitability or otherwise for a new deep water harbour which would be open all the year round for the largest class of merchant shipping, I beg respectfully to submit the following:

On 29th November, 1913, I left the port of Saint John, N.B., by tug boat and steamed down the bay of Fundy to the estuary of the St. Croix river, proceeding by way of Head Harbour passage, an opening between Campobello island and Deer island and distant some fifty miles from Saint John. The river St. Croix forms the international boundary between the state of Maine, U.S.A., and the province of New Brunswick, Canada. Having examined the entrance I continued up the river, passing the town of Eastport, Maine, on the left, till the town of St. Andrews, about fifteen miles from the mouth of the river, was reached. I examined the approaches to the port of St. Andrews and possible development from Passamaquoddy bay, and landing, examined the fore shore; after which I proceeded nine miles further up the river to Oak Point, the head of deep water navigation and situated about five miles southeast of the town of St. Stephen. I carefully examined the headland of Oak Point and The Ledge, as well as the Canadian side of the river, and later again visited the port of St. Andrews, also making myself conversant with railway facilities in the vicinity of St. Stephen and St. Andrews and the feasibility or otherwise of extending the railways with a view to the construction of railway terminals alongside deep water wharves. I visited the principal industries in the vicinity of St. Stephen within a radius of about ten miles, and inquired into the amount of present traffic, the existing conditions for handling same, and the reasonable probabilities for future development.

I again visited the river and vicinity on 23rd and 24th February, 1914, and after exceptionally severe weather, and found the river quite open for navigation. Thin ice had formed over it between Oak Point and St. Stephen, but a tug boat passed up without any difficulty whatever.

On this later visit, with your approval, I arranged with the shipping federation of Canada that they should nominate three experienced navigators to accompany me and give me their opinion of the suitability or otherwise of the river and approach thereto from a navigable point of view. The representatives nominated and who accompanied me were Captain Gillies of the Donaldson Line; Captain Elliott of the Canadian Pacific Railway Lines; and Captain Kenny of the Head Line, along with whom I again inspected the river on board the S.S. Lansdowne, kindly placed at my disposal by the marine and fisheries department.

Copy of Navigators' report is appended hereto.

The St. Croix river is navigable for the largest class of vessels for about twenty-five miles in a northerly direction from Campobello island and the bay of Fundy. At its narrowest part between Deer Point and Dog island, near Eastport, the river is about 2,600 feet wide, and it has an average approximate depth at low water the whole way up to Oak Point varying from about 40 feet to 350 feet. For about eight miles of their course, vessels would pass through Passamaquoddy bay, which is approximately about twelve miles long by six miles wide, and which, having deep water, would afford magnificent anchorage if desired. The river and bay are at all seasons of the year free from ice, but there is a variation in the tide of about 24 feet between high and low water. The approach for vessels entering the St. Croix river from the bay of Fundy would be from Grand Manan channel between Grand Manan island and Campobello island, thence by Head Harbour passage; and I understand the Grand Manan or north channel is looked upon more favourably by navigators than is the channel to the south of Grand Manan island.

The heaviest storms in the bay of Fundy are generally from the southeast, so that as soon as a vessel rounded Head Harbour point, she would be perfectly protected. The current of the river is most rapid for a short distance between Deer Point and Dog island, where it varies from two to five knots, and there is a curve just off the town of Eastport. The radius of the curve would be approximately about one mile and a quarter, but the navigable part of the river or roadstead at that place is about 2,400 feet wide, and the current is comparatively small. It was principally on account of this curve that I desired an opinion from a navigator's point of view, but the three captains who accompanied me on my second visit of inspection unhesitatingly assured me that it did not present any difficulty owing to the great width, and that it compared very favourably with several curves in the St. Lawrence ship channel.

Next in the report is a section dealing with fog in the bay of Fundy and St. Croix river. I will not read this whole report, but a table is included giving a record of fog at Partridge island, near Saint John, and at St. Croix. For the years 1912-13 the average at Partridge island was 1,486 hours, while the average at St. Croix harbour was 395 hours. The report goes on:

It will be seen from the above that the duration of fog, snow or vapour, the three conditions which call for the operation of the alarm, was at St. Croix island in St. Croix harbour only 27 per cent of that at Partridge island at the entrance of Saint John harbour. It is further to be noted that immediately on the turn of Head Harbour, Campobello, the fog condition began to improve.

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

The next part of the report to which I shall refer is headed "Conclusion arrived at".

In considering the St. Croix river for shipping purposes, and as a possible auxiliary to Saint John, more particularly for the extensive traffic during the winter months, it seems to have many attractions, such as—It is some fifty miles nearer the mouth of the bay of Fundy than is Saint John. The distance from Montreal to Saint John by Canadian Pacific railway is 483 miles. The distance from Montreal to Oak bay, St. Stephen, by the Canadian Pacific railway is 438 miles; and if in the future a branch line is constructed from Mattawamkeag to Oak Bay, this would shorten the total distance from Montreal to Oak Bay to 410 miles. The river St. Croix and Passamaquoddy bay are comparatively well sheltered waters, never closed by ice, and protected from the swell of the bay of Fundy by numerous islands near the mouth; and as there is deep water right close in shore to the sides of the river and bay, practically no dredging whatever would be necessary to form a shipping channel. Leading lights for the guidance of shipping at night would, of course, have to be provided; probably some joint agreement regarding cost of same could be made with the United States.

Assuming, therefore, that the river offers reasonably attractive facilities for shipping, the question arises as to what part of the river should be developed first; whether St. Andrews ought to be the terminal or some point further inland; and I have no hesitation whatever in recommending that, because of its geographical position, as being the furthest point inland suitable for deep water navigation, Oak Point, overlooking Oak bay, should be selected as the terminus. Oak bay is a magnificent site, reached by a comparatively straight stretch of river, nine miles further inland than St. Andrews, with ample room for swinging and excellent accommodation for the construction of terminal facilities, in addition to which there is already the town of St. Stephen, a short distance off, with numerous industries, moderately large and rapidly increasing population, and varied commercial activities, affording an absolutely certain considerable amount of traffic the whole year round, the moment accommodation is provided. The land at Oak Point slopes gently towards the river and bay, and is all cleared and at present under grass. It is not that St. Andrews does not afford many most excellent points suitable for deep water terminals, but simply that by going further inland, the rail haul is shortened, and there already is considerable local business: nevertheless, if it should be considered advisable to construct one or more wharves at St. Andrews, the side of the river from Joe's Point upwards would be most suitable.

I therefore recommend with great confidence that wharf areas, railway terminals, roads and freight-handling facilities in general should be designed on a comprehensive, practicable scale, and constructed by degrees at Oak Bay as may be necessary. . . .

In conclusion, it is a recognized fact that no port in the world that has kept its facilities ahead of actual requirements, but has experienced immense development followed by great increase of trade and population.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant.

A. D. Swan.

Just one other statement which, with the permission of the house, I should like to place on Hansard. This is a statement by Captain Mowatt who was for many years port superintendent for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Liverpool, England. He retired in September 1913. This was his report at that time:

The approach to the port of St. Croix via Head Harbour is equal to the approach of any other great ports in the world, and in many instances, excels the best for depth of water. There are no great ports which have such great depth of water, from the sea clear into port, as that of the St. Croix; it is such that the largest ships now in existence, and with the greatest draft of water, can enter the port at the lowest possible tide. The channels from Head Harbour into Passamaquoddy bay are such that the largest vessel that ever will be built, can be navigated with ease at top speed, with perfect safety. They are free from shoals and rock, and have ample width for turning a ship in the narrowest part. The tidal currents are nothing in comparison to the river Mersey (England) and other ports which I have navigated.

After rounding the Head Harbour light, there is good anchorage clear up to Oak Point. Passamaquoddy bay, being completely land-locked and having a comparatively even depth of water, affords good anchorage in any part of the bay. The current of the St. Croix river is not great, by reason of its evenness of width and depth of water. Vessels of the largest dimensions can lie and swing to single anchor, and with from seventy-five to one hundred fathoms of cable, with perfect safety in all parts of the river north and south of St. Croix island.

The shore on the east side of the river, from Joe's Point to and including Oak Point, is excellent for wharves and piers, and also for wharves running parallel with the shore line. The above wharves and piers can be so arranged and built that no dredging will be required. On the line of shore are no less than three sites where many dry docks can be easily built. On the banks of the river there is abundance of material for pier construction. In several places the banks and land elevation inland are perfect for grain warehouses, where cars can run over the top of the buildings and discharge into them, thus avoiding the expense of discharging grain by elevator from car to warehouse. There is unlimited caryard room in the vicinity of the above-mentioned sites. Fresh water for ships and other purposes is in abundance. Having large manoeuvring room where wharves are properly arranged, the largest vessels can dock and unload with ease, and without the aid of tug assistance.

Statistics clearly show no trouble to navigation from ice, and also that there is less fog difficulty than in many parts of the Atlantic coast. Emphatically speaking, in making this port from sea in any weather condition, there is no more danger than in making Halifax, Saint John, or even New York.

After careful investigation, I consider St. Croix river and Passamaquoddy bay equal to any in the world for a great national port.

In conclusion, I should like to say that during his visits to St. Andrews the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) lived and played golf overlooking this harbour. The advantages it has over several other Atlantic seaports were brought to the attention of the minister. I am pleased to say he was favourably impressed. We, the citizens of Charlotte county, are hopeful that in the reconstruction program St. Croix harbour will not be forgotten.

In 1603 Champlain wintered in this harbour on Dochet's island. On the 350th anniversary of this historic event could one think of a more fitting commemoration than the official opening of the St. Croix harbour as a national port?

Mr. F. W. TOWNLEY-SMITH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, while the remarks I wish to make have a definite bearing on the people of my constituency, they also refer to the agricultural conditions of the country as a whole. Most of the people in my constituency make their living from the pursuit of agriculture. Their wants are not very great, and they are willing to turn their hands to fishing, trapping, lumbering and other pursuits when, through the effects of adverse weather conditions, they find themselves short of the funds required to purchase the necessary food and clothing for themselves and their families. In the more northerly parts they raise a certain amount of livestock, hogs and cattle, in order to add to their slender incomes.

It was, therefore, with great dismay that they saw the relation of feed costs and livestock prices get completely out of line. This was particularly distressing when they found out that, on account of the high prices of oats and barley, they could no longer afford to feed their livestock. This circumstance was and is very serious for them, because their incomes are derived from several small occupations, each of which must, of necessity, provide its necessary share.

Added to these difficulties which have been brought to my attention many times, is the fact that they are short of transportation facilities. When I first came to the House of Commons three years ago as the representative of those people I drew attention to the fact that they had through their country two incomplete railway systems. The ends had been built, but the middles had been left out; and they are still in the same condition. The end portions, fortunately, are still there; but the middle portions, unfortunately, are not. They were promised the completion of these lines many years ago, and I feel that without further delay something should be done about the matter.

I am happy to say that on one of these gaps an engineering construction and survey gang was working last summer, and I should hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) would do his level best to see that these lines are completed in the near future. I refer to the branch lines of the Canadian National Railways; and the gaps I have mentioned are those between Frenchman's Butte in Saskatchewan and Heinsburg in Alberta, and from St. Walburg in Saskatchewan to Beaver River. I feel that when those people, who were pioneers and have gone through all the difficulties and hazards accompanying pioneer life, went into that new country and were promised railway facilities, the least we can do is to see that they get them. We made a bond with those people and we should see that the bond is honoured and observed.

As I have said, the principal occupation of the people in my constituency is the production of foodstuffs. I believe it would be a fair statement to say that the most important thing in the world today is food. We in Canada may have some difficulty in realizing that fact because we have always had plentiful supplies of the more important varieties of foodstuffs we require. All food comes from the soil, and when the psalmist said that all flesh is grass he was speaking a profound truth. Agriculture is an honourable and important industry. We have heard it said many times that it is the backbone of the country. Therefore it follows that the people who engage in the occupation of tending the soil are the most important people among the workers of the world. With the world in its present state of food shortage the importance of the workers of the soil has been emphasized and perhaps brought closer to its real classification. Even now the true value of the things we eat and wear in comparison with the cost of other things leaves much to be desired.

It has been said with a good deal of truth that prices of farm products are the last to go up and the first to come down. It is just possible that when we have quoted the prices of foodstuffs that have prevailed in times past we have not had a fair realization of what such prices entailed. Certainly we could not have had much idea of the true value of those things which are so vital to us and which sustain life in all the peoples of the world. When we hear such quotations as eggs at ten cents a dozen, butter at fifteen cents a pound, meats at fifteen cents a pound, wheat at fifty cents a bushel and other grains at corresponding prices, we are simply recalling to mind the dreadfully unfair conditions which were imposed upon our farmers in those days. Prices such as those which were obtained by farmers not a great number of years ago never provided a decent living for them and were a shameful commentary on the manner in which our major industry was considered and treated. It was only by the farmer working unbelievably long hours; it was only by his pressing into service his wife and children that he was able to stay on the farm. Indeed many thousands left the farm and the industry was in a really precarious position for a number of years.

I have suggested before, as have others, that some effort should be made to relate prices of farm products to each other and also to other things. That is what we have in mind when we talk about parity prices. It is futile to hold meetings and conferences and endeavour to advise farmers how to operate their farms. When prices of livestock are completely out of line with price of feeds the farmers will produce whichever shows a promise of success. No amount of sage advice or statistical sermons will change their intentions. If it is found that the production of a certain commodity entails a loss they will stop producing it in a hurry and no man can blame them. If it is felt that a greater number of hogs are desired, either for our home market or for the export trade, the simplest way to get them is to raise the price of hogs and bring that price into proper relationship to the price of feeds and other things.

A great deal has been said in this house about the difficulties of the farmer who is trying to raise hogs and stay in business. I wish to deal with this matter in detail so that hon. members may appreciate those difficulties and realize why hog production has fallen off so badly. I should like to refer for a few minutes to the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) after he quoted that famous letter in which a Manitoba farmer said that he would trust to God and Gardiner that things will come out better than they appear right now. The statement made by this farmer must have sounded quite effective and interesting to those who did not check it carefully, or who did not really know a great deal about the hog business. I quote from the letter, which appears at page 502 of Hansard:

> Total hog sales, $4,426.52. Total feed costs, $1,966.10. Margin of hog sales over feed, $2,460.42.

The only charge made against the hogs is the cost of feed. Industrialist members will appreciate that. They know what would happen if they tried to estimate their profit at the end of a year by just charging the cost of their raw materials and forgetting all about labour and all other costs that creep in, such as interest on capital laid out and so on. This man simply charges the one item, and he takes the difference between the cost of that item and the amount received from the sale of his products as his net. The minister then went on to say:

> I submit to the house that this simple method of bookkeeping is the method followed by 90 per cent of the farmers of this country.

That is to say, 90 per cent of the farmers of this country are simple if they use that kind of bookkeeping. Also hon. members of this house must be simple if they believe that 90 per cent of the farmers are using that method of bookkeeping. I do not believe it at all.

That man who was giving those figures in connection with his hog raising business must have been an outstanding farmer. He stated that in 1946 he sold 133 head with a percentage of 59·4 grade A, which is the highest grade you can get for your hogs. Just before coming to the chamber, I looked up the Department of Agriculture livestock market review of February 12. In that review actual figures and quantities are given, but I have worked out my own percentages, which I believe are reasonably accurate. According to that review, there was the following production of grade A hogs in January, 1948:

	Per cent
Ontario	41·5
Saskatchewan	31
Manitoba	27
Alberta	22·7
British Columbia	27
Quebec	27
Maritimes	41·8
Canada as a whole	30

Far be it from me to question the accuracy of this gentleman's bookkeeping, but in a province which produced only 27 per cent of grade A hogs he is supposed to have produced 59·4 per cent. Apparently he is a superfarmer. I worked out myself the cost of production, and I should like to present this to hon. members so that they will have an accurate picture and can contrast it with what is given on page 502 of Hansard. It may possibly demonstrate that the Manitoba farmer felt that he needed a little more help than that of the minister. The formula for feeding, which we have observed for a great many years, has been that it requires five pounds of feed to make one pound of hog. That has been the accepted formula, and it is very near to accuracy right now. The live weight of a select hog is 200 pounds. Its age, if you have a man who is a good feeder, would be six months; that is to say, the feeding period would be four months, because a good strong weanling is eight weeks old. Reckoning and calculating along that formula—and I have put on this sheet everything in a very conservative way; if anybody wants to challenge the figures, I have another sheet underneath this one which really is tough; I have been so careful to get this reasonably right that I probably leaned over backwards on it—I find that it requires 1,000 pounds of feed to produce a 200 pound hog, or five pounds of feed to a pound of hog. That is the equivalent of twenty-two bushels of barley. These figures were drawn up about a week ago. In the meantime the prices have changed a little bit, but not very much. Twenty-two bushels of barley at $1.20 a bushel equals $26.40. That is the only item that was charged against the pig in the statement made by the minister; but the cost of this weanling pig, the cost of the pig when it was eight weeks old, also comes into my picture. The value of these pigs varied all the way from $5 to $10.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I thought they were giving them away a little while ago. That is what the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) said.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: The cost of a weanling pig is somewhere between $5 and $10, so I put it down at $7.50, which is a reasonable figure. Salt, minerals and skim milk work out to $2.50, and the chopping of the feed comes to eighty cents.

We shall now talk about labour. Hon. members understand that. I estimated that it takes an hour and a half a day to feed ten pigs. We feed these pigs three times a day, and half an hour each time is occupied in taking care of ten pigs. I do not think anyone would quarrel with that. That works out to ten and a half hours a week, because they have to be fed on Sundays too. In four months of feeding time that equals 168 hours for ten pigs, which is 16·8 hours a pig. I am allowing the farmer 75 cents an hour. I do not know whether anybody wants to quarrel with that unless he says it is not enough.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): That is more than they pay in the box factory.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: At 75 cents an hour labour comes to $12.60. I have charged for the hauling of these fat pigs to the railway station, but I have not charged very much. I reckoned that it took half a day. I am taking the situation on my own farm; we reckon it takes half a day for a man and a team to get the pigs to town, and that costs $2 for a man and a team for half a day, or twenty cents a pig. All these costs added together come to exactly $50. I have not made any extravagant claims at all. This 200-pound pig dressed weighed 175 pounds on the rail. If it graded A, and I am giving it the benefit of the doubt there, it would be worth $26.40 per 100 pounds, or $46.25 for a 175-pound pig. If it is a grade A pig we also get a $2 premium, so that brings the total amount of the pig up to $48.25. But in pig raising, as in any other line of endeavour, we have occasional losses. We find that our losses approximate ten per cent; that is to say, something happens to one pig in ten; ten per cent failed to get to the rail. Ten per cent taken off $48.25 is $4.80; therefore our total returns for the pig we are talking about is exactly $43.45, and the cost of raising it was $50. In other words, the net loss is $6.55 a pig.

