REQUEST FOR STUDY OF LANGUAGE DIRECTIVES FOR AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

Since two employees of the Quebec air service have been suspended from duty because they dared speak French in a field where the federal government supports the use of the English language, since this suspension may seriously affect the whole air service in the province of Quebec and even disrupt it completely, given also the policy of the Quebec government which makes French the official language in Quebec, and since the federal government advocates bilingualism to the point of spending enormous sums of money for that purpose, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House study immediately the matter of languages in relation to the Quebec air service in order to take efficient measures as soon as possible to prevent such incidents from happening again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED MISUSE OF COMMITTEE SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The urgency exists in the fact that representative democracy has been severely challenged by some recent actions of this House. I refer to the deplorable and unscrupulous actions of a government minister in regard to Bill C-58, which was passed, unwillingly, through committee stage last night. While in the original committee there was a significant measure of consensus, the government, for its own self-interest, found fit to remove two of its own members from the committee and to compel others to vote against their well-known and studied opinions, with the result that the committee system became a charade, a rubber stamp of a minister and not a group for analysis and persuasion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without permitting the hon. member to go further, I can tell him now that this is not a proper subject for a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43.

PROPOSED DEBATE ON INTRODUCTION OF FRENCH INTO AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter, as my hon. colleague from Rimouski pointed out.

As, on December 8, 1975, two controllers at the Montreal Central Air Traffic Control were suspended for having used the French language in their communications by telephone with the ground, while working in jobs designated as bilingual, and as the Official Languages Act of Canada gives French the same status as English in all departments, agencies and institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané):

That this House now adjourn its proceedings to allow a debate on the steps to be taken to make the use of French a fact, as soon as possible, in air traffic control operations in all airports located in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF GROWTH IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT IN 1976

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the disturbing figures on unemployment today, which I am sure disturbs the Minister of Finance as well as the rest of us, can the minister give us a reassuring forecast of growth in the gross national product for 1976, or at least for the first quarter of 1976? I am sure his department must have such a figure. Would the minister give it to us?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman says, I share his concern about the level of unemployment in Canada. While there has been some indication in the results for the last quarters of 1975 that there has been a pickup in the economy, I think it is very difficult at the moment to make any accurate prediction with regard to the first quarter of 1976.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SHORT-TERM ECONOMIC FORECASTING UNIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister who will recall that a number of years ago the Economic Council of Canada recommended the establishment of an independent short-term economic forecasting unit, a suggestion to which I frequently lent my moral support. In view of the secrecy of the Department of Finance about providing the public with such forecasting information and the importance of the public having this, will the Prime Minister now consider somewhat more sympathetically than in the past the establishment of such independent short-term forecasting to serve Canadians as well as the Canadian government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the hon. member when he suggests secrecy beyond that which exists around the budget. Of course, when the minister presents the budget he indicates the economic basis on which he is making certain financial decisions but the hon. member knows budgets are periodic; they are not made from month to month. On the hon. members's suggestion for a new forecasting unit, I must point out that several units exist across the country in the private sector or in the universities. I hesitate at this time to engage increased expenditures to carry out the purpose intended by the hon. member.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIERS TO ACHIEVE NATIONAL SUPPORT FOR GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and I think the Prime Minister might effect some economy if he would take some initiative to bring these forecasting units together. They could be strengthened and money could be saved at the same time. In view of the economic uncertainty and the indication from several polls that a large number of Canadians question the effectiveness of the government's economic controls program although supporting its purpose, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday that some of the provinces at least are not prepared to support the anti-inflation program put to the provinces in general terms by the Prime Minister on October 13, is the Prime Minister considering inviting the provincial premiers to come to Ottawa before the end of the year in order to make a very determined effort to achieve national backing for the government's program which would reinforce public support and public confidence in the program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is possible that in the future we will have to have such a meeting of first ministers but I do not contemplate having one before Christmas. I certainly do not draw the same conclusion as the hon. member from the statement made by the Minister of Finance. We are going toward a consensus and there is general agreement in the provinces to support the federal program. Some provinces are availing themselves of the provisions under the act which allow them to go ahead on their own—through section 4(4) I believe—but the very fact that they are discussing it shows there is a strong desire to support the general federal approach to inflation.

MANPOWER

STEPS TO MATCH UNEMPLOYED WITH JOB VACANCIES—LENGTH OF ATTACHMENT TO LABOUR FORCE BEFORE BECOMING UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In order to assist the Minister of Finance with respect to the unemployment rate for 1976, I would point out that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration indicated that his personal estimate was something like 7 per cent. Be that as it may, and keeping in mind the unacceptable rates of unemployment we are faced with today and considering that the help wanted index shows there are some 75,000 employment vacancies, may I ask what steps the minister has taken to match those out of work and seeking work to employment vacancies, particularly amongst the 14 to 24 age group? Can the minister report any progress in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows the myriad programs directed to solving the prevailing problem, not the least of which are mobility, training, manpower counselling, job information centres, direct employment and many others which we have discussed at some length at various meetings.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, we must keep in mind that what the minister has just stated has not been effective for our use. Keeping in mind that the unemployment rate for those between the ages of 14 and 24 has increased some 13.3 per cent, can the minister tell the House whether a significant proportion of the 371,000 unemployed in this category have had a prolonged attachment to the labour force prior to becoming unemployed, or whether there is a noticeable trend showing that people in this group work for eight weeks, then draw unemployment insurance for one year? Is there this trend?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad, on a more appropriate occasion, to consider statistical trends after I have had the opportunity to look in more detail at the most recent information on which the hon. member bases his question.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO FUTURE OF PROGRAM

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? As the unemployment problem affecting our youth is extremely severe, does the government still intend to scrap OFY, as indicated, even though by next summer we shall see many university and high school students seeking employment?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member might wait for decisions announced in the House instead of indulging in speculation based on newspaper reports.

Mr. Trudeau: What do you advise? Tell us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As 734,000 people now are unemployed, which means a 40 per cent increase in year over year unemployment figures, how long will the government "hang tough", to quote the Prime Minister, before bringing in programs which will positively affect unemployment levels in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no announcements, particularly with respect to the budget, to make at this time.

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF FUNDAMENTAL ECONOMIC PROBLEM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the economy is operating much below capacity, some saying it is operating at only 82 per cent of capacity, is it still the view of the minister that the fundamental economic problem which we, as a country, face, is that people are trying to take more from the economy than the economy can produce?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that remains of fundamental concern, particularly as by adding to the productivity costs of Canadian enterprises we may, over a time, price ourselves not only out of foreign markets but out of Canadian markets as well. A very significant contributing factor to the high level of unemployment in this particular quarter has been the reduction in the level of activity of some of our principal foreign markets, notably, the United States, Europe and Japan. We have noted with interest and concern some indication of a revival in these particular markets and recognize that the Canadian economy, being so strongly export-based, will continue to face difficulty until there is a strong recovery on the part of some of our customers.

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER MAJOR CUTBACKS IN PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to a second minister, the President of the Treasury Board? My question has to do with reports to the effect that the minister contemplates cutbacks in federal programs. Has the minister calculated the net economic effect on the community of such cutbacks? By this I mean has he, or the government, subtracted the cost of unemployment insurance and welfare payments for newly unemployed civil servants from the savings to the treasury which would first accrue from cutbacks in those programs the minister is contemplating? If the government has made such studies, can the minister assure the House that it will think twice—

Mr. Stanfield: Sink twice!

Mr. Broadbent: —before embarking on such major cutback programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I made no public statement on the expenditure program for next year. When the program is ready, it will be announced through the usual channels.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUSPENSION OF TWO COMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES IN QUEBEC FOR USING FRENCH

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

In the context of problems raised by the use of French in air to ground communications, the Minister of Transport told the hon. member for Champlain in this House on November 21 that "the study in relation to the possible use of the French language in other areas of flight operations is going on" how then can the minister explain yesterday's suspension of two Quebec air service employees who presumably used the French language in their communications?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at this point in time there are obviously a number of infractions of our regulations. There was this recent incident of the use of the French language contrary to the rules. I understand that a few days ago there was an infraction in the refusal by an Anglophone to use French, although he is bilingual. In each case it is necessary for us to enforce the regulations as they stand. It is our objective to work in a quiet atmosphere of good sense and good will to allow for the use of the French language where reasonably possible, but we have to do so with the serious consideration of safety.

[Translation]

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS REGULATIONS TO GIVE EQUALITY TO FRENCH

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Considering the importance of the question just raised and the answer of the Minister of Transport, and considering the fact that at the last international conference of French-speaking parliamentarians the matter of the language used in air-ground communications was raised, and that the delegates committed themselves to promote in their respective Parliament the use of the French language, through motions or resolutions, my question is the following: Is the Minister of Transport prepared without reservation, to allow the use of French in Canada in the aeronautic field and to recommend that the regulations be amended in order that this language be used as much as English?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it would perhaps take a long statement to indicate to the hon. member the progress we have made and are making. I will send him that kind of long statement. We have had a number of studies and are having more. We have constant contact between our safety officials and the various people in all parts of the country involved in air traffic and air traffic control with the object of determining what procedures are necessary in order that further steps can be taken with regard to safety to allow the use of the French language and the English language in air travel and air communication.

[Translation]

SUSPENSION OF TWO COMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES IN QUEBEC FOR USING FRENCH

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a last supplementary question.

The Minister of Transport talks about security, but considering that the two employees dismissed yesterday without pay were two French-speaking employees talking between themselves over the telephone, that it was not a ground-to-air conversation but a ground-to-ground telephone conversation, and that those civil servants were dismissed without pay, how can the minister refuse to admit that this is not only a glaring injustice but also an abysmal absurdity as regards security?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will double-check the circumstances to determine whether a rule was offended. If so, then one understands that these rules in this very important area must be adhered to. It is only if we see that the rules can be changed that a different practice can be followed. If there was no infraction, no failure to abide by the rules, the matter would be on a different basis; I will look into that part of it.

POSSIBILITY MR. ARPIN WILL SUCCEED MR. McLEISH AS DIRECTOR GENERAL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Will he inform the House whether Mr. Peter Arpin, the Quebec administrator of aviation, will be succeeding Mr. McLeish as director general of aviation for that particular segment of his department?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will double-check on any future possibility. At the moment, I know of no such change.

EFFECT ON SAFETY OF BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question about this very important matter of language rights and air-ground communication. Are the minister and his department convinced that the use of two official languages in air-ground communication will be beneficial to airline safety?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question really is what procedures are required in order to ensure that safety can be preserved. We believe that the safety elements have been satisfied in the steps we have taken so far, which was to allow the French language in air to control tower communications in the five specific airports for visual flights. Indeed, we have adopted some new procedures to further ensure safety. I am satisfied with that. We are looking at the question and have general agreement on all sides that advisory communication should be available in both languages throughout the province of Quebec. The more delicate questions of instrument flight and extending French language use to visual flight at other airports are the subject of ongoing discussions between our safety people and the persons using the service who will be primarily affected.

An hon. Member: You will get somebody killed, eventually.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF BUDGETARY DEFICIT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): A question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Taking into account seasonal patterns of expenditure and revenue, Fry, Mills and Spence Limited has predicted a budgetary deficit of at least $6.5 billion and more likely $7.5 billion. In response to questions in the House, the minister has repeatedly refused to clarify the question of the budgetary deficit for the present fiscal year without explaining the reason for his refusal. Is the hon. gentleman now in a position to tell us whether he still finds the budgetary deficit of between $5 billion and $6 billion cited in the budget of June 23 a probable figure for the current fiscal year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The figure referred to is the figure for the cash requirement.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF SOUTH AFRICAN PLANT PRODUCING GASOLINE FROM COAL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A short time ago the minister of economic affairs for South Africa announced that the South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation known as SASOL, intends to build a second plant to produce gasoline, diesoline and other petroleum products from coal. Each day, the original plant, the only one of its kind in the world, crushes 2,200 tons of coal and each hour nine million cubic feet of gas is produced. Bearing in mind our own high unemployment rate, the high level of our coal reserves and our need for new energy sources, may I ask whether the minister has given any thought to visiting South Africa to examine this process in the hope that a similar coal-to-gasoline project might be established in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I do not think it will be possible for me to visit South Africa in the near future but I am discussing this question with my officials and I hope we shall be able to send an expert to South Africa to check into the process the hon. member has described.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL THAT PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION BE GIVEN CHOICE BETWEEN DIPLOMACY AND TERRORISM

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering that those who have an interest in peace and justice in the Middle East have a duty to demand that the PLO make a clear choice between diplomacy at the United Nations and terrorism, will Canada insist at the UN or elsewhere that in order to aid negotiation the PLO undertake at the level of Mr. Arafat a binding renunciation of terrorism and at the same time recognize Israel's right to exist?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not as a government recognized the PLO as a representative of the Palestinian people. I have already stated at the United Nations that these conditions ought to be met by any group wishing to participate in any negotiations, namely that terrorism be abandoned and that the right of Israel to exist as a state be fully respected. This has been insisted upon, but I would add that up to the present time we have not recognized the PLO as a representative of the Palestinian people for reasons which have already been made known to the House.

SUGGESTED RENUNCIATION OF TERRORISM BY PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION BEFORE REPRESENTATIVES ADMITTED TO CANADA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): In the light of the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I ask whether Canada will insist that this renunciation and this recognition become sine qua non conditions which must be met before PLO representatives can be admitted to this country as delegates to any UN conference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. That would mean an importation of matters into our immigration entrance requirements which have not hitherto been considered by any government, and I hope will never be.

● (1430)

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister not consider that one should go beyond the simple condemnation of violence? In this particular case, is the minister not prepared to set as Canada's posture in the future conditions that he has already admitted are reasonable?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will send the statement that I made at the United Nations to the hon. member so that he will see that before the general assembly Canada took a position on the question of both violence and terrorism as a method of gaining political objectives, a method we condemn. Of course, the importance we attach to the recognition of the state of Israel is a fundamental cornerstone of our policy.

With respect to the admission of individuals to Canada, my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has already stated that, even though the PLO is a prohibited organization under Canadian law, members of the PLO would be admitted to Canada under ministerial permit if invited by a reputable Canadian organization or to attend United Nations conferences. But in no case—and obviously this would be applied across the board—would any individual be admitted to Canada who has a record of terrorism. This certainly meets the point the hon. member has been making.

Oral Questions

AIR CANADA

ESTEY REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the report of Mr. Justice Estey makes reference to practices of a type that would be discouraged or prohibited in other industries and illustrates what has been occurring in commercial airlines, making specific mention of kickbacks, and so forth, due to the necessity of competing in the travel business, would the minister reconsider his recent statement that the airline, meaning Air Canada, would be made to act more like other commercial airlines?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. member may rather be referring to restrictive practices which it would be better to see removed rather than the contrary, since some of the consequences that he points to are the result of international arrangements rather than national ones.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Justice Estey's report also calls for tighter internal and external scrutiny of Crown corporations. In view of the fact that the government has effectively curtailed operations of the Standing Committee on Transportation for the past three or four years, would the minister assure the House that henceforth the annual reports of Canadian National and Air Canada will be presented to parliament and subsequently referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation for scrutiny in order to abide by Mr. Justice Estey's recommendations?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in this area, as in all others having to do with transportation policy, I would be delighted to see the Standing Committee on Transport play a full role. This has been our practice with regard to other major areas and it is the case here, too.

ESTEY REPORT—POSSIBLE PUBLICATION OF CONFIDENTIAL SECTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the part of Mr. Justice Estey's report that the minister considers confidential, I notice the press quoted the minister as saying that the confidential report contains nothing of major public interest. If the minister is quoted correctly, would he now agree that the co-called confidential report that he said has no major item of public interest in it should be made public and made available to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that particular remark was in answer to a question concerning the impact of the report on a variety of decisions in which we may take an interest in this House. That is as far as I want to go in regard to making any reference to the content of the report. The report is confidential because the commissioner made it so.

POST OFFICE

DATE OF SUBMISSION OF SETTLEMENT WITH POSTAL UNION TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—CONTINGENCY PLAN IF SETTLEMENT REJECTED

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Since it is about a week since the mail workers returned to work and it is considerably longer than that time since the Anti-Inflation Board have known of the government's final wage offer, would the minister inform the House when the minister or minister's officials submitted the draft contract arrangements to the Anti-Inflation Board, and can he tell us when we can expect a decision?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the ratified collective agreement is before the Anti-Inflation Board. I must plead ignorance to the precise day, having left it up to my officials. I have not heard yet from the Anti-Inflation Board as to whether it meets with their approval or disapproval or whether there is any particular area of clarification needed by the board. I am naturally waiting anxiously for their decision. In the meantime, we are proceeding as if the collective agreement were in force and are paying the wages outlined in the proposed new collective agreement.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Anti-Inflation Board has had the government's final wage offer for some considerable time, and since it now appears as if any delay is the result of a split between the board as to whether or not to ratify the contract—and hence my question is not entirely hypothetical—what contingency plans does the minister have in the event that the Anti-Inflation Board offers his contract with the postal workers as a sacrifice on the altar of restraint?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have said on numerous occasions that we have tried to negotiate collective agreement within the spirit of the guidelines. I have said further that I am prepared to speak on behalf of the union if such is necessary in the event that there are areas that need to be clarified. As to what would happen if theoretically the collective agreement were rejected by the Anti-Inflation Board I cannot say until I have had an opportunity of studying the regulations that are probably now being set up, or which will be set up the moment that the law comes into existence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDONESIA—SUGGESTED CANCELLATION OF ASSISTANCE IN PULP AND PAPER PROJECT IN VIEW OF INVASION OF TIMOR

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and arises from recent announcements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the government is interested in assisting in a pulp and paper complex in Indonesia, through a third world project partnership agreement between France and Canada. In view of the recent invasion by Indonesia of Portuguese Timor and of the apparent corrupt and barbaric regime of President Suharto, dictator of Indonesia, will the Canadian government now abandon such plans and keep our money at home for better purposes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not share the hon. member's premise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Ten o'clock.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SMALL COMMUNITIES DENIED HOME DELIVERY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that residents of cities have their mail delivered to their doorsteps while we in smaller communities in western Canada have to pay post office box rental and pick up our own mail, does the Postmaster General not now think it is time to discontinue this discrimination?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me advance notice of his question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We are lucky to get any mail.

Mr. Mackasey: Hon. members opposite think it funny that there is at least one gentleman in their ranks. There are criteria making a distinction as to whether mail is to be delivered door to door or picked up. That criteria depends on whether the population of the community varied anywhere from 2,000 to 5,000, and the rate growth. Until it becomes more economical to deliver door-to-door, we ask the people to pick up their mail at general delivery or, preferably if they have a box, to use their own mailboxes and pick up their own mail at their convenience.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK FOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—ALLEGED PROVINCIAL COUNTER PROPOSAL

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the announcement by the premier of New Brunswick before the Legislative Assembly of a federal counter-proposition concerning an agreement on highways, in reply to a proposition made by the New Brunswick government, which apparently was unacceptable to the federal government, could the minister check with his officials whether that counter-proposition really has his approbation, or whether it simply is a working document for his officials?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I will surely check into that statement the New Brunswick premier made yesterday before the assembly and I will try to communicate with the hon. member to give him full details on the point he raised. I hope I will be able to give him very helpful information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTEST AGAINST PROPOSED PIGGYBACK TERMINAL IN WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the city of Winnipeg sent a telegram to the federal Cabinet requesting it to rescind an order in council allowing a CNR piggyback terminal to be located in southwest Winnipeg adjacent to residential areas proposed and existing. Would the government House leader indicate whether any action has been taken by the government to date in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure why the question was referred to me but, at any rate, I will make inquiries.

AGRICULTURE

REDUCTION IN SUBSIDY TO INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION FOR CREAM PRODUCERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture announced on November 4 a decrease in the subsidy payments to industrial milk producers based on a production increase of 11 per cent, and in view of the fact that cream producers have actually had a reduction in production, does the minister not feel that to deal fairly and equitably with the cream producers their situation should be acted on separately?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, they are all in the cost-sharing program. I want to make it clear that I did not decrease the subsidy as announced last April. We are still paying the same amount of money as we said we would because it is based on a certain amount of production. We are investigating the suggestion made by the hon. member about cream producers to determine whether anything can or should be done.

HEALTH

MERCURY POISONING IN TESTING OF CREE INDIANS IN QUEBEC—CO-OPERATION WITH OTHER FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the House exactly when his department will begin to conduct mercury tests on Cree Indians in Quebec, and also assure us that these tests will be extensive?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is getting behind the latest developments in this field. Tests have been administered to the Indians of northern Quebec, in the Mistassini area. Certain of these have been examined by the Montreal Neurological Institute, which is certainly one of the most famous institutions in Canada, and further tests are being administered to the Indians of this area, in co-operation with the Quebec government to check if there is higher contamination than the one which we are aware of at the present time.

[English]

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell us what new action he is taking to coordinate attacks on mercury poisoning and whether his department was involved in a federal-provincial meeting held recently by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and provincial authorities?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I shall refer the hon. member to a press release which has been released jointly by the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and myself in which we stated all the measures which were taken by the federal government in this respect over the last few months. This report was made available to all hon. members. In addition, I participated at a joint meeting with my two colleagues and three provincial ministers from the Ontario government to set up a committee at the senior officials' level, at the assistant deputy ministers' level between our three federal departments and the three provincial departments so as to ensure an efficient coordination of our action in this area.

TRANSPORT

ANNOUNCEMENT BY BRITISH COLUMBIA OF IMPROVEMENTS IN FACILITIES—EXTENT OF FEDERAL INVOLVEMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and refers to recent announcements by Mr. Gary Louck, a minister of the British Columbia government. Since the commitment by that government to upgrade the construction of new roads, rail and port facilities in central-northern British Columbia to the tune of $1 billion, and since this program includes innovation to the national railway and port systems, will the minister enlighten the House as to what extent his or any other department of the government is in accord with these announcements, and what federal plans there are in respect of this?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by Mr. Louck is very misleading, indeed, in appearing to suggest that any firm decisions or fundamental actions have taken place. There have been some preliminary discussions concerning a number of the matters to which Mr. Louck referred, but it is not even clear at this point whether the cost to remove the coal, to which he refers, will be greater or lesser than the value of that coal at present or foreseeable market prices. Environmental studies have barely begun and are nowhere nearly advanced to the point of a decision. In addition, the Indian claims question has not been dealt with. Indeed, the reference to the acceptance of the Neptune Terminals facility in Prince Rupert is completely premature since at this moment there is only a preliminary feasibility study being conducted on the Neptune Terminal, and there has been no further action than that so far.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, since any major development in the prime industrial or resource scene in central and northern British Columbia would depend on federal participation, would the minister report to the House today on any events that may have occurred since the signing of the umbrella agreement in March 1974 that might have encouraged the provincial government to make these announcements, and are there any studies going on that may bring these plans to fruition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That seems to me to cover much too great an area for the question period.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID SETTLEMENT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): In the absence of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious economic effect on communities of the strikes in the pulp and paper industry, will the Prime Minister provide leadership by having senior officials of the Department of Labour bring the two parties to the dispute back to the bargaining table, where good faith is not being shown by the industry under the guise of a misinterpretation of the anti-inflation legislation guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these strikes are giving concern to a great number of people, including several members on this side, and for that reason we have tried to make it clear that the guidelines should not serve as a pretext to an employer or employees to avoid free collective bargaining. As to having the Minister of Labour bring the parties together, Mr. Speaker, this would seem an impossible step to take in an issue which is under the jurisdiction of provincial labour departments.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this strike affects the federal government, not only because of a loss of one of our major exports but in that negotiations are not localized to any particular province, but affect Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and some of the western provinces, could an exception be made in providing the facilities of our senior officials in the Department of Labour to entice, if necessary, the parties back to the bargaining table?

Mr. Trudeau: Surely, Mr. Speaker, even in the circumstances outlined by the hon. member one cannot change the provisions of the BNA Act which state that certain areas of labour and industrial relations are under provincial jurisdiction.

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED INTEREST FREE FEDERAL LOAN FOR FINANCING GAMES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

The Quebec minister responsible for the Olympic Games gave a press conference recently and it seems he was not aware that the federal government could grant interest free loans. Would the minister tell the House whether the federal government could do within Canada what it does already for many foreign countries, namely grant interest free loans?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are no such things as interest free loans. When we grant loans, the government itself has to borrow the money from the taxpayers. If the interest is not paid by the beneficiary, it is paid by the taxpayers generally. I do not know if that is what the hon. member advocates: a loan to the Olympic Games that would be paid back by the Canadian taxpayers generally. If so, he should say so clearly.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary.

The explanation which has just been given by the Prime Minister is similar to that of Mr. Goldbloom, but as it happens I do not accept it. Does the Prime Minister suggest that this money must be borrowed to be lent interest free? If so, could he tell the House where the government is now borrowing money to lend it interest free to foreign countries?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can merely give an example. Last month, the Canadian government borrowed through Canada saving bonds a considerable amount on which it had to pay interest of about 9¼ per cent.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS IN CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On November 27 and again on December 3 I posed questions to the minister with regard to lay-offs of Canadian National Railways personnel in the Atlantic region, with particular reference to Cape Breton. At that time I asked if he would approach CNR and have them declare a moratorium on further lay-offs. Is the minister in a position to provide a report to the House today as a result of his discussions with CNR?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I can only say that CNR has indeed laid off employees in various parts of the country when the work and the volume of traffic have justified it. I will not try to second guess CN on that.

COMMUNICATIONS

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BELL CANADA TO PROVIDE SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since Bell Canada has been denying for six months any kind of phone service to an increasing number of new householders on the southern shore of the St. Lawrence in Montreal and since the company put down that denial to a lack of manpower, would the minister ask the president of the Canadian Transport Commission to inquire of that company and make it formally undertake to provide that service within a reasonable time?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring that request to the attention of the Minister of Communications.

POST OFFICE

REASON FOR DELAY IN SUPPLYING MAIL BOXES TO FORT MACLEOD

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question put by the hon. member for Lethbridge to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that the postmaster in Fort Macleod made application for a block of new post office boxes over two years ago, and residents of Fort Macleod not only cannot have their mail delivered but cannot even rent a post office box, would the Postmaster General give immediate consideration to the request made by the postmaster in Fort Macleod in view of the fact that Fort Macleod is experiencing rapid growth?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that Fort Macleod is experiencing rapid growth and in recognition of that fact I will find out why it is taking so long to supply extra mail boxes. It could be that the building needs expansion to accommodate them. But I will report back to the hon. gentleman tomorrow.

COMPREHENSIVE MILK MARKETING PLAN—INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT AMENDED TO PERMIT INCREASED CHEESE IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and relates to his November 4 statement regarding the dairy industry. In light of the fact that the agreement signed by both federal and provincial agencies since 1971 commonly called the Comprehensive Milk Marketing Plan, was expressly designed to provide a balance between the domestic supply of butterfat and Canadian market requirements for butterfat in manufactured dairy products, can the minister say whether, before he announced last month the 100 per cent increase in cheese imports, he had the signed agreement amended by all the original parties to the agreement or their successors?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the agreement for the increase in the cheese quota is under discussion. We have not allowed any increase as of this time. We are reviewing the whole situation at present and there is some dispute as to whether or not we have followed the correct consultative process. Some of my people say we have, some dairy producers say we have not.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the latter part of the minister's answer. I wonder if I can ask him, by way of a supplementary, if at any time during the current dairy year he or representatives of the federal government notified the signatories to the Comprehensive Milk Marketing Plan agreement that he wanted to change the definition contained in the agreement as to what constitutes Canada's industrial milk requirements.

Mr. Whelan: We had many discussions with them. I am not sure whether or not that was discussed, but I am sure that they knew and were well aware of the increased importation into Canada of industrial cheeses at that time. They made strong representations against this and they are making strong representations against this at present. We are reconsidering the whole situation.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED SUSPENSION OF MOBILITY GRANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In the light of the fact that unemployment figures show a heavy concentration of unemployment in certain regions in Canada while other regions are in need of workers, can the minister confirm or deny whether manpower mobility grants which enable Canadians to move from areas of high unemployment to areas of high employment activity have been suspended as of December 8?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. We have been improving our information services concerning local, regional and national job vacancies through the many measures we have been taking. The mobility grant activity has increased exponentially. I make no secret of that fact that by virtue of that increased activity we are matching our budgetary allocation for this year. There has been no suspension of mobility grants—we are making some modification but there is no suspension.

Mr. Epp: In view of the answer given by the minister, may I ask then if he is saying there will be no further mobility grants made in this fiscal year due to budgetary restrictions?

Mr. Andras: I said precisely the opposite. There is no suspension. We are matching our budget and therefore modifying it in some ways to make sure it is going to those who obviously need it most and are best able to use it, but there is no suspension.

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—ESTIMATED DATE OF COMPLETION—POSSIBILITY DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS MADE IMMEDIATELY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wonder if he can now give me the information I sought on Friday with regard to the estimated cost of completing the Interprovincial pipeline extension east into Quebec, the estimated date of completion and an estimate of whether or not the government of Canada will have to make a deficiency payment or a subsidy to support that line from its inception in view of the higher cost. Can the minister give that information or has he as much difficulty in foreseeing the immediate future as the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made some inquiries with respect to the hon. member's question. It appears that the delays last week have not yet been quantified in terms of what they might add to the total cost of the line. The best information I have received is that it is not likely to be significant in the over-all. For these reasons, therefore, I cannot answer the other questions put to me by the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADVANCE DISTRIBUTION OF SUPPLY BILL

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members are aware of the fact that today is the last allotted day in the last trimester and accordingly at 9.45 this evening I will interrupt proceedings to put the question necessary to decide on the motion which is the subject matter of the debate today. Hon. members will also recall that last spring on the last allotted day when it was necessary to go into the business of supply, the passage through all the stages of the supply bill, we were able to accommodate members of the House by distributing in advance of the ten o'clock time—I think it was at 8 p.m.—the actual supply bill, which I think alleviated some of the concern and discontent hon. members had expressed earlier that they would be handed the bill and then asked to vote upon it moments later. There seems to be acceptance of that procedure, certainly by the government, and by all hon. members of the House, so I am happy to report that it will be possible to repeat that procedure this evening. Hon. members can expect to receive copies of the supply bill at eight o'clock.

● (1500)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), I inadvertently indicated that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Miss Campbell) had made representations in connection with Riverport. I was wrong in that. The representations made by the parliamentary secretary had to do with three Customs ports in her particular riding, and I would like the record to show that.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today I directed a question to the government House leader, who I understand is also President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), in connection with a telegram from the city of Winnipeg asking him to rescind a certain order in council. The minister suggested that he was not the minister to whom the question should be directed. Could the minister please advise me which minister should answer this question?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I said that I would inquire, and that I will do. Perhaps the hon. member will ask the question tomorrow, if it should be directed to another minister.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege and it relates to my attempt to put forward earlier today a motion under Standing Order 43. I submit that it was not that I had any grievance about the differences which take place amongst members of the committee but, rather, that I think there is something inherent in what took place which threatens the whole committee system; that is, that when a question came before the members of the committee, four members from the government side were removed from the committee studying Bill C-58. It was well known that many other members had some very serious questions. I simply suggest that as long as a ministry of the government so enforces, unilaterally, its position on the committee, it really makes a charade of the whole committee system, and perhaps the matter ought to be reviewed and studied in terms of committees and how they operate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair had no intention of restricting the opportunity of the hon. member to express the very grave concern which he has now expressed rather adequately on a question of privilege.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CIVILIAN PERSONNEL—TERMINATION OF SERVICE

Question No. 3,138—Mr. McKinnon:

How many civilian personnel, in addition to civilian communicators have had their services terminated, or have been given notice of termination as a fiscal economy by the Department of National Defence in the period April 1, 1975 to October 1, 1975?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): In addition to five communicators, 169 civilian personnel in other classifications have been issued with a notice of termination as a fiscal economy between April 1 and October 1, 1975. Seventy-three of these employees have either been placed in alternate employment in the Public Service, have proceeded on superannuation or have accepted employment outside the Public Service. Efforts to place the other employees scheduled for lay-off in alternate employment will be continued.

COST OF MILITARY SALES PROMOTION

Question No. 3,238—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. On what date was the International Defence Programs Branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce established?

2. What is the number of full-time employees in the Branch?

3. How many personnel of the Branch or of other departments are stationed abroad for the purpose of aiding sales of Canadian military equipment?

4. What is the estimated cost to the government in the promotion of sales of military equipment referred to in the answer to Question No. 2,394?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. March 28, 1969.

2. Twenty-one officers and nine support staff as of October 15, 1975.

3. No Defence Programs Branch personnel are now stationed abroad. A Departmental organization change in 1974 transferred the functions and responsibilities formerly carried out by Branch officers abroad to the Trade Commissioner Service. Branch personnel stationed abroad were integrated into and became part of the Trade Commissioner Service. Trade Commissioners abroad aid in the sale of Canadian military equipment in the same manner as they aid in the sale of any other Canadian export commodity.

4. One of the functions of the Defence Programs Branch in carrying out the Departmental Trade/Industrial Program is to assist in the promotion of export sales of defence and defence related equipment. In addition, the Branch provides Headquarters and administrative staff support for Canadian participation in the defence industrial aspects of Canada's collective defence research, development and production arrangements which include NATO RDP activities, Canada/U.S. Development and Production Sharing activities and activities related to bilateral agreements between Canada and United Kingdom, France, Germany, Netherlands, Italy and Sweden and such other agreements as might be negotiated from time to time. The Branch formerly maintained officers at selected posts abroad to assist in these functions. It is, however, not possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy, that portion of Branch resources which would have been devoted solely to the promotion of sales of military equipment which would be included in export sales referred to in the reply to Question 2394.

SENIOR CITIZENS HOUSING—LAC-ETCHEMIN, QUEBEC

Question No. 3,251—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation granted a loan to the Municipality of Lac-Etchemin, Quebec, or to its Housing Corporation for the building of low cost housing for the retired and, if so (a) what was the amount involved (b) at what rate of interest (c) for how long (d) under what terms of reimbursement?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised that the following applies with respect to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: In December 1973, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved a loan which Quebec Housing Corporation was proposing to make to the Municipal Housing Bureau of Lac-Etchemin, to finance the construction of a housing project for senior citizens. (a) The amount of the loan approved is $384,400; (b) The interest rate is 8 per cent, calculated half-yearly, not in advance; (c) The term of the loan is 50 years; (d) Quebec Housing Corporation makes annual payments of principal and interest, under the above terms, on its loan from CMHC. The Municipal Housing Bureau makes monthly payments of principal and interest, under the above terms, on its loan from Quebec Housing Corporation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—DELETION OF CIVILIAN POSITIONS AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 3,291—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent civilian positions at CFB Gagetown are being deleted from the plan of organization within the next year?

2. What is the total annual payment in salaries for such positions?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. At present 18 positions in the General Services Group—Food Services—Level 2 (GS FOS 2) have been identified and are scheduled for deletion. One of these positions is not filled at the present time. In addition another sixteen positions, the classification of which have not been identified are being scheduled for deletion within the next year.

2. The annual payment in salary for the 18 GS FOS 2 positions is $108,954 if these positions are filled. The annual payment for the other 16 positions will not be known until the positions scheduled for deletion have been identified.

PANARCTIC OILS LTD —POTENTIAL REQUIREMENT FOR ICE BREAKING TANKERS

Question No. 3,300—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware of the statements in the press attributed to the President of Panarctic Oil during the week of October 20 to 24, 1975 indicating the possibility that Panarctic Oil will purchase three Scandanavian crude oil tankers for transport of Arctic oil to market should that be feasible?

2. Is the Minister aware of the extent of participation in Panarctic Oil by the government and its agents and, if so, to what extent is this participation?

3. Has the Minister examined the implications of going outside Canada for such vessels in terms of the long-term viability and health of the Canadian ship-building industry and trade balance and (a) if so, what conclusions have been reached (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Globe and Mail did carry a story, on October 22, which described a Panarctic Oils Ltd. oil discovery on Cameron Island. This story discussed briefly the problem of transporting the oil to market and mentioned the possibility of a Scandinavian shipbuilder supplying a suitable ship.

2. The government owns 45 per cent of the issued common stock of Panarctic Oils Limited.

3. The Advisory Committee on Industrial Benefits from Natural Resource Development will be meeting with Panarctic Oils Ltd., in the immediate future, to discuss the implications of the announced oil discovery, including the marine transportation implications. In response to question (b) conclusions have not been reached because the discussions with Panarctic Oils Ltd. have not yet taken place.

INTEGRATED SCHOOL PROJECT—ENOCH BAND

Question No. 3,482—Mr. Schellenberger:

Can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development give the (a) status of negotiations with regard to the integrated school project to be built for the Enoch Band and surrounding district in Alberta (b) expected date of (i) final approval (ii) beginning of construction?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Enoch Band have offered to provide the land on a lease basis free of charge. Parkland County has agreed to the project and so has the Enoch Band; however, because the classrooms are required at the east end of the county and there is a surplus of classrooms at the west end of the County; and because of a lack of justification for the seats required, the Provincial Government is not prepared to proceed with the project at this time. Negotiations are continuing with the County and a student survey is being conducted. No date of final approval can be predicted; however it is anticipated that no decision will be reached prior to February.

PUBLIC SERVICE LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 3,491—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Approximately what percentage of the Public Service has taken language training in (a) English (b) French?

2. What is the average length of time such employees have spent away from their regular job on language training?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. While figures are available in terms of total enrolments, statistically valid percentages of public servants on language training are not available in the form requested because: (a) Many of the course are cyclical in nature, with the carryover of students from year to year. (b) Many courses are part-time or special courses, operated privately or at the departmental level and also with carryovers into other years. Valid statistics (without carry-overs from year to year) are available only for continuous/intensive courses. From the inception of continuous/intensive courses in September 1973 to October, 1975, the following are the numbers involved: Courses in French, 6,820; Courses in English, 801; Total: 7,621.

NOTE: In 1974, there were 258,590 employees under the Public Service Employment Act.

2. The average length of time spent by public servants on continuous/intensive language courses is six months.

EXPORTS OF FOREST PRODUCTS

Is the government aware of the cost in 1974 of shipping by sea Canadian forest products to other countries and (a) if so, what was it (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The government has no official data or costs for 1974 of shipping by sea Canadian forest products to other countries. Details of shipping contracts are not required to be reported to any regulatory or statistical agency.

RCMP FILE "FEATHERBED"

Question No. 3,522—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the RCMP have a file commonly referred to as "Featherbed" or did it ever have such a file and, if so (a) in what location is the file (b) did the RCMP or anyone on their behalf give a copy of the file and its contents to any agency in the United States or elsewhere including the CIA or FBI?

2. What is the (a) name (b) job designation (c) address of the individual described in the file?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): As part of their responsibility for law enforcement, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police retains information in their records dealing with both criminal and security matters. The Policy of the RCMP is to preserve the confidentiality of their records, and therefore do not divulge information concerning either the record system or its contents.

NFB MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTIONS—SPONSORED FILM PROGRAM

Question No. 3,562—Mr. Friesen:

1. Does the government expect to implement the statement of intention by the Secretary of State on July 4, 1972, that "The National Film Board will no longer be the exclusive recipient of Government commissions; it will now have to compete with private producers for all film contracts awarded by a federal department or agency" and, if so, on what date?

2. In 1973-74, what was the total number of original motion pictures (a) produced by NFB for either their own programmes or for departments or agencies (b) contracted out by NFB to private Canadian producers?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): 1. The government has already given effect to its policy of contracting out an increasing share of its sponsored films requirement to the private sector, through the National Film Board. The record speaks for itself: Prior to 1972 the private sector received a maximum 8 per cent of the total NFB sponsored film program. This was worth approximately $144,000 during fiscal year 1970-71. By the end of fiscal year 1974-75, the value of contracts to the private sector rose from $144,000 to approximately $1.6 million representing about 50 per cent of the total sponsored film program. In other words, during this period, the share to the private sector increased from 8 per cent to 50 per cent. The extent to which the NFB will compete with the private sector is the subject of current review and consultation with film industry representatives.

2. Please refer to NFB Annual Report 1973-74, pages 36 to 51 inclusive.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—RETENTION OF LAWYERS IN VICTORIA CONSTITUENCY

2. By year, what was the total amount paid to each?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

*ALLEGED CREATION OF GROUP OF SEVEN ECONOMIC ADVISORS BY CABINET—NUMBER AND COST OF MEETINGS

Question No. 2,124—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the Prime Minister's Group of Seven Economic Advisory Council, chaired by Albert Breton, been disbanded and, if so, on what date were they notified that their services would no longer be required?

2. How many meetings were held by the Group and what was the total remuneration and expenses paid to each member of the Group?

3. Have any of the Group been retained in the past month by the Prime Ministers Office or have been advised that their services may be used by the Prime Minister's Office in the future?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, 1. The Prime Minister's Office has never established any formal economic advisory group. Dr. Albert Breton has acted as an economic consultant to the Principal Secretary, and on four occasions in late 1974 and early 1975 individuals in the economic field practising outside of the government's employ met with Dr. Breton for discussions with the Principal Secretary of Their views on events of economic concern to the private sector.

2. Four meetings were held and expenses paid in connection for these meetings were $1,962.29. No remuneration was paid, but each received an honorarium in the amount of $100 for each meeting.

3. No retainer has existed in respect to these particular meetings, but Mr. Breton has been retained at $200 per diem (as required) as an economic consultant in the Prime Minister's Office since September 16, 1974 to date.

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining questions allowed to stand?

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT MISMANAGEMENT OF ECONOMY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond) moved:

That this House considers the government has lacked foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of Canada and should be blamed for its failure to fulfil its promise of a fair and just society and to prevent the deterioration of the social climate, and its failure to stop the alarming increase in unemployment, to introduce measures other than price and wage control, to prevent the actual rate of inflation and to make loans available to the provinces at an interest rate not exceeding the cost of administration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 58(4)(a), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), the following motion:

That this House considers the government has lacked foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of Canada and should be blamed for its failure to fulfil its promise of a fair and just society and to prevent the deterioration of the social climate, and its failure to stop the alarming increase in unemployment, to introduce measures other than price and wage control, to prevent the actual rate of inflation and to make loans available to the provinces at an interest rate not exceeding the cost of administration.