As I said, everything is conservatively estimated. If somebody wants to start an argument on these things I have another sheet which brings the net loss per pig up to $27.31.

Mr. ARGUE: That is more nearly right.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: That is the one I am ready to argue on. As a matter of fact, it is closer to the true situation. It is very funny—if you are not raising pigs.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): If you are a member of parliament it is funny.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: If hon. members will accept the figures in the first statement I made it will give a good reason why hog raising is going out of favour, and it will continue to do so while the situation exists as I have described it. It is a serious matter, because we have to get this proper ratio in agriculture of livestock raising. It must be kept in proper line for economic reasons and for good farming and agricultural reasons; and if we are to let this thing slip in this way we shall get into difficulties eventually.

A few more figures on Canada's pig business might also be illuminating. According to the Canada Year Book, 1947, in 1943 there were 8,148,000 head of swine in Canada. In 1946 these had shrunk to 5,377,000, or a drop of 2,771,000 head; that is to say, in 1943 there were fifty per cent more pigs in the country than there were in 1946. To use Canada Year Book figures, this represents a decrease, which I consider to be very conservative, of $62,725,000 in four years. When we consider that this is just one branch of one industry, it is a very serious situation indeed.

In Saskatchewan alone the hog population shrank in the same time from 1,754,000 to 757,000. That is roughly a million head, with an estimated value of $22,600,000, again using Canada Year Book figures. I believe that a proper relationship of food and livestock prices would change this situation. The farmer is getting 25 cents a pound for his dressed pork. The spread between 25 cents and the price of pork and bacon in the shop is too great. That 25 cents could be boosted to 30 cents, which would make hog production more worthwhile, and it should not be necessary to raise the price to the consumer.

If the industry is to survive, some formula will have to be found so that it can be carried on without running the operators into bankruptcy, and also to provide them with such living standards as will give them pride and satisfaction in their work.

Another thing which is causing agriculture some concern is the rumoured shortage of tractor fuels. We have now come to the time when oil is forming the base of the greater part of farm power, and a shortage coming at a critical time could cause a complete upset in one year's crop. The important thing to remember in connection with this matter is that farming operations are seasonal and that time is of the essence. Unlike manufacturing or industry, which can close its doors and vacate its benches at any time when difficulties crop up, and start up again in a week or a month or six months, when things are straightened out; if plowing, cultivating and seeding are not done within specified time limits it is quite useless to attempt to do them later, and the opportunity is lost for that year.

There is now very little horse power used except on small farms, and it is highly important that steps should be taken well in advance to ensure a sufficient supply of fuel for the tractors. It will probably surprise some hon. members to learn that the numbers of tractors in the three western provinces are given, at a rough estimate, as 35,550 for Manitoba, 57,740 for Alberta and 83,700 for Saskatchewan for the year 1947. This is an estimate only and I believe it to be an understatement.

From the figures secured from the "Monthly Report on Refined Petroleum Products in Canada", issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce in November, 1947, page 13, I find that 46,105,850 gallons of tractor distillate were distributed in the three western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. From the same source we find that 310,485,000 gallons of motor gasoline were sold in 1947 in these provinces, not necessarily, of course, for tractor fuel.

I think, however, having regard to the number of tractors operating in the west, that considerably over 100,000,000 gallons of fuel will be required for farm operations in 1948. This again is only an estimate, but I believe it is reasonably accurate. Arrangements for such a large quantity of oil must be made, as I said, well in advance and the fate of this year's crop and farming operations depend upon having oil available at the right time and in the right place.

It is also to be hoped that some form of control will be placed on the price of oil so that it cannot get entirely out of reach. A Saskatoon coal merchant is calling attention to the fact that fuel oil for stoves has jumped from 12½ cents to 22 cents in a year, and car drivers in the west are paying 47 cents a gallon for their gasoline. These are just a couple of reasons why production costs of farm produce are mounting all the time.

There are several other things I wish to mention but I shall not have time. There is, however, one thing I think is of interest. I have mentioned it before and I believe it could be mentioned again with advantage.

This is taken from the "grain market features", which is issued by the Searle Grain Company, Limited, of Winnipeg, and I am going to quote it:

> The American magazine, Fortune, in its January issue, published an article which states that "Canadian farmers could not survive the competition of American farmers under conditions of a tight market." The reason, says Fortune, is that "U.S.A. farmers have superb technical and scientific guidance that is not available to Canadian farmers." Fortune is also of the opinion that our scientific agricultural work has dropped so far behind that Canada's only hope for the future lies in her industries.
> Those who are familiar with Canadian agriculture, and who have tried to keep in touch with work in the U.S.A., will rub their eyes with amazement when they read this article. We have not space to give the full details of the splendid work done by scientific agriculturists in Canada, but we can as an example mention one single phase of scientific activity which is of paramount importance to our prairie farmers—the recent breeding and introduction of better varieties of cereals to contend with our peculiar prairie conditions. These comprise nine varieties of wheat, five of oats and twelve of barley, most of them produced by our dominion experimental farms and the dominion rust research laboratory, others by our universities. These improved varieties, which spring from that rare quality, i.e., vision, and the high talents of one section of our Canadian scientific agriculturists—our skilled plant breeders and plant pathologists—have alone brought additional wealth to Canada that amounts to more than all the dominion appropriations made to agriculture since confederation.
> Fortune, therefore, is in error, but in error at the moment only, for we venture to prophesy that if the present meagre appropriations made by the dominion government to agriculture are not expanded, then in a few years' time this article in Fortune will correctly portray the Canadian situation. The fact is that the breeding and production of these outstanding varieties of cereal stocks, and the progress made in other phases of scientific agriculture, have been the accomplishments mainly of a mere handful of older men, of such loyalty to this country that they have placed their service to Canadian agriculture far above their own material interests; for the sad truth is that in recent years, whenever a Canadian scientist in agriculture has shown signs of talent, he has immediately been offered a position in American agriculture at considerably higher salary than he can receive in Canada, and so we lose our rising talent. As our present older men retire the probability of their valuable work being continued is remote indeed unless parliament sees proper to change the present unsatisfactory situation. Apparently we can train and develop skilled agricultural scientists in this country, but we are unwilling to retain them to serve Canada.
>
> Fortune no doubt observed that for the year 1947 the appropriations made by the government of Canada to Canadian agriculture for ordinary and special expenditures amounted to just under 28 million dollars, whereas the total appropriations made by the U.S.A. to their agriculture were $1,247,000,000. The United States has twelve times the population of Canada, and so our Canadian government's appropriation for all agricultural services should in comparison be around 100 million dollars annually instead of the niggardly 28 million only which is made.
> And then there is the other most important matter of the salaries paid to our agricultural scientists. Compared with salaries paid to similar scientists for similar work in the United States, the Canadian scale from the very highest to the lowest classification is stinted and totally inadequate.
>
> We note that the appropriation by parliament for family allowances for 1947 was 245 million dollars. This is a bonus granted mainly for the purpose of feeding our children better, but surely the first thing required is to have more and better food produced, and at lower costs of production, so that it can be made available to children and to the people at cheaper prices and still with profit to farmers. Progressive agriculture is the only way to achieve this desired goal; to have better paid scientists, who consequently will stay in Canada, is the only way that such progress can be attained. By being so penurious with our appropriation to agriculture, so parsimonious with salaries to scientists, and yet so fantastically generous with family allowances, are we not "putting the cart before the horse"?
> Considering all this, then, it certainly seems as though parliament should materially increase appropriations to agriculture, and should very considerably increase salaries to all classes of workers and officials engaged in scientific agricultural work.

Another point I wish to make is that it is a remarkable thing that we have not been able fully to appreciate the fact, although it has been brought before us several times during our lifetime, that when agriculture is prosperous the rest of the country is prosperous also. We have a tremendous home market for most of the things we manufacture. Just listen to this, which is taken from a publication recently issued by the Ontario government and called "A Conspectus of the Province of Ontario," prepared by the Ontario bureau of statistics and the research section of the department of the provincial treasurer. At page 32 the conspectus states:

Over 50,000 Ontario farmers have no automobile.
Over 160,000 Ontario farmers have no motor truck.
Over 140,000 Ontario farmers have no tractor.
There are less than 9,000 threshing machines in Ontario to serve 178,000 farmers.
Ninety per cent of Ontario farms have no milking machines.
Thirty per cent have no binders and thirty per cent have no cream separators . . .
Over 145,000 farm homes have no means of refrigeration.
Over 160,000 farm homes have no vacuum cleaner.
Over 60,000 farm homes have no radio set.
Over 125,000 farm homes have no running water in their homes and no equipment for pumping water.
Over 85,000 farm homes have no telephone...
About 130,000 farm homes are still heated by stoves and have no furnaces.
Over 160,000 farm homes are still using outside toilets and have no inside toilet facilities.
Over 160,000 farm homes have no bath tub or shower equipment.

Mr. FRASER: You are getting them now since the Conservatives are in. There are changes from the time when the Liberals were there.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: If the money is available for these things, they will be bought. No one is more liberal with his money than is the farmer, especially with regard to things which are needed in his home or in his business.

Mr. K. R. DANIEL (Oxford): During the course of this debate, Mr. Speaker, we have heard hon. members on all sides of the house eulogize the beauties and charms of their constituencies. Just the other night the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), who did a most excellent job, waved his arms skyward to emphasize the height of the mountains back of Fort William in the Thunder bay district. I really believe he convinced the majority of the members of this house that perhaps, after all, the Rocky mountains or even the Alps were mere dwarfs in comparison. However, I must admit that, in the many times I have gone through Fort William, I must have been looking out the wrong window because the most I saw were a few hills out there in lake Superior.

I should now like to offer some observations with respect to the riding of Oxford which I have the honour to represent in this house. It took me some time to appreciate just how much the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne meant to the ordinary backbencher. I can now understand that it offers an opportunity to acquaint my fellow members and the government with some of the problems we face and at the same time to tell you, Mr. Speaker, something about our industries and the contribution we make to the general welfare of our country. I was going to tell you just where Oxford was, but the hon. member for London (Mr. Manross) yesterday afternoon did that very well. He said that London was on the main line of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and also on No. 2 highway. He could have gotten around that much easier by saying is was only some fifteen miles from Oxford.

I have always been under the impression that the speech from the throne represented an outline of the government's program for the coming session. If this were literally true I would be compelled to say that the speech, as read by His Majesty's representative, was lacking in that type of legislative program which our people expected of this government. I could not help but admire the fine effort made by the mover and the seconder under what must have been a rather trying experience. However, their defence of this administration was commendable and causes one to feel that they must have been carefully selected and well coached for the task.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Cabinet material.

Mr. DANIEL: Oxford county is about equally divided between a rural and an urban population. The rural part of the riding is noted for its production of dairy products, livestock and tobacco, along with other commodities pertaining to the average agricultural community. To the hon. members who were speaking of the beauty of their constituencies, might I say that beauty is all right; but, after all, I have always understood that beauty is only skin deep. When you want something to eat, you have to go back to Oxford and get some of that grand mellow cheese for which our county has been noted over these many years. In addition to our dairy products, we have livestock and, of late, tobacco. I may say that Oxford county, Elgin county to the south, Norfolk county, Middlesex county and Brant county are now all in the tobacco business; and during the last ten years this business has made great strides in my riding of Oxford. You will understand then, Mr. Speaker, that my primary concern is for our basic producers. They want some assurance as to the future. This is not in evidence at this time.

According to press reports, beef and bacon slaughterings and shipments are far outrunning the needs of the domestic market and the United Kingdom contract objectives. So great is this excess that press reports, based on official department figures, indicate that the normal requirements for the United Kingdom for the first quarter of 1948 have been met, or more than met, in a single month. I may say that on Saturday I shall have the honour of introducing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) at the Oxford county federation of agriculture meeting in my riding. As regards all the nice things I am going to say about him, I will mean everything I say. But I doubt whether some of the farmers may feel that way. There may be some doubting Thomases when they come. But I am sure that after hearing the minister on that occasion, they will all go away feeling much better. However, the minister has assured the Canadian farmers that the prices and the quantities of meat that Britain will take under the United Kingdom agreements are fixed for the entire year. That applies to the contracts generally, but what will the situation be with respect to the surplus supplies that Canada now has on hand or in sight?

At the present time Britain takes Canada's food products under a part cash, part credit arrangement and, under the contracts themselves, it was stipulated that Canada and Britain would discuss the financial arrangements involved in three months. Sir Stafford Cripps, Britain's author of austerity, is now painting a gloomier picture of Britain's financial position. In the light of the apparent fact that Canada has on hand surpluses of meat probably far more than will be required to carry over and take care of the short delivery seasons, I am wondering if the Canadian government is looking to the possibility of enabling Britain to purchase these supplies; or can this be taken as an indication that Canada is about to extend further credit to the United Kingdom? If the current supply situation continues it would appear that the government soon might be confronted with a choice of two courses: either propping the market at home by giving further assistance to the United Kingdom, or permitting the domestic market to become glutted with a resultant slump in meat prices here.

During this session the house and the country have heard a great deal about the confusion, if not chaos, into which the nation's business and industry have been plunged by the so-called austerity program of the government. In my own constituency this might well be pointed out by a reference to the position in which the flue-cured tobacco growers now find themselves. Now as never before, the tobacco industry, and agriculture generally, need a forthright policy of guidance. For twenty long years the flue-cured tobacco industry has struggled to develop a market in Great Britain; but because of the uncertainty of Britain's austerity program the tobacco industry is now in danger of losing that outlet. At present the industry is equipped to produce from 110,000,000 to 130,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year, in a normal growing season. Canadians are using annually about 70,000,000 pounds of flue-cured tobacco, and it is this surplus of 50,000,000 pounds, which they might export if there were a market for it, that is giving concern to the tobacco men. The tobacco growers of western Ontario are considering a course whereby they might reduce their acreage in order to hold down to a minimum any surplus or export carry-over. It would seem to me a tragedy in this day and age that an industry equipped for far greater production should have to cut back, particularly when there are ready markets for its product. In order to save the British tobacco market for Canadian growers, the government might have seen fit, either to assist Britain obtain her normal requirements, or to offer some measure of assistance to growers to carry over any surplus they might produce this coming year.

Before I deal with other matters concerning my riding, I should like to read into the record a resolution which has been forwarded to me by the Oxford county council:

The following resolution sponsored by the Ontario federation of agriculture was presented to Oxford county council at its January session and approved:

Compensation for T.B. Tested Cattle

Whereas the dominion Department of Agriculture is proceeding to extend the area of T.B. tested cattle, in several counties in the province of Ontario;

And whereas the compensation paid to the farmer for cattle was the price that was paid for compensation in effect during the depression years;

And whereas the counties so affected authorized the test, when the compensation set up corresponded more closely with the actual value of the cattle so tested;

Therefore be it resolved that the compensation paid the farmer be increased to correspond with present day value of the cattle so tested, and made retroactive to the beginning of the area tests in 1947.

I should like to remind hon. members, especially those who come from rural areas, that last session several hon. gentlemen rose and asked the minister when the test would take place in their counties. I remained silent in my seat, because I knew very well we were in for grief once that test was carried out. I know we should have the test. We should have had it long ago. In Oxford county we were just ready to proceed with it when the war came along. At that time the compensation would probably have been satisfactory, but at the present time it is certainly out of line with the price of dairy cattle. According to the last estimate I saw, we have something like ninety thousand cattle in Oxford county, including at least sixty thousand milch cows. The average cow has four teats. Multiply sixty thousand by four and you get 240,000, so that you will understand that the dairy farmer has to have a lot of pull to get along under existing conditions.

As I was saying, the price paid at the present time for these reactors is a maximum of $60 for a grade cow and $150 for a purebred cow. But the government do not go that far; they pay only two-thirds of the value, so that the maximum the farmer can receive is $40 for the grade cow and $100 for the purebred cow, while at the present time the price of a good ordinary grade cow is from $150 to $200. These veterinaries have been in there now since last November. In the wintertime the farmers do not fare so badly, for the reason that Holstein-Friesian cows predominate in Oxford county and because of the fact they are in better flesh. After a Holstein cow has been in milk period for, say six weeks, she begins to look more or less like a hatrack. If that cow should be a reactor and have to go to the slaughter house the farmer really has not much of a chance, because she is classed as a canner, and on the market today a canner brings something like seven cents a pound live weight. If the cow weighs 1,100 pounds that means $77. The government seldom pay the maximum amount of $40; they pay something like $30 or $35, so that the farmer gets only about $100. The people on whose behalf I am speaking tonight include many young chaps, returned men who have just started within the last year or two. If they lose their cattle they will be up against a really serious loss. I know that a few weeks ago one veterinarian tested seventy-five cattle in one day on one road. When he came back three days later and took his reading, seventy-five cows went to slaughter.

Some hon. members may wonder why a farmer keeps these cattle, why he does not realize that they are suffering from tuberculosis. Well, as yet no man has discovered a way to tell at a glance whether or not cattle are diseased. A few years ago I was in the wholesale butcher business, and some of the worst cases I found would be cows that looked in perfect condition, with large, bright eyes, sleek coats, fat and all the rest of it. When I would open up one of those cows, however, I would find she was only fit for the tank. I have sent many of them to the fertilizer plant in my territory. So the farmer has no way of knowing until this test has been carried out. I might say the test is also going on in the county of Perth, where they are about two-thirds finished. They are not finding as many reactors there as in Oxford, and I think the reason is that in Perth they have more beef cattle, whereas in Oxford we have more dairy cattle. Of the ninety thousand cattle in Oxford county there are some 548 herds of purebred cattle. They are not all Holsteins; we have a few Ayrshires, Guernseys, Jerseys, a few herds of Herefords, and some Aberdeen Angus beef cattle. So that this is a very serious situation, and I hope the minister will take cognizance of the facts I have mentioned.

In my riding there are many industries which, in common with other industries throughout Canada, made outstanding contributions to the nation's war effort. We have a fair diversification of industry in our town and I should like to refer to a few of them. We have a screw, nut and bolt factory in the town of Ingersoll. This is a modern factory. Throughout the war it manufactured a great deal of materials for aeroplanes, trucks and automobiles. At the present time it specializes in steering gears and axles for automobiles, as well as bolts, screws and nuts of all kinds for various manufacturing firms all across Canada. This company has some very large machines of a most modern design. Rods of steel are inserted at one end of those machines, and screws, bolts or nuts come out of the other end, complete with threads and ready for shipment. They are turned out, thousands per minute. Some of those machines are such that one man can operate as many as three machines.

We have also two stove factories where they make furnaces, heating and air-conditioning equipment. We have also a shoe factory and a factory which manufactures handles for forks, hoes, shovels and garden tools. We have also many condensing factories. Let me point out that at the last session of parliament the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Stokes) rose on a question of privilege and pointed out to the house that the county of Hastings produced more cheese than any other county in Ontario in 1946. Well, I would point out to the hon. member that if in the county of Oxford we manufactured all our milk into cheese we would be so far ahead of Hastings there would not be any comparison at all. Besides cheese factories, we have at least eight evaporated milk plants, where they make evaporated milk of all kinds, including sweetened milk, powdered milk, powdered skim milk, ice cream mix and other brands.