If I move such a motion today in this House it is because of circumstances forcing us to meet our responsibilities as parliamentarians. Elected representatives must remind this government of its lack of foresight in the administration of the country and warn it against serious consequences for the Canadian nation if it continues to show an attitude so unrealistic in its action. What I generally regret is that in recent years this government did not try harder to establish a preventive policy concerning current economic and social problems and rather let them grow to such a point that today's situation is almost unbearable.

I do not intend right now, Mr. Speaker, to discuss in every detail all the major points raised by a motion like the one I move today. I shall mention only the principles in question and draw the attention of the government to the present situation and possible solutions, leaving it to my colleagues to study the situation further in the analysis they will make following my comments.

When I say that a government must show some leadership, I mean that it must, first of all, set the example as concerns business, integrity, common sense, balance and fairness. It is its first duty if it really wishes to create among the people the feeling of confidence and respect necessary to the strength and the stability of a democracy.

But for too long this government has tolerated—I did say tolerated—contempt for government institutions, the declared intent of anyone to destroy our democratic system; this government has tolerated for too long record breaking deficits in its estimates and its external trade without reacting vigorously; for too long also inflation and unemployment have grown without being stopped and, to top it all off, we note a 100 per cent jump in federal government spending over the last five years. Then, where is the example set by this government in all this? Where is the example of an authority really wishing to create that confidence necessary for the motivation of Canadians. This is the kind of leadership not shown by those who have governed this country for the last few years. On top of this lack of foresight and leadership, another negative factor adds to the record of the present government and it is the anti-democratic way to govern by procuration by avoiding this House as much as possible. During the sixties, the government decided to amend the rules and defer to standing committees several bills then considered in the House. One major result of those transfers was that expenditures were no longer examined by Parliament but by a committee where the minister responsible did not have to attend and where the same officials who worked up the expenditures have drafted the answers. The questions on policy issues put to the absent minister can be raised in the House, but the member is then referred to the committee without avail. Such a procedure does away with discussion and ignores democracy, but it does not reassure the citizen and give him confidence in his government.

In other respects, and this is not much better, the government has grown into the habit of having a legislation passed by the House reserving itself full discretion in making the regulations proceeding from it.

In any event, those regulations stemming from the bill may be more important than the bill itself, but the House would have no say in them. That drawback was actually aptly pointed at in the past few months by the Mining Association of Canada on page 6 of the brief on the anti-inflation program they submitted to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I quote:

You still have no idea of the contents of the regulations on Bill C-73, and yet the government will derive from them every power they will use in their fight to curb inflation. We are therefore concerned that those regulations will be enacted pursuant to an order in council without the assent of Parliament. Although that procedure is technically right, we believe it is an objectionable practice in a democratic society, and should therefore be avoided inasmuch as possible. That practice seriously limits the powers of our committee and of citizens in general to assess government intentions.

That way of ruling by proxy, Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly makes people sceptical with respect to government management, and in my opinion, it means ignoring one's responsibilities and refusing to assume a real leadership.

On the other hand, the government stands on no firm grounds not only as far as political philosophy is concerned, but also with respect to action. They failed to anticipate inflation, much to the detriment of most people, since in the past three years 65 per cent of inflation has concentrated on housing, food and energy. Since it is a sector which relates to essential and basic needs, most citizens are therefore hit and cannot help it. Their buying power is directly undermined. The taxpayer is therefore the all-time loser, so that he develops the form of thought which he cannot be blamed for, but which also works against his interests. He comes to thinking that it is better to spend everything than save money. Such an attitude does nothing to slow down consumption or cut down unnecessary expenses, and therefore creates more difficulties.

We are not the only ones who have those problems, but we should have taken action much sooner, for the situation might deteriorate even further.

Several major industrialized countries had in recent years a rate of inflation fluctuating around 9 per cent. On the other hand, prices continued to rise at a rate of 11 per cent a year in countries like Italy, Great Britain and Japan, and that is quite easily explained when one sees the world of business lose speed and unemployment increase. Those are signs we must pay attention to when we recognize them at home and we must avoid at all cost the serious effects they had elsewhere. If the government of Canada is further maintained in its inability to curb inflation, we are definitely going to pass the point of no return at the very risk of losing, so to speak, the control over our economy. Already now the situation is really alarming. Let us just look back a bit to compare.

Only about twenty years ago, if one had dared suggest that a hospital room in 1975 would cost over $75 a day and a year of university would total between $3,000 and $4,000 he would have been branded as a sick man. At that time a year of university cost $1,000 and a hospital room $11 a day, and the average price for a single family house was about $12,000. And if the same guy had dared say that in 1975 a single family house would average $40,000 he would have been laughed at outright and even taxed with thinking liberal, in the right sense of the word though, that is with having a weird mind. However, this is exactly what is happening today. And projecting prices and wages for year 2,000, according to the inflationary trend of these last years, we get astounding results.

The average family now earning $14,000 will get $112,000, according to the current trend, in year 2,000. A pair of shoes now costing $28 will be worth $167. A wool skirt now sold $11 will retail for $53. A haircut now costing $3.20 will be $20.50. A tooth repair now worth $11. will cost $50. A semi-private hospital room now costing $78 a day will be worth $290. A yearly tuition fee now costing $3,700 in a private institution will cost $45,000. A house now selling for $40,000 will be paid $623,000. This was arrived at by a recent authoritive study by the Economics Department of the magazine United States News and World Report.

This clearly shows the current economic situation and the kind of thing we can expect if we do not take immediate corrective action.

Belatedly, the government recently attempted to control the situation through their anti-inflation program, although controls are not a solution actually. Indeed, the Bank of Montreal's Business Review of October 1975 clearly states that such a measure is of very dubious effectiveness, and I quote:

> Throughout history and until the 1970's, it has been shown that such programs hardly stopped inflation. They may bring temporary relief at the price indices level, but once controls are lifted prices almost invariably resume their uptrend at an accelerated pace. It will be remembered that unfortunately such was the result of the controls program launched in the United States in 1971 and finally curtailed in 1973. Controls unfortunately tend to obscure the need for a radical change in basic policies and behaviours.

And I want to repeat that:

> Controls unfortunately tend to obscure the need for a radical change in basic policies and behaviours, which means that eventual solutions are more difficult and painful to apply.

As the President of the Bank of Montreal said in his speech to the shareholders in 1973:

> —nothing could be so harmful in the long term while bringing only an insignificant relief in the short term as controls and no action can be successfull while the underlying conditions which have caused inflation remain unchanged.
> Another related basic problem is that price and income controls block the relationship between prices, even when this relationship is clearly inappropriate or unfair, which may well be the case in view of the rising inflation that we are now witnessing. But even if this relationship is just in a certain measure, at a certain time, we are living in a dynamic society where prices must change constantly if supply is to adjust to changes in demand. When the price system can no longer function normally, shortages and dislocations become frequent.
> Since imported products represent 29 per cent of the Canadian gross national product, a control program would be difficult or impossible to implement without a gigantic and costly subsidy system or without higher prices of imported products being reflected on the consumers, which would contribute to the rising spiral of prices while inflation continues abroad.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the conclusions drawn by the author of this article are the same as those that we have drawn in this House and the same as those drawn by many Canadians.

It is a fact that there is no miracle or easy solution to these problems. But the solution favoured by the government, which is to implement these controls, could be too easy and the results risk being quite unsatisfactory. Other steps that would be more logical and show true leardership could have been taken, but I shall come back to this later, after suggesting alternative solutions.

The point I am trying to make is that we should strive to create, through fair and truthful statements, the sort of social climate which is conducive to social justice.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote now, as I have done on previous occasions and as I shall certainly do again some other time, a whole series of statistics and facts which point to the weakness of the government in such areas as capital punishment and parole. But I shall merely quote part of an article published in Québec industriel 1975 which shows the lack of responsible leadership on the part of the government and the social climate it has created:

> Blass commits crime after crime and offence after offence. He has his picture taken holding a gun and sends it to the newspapers. He is a real gangster, a notorious habitual criminal, a misfit. He is caught by the police but escapes, and a great many people are terrified when they know he is at large. Finally, he is shot dead by police. Immediately, the same "specialized" groups mourn his loss, blame the police for having done their job, look into Blass' background, etc. Special material is published on his life and "works". And a movie about him will top it all.
> It is the same old story. People have bought many paintings done by one of the "Santa Claus killers" who had gunned down two policemen and made many orphans. The Watergate conspirators, who came out of American prisons as if by magic, are generously paid today by the press and television for the story of their dirty tricks.
> In a world in which policemen and victims are wrong, criminals are better protected than honest people, bandits are held as heroes, the results are obvious.
> In Montreal, a murder is committed every day of the year; in the United States, the number of thefts has increased by 20 per cent, burglaries by 17 per cent, rapes by 9 per cent and murders by 5 per cent. All the records have been broken.
> Recently, Mr. Frank Schauffee, a well known criminal lawyer, stated: "It is a lot easier to defend a criminal than a victim, since in the latter case everybody is against you: the judges, the laywers and the journalists . . .".
> I do not know if justice is blind, as is often said, but it is far from exemplary.

Mr. Speaker, we need only look around us to realize that this article was not written for another time or another planet. There again, it is high time the government assumed its responsibilities in a spirit of justice and honesty and also set the example.

Where is the just society that was so much talked about a few years ago? Where is the just society the qualities of which were posted on almost every street corner? Where can we find in 1975 the justice, the equity, the sharing of resources and the well-directed and well-used prosperity we were promised?

When we look around us, what we see is not quite, I would say not at all, like those promises. We see only strikes, increasing unemployment, a mockery of justice, poverty, concerned citizens, a very unstable business world, spiralling inflation, and so on. It would not be fair to say that the government is responsible for all this, but it would certainly be fair enough to say it had something to do with it.

Cure-alls which can cure every ill at once do not exist, but there are some measures which could give positive results even in the short run. Because of the serious problems now facing the country and the bleak future in store for us if one and everyone fail to do their full share to remedy the situation, it is urgent that the government inform the people, business, labour and the various groups of that threat and assign duties to everyone. It is not a matter of frightening anybody but rather of waking up the people so that they will become aware of their responsibilities in that common undertaking. It would certainly be better to tell the whole truth on the present state of affairs. In any case, nobody will prevent reality from being what it is—

On the other hand, there is another area where the government has failed to act and where it should take steps as soon as possible and that is the area of importation and exportation. In recent weeks, I have repeatedly raised the problem in this House; the failure to restrict the present flow of imports endangers some of our large industries such as footwear and textile. Too many imports are allowed and our Canadian producers must slow down their operations or dismiss workers. We had a somewhat similar problem with powdered milk and cheese. The government must at any cost protect our people—I mean the Canadian people—and recognize as a principle of urgency that we must absolutely tend to produce in this country the consumer goods which we need after that we can always import some if there is any shortage, but not before that. As a middle term objective, we should try to increase the production of some commodities which could even be exported.

On the other hand, in the area of social security, we should set up as soon as possible a minimum guaranteed income plan to provide Canadians with a certain amount of security, while reducing the financial burden resulting from several measures of direct or indirect support which are administrative monsters rather than effective measures.

With regard to the working population, which is disturbed by so many conflicts, and all sorts of upheavals and unrest that affect workers and employers alike, there is an urgent need for reviewing the rules of the game. In this regard, the government should immediately implement our proposal to promote the possibility for workers to participate in the share capital of companies, in order that the problems of production, profits, and work security become common to both parties. Then they would, to a greater extent, speak the same language, and share the same goals. Several conflicts could then be avoided and the workers would have greater motivation. The workers, at least wherever this proposal could apply, would know greater stability, which is badly needed.

Those are only a few of the solutions which could apply over the short term, and produce positive and swift results. I do not intend to go on further along this line; my colleagues can easily complete the picture. Still, what I want to stress, above everything else, is that this matter requires leadership on the part of the government; they must assume their responsabilities and set an example of integrity and determination in attempting to solve justly the social and economic problem that prevails in this country. The government must absolutely restore the confidence of all Canadians and have them participate in the achievement of their future. I am one of those who believe that we will have a strong, free and prosperous nation the day everyone of us in this country becomes strong, autonomous and firm of purpose.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians as well as myself are dedicated to the belief that democracy is best for this country and that government must be the servant of the people rather than the master. For that reason, I am very pleased that the Social Credit party have put forward this motion; included in it are subjects for discussion which I want to cover today.

I am particularly interested in the concept in the motion that the government has shown lack of foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of this nation. That is certainly a fact. It has also shown a failure to fulfil its promise of a fair and just society. It is certainly fair to say there has been a deterioration in the social and economic climate of this country.

I want first to deal with the question of democracy. On reviewing the record of this administration, I do not think anyone would dispute the fact that there have been very bold and well designed steps to take away the power of this institution of parliament: they have been designed to emasculate parliament and to concentrate power in the hands of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Yewchuk: If the hon. member from Toronto would listen for a moment, he may find that is in fact true. Let us go back to 1969. We had a debate in this House which lasted almost the whole summer, dealing with the question of rule changes in the House of Commons. We debated very significant changes which removed the power of this House to question the government on its activities and to make it accountable to parliament and the people for its expenditures. The government went so far as to bring in closure in order to bring in a rule that would make closure of debate very much easier. I am referring to rule 75C.

We can also examine the record in terms of the question period to see what has happened to it in the past eight or ten years. If we go back to the days when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister—great days for this country—we find that the question period was very democratic. Questions were put and answered for as long as there were questions to be put. As soon as the government changed and the late Lester Pearson took over, time limits were placed on the question period. The government of that day knew very well the kind of damage that could be done to a government with an uncontrolled and prolonged question period and they wanted none of that. One of the first things they did was to limit the time spent on questions.

Following the 1968 election, another step was taken because the question period was still hurting a little. The present Prime Minister took it one step further: he withdrew one third or one-half of his ministers from the House of Commons during the question period and ministers attended only two or three times a week. If you consider the earnings of those fellows, they should have been able to fulfil their services in the House a little more freely. That, of course, gave the government more protection from the question period. However, it also created a great deal of public discontent about the attitude of the government, and they have since reversed that policy. Much more recently, in this very parliament, there was a greater shortening of the question period. If we give these matters a little thought, it can easily be seen that democracy is indeed being eroded in this institution of parliament.

If one looks around and talks to people in various parts of the country, one finds a good deal of concern about the direction of this government, It has been designed to slowly, but surely, steer the course of our economic system away from the traditional concept of private enterprise, private ownership and open competition in the marketplace.

We have seen a proliferation of certain Crown corporations. We have seen a number of changes in tax and other policies which have seriously threatened certain industry which previously had been operated satisfactorily and efficiently by private enterprise. I refer in particular to the petroleum industry. Not too long ago we did not even think of the possibility of a shortage in this area or of not being self-sufficient. Over the past three years or so there has been a sudden desire by this government to change the economic climate, to change the tax system and to make sudden and frequent changes in petroleum policy. This has created instability in the petroleum industry and has led to decreased productivity, exploration and development. This country is now in the position where we face the very real possibility of being almost totally dependent on offshore sources within the next decade or so.

There have been further programs of great extravagance which typify this government. They appear to be designed with political expediency in mind. They are designed to buy the taxpayers' vote with the taxpayers' own money. As an example I would refer to Petro-Can which is going to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Yewchuk: Hon. members do not like to hear the truth. Those who are interjecting would have a very difficult time trying to show that there is any real need for the institution known as Petro-Can. We had a long debate on that. It will cost the people of Canada $1.5 billion, yet there has never been any kind of justification placed before this House to show the slightest need for it. Indeed, it appears to be simply a stop to the socialists in our society.

Mr. Yewchuk: I hear the socialists groaning. I am cognizant of the fact that when the vote was taken, they were glad to support it. It is a continuation of the unofficial marriage which originated during the minority government and still seems to be in effect.

I was talking about extravagance. This can be easily demonstrated. In 1968, when I first became a member of this House, the total budget of the federal government was less than $11 billion—in the vicinity of $10.8 billion. It has tripled in the short space of seven years. Can you imagine anything more shameful, or anything which contributes to inflation to a greater extent than that kind of uncontrolled extravagance?

Mr. Nystrom: What happened in Alberta?

Mr. Yewchuck: One of the members of the New Democratic Party asks what happened in Alberta. The fact is that the Alberta budget has performed much more satisfactorily.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, sure. You say that with a big smile on your face.

Mr. Yewchuk: Much more satisfactorily than that of the federal government or, indeed, than that of British Columbia or Manitoba where the socialists have been in charge.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Now you're talking.

Mr. Yewchuk: In the case of British Columbia, they have nearly made the province bankrupt in the space of three years, and now they are asking the people to give them another three years in which to complete the process.

One of the things which has upset me most about the present administration is the attitude it has created toward the concept of work. Each of us can think of times when the Prime Minister has scoffed at the idea that people in this country need to work in order to make a living. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is devoting almost all his energy to bringing in what he will call a guaranteed annual income, a program which in effect says to the people of Canada, "You do not have to work any more; you can live off the guaranteed income".

This is an attitude which has led to our present decline in productivity. It has led to the concept that if you work it right, you can get more out of this country and out of the economy than you put into it. It is an attitude which covers a great deal of territory, including such programs as LIP designed with political expediency in mind. The only way to change this state of affairs would be to throw out of office any government which pretended that a country can survive on the basis of that kind of attitude.

Furthermore, in the course of the past ten years we have witnessed what I consider to be an unprecedented intrusion into the daily lives of Canadians whether as individuals or as business groups. Never before have certain aspects of their democratic rights been eliminated as rapidly as has been the case under the present administration. I ask hon. members to consider how our nation acquired the prosperity which made so many of our social undertakings possible. It is easy to see. The economy was based on private ownership and private enterprise. The tax system was designed to stimulate growth and, consequently, the development of employment.

The economy, in short, did not reflect the belief that government had the answer to everything or that government must run everything. One of the reasons the economy is drifting toward disaster today is that we now have a government in power which believes it must be the master and control everything. It does not want to give people the opportunity to exercise their initiative, their imagination or their ability to produce. I do not believe we need to look too far afield to notice the difference in productivity between government-operated production systems and those which are controlled by the private sector. We need only look to countries behind the iron curtain or behind the bamboo curtain to assure ourselves that an economy based on the state controlling and owning the means of production turns out to be extremely cumbersome, inefficient and distrustful of individual initiative. We need not look far around the globe to see that an economy based on production in private hands is more successful and leads to a higher standard of living.

Therefore, I should like to say to those who sit on the treasury benches opposite that as long as they are in charge—which I suppose will be for the next three years—they should reassess the urge on their part to control every aspect of our lives and business as if this were somehow an inescapable part of their duty to the people. We recognize that government has an obligation to help those who cannot help themselves, but we also recognize that this process should involve, not making them permanent dependents on government but, rather, giving them an opportunity to improve their own positions. One can illustrate this easily by an example which has become a cliché, and it is the only cliché I will use in this speech, "You can give a man a meal by giving him a fish, but you can feed him for the rest of his life by teaching him how to fish." This is a principle we must incorporate into the welfare aspect of our society. If we are to come to grips with poverty on a long-term basis, we must make an effort to stimulate self-reliance rather than prolonging a need for dependence on government for more and more handouts.

We need only read the story of Robin Hood to be reminded that simply taking from the rich and giving to the poor will never erase the condition of poverty in the long term, though it may be a necessary solution in the short term. Canadians, or, for that matter, others who are living in conditions of poverty, must be given an opportunity to look after themselves. They must be given educational opportunity; their ability to earn a living must be upgraded. Programs must be designed to achieve those goals, and job opportunities must become available if we are seriously to tackle the problem of poverty in this country.

We know that taxes are a necessary evil in our society. Taxes are necessary because there are certain public services and projects which governments are obliged to provide. But the tax system must recognize the principle that initiative and enterprise should be rewarded. It must be designed in such a way as to stimulate growth. I have to say, frankly, that our tax system does not do this. Any one of us can look back over the past year and think of individuals, old friends, who have said, "Why should I work any harder; the tax people take it all away?" There is a reason for this feeling: it is that the tax system has become cumbersome and has destroyed the initiative of many Canadians, discouraging them from working harder or doing what is necessary to make our country grow. We must, therefore, work toward far reaching changes in the tax system, changes which recognize the need to reward initiative. Through the provision of equal opportunity we must motivate people to pursue excellence and greater productivity for the benefit of Canada.

I have already said that I do not think government must be the master of the people and perhaps I should say what the government should, in my view, do. The role of government is more properly one of the guiding hand, a body creating the economic atmosphere in which private individuals or groups of individuals, corporations or any other Canadians, can exercise their initiative and imagination to do the things required to make this country grow and be great. We must also insist that the role of government must be to create the atmosphere in which no Canadian is exploited by other groups, in which no Canadian is dominated by external political or economic forces. In this regard I think our party has a good record. We have put forward policies that would have achieved these ends and which would have been in place now had we won the last election. These policies are still our policies and will be placed before the people in the course of the next election.