We also have a plywood factory. Our plywood factory, located at Woodstock, is a branch of the largest plywood factory in the world. It located in Woodstock only two years ago and spent in the neighbourhood of $2,000,000 in enlarging the plant. Just to show the purposes for which plywood can be used, they have erected two modern homes in Woodstock, made entirely of plywood, with the possible exception of the roofs and flooring. All the house, inside and out, is made of plywood. I believe that plywood is the coming construction material, and that in a few years it will be used much more extensively than it is at the present time.

We have also knitting mills, underwear manufacturers, ladies' hosiery manufacturers, textile plants manufacturing textiles for car upholstery and furniture covering. No matter what kind of car Your Honour or other hon. members drive, the chances are the upholstery in those cars was made in Woodstock.

We also manufacture garden tools, and we have two large fertilizer plants. And, speaking of fertilizers, I have noticed in the last three years there seems to be a habit among members in the house to kick the fertilizer firms around, alleging that they overcharge. When the proper time comes in the session I may have something more to say in that connection, because I have some facts and figures which would prove that fertilizers are not priced so much higher than they were before, when one considers the extra costs the companies must carry to bring the ingredients of their products to Canada. Some of those ingredients come from California, some from Florida, some from Chile, some from Germany and others from France. So, taking the over-all picture, I do not believe the fertilizer companies are charging exorbitant prices for their fertilizers.

We also have a paper box factory and a factory turning out electrical equipment. We have a furniture factory. Then, in the valley of the Thames river we have a mine. It is not an underground mine such as some hon. members may have in their constituencies. It is what I might call an open pit. Out of these large holes in the ground we have companies taking out limestone. That limestone has the highest calcium content of any limestone on the North American continent. It is an extensive business. Fifty years ago the farmers used to go down to the river in the summertime when the water was low, and load up their wagons, taking their loads to higher ground, then burning it so that it could be used for plastering purposes later on. However, with modern machinery they use excavating machinery with which they take off the topsoil to a depth of about fifteen feet, thereby baring the clean rock. Then the drillers come along and drill holes at intervals all across the face, for a distance of probably 500 or 600 feet. After the holes are drilled, they put in charges of dynamite with the result that one blast brings down enough rock to keep the men working down in this pit a hundred feet below the surface of the ground. They have down there some small donkey-engines and steam shovels. They also have diesel shovels. The material is shovelled on to cars and taken away. This limestone is used by over one hundred different manufacturing firms in this country at the present time. Several train loads are shipped each day, a great deal of it going to the United States, and we should have in return a great many United States dollars in Canada.

It is my considered opinion that government interference, regulations and restrictions have played havoc with the industrial life of this nation. I would urge the government to quit meddling with private enterprise. Give our leaders of industry an opportunity to run their own affairs. Otherwise the government should have the courage to lay down a long-term program instead of hopping about and changing its mind every twenty-four hours.

This country is seeking leadership and, in order to reach our full destiny, that leadership will have to come. Otherwise, all effort will be hamstrung and those who are the most capable will be kept in a strait-jacket.

Canada is a great producing nation. We produce far more than we can consume. Our surplus must find its way to the markets of the world in competition with the products of other countries. Costs of production, therefore, become a vital factor and one of the costs which bears most heavily is taxation. This country is weighted down with enormous burdens of taxation, and if the government hope to stimulate trade and commerce they should seek to lessen this burden. To accomplish this, a greater efficiency in the government is necessary. Much of our industrial unrest could be settled if the worker had more take-home pay, and certainly buying power could be stimulated if the government would cut this enormous sales tax of eight per cent which is a multiple tax, in fact a tax upon tax, pyramiding itself until the ultimate consumer is paying mostly tax.

The income tax, too, is due for a sharp revision, particularly as it affects the smaller income groups. The fact of the matter is that taxation in Canada has today reached such a peak that it is defeating its own purpose. It is hampering our producers and is a burden on our consumers. It is restricting production and reducing purchasing power.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege and honour to represent the riding of Oxford. It is a privilege, too, to be a member of a free parliament and to bring to your attention the observations I have made. I hope that the administration will hearken to the voice of reason and that they will seek to give effect, or at least earnest consideration, to the recommendations I have made.

Mr. J. S. SINNOTT (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, what we need most in Canada today is a through trans-Canada highway. There is a notice of motion standing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette), which reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the plans for a national highway across Canada, and entering into discussions with the provinces, with a view to its completion as soon as men and materials become available.

The need for this road was never greater than it is right now. We talk about saving United States dollars and I cannot think of a better way of saving those dollars than to have this road built. If we in the west want to come here by car to represent our constituencies we must drive for two days through the United States. We have to convert our Canadian dollars into United States dollars. I do not know how many thousands of motorists coming to eastern Canada from the west have to do the same thing.

We read in the papers that there is unemployment in various parts of Canada. These unemployed are being paid out of the fund which was created by the dominion to take care of them. We do not want to see again the camps that were established in 1930 and 1931. We want this thing taken care of and these men paid a decent and fair wage.

I should now like to say something about my constituency. There are many things in my constituency which could be improved by the opening up of the country. There are resources there which have never been touched. Last year the provincial government built a road to Cat lake, and the miners tell me that the lithium deposits there are so great that they cannot estimate their worth. A company in the United States has a formula whereby it can produce lithium at from forty-five to fifty cents a pound, but this formula is not available in Canada. I have been in touch with the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen), and he tells me that chemists in Ottawa are trying to work out a formula so that this mine can be opened up and the product sold on the markets of the world in world competition.

Practically all the power developed in Manitoba is developed in my constituency. The great Winnipeg river is harnessed in only a few places, but there are five or six other falls which could be developed. A million and a quarter dollars are being spent this year at the little town of Seven Sisters to enlarge a power plant which has been running at only half capacity. When this is completed next year this plant will develop 225,000 horsepower.

At the present time a total of 35,000 horsepower is being used on farms in Manitoba. Power is being made available to 5,000 homes a year, but it will be some considerable time before enough power is developed to take care of the needs of rural Manitoba. The little town in which I have lived for years is not far from a power plant. It is a shame that the rest of rural Manitoba does not have the benefit of this power. We see the power lines going right by our door and we have no benefit as yet from it.

On motion of Mr. Sinnott the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KNOWLES: Bill No. 3 tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Bill No. 3 tomorrow. If it is disposed of, probably Bill No. 7 will follow.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 20, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

Mr. D. J. McCUAIG (Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am a little hard of hearing, and yesterday, in the course of my speech, the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) interrupted me and I failed to hear the interruption. Had I heard what the hon. gentleman said, as reported in Hansard at page 1386, I would certainly have replied to him. I quote Hansard:

> Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that if the hon. member is going to abuse cabinet ministers and members on this side of the house he should at least do it from his own thoughts and not from a prepared manuscript such as he has been reading since he began to speak.

I emphatically declare, Mr. Speaker, that neither Mr. Lewis nor anyone other than myself had any part in my speech, nor did anyone else know what I was going to say. I expressed my own thoughts in my own words, and I think it is unbecoming a man and a member of parliament to make the statement I have quoted. I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Mr. Speaker, the point of order to which I rose on the occasion to which the hon. member refers was the fact that he was reading his manuscript. After hearing the manuscript read I am quite prepared to believe that Mr. Lewis did not write it.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege on a different matter. Yesterday afternoon, during the course of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, there was a period of about two or three minutes, which all hon. members will recall, when some things were said which were rather disgraceful. There were remarks about multiple marriages, anti-semitism and a few things like that, and references to a member not having sense enough, together with demands for withdrawal, and so on. I was ashamed that such things were said on the floor of the house, but my question of privilege is this. I discovered that the proceedings for that whole period of two or three minutes have been completely deleted from Hansard. I am sure I express the views of many members when I appeal to all hon. members to stop embarrassing the editors of Hansard, who are doing a good job, and stop embarrassing Your Honour by asking for the deletion of remarks merely because members are ashamed of those remarks later on. Hansard is doing an excellent job. In my view it is ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths per cent correct, but these occasional deletions and changes are giving a wrong impression in the country.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say to the hon. member that the words to which he has reference were deleted from Hansard with the consent of all the members concerned and I believe it was in the interests of the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: Was it with the consent of the house?

Mr. SPEAKER: It was with the consent of the members interested.

Mr. KNOWLES: But we are all interested, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): In connection with Hansard, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) insinuated that I might not be in the cabinet. I object to that.

VETERANS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ELIGIBILITY, ETC.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the first reading of Bill No. 60 (from the senate) to amend the Veterans Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER MR. SPEAKER'S REPORT ON PROCEDURE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I might say just a word, Mr. Speaker, about the resolution respecting the setting up of a special committee to consider with His Honour the report that was laid on the table of the house with regard to procedure. If there is no desire to debate it, it might pass immediately. That would enable the committee to function immediately. If, however, there is likely to be a debate on the resolution, it had better stand until later.

[Mr. Gregg.]

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): We on this side of the house are prepared to support the resolution in all except one of its details. The leader of the official opposition will be unable to act, but in his place I suggest the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon). I support the resolution and ask that the change I have suggested be made later on. We think the proposal is a good one. We shall do all we can to improve the procedure of the house through this effort.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): We have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to debate this matter at the present time. As the leaders of parties are busier than ordinary members, the leader of this group may not be able to act at all times either.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): We do not wish to debate the resolution. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he proceed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved:

That a special committee, consisting of Mr. Speaker, Messrs. St. Laurent, Claxton, Bracken, Coldwell and Low be appointed to consider the report on the procedure of the House of Commons of Canada laid on the table of the house December 5, 1947, and to report to the house thereon.

It is understood that when this motion carries, substitutions will be made for one or more of the names that appear in the motion.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the name of Mr. Graydon be substituted for that of Mr. Bracken on the special committee appointed to consider the procedure of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT FOR JULY AND AUGUST IF PROCEEDINGS NOT CONCLUDED BY JUNE 30

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This might be an appropriate moment to mention, if the house will permit me to do so, Mr. Speaker, that in the event of the proceedings of this session not being concluded on or about the end of the month of June, the government has decided to ask and will ask for an adjournment of parliament over the months of July and August, to resume in September.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Prime Minister if there is any special reason for the adjournment that he would like to divulge to the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is much in the public interest.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

NEW WESTMINSTER—REFUNDING OF DEBENTURES, GUARANTEE OF LOANS AND REDEMPTION OF SECURITIES

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide for the refunding of certain debentures of the New Westminster harbour commission; the government guarantee of substituted securities therefor, and the making of loans out of the consolidated revenue fund to redeem securities that may be refunded.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ROBERT SIMPSON COMPANY REPORTED REPLACEMENT OF CANADIANS BY BRITISH WORKERS

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he give the house any information as to the dismissal of workers by the Robert Simpson Company in Toronto and their replacement by British workers hired by the same company in the United Kingdom?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have had inquiries made and the assurance is given by a director of the Robert Simpson Company Limited, under whose jurisdiction the personnel department falls, that not one employee has been dismissed to make places for others hired in the United Kingdom or who have been taken on from amongst those recently arriving from the United Kingdom. There was a report that a painter employed by the firm had been dismissed to provide a job for a British immigrant. I am informed that the man was dismissed because he was not capable, and that officials of the union to which this man belonged are quite satisfied as to this.

Might I say this, Mr. Speaker, moving as we are into a period when immigration will accelerate, I hope that nothing that is said or done in this house will re-create the conditions we experienced when I first came to Canada—"No Scotsmen or Englishmen need apply."

CANADIAN ARMY

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF PACIFIC PAY TO SURVIVORS OF HONG KONG

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the answer given the hon. member from Nanaimo on Wednesday, February 18, that Canadian soldiers who fought in the Pacific did not receive the special Pacific pay while those in training in the United States did, will the government now grant this Pacific pay to the survivors of Hong Kong?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): I should say, Mr. Speaker, that this question was given most serious and sympathetic consideration immediately after the survivors of Hong Kong returned to Canada. At that time representations were made to the government by a number of members, among whom were the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) and the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown). Later on questions were asked which resulted in an order for return being made on May 28, 1946, when the matter was again re-examined. An answer was also given this week. In view of the fact that the Pacific rate of pay was made applicable only to members of the Pacific force, it is felt that it would not be justifiable to extend it to those who served in that theatre under quite different conditions and at an earlier date.

Mr. GRAYDON: Under terrible conditions.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): I wish to ask a question which is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). Can those men who served in No. 1 special wireless group in the Pacific be considered eligible for the Pacific pay? If not, would the minister, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, change the name "Pacific pay" to "American pay"?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): I believe the question just asked by my hon. friend has been raised on the defence estimates and on a number of other occasions, and there is no change in the answer then given.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO RENTAL CEILING INCREASE

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Is it the government's intention wherever it occupies the position of landlord to raise rents in all parts of Canada? If not in all parts, where?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): So far as I know the government has given no consideration to the question raised by the hon. member.

INCOME TAX

EXPENSES INCURRED BY TEACHERS IN TAKING SUMMER SCHOOL COURSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): Yesterday the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) asked this question.

Has the minister received any representations from the Manitoba teachers' society, or teachers' organizations in other provinces, in connection with deductions from taxable income of expenses incurred while taking summer school courses? If so, is the minister prepared to give consideration to their request?

I promised to give an answer today. According to my office I was correct when I said no representations had been received from the Manitoba teachers' organization, but we have received representations from other teachers' organizations, the Ontario teachers' association and the Canadian federation of teachers' associations. The answer given them, which still holds, is that expenses incurred in attending conventions are not a deductible expense for income tax purposes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The minister refers to expenses incurred in attending conventions. My question had to do with expenses in connection with summer school courses. I am not sure whether the minister understood me.

Mr. McCANN: The same decision applies.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATEMENT AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On Monday last I promised that by the end of this week I would give a progress report on the preparation of legislation affecting veterans affairs. As will be noted, the resolution dealing with amendments to the Pension Act is in Votes and Proceedings today and will be on the order paper Monday. A similar resolution dealing with war veterans allowances will follow very shortly thereafter.

[Mr. Archibald.]

VETERANS LAND ACT ADMINISTRATION—REFERENCE TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): May I ask the minister if he is now in a position to answer the question submitted to him on January 27 last? It appears at page 591 of Hansard as follows:

In view of the revelations in the public accounts committee last summer in connection with the administration of the Veterans Land Act, will the minister be prepared to submit this question to the public accounts committee before the ultimatum issued by the department is pressed . . . ?

The minister indicated that he would consider the point and answer it later. The following day, January 28, the question was repeated at page 637 of Hansard, as follows:

Is the minister in a position now to answer the question I asked him yesterday with reference to submitting this whole question—

That was the Veterans Land Act administration.

—to the public accounts committee or a royal commission?

The minister answered:

I am not in a position to answer that today.

Will the minister indicate when the house may expect an answer to this question?

Mr. GREGG: As soon as possible.

HONG KONG

EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE DUFF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Some days ago my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) asked me about the tabling of the evidence taken by the Hong Kong commission, and I replied that before giving an answer as to what the government might decide to do in that matter I wished to communicate with the British government in order to obtain their views. A little later I will be glad to give the house the views of the British government on the matter, but I wish to show the leader of the opposition a cable I have received in reply before I make a public statement. The communication was received only yesterday, so I have not been able to bring its receipt to the attention of the house before today.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Prime Minister if his remarks with respect to the Hong Kong evidence apply equally to the letter written by Premier Drew, about which there has been some discussion in the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should think it would, but I would have to re-read the letter of Premier Drew to make sure whether it contains references to parts of the evidence to which the British government takes exception to publicity being given.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources — Mr. Abbott — Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On schedule I.

Customs tariff—87. Vegetables, fresh, in their natural state: asparagus, green beans, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, beets, n.o.p., cauliflower, egg-plant, celery, cucumbers, lettuce, parsley, green peas, rhubarb, spinach, tomatoes, watercress, whitloof, endive, and fresh vegetables, n.o.p.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have not taken any part in this debate, but now I want to ask the minister a question. I am not particularly worried whether Toronto or Moose Jaw can secure celery or lettuce or some of these other things right now, but the people of my riding are particularly interested in whether they are going to be protected from dumping if they grow these vegetables and fruits. This matter has been brought up already by some Ontario members, and I believe by the hon. member for Kamloops. We all know what has happened in the past, under all governments. Pears, for instance have been brought into Canada in order to keep up prices in Washington. Peaches have been dumped in our province for the same reason. As far as the minister can give us an assurance, we would like to know that this will not be permitted in future. We would also be interested if the minister could give us some idea of the length of time we will continue under the present program. In British Columbia we can produce all the cabbages necessary for the whole of Canada, but that will require expensive equipment, such as sprayers, planting machines, and so on. We cannot go to that expense unless we are sure how long the program will last. So I should like to know just how far the minister can go on behalf of the government in giving us an outline of the situation at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: As the committee knows, a number of hon. members have raised this question and have asked whether I could give any assurance as to the length of time during which these restrictions are likely to be in force. The hon. member for Fraser Valley discussed that question with me, and I have been giving a good deal of thought to it. As I have said on other occasions, these import restrictions on fresh fruits and vegetables are intended to be temporary. They are put on as a necessary measure to conserve exchange, and the government would not feel justified in continuing them beyond the period of time when our exchange position makes it necessary. Therefore it is the policy of the government to relax and remove the restrictions as soon as the exchange position justifies that action. In other words the government is not prepared to retain these measures indefinitely as a protection to the fruit and vegetable industry. The permanent and continuing degree of protection to the industry is provided, of course, in the existing customs tariff.

I realize, however, that the growers of these fruits and vegetables are placed in a difficult position with respect to planning increases in production; and while I am conscious of the risks and dangers of trying to make predictions, as I said before, I think I can go this far. As I now see the situation and as I now view the prospects of our exchange position I think it is highly improbable that a complete removal of these restrictions with respect to fresh fruits and vegetables will occur much before the end of this calendar year, and it may be that some degree of restriction will continue into the early part of 1949. As far as possible it would be the government's intention not to remove or relax these import controls at a time when that action would have serious or disastrous effects on the marketing of Canadian produce. But I cannot bind the government to any unconditional guarantee that no produce grown in Canada in 1948 will have to face any competition from imported goods. As I said nearly three months ago, the government intends to relax restrictions on basic or essential items such as cabbages, carrots, potatoes and onions when it becomes clear that Canadian supplies are nearing exhaustion.

Mr. FARQUHAR: May I ask the minister why our Canadian growers of vegetables cannot compete successfully with United States growers without tariff protection?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know; I imagine they can. I suppose what the hon. member for Algoma East has in mind is that there might be dumping, or something of that sort. But I do not see any reason why our growers cannot compete with American growers.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I wish to make it perfectly clear that the farmers of the Fraser valley can compete. We do not want protection; but neither do we want dumping in our province.