I have said that I am very concerned that the policies of the government are designed, it appears, to create dependency on government. The LIP and OFY programs are very good examples of policies that create dependency on government. We need to achieve new directions. Somehow we must reawaken in the minds and hearts of Canadians the concept of self-reliance. We must give all Canadians the opportunity to look after themselves and their dependants with dignity and security. I am not saying that Canada is an easy country to govern. We have much diversity. We have people of many different races from virtually all parts of the world living together within our borders. Our geographic regions are very much different physically, economically and socially.

I see you are sitting on the end of your seat, Mr. Speaker. Are you going to give me another minute to wind up?

An hon. Member: One minute.

Mr. Yewchuk: In short, Mr. Speaker, Canada requires new directions and policies that are designed to allow individual Canadians to exercise their own initiative, that are designed to make Canada strong, united, and a free, democratic nation. We must take steps to improve our democratic processes rather than continuously detracting from them.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is one that is all-encompassing, covering a great deal of area. At the outset, let me say that when the vote comes later on this evening we will support the non-confidence motion. Not that we support everything contained in the motion, but we do interpret it as a general motion of non-confidence in the government's economic policies and for that reason we will vote for it.

I should like to put in a disclaimer or two regarding some of the wording of the motion. The last part reads "to make loans available to the provinces at an interest rate not exceeding the cost of administration". I think wording such as that leaves a lot to be desired. I should like to hear from some of the Social Credit members what exactly is meant by that. For example, today the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked about the federal government borrowing money by issuing Canada savings bonds at 9 per cent plus interest. Are they going to lend this money to the provinces at no interest at all except for the administration charge? Canada Pension Plan funds are lent to the provinces now, but are they proposing to lend such funds at a low interest rate or at no interest rate at all? What would happen to pensioners under the plan if that were the case?

I share the concern of members of the Social Credit party about the banks and financial institutions being at the centre of many of our economic problems. Our solutions in this regard may be different, but in many ways perhaps they are similar. For example, I believe that those who control the finances of this nation control the destiny of the nation. The assets of the chartered banks, insurance companies, trust companies, mortgage companies and of all financial institutions in Canada are immense. These financial institutions have much more impact on public policy and on public life in Canada than many of the governments in this country.

If we are to have a planned economy, the time has come to have public ownership of banks and financial institutions. I do not understand why we continue to support a system where the private banks work hand in hand, essentially, with the multinational corporations and the fiscal and monetary policy of the country reflects that of the United States. I should like to see banking in this country publicly owned, operated as a public utility. This would give Canadians much more freedom than the course suggested by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) who said government should not interfere in the economy, that so-called free enterprise should run the economy. In essence, in today's society this would mean the law of the jungle where the big fellows get bigger and stomp on the toes of the mice. I say that 95 per cent of the people would have fewer freedoms and liberties under that system than if there were public ownership of our financial insitutions and Canadian resources. Under such a system, Canadians, through their government in a democratic way, would make the decisions concerning resource development and finance.

I want to turn to the general question of the economy. I should like to tell the parliamentary secretary who will reply that some very serious problems are arising, on which I hope he will comment. I want to spend some time talking about unemployment. I have the feeling that the government has forgotten about unemployment or they are ignoring it in their so-called fight against inflation. The anti-inflation bill which recently went through the House is one that, at best, will have a neutral effect on unemployment and, at worst, will aggravate the situation across the country by slowing down the economy, particularly in developing regions such as the Atlantic provinces and much of Quebec.

Figures released by Statistics Canada today show that unemployment this past month of November has increased by 35 per cent compared with November of 1974, when there were 542,000 Canadians out of work. Last November there were 734,000 Canadians out of work. This means an increase from 5.5 per cent seasonally adjusted, to 7.3 per cent seasonally adjusted, or that 192,000 more Canadians are out of work. This is a serious matter. The government must direct its energies toward achieving a full employment policy. We must put people back to work so we can increase productivity in general, particularly in regions like Quebec and the Atlantic provinces where for years there has been a very high rate of unemployment.

Let us look at the regional breakdown of unemployment in Canada. I should like to spend a moment or two putting some of these rates on the record, beginning with Newfoundland where the unemployment rate is 18.1 per cent. Let us not forget that there are some who are unemployed but who are not reflected in these unemployment statistics. I have in mind those who are not registered with Manpower; those who are on welfare. There are those who have given up trying to get jobs and are no longer registered, as well as treaty Indians in places like Saskatchewan. So there are a great many people who are not actually reflected in the statistics we get from Statistics Canada each month. We could probably add another 1 per cent or 2 per cent to the 7.3 per cent we now have, making the actual figure at least 8.5 per cent and perhaps even as high as 9 per cent or 10 per cent. These are Canadians who are able-bodied and would work if we had jobs for them.

The rate of unemployment in Newfoundland is 18.1 per cent, compared to 14.8 per cent one year ago. This is an increase of 3.3 per cent. One could go right down the list. In the province of Quebec 7.1 per cent of the people were unemployed last year, and it was 9.2 per cent in November of this year. There are 9.2 per cent of Quebeckers unemployed, yet the federal government fails to bring in any new programs to combat this very serious social and economic problem. Even in the province of Ontario, where unemployment was 3.7 per cent a year ago, it is now up to 4.4 per cent and is becoming a serious problem as it is right across the country. Only in the prairie provinces is the unemployment rate low, being 2.9 per cent in Alberta, 4 per cent in Saskatchewan and 3.7 per cent in Manitoba.

I ask this government what it intends to do to bring down the unemployment rate in Canada. What are its plans to stimulate the economy, providing more jobs while at the same time fighting inflation? Its failure to do anything is the reason I will be voting non-confidence in the government later this evening.

Let me look at the incidence of unemployment among men, women, young people and the middle-aged across this country. I find that 13.3 per cent of the young people between 14 and 24 years of age are unemployed. This is a serious situation. We talk about providing young people with opportunities to develop, to become established in the work place, in business or on the farms, We talk about young people acquiring skills and training. Yet we find that 13.3 per cent of the young people in this country are unemployed, compared to 10 per cent last year. This is an increase of 3.3 per cent, or a full one-third of the young people in Canada. What is the government going to do about this? What solutions does the government advocate to bring down the rate of unemployment in Canada? These are the things I want the parliamentary secretary and other government spokesmen to comment on later in this debate.

Recently we have heard very disturbing and serious rumours about cutbacks in government expenditures in certain areas. I think this will only aggravate unemployment in Canada. There are many areas where I think the government should cut back on spending. The government is spending money on Information Canada which I think in many respects is just a duplication of service. The federal government provides hefty contracts for outside consultants, many of which I think are unnecessary. We also have that other place which is an undemocratic institution, spending millions of dollars every year in order to provide a few so-called second, sober thoughts. I think expenditures like these are unnecessary in this country.

There are several other programs under way in respect of which we could cut out some government fat and waste, including high salary increases for deputy ministers and senior executives. In these days, during the fight against inflation, I think these increases set a bad example and have in themselves an inflationary effect across the country. When the government talks about cutting back on expenditures, I hope it is not thinking in terms of cutting back on programs such as equalization payments to the poorer provinces. I hope it is not thinking of cutting back on cost-sharing for hospitalization and medicare which enables the poorer provinces to maintain the standard of health care enjoyed by provinces such as Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These are the areas in which the government must not cut back.

Let me say also, that if the government is going to eliminate LIP and OFY projects something else will have to be put in their place. Where will all these young people find employment if the jobs provided by OFY projects are eliminated? A number of young people employed in these projects fall within the 14 to 24-years old category. Many young people in the city of Yorkton, in my riding, would have to go on welfare if the LIP projects or the LIP program itself were eliminated. People in the Metis society in the city of Yorkton would be unemployed again if they were not working on projects under LIP. If these projects are to be eliminated, let us have some long-term, ongoing projects put in their place.

I question the economics of some of these short-term projects, but I do not want to see them scrapped unless something is put in their place that will enable Canadians, regardless of their background, educational or social, to work and provide for their families and make a contribution to this country. What we need in Canada is a planned economy. We need a concerted effort that will reduce inflation but put the people to work. We need a full employment policy.

Let us consider three or four areas at which I think the government should take a very serious look. I am thinking of the area of housing, where we have extremely high interest rates and high construction costs, yet a shortage of houses that fewer and fewer people can afford to buy. The government should be forcing the banks to lower their interest rates and allocate a far greater portion of their investment portfolios to the housing area. This would increase the supply and bring down interest rates and the cost of housing. It would, at the same time, stimulate the economy by providing more jobs in construction and in the forest industry in place of high unemployment such as New Brunswick, Quebec and parts of British Columbia. This is something the government could do to bring down unemployment and at the same time bring down the high rate of inflation and the high cost of housing and shelter for the Canadian people.

Another area in which the government could move is that of food production and cost. The government should move very quickly on a stabilization program so that farmers in this country will have price guarantees for their products. If they had price guarantees there would be a much more consistent pattern of food production. With a more consistent production pattern there would be more consistent pricing at the other end. If you have orderly marketing, farmers can afford to produce more food, and if there is more production the chances are that inflation at the other end, where men and women purchase food at the retail level, will not be as great.

I would also look to the area of the resource community. It is this area about which the hon. member for Athabasca is so concerned. He is concerned about increasing government expenditure in the resource field. I suggest that is a laugh. The government has not gone far enough toward intervention in the field of natural resources in this country at the federal or the provincial level. Petro-Can has been established, but the main criticism I have in that regard is that its funding will not be great enough. What the government should be doing is nationalizing Imperial Oil. The governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan should be establishing a publicly-owned oil industry in this country.

An hon. Member: What about potash?

Mr. Nystrom: I suggest that the government of Saskatchewan has undertaken, in respect of potash, one of the most progressive and advanced moves taken in this country for a long time. This example set by Saskatchewan should be followed by the federal government and provincial governments right across this country. The renewable and non-renewable natural resources of this country should be publicly-owned. The fact is that for the most part the resources are foreign-owned. Let me spend my last two or three minutes in this debate discussing the potash situation and trying to enlighten some of the Liberal backbenchers, if that is at all possible. I see the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) smiling.

Let us go back a few years when almost all of the postash industry in Saskatchewan was owned by foreign companies with headquarters in Denver, Toronto, Europe, Houston and many other places except the province of Saskatchewan. The mines that were developed during the last few years have in the last few months been enjoying very high prices for their production of potash. I am glad to see the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) back in the House. Let me point out that they have brought the price of potash up from $20 a ton which was the situation back in 1969.

Let me give some reasons to support the idea that public ownership is very economical. In 1975, the price of potash went up from $20 a ton to $75 a ton, and the estimate of most people is that it will reach about $100 a ton by 1980. The demand for potash will probably double in the next 15 years. The mines in Saskatchewan are operating at nearly full capacity and there is a dire need to expand their capacity. In Saskatchewan there is around 40 per cent of the world's reserves of potash—the greatest reserves in the world, except possibly for the Soviet Union. We have those reserves in our province and they should be developed publicly for and on behalf of all the people.

I recall that when the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley was sitting in the Saskatchewan legislature a few years ago there was an oversupply of potash and the IMC mine operated by the Americans, with a subsidiary in Mexico, had to cut down its production because of the oversupply. They cut down about 60 per cent of their production in my constituency, while in the United States they cut down by only 10 per cent or 15 per cent. Thus, people in my riding joined the unemployment rolls and were thrown out of work while jobs were saved for the Americans. That was a natural reaction by IMC and it is a natural consequence of foreign ownership. It is the branch of the plant that will be cut down and thrown away first. But now we find in Saskatchewan an industry that will grow, a product the price of which will continue to rise and the market for which will increase.

Potash is used primarily for fertilizer; about 95 per cent of it is used for that purpose. As the world's agricultural economy becomes more sophisticated, as knowledge increases and the developing nations become more wealthy, the demand for potash will increase. The profits of the privately-owned potash companies in Saskatchewan went up and the Saskatchewan government naturally increased the taxes, but many of these mining companies refused to pay the taxes and took our government to court on the issue. They were not ready to expand, and several mines announced that the plan for expansion was either cancelled or postponed until the court cases were heard. They are withholding their taxes. Mr. Speaker, you could not do that without the Department of National Revenue taking action against you.

The potash companies are holding the government to ransom. They will not expand, thus denying jobs, and they will not pay taxes, thus denying revenue to the Saskatchewan people. So the premier of our province did the only logical and sensible thing; he announced that the mines would be nationalized and taken over by the people of Saskatchewan. We have the money for that; much of it is right in the province of Saskatchewan, and the rest will be borrowed and paid back over the years. In years to come the Saskatchewan people will have an asset which will appreciate by literally hundreds of millions of dollars for the people of our province, not just for me but for my children's generation and for their children and generations to come.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

It will be a resource owned wholly by the people of Saskatchewan and by all Canadians. It will be the only resource company in this country on a large scale which will have its head office in Saskatchewan—and the jobs at the head office will be in Saskatchewan, not in Houston, not in Denver, not in Europe. The corporation in Saskatchewan will be able to open new mines and expand. That is one of the first things it will do. This would not happen under private enterprise in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley knows that the potash companies were going to cancel or postpone their plans to expand the mines because the taxes were too high.

There are two choices which you have: you can either say, "We will lower the taxes and you, poor company, will expand, but we will get less revenue from the taxes," or you can take them over and expand and develop the mines. If you make that decision, you keep the money. That is a much better investment for the people of Saskatchewan. Why will this government not do this with the tar sands in Alberta? They have an obligation to develop such a resource on behalf of all the people of Canada. In Saskatchewan we will have these head office jobs, we will have research and development jobs, we will expand our industry, we will keep the profits in the province and we will control the biggest resource company in Canada that is Canadian-owned—all within the boundaries of a small province.

These are the things this government should be doing on a national scale. Just think what they could do if they seriously tackled the oil industry, in terms of keeping prices down for consumers, in terms of the petrochemical industry and in terms of keeping the profits in this country. These are the things they could do if they would provide economic leadership. But that is something which I am afraid they are not willing to do.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the motion before us by saying initially a few words in favour of the implementation of an anti-inflation policy in Canada at the present time. Any national economy that is unable to control the value of its monetary exchange unit over the short to long term within some reasonable guidelines is indeed in trouble. The problem, economically speaking, must take priority over other social and economic problems that may be facing the nation at the time, for without a solution to this basic issue, all other government leadership endeavours are bound to be fraught with a good degree of failure. A just society can never be achieved, nor moved in a very positive direction, if we cannot assure members of our society that there is a good degree of strength in the monetary system.

The old age pensioner on a fixed income, the young widow receiving a static allowance or pension as the sole means of support for her and her family, the wage or salary earner forming part of the vast majority of our work force where the ability to negotiate a higher rate of income is almost non-existent, the businessman locked into a contract which makes no provision for a higher revenue to him in the face of substantially rising costs, all these people depend on someone and, I suggest, look to the government for leadership to somehow or other help them out of their predicament by taking steps to introduce measures which will alleviate the upward spiral of the inflationary infection which is having such an undesirable effect on their very ability to make ends meet in the course of their already limited standard of living.

Further up the line we have the middle-income group who form a larger and larger proportion of the Canadian social fabric. They are perhaps those who have been able to or are steadily saving toward the purchase of a home in which to live and raise their families. Just when they are at a point where they envisage moving, if a purchase is being considered, or start making their first mortgage payments in the case of a purchase having been made, the rising inflationary factor seems to sweep their accomplishment out of their hands and they find themselves once again against the wall.

It is at a time like this that a government—in my view, particularly a national government—must act. It must make a move to show leadership to the people who elected it to govern. This is what I suggest the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) did on the evening of October 13, 1975. He and the government took the bull by the horns and came out with an anti-inflation policy which, I suggest to the House, is receiving increasing support across the country as the weeks go by.

Let me speak further on this aspect of leadership which was raised by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). Why anti-inflation measures now? Why not six months hence? I should like to deal with this question. The reason for not postponing the inevitable at this point—this, I suggest, reflects on leadership—is simply that the nation could probably not sustain a further six months of unbounded leaps in the rate at which the Canadian dollar was decreasing in terms of the goods and services it could acquire. A move was required without further delay.

The swift and concerted attention which has swung toward the Anti-Inflation Board in its early days of existence is surely an indication of the inflationary forces which beset the Canadian economy last fall. Leadership was required as the thirtieth parliament was about to reconvene after the summer recess. Leadership came, and it is astounding that once it arrived, those opposition voices which cry for leadership whenever they run out of viable alternative policies to place before this House—and unfortunately that is all too frequently—cringed in despair as the principal crutch on which they spent so much time leaning was virtually snapped out of their hands. Opposition members were bereft and without the apparent means to bolster themselves up with a new crutch. They were so disorganized that the official opposition of this country, the party to whom Canadians look as the only viable alternative on the national horizon, were caught with their proverbial pants down and voted against the very type of legislation which they themselves promoted as a cure-all to Canada's ills only a short 15 months before. That is very strange behaviour indeed and, I suggest, is most incomprehensible to the minds of the voters of this country.

The hon. member for Richmond is concerned about unemployment in this country. So am I; so are we all. The point to be made is that whatever evils may accompany unemployment—and, granted, there are many—these evils will undoubtedly be greater in the event that an inflationary rate which has achieved the dubious distinction of two-figure status is not brought under control. The hon. member speaks of lack of foresight. Is it not a distinct example of foresight, carefully applied, to look a growing national problem in the eye, to consider its probable impact over the ensuing mounths and years, and then to act?

That is what our Prime Minister did on the evening of October 13. That is what the government I support did in following up the initial action of the Prime Minister by sending its ministers out to the hustings to explain to the Canadian people exactly why the new anti-inflation policy was a clear example of foresight and leadership on the part of the elected officials who had been charged with the task of running the government of this country for the next four years or so, as of July, 1974. Foresight and leadership we have, based on sound rationale and supported by a careful analysis and examination of the situation at hand.

Responding for a moment to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), unemployment is a problem in this country which has always occupied a high level of attention by this government and will continue to do so in the future. However, let us make one point very clear. There are many factors accounting for unemployment problems in a given country at any given time.

An hon. Member: The Liberal government is the biggest one.

Mr. Martin: However, we must be sensible about this. Governments do not create unemployment; they try to react to the conditions which bring about unemployment. That is why we have DREE, that is why we have Opportunities for Youth Programs in the summer. That is why we endeavour to equalize tax revenue situations across the country. That is why so much of our effort is directed toward overcoming the disparities and the difficulties faced by people in various regions of the country. It is to make every endeavour, within the free enterprise system, to bolster the economies of regions and the society which makes up these regions. That is why we are constantly searching for new export markets and encouraging Canadian industry to look beyond its more traditional markets within and without the country. All these government initiatives are aimed at strengthening the Canadian economy and at providing more and more jobs for an ever-expanding work force.

Obviously, from time to time difficulties in the area of any government initiatives will be encountered and this is particularly so when such initiatives are aimed at producing more jobs. A softening of world markets is bound to make it more difficult for an exporting industry to increase its production and thus hire more workers. A tightening of the money supply within the country will certainly produce greater difficulties to domestic industry attempting to expand. There is no question that the anti-inflation policy will present the government with new challenges in all these areas. The policy is intended to keep a reasonable lid on both prices and incomes.

Canadians are being asked to revise the order of their priorities over the next little while. All these factors will have an effect on the viable productive capacity of various individual industries within the country. The government will respond to these challenges and, unlike the opposition parties which sit across from us in this House, it will respond in a positive and meaningful way and I am sure it will continue to receive the support of the vast majority of the Canadian people.

Before concluding, I should like to make reference to a comment made by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) with regard to Petro-Can in which he once again referred to the lack of necessity for an organization sponsored by government in this particular industry. As we said last spring—I think it is worth while again reminding the hon. member and his party—the situation in Canada today regarding oil and natural gas supplies has changed dramatically from the situation three or four years ago. I suggest that the entry of a government-sponsored organization such as Petro-Can into this over-all problem will, in turn, not only create more jobs by assisting in the exploration and development of new sources of energy but will also serve to alleviate some very serious energy problems which would otherwise beset us in the years to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like at the outset of my remarks to point out that our parliamentary system is most democratic. Indeed, its rules provide for days allotted to the opposition to enable it to criticize objectively the administration, more specifically the government, for its omissions while the government for its part will surely talk about its accomplishments which, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested this afternoon, are normally paid for by Canadian taxpayers.

I was astounded to hear the answer given by the Prime Minister this afternoon to a question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), concerning loans made to developing or underdeveloped countries. Not only, Mr. Speaker, does the administration as we know it make us pay interest on loans contracted on our behalf but according to the answer given by the Prime Minister we must also pay interest on loans contracted to make gifts to help underdeveloped or developing countries.

I listened attentively to the hon. member who spoke before me. I congratulate him. He spoke very objective words, and I think that is the way one should participate in the debate in this House not only to give the people of this country the impression that we are serious people and we want to give the best administration possible but to prove to them through actions, steps, decisions, that we are really conscious of our responsibilities and we want to solve the problems facing the people of this country, our country. Mr. Speaker, the government on those opposition days expects criticism. Today, December 9, 1975, is an opposition day, and the topic was selected—

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very anxious to hear what the hon. member has to say, but I regret to report that the simultaneous interpretation is not coming through the system. I wonder if it could be checked before the hon. member continues his address.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is your responsibility to restore—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I believe it is working now.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you very much. I think the hon. member who has drawn to the attention of the Speaker the fact that he could not hear my remarks. It proves that he is interested in what is said in the House. I congratulate him.