Mr. REID: One of the reasons we feel we cannot compete is that in the country to the south of us on account of climatic conditions they can grow two or three crops. I know of districts where they are growing three crops of vegetables each year. Crop after crop is taken off; because of the warm weather and irrigation facilities the people in those areas can grow those crops and flood our market. That is one of the reasons why we in British Columbia cannot compete.

Mr. PEARKES: I cannot help expressing some surprise at the minister's statement. On numerous occasions hon. members on this side of the house have asked the minister for a statement as to how long these restrictions are to be kept on. I have asked the minister three times, and he has refused to give me an answer. But the moment a back bencher from his own party gets up the minister is only too pleased to reply, and to supply the information. I imagine that is because of the speech made last night by the hon. member for Vancouver South, when he urged that there should be a cabinet minister from British Columbia. May I extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Fraser Valley if he is to be the appointee.

Mr. ABBOTT: I always like to answer questions from anyone, but particularly from the hon. member for Fraser Valley. However, I believe my hon. friend will recall that I did preface what I had to say with the statement that this question had been raised by a number of members.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have some figures respecting Canadian exports of fresh vegetables to the United States in the twelve months ended October 31, 1947. Those figures are as follows:

Item	Value
Onions	$ 15,059
Potatoes (except seed)	2,577,912
Turnips	2,064,336
Other vegetables	257,540
Total	$4,914,848

It will be noted that the chief exports of fresh vegetables from Canada to the United States were of onions, potatoes and turnips. This figure is to be subtracted from $16,894,871, which is the total of Canadian imports from the United States of fresh vegetables during the twelve months period ended October 31, 1947.

I asked for these figures from the bureau of statistics in November of last year so that I might know the exact position when the minister made his statement. I believe they reveal the true picture of what happened in the preceding twelve months. It will be noted that some of the vegetables which appear in tariff item 87 are not mentioned particularly. I refer to the de luxe varieties such as Brussels sprouts, eggplant, parsley, watercress, whitloof and endive. These vegetables must be included, to a value of $864,000.

The complete list of imports of fresh vegetables from the United States for the twelve months ended October 31, 1947, is as follows:

Item	Value
Asparagus	$ 483,133
Beans, green	506,949
Beets	146,281
Cabbage	954,552
Carrots	1,228,252
Cauliflower	436,266
Celery	2,453,501
Cucumbers	331,112
Lettuce	2,931,168
Mushrooms	7,290
Onions	673,565
Peas, green	170,530
Potatoes, sweet	589,883
Potatoes, n.o.p.	1,182,181
Spinach	333,758
Tomatoes	3,601,767
Other vegetables	864,683
Total	$16,894,871

This means that with total imports of $16,894,871 and total exports of $4,914,848 we have a difference of about $12,000,000, or about one dollar per capita of our population.

Total imports from the United States entered for consumption in Canada during that period were valued at $1,953,742,000. This is the trade of Canada with the United States during the twelve months ended October 31, 1947. Exports of Canadian produce during the same period were valued at $1,008,494,457 and exports of foreign produce at $22,500,000. If we subtract the total of exports from the total of imports we find that the unfavourable balance of trade with the United States during the twelve months ended October 31, 1947, was $942 million odd. The unfavourable balance in respect of vegetables is only $12,000,000, a small amount compared with the total unfavourable balance. The largest import item is tomatoes, which totalled $3,601,767. The next is lettuce, $2,931,168; then celery, $2,453,501 and then potatoes, n.o.p., which I assume would cover fresh potatoes, $1,182,181. Then the next item is carrots, $1,228,252.

During the war we were told to eat more vegetables. Considerable propaganda was put out to the effect that we should eat more vegetables, that they were good for health. They were recommended for the young and the old. The production of vegetables is not an easy matter in most parts of this country during a large part of the year and therefore we have to import from the United States. Vegetables are necessary to provide a well balanced diet, and I do not see why we should deprive ourselves of these vegetables from the south when they are supposed to be so good for all. It would not interfere with the farmers to permit them to come in. At the present time farmers do pretty well with the production of vegetables. They have their own markets and many of them can vegetables during the summer for consumption during the hard months of the year. Does it mean that simply because these items have been included it is impossible to change them? If it is impossible to change them, why discuss them?

I know the minister is a reasonable man and if something is submitted to him it may be possible to convince him that it should be changed. If, as the minister has said, this is a temporary measure, why does he insist on keeping it in force? The result will be that farmers in some parts of the country will try to raise these vegetables. If the minister was in earnest when he said that this measure was temporary then those people will be greatly disappointed when the legislation is no longer in force. They think that they will have the Canadian market during the winter, but there are some difficulties in their path.

One difficulty in having fresh vegetables grown in British Columbia sold in the east during the winter is the high air freight rates. If those vegetables could be sent to the east in refrigerator cars where they would be kept in good condition at ordinary freight rates, it would be possible for the farmers of British Columbia to increase their production of fresh vegetables. We in the east know how delicious are the apples of British Columbia during the winter, but they are most expensive. There again it is a question of freight rates.

Is it necessary to insist so much on a matter which could be settled amicably and would be for the benefit of the country? It seems to me that it should be possible to convince our farmers in a reasonable and commonsense way that this is a condition which has existed for a long time; that it will not ruin the country to bring in vegetables from the United States to an amount of nearly $17,000,000 when we export vegetables to that country to an amount of nearly $5,000,000.

Someone said that the $180,000,000 which would be needed for Newfoundland was just peanuts. The amount involved in the importation of vegetables is around $15,000,000, only about one-twelfth the amount. I hope the minister will reconsider this matter. If we are to go through a period of austerity I would recall to him that those who take the vows of poverty exist on a vegetarian diet. They are austere people. We see them going around barefooted asking for alms. They live on vegetables because vegetables are the food of the poor. Why not let these vegetables come in? It would involve an amount which is trifling when compared with the unfavourable balance of trade with the United States. Besides that it would be good for the health of the Canadian people.

I am not going to press the matter further. I have given these figures in the hope that the minister will understand. I am quite sure he does. It is possible to disagree with him at times and have good reasons for doing so. It is possible to improve this bill and that is why it is before the committee. I agree entirely with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

This is not a party question. It is not a case of one group gaining a victory over the minister. It is simply a discussion by plain men who want to make the best of it. If we have to wait until the farmers in other parts of Canada are able to produce the vegetables we are now importing we shall have nothing in the meantime. I cannot understand this austerity when we cannot eat vegetables although all the store counters are loaded with candies, chocolates, fancy biscuits, and the like. I leave it to the minister in the hope that he will make the right decision in the matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I say just a word in reply to the hon. member for Temiscouata? I think the figures which he has quoted are substantially accurate. There is no question of depriving the Canadian people of fresh vegetables; it is simply a question of excluding during the winter months certain fresh vegetables, notably lettuce, tomatoes, green beans and the like.

It is true that the savings on vegetables are only about $17,000,000, but included in our total import figures are a great many items which it is virtually impossible to exclude, such things as fuel, coal and the like. In this list of prohibitions the fresh fruit and vegetable item is by far the largest single item. My hon. friend is not a Scotsman but he has probably heard that many a mickle makes a muckle, and that applies in this case. Total imports of fresh fruit and vegetables are close to $70,000,000, and we estimate that the savings in the excluded class and those under quota will be approximately $40,000,000. That is an appreciable figure, and an important one in our attempts to solve this balance of payments problem.

I am sure there are ample supplies of good canned vegetables in Canada. Neither I nor my family have found difficulty yet in obtaining them. Supplies are ample at present of green cabbages, which are being admitted under quota, and I gave the assurance some three months ago that the four main vegetables, potatoes, onions, carrots and cabbages, when domestic supplies became low would be allowed to be imported by relaxing the restrictions.

I have a memorandum here from the Department of National Health and Welfare as to the relative nutritional values of various vegetables. It is dated February 2, and it might be well to put it on record. It is as follows:

> The following classification is essentially the the same as one prepared in 1942 by the advisory committee on nutrition to the foods administration, on which our Doctor Pett and Miss Speers served. This rating was set up to have a wider use than simply with imported vegetables.

Here is the rating, under the headings, Important, Desirable, and Limited Importance:

> Important: Potatoes; root vegetables, especially carrots and turnips; green vegetables, especially cabbage, spinach and Brussels sprouts, but not including lettuce; peas and beans (dried); canned tomatoes.

It will be noted there is no mention of fresh tomatoes. It goes on:

> Desirable: Beans, green or wax; fresh canned tomato juice; canned peas.
> Limited Importance: Pickles, relishes, sauces, vegetable juices, and vegetables (fresh or canned) not named above.

I repeat what I said before: I am satisfied there will be no shortage of vegetables in Canada this winter. There will be limited or no supplies of some fresh vegetables, notably lettuce, and to some extent imported tomatoes, but I am sure that the health of the Canadian people will not suffer as a result of these restrictions. I must point out to the committee that these vegetables form the largest single item in this list of prohibitions. I do not feel that we should entirely eliminate that item from the list. It may be possible to provide some relaxation through larger quotas when the need arises, but I feel that this item of fresh fruits and vegetables should not be excluded from the schedule.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister mentioned the matter of health. I told him two or three days ago that I had had communications from persons suffering from two types of illness, high blood pressure and diabetes, and that I had been informed that for these illnesses fresh vegetables, lettuce, tomatoes and so on, were required. That has been my information. The minister said he would consult the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is here. Is he in a position to tell me whether or not the information I have been given is correct? I look at it in two ways. If it is correct, something might be done. If it is not correct, a statement might ease the minds of those who are affected.

Mr. ABBOTT: A general statement to that effect would be incorrect. There have been a few permits issued in special cases for special conditions which existed, but one cannot lay down a general rule that lettuce is necessary for this particular condition or that tomatoes are necessary for that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask if the two types of illness I have mentioned are included in the cases where special permits have been granted?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that it would not be generally true of diabetes and high blood pressure, but sometimes there are special complications in respect to those and other types of illness.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I conclude, then, that one person with some complications might apply for a permit to import, which would be entirely useless because as an individual he could not import lettuce from California or Texas.

Mr. ABBOTT: There have been three or four cases in which special permits have been granted, based on a medical certificate.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Granted to individuals?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): And they import their own requirements?

Mr. ABBOTT: I suppose they would do it through a dealer.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): More power to them.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member for Calgary West seems to think this government moves in a strange and mysterious way its wonders to perform. However, I am glad we have the support of the hon. member for Temiscouata in our opposition to this ban on fresh vegetables, and I hope he will be able to gather further support on that side of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a friendly opposition.

Mr. KNOWLES: As long as you stand up and vote against this ban it is perfectly all right with us if you smile while you are doing it.

I doubt whether members of the committee are much impressed by the statement the minister has read about the effects of these various vegetables on health. The very fact that he has just admitted to the hon. member for Calgary West that there are some diseases for the alleviation of which certain vegetables are needed to the extent that their importation is permitted raises the whole question whether the lack of these things will involve the risk of certain diseases occurring. In this day and age we are concerned with health in a preventive way as well as in corrective medicine, and I strongly urge that we are making a mistake if we trifle in this way with the health of our Canadian people. I shall not go into these arguments at any further length because we went into them the other night when the matter was before the committee. But I do wish to say a few other things arising out of exchanges that took place earlier this afternoon.

I noticed that when the hon. member for Algoma East expressed his desire that we avoid a policy of protection, at least four or five members on the Liberal side of the house applauded that sentiment. In other words, the ideal of freedom of trade has not entirely died within the Liberal party.

Apart from that, Mr. Chairman, I ask hon. members to consider the terrible state of uncertainty into which this whole thing is thrown by the kind of announcement the minister made this afternoon. He was asked some time ago from this side of the house how long these restrictions would last, and he said he could not say. Today he gave a tentative answer to the member for Fraser Valley which sounded something like in terms of a year. That is not long enough to be protection in the sense that it would enable the fruit and vegetable growers in Canada to change their methods behind such a protective wall, but on the other hand it is long enough to have the effect of denying these essential foods to our people. It throws both producer and consumer in Canada into a state of great uncertainty. It seems to me that the only answer to this thing is to look at it in terms of health, and when it come to that I think we should take no chances but do what we know to be best in the long run for the health of the people we represent.

When from this group an amendment was moved to another clause in the bill having to do with the non-discriminatory provision, the Minister of Finance not only argued against it on his own behalf but stated emphatically the government's opposition to the measure. He gave as one of his reasons the fear that it would offend the United States if we were to pass the amendment moved at that time by the hon. member for Kindersley. This is not in that category. There is no danger of giving offence to the United States if we delete item 87 from the schedule.

Mr. ABBOTT: We would lose a lot of exchange, though.

Mr. KNOWLES: Well, there are other items upon which that exchange might be picked up. But some of us are not convinced that this is the best way to overcome our shortage of United States dollars. We have to accept the government's wish to go ahead with the program. The minister did admit that there were details we could discuss in committee and I feel that this is one that we should not pass over quickly. I have already pointed out that although the minister has argued against it he has not stated that the government will stand or fall by this item, and I respectfully submit to him that this is a case where he might say to members on his own side of the house as well as to those on this side that they might vote as they feel like voting on the item. In other words, let us have a free vote and see if we cannot get an expression, not on the basis of official statements which the minister may receive from one department or another, but on the basis of what we know that the housewives in Canada want. I strongly urge that there be a free vote on item 87.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend may urge that hon. members vote as they please, but the government's responsibility under this measure is to see that we save vital exchange needed to pay for essential imports from the United States, and my submission is that the vegetables that are being excluded are not as essential as some other things.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall item 87 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Item agreed to: yeas, 43; nays, 23.

Items 89, 90e, and 91 agreed to.

Customs tariff—92. Fruits, fresh, in their natural state: apricots, cherries, cranberries, peaches, pears, plums or prunes, strawberries, raspberries, loganberries, berries, edible, n.o.p., quinces, nectarines.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. KNOWLES: On division.

Item agreed to on division.

Items 94, 95 and 95a agreed to.

Customs tariff—96. Fruits, fresh, in their natural state, n.o.p.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. KNOWLES: On division.

Item agreed to on division.

Items 96a, 97, 99b, 99d, ex 99e, 99g, 104a, 105, 108, ex 109, 110 and 123a, agreed to.

Customs tariff—124, 125, 126, 127, 128, ex 123, ex 133. Oysters.

Mr. McLURE: What was the value of oyster imports from the United States for 1947 or for 1946?

Mr. ABBOTT: Oysters, shelled, in bulk $430,000; oysters, shelled, not canned, $17,000; oysters in the shell $1,000—these are round figures—making a total of about $450,000.

Items agreed to.

Customs tariff—130. Turtles.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What are turtles used for?

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand they are used to make soup, but I would not be sure.

Mr. BENTLEY: What was the value of the imports?

Mr. ABBOTT: $9,000.

Item agreed to.

Items 138, 139, 143, 143a, 152c, ex 179, ex 180, and 181a agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 184d, ex 169, ex 170, ex 171, ex 184a.

Periodical publications, unbound or paper bound, consisting largely of fiction or printed matter of a similar character, including detective, sex, western, and alleged true or confession stories, and publications, unbound or paper bound, commonly known as comics, but not including bona fide supplements used with newspapers.

Provided, that the decision of the Minister of National Revenue as to whether or not any publication is included in the foregoing description shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. KNIGHT: I should like to have an assurance from the minister for the record that no books that may be called legitimate are in this particular list.

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. KNIGHT: I think the government might well consider, in reference to the whole question of the importation of books of an educational type, whether it is justified in taking money at all through the importation of books intended for the dissemination of knowledge. Now that we know that legitimate books are not included and that this is aimed against a certain type of periodicals, I should like in passing to commend the government department concerned for having shown a sense of humour, for it speaks of certain periodicals "commonly known as comics". I shall have more to say about this another time. I notice on page 1 of the reprint the following:

No person shall import or attempt to import into Canada any goods listed or of the classes described in schedules I, II or III except in accordance with a permit issued by the minister . . .

The minister here is, I presume, the Minister of Finance. On page 8 the responsibility is switched to the Minister of National Revenue.

Provided, that the decision of the Minister of National Revenue as to whether or not any publication is included in the foregoing description shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is administrative. It is his officers who are enforcing it and he decides whether the publication is a pulp magazine, to use the common description.

Mr. KNIGHT: That is what I want to say a word or two about. I am under no illusion that the Minister of National Revenue personally will examine these periodicals.

Mr. McCANN: We have a staff.

Mr. KNIGHT: I have no great confidence in the system of censorship which is now used by the dominion government and I say that not without some reason; and if I am not more enlightened on the subject than I am now, I may say that it is the fault of the ministry themselves, because not long ago I addressed to them certain questions in regard to censorship in Canada and while I have an order for a return, the return has not yet come through. During the last session I asked some questions regarding the whole matter of censorship and I was left very much in the dark. I have not here the answers to those questions, and such answers as I received were most uncommunicative. I asked who was the official responsible ultimately for the censorship of books being imported into Canada. Incidentally I made a good deal of research into the matter of censorhip and I shall report on that on another occasion. I do not wish to hold up this item now. But as I say, I have no great confidence in the matter; and if I have no confidence it is the fault of the minister or of the department concerned. When I asked, for instance, who was ultimately responsible for censorship in this country, I was given a gentleman's name. I had asked with regard to qualifications by way of education and experience. I was told that this gentleman who was then in charge of censorship in Canada, and had been for some time, was merely a temporary officer. This gentleman was interviewed by the press, and I have the press clippings in my file upstairs. His conception of the whole matter of censorship was quite casual. I think censorship is important, but apparently he did not think so. He said that he was merely a temporary employee and that a permanent official would be appointed in due course. One of the questions which I asked the other day was whether the appointment was now on a temporary or a permanent basis. I have yet to receive an answer. I am looking forward to it with interest. In his interview with the press, this gentleman—

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, and perhaps he should finish his remarks, but the matter he is discussing really has nothing to do with this bill. It comes under the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. KNIGHT: I realize that.

Mr. KNOWLES: On the point of order, there is a paragraph in the item itself which says:

> Provided that the decision of the Minister of National Revenue as to whether or not any publication is included in the foregoing description shall be final and conclusive.

The minister admitted that it was an administrative matter. The Minister of National Revenue interjected that he had a staff for this. Surely the item permits discussion of censorship.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member should be allowed to continue.

Mr. KNIGHT: That was, of course, the reason I quoted the paragraph on page 8 before I began my remarks; I expected just such an objection as that which has been raised by the Minister of Finance.

But to return to my story—and I shall make it short, as I realize there will be a better opportunity later to discuss it—the gentleman quite casually took his duties as a censor. I have clippings of an interview he had with representatives of the press. The report of the interview appeared, among other places, in the Regina Leader-Post. He said that he did not consider—I presume with my questions in the back of his head—that any great education or any particular qualifications were necessary to performance of the duties of censorship—imagine that! As a matter of fact he said anybody could tell a bad book. I presume he thought you could smell it; I do not know whether he used that expression or not.