I was saying that the topic selected by the Social Credit Party of Canada today is excellent; the backbenchers should not be offended by my remarks. If we refused to blame the government for its failures, we would be shirking our duty and the people would have the right to judge us severely, because the people have elected 264 members and we do not live under dictatorship in this country. The people of Canada are asked to make a choice and they choose what they want. And when they send us to Parliament they expect us to be of different opinion, to have divergent points of view, but that we will join our effort to administrate our country as well as possible.

Mr. Speaker, for those reasons I support the motion of my colleague, the hon. member of Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). This motion of no confidence against the government is perfectly justified. In fact, the hon. member described exactly the promises and commitments that the Liberal party made to the people of Canada and did not fulfill entirely. Even if the right hon. Prime Minister, in 1974, during the last elections presented himself to the nation as the only one detaining the magic formula to solve the inflation and unemployment problems created by the credit-debt system he advocates, it was just another electoral promise as since July 8, 1974 the economic situation of our country has been deteriorating and our Canadian dollar has continued to devaluate, the number of unemployed has continued to rise, and we do not know in what direction this government steers our economy.

In 1975, Mr. Speaker, the economic situation looks strangely like that of the year 1926 to 1930 and 1930 to 1939.

Of course, the younger members cannot make the comparison as they were not born at that time. However, at that time, like now, the system was the same and they were many bankruptcies were the order of the day. Like today, banks were empowered to turn the credit tap on or off and they contributed to multiply industrial and business bankruptcies through curtailments and even, in several cases, through a complete withdrawal of credit margins; the result was paralyzed industrial and business activities for a large number of companies.

Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that during the war of 1914-18, the government contributed to putting into circulation an impressive quantity of dollars which were used first and foremost to produce ammunitions of all kinds that the consumer would not buy but which were nevertheless manufactured and, the flow of money thus created increased the purchasing power for consumer goods.

This caused an extraordinary price increase in all sectors of our economy at that time. Farms would sell at exhorbitant prices. Food prices rose to a level which enticed farmers' sons to buy very expensive farms of their own, in the hope that the situation would remain the same for years to come. That was the post-war boom.

Alas, disenchantment followed. The days of artificial prosperity were soon over and the year 1929 came too soon. That was the onset of the depression, of the "crash" as they called it in the United States. I remember those days, being then a young man already on the labour market. We learned, not on the radio because our sets were not able to tune in American stations, but in the newspapers that the "crash" on the New York stock exchange had tolled the knell. That was the onset of the depression because people had been led to believe U.S. that the dollar would depreciate and Americans who had money in the banks ran to those banks to take out their savings, because they no longer had confidence in the American banking system. They feared they would lose their savings.

What happened is that the American government reacted very rapidly. The president called the Congress. It came to the rescue of the banking system to restore the confidence of the American people. All financial institutions were forced to close down and through legislation, the American government restored the people's confidence necessary to allow the system to keep on working.

It remains nevertheless that it was the beginning of a depression which caused great hardship not only to the american people, but to the canadian people as well.

In the period between 1918 and 1929 some people lost everything they had worked for because they thought, from lack of experience, that the boom they had lived through would last. At that time, people were buying anything at any price, a business, an industry, a farm, what have you. But when 1929 came, profits disappeared and we experienced bankruptcies, as I said before, many bankrupties, loss of savings, to such an extent that people fell ill and had to be hospitalized for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, to recall those cases is not daydreaming, it is simply to call attention to the current situation.

It will be remembered that in 1930, there was a general election in Canada. At that time, I was old enough to attend political meetings and see and hear on the hustings Liberal and Conservative candidates debating.

At that time, in Saint-Adrien, my home town in the riding of Megantic, I saw two real men, two candidates fight one another vigorously after Sunday mass on the porch generously made available by the owner of the general store, so that the candidates may inform the people. I remember seeing, among others, a respectable merchant, an experienced businessman, Mr. Léonard Tremblay, who as a Liberal member represented in this House for a number of years the riding of Dorchester, now included in the riding of Bellechasse. Mr. Tremblay used to say with bitterness: "Butter is cheap, but what can we do, it is a global problem, butter is flowing everywhere." I remember those phrases. Butter was cheap. The price of 4 cents a pound did not even pay the paper to wrap it in. And they used to say, as we are told now, it was a global problem, we must accept it as a scourge, because we were sinners and we had to pay for our failures.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people believed what politicians said at that time, and the Liberal party was beaten. A discouraged Mackenzie King asked: "How did it happen? I tried my best, I wanted to give my country the best administration possible and the people do not understand. And Mr. R. B. Bennett was elected. He took the power with as many seats he wanted—an overwhelming majority. And then he tried by all possible means to put the country on the way to prosperity. But the bankers had control over Mr. Bennett as they used to have over Mr. King and he did not have the required money to achieve programs designed to create employment with a view to restoring the confidence of Canadians and making them prosperous.

At that time, we had the direct assistance system, which strangely reminds me of the system we have now. It is called differently but it provides the same remedies, the same means. Then as now there were thousands and thousands of youths able to work but who could not find any jobs. And I recall an employment system for young people, who were told: you are lazy, you do not want to work. Canadians are lazy since you do not want to earn a living, you do not work. This is what they were told at that time. And they had been given the opportunity to join the army. You do not have the means to buy clothes, we shall clothe you. And then, they were dressed in a kaki uniform and paid 20 cents a day. Imagine, 20 cents a day! What kind of a future would young people prepare with 20 cents a day! What happened? Untold numbers of young people thus lost precious years that they could have used to truly prepare themselves for the future.

Then, in 1935, there was a general election. The two same men ran against each other: Mr. Bennett for the Conservatives and Mr. King for the Liberals. Each one had a sensational program which would bring prosperity to Canada. But Mr. King had had time to reflect for a few years. He had had time to get to the bottom of things and to truly study what had been the cause of his mismanagement. And Mr. King had discovered that it was a lack of money. He said: Well, if I am reelected, I know what to do. You will witness the greatest fight between the government and high finance that has ever been seen in the whole world. People believed him. Mr. King said: If a parliament, if a government does not regain control over its money and credit, it is useless to talk of democracy. He said: If I am given the power to do so, I will fix all that. He was therefore given the power but the problem was not solved; it has remained unsolved to this day.

The great fight that the Canadian people were supposed to witness never happened. Of course, we were given the Bank of Canada, that institution with a truly fine-sounding name: Bank of Canada, the Bank of Canadians, but the government forgot to give to the Bank of Canada the necessary tools, capacity and authority to fulfill its true role as the Bank of Canadians. Its role is restricted to receiving from the chartered banks the money on which the chartered banks based themselves to create the credit of the nation under the act. The Bank of Canada only receives the cash reserves which chartered banks are bound by law to deposit in that bank to be permitted to go on practising that larceny legalised by an act of Parliament, an ever thriving business. Let hon. members just have a look at the answers of the Minister of Finance to questions on the order paper of the House and they will understand that our present banking system which operates at a profit is going through an era of outstanding prosperity, to the point that bankers no longer know where they should invest, after deriving such fabulous profits from that medium of exchange called money. That system should be a service controlled by government, by the Bank of Canada, so that the funds necessary for a proper circulation of goods and services in Canada would be accounted for by the Bank of Canada after statistical data provided by Statistics Canada.

And if a constant balance was kept in the money supply required to circulate goods and services provided by Canadians through their work, then we in Canada would have a balanced money supply, and the exchange medium would not be commercialized like an ordinary commodity, but it would have a constant relationship with the productive capacity of Canadians and consumer needs.

I know of course, Mr. Speaker, some people will say: Social Credit members dream in colour. You like colour TV, everyone buys colour TV sets today, and they pay a tremendous price to buy one because they like it. So if you think we dream in colour, just look at us dreaming. Try to look at us, try to understand at least the suggestions we are attempting to make in this Parliament to try and help the government solve today's problems. Mr. Speaker, let us not forget this: we now have in Canada thousands of young people who are unemployed, people for whose education we paid a lot of money in building multidisciplinary schools, CEGEPs, universities, to have them learn a trade, to have them become Canadians able to help us older people in our efforts to go on building a country where it would be good to live and which we would love all the more. But no, our children are among the jobless.

Mr. Speaker, was there not a cheaper way of increasing the number of unemployed? Personally, not only do I think so but I say so, and since I have a responsibility to assume, as everybody else, in Parliament, I would appreciate it if members would pay serious attention to the proposals we are making in all objectivity and seriousness. It is not a crime to consider them. How discouraging it is to see adults, reasonable people, rejecting with the back of their hands any suggestion contributed by the opposition on the assumption that they are not serious, not sound.

Mr. Speaker, before passing judgment on someone else's ideas, one must first get to know them in order to be able to analyse them, and see whether there is something in them which may be used and applied to upgrade the economic situation in our country, something which would give our youth faith in the future of our country. I think each parliamentarian has the responsibility of taking the trouble to consider them as something valid, as something worth being heard and judged afterwards.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this fall, during the recess, not during the session, I went to the north shore. I went there to get information as a representative. I went on the other side of the river to see what is going on there and I noticed that there are bright prospects there. But I also noticed that we go and hire workers in Europe for the positions our young people could take on if we ensured they can complete their training.

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency of Bellechasse, there is room for training 240 operators of heavy machinery. Some 1,200 young people are waiting. Why not allocate funds which would enable regional school boards to open new centres so that these young people could complete the training required to apply for these positions which are available on the north shore? But no! School board officials say: "We don't mind but we have no money" The Minister of Manpower and Immigration says: "It's all right with me but the Treasury Board won't give us money". Everybody complains of having no money, nobody does anything about it and everybody starves.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that we are speaking on a motion today which states:

That this House considers the government has lacked foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of Canada and should be blamed for its failure to fulfil its promise—

It is ironic because this is the day that the Auditor General's report came out. Talk about horror stories. It makes past editions read like fairy tales. Therefore, there is complete justification for a motion like this. The blame has to be laid at the doorstep of the Liberals. They have been in power for many years. If they had such great administrative ability we would not be receiving reports like this. It really makes interesting reading.

For many months Progressive Conservative members of parliament have grilled the federal Liberal government in Ottawa extensively on its spending practices, and with good reason. Federal government expenditures have increased to astronomical proportions since 1968. It is estimated that before this fiscal year is over total government spending will reach $35 billion for all accounts, almost 40 per cent of the gross national product. The question is whether the country can afford this kind of extravagance at the present time considering the economic problems we face.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What are you going to cut out?

Mr. McKenzie: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) asks what we are going to cut out. It is not what we are going to cut out, but what they are going to cut out. According to today's newspapers they are not cutting anything out.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) to tell this House what he would like to see cut out. The time has come for the opposition to tell this side what they want elmininated. Instead of just talking about spending, they should tell us where to cut.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member will agree that he raised an argument rather than a point of order.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: There was one very good suggestion—cut out the government.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is a nonsensical answer.

Mr. McKenzie: What Liberal members fail to realize—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The only place he is any good is on CBC radio—

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, he wants me there tomorrow. There are a number of other radio stations as well.

What the Liberals fail to realize is that it is not just social programs for which the government is responsible. It is also responsible for managing your affairs properly and having a proper accounting.

Crown corporations have to spend properly. The hon. member is aware of all the Viscount aircraft at the Winnipeg airport that were overhauled at a cost of between $200,000 and $600,000 each, but are only worth $10,000 to $50,000 on the market. They cannot be flown because they are not airworthy.

I will give another example of mismanagement. The hon. member asked me a question which I will answer. A number of years ago there was the Samson-Belair report which cost $239,000. If dealt very extensively with regard to postal delivery being left in the hands of private contractors. It went into the dollars and cents, and stated why that business should be left to private contractors. When the Post Office took over, there were 239 more trucks and hundreds more men. We had the cost of the Post Office operation going up and the service going down.

In committee I asked deputy ministers if they could cut their expenditures by at least 10 per cent a year. A number of them have told me that if so instructed by their ministers they could curtail expenditures by 10 per cent. I have presented motions requesting that this be done, but the Liberals have turned them down.

● (1700)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says present excessive expenditures have been brought about as a result of pressure from the news media, the opposition, and the general public. I challenged him on this issue in the context of Information Canada. That costs only a paltry $10 million a year, but it amounts to nothing but a bunch of duplication. There are 750 information officers spread out among the departments as a whole. We do not need them all. Information Canada is just duplication. That is a prime example, and I suggest to hon. members that if they read this speech they will find out a lot more.

Mr. Paproski: Don't go now, Joe. Can't you stand the heat?

Mr. McKenzie: Joe wouldn't run his shoe store the way this government runs the country.

Canadian Economy

Approximately half the government's spending cannot be touched by parliament as it is in the form of statutory estimates which can be examined, but not reduced. Members of parliament, when asked to approve estimates, do not receive government spending proposals in the form of meaningful programs in which objectives are outlined and justified on the basis of factual data. I am sure the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) will back me up in this assertion. There should be many improvements in the government's accounting system.

Mr. Crouse: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: The 1968-69 rule changes effectively curtailed the operations of parliament so that it no longer has an effective rein on supply. The result is that members of parliament now must spend long hours just trying to understand the format of the Blue Book of Estimates. Increasingly moneys are concealed in estimates and hidden votes such as those designated for security measures. These are being used more and more often. The party to which I belong is concerned about this, Mr. Speaker. It is a very real issue. The federal government is obsessed with secrecy with respect to its spending plans and programs. It conceals money in the estimates without explanation, and it prevents Commons committees from calling witnesses who are supposed to be responsible for directing expenditures into which we are inquiring.

The Ontario government made a very wise move recently. It hired the former Auditor General, Mr. Maxwell Henderson. He can be expected to stir up a storm in connection with almost anything he tackles. He has the rare ability to be able to cut through the fog and put his finger on sensitive issues. In a relatively short time, Henderson and his committee were able to come up with 184 recommendations which, if implemented, could save Ontario taxpayers $3.6 billion over the next two years. This is the gentleman whose authority hon. members opposite wished to curtail.

There is one person who is supposed to have been given the power to act as a watchdog over government spending, and that is the Auditor General. Bearing this in mind I should like to quote what my hon. friend from Peace River said in this House on June 2:

> As the power of the Commons has diminished with regard to meaningful examination and scrutiny of estimates, we have driven back to the final line of defence of the beleaguered taxpayer of Canada, the office of the Auditor General.

Unfortunately, though, the federal government is trying to place limitations on the power of the Auditor General in order to ensure that parliament, in the words of my hon. friend from Peace River, "does not have an effective, useful and meaningful Auditor General's office."

I should like to read some excerpts from the report of the Auditor General which I have to hand. For example, he states:

> A number of major concerns related to internal audit have been identified and may be summarized as follows: some departments have no internal audit.

I wonder whether the hon. member for St. Boniface carries out his business without an internal audit. I doubt it.

> Internal auditors are often involved in systems which may divert them or compromise their ability to discharge their responsibility.

Under "Program Forecasting and Budgeting" the report goes on to say:

An annual review of country program projects was carried out by operating units in the bilateral branch, the largest of the operating branches, but this review was not made in conjunction with the annual program forecast. As a result there is no firm information base to ensure that forecasts reflect executive priorities.

This sort of thing appears in hundreds of pages of the document which was released today.

CIDA is a subject in which I am interested, Mr. Speaker. I am not opposed to aiding under-privileged countries. Hon. members might note, however, that the budget has now reached almost one billion dollars a year. An article appeared recently about CIDA under the heading "Spend, Spend, Spend." Apparently officials were rushing around at the end of 1974 to get rid of $117 million which had been held over, so that the Treasury Board would not get it back. I have discussed this sort of thing with the Auditor General and he tells me it goes on in almost every department—they scurry about at the end of the year to spend any money they have in their votes. This is one area which ought to be looked into if the government has any real intention to curtail expenditures. It has nothing to do with cutting off somebody's old age pension.

Referring to CIDA, the Auditor General's report states:

Recipients of all grants and contributions should be shown in public accounts and consideration should be given to classifying grants and contributions by agency division, such as Asia, the Caribbean, the Commonwealth, etc. Consideration should be given to disclosing public accounts the full financial implications pertaining to the loan vote including the undisbursed portions of the authorized loans.

We in this House have tried to get hold of documents relating to CIDA—the subject was debated here recently—but the government declined to release documents upon the basis of which we could conduct a proper examination. It is members opposite who should be criticized, not us. We are the ones who are asking for open government and a proper accounting system.

The Auditor General has stated that some of his recommendations will be implemented. I, for one, hope they will all be implemented in the very near future. The Auditor General goes on to say:

Departmental financial transactions are recorded in two separate formal financial systems. In addition to utilizing the financial reporting services of the Department of Supply and Services the department also maintains its own computerized financial reporting systems. Inputs to the two systems are mainly prepared independently thus resulting in inefficiency and differences between total expenditures reported by the two systems. The department should exchange expenditure input data with Supply and Services in machine-readable format.

Reported in today's press is an example of the government's effort to contain expenditures. I can hardly believe it, since I find it very strange that the government should be making statements of any kind about curtailing its spending. At any rate, an article in today's paper, written by Geoff Johnson, says:

Up there on the 23rd floor of the Bell Canada palace on Elgin Street, lavishly appointed home of Treasury Board, keeper of the public purse, there is much honing of axes in readiness for the trimming of the public service.

The noise, of course, is muffled by the thick broadloom. Not for nothing is Treasury Board nesting in the most expensive accommodation ever rented by the federal government.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Certainly, its not the carpets which will feel the axe first. If Treasury Board President Jean Chrétien has his way, yesterday's news story in this paper indicated, public servants will be laid off rather than be reduced in number by attrition.

The cuts, said the report, were born with the government's anti-inflation program announced two months ago and are intended to show the country that the government is practising what it preaches.

Meanwhile, nearer ground level, all appeared normal.

An insurance company has vacated its offices on the first two floors of the huge complex at Kent and Laurier dominated by the Department of Indian Affairs.

The department is expanding and says it needs the room.

Next year the suite in La Promenade building on the Mall housing Southam News Services and several other newspaper offices, including mine, is to be vacated.

The Canada Council is expanding and says it needs the space.

● (1710)

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, no curtailment at all is planned by the government.

Any day now the battered wooden fence which screens the lower floors of the new Bank of Canada building will be removed, and the public will be able to take in at last the entire majesty of the 12-storey tower of reflecting glass, a jewel shimmering in a dark sea of concrete and steel.

Not even in the developers' paradise of Montreal has an office building of its size cost so much to erect. It is a magnificent monument to free spending, from the year-round garden enclosed in plain glass to the fact that it will cost more to heat and cool than any other government building.

It will make those cabinet ministers and public service mandarins who have spent thousands upon thousands of dollars on renovating their offices this year look like bagmen for Cromwell.

When that wooden fence is taken away, the teachers, the postal workers, the public servants to be laid off—all will be able to get close enough to see their faces in the mirror walls and to reflect on the virtue of austerity.

For a number of years this party has been asking for a complete examination of the operations of the unemployment insurance program. If unemployment exceeds 8 per cent this year—and many economists are predicting it—there will be over 800,000 Canadians out of work by December 31, 1975. That means each one of those Canadians will be a potential unemployment insurance recipient. Already, at an unemployment rate of 7.2 per cent annually, the unemployment insurance program is costing each Canadian man, woman and child $200 a year. The total cost of the program in 1975 alone is expected to be $4 billion. Between January, 1971, when the present program was first implemented, and December, 1975, our unemployment insurance bill is expected to reach a total of $10 billion. By comparison, between 1940 and 1970, a period of 30 years, Canada spent a total of only $6 million on unemployment insurance.

For well over two years the Progressive Conservative party has asked for an independent inquiry into the operations of the unemployment insurance program in order to find some answers to these and other problems associated with it. This is not an inquiry which implies a witch hunt or simply a crackdown on abuses, but one which would get to the roots of the problem and come up with some concrete answers. And unless there is an inquiry we feel the problems cannot be identified in their entirety and solutions found. In the absence of federal government initiative in this area, we continue to press for that inquiry. The alternative, as we see it now, is escalation of the present situation and the resulting damaging effects it can have on the country.

To turn to another subject, I understand that the government is going to relocate some of its federal operations from the capital city of Ottawa to Montreal. I fail to see how this can be a priority at the present time. We are continuing to put up more and more government skyscrapers. One has only to look at the situation in Hull, where the process is never-ending. There is already a printing bureau in Hull with a work force of up to 1,500, including the Olympic coin packaging unit. There are 2,000 employees of the Department of the Environment and Fisheries. I also understand there is going to be a $17 million parking garage constructed in Hull. The government talks of energy conservation and leaving cars at home; we are trying to encourage people to use buses, yet the government builds a $17 million parking garage.

A report was published two years ago which indicated the government was going to construct a $10 million parking garage on Parliament Hill. If its estimated cost was $10 million two years ago it is easy to imagine what it would cost today. Whether this is going to go ahead I do not know, but one area of cut back would certainly be the elimination of the $17 million parking garage in Hull.

Another construction phase in Hull is to be occupied by the Department of Supply and Services; it will cost $98 million, with phase IV budgeted at $63 million. Unspecified government departments will be major tenants of Campeau Corporation's Le Terasse de la Chaudiere, to be completed in 1979 at a cost of $160 million. I should like to know when government restraint is going to appear. I suggest government members have a lot of nerve to criticize opposition members for making no suggestions. I have made some suggestions today, and on another occasion I shall have a long list of examples of mismanagement and of programs that can be cut out.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like at the outset to re-read the motion, because after listening to some members I got worried and I shall say why after I have read the motion.

The motion read by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) states:

That this House considers the government has lacked foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of Canada and should be blamed for its failure to fulfil its promise of a fair and just society and to prevent the deterioration of the social climate, and its failure to stop the alarming increase in unemployment, to introduce measures other than price and wage control, to prevent the actual rate of inflation and to make loans available to the provinces at an interest rate not exceeding the cost of administration.

I read the motion, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member for Richmond read it, then gave us a rather long lecture. He even talked about capital punishment and all the crimes committed in the United States. That was one of the reasons why I wanted to read the motion. As for the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), he did not start his speech by reading the motion, but the whole time he was on his feet he spoke highly of a free society, of free enterprise.

Then I heard the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who spoke a little about unemployment but who particularly tried to impress the House with his reference to the natural resources of his province and to what he would do once those resources would be nationalized. Afterwards, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) spoke not only to the motion, but he took a few minutes to tell us exactly what had just been going on. I much appreciated it and I would ask the other members who did not pay attention as they should have to those comments to go over them after they are printed. Then we heard the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert). He probably brought back a few memories to several of us when he recalled the 1929 crash which rocked the United States, but he dealt primarily with a matter with which he is quite familiar and which he often refers to, whether before the house committees or here in this House, and that is the banking system now in operation in Canada. In his opinion, there are shortcomings in our system.

I will return to that if time permits. As for the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), I must more particularly dwell on them. He showed the House he has a quality no one knew he had. And I must say that two documents I am now holding total 489 pages. It is the Auditor General's report to the House of Commons. It was tabled today. As I said, there are 177 pages to the first part and 312 to the second. The hon. member could summarize all that and had assimilated it in about fifteen minutes. Moreover, he really convinced us that he had discovered the help we give underdeveloped countries and I could not understand his position, whether he approved or not.

I should like to deal with the motion moved by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). He regrets the lack of leadership of the present government. In the time that was allowed to him, probably against his way of thinking, he proved there is much leadership in Canada. To be able to criticize, structures must necessarily be set up. He lingered over that in a way which, I admit, seemed to him most deserving. He talked about the standing committees of the House to which I should like to turn my attention for a few moments. I have not had the opportunity, probably because I do not sit on the same committees, of seeing him often, particularly at those parliamentary committees considering precise matters. He might very well sit on other committees. We never meet. I have not had the opportunity to see him at these committee meetings.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, 21 parliamentary committees have been set up and have been operating differently ever since this government came to power. The Social Credit Party of Canada is quite willing to be part of them and as I indicated earlier the hon. member for Bellechasse does so; there has been at least 2,500 sittings and I am somewhat concerned about the fact that the hon. member for Richmond has stated that ministers are never present. On any parliamentary committee which requires the presence of ministers, the minister will attend, together with his assistants and departmental officials, to answer the questions which hon. members from from all the parties represented in the House may care to ask. In my opinion, this is a worthwhile initiative. Some hon. members used to say: we cannot meet so and so; we never meet anybody.

Those parliamentary committees give precisely the opportunity not only to enquire from the minister but also to question the government's policies. If that is not done, the responsibility cannot be laid upon the government; it has to be laid upon anyone not taking part in the committee proceedings. Some of us members do not participate for different reasons. There are a few who prefer to participate here, and this is within their rights. It should at least be acknowledged that not only do members and ministers responsible for various programs participate in committee proceedings, but there are also thousands of witnesses who appear before the various committees to testify.

To still the fears of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), let me point out that when the tax reform act was introduced, there was for three years and half a great deal of participation by the hon. members who took the time to study it. The result was a substantial bill about which people were able to discuss and not only express their concerns, but also change what they wanted to change by bringing well-prepared resolutions before the committees and putting arguments forward, and in several cases, they were accepted. So, Mr. Speaker, nobody should say that there is no government, that there is no participation and no cooperation.

Last week, we adopted the anti-inflation bill, which is considered today by the Senate, before which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is now appearing. I see that for some reason, Social Crediters are suggesting that this bill should not have been introduced, but until now I did not find in their speeches any alternate solution.

I noted several points on which I shall come back later, but I did not notice any alternative. I want to deal later on with some of the recommendations.

I understood that this was almost illegal, that regulations would be drafted, that a board would be established and that this would not even be legal. Also, I understood that it would be impossible for members of the House to review the legislation. I think that it is a great disservice not to have read the bill or what was said. That exercise will take place in Parliament, if required by members of Parliament. I think this should have been pointed out, but maybe some of my colleagues forgot.

I should like to talk about leadership. Most members of the Social Credit Party of Canada come from eastern Canada, but there was no direct intervention regarding energy. This matter was not raised during the debate. It seems to me that it is to show leadership to allow the people of eastern Canada to benefit from direct state intervention in the economy through legislation and to provide them all with gas or heating oil at lower cost, at a price lower than the world price.

Now, I hear comments right and left. It is a matter of $4 less. The balance of forces may have something good. To some members, that may not mean much. Indeed, 33⅓, 40 per cent may not mean anything to them, but I feel that to allow a price 40 per cent lower than the world price requires a direct participation in the economy. Oil companies do not expect that, Mr. Speaker, that is for sure. Many have come and made representations and are still doing so.

After hearing the remarks of the member for Athabaska (Mr. Yewchuk), I know that he certainly does not want anyone to dwell on this matter. With regard to his province, this afternoon he made a kind of a sermon on the mount. He spoke of the intervention of the government with regard to those companies. So, there should be some sort of a balance between the arguments that have been heard until now.

When the Food Prices Review Board was set up, some companies were required to produce facts. That is direct intervention. That was not appreciated either. Subsidies were granted to bread and milk producers. Now, that is intervention and leadership. You will not find that in very many countries, Mr. Speaker. But we had it here in Canada and it has been forgotten, or skimmed over very lightly, in an effort not to dwell on what has been done.

With regard to the milk industry in particular, we on this side have heard the representations that were made from every corner opposite. Not only was the government asked to take action, which it did, but it was asked to intervene to a far greater extent than it did. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, both claims cannot not be made at one and the same time, namely that there is government intervention that costs money and redistributes wealth and, in the same breath, that there is no such intervention. Perhaps it would be better to go on to something else.

The exercise that fascinated me the most, Mr. Speaker, was in fact what was said about the year 2000.

The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) made extraordinary projections. What struck me most at the very beginning of his remarks, was that he at least admitted that in this country where there is a government intervention, the average family income is $14,000. I may have missed something somewhere along the line, Mr. Speaker, but I think that as far as resources or structures are concerned, our country ranks second in the world. Even if it ranked only third or fourth, it would be quite good.

The government's responsibility is broader than that. This does not mean that everyone is earning this much or more. I think the government insisted on this, but it was in the spirit of the anti-inflation bill to ensure that people who cannot get along are given some attention. In order to achieve that, the economy had to be reviewed, and that is what the government did. This may be distressing to my honourable friends over there, I would not know. But if they are taken aback, I wish I could know because we have to help those who cannot help themselves. That was said by an honourable member earlier, and I think everybody in this House believes it. However, we must also restrain the abuses which befalls our society, whether they are ascribable to the governement, to the companies or to the unions.

Now, if one of these areas is deprived of certain powers, we may be sure that we will hear about it sooner or later, Mr. Speaker. We saw it in the parliamentary committee which sat on that matter. Certain companies or groups of people are absolutely opposed to the government taking any decision. The more you look at it, the more intervention there is, and the less I understand the motion put forward today.

I would also like to refer to what was done in the United States, because the point was raised a while ago. Price and wage controls in the United States seem to be placed in a context far removed from reality. They do not exist since 1970 in the U.S., they have been in existence for more than 30 years! They were imposed and removed from time to time. But they were not a successful in the United States according some American economists I met. They told us: We had several problems. We were told that thousands of civil servants would be needed to set up such a structure in our country. It is exactly what the Canadian government said. Then, we followed another course.

Just the same, one thing must be admitted: in the United States, the rate of inflation is now lower than it is here. There might have been some deficiencies in their system, as I said earlier, but what is good and useful in it might be adapted to our needs. That is what the anti-inflation act, Bill C-73, does at present.

There is also a point that our socialist friends do not mention very often, that productivity in the United States which is much higher. Now, some union leaders I met there take a quite different position. In some cases, those people not only restrict their demands on the tax revenues, but they also ask for salary cuts in some cases. I did not see that here, Mr. Speaker. I do not say we should follow that course, but I wish only to mention that there is in the States a quite obvious sense of responsibility that does not exist here within our unions. Maybe we should look more fully into that situation and ask everyone, since it is the subject of the bill under consideration, to participate in a reassessment and to ensure that our productivity is in proportion to our demands on the economy.

Another point which was previously mentioned is the fact that 29 per cent of our products are imported. We must realize that although this country is endowed with extraordinary resources, it also has a very harsh climate. A glance through the window today will be enough to convince us that we are living in a country with very rough climatic conditions. I am told that at this very moment the city of Toronto is totally paralyzed by a snow storm which is heading towards our area. So, this climate is not the best for all kinds of crops. This is why we have to rely on imports. I believe the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) made that point this afternoon. I have no objection to imports because they are a necessity.

But what do we have in the present legislation? It says: All right, there are world prices, world markets, and we are now going to apply controls within our boundaries, set up marketing programs and ask the cooperation of provincial governments. It will not be easy.

I must admit that there was some abuse in that area. I myself was in that business for years and I could talk about it at length. However, I do not think this is the right place. Just the same, there is one thing we should consider, and the government does so. Farmers made justified representations, saying their revenues are not in keeping with their contribution to the Canadian economy, and I agree 100 per cent with them. But I say the government should stop and consider the very wide gap between farm income and consumer prices. That wide gap is not justified in some cases. I think that is where the problem lies, and where this bill will apply.

The question of the social climate was raised and is properly mentioned in the motion. And time permitting, I wish to address the House for a few minutes on that subject.

We have to admit first of all that there is no such thing as perfection on earth. But there are certainly in the social climate, in the areas with which some of my colleagues are familiar, some determining factors for the Canadian society. An hon. member earlier mentioned the guaranteed annual income. If we consider that 56 per cent of the federal budget, as the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Yewchuk) said, is transferred to the provinces and individuals, it is obvious that this equalization contributes to a better social climate, but is also a source of problems for managers. Therefore we should ask ourselves: Is that justified? In my opinion, it is indeed.

Secondly, does this help those who are most in need in our society? This is a very far-reaching question, Mr. Speaker, and we could spend a lot of time talking about it. But I believe that the programs that have been created, submitted and approved by this Parliament contained some factors which improved the social climate. I can list these programs: There is health insurance and also unemployment insurance, which constitute a transfer to individuals. This is costly, but we must ask ourselves one question. We must revise the position not only of individuals, but also of the government, whatever party is in power. We must ask ourselves a more far-reaching question than that. Does each level of the government now receive its part of the fiscal pie? In my opinion, that is valid question. I did not see it in the motion. It could have been brought up.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are discussing today is obviously very timely. The lack of foresight in the direction of public affairs must certainly be noticed by the whole Canadian population. This lack of foresight is made even worse by the fact that all the data concerning this quasi catastrophic situation were clear and obvious several years ago. The problems were therefore systematically clouded. People were blinded to the facts on purpose. The last two elections showed the blatant inconsistence of government leadership. I would like to point out in particular the action of the Prime Minister during the last election campaign. How lightly, and I must also say how skilfully, he denounced and ridiculed the price and wage freeze proposal advocated by the Progressive Conservative party. Furthermore, how frivolously did he move about on the "Trudeau express" inviting people to come and see the train and admire Mrs. Trudeau and the two little Trudeaus at that time.

Mr. Speaker, we were then in a deep period of inflation. Can that be called leadership? How remote was that from considering the real solutions that were needed to remedy the problems of the day? That lack of leadership brought this government to accept today what it was laughing at heartily yesterday. And we now have that Anti-Inflation Board which wants to control prices and wages. Already, as our motion suggests, we have repercussions of that government's action and already we can feel it is leading to a deterioration of the social climate. Already we see that it will swell the wave of unemployment. Already we can see the accurate aims of the non-confidence motion we introduced against this government. And, contrary to what the hon. member who spoke before me suggested, we are all the better placed to put our finger on those shortcomings that we were detecting in the government administration, that we had foreseen for a number of years and where the economic and financial policies of the government were systematically leading us. Let them come and tell us that we forget to talk about what has been done. Of course, measures and steps were taken, decisions were made, but all those measures, all those steps and all those decisions did not reach the goal that they should have. And as my hon. colleague for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) suggested earlier, that reminds me of someone who has a number of miles to go to reach a goal; he is going somewhere, and he has 300 miles to cover to get there. And there is the government telling us, we have gone 50 miles, we have reached that point and we are stopping there. It is all very nice to do 50 miles but what matters are those remaining 300 miles. Indeed, I think that in the present economic situation there is a distance ahead and if after 50 miles we decide to stop we have not gone very far.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are all the better placed to blame this government as for many years we pointed out the shortcomings that existed, we warned of what could happen, foreseeable catastrophies. Now is the day of reckoning. Mr. Speaker, the remedies will always fail to cope effectively with the conditions, since we never deal with the basic issue from which stem all the problems which we face.

Mr. Speaker, the settlement of the energy crisis seems to be quite an important matter, since oil prices in Canada are lower than at the world level. It would be ridiculous if it were otherwise. Indeed how could a government find normal that a country which a few weeks ago was exporting a million barrels of oil daily can tolerate dependence on foreign oil while it keeps on exporting some. It is so stupid and ridiculous that it was quite proper to establish a single price throughout Canada. Why did the government failed for years to direct its efforts toward the distribution of Canadian oil from west to east? Why has it not implemented such a policy? Why is there not today that famous pipeline which would bring oil to Montreal? Why? Is it not lack of foresight or consistence on the part of the government to hear the hon. member say: The government has done extraordinary things in setting up prices below the world price? Mr. Speaker, in Canada we have all we need when it comes to oil.

In the energy field, we have all we need to meet our requirements. We do not even have to rely on foreign crude but on one condition, that the government defines beforehand a policy to make up for it. Are we not right in saying that the government lacked foresight? Was it not the government's role to have foreseen that oil producing countries would one day close the tap? Is not a government there to anticipate those developments? Is it not there consequently to prevent and forestall them? I think it is unacceptable that we were subjected to that crisis. The hon. member was certainly ill inspired to use this as an example, because it was the height of ridicule and stupidity for a country as rich as Canada in energy in every shape and form, including oil, and the hon. member would have been right; in this case, however, as I said, he would have to disregard the millions of gallons of oil we are selling every day to the United States. We established a quota last week: 700,000 barrels a day instead of a million. Since we are selling oil, Mr. Speaker, the government should not come and talk to us about shortage or difficulties—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the information the hon. member is giving the House is entirely wrong. We have not exported one million barrels of oil for the past two years. We export approximately 550,000 barrels.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hopefully hon. members will wait for their turn to make their speeches; otherwise, if there are interventions and voiced disagreement, all hon. members will have difficulties putting forward their ideas. Hon. members should not rise on points of order to make contradictory statements, but should wait for the proper occasion to make their own speeches.

Mr. Matte: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it is only a digression I was making before moving along with my remarks. But indeed, as recently as a week ago, or perhaps 15 days ago, the government decided to limit the exports at 700,000 instead of one million. So we should know what is going on here before interjecting. Now, Mr. Speaker, about the measures which have been taken and which one would like to praise, the actual measures taken by the government, there is none which could have been anticipated, although this could have been possible. On the other hand, we are sure all that could have been avoided, particularly if we had started from one essential fact.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) dealt with this and I do not want to comment on it at any length myself, but still I think he raised some really essential points. True enough, it was said three, four or five years ago, that the increasingly disastrous economic situation which was forthcoming could be ascribed to world conditions. We were told again and again that we had to accept it because it was a worldwide problem. Inflation was a worldwide problem! That is the answer that was given to all those who asked questions about the economic progress in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the government was thus trying systematically if not misleadingly to cover up the lack of leadership which prevented it from assuming its own responsibilities. You cannot speak of inflation as a world phenomenon in a country like ours, brimming over with natural resources of all sorts, capable of being self-sufficient, a country thus gifted with an almost totally independent economy. As I have already said in this House, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat it again, outside of bananas, grapefruits, and lemons, we lack very little in Canada. Furthermore, as my hon. colleague for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) has pointed out, as far as lemons, are concerned, we have a good supply in the benches opposite.

So, is it possible that in a country like ours, capable of producing as much as we can, we should be told by our government that we will have to tighten our belts, that our production is not up to par and that, consequently, people will have to be urged to produce more. But to produce from what? Everyone knows that to produce, one must have, in the first place, the raw materials. And the raw material, we have them. Is there one hon. member in this House who can say that Canada has not all the raw materials required to produce all that we need? Who can say this? Is there one hon. member who would dare stand up and say that Canada does not have the natural resources required to produce everything we need, and this in all areas, namely food, clothing, construction and so on? This is the question we should ask ourselves.

Now that we have all the resources required, what else do we need, Mr. Speaker? Labour? Not with an unemployment rate of up to 10 and 12 per cent in some parts of the country. Then we have enough labour to produce whatever we need. What is lacking? Money, or rather the permission the government should give to issue the necessary credit to set production in action. For that matter, if the government had guided its policy in this direction, we would never have reached the point where we are today because, Mr. Speaker, if we try with economic means to achieve this equation, this perfect balance between the production we need all over the country on the one hand and on the other hand, the possibility of consuming this production, the problem of inflation will no longer exist. But when we have a government and leaders who admit candidly, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister has done in answer to my question this afternoon, that we borrow money by means of government savings bonds at a 9½ per cent interest rate which we lend interest free to foreign countries. Mr. Speaker, to borrow money at 9¼ per cent interest to lend it interest-free, that is bordering on ridicule. Come on!

Mr. Speaker, why a government leader simply answers that we cannot lend interest-free money within Canada? Because we have to borrow that money: this is the best joke I heard today. I will come back to that tomorrow so that the prime minister may not sound so ridiculous.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when a government has been warned and told what should be done, and the honourable Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) comes and asks us what are the suggestions? He must have been kidding when he said that. Usually, every time we have the opportunity, we are very careful to dot the "Is" and never do we criticize in a totally negative way; on the contrary, we always seek a proposal to counterbalance the negative criticism which we have the right to offer, right which we exercise.

This is why our motion ends in that way—when I hear the hon. member saying that we did not propose any concrete solution—that our motion ends in that way and I quote:

—and to make loans available to the provinces at an interest rate not exceeding the cost of administration.

In my opinion, this is a very concrete suggestion and we are sure of this statement. Moreover, if this was not true, if there was no opportunity—

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Canadian Economy

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The honourable Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, may I make a remark. I think that I did say in my remarks, that some solutions were put forward about which I would like to talk, and which were presented by a colleague of the hon. member. Now, I did not have time to discuss them, but I wish I had. Maybe the hon. member took it the wrong way, or perhaps he just misunderstood. I want this to be recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Matte: At any rate, if the hon. member had not quite well understood then, I hope he has now and that he will prevail upon his colleagues to accept it.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I would like to point out that in this Parliament there is a dedicated political party whose existence depends on the economic policies he has put forward in order to fight inflation, which should not be ignored when we see even today that our neighbours to the South have understood the need to flight inflation by decreasing the interest rate. Indeed the First National City Bank in the United States is reported in the Sept 22nd 1975 issue of La Presse as having announced that it would lower its interest rate from 7.25 to 7 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, why don't we, here in Canada, go ahead since inflation can only be controlled by decreasing the interest rate, which would result in making borrowing easier and hence increasing production and really fighting inflation.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga).

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, if it meets with the approval of the Chair I would call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blais: No, Mr. Speaker. I was simply asking for the indulgence of the House to have the floor and carry on with the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) has the floor.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with the first aspect of the motion brought before the House by the Social Credit party. The part I am interested in reads:

> That this House considers the government has lacked foresight and leadership in the conduct of the affairs of Canada and should be blamed for its failure to fulfil its promise of a fair and just society and to prevent the deterioration of the social climate . . .

When one observes that one is overspending and debts are mounting, generally this is the time to restrain spending and look seriously at ways to stabilize, and even reduce one's debt. Yet sound personal thinking and government rationale apparently are quite different.

In fact, government mismanagement has reached such extremes that a Canadian youth would have to stretch his imagination to the breaking point if he were to try to visualize his country as one that had a stable let alone decreasing cost of living. How could he be expected to understand a society which was strike-free, with a crime rate under control, with no expensive subsidies and privileges, with reasonable levels of income tax, and a monetary system in which a dollar will buy at least a quarter's worth of goods?