Personally I think this whole question of censorship should be aired. The department in charge of it should be freer with its information, because if some of us look upon censorship as something which is being kept in the dark, it is certainly not our fault when we cannot obtain the necessary light. I shall not get into an argument here as to whether censorship is too severe or too lenient. I think both descriptions apply, and because of the inefficiency of those who are doing the job, I think that proper background, education and training are necessary.

Mr. ABBOTT: This prohibition contained in schedule I, together with item 1201 in schedule C of the Customs Tariff, are the only provisions with respect to the entry of published matter. Item 1201 or a corresponding item has been in the customs tariff since confederation, I think, and it provides, under the heading of prohibited goods:

> Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind treasonable or seditious, or of an immoral or indecent character.

I understand that the official in the Department of National Revenue in charge of applying these provisions is known as the examiner of publications.

Mr. HANSELL: I should like to say just a word on this item and it is one of commendation, in a sense. For a good many years I have been interested in the type of literature that comes into Canada, and I find now that for perhaps the first time in actual legislation there is set out the prohibition of certain types of literature.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not the first time. It was done under the War Exchange Conservation Act. This is the second time.

Mr. HANSELL: Well, if it is the second time I stand corrected. But twenty-five or thirty years ago some of us became alarmed at the type of literature that was beginning to flood Canada from other countries, particularly the United States. I recall that resolutions were sent to the prime minister; as a matter of fact I believe the present Prime Minister was prime minister at that time. I happened to be secretary of a ministerial association which sent those resolutions in. I believe I addressed the resolutions to the present Prime Minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: If it was within the last twenty-five years, you did.

Mr. HANSELL: So the subject is not a new one. I compliment the minister upon including those items as ones to be prohibited under this bill. There is one sad feature about this; it was the necessity for conserving United States dollar exchange that brought this matter to the attention of the government. They are prohibiting this literature from entry into Canada, not particularly because it is undesirable but because they need United States dollars. That is the sad thing. But I commend the minister's action because I believe the government has some responsibility with respect to the morals of this country. I have often heard it said that when it comes to morals it is the responsibility of the home, the school and the church. But you cannot tag on to the home, the school and the church the responsibility of keeping undesirable literature out of this country. I have never yet known a home that has deliberately subscribed to certain types of comic magazines, sex stories, or photogravure literature, for the purpose of bettering the home. I have never known a school or church to have its library packed with that sort of literature. If anything, they want to keep it out. The only authorities who can do this happen to be governmental authorities. Recently I have been quite alarmed at the tremendous flood of certain types of pulp magazines, story books and comics that have been on sale on most of our news stands. They seem to have multiplied in recent years. My own boy likes to read the comics; and as a matter of fact I have no objection to good, wholesome comic magazines. I was a cartoonist myself a good many years ago. I never became very sucessful, though I did create a comic strip which I thought should have made me a millionaire, but other people had different ideas about it. I am all for good clean comic books. When I was a boy I used to read the old country Comic Cuts and Chips. That was good clean stuff, but the stuff you get today is not so clean. My own boy brings them home. I object, but what can you do? I noticed on the cover of one comic entitled "Joe Palooka" the statement to the effect that it had a daily circulation of some two million readers. That is quite a lot of palooka.

I like to read a good deal. I think any member of parliament has to read a good deal in order to keep up with the times. Just last fall I happened to be in a department store and wandered through to the book department to see what might be new on the newsstand. I was struck with the literature that was on just one rack alone. I was so struck with the titles that I took out my pencil and wrote them down. I would ask any hon. member if these titles suggest that we are guarding and preserving the morals of our young people. You can buy any of these books for twenty-five cents. Here are the titles; I have neither added to nor taken away from them. All these and no others were in this one rack:

The New Sin
Overture to Death
Sealed Room Murder
The Unfortunate Murderer
And Death Came Too
The Noose
Murder Gone Mad
The Vanishing Corpse
Something Nasty in the Wood Shed Dead on the Track
Painted for the Kill
The Cross-eyed Bear Murders
Death Every Sunday
The Frightened Stiff
The Straw Stack Murders
A Homicide for Hannah
The Plague Court Murders
Death on the Nile
Georgeous Ghoul Murder Case
The League of Frightened Men
Coffin for One
Prescription for Murder
Blood Money Holiday Homicide
Death from a Top Hat
Man Who Killed Goliath
The Creeps
Case of Constant Suicides
Murders of Scandal House
Dance of Death
Murder Wears a Mummer's Mask
Murder for the Asking
Death in the Back Seat
A Talent for Murder
Murder in the Mist
The Cat Saw Murder
Corpse in the Wax Works
Poison for One
The Corpse in the Green Pyjamas
Murder at Midnight

There was one other book in the midst of them all; the title was "Policeman's Holiday." That is the sort of thing flooding the country today and, I suggest, polluting the minds of our young people. I am not going to read a lot of other names of comic magazines, but if I had my way I would not permit one comic strip to be published that had a gun in it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Were all those books published in the United States?

Mr. HANSELL: I cannot say as to that.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Of course a discussion with respect to anything published in Canada would not be in order. At the present time we are dealing with Bill No. 3, which is entitled an emergency measure for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources. No doubt there is a great deal of merit in what the hon. member is saying, but I doubt if it would be in order at the present time. So I would ask him to direct his remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. HANSELL: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot say how many of these particular magazines were published in Canada, because this measure was not before us last fall and I did not take a note of these books just for that purpose. I do say, however, that many magazines similar to those I have mentioned, and perhaps many of those whose titles I read, are published in the United States. I also say that almost every comic magazine in Canada today is published in the United States, if not printed there, because we do not have any comic strips originating in Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Only on the other side of the house.

Mr. HANSELL: I say if I had my way I would do away with every magazine that had a gun in it. If I had my way I would do away with every magazine or photogravure publication or comic strip that had any drinking in it. I would do away with all that, because we cannot permit that stuff to infiltrate the minds of our young people and expect to bring into existence a great and wholesome nation. I am not the only one who thinks along these lines. I know there are on record today in the office of some minister of the Crown resolutions coming from parent-teacher associations, home and school associations and other organizations interested in the welfare of our young people, protesting this type of literature.

I shall conclude by simply saying that this is a measure designed to conserve United States dollars. Am I to conclude that the administration are more interested in saving dollars than they are in saving the morals of our country? This is more or less an emergency measure. What will happen when this legislation runs out? Are these magazines and comic supplements to be allowed into the country then? Let us make this permanent. Let us raise our voices against this sort of thing. The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned motion pictures the other day, and I am with him on that. These things are demoralizing, and we might as well wake up to that fact. I am not making that statement because of my profession. I am saying it because I am a father and a member of parliament, and we have some responsibility in respect to the civilization we are trying to build here in Canada.

Mr. KNIGHT: In view of what the hon. member who has just spoken has said, I should like to add one further word. He has taken the position, I believe, that censorship is too lenient. As I said before, I do not wish to enter into that discussion, nor shall I do so. But I am concerned with the fact that censorship ought to be efficient. I do not believe the various customs officers stationed at different points across the country are qualified to deal with this matter, nor could we expect them to be so qualified. I do know that in cases of doubt the material is sent to a central point where a man who has the ultimate responsibility must make a decision with respect to it. I did say, however, that the gentleman who had that responsibility during the last session of parliament was not as efficient as he should have been.

I am almost in total agreement with what the hon. member has just said with respect to pornographic material. But I must point out that, on the other hand, I believe many legitimate books are refused entry into this country because of the ignorance of the people who have the censoring of them. There is a great difference between certain novels and certain books which, through their very nature, if they are to be true to life, are bound to be realistic. There is a difference, however between the genuinely written and realistic novel and one that is deliberately pornographic for the purpose of making sales, by appealing to depraved tastes. I believe that inefficiency in censorship works both ways. Not only does it allow to come in material which should be kept out, but it also keeps out much material which should be allowed to come in.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have been so much interested in the remarks just made that I should like to add one further word. We all recognize that censorship is a very difficult procedure. It has to be handled wisely, because we must recognize that there is an infinite variety of opinions in the matter. But I do not believe there are two opinions in the house as to what we find when we go to some of the public newsstands. When we see what is in them we know that the system is wrong, and that it must have an evil influence. If any good can come out of this evil bill, or if this can possibly be the occasion of setting up some system—and it has to be a wise system, not rigid and unthinking; I recognize that—I should hope it might come now. But surely we can do a better job than anyone of us must agree has been done when we look at a newsstand today.

Mr. REID: Can the minister give the committee the value of these magazines and books imported into Canada? My information—and it may be wrong—is that we can ban the importation into Canada of comics and western stories; but I am told that the firms which control the books in the United States get around the regulations by sending the plates into Canada and having the books and magazines printed in this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is almost impossible to give an accurate estimate because all periodical publications are included in the one group. They total something in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000. A rough estimate as to the value of those included in this prohibited group, which is substantially identical with the publication in the War Exchange Conservation Act, is about $2,000,000. However, I give that figure only as an estimate.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I say at the outset that I heartily agree with most of what has been said about the type of literature being sold. However, a large number of corner stores in all cities have been making a living from selling literature of this kind. I made an investigation by calling on about ten cigar stores which have been selling this type of literature. I asked them what the prohibition of the importation of such literature as they had on their shelves would do to their businesses. The usual answer was that they made about $25 a week from the sale of it, and they felt that the prohibition would hit them pretty hard.

What have we to offer in place of the literature on the prohibited list? Can anything be done to encourage the importation of better literature from the old country so that the cigar stores on the corner may continue to make a living? If we prevent their selling this kind of reading material—a procedure with which we agree—is there any effort made to give something in its place so that they will be able to continue to make a living? After all, $25 is an important item to a small cigar store.

Mr. ABBOTT: If the higher class of reading material is not prohibited, then it is not subject to duty; and possibly the fact of prohibiting the importation of these western and sex stories and comic books may tend to raise the reading standards of the public. So that the cigar stores will be able to sell more copies of the Ladies Home Journal.

Customs tariff—ex 192; ex 198; ex 199.

Tarred paper and prepared roofings (including shingles), sheathing, insulation (not including fibreglass), building board, chipboard, newsboard, strawboard, testboard, corrugated board, and all other similar boards manufactured wholly or in part of vegetable fibres (not including electric insulation board, shoe board, automobile board, bookbinders' board and pressboard); bristol board, artists' board, photograph mounting board, picture matting board and showcard board; flock coated board or paper; wax coated paper; blotting paper not printed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have a request to make of the minister with respect to this item. It has to do with the words "not including fibreglass", as they appear in the second line of the item. The minister may recall the speech made by the hon. member for London on this matter and, as he was unable to be here today, he asked me to request that the words "or Kimsul" be inserted after the word "fibreglass". I am informed that this will not involve any additional United States dollars, but that Kimsul would merely bring in a quantity of insulation, as well as the fibreglass.

In other words, I understand that these items are in competition. Kimsul in made by the well-known firm of Kimberly-Clark, which has large investments in this country. As the situation now stands, it will mean that their competitors can import while they cannot. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce could answer.

Mr. HOWE: The difference is, I believe, that the fibreglass people have a plant at Sarnia, almost completed, which will produce fibreglass in this country, wholly of Canadian material. It was thought that in the circumstances, since it is only a month or two until production will start, it was only fair not to destroy the fibreglass market in the meantime. This does not apply to the other product.

If the Kimberly-Clark people care to manufacture their product in Canada within a reasonable time, a similar consideration could be given. However, the latter product at the present time is a trade import, and unessential.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Surely the answer is that until the other plant comes into production they ought to be treated equally. The minister has already the power to make the change. After all, the Kimberly-Clark people deserve proper consideration from us, because they have large investments here. Sometimes there are delays beyond those which were anticipated. Why would it not be fair to put them both on the same level?

Mr. HOWE: This bill is designed to save United States dollars, and the best way to do that is to stop unnecessary imports. The product cannot be admitted because they are friends of ours, or nice people.

Mr. ABBOTT: Another point has been brought to my attention, and that is that there is a technical requirement for fibreglass which does not apply to Kimsul. Fibreglass is an essential insulating material for the making of domestic refrigerators, while Kimsul is not. Kimsul is not designed for use in that form. Therefore, for the month or two until the Canadian plant is in operation the import of some quantity of fibreglass would be necessary.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Answering the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I am suggesting that at the moment there would be no saving because this new company is not yet in operation. My request was that they should be put on a level during the time when imports had to be made. I am remembering also that, under the wide powers reserved, this could be changed by executive action. Therefore, on that point my request still stands.

Then, as to the suitability, I am informed that Kimsul has been tested and found to be of the highest quality. I am also informed that they are both used for the insulating of refrigerators, but that Kimsul is being used in the Tillsonburg-Delhi area for the insulating of tobacco kilns. It has been found that this is the only type of insulation which can be used for that purpose. I am putting that forward as evidence of its usefulness, and I am putting forward also the request that as regards saving United States dollars it is still fifty-fifty.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member for London has been discussing this matter with the head of the emergency import control division and it is still under consideration. If a case can be made out for some relaxation for a temporary period, of course it will be done. However, for the reasons which I have given I do not think we can exempt it from the general prohibition contained in this tariff item.

Item agreed to.

Items 192b and 192c agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 193. Paper sacks or bags of all kinds, printed or not (but not including those made from twisted paper).

Mr. CHARLTON: Would this item cover paper sacks used for the packaging of commercial fertilizer?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that it probably would, but I shall have to get further information on that. If multi-walled bags come under this item, then I am inclined to think it would.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like to have the assurance of the minister that there will be no recurrence of what has happened in the past when bags were very scarce in the spring at a time when the heavy run of fertilizer is on.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that the production of this type of bag in Canada has gone up rapidly and that there should not be any shortage as has existed in the past.

Mr. McLURE: Are the moisture-proof bags used for the shipment of potatoes manufactured in Canada? In the past few years there has been a change in the method of shipping different commodities, especially potatoes. Potatoes are now being put up in five, seven, ten and fifteen pound packages made out of moisture-proof paper. Most of this has come in from the United States, although recently it may be manufactured in Canada.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot answer my hon. friend directly, but I can say that we have had no complaint of shortages of the 15-pound bags to which he has referred. I think it can be taken for granted that there is an adequate supply in Canada. However, I will take a note of his remarks and look into it in order to see what the situation is.

Items 194 and 195 agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 197, ex 197b, ex 198, ex 199, ex 181 and ex 509.

Towels, napkins, table covers, tray covers and doilies, of paper; fancy shelf and lace papers; paper handkerchiefs; facial tissues and toilet paper, including such materials in jumbo rolls; cups, dishes or plates, forks, spoons, and drinking straws, made of paper, cardboard, or of vegetable fibres; paper envelopes; correspondence and printed letterhead papers, not including plain unprinted typewriter or copying papers; creped tissue paper and manufactures thereof; wrapping paper (including box covering paper and wrappers) printed, embossed or otherwise decorated; Christmas seals, stickers, tags and enclosure cards, printed, embossed or otherwise decorated; card and other games, score reckoners, score pads, tallies and place cards of paper or cardboard, festivity, carnival and celebration supplies and decorations of paper or cardboard, including costumes, hats, caps, headbands, masks, horns, serpentines and confetti; gummed paper; blank books, photograph mounts manufactured from paper or paper board.

Mr. FLEMING: This item covers towels, napkins, fancy doilies, paper handerchiefs, facial tisues, toilet paper and so on. While the figures given in connection with these items, to be found on pages 1340 and 1341 of Hansard, may not seem large in the aggregate, I want to bring before the committee the situation of some importers who have opened up importing businesses since the war to bring in doilies and other paper products from the United Kingdom. Reference to the tables will show that sizeable amounts of these articles are coming in from non-scheduled countries. If my information is correct a substantial part of those importations is from the United Kingdom. For instance, if you look at page 1340 of Hansard, the fourth line from the bottom, you will find that in the case of tissue wrapping paper, during the six months—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is mostly Swedish paper.

Mr. FLEMING: The importers I am referring to are dealing in doilies and paper products of that kind.

Mr. ABBOTT: There were a few fancy doilies and that sort of thing coming in from the United Kingdom.

Mr. FLEMING: I do not wish to repeat at this stage what was said the other night with regard to excluding the products of the non-scheduled countries; I do not think there is any justification for that, but in a case of this kind I ask if the minister will give the committee some assurance that he will be prepared to grant permits. Surely we do not want to do anything to hurt Canadian importers or British producers of goods of this kind, or, for that matter, of any kind?

Mr. ABBOTT: We will look into it. If they are on the purely prohibited list, they will have to stay there, but it may be possible to transfer them to the quota list.

Mr. FLEMING: I urge the minister to give consideration to that. For the life of me I can see no reason why they should be in the first schedule. I am speaking now with respect to paper products produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend will have seen from the table which I gave the other day, these items constitute a total importation of about $7,500,000. The individual items may be relatively small but in toto it is a rather large item. Large quantities, particularly of paper napkins, match cases, doilies and so on, come from the United States. I know we have some nice ones out at the house which we were given at Christmas and which have our name on them and all the rest of it. They came from the United States.

Mr. FLEMING: I am not quarreling at the moment with the exclusion of United States products; I am simply dealing with the problem faced by the Canadian importer and the British producer.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have a case in mind of a man who spent considerable money in September, 1946, to arrange for the sole agency for the importation of Christmas cards from a high-class gallery. This man has spent a good deal of money in working up business, but now these cards are banned from Great Britain. His order may not amount to more than $10,000, but that would help to pay for some of the wheat that Great Britain is buying from us. This man is a veteran of the first war, an amputation case. He has the agency for one line of goods from Great Britain which he can still bring in, but the one line is not sufficient. If he were permitted to bring in the two lines he could make a living out of it and pay his overhead. If these high-class Christmas cards are banned he will have to fold up the other business. In that other business about $50,000 worth of articles can be brought in at the present time, but that is not in itself sufficient to carry the two. The other business is the more profitable, and between the two of them he could make a go of it. He is a war veteran and an amputation case. He has spent a lot of money and owes the bank money, and with this prohibition he will simply have to fold up his business and Canada will lose the benefit of importations from Great Britain which would help to pay for some of the wheat and other things Britain is buying from us. This is a vast list; it does not seem to me right to lump all these articles together, and particularly I protest against banning these things from Great Britain when there is no necessity for it. Cannot this banning of high-class Christmas cards be reviewed by the minister with a view to allowing them entry into the country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I will take a note of my hon. friend's representations.

Mr. MERRITT: I have information that all stamp collectors' accessories are banned under schedule I, not by direction, but by being included in other items, one of which is the blanket item. I have had correspondence with the minister's department and it is suggested that stamp albums themselves are not banned, but that information does not correspond with the advice of the collector of customs in Vancouver. The articles consist of hinges, tweezers, watermark detectors, perforation gauges, et cetera, the dollar and pound sterling value of which would be very small. I suggest that it might be possible to take out of this blanket item, either by ministerial discretion or at the end of the schedule, these small items of philatelic accessories.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to look into that and see what we can do.