It would be great if youngsters knew "inflation" as something that filled balloons and bicycle tires; if "economy" meant "saving" and if "efficiency of government" and "dignity and self-reliance" were not just antiquated phrases they do not understand. Instead, they are encouraged to believe that man is so clever today he can ignore past experiences, and that once respected principles are no longer valid. Then they wonder why mankind is not happier today and if, perhaps, some element influencing that happiness is missing. After all, there is a great difference between cleverness and wisdom. And in the area of wisdom the government leaves a great deal to be desired.

The function of government in promoting Canada's economic growth is to encourage a climate in which initiatives and incentives can operate for the good of individuals and society. To ensure that the Canadian economy will serve the common good of all Canadians it is necessary to combine economic growth, price stability, taxation equity, and regional development. This would not reject the need for government control or participation in specific areas, but it would require that the state not stifle the ability of Canadians to make their own decisions within the framework of social order and economic justice. It needs imaginative government action directed toward unleashing the potential of the people themselves to put the economy on a sound footing.

The major social and economic problems facing Canada today are those disastrous twins, unemployment and inflation. The government has not succeeded in stemming the relentless inroads it is making into the lives of all. Piecemeal and fragmented activity cannot overcome unemployment. Make work programs such as the Local Initiatives and Opportunities for youth, even though some of their projects are beneficial to a few communities and individuals, are merely temporary stop-gaps that simply cannot be considered as an organized attack on unemployment.

We need long-term, realistic guidelines, something conspicuously absent in many Liberal government policies. Some guidelines have been set by the Economic Council of Canada, but left largely ignored in their implementation. I ask why the council's sound advice has not been taken by the government? The government has the responsibility of defining a workable national development policy. That plan must begin immediately if the unemployment and inflation dilemma is to be solved. Canada's industrial potential must be thoroughly examined and priorities given to areas where our skills and resources yield the greatest returns.

The Science Council of Canada recommended, soundly, to this effect: that the co-ordination of policies within the different levels of government is essential in order to plan wisely. The economic planning must begin with the co-ordination of the departments of the federal government, and must have definite inter-relationship with the provincial governments, to the benefit of all bodies of the administration. The lack of co-ordination within departments of the federal government is quite evident, especially in the ministries of Regional Economic Expansion and Manpower. These departments tend to pursue their own economic ideals independently, and often in contradiction to the policies of the Department of Finance.

No economy can be really vital without competition and, to encourage it, greater efforts must be made to protect individuals and the public interest from abusive monopolies. It is imperative that the trust of the Canadian people in their economy and in their own abilities be restored to them. They must also be assured that their government is capable of tackling the major economic problems facing the country today. This trust can only be rekindled if the government takes the people into its confidence, outlines to them its strategy and objectives, and is willing to work with every sector involved in order to reach its goals.

The Economic Council of Canada has warned time and time again that public expenditure and taxation trends are accelerating wage and price inflation to much higher levels than is suggested by conventional budget-impact indicators. However, the government refuses to heed the warning.

Public sector growth adds to inflation, but what has the government done to curb its expenditure and growth? A comparative view of the expenditures will clearly indicate how the fires of inflation have been fueled. In 1974 the federal government spent twice as much as it did in 1969, three times more than it did in 1961, and 12 times more than it spent in 1950. If expenditures continue to increase at the rate which they did from 1973 to 1974, they will double in less than three years. This adds up to a daily spending of $78.8 million, an hourly spending of $3.3 million, and $54,000 every 60 seconds.

Almost half of this vast amount of money that the federal government spends comes directly from personal income taxes. The rate which Canadians are now paying has increased by a staggering 13 per cent in just seven years.

Total government spending for last year will be around $33 billion; almost 40 per cent of the gross national product. The question is, can the country afford this kind of extravagance at the present time? Considering the economic problems we face, I do not believe that we can.

Of this spending, approximately one half cannot be touched by parliament as it is in the form of statutory estimates which can be examined, but not reduced, by the House of Commons. Members of parliament, when asked to approve the estimates, do not receive government proposals in the form of meaningful programs in which objectives are outlined and justified on the basis of factual data. Because of rule changes in 1968-69, the estimates cannot be debated in detail but must be passed by a definite fixed date. These rule changes effectively curtailed the ability of parliament to hold effective reins on supply.

The result is that members of parliament must now spend long hours just trying to understand the format of the Blue Book estimates. Increasingly, moneys are concealed in the estimates and hidden in votes. The designation of votes which are hidden because of alleged security reasons is being used more and more often.

In the six short years of the reign of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), from 1968 to 1974, the numbers on the federal payroll increased by a staggering 27 per cent, a record rate of growth in the history of Canada. The government most certainly does need a watchdog. Let us check, too, just what the national position is today in regard to federal civil servants.

In 1946, just after the war, there were 31,088 permanent federal civil servants to minister to a population of 12,500,000, or 403 people per government employee. The cost in salaries annually was $66,440,000, or $5.30 per Canadian. In December of 1973, 27 years later, the number of federal civil servants had risen to 254,610, a ratio of one civil servant for 87 Canadians, and the cost had risen to the astronomical height of $2,557 million. That works out to a $115 tag for administration services for each of us.

This does not include the additional employees, numbering some 143,600, in Crown agencies such as the Canadian National Railway and Air Canada.

Neither do these figures include a temporary staff of 35,400. Regardless of its alleged philosophy to the contrary, it is abundantly clear that the Liberal party is involving the government more and more in practically every aspect of the lives of Canadians; nor is there the slightest shred of evidence that would indicate that it intends to reduce this involvement.

What this means is that at the rate of civil service growth which we have experienced over the past, in another 27 years, under Liberal guidance, by the year 2000 there will be 2,820,700 civil servants burrowing into every facet of our lives, while it will be costing us $2,645 each for this service.

The most flagrant example of this in government ranks can be seen in the office of the Prime Minister himself. Indeed, in the years up to 1974, the total number of staff, personal assistants and advisers, has risen to 100 odd. Why then does the Prime Minister need a cabinet? The answer, of course, is that he does not. In effect then, we have a similar system to that of a president of the United States with all its abuses, but without the check of a congressional system. And our Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) stated that growth in government expenditure should be restrained.

Agriculture is a department which can very well illustrate the escalation of the numbers game. In 1946 there were 1,800 full-time employees of that department, which meant that the ratio was one federal employee to administer to the needs and requests of every 104 farmers. By 1973 that ratio had narrowed to one staff member per 24 farmers. At this rate, by the year 1984, there will be more bureaucrats in the agricultural field than there will be farmers.

With this vast body of employees engaged in the welfare of the farmer, who foresaw and planned for the drastic state that the industry is in now? Who worried then, and who is worrying now about the financial losses and anxiety that the farmer is enduring today? Agriculture cannot be viewed as a number of separate entities. It is a complete package, but a package with many components. The beef industry cannot be separated from the grain industry as each is woven into that of the other. A sound policy for administering the needs of the one must take into account the requirements of the other for the betterment of the whole.

Agriculture is not one of our more important industries; it is the most important. This fact was ably pointed out by the member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) in the House a short time ago, but as our most important industry, agriculture is not getting the priority it merits. Why are the farmers not more actively involved in working out improvements in their own industry? Rather than increase and improve some of the agricultural products in our country, the government has actually tried to restrict their production. As the welfare of agriculture depends on the efficient movement of grain, animals, and machinery, it is imperative that a viable transportation policy be developed.

Let us now examine just what the government has done to assist small business in this country. At the present time small Canadian businesses are caught in a cost-price squeeze. The Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen has found that the small businessman is having to pay higher costs for his goods, and is forced into selling them at a higher price. In spite of this higher selling price and an increase in volume sales, only about one third of the businessmen have experienced higher profits.

As small business generates more employment, more real growth, and more tax revenue than does big business in Canada, it is time that the government realized that a comprehensive policy must include measures to stimulate small-business activity.

The massive amounts of money that are spent today on the unemployment insurance program are something that bears careful scrutiny also. An inquiry into its operation is definitely necessary—a public inquiry, not a witch-hunt, to get at the root problems of this debacle. Practical, sound solutions must be found to the fundamental questions which are arising from the mismanagement of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Disincentives to work are built into the act and something must be done to eradicate them. It is most important to make a distinction between an insurance program and a welfare plan in which the contritutions are merely another form of taxation.

This multi-billion dollar program should be looked at with a view to the overall social policies of all departments, and co-ordinated with them. The prime consideration must be the most efficient means possible of assisting persons finding themselves jobless, the ways of supporting them most adequately with the co-operation of all agencies involved, and of getting them back into the work force as quickly as possible.

It is becoming increasingly clear to a great many Canadians that a higher priority must be given to the quality of life in our country. Although it is essential for our social well-being that Canada enjoys sufficient economic growth to meet the needs of her people, we must be liberated from the "bigger is better" complex. Bigger is not necessarily better; otherwise why has Canada so many social problems after a generation of material prosperity?

Why are there five million Canadians living below the poverty level? Why have the numbers of crimes of violence increased so drastically? Why do so many people have to resort to alcohol and drugs for escape from reality? Why do they find it necessary to flee from the reality of living in one of the most richly-bestowed and beautiful countries in the world? Our values and opportunities must be emphasized to give greater meaning to life in Canada.

Government policies must reflect the realization that the worth of each Canadian cannot be counted simply in terms of input into the economic system. If, in the past, cities had to give priority to the hardware of municipal services they should now begin to emphasize those which will enable people to fulfil their potential. Our primary task should be to demand policies based on that premise, policies which will enable Canadians to lead lives of dignity, with meaning and responsibility. From infancy to old age, each person should have the opportunity to enjoy the fullness of life. We must hold the belief strongly that there is a need for a system of social justice that maximizes every Canadian's sense of individual initiative and enterprise.

Attention must be given to social development which has for too long been neglected, and it should begin with a clearer understanding of what a truly human and spiritual existence can be. Past indifference to this quality has brought us to the present situation where our populace is beseiged by ills of the spirit. We must realize that humanistic and spiritual considerations must become vitally important ones.

Government cannot legislate a meaningful lifestyle, but it can undertake programs designed to foster it. There is an urgent and compelling need to bring order out of the chaos of overlapping and cumbersome programs.

Policies involving senior citizens should be revised in order that they may experience a greater fullness of life. One never outgrows the need to believe in one's self-worth, but the trend in our society has been to demean the aging. Many older people sense that they are losing their identity as persons, and a physical approach to their condition is not enough. More positive efforts are required to help the senior citizen preserve his independent indentity.

Social justice must not be mistaken for socialism or for welfarism, because they are altogether different, Mr. Speaker. Let us not think that the socialists have a corner on compassion. Indeed, the one thing I have noticed about them is that their compassion bears a marked relationship to their distance from an object and its source of funds and aid. They have great enthusiasm for public money going to foreign countries and for wonderful projects such as Petro-Can, but they have somewhat less enthusiasm for private money going to individual Canadians. They are great at giving out money as long as it is the public's money, but we dare not touch their pockets. My complaint is that those feelings of compassion have been smothered by years of state expansion until Canadians expect the state to do everything, because now it has gotten into everything. We must have a policy which is based on returning the state to its proper function of serving the individual, and not the other way around.

A socialist is one who thinks he knows all the answers. In fact he thinks that he knows what is best for an individual, even better than the individual himself. He strives for complete government domination of the economy and believes that the government should own, or at least control, all productive capital. "Public ownership" he calls it, or "belonging to the people". These are very slick phrases, Mr. Speaker, but let us ask the socialists: do we own Air Canada or the Post Office? Of course we don't. Nobody owns these institutions unless it is cabinet ministers and their bureaucrats who control the money—money which comes from you and me, the taxpayers. It is true welfarism has an immense political advantage and is the best cover-up for basic injustice. It has a built-in defence against criticism. But let us remember a statement made by Lenin.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may, however, continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Elzinga: I thank hon. members for giving me an opportunity to continue.

Let us remember a statement of Lenin's. He said that the way to destroy the middle class was to crush it between the grindstones of taxation and inflation. And that is just what the government is doing. The inadequacies of many of the proposals put forward by the government make me more and more aware each day that it does not have any positive solutions or policies to solve the problems of this country. Too many of the government's decisions reflect a strong tendency to put that which is expedient ahead of that which is basically sound from the long term point of view. It is time there was restoration of ideals and principles to their rightful place in our national politics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) has given us again the opportunity to deal with two economic issues which are a grave concern for Canada and the entire world, that is inflation and unemployment.

I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on both problems, especially on unemployment and then more particularly on a few aspects of the anti-inflation program introduced in the House of Commons eight weeks ago. Those two problems are important, not only for Canada but for the entire world. I noted it in the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Richmond. It is quite important in assessing the responses of the Canadian government to compare them with the responses of other governments and to consider also the conditions in other countries in comparison with the progress made in Canada.

[English]

As I was saying, the two questions of unemployment and inflation are questions which are of grave concern not only to us in Canada but to the broader world. The response to the hon. member's motion, as indeed the response to these problems, must therefore be measured against a wider backdrop. The motion put forward by the hon. member does provide an opportunity, on a day when we have seen the result of the Statistics Canada "Survey of Employment in Canada," to make some observations on the subject of unemployment and the difficulties we have been facing with a high unemployment rate, one at almost the same level on a seasonally adjusted basis since the spring of this year.

There is little in the statistics we saw today which could give anyone much satisfaction. Those who read the rules of economic prediction and from time to time seek to analyze the figures and draw conclusions about a trend, find, curiously, some support for the conclusion that the strengthening of the level of employment of males in the work force and females over the age of 25 indicates a strongly positive cyclical factor and may justify the prediction of a strong recovery within the Canadian economy in the quarters to come. Nevertheless, we cannot do any more at the present time than draw some hope from the figures. There is no ground for satisfaction.

One of the difficult questions of policy making with which we have been faced in this country is how to deal with two economic problems at the same time. One of the difficulties about proposing solutions is that one should not, on the one hand, undertake public expenditures which, while they might have a significant effect in terms of reducing unemployment, also run the risk on the other side of substantially increasing the rate of inflation in Canada. I suppose that the best sources one can look to in this regard are those in the Canadian business community who, from time to time, have to make decisions on the basis of government policy, so as to see the kind of conclusions they have drawn as to the extent to which we have arrived at some kind of balance.

Let me refer to the 1975 fall issue of Canada's Business Climate, issued by the Toronto-Dominion Bank, which put it in this way:

> In spite of the serious reversals in housebuilding activity and the external trade balance, Canada's recession was shorter and milder than elsewhere in the industrialized world. Among the factors contributing to this was the sustained strength of business investment and, even more important, the federal government's swift move to an expansionary policy of tax cuts early in the recession. The speedy response helped prevent a serious erosion in consumer confidence and enabled the volume of consumer spending to continue to increase for 1975 as a whole.

One is faced, in reading the conclusions both of the academic economists and those writing for the business community, with an ambivalence that occurs at all times. For example, Professors Wilson and Jump of the University of Toronto's Institute for Policy Analysis expressed regret at the June budget, having the feeling that it would have a contractionary effect on economic growth. They added that the contractionary impact of the budget on consumer spending would be magnified if the announced policy of expenditure restraint were put into effect this year.

So there you have it, Mr. Speaker. Side by side, or one after the other, you have the comments of the Toronto-Dominion Bank to the effect that the policies of my predecessor in budget making were of considerable benefit in cushioning the effects in Canada of the very much more serious recession that was felt in other parts of the world; and you have the concern, on the other hand, that the budget had not gone far enough.

Turning to another banker-economist, John D. Parish, senior assistant economist with the Bank of Montreal who warned in mid-September that heavy-handed policy actions aimed at fighting inflation by restricting the economy would mean a renewed period of recession before mid-1976. There is a third, qualified opinion indicating that our most serious concern is that expenditures in Canada should not be cut down at too great a rate lest there be the risk of increasing the level of unemployment in Canada.

This is a comment that should be set alongside that of the 17 economists led by Messrs. Crispo and Hartle, who have directed themselves to the question of inflation only, turning a blind eye to the fact that the kind of policies which they advocate may indeed be very successful in dealing with inflation in a harsh way but bring with them the very substantial risk that the rate of unemployment in Canada will be increased.

Going back to the first of my quotations, I would say to Messrs. Crispo and Hartle that they should consult their colleagues who are professional economists, and see if they can get together and form some collective opinion that will perhaps offer some more balanced solutions to the economic problems facing us at this particular time.

The second of the questions which the hon. member has raised in his motion concerns inflation. I suppose there has been no question that has absorbed more hours of parliamentary time since we resumed on October 14 than inflation, from the first day's discussion in general terms of the government's proposals to meet inflation, and then the specific terms of Bill C-73. I am not going to go over once again the broad terms of the program or the details of the bill, but in response to that part of the hon. member's motion which relates to whether or not there is perceived to be foresight or leadership in the program may I refer this time not to professional economists but to the Canadian people themselves. Let me put on the record the reaction of Canadians obtained in recent weeks by various surveys, one by the CBC and Radio-Canada, and another by the Gallup poll.

In the survey conducted for CBC News between November 25 and December 2, 61 per cent of Canadians, or nearly two thirds, declared themselves to be in favour of the federal prices and incomes program. The degree of support, of course, varies from region to region. Three out of four Canadians in British Columbia and the four Atlantic provinces favour the government's approach; the other regions were less enthusiastic in their support. But the survey shows on a national basis that, of those Canadians who expressed an opinion on the program, two out of every three favoured the government's attack on rising living costs.

The survey also revealed some interesting reactions regarding the public's perception of the single most important factor that has contributed to inflation in Canada. For example, 28 per cent of those surveyed felt that wage demands were the most important factor behind inflation; 24 per cent said that world wide economic conditions, including rising energy costs, were a major reason. Some 13 per cent felt inflation was due to expenditure by various levels of government, and only 10 per cent felt that profits were responsible.

Some rather interesting contrasts were provided in response to a series of questions having to do with expectations for the program. For example, 84 per cent of all Canadians agree that, to quote the question, "for the sake of the country as a whole, all Canadians should try to make the government's wage and price controls work". An even greater number, 86 per cent, said that they would personally accept controls and try to make them work. At the same time a lesser number, about one half, or 47 per cent, said they thought not enough Canadians would support the controls to make them work. I think those are revealing statistics indicating that while there is a great will on the part of a substantial number of Canadians to accept controls there is the feeling that their neighbours, others in the community, will not co-operate. Indeed it was because of the feelings that were revealed that my colleagues, after the course of the consensus operation last spring, came forward with this particular program.

Mr. Stanfield: So that is the reason, is it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The poll showing 61 per cent in favour of the program is matched by the Gallup poll, which found 62 per cent in support. The French network survey conducted with La Presse found 56 per cent support. I hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) laughing. I suppose one can only expect at this point in time that when he changes his position to being against controls the majority of Canadians will be in favour of them.

One of the interesting questions has been the extent to which the controls might be extended under the provisions of Bill C-73 which has passed the House. There have been extensive representations during the period of time that the white paper and the bill were before the public indicating that particular groups in the economy should, for reasons of strategic importance, be included within the controls program. The government's concern has been that the controls should be selective, that they should not be the kind of comprehensive controls on all aspects of the economy that have been proposed by others. It is our concern that these controls should be selective in an attempt to control the principal sectors which, without that kind of control, could have the most adverse effect on the community.

We would conclude, however, that the governor in council should under Bill C-73, upon receiving Royal Assent, direct the Anti-Inflation Board to consider the situation in the following industries: the trucking industry; the construction industry, and here we are considering, of course, firms with less than 20 employees; the shipping industry on the west coast of Canada, the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence; the longshoring industry; and the grain handling industry, with a view to recommending whether, in what manner, and to what extent designations should be made under 12(2) of Bill C-73 so as, for example, to cover present collective bargaining in these particular industries.

If the Anti-Inflation Board makes a positive recommendation in respect of any or all of the foregoing industries, and if the governor in council decides to designate some or all of these industries, the designation will take effect as of today and the designation will be applicable to both prices and compensation.

We are now engaged in this anti-inflation program, having moved to the end of the first phase, namely, seeking parliamentary support, and I would hope the bill will receive the support of the Senate within a matter of some days, and then we can have Royal Assent. At that point we will be able to move into the stage at which the Anti-Inflation Board and the administrator would be able to carry out the wishes of parliament as indicated in the bill.

I think we can at this time take some lessons from the reaction shown by the polls, namely, that there is a very substantial degree of support for this kind of program from the Canadian people. With the mobilization of this kind of support I think it is important not just for the government but, indeed, for all parties to lend their support in this effort to overcome inflation in Canada.

There may, indeed, be criticism of individual parts of the program, and there may, indeed, be criticism of the manner in which either the government or those appointed under the program may carry it out, but I think the ultimate truth, which I hope all will accept, is that none of us in this House or in the country stands to gain by continuing inflation. It is in that spirit that I hope we can arrive at an early reduction in the rate of inflation in Canada, and arrive at that point, which indeed I am sure is hoped for by all quarters in the House, where it ceases to be one of the major economic problems disturbing us in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) who took advantage of the opportunity he had tonight to reiterate all the hopes he puts in his anti-inflation bill. I for one wish that these hopes have lasted since the government presented its bill a month ago. However, I am sure they will disappear, alas too soon, whereas inflation will continue to increase.