Mr. MERRITT: I should like to make another request concerning a previous item which passed when I was not in the house. Two veterans in Vancouver have, since the war, established themselves in the business of importing cut flowers from the United States. These two veterans have invested not only their own capital but their gratuities and re-establishment credits in the business. They were, of course, counselled by D.V.A., and no doubt had their blessing on going into the business. They find that they cannot carry on during the winter unless they can get their normal supplies from the United States. I know that the minister would not admit cut flowers as a general rule, but I point out to him that under the veterans legislation there was such a thing as an "awaiting returns" benefit, and by analogy with that principle it seems to me that the minister could treat such cases of veterans who will be put right out of business as hardship cases. I refer to the matter now because I am informed that under schedule I in a case like this it has not been the custom for the minister to exercise any discretion in favour of a business, but this particular case does seem a hard one. The veterans have invested their capital and re-establishment credits and gratuities in the business, and have had the advice of D.V.A.; and they now are faced, not by intention, of course, but through the operation of the schedule, with the loss of their gratuities and benefits. In a case like that, the minister might see his way, perhaps on the recommendation of the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his certificate that it was a proper case, to exercise his discretion on the ground of hardship to enable such a firm to remain in business.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to look into that case. Perhaps I might be permitted to express surprise that there should ever be a shortage of cut flowers in Vancouver. I did not think it would be necessary to import flowers from the United States into British Columbia.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): If I might refer again to the case I mentioned, this man incurred heavy expenses to purchase stock for his business. Is there no chance of relief for him? Is he simply to be told that nothing can be done?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall have to look into the case to which my hon. friend refers, but if the articles which the man uses in his business are on the prohibited list and he cannot obtain them in Canada, that is all there is to it. But I would have to see what the circumstances are.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It has nothing to do with United States dollars. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. TIMMINS: Line 7 of this item reads:

. . . correspondence and printed letterhead papers, not including plain unprinted typewriter or copying papers.

What is the significance of the last words "not including plain unprinted typewriter or copying papers"? Why is that omitted from the schedule? Where do we get that particular material? Is it something we cannot make in Canada? What amount of money is involved? From what country or countries does it come?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I can give my hon. friend a complete answer at once. I am told that the purpose was to allow the importation of essential types of paper which might be in short supply. I can look into the matter and give my hon. friend a more detailed answer later perhaps.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—247. Liquid fillers, anti-corrosive and anti-fouling paints, and ground and liquid paints, n.o.p.

Mr. ADAMSON: These items, I understand, have a very particular purpose in connection with painting the hulls of wooden boats, and in some harbours on the great lakes I believe a graphite non-fouling base is used. Can the minister say whether this material is manufactured in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: Some of these, I understand, are not, and I am informed that we are giving quite a number of permits in the case of paints of this type which are considered important and are not manufactured in Canada.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I notice that imports from non-scheduled countries have increased a good deal as compared with the period prior to the war. What percentage do we get from the United Kingdom, and will this affect greatly the United Kingdom position?

Mr. ABBOTT: The average before the war was $48,000 and, in the base period, only $28,000. Imports from the scheduled countries amount to $969,000.

Item agreed to.

Items 247, 248, 249 and 251 agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 257. Writing ink, but not including drafting, artists' or instrument ink.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why is artists' instrument ink included here?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that we make some of these types of ink; but there are some technical types that we have to import, and since the item was not a large one, it was felt better to exclude all from the prohibition.

Mr. ADAMSON: Would this include the special ink used for the fountain pen known as Parker 51, which is made only in the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is banned, but I am told that such ink is made here. I am using some at the moment.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 271. Lubricating oils composed wholly or in part of petroleum, in containers of less than 25 imperial gallons each.

Mr. MacNICOL: When the minister gave his address in November there was a hubbub around the country about lubricating oils. Has that been straightened out?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENTLEY: Why is this just in containers of less than 25 imperial gallons each?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is less expensive to bring in the larger containers.

Mr. BENTLEY: It is a protection for the wholesale people here.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. The small container is quite expensive. We use far more United States dollars to bring in oil in 25 gallon containers than to bring it in in tank cars.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 272. Refined petroleum jellies and oils, for toilet, medicinal, edible, or similar purposes, in containers of less than 25 imperial gallons each or of less than 250 pounds each in weight, including the weight of the container.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ADAMSON: I do not see it here, but I assume that transformer oil is not on the banned list. I do not think it is made in Canada. It is a special and expensive type of oil.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot say offhand whether transformer oils are included in this category. If it is banned and not available in Canada, special permits are issued for it.

Items ex 272a and 323 agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 326(i). Decanters and machine-made tumblers of glass, not cut nor decorated, n.o.p.

Mr. TIMMINS: What is the significance of "tumblers of glass not cut nor decorated"? There used to be a good deal of hypocrisy about bringing in tumblers, and if they had the slightest mark on them they were supposed to be decorated. What is the significance in dollars and cents in the difference between tumblers of glass decorated and tumblers of glass not decorated?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a result of the tariff designation. Machine-made tumblers of glass, not cut or decorated, are banned and the ones cut or decorated are on the quota list, because the cut glass is mostly European or from the United Kingdom.

Mr. TIMMINS: I suppose "not otherwise provided" means that they will be on the quota list.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are on the quota list in schedule II in order that glass from Czechoslovakia and the United Kingdom may come in.

Item agreed to.

Items 326g, 354a and 354b agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 362c. Nickel-plated or electro-plated cutlery and table flatware.

Mr. THATCHER: During the war years it was very hard to obtain this type of merchandise, and I was wondering whether the minister has any assurance that Canadian manufacturers can supply the demand. I believe a great deal came from the United States and England prior to this bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: There were heavy importations from the United States. We believe there will be reasonably adequate supplies. The import figures last year, as hon. members will see from the table on Hansard, were well over $3,000,000 in electro-plated ware and over $2,000,000 in nickel-plated ware, n.o.p.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the minister says "we believe," is that an act of faith? We are told that faith without works is dead.

Mr. ABBOTT: We shall have to follow the good old process of trial and error and if there are shortages steps will have to be taken, but in the meantime we believe we are justified in putting this in to provide a substantial saving of United States dollars.

Mr. LOW: Are British manufacturers getting in a position to supply any appreciable quantity of the demand?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot say offhand.

Mr. LOW: In recent years I have not seen a great deal of Sheffield cutlery in this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that the main British interest is in item 362 in the quota group.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 414. Typewriters.

Mr. ADAMSON: Are our manufacturers in Canada able to take care of the Canadian demand in respect of typewriters? Do we export at all?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have a letter from one manufacturer here saying that he is looking into the possibility of exporting to the United States. I infer, therefore, that the local manufacture of typewriters is adequate.

Item agreed to.

Item ex 414a agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 414c. Adding machines.

Mr. ADAMSON: Does this include merely adding machines, or will it cover calculating machines and the complicated machines of the International Business Machines Company, which there would be no real reason for manufacturing in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: This deals with adding machines.

Mr. ADAMSON: And these other machines will be allowed in?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Customs tariff—415a. Refrigerators, domestic or store, completely equipped or not.

Mr. WRIGHT: We had a discussion on section 3 of the bill, and I believe the minister admitted that as regards oil burning refrigerators there was discrimination against certain groups in the country who could not obtain automatic refrigeration from any other source. Since that time, I have made further inquiries and I find that refrigerators of this particular type are not made in the soft-currency countries. As a matter of fact, I believe there is one firm making them in the United States. Previously there had been three firms engaged in the business; but since it is a more or less diminishing business and as electricity becomes more widely distributed, refrigerators of this type are not used. There is no chance whatever of a branch factory being established in Canada. Under these circumstances I think there is a good case for leniency on the part of the minister in this matter of allowing this particular type of refrigerator into Canada. Farmers are not the only ones affected. There are a large number of tourist and other camps throughout Canada where other types of refrigerators are expensive or difficult to obtain. I am, therefore, going to move that this item 415a be amended by adding after the word "not" the following words: "but not including oil-burning refrigerators". That is seconded by Mr. Nicholson. I think the minister might give some serious consideration to this matter. I do not think it involves a large expenditure of United States dollars, but I believe it means a great deal to people living in areas where electricity is not available.

Mr. ABBOTT: The other evening I promised my hon. friend that I would look into the whole situation and give it sympathetic consideration. That undertaking still stands. I am afraid that I cannot agree to the removal of the prohibition. After I have looked into the matter, it may be well that we could place it under a reasonable quota; but I do not think the entry of this type of refrigerator should be completely without restriction. For that reason and for that reason alone, I cannot now accept the amendment which is made. But I will give it consideration and see if they can be transferred to the quota list.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would be prepared to withdraw my amendment if the minister is prepared to say they will be placed under quota.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot give that undertaking. I cannot say what the importations are or what it involves in terms of United States dollars. That is my test in regard to these matters. The responsibility I have is to see that our already dangerously low reserves of United States dollars are conserved. Until I am satisfied that I can justify allowing items of this kind in, and know to what extent it can be done, I do not want to give a formal undertaking. The most I can say is, as I said to my hon. friend the other night, that I will give the matter careful and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. McKAY: Has the minister the figures to indicate what the importations were?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I tried to find out, but the customs figures do not break down, under this tariff item, the figures as between ordinary refrigerators and others. I think it was indicated by some hon. gentleman—perhaps it was the hon. member for Melfort—that these would probably all come in through one or two ports. I am going to look into the matter and see if we can get any accurate data on the extent of importations. But it was only the other day that this matter was brought to my attention, and I have not yet had time to get that information.

Mr. WRIGHT: Under these circumstances, if the minister is prepared to give it sympathetic consideration—and I am sure he will; I know he does not in this bill want to discriminate against any particular group in the country or any particular area—I shall be prepared to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank my hon. friend.

Amendment withdrawn.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 415b. Washing machines, domestic, with or without motive power incorporated therein.

Mr. THATCHER: I understand that certain United States washing machine companies have branches in Canada. If this bill goes through, does it mean that those branches will not be able to get washing machines under any circumstances?

Mr. ABBOTT: They can get parts. There will not be any restriction of imports of parts under schedule III.

Mr. THATCHER: There is no intention of the minister working out some sort of quota as he has done with regard to automobiles?

Mr. ABBOTT: The production of washing machines is reasonably adequate. I do not think we need to import washing machines. Those which were imported were the more luxurious type, if I may say so, without mentioning the names and giving advertising to the particular brands. I am informed that the domestic production of ordinary washing machines, electric and otherwise, is adequate. For instance, last year there were produced in Canada approximately 133,300 machines as against importations of some 33,000.

Mr. THATCHER: I can tell the minister that, while the supply of electric machines may be adequate, with regard to gas engine machines for farm use there is still nowhere near the supply to meet the demand. My point was that apparently some of these branches will have to close up, and there are veterans and others who have started up agencies with them.

Mr. ABBOTT: With regard to non-electric machines, there were 1,069 imported and 21,500 made in Canada. How many of those are gasoline operated I do not know, but the figures are twenty to one.

Item agreed to.

Mr. HODGSON: I should like to revert to item 414 for a moment, on refrigerators.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to do that?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, I suppose so, although these are long schedules, and I do not want too much of it. We agreed to take up the schedules item by item.

Mr. HODGSON: I intended to get back in before the item was reached. A curling club in Lindsay has a refrigeration plant—

Mr. ABBOTT: Item 414 refers to typewriters.

Mr. HODGSON: Item 415a, then.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. HODGSON: Part of this plant was delivered before this measure came into force and part of it was not.

Mr. ABBOTT: This sounds to me as though it were a problem that would come under schedule III. Is it a curling club refrigeration plant?

Mr. HODGSON: Yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: Item 415a refers only to refrigerators, domestic or store, completely equipped or not. I do not think it refers to curling clubs.

Mr. HODGSON: It will come up later on in the same bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Item ex 415c agreed to.

Customs tariff ex 415d—Sewing machines, domestic, with or without motive power incorporated therein.

Mr. THATCHER: I understand that there is only one manufacturer of sewing machines in Canada. I also understand that, since this embargo went on, prices have started to go up. Has the minister any assurance from that company that it will not take advantage of lack of competition?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not been in touch with the company at all. I have not any such assurance. I am informed that production in 1945 is approximately at pre-war level. We shall have to keep an eye on it and see that they do not exploit the situation.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister indicate what the policy of the government would be if this company did boost prices? Also, if the supply was not adequate, what consideration would be given to encouraging imports from the United Kingdom? I understand that from non-scheduled countries last year we had a sizeable total of imports of sewing machines. That is a type of machine which I think the British manufacturers could make and supply if there were some encouragement.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the sort of thing we would have on quota. If the supply situation in Canada were short, and it were felt that it was necessary to bring more in and that the expenditure of United States dollars would justify it, then they would be moved from the prohibited list to the quota list or perhaps removed entirely. There is flexibility in this. One cannot make the act more rigid, but it can be made less onerous.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That matter might be considered by the prices committee.

Mr. LOW: The minister would not hesitate, would he, to allow sewing machines in from the United Kingdom in case we found ourselves short in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think we would do everything possible to see that there was no shortage of sewing machines.

Mr. ADAMSON: Is Switzerland one of the hard-currency countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: Switzerland is one of the hardest currency countries in the world.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 427. Outboard motors.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister let me know if I am right in thinking that the subsequent item 440a, pleasure boats, has been maintained in some form?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not on the prohibited list. There have been changes made in the related bill concerning excise tax, but there has been no change in the prohibition of the import of pleasure boats.

Item agreed to.

Custom tariff—ex 427h. Motion picture projectors for use with films less than one and one-eighth of an inch in width, with or without sound equipment, and motion picture screens adapted for use therewith.

Mr. McKAY: Are any of these movie projectors manufactured in Canada? I am a little bit concerned about this particular restriction for this reason. I know some schools are using machines which take films certainly smaller than one and one-eighth inches in width. I believe it is 16-millimeter film.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that there is a special item which gives free entry to educational material including projection machines and that it would not be affected by this tariff item.

Mr. McKAY: Has there been an amendment to this item?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; there is another tariff item, 696, which covers projectors of this kind used for educational purposes.

Mr. McKAY: In the first part of my question I think I asked whether or not any of these projectors were manufactured in Canada

Mr. ABBOTT: Some are, I am told.

Mr. WRIGHT: There are a number of these machines in Canada, and I suppose repair parts will be allowed in?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is true.

Item agreed to.

Item 432b agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 433. Baths, bathtubs, basins, closets, lavatories, urinals, sinks and laundry tubs of iron or steel, coated or not.

Mr. TIMMINS: Has the minister taken into consideration the fact that during the war there was a bottleneck, which still exists, in respect of bathtubs and sinks? During the war we could not get enough steel to manufacture them. The situation is better now, but certainly it is not cured; and if we are to have any all-out housing program in Canada it seems to me that we are being a little short-sighted here. Further than that, we used to get a quantity of these articles from Scotland, and apparently we are also cutting ourselves off from that market.

Mr. ABBOTT: A new plant is coming into production very shortly, as my hon. friend probably knows, and I have been assured by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there is no objection to including these articles in the prohibited list.

Mr. ADAMSON: Can the minister say anything about the shortage? It was only last year that plumbing fixtures were the extreme bottleneck in all building, and one had to get a priority to obtain them at all. Has the situation eased to that extent?

Mr. ABBOTT: There have been shortages of pipe and some other things but not shortages of bathtubs, I am told; and production is steadily increasing.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 440a. Pleasure boats of all kinds.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I wonder if this would include second-hand pleasure boats which might be bought in the United States. Might we not have to leave room for considerable latitude in interpretation by the customs authorities as to what is a pleasure boat? It is quite conceivable that a pleasure boat there might be brought here and converted into a commercial vessel.

Mr. ABBOTT: Probably it would have to be registered. Tourists can bring in their own pleasure vessels, but this does include second-hand vessels as well as new ones.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Would some discretion be left with the customs authorities?

Mr. ABBOTT: That would have to be dealt with by the customs authorities, of course, as to what constituted a pleasure boat.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): But it might be purchased as a pleasure craft and converted.

Mr. ABBOTT: If the customs people were satisfied that would be done I presume it would be admitted.

Mr. GIBSON: (Comox-Alberni): It is also possible that a commercial vessel might be bought over there and converted to a pleasure craft here. I should think a great deal of discretion would have to be given the authorities.

Mr. ABBOTT: We could not help that, I am afraid. If it were brought in as a commercial vessel and converted into a pleasure boat I do not think we could do much about it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But suppose it were the other way around. Suppose it were brought in here to be used for business purposes?

Mr. ABBOTT: They would apply for a permit to bring in the boat as a commercial vessel. Hon. members will appreciate that this item is intended to exclude the wide range of gasoline launches that are used at summer resorts, and so on, some of which are pretty expensive.

Mr. PEARKES: Did I understand the minister to say this would not affect tourists coming in?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is so. They may bring in their own boats.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 443. Apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings (not including parts).

Mr. BENTLEY: I am not going to make another speech such as I made the other day, but I am still interested in propane gas stoves. I think they should be allowed in, and I am led to believe that they can be obtained in some of the soft currency countries. For that reason I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt, that item 443 be amended by striking out the words "for cooking or."

Mr. ABBOTT: I must give my hon. friend the same answer as I gave the hon. member for Melfort. The other night I promised him that we would take a look at this item in view of his representations and see whether it might be possible to place a quota on these stoves. But I cannot agree to an amendment which takes them out of the operation of the act entirely; and I am not prepared to say what the quota should be until we have had a chance to look into the matter.

Mr. BENTLEY: I want to point out to the minister that these can be manufactured and at present are being manufactured in the soft currency countries. Consequently I am not asking the minister to accept something which might involve the expenditure of United States dollars. By this amendment I am simply asking that he ease up a little on the non-discriminatory clause as it applies to this item, and let the soft currency countries such as Great Britain ship in these goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: We cannot make special exceptions to the non-discriminatory principle. We must either adopt the principle of non-discrimination or not adopt it, and that point has been settled by the house. So, as I say, the most I can do is promise to give the matter of propane gas stoves serious consideration, to see whether it is possible to place them under quota. I think my hon. friend did indicate—and this agrees with my own information—that it should be possible also to produce these stoves in Canada.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is right. With that assurance from the minister, and since it would only bring on a long fight which would not do anyone any good if I pressed my amendment, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank my hon. friend.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This item reads "not including parts". Does that mean there is no limit on the number or variety of parts that may be imported?

Mr. ABBOTT: The explanation is that a knocked-down stove would not be allowed in, but parts for these stoves, or for any others, are all covered under schedule III, in the same tariff item. My hon. friend will find the item at page 31. It reads:

Parts for the production of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings:
(1) For coal or wood
(2) For gas
(3) For electricity
(4) For oil
(5) N.o.p.

Parts come in, and that is why the phrase "not including parts" is in this item. They come under schedule III, which means, in effect, they they will be allowed in substantially without restriction.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—444b. Lamp shades, n.o.p., and shade holders.

Mr. ADAMSON: Just as a matter of interest, what were our imports? It seems an extraordinary item to be prohibited.

Mr. ABBOTT: Our imports from the United States amounted to $106,000, and to $1,000 from non-scheduled countries.

Item agreed to.

Items ex 445, ex 445a and ex 445b agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 445d. Radio receiving sets and cabinets and chassis therefor.

Mr. THATCHER: Could the minister say how many of the radio sets which came into the country last year were brought in by commercial firms and how many were just radios that people brought in for themselves?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that the great majority would come in through dealers and be sold in the ordinary way in the retail trade.

Mr. THATCHER: I believe today in Canada radios are quite plentiful. Could the minister tell the committee whether, since they are plentiful here, our manufacturers under this new program are trying to export radios to the United States? Are our manufacturers free to ship radios to the United States, or do the cartel arrangements prevent that?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think the cartel arrangements prevent it. I am told we are shipping some to South America, to hard currency countries. But so far as I know we are not exporting any to the United States. It would be difficult for our manufacturers to compete in a large way in the United States, because of volume, and also because some of the parts would have to be brought in from the United States anyway. As a general rule, I believe our radio prices, even allowing for duties, have been somewhat higher than prices of similar radios in the United States.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): How does this apply to radio-telephone receivers, such as marine equipment?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that they are caught by the ban. They come within the definition; but permits are being given for remote lumber areas or for marine use, and that sort of thing.

Mr. ADAMSON: Are frequency modulation sets and television sets being made in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot answer that at the present time.

Item agreed to.

Items ex 445e, ex 445i, ex 445j and 449 agreed to.

Customs tariff—451e et al. Slide, hookless or zipper fasteners and parts thereof.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am told there is not sufficient supply in Canada to meet the market requirements of zipper parts. Will the minister say if that is so? If so, why are they excluded? What is the amount involved?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that $107,000 worth were imported last year from scheduled countries. In 1945, which is the latest figure available, there were three and a quarter million dollars worth produced in Canada, as against $105,000 worth imported, which appears to be a small ratio. Of course, if Canadian supplies were not adequate, it would be necessary to put them under quota. But the information we have is that the Canadian supply is adequate.

Mr. TIMMINS: Why are parts mentioned here?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told if the parts were not prohibited the prohibition would be completely valueless. They would bring in the parts and put them together here.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have been informed by a responsible person that the supply was not adequate.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall look into the matter again. I gave my hon. friend an assurance that if supplies of essential materials were not adequate, it would be reconsidered.

Mr. McLURE: I understand that since these zipper fasteners were invented in the United States, royalties are paid on all that are manufactured. Those royalties go to the patentee in the United States. Unless sufficient are not being manufactured, it is important that they should not be prohibited entirely.

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course we would have to pay the royalty if they were manufactured here. The royalty would have to be paid to the United States patent holder. But that would be much cheaper, in terms of United States dollars, than in importing those fully manufactured in the United States.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ABBOTT: May we return to item 234, which was held over?

Customs tariff—234. Perfumery, including toilet preparations, non-alcoholic, viz., hair oils, tooth and other powders and washes, pomatums, pastes and all other perfumed preparations, n.o.p., used for the hair, mouth or skin.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to thank the minister for holding this item over; I was in a committee meeting elsewhere when it was called. Will the minister consider transferring this item to another schedule, or dealing with it in such a way that it will not prevent the importation of French perfumes into Canada? I have in mind two young veterans of the Canadian armed forces who established themselves in business in Canada as importers of French perfumes, and other similar products such as face powders, hair lotions and brilliantines. I do not know that they are the the only ones who have done this. They had established connections with the French producers of these goods while serving in the forces and are in a position to carry on a business which would be useful in Canada, and would also help the French producers. Supplies of these materials are available in France.

It so happens that the two veterans about whom I am speaking, relying on the hope of establishing a good line of French perfumes, sank into their business all the wealth they had in the world, including their re-establishment grants. Now, with the virtually complete exclusion of French perfumes and similar products, not only are they faced with ruin, but harm is being done to the good relations they had established with the French producers. This particular case has I believe, been brought to the attention of Mr. Taylor.

The partnership in question had hoped during the current year to import perfumes and other like materials to a value of not less than two million francs, and this is a serious matter for them. I am not speaking about perfumes from the United States, but rather perfumes from France, and I urge that special consideration be given to a case of this kind.

Mr. ABBOTT: The committee will notice that this item relates only to non-alcoholic perfumes and preparations. Under this item goods to the value of only $9,000 were imported from France during the base period. Many of the French perfumes are alcoholic, and as such they come under tariff item 160, concerning which there is no prohibition. So that I believe it is fair to say that a substantial portion of the French perfumes are not prohibited.

Mr. FLEMING: There are two observations I should like to make. First, last year's statistics do not apply. These young men are just starting up, and the volume of business they did last year is not to be compared with the volume they had every reason to expect to do this year. Then, as to alcoholic content, I am told that if one wants to transform a non-alcoholic perfume into an alcoholic perfume it can be done by debasing the product through the addition of a portion of alcohol.

However, I do not think the point the minister makes covers this situation. The perfumes to which I am referring, and in the sale of which these young veterans were establishing themselves, are almost entirely non-alcoholic. They do not wish to adulterate their perfumes by the addition of alcohol so that they may be classified as having alcoholic content, simply to evade the provisions of the schedule. They propose to sell well-known and well-established brands of non-alcoholic French perfumes.

Mr. ABBOTT: The difficulty here, as with other items, is that these non-alcoholic perfumes mostly come from the United States. Last year, over $400,000 worth was imported from the United States, only $8,000 worth from France and something like $70,000 worth from the United Kingdom. Unless we are prepared to revert to the discriminatory principle, we would have to let in a lot of these perfumes from the United States in order to let them in from France. In the case of the more expensive alcoholic perfumes, last year $80,000 worth was imported from France as against only $6,000 from the United States. I never knew that the high-class perfumes contained alcohol until this debate came on.

Mr. FLEMING: I would urge the minister to regard this case as being one of exceptional hardship. This was to be a new business in Canada which would have been good for Canadians and for the French producers.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will look into the circumstances of the case.

Mr. FLEMING: We should help to establish some lines of these well-known French brands in Canada and permit them to be sold here under their trade names.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will look into the circumstances of the particular case.

Mr. FLEMING: It may be that there are not many cases of this kind, but the one I suggest is of such severe hardship that I think the minister might well deal with it as such.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister mind giving the basis for his conclusion as to the amount of perfumes that might be brought in from France in accordance with the non-discriminatory principle so that we can understand just what he is advocating?

Mr. ABBOTT: There are two principal items dealing with perfumes. One is the non-alcoholic type which, I am told, is the cheaper perfume. In that case the major importations were from the United States and not from France. In the case of the more expensive perfumes which apparently contain alcohol, the principal importations were from France, with very little coming from the United States. The figures which I gave for the more expensive alcoholic perfumes were $82,000 from France as against only $6,000 from the United States.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Upon what does the minister base his reasoning in order to determine when importations from France are non-discriminatory and when they are not?

Mr. ABBOTT: We tried to take the items which would result in the greatest saving of United States dollars. That is the principle which has been followed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Perhaps I am not making myself clear to the minister. How does the minister decide whether or not importations from any country are discriminatory? At what point do they become discriminatory?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I am following my hon. friend quite clearly. We adopt the same principle so far as all countries are concerned. In other words, if we ban a product, it is banned from all countries. In selecting the articles to be banned we endeavoured, as I explained before, to select articles the major source of supply of which was hard currency countries. We endeavoured to let in those articles whose main source of supply was soft currency countries. That is the general principle we endeavoured to follow in selecting the item to go into either schedule I, the prohibited list, schedule II, the quota list, or to be left off entirely.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 462. Cameras, not including those for professional use.

Mr. ADAMSON: I have been asked by a group of exhibitors who presumably have an amateur standing but who have done a great deal of exhibiting of photographs in public exhibitions, to inquire for further details about this item. They want to know whether the very expensive minicameras are excluded from Germany?

Mr. ABBOTT: The situation is that all cameras, except professional cameras, are prohibited.

Mr. ADAMSON: Everything is prohibited except what is used by the man who sets himself up as a professional photographer to take pictures?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. McNICOL: Does that include moving picture cameras?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are under schedule III, yes.

Item agreed to.

Item 465 agreed to.

Customs tariff—468. Bird, squirrel and rat cages, of wire, and metal parts thereof.

Mr. ADAMSON: Here again I have received a request from a number of people in the business of raising canaries. They are finding great difficulty in getting cages which normally come from the United States. They have been refused permission to bring these in from the United Kingdom. I did not know that the business of raising canaries was so important, but apparently there are a number of people engaged in this business.

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand that they were banned during the war under the War Exchange Conservation Act, and moreover they could not be manufactured because they used metal. However, they are made in this country. I will consider my hon. friend's representations.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why are these cages not permitted to be brought in from England?

Mr. ABBOTT: As I have said, we are adopting a non-discriminatory principle in the bill. An amendment was introduced, but it was voted down.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is hardly consistent with what the minister said before. I gathered, when we were discussing perfumes, that the minister was admitting commodities from soft currency countries as far as possible.

Mr. ABBOTT: We imported $56,000 worth of bird and squirrel cages from hard currency countries and only $12,000 worth from other countries.

Mr. ADAMSON: This is most important to canary raisers.

Mr. FLEMING: One of the anomalies under this bill is that bird cages and swings are excluded, but not bird baths.

Mr. ABBOTT: Bird cages cannot be imported; I do not know about bird baths.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do I understand that in the application of this remarkable non-discriminatory principle, if we cut off importations from hard currency countries we automatically cut off importations from soft currency countries?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What is the base period that has been referred to?

Mr. ABBOTT: That has been given several times but probably the hon. gentleman was not in his seat. The base period in connection with which I gave figures is the twelve months ended June 30, 1947.

Mr. McLURE: I am surprised that they did not include fox cages.

Mr. ABBOTT: We think too much of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McLURE: I believe they should be in. I should like to see the government have courage enough to exclude these things from coming into Canada. We can make better fox cages and, I believe, better rat cages than what we import from the United States. I should like to see that put in there. Why should we import them when we can manufacture better articles ourselves? It is only a question of the government having the nerve to do it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure we could make a better and cheaper fox cage in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—505a. Hardwood flooring, tongued and/or grooved, or jointed, viz: beech, birch, maple and oak.

Mr. TIMMINS: How much of this material comes in from the United States and how much money is involved?

Mr. ABBOTT: The amount was $132,000 in the base period.

Mr. TIMMINS: What were the total imports?

Mr. ABBOTT: They amounted to $9,704,000; $8,753,000 from scheduled countries and $951,000 from non-scheduled countries.

Mr. ADAMSON: Sweden mostly?

Mr. ABBOTT: Tropical woods from Central America.

Mr. TIMMINS: Was $132,000 the amount of hardwood flooring imported from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: Correct.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Is there any quota on hard woods from tropical countries to take care of shipbuilding requirements?

Mr. ABBOTT: Special permits are being issued.

Mr. ADAMSON: All these fancy woods such as mahogany, rosewood and so forth, are now excluded?

Mr. ABBOTT: On January 8, a circular was sent to importers of lumber and veneers setting out:

> Until further notice the following species of lumber may be imported under special permit: teak, Australian gumwood, Australian ironbark, mahogany, Ponderosa pine, California sugar pine, Idaho white pine.

Mr. TIMMINS: Those are prohibited when the act goes through?

Mr. ABBOTT: What I have read was a circular from the emergency import control division to importers of lumber and veneers. Although there is a general prohibition, permits will be issued in special cases. We can relax but we cannot make more onerous.

Mr. MENARY: Does oak come under that?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. There is a small quota with respect to oak for certain purposes.

Mr. THATCHER: Do veneers used in the manufacture of furniture come under this?

Mr. ABBOTT: Veneers as a whole are excluded.

Mr. TIMMINS: What was the number of that circular?

Mr. ABBOTT: It has no number but I will get a supply for circulation among the members. The customs people have a complete list of those who import these articles and a circular would be sent to all on the list. That has already been sent out.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Are items 506a, 506b, 507, 507a, 507b, 507c and 507e standing?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): They are all in the excluded list?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought the minister said a moment ago that discretion was being exercised and permits issued with regard to these. Am I correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: In cases of particular hardship. If it is shown, for instance, that because of the lack of a small quantity of imported veneer finish, let us say, a piece of furniture, which is 99 14/100 per cent of Canadian manufacture, the article cannot be finished, a special permit is granted.

Mr. TIMMINS: Will this be a continuing thing after the act is passed?

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been worked out after long discussions with the furniture and lumber industries and, I am told, seems to be working satisfactorily.

Mr. THATCHER: Some permits have already been issued?

Mr. ADAMSON: What about piano manufacturers? They use a special kind of wood which, I understand, is not obtainable in Canada.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have not heard from the piano manufacturers, but if they made submissions they would be considered.

Mr. ADAMSON: We were all briefed by them.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was about the excise tax.

Mr. KNOWLES: If the minister has not already given the information, what in dollars do all these hardship permits amount to?

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave that the other evening. Up to February 7 they amounted, in round figures, to $7,000,000. That is on Hansard.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507c. Plywood made of two or more layers of veneer or lumber of wood, glued or cemented together, but not further manufactured.

Mr. McLURE: I understand that under this item pillars made from plywood and locked together with special machinery and then glued or cemented are prohibited entry. I received a letter today from a gentleman, an American, who is building a home in Canada, and he wanted to know if he could get in this country 25-foot columns made from veneer and machined together. The house is to be of pure colonial design. I should like to know if those pillars are prohibited entry, because in Canada we manufacture only 12, 14 and 16-foot pillars. There is only one place where 24 and 26-foot pillars can be got, and that is Chicago. Could he receive a permit to bring in these pillars which are not manufactured in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are banned, but whether he would qualify under the hardship provision because he could not get such pillars in Canada I could not say offhand. The case would have to be looked into on its merits.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The next item is 507e. Shall the item carry?

Items 507e, 508, 512, and ex 506 et al agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 514. Coffins and caskets.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Can the minister tell us the difference between coffins and caskets? I should like to know also whether there is any significance in the fact that immediately under this item "coffins and caskets" there appears the item "showcases of all kinds".

Mr. ABBOTT: These are two separate items. I am not sure that I am clear as to the distinction between coffins and caskets. They are close to being synonymous. I shall have to consult the Oxford dictionary to see whether there is any real distinction.

Mr. PEARKES: Occupied or unoccupied? Does that make a difference?

Mr. ABBOTT: Curiously enough that question was raised by a conscientious customs officer at the border shortly after the restriction came into force and the point was referred to Ottawa for a decision.

An hon. MEMBER: What was the decision?

Mr. ABBOTT: Unoccupied.

Item ex 515, 519, 519a, 597, and ex 597a. Agreed to.

Customs tariff—602, 603. Fur skins, wholly or partially dressed.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Will it be possible to send Canadian furs to the United States for treatment and bring them back? There might be privately owned seal skins coming under this category.

Mr. ABBOTT: Permits have been given for furs to be sent to the United States and processed and returned to Canada.

Mr. McLURE: Will there be permits for Alaska seal skins owned by the fisheries department and now being processed in the United States? Will there be permits for manufacturers here to get those in?

Mr. ABBOTT: That matter, I am informed, has been raised in the last few days and is now under discussion with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, who is not here at the moment.

Mr. PEARKES: And that will apply to next year's catch as well, the fur seals which are slaughtered on the Pribilof islands, and which are sent to the United States.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. Those are the seal skins under discussion at the moment.

Mr. PEARKES: Where big game hunters kill hides, will they be permitted to have them cured in the United States and returned?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not automatically, but I think permits would be issued in suitable cases. There would probably not be many of them.

Item agreed to.

Item ex 618b agreed to.

Customs tariff—624 et al. Bead ornaments, and ornaments of alabaster, spar, amber, terra cotta, composition, or other material except china or porcelain; fans of all kinds, statues and statuettes of any material other than porcelain or earthenware.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does item 624 not cover some of the items which are also in item 634 in schedule II? It has been suggested to me that there is overlapping there.

Mr. ABBOTT: If anything is in schedule II it automatically overrides schedule I. If there is a conflict between an item in schedule II, which is under the quota, and an item in schedule I, which is a prohibited item, the item in schedule II overrides any possible interpretation bringing it within the item in schedule I.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. HAZEN: Where is the authority for that?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not at the moment the answer to that question, but I am told that the phrase in item 624 "other than porcelain or earthenware" takes out the great majority of items and those are included in the quota items under schedule II.

Item agreed to.

Items 625, 629 and 647 agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 648. Precious and semi-precious stones (other than diamonds) whether genuine or synthetic; pearls, whether genuine or cultured, and imitations and simulations thereof.

Mr. McKAY: Why are diamonds omitted from this?

Mr. ABBOTT: They all come directly or indirectly from non-scheduled soft-currency countries.

Item agreed to.

Items ex 651, ex 655, ex 655a, ex 689a agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 71. Synthetic casings for meat.

Mr. JACKMAN: I wrote to the minister about synthetic casings for meat and I understood that eventually this would be put in the quota schedule. Is it in the quota schedule now?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is banned, but in the provision with respect to hardship to an industry, a quota of $75,000 a month is being provided.

Mr. JACKMAN: It remains in the prohibited schedule?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct, but a special quota of $75,000 a month is allowed under the hardship provision of section 4 of the act.

Mr. JACKMAN: I thought it was understood in a previous discussion that hardship cases were all of single occurrence, that they did not recur.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily. They can relate to an industry or to an individual or to the Canadian public.

Mr. JACKMAN: For the sake of greater certainty, may I ask why this is not carried over to schedule II?

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not fit into any recognized category. It is a new industry, and there is no record of performance pre-war on which one can base a quota in the normal way that quotas are established for schedule II.

Mr. KNOWLES: What are these casings for?

Mr. ABBOTT: Sausages and bologna.

Mr. KNOWLES: We have had a lot of that around here for some time. The minister speaks as though it is something new.

Mr. ABBOTT: We used to have natural casings. These are synthetic casings.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is still bologna.

Mr. MacINNIS: How did the minister fix the quota if there was no way by which it could be fixed under schedule II?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Synthetic fixing.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that it is based on a reasonable cut back from the experience of the last year or two. None of these things were imported during the peace period prior to the war, 1936-1939. It has just been fixed after examination into the imports during the last year or two just prior to now, and estimated as a reasonable cut back from those imports.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Will this quota be pro rata among importers and consumers?

Mr. ABBOTT: Among importers.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): That is $75,000?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): It will be pro rata?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, pro rata among importers.

Item agreed to.

Items ex 362c, ex 427, and ex 446a agreed to.

Custom tariff—ex 703b. Goods enumerated elsewhere in schedules I and II, except goods to which paragraph (c) of subsection two of section three of this act applies.

Mr. THATCHER: Before we leave this item, I wish to ask the minister a question. I suppose there is an obvious answer, but I do not know what it is. Can the minister indicate why whiskeys from the United States were put on the banned list?

Mr. ABBOTT: The main reason is, as is probably well known to most hon. members, that virtually all of it comes from sterling area countries, and particularly from the United Kingdom.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is much too wide a statement.

Mr. ABBOTT: We import practically none of that from the hard currency countries.

Mr. KNOWLES: Has the minister any figures as to the amount we import from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: Not very much. I would not worry about it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The figures last year to the end of November were about $2,000,000. I am told that is mostly for blending and re-export back to hard currency countries and compares with over $3,500,000 from the United Kingdom and $2,000,000 of other stuff from the United Kingdom, British Guiana, Barbados, Jamaica, Trinidad, Bahamas, Australia, Cuba, French West Indies, Mexico, Virgin islands and so on. The great majority came from soft currency countries.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ABBOTT: Before we proceed with schedule II, perhaps as a matter of form I might ask one of my colleagues to move that schedule II as it was originally printed be deleted and be replaced by the following. The schedule is the one which is before the members of the committee in the reprinted bill, but as a matter of form this will regularize proceedings.

Mr. ST. LAURENT moved:

That schedule II of Bill 3 be deleted and attached schedule substituted:

SCHEDULE II

In this schedule where a tariff item of schedule "A" to the Customs tariff is listed without being preceded by the word "ex" all goods included in that tariff item shall be deemed to be included in this schedule and where a tariff item is listed and preceded by the word "ex" only the goods described thereafter are deemed to be included in this schedule, and words and expressions in this schedule have the same meaning as in the schedules to the Customs Tariff.

Category 1—Fruits and Vegetables.

532b. Woven fabric, wholly of cotton, for covering books.

541a. Woven fabrics, wholly of jute, n.o.p.

542. Woven fabrics, wholly or in part of vegetable fibres, and all such fabrics with cut pile, n.o.p., not containing silk, synthetic textile fibres or filaments, nor wool.

542a. Woven or braided fabrics not exceeding twelve inches in width, wholly or in part of vegetable fibres, n.o.p., not to contain silk, synthetic textile fibres or filaments, nor wool.

545. Lace and embroideries, wholly of flax, or of hemp, or of flax, hemp and cotton, not coloured, imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of clothing in their own factories.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

546. Articles made from fabrics, finished or unfinished, and all textile manufactures, wholly of jute, n.o.p.; fabrics wholly of jute, coated or impregnated, and jute fabric backed with paper.

548. Clothing, wearing apparel and articles, made from woven fabrics, and all textile manufactures, wholly or partially manufactured, composed wholly or in part of vegetable fibres but not containing wool, n.o.p.; fabrics coated or impregnated, composed wholly or in part of vegetable fibres but not containing silk, synthetic textile fibres or filaments, nor wool, n.o.p.

553. Blankets of any material, not to include automobile rugs, steamer rugs, or similar articles.

554. Woven fabrics, composed wholly or in chief part by weight of yarns of wool or hair, not exceeding in weight six ounces to the square yard, n.o.p., when imported in the gray or unfinished condition, for the purpose of being dyed or finished in Canada.

554a. Woven fabrics, consisting of cotton warps with wefts of lustre wool, mohair or alpaca, generally known as lustres or Italian linings, n.o.p.

554b. Woven fabrics composed wholly or in part of yarns of wool or hair, n.o.p.

554c. Woven fabrics, composed wholly or in chief part by weight of yarns of wool or hair, not exceeding in weight four ounces to the square yard, when imported in the gray or unfinished condition, for the purpose of being dyed or finished in Canada.

554d. Woven or braided fabrics not exceeding twelve inches in width, whether with cut pile or not, wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, alpaca, goat or other like animal.

554f. Woven fabrics, composed wholly or in part of yarns of wool or hair, commonly known as billiard cloth.

555. Clothing, wearing apparel and articles made from woven fabrics, and all textile manufactures, wholly or partially manufactured, composed wholly or in part of wool or similar animal fibres, but of which the component of chief value is not silk nor synthetic textile fibres or filaments, n.o.p.; fabrics, coated or impregnated, composed wholly or in part of yarns of wool or hair, but not containing silk nor synthetic textile fibres or filaments, n.o.p.

560a. Woven fabrics wholly or in part of silk, not to contain wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, n.o.p.

560b. Woven fabrics, wholly of silk, twenty-six inches in width, or less, n.o.p.

560c. Woven fabrics with cut pile, whether or not coated or impregnated, wholly or in part of silk or synthetic textile fibres or filaments, but not containing wool, n.o.p.

561. Woven fabrics wholly or in part of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, not to contain wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of silk, n.o.p.

561a. Fabrics, coated or impregnated, n.o.p.: (i) Composed wholly or in part of silk; (ii) Composed wholly or in part of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, but not containing silk.

562. Woven fabrics not exceeding twelve inches in width generally known as "ribbons", whether with cut pile or not, wholly or in part of silk but not containing wool.

562a. Woven fabrics not exceeding twelve inches in width, generally known as "ribbons", whether with cut pile or not, wholly or in part of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, but not containing silk nor wool.

564. Woven fabrics, of a kind not made in Canada, wholly, or in chief part, by weight, of silk or of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, or both, imported in the web in lengths of not less than five yards each by manufacturers of neckties, scarves, or mufflers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories.

564a. Irish poplin, composed wholly of silk and wool, not exceeding twenty-five inches in width, imported in the web in lengths of not less than five yards each, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe, by manufacturers of neckties, scarves or mufflers for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories.

107. Preserved ginger.

140. Syrups and molasses of all kinds, the product of the sugar-cane or beet, n.o.p., and all imitations thereof or substitutes therefor.

141. Sugar candy and confectionery, n.o.p., including sweetened gums, candied popcorn, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar.

Mr. KNOWLES: We shall deal with them item by item?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. We are calling them item by item. This is just to replace the schedule as originally printed.

Motion agreed to.

Items 83, 84, and 93, agreed to.

Customs tariff—100. Grape fruit, when imported from the place of growth by ship, direct to a Canadian port.

Mr. KNOWLES: Can the minister give us some figures now about these several items at once? I have reference to the items dealing with citrus fruits.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. Does my hon. friend wish to know the basis on which the quota is established? I assumed that was his point.

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: Taking this item of grapefruit, fresh, pre-war, imports were $1,202,000 from scheduled countries and $112,000 from non-scheduled countries, or a total of $1,314,000. In the twelve months ended June 30, 1947, imports of grapefruit, fresh, from scheduled countries were $3,761,000; from non-scheduled countries, $38,000, or a total of $3,799,000. I might give the committee the principal items, grapefruit and oranges. As to oranges, average imports, 1937-39, from scheduled countries, $5,996,000; from non-scheduled countries, $534,000, or a total of $6,530,000. In the twelve months ended June 30, 1947, there was a total of $21,072,000 from scheduled countries and $16,000 from non-scheduled countries, or a total of $21,088,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: Has the quota been arrived at?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is it?

Mr. ABBOTT: The quota is fifty per cent of the imports during the twelve months ended June 30, 1947.

Mr. HATFIELD: In dollar value?

Mr. ABBOTT: In dollar value. So that the quota would amount to roughly $10,500,000 for oranges, and roughly close to $2,000,000 for grapefruit.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. KNOWLES: On division.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask this question in regard to the fixing of quotas? Is that the formula which is applied all through or just to fruits and vegetables, or have you a separate formula for separate items or separate quotas?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is a different formula for each quota category. Fruits and vegetables are in category one. Their quota is fifty per cent. That applies to all the items in that.

Mr. HATFIELD: I should like to ask if all the quotas are based on the value or on the quantity?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are all based on the dollar value.

Item agreed to on division.

Item 100a agreed to.

Item 101 agreed to on division.

Items 101a, 101b, 102 and 152 agreed to.

Customs tariff—152b. Orange juice, grapefruit juice, and blended orange and grapefruit juice, the product of the British West Indies, when imported direct from the country of production.

Mr. JACKMAN: As far as one can judge from reading what appears in the press, no one has experienced a shortage of these citrus fruits. If that is correct as a fact, how is it so if we are getting in only fifty per cent of what we were getting in before?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is quite simple. There was a large crop of citrus fruit in the United States this year and prices are much lower. As a result, the physical quantity imported, although representing only fifty per cent of the value last year, so far has not been very far short of the quantity, and the price has been satisfactory up to the present time. Incidentally the importers are transferring a portion of their dollar collected from lemons into oranges and grapefruit, a more popular variety of fruit, and getting lemons from Italy.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—523. Woven fabrics, wholly of cotton, not bleached, mercerized nor coloured, n.o.p., and seamless cotton bags.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to ask a general question with regard to this textile category, but first I want to ask an even more general question with regard to the production of cotton. I understand that years ago—notably in 1938 and 1939—we bought a good deal of cotton in Brazil. What is the situation today? What are the possibilities of substituting Brazilian cotton for United States cotton, thereby saving dollars?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, there is quite a pronounced trend that way now. Taking the figures for the eleven months ending November, 1947, in round figures we got $5,000,000 worth of cotton from Brazil and $7,800,000 from Mexico as against $39,000,000 worth from the United States. I do not know what the possibilities may be of expanding those Brazilian purchases, but obviously our chief source of supply must continue to be the United States.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Could the minister let us know what relative amounts were purchased ten years ago, say in 1935 or 1936?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not those figures here, but perhaps I could get them.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Could we have them later in the evening? I would be very much interested in seeing them.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not those figures now. I am sorry; I did not anticipate we would want figures quite so far back.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think they would be relevant to the question. Perhaps the minister could have one of his officials get them during the evening, maybe within the next hour or so. It seems to me that it would be of interest to know if the percentage was much larger ten years ago and, if so, why it was larger and what the possibilities are now.

Mr. ABBOTT: Whether we could get all that information this evening is a little hard to say. One would have to find out what production conditions are in Brazil and where they are selling their crop. They may be interested in selling it in some other section of the world where they can get United States dollars. However, I will see if I can get the figures.

Mr. JACKMAN: Would the minister give the formula as we come to the various categories?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. The formula is 400 per cent of pre-war, which works out at 32 per cent of last year's imports, and therefore 32 per cent is the figure which is allowed the individual importer, to determine his dollar quota for the current year.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I understand that a great deal of the imports in category 2, textiles, are really raw materials. I did not take that in at first; I thought they were things which were brought in and sold over the counter. I understand, however, that a very large quantity indeed of these imports are raw materials, and that they are used for further manufacturing. I think that raises an important question. I am advised that, as they are treated now, they are dealt with automatically; that no regard is taken to the effect on this industry or that industry. While the minister will realize with what pain I suggest that any additional power should be given to his colleague—and perhaps I should preface this by saying the minister has admitted we are in such a mess that all the ordinary rules of sensible conduct have to be thrown overboard—I am seriously asking whether these amounts, which I understand are very large, which come in under category 2 and are dealt with in what is represented to me as an entirely automatic way, really should not be in schedule III, and whether the same considerations the Minister of Trade and Commerce is going to use in reference to the items contained therein, that is to say the effect on this industry or that industry, should be taken into account. First of all, I should like to ask the minister if my information is correct, that being in schedule II and being on the quota they will be dealt with by the department which administers them practically in an automatic manner, and that the considerations which I suggest are important will not be taken into account. If that is so, I would ask him whether he does not agree that these other considerations should be applied.

Mr. ABBOTT: The situation is that all raw cotton and all cotton yarns are free; there is no prohibition. All other textiles are under quota. It is quite true, as my hon. friend suggests, that a very large proportion of these textiles are what might be described as semi-processed. It is also correct to say that the quota is determined more or less automatically, on the basis of imports during the preceding year—it is a dollar quota—and the importer is free to select the particular type of textile he will bring in, within his quota. I mentioned in connection with one of the very broad discretionary powers granted to me under section 6 of the bill, which I said I was sorry had to be in those broad terms, that one reason was to enable the minister administering schedule II to impose a special condition in connection with any particular quota holder if, for instance, he were using up all his dollar quota to bring in certain luxury products. I think

I cited chenille bedspreads instead of material for overalls, or that sort of thing. It may be, as my hon. friend suggests, that experience will demonstrate that it would be desirable to transfer some items from schedule II to schedule III. If that is the case, by virtue of an amendment which was put in when the bill was being considered in committee, at any time we can move any item from schedule II to schedule III. And it is pointed out to me that most of these fabrics are also sold over the counter as well, in larger and smaller quantities.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Notwithstanding what the minister has said as to the powers reserved and what can be done, I suggest that there is an immediate problem of substantial size, and I wonder if it could not be dealt with now by the definite transfer of some of these items, perhaps all that come in as raw or semi-raw material, to schedule III. It is pointed out to me that putting them on a quota works a very great hardship on a considerable number of people who have recently gone into business, and I am assured that, as in other industries, many of them are returned men.

There is one entirely fortuitous situation which I am told has worked great hardship. It is said that, actually not by law but by custom and practice, there has been a quota here in Canada for the last six or seven years, and that a good many of the people going into business in these small textile establishments found they could not get supplies here in Canada, because the supply houses in this country had their lists of customers and could not take on more; and I am told that these new businesses have had to rely solely on United States supplies. It is quite obvious that if they have been relying solely on United States supplies a quota of 32 per cent is no good to them.

I am also told—though perhaps this is irrelevant to the immediate argument, but at any rate it is incidental to it, and it is an unfortunate thing—that there has sprung up a mushroom lot of wholesalers who flourished greatly, to my regret, during the war, and who now apparently are reappearing. They are on the quotas. They have worked themselves in as intermediaries and they are to be found again, getting in between and making use of the quotas they had during the war to feather their own nests in these new circumstances. For that reason again I am asking—and I hope there may be others in the house who will be sufficiently interested in this to take part in the argument, if they agree—whether this should not be handled in some different way, because to me it seems that this situation will work great hardship on the smaller people, those who were not in business in 1940 or 1941, when the informal Canadian quotas were established.

Mr. ABBOTT: They did not have to be in business in 1940 or 1941; only at the end of June, 1947.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am afraid I have not made my point clear. I quite realize that to get on the quota under the schedule, the quota which is now being effected by the government, anyone who was in business in June, 1947, is eligible. I am suggesting, however, that there was an effective though informal quota system in effect in Canada prior to 1947. The minister's assistant will know whether or not that is true; but I am assured by competent people that it is the case and for that reason you have this very great hardship on the people who are placed under this strict quota system. If that is so, I suggest that the very existence of that quota will make their position impossible, and that an entirely different set of considerations might be applied in the cases where these come in as raw materials.

I confess I was under an entire misapprehension as to schedule II. I thought schedule II was not a raw materials schedule. I thought it consisted merely of merchants' goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not really raw materials; it is semi-processed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It is raw materials for those carrying on the production of finished garments. I understand that the figure is about $30,000,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. In the base period, imports from scheduled countries amounted to $10,301,000 and, from non-scheduled countries, $30,591,000, making a total of $40,892,000. Those figures are to be found at page 1303 of Hansard.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I hope I have made my point, and that the minister will take it seriously; because, as I say, it seems to me that the effect of this quota is something which I do not believe was intended. The effect of it appears to be that it will deal a body blow to a very considerable number of people who are now just getting their feet under them in business. I know that was not intended.

Mr. ABBOTT: The effect of this quota is to put great pressure upon buyers to try to get textile imports from the United Kingdom. That is just what was intended. That is one of the main purposes as to why this quota was fixed on its present basis. I have tried to bring that out several times in the course of discussion on the bill.

It is very easy to get textiles in the United States. It is easy to see them. It is easy to see samples and, incidentally, prices have been very attractive. But under existing conditions we are extremely anxious that Canadian importers should see what the British have to offer, and should try to get their textiles in the United Kingdom, as they used to do in 1940. That is why these quotas have been fixed on the basis indicated, or that is largely the reason. We believe that it will now have the effect of putting great pressure upon importers, such as those to whom my hon. friend referred, to scrounge around to see if they cannot get British textiles instead of American. That is the purpose of putting the quota on this basis.

If they cannot get British textiles, then we shall have to see what happens—if they are essential. But we are anxious to have it work as I have suggested, and this has been designed and drawn on that basis, namely, that there should be a real incentive on the textile importers to find out what the British have to sell.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not disagreeing with that at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know my hon. friend is not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to make that clear, because my argument was not suggesting necessarily that a single extra dollar's worth of United States goods should come in. However, it was suggested that the basis upon which they are at present allocated seems to be working a great hardship on a great many people. But a different test—a test which the minister agrees will not be applied in the department where it is now being considered, and where it will be dealt with automatically—should be applied, and that is the test of keeping people in business. And that is the test which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is going to apply, and which I think the minister will agree is a very desirable test in this case.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is an important point. The British are trying to send us about ten times the yardage they sent us last year in cotton textiles. These quotas are, as I say, designed to enable them to do that. As I said to the committee the other night, there is no effective quota restriction for the time being so far as British textiles are concerned. There is an extremely effective one so far as United States textiles are concerned. Believe me, if I were a textiles importer, with these quotas as they are, I would be scrounging around pretty hard to try to find what British textiles I could get. And that is what we are trying to have them do.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to point out on the strength of the argument I make, that my information is that by reason of this system two manufacturers of overalls have had to close down due to the automatic application of this rule. I suggest that if they were in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, considering their position—and I am embarrassed when I make this observation; nevertheless I make it—if the Minister of Trade and Commerce were in the position of considering this industry which, presumably, he wishes to keep together, and not only keep it in existence but have it prosper we might reach a very different result indeed.

Mr. ABBOTT: This is the position of any textile importer today; any textile importer can get, first, 32 per cent of his United States imports last year. Second, he can get at least all that he was able to get in Canada and, third, all that he can get from non-scheduled countries, which means the United Kingdom, Italy, France and any of the other countries which produce textiles. That is open to every textile merchant in this country. I am told that Canadian buyer groups are now in the United Kingdom actually buying British textiles.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to be tiresome about this matter, but I wish to point out that all the minister has said sounds very well and I know it is all true. But it does not affect at all the cases I am talking about. It does not do a single thing for the small man just getting started, who has not been able to get in Canada what the minister has said he was entitled to, and should get in Canada. But the fact is that many of them were getting nothing. Therefore that man is now expected to carry on with the 32 per cent, and he cannot do so.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to ask the minister about the special cotton fabric used in the manufacture of automotive tires. I understand that this is one of the highest grades of cotton bought. I know they used to buy the very highest grade of Sea Island cotton and the very highest grade of long staple Egyptian cotton. What effect will these schedules have on these goods?

Mr. HOWE: They are using rayon now.

Mr. ABBOTT: The position at the present time is that interim permits have been issued to anyone requiring an amount from the United States until importers can explore the possibility of obtaining supplies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. ADAMSON: Does this material, this long staple cotton, come in as a twill or as a yarn, or does it come in as a fabric?