Tonight I do not want to deal with various problems in particular, and thus demonstrate that there is only one sector of our economy that is ill. We could talk, for instance, about the economic conditions in the shoe-making industry, particularly in my region of the Eastern Townships where more than 75 per cent of the shoe manufacturers are now forced to close their doors. Every day, people with 30 or 40 years of experience must be laid off because manufactures in Acton Vale, Granby or in my region must close or lay off 75 or 80 per cent of their staff.

We could give the same figures for the furniture industry. In the textile industry, the situation is the same. We could also quote figures on unemployment in our area, as well as in the maritime provinces and elsewhere in Canada where the situation is almost identical.

Mr. Speaker, this evening I should like once again to bring up a matter in which we, Social Crediters, see the cause, if not the cornerstone, of economic unrest in Canada. I mean the financial situation in which Canada finds itself today. Before going any further with my remarks I should like to say that even before the Social Crediters sat in this House, there were people who said exactly the same things which we have said since 1935 or 1936 when we first came to this House. On the other hand, the famous words of illustrious people are still timely today because nothing was done about the recommendations they made throughout the history of Canada or that of the countries around us. For instance, in 1930, the most eminent Prime Minister England has ever known said something which could well be repeated again today in 1975. Sir Winston Churchill, in his Romanes lecture "Parliamentiary Government and the Economic Problem" delivered at Oxford in 1930, said this, and I quote:

[English]

Who would have thought that it would be easier to produce by toil and skill all the most necessary or desirable commodities than it is to find consumers for them? Who would have thought that cheap and abundant supplies of all the basic commodities would find the science and civilisation of the world unable to utilise them? Have all our triumphs of research and organisation bequeathed us only a new punishment the curse of plenty? Are we really to believe that no better adjustment can be made between supply and demand? Yet the fact remains that every attempt has failed. Many various attempts have been made, from the extremes of communism in Russia to the extremes of capitalism in the United States. They include every form of fiscal policy and currency policy. But all have failed, and we have advanced little further in this quest than in barbaric times. Surely it is this mysterious crack and fissure at the basis of all our arrangements and apparatus upon which the keenest minds throughout the world should be concentrated. Lasting fame and great advantage would attend the nation which first secured the prize.

A former British Prime Minister said that all attempts had failed because there were tax reforms but no in-depth economic reforms.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give some figures which speak for themselves: In February 1941, the U.S. debt was $65 billion. Because of the war, on March 28 of the same year, the debt jumped to $125 billion. And because the debt had increased so much over one month as a result of the war, a meeting was held with the leading U.S. businessmen and financiers. Here is what the financiers said to businessmen about war.

[English]

The bankers said to them through the soft-voiced High Priest of Banking, Bernard Baruch, "To hell with the cost. We are in clover again. We are in war. Jobs will multiply. Money will triple. Sirs, the sky will be the limit. We will build unneeded plants, remote from raw materials. The most costly way will be most pleasing to us. We will spend $15 million on a magnesium plant in the village of Austin, Texas, which will never turn a wheel; a $60 million iron furnace in the potato fields of East Texas, and its furnace shall never glow. We will hire all the crack-pots we can find to think up crazy schemes to waste money.

[Translation]

American or international bankers were then talking to American businessmen and politicians.

[English]

Go, go out to spend, pad your expense accounts, never forgetting the cost plus formula. And they raised the war debt to $300 billion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, within a few months, following the wise advice of this grand priest of international financiers, the late Bernard Baruch who died a few years ago, the American debt went from $65 billion to $300 billion at the end of the war. Between February and March 1941, the debt soared from $65 billion to $125 billion. During the war, there was no problem.

[English]

According to Professor Rautenstrauch, Professor of Industrial Engineering at Columbia University, world debt increased by 47 per cent during the 17th century; during the 18th century by 466 per cent; during the 19th century by 12,000 per cent, and today is increasing at a still more rapid rate.

In the case of Canada ... from Confederation up to January 31st, 1936, the interest paid on this national debt amounted to $2,823,245,405—almost as much as the principal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in 1975 we in Canada paid $5 billion more in interest on loans than the total of the present debt.

This means that if Canada had financed its federal bonds through the Bank of Canada, we would not have any debt and would now be left with a surplus of $5 billion.

Here is another quotation from a banker, the chairman of the Bank of England in 1920, then the second richest man in the whole British Empire. His name was Sir Josiah Stamp, which is neither an English nor a French name.

[English]

"Banking was conceived in iniquity and born in sin ... The bankers own the earth. Take it away from them, but leave them the power to create money and control credit, and with a flick of the pen they will create enough money to buy it back again. Take this power away from them, and all great fortunes like mine would disappear. They ought to disappear. This would give us a better and a happier world to live in. BUT, if you want to continue the slaves of bankers, and pay the cost of your own slavery, then let them continue to create money and control credit ... However, so long as governments will legalize such things, a man is foolish not to be a banker".

This is a statement by the chairman of the Bank of England in 1920. Moreover, during a hearing before the American Congress in February 1943, he said:

[English]

Cong. Wright Patman asked Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System,

"... The U.S. Bonds ($20,000,000,000) the banks hold today—they created the money to buy those bonds, did they not?" And Mr. Eccles replied, "The banking system as a whole creates the (bank) deposits as (at the time) they make loans and investments, whether they buy Government bonds, or whether they buy utility bonds, or whether they make farmers' loans."

Lord Inchcape had the following to say:

A State may be made low just as effectively by wrong ideas as by an invading army. There is no agent of destruction known to chemists that is half as formidable as the T.N.T. of bad economics.

When I hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) refer to scholarly and influential economists, he should read what Lord Inchcape thought about the TNT, the wrong economic theories of present economists.

[English]

"When it is remembered that kings and governments have, throughout the ages, insisted with jealous care on their prerogative of issuing money and controlling currency within their jurisdiction, it is somewhat strange to find modern States accepting as axiomatic a limitation of their sovereignty in the sphere of money, so farreaching in its effects on their powers and on the daily lives of their citizens, as is involved in their agreeing to conform in all circumstances to a standard of value over which they have no control." —Sir Basil Blackett, Director of the Bank of England.

"I have two great enemies; the Southern Army in front of me and the financial institutions in the rear. Of the two, the one in the rear is my greatest foe." —Abraham Lincoln.

And, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have enough time to get those many quotations on the record. I will get back to that in a few moments, but now I would like to refer to a book dealing with political economy. Some members believe that the members of the Social Credit party or the supporters of the Social Credit are certainly taking their stand on erroneous theories. I have here the manual of political economy used at Carleton University in Ottawa to teach students attending this university.

The authors of this book are three economists named Lipsey, Sparks and Steiner. It is not a book which was used in 1900, but it is still in use in 1975. Here is what is found in Chapter 36, page 611 of this book:

And it is comforting to note that everything suggested by the Social Crediters in the House concerning the creation of credit is fully confirmed by these three economists, and I would like to ask my hon. colleagues of this House to refer to this book so as to learn something about economics and politics. I would like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to do the same. For instance, as is stated on page 612, these economists say about the nine Canadian banks that the Royal Bank of Canada has assets of $12,959 million, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce $11,400 million, the Bank of Montreal $10,165 million, the Bank of Nova Scotia $7.85 million, the Toronto-Dominion Bank $6,549 million, the Bank Canadian National $2,281 million, the Provincial Bank of Canada $1,416 million, the Mercantile Bank $288 million, the Bank of British Columbia $178 million. It all adds up to assets of $53 billion for nine banks, which means that over an average of 50 years, these

Canadian banks, with a subscribed capital of something less than $10 million, have multiplied their sssets by 7,500. The nine Canadian banks have transformed deposits into an asset which means that with the $10 million invested, they now have more than $75 billion in 1975, and $53 billion when these figures were given by the economists.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the banks have boosted their assets to $75 billion from a beginning of $10 million, and this figure of $75 million represents the whole national debt including the bonds of the federal government, the bonds of provincial governments, municipal bonds, school bonds and individual bonds. All these are part of the banking assets, and because of our outdated monetary policy, we print bonds, we mortgage the assets of our country and sell them to the banks which pay us with cheques drawn on the credits created by themselves from nothing, and these credits created from nothing are written off as debts due by the various government or public institutions of the country. We always have to pay taxes towards the interests on these debts which are due to the sacred financial institutions every 10 years under the renewal of the charter of banks by the federal government, which has created the greatest of all Canadian monopolies, the monopoly of bank credit, which is the absolute and unchallenged master of all other monopolies. I would like to refer to page 614 of Political Economy under the title "The Creation and the Destruction of Money". When the Prime Minister told us today that he must borrow money at a rate of 9¼ per cent, from whom does he borrow this money? He borrows it from banking institutions. Economists are now admitting what we have always said:

[English]

The ability of the banking system to create money is based on the fact that at any moment of time most of the banks' depositors do not require their deposits to be redeemed in currency. Just as the goldsmiths discovered that only a fraction of the gold they held was demanded, and just as banks discovered that only a fraction of convertible bank notes were actually converted, so too many banks have discovered that only a fraction of their deposits would be withdrawn in currency at any one time. Most of the deposits stay within the banking system. Even if I withdraw $3,000 to buy a new car, the chances are great that the car dealer will deposit my cheque in his account, and the banking system as a whole will have merely transferred deposits from one depositor to another. Here lies the secret of the mystery and the magic of the banks' ability to create money while they make money.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is that racket, that legalized racket that Social Crediters denounce. They want the Bank of Canada to create credit out of the Canadian wealth and when the federal government issues obligations, it is the Bank of Canada which should grant interest free loans on these obligations to the federal government. And that is the biggest rip-off, the biggest legalized racket. When there is talk of monopolies in this House, only small monopolies come under fire. But the monopoly of credit which is the master of all monopolies goes untouched, and it is that monopoly, Mr. Speaker, that we Social Crediters want to touch. I would have a lot of other very interesting papers to quote from those economists.

[English]

The banking system in Canada consists of nine chartered banks. The five largest account for 92 per cent of total bank assets and each of them has more than 700 branches.

The chartered banks are profit-seeking institutions that allow their customers to transfer deposits from one bank to another by means of cheques. They create and destroy money as a by-product of their operations—by making or liquidating loans and various other kinds of investments.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, at page 627, one can read the following:

[English]

When the Bank of Canada buys a $100 bond directly from a chartered bank, there is no change in the assets or liabilities of households, but chartered banks still gain a new deposit of $100. They can now engage in a multiple expansion of deposit money.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him is now expired.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to enjoy the same kindness as my—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue his speech if he gets the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimous consent. Consequently, I must give the floor to another member. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

[English]

There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) for introducing this motion and for the subject matter, and to console the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on his feeble attempt to reply to what is a major problem in this nation.

Over a period of time the Liberals have indicated that they believe in establishing a fair and just society. We heard the minister in reply to this motion indicate that at best there was going to be rough justice, and he ended up making an appeal for the support of all hon. members and the support of the country for the anti-inflation legislation, knowing full well that that legislation will neither be fair nor just. A large number of people in this nation will be dealt with in an inequitable way. The anti-inflation program is unfair to the elderly, to the disabled, the needy and the young people of this nation. In making his reply the minister did not really say very much about a fair and just society.

The motion indicates that unemployment is one of the major problems with which we are faced today, and there have been a number of suggestions made as to how we will solve the problem and have full employment. The anti-inflation legislation introduced previously to cool the inflationary trend created unemployment, and this piece of legislation has done nothing to allay the fears of the average Canadian. Today it was indicated that unemployment has again risen. This trend has been continuous since the government took over in this country and, in my opinion, as long as this legislation is in force the trend will continue.

I asked a question today in the House regarding the problem faced by the pulp and paper industry. I suppose that many people do not know much about the paper industry, but it is one of our largest exports. In terms of labour, pulp and paper mills are under provincial jurisdiction, but there is a strike at Abitibi, in northern Ontario and northern Quebec which started back in July. It has not been settled; no meaningful negotiations are taking place; and the last negotiations were forced on Abitibi, by the Ontario government. When those meetings were held with the employers, the answer was that the formula of the anti-inflation guidelines, 10 per cent the first year, 8 per cent the second year and 6 per cent the third year, would be the basis of settlement. I am quite sure negotiations would have produced better than that early in the year, and certainly before going on strike if there had been good faith on the part of the industry.

There was a slump in the industry, assisted to some extent by the economic climate in the country and the fact that paper prices had gone up. In fact since 1972 the price of newsprint has gone up by 52 per cent, and processed bleached craft paper has gone up by 111 per cent between 1972 and 1975. The economic climate in this country created a situation where the pulp and paper industry has not had to deal with its employees. The government has provided the companies with the kind of loans that will permit them to ignore the plight of the communities in their areas. Most of those communities have only the one industry and are entirely dependent on it for their existence. They are in desperate straits, Mr. Speaker.

In northern Ontario 11 communities are seeking an injunction against the pulp and paper industry so that work can resume. The communities are financially bankrupt and their welfare load is impossible. I am surprised that this House is not giving some attention to this particular strike. The union concerned is a Canadian union which broke away from its international connections several years ago, and it now finds itself without money or support for its members. This is a strike which individuals are having to carry at great expense.

This is only one situation that has developed, Mr. Speaker. In large part the fact there is unemployment affects our ability to operate our educational system in a way that would train people for the jobs that are available. It is all right to bring people in from all over the world, but it hardly makes sense to bring in people who have to be provided with assistance if they do not find work when many of our own young people are unemployed. A few days ago I heard an employer complain that our young people will not work. I think this is true, Mr. Speaker, but I think we share the responsibility. We have either provided them with the wrong type of education or we are not providing them with training in the fields that will enable them to fill the available jobs.

It is true that many of the people receiving unemployment insurance benefits are not employable in the sense that they have a choice of employment. They are young people who have worked only for a short period and do not have any experience. Because of this it is almost impossible for them to find jobs, and so they travel across the country becoming more and more disillusioned with the work ethic and our ability to provide employment.

It is interesting too that the Minister of Finance is not deriving any benefit from these young people. When we have this amount of unemployment, whether it be due to strikes or sickness, or any other reason, when people do not go to work, when we maintain a pool of 6 per cent unemployment, or 7 per cent or higher in certain areas, then I say we are not providing the type of leadership that is required to reduce the unemployment factor to a low level.

Members of the Social Credit party mentioned some of the other problems today. I think many of them go back to the financial institutions. While I am not an expert, I believe that we have too many banks in Canada. When banks make the highest profit of the corporate elite in our country then there is something wrong. Banking and finance should supply a service and should not be the greatest money-making business in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: There is always the argument that we should have more banks, and I understand that there are two more applications before us for charters. We have 11 banks already and have gone so far as to give the co-operative movement a bank. We have given British Columbia a bank, and we gave the Mafia a bank. Look at the Mafia bank, Mr. Speaker. I believed it would make a lot of money and it started out that way, but the shares have dropped from $17 to $3 and something. I believe they just changed leadership the other day. Even laundering money does not seem to be as easy to operate as numbered accounts in another country. We are not doing anything for ourselves in creating other banks.

An hon. Member: Are you on the board of directors of that bank?

Mr. Peters: No I am not, Mr. Speaker. I feel about our banks in Canada a little bit the way the founder of Christianity felt about the moneylenders in the temple. They are just about as repulsive as the moneylenders in days gone by, as far as I am concerned.

It seems to me the time has come to nationalize our banks. Let us not have the Liberals act so high and mighty about whether they can support this motion. Certainly they can. Through the Bank of Canada which it directly controls, the government made 15 per cent new money last year. All it does is add to our debt, but nobody gets upset about it any more. In the time that I have been here we have only once taken money out of circulation to pay something off the national debt. If we made the Bank of Canada the national bank, and made the other banks operate in the way they are supposed to, and not on the basis of creating new money by deposits—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: —if we were to lend the bank that money then we would be able to lend money to develop housing in this country. We would not give DREE grants to corporations without equity; we would give them that money and take equity, and if they wanted to buy the equity back they would have to pay for it and we would again get rid of the money in other investment. Mr. Speaker, we are manufacturing money today. Last year the Liberal party were Social Crediters and created 15 per cent new money by turning on the printing press. The Minister of Finance can verify that. In some cases their ideas are even worse than those of Major Douglas, because I do not think they relate to a numbering system so that they can get it back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: We are allowing money to be lent for housing, which is social capital. Few people, I think, take their houses with them when they leave this world. People leave their houses to their children and grandchildren. As most houses are built to last between 60 and 80 years at least, they are clearly part of our national capital. I see no reason why money should not be lent at interest rates just large enough to cover administration charges, because after all such money increases our national capital. I see no reason for lending to people who will merely speculate.

• (2120)

In Canada owning a house is one way of saving. You put your money into a house and hope that it appreciates with the rate of inflation. The psychology of the Canadian public is strange. People on the street were asked what they would do if they won $1 million in the Olympic lottery, most said they would take a trip, finish paying for their house, perhaps buy a new car, and put the rest of the money in the bank. Of 20 people interviewed in Sudbury, everyone said he would put the bulk of the money in the bank. That is how Canadians are. When they buy a house, they consider it the same as putting money in the bank.

Financial institutions have a part to play in developing this nation's economy, and they should work for the benefit of our people. Money, after all, is but a means of exchange. We manufacture it from paper, cannot eat it, do not like its smell; it does not last long, is not fireproof, water resistant or durable. Basically money is but a piece of paper we use for exchange. When we allow banks to lend eight or ten times the amount on deposit, we allow them to create money. They do this for their own benefit, not that of the country. What happens when any multinational corporation operating in this country, or any large business in this country, runs into difficulty? Really, in this regard the comment made a few minutes ago by the hon. member who quoted Lenin is pertinent. The money to help these corporations comes from our banks.

I suggest that hon. members would be well advised to eliminate present day abuses of our banking system and direct their attention to the provision of full employment. We should provide the Canadian public with the money necessary for doing what must be done. This would be better than merely creating money and adding it to our national debt.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us poses two questions. First, why are we in our present situation, and on a course directly opposite to that of our great neighbour to the south and almost every industrialized western nation?

Second, how can we best meet the social and economic challenges confronting Canadians?

The motion was moved in the House today because there is a widespread feeling that the Government of Canada has mismanaged its responsibilities. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) knew he was not telling the truth six months ago. He deceived the Canadian people in the last election, not unwittingly. No wonder Canadians now suspect anything the Prime Minister says or does.

The government now has difficulty telling the difference between the underdog and the underworld. Canadians face two great challenges, one being the economic challenge presently being debated in the House; the other, equally serious, the political and moral challenge facing this country. This is perhaps even more serious, because economic problems never start with economics. Their roots lie deeper in human nature and politics. They do not end with economics either.

Take a good look at our nation today. There is disarray at home and abroad. Just as the Canadian people are suspicious of their Prime Minister, so our international neighbours do not trust him either. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said that Canada has lost its soul. I am inclined to agree.

As we know, events move in cycles. Look back at the Victorian age, with its strict discipline nationally, socially, and in personal life. It was followed by the so-called naughty nineties. That cycle repeated itself after World War II. Such cycles are part of our attitudes. It takes much longer to change minds than to change laws.

As I said before, this country faces two great challenges, the economic one, and the political and moral one. We must face and master both. What are our chances of success? I suppose it will depend on the kind of people we are. At present we live in what is commonly called a permissive society, which depends for its shaky stability on the spending of capital accumulated by the discipline of the past. Our people were trained by an earlier discipline in self-reliance, self-control, and basically loyal attitudes towards the laws, and could be ruled with a light rein. The trouble is that we failed to condition the modern generation to the same standards. The Prime Minister and government have not been good teachers. The motion before the House mentions the deterioration of our social climate. I agree with what it says.

All the same I believe that the demand for respect is appearing again. The so-called student revolt at the universities has passed its peak, and students themselves are beginning to react against the minority which almost destroyed some of our universities.

The demand for law, order, and discipline is also making itself felt in penal matters. This may be the result of some horrible murders committed in Canada of late. These may make it impossible for the government to resist the demand for restoration of capital punishment. The trend of opinion is there for everybody to see. Even convinced abolitionists are coming around in their opinions. They have come to believe, for instance, that terrorism is a type of crime in which death cannot be the deterrent available only to one side. We are seeing the beginnings of a strong public reaction which must precede any general restoration of discipline in our society. Mr. Speaker, I hope it continues.

Probably the greatest single force changing and expanding the role of our federal and provincial governments has come from the push for equality. This has gone beyond the question of rights. The goal increasingly is to level goods and powers, and it has been popular to use the federal government to redistribute wealth and incomes, and equalize differences in education and background. The result is that our Federal government has become highly critical of business and has downgraded initiative and opportunity.

All agree that governments have a responsibility in providing help for the poor, the aged and unemployed. It has been accepted that different people will earn widely different incomes in our market economy. The difference seems to be that, of late, we have wanted the government to use its powers to restructure the economic system and equalize its rewards. I think the strength of this movement has been out of all proportion to the number of people who really subscribe to it. We must ask ourselves if there is a valid reason for insisting that the fast and slow, successful and unsuccessful, should all arrive at the same condition at the same time.

Recently this House passed a bill which will turn over control of this country for three years to a bunch of amateurs. In the past 30 years the bureaucrats in this country have become more mighty. The bill I spoke about will make them almost almighty. It will mean that what is law today can be changed tomorrow, and what is not law tomorrow can be made law the day after. It means the decisions that affect our lives will not be taken by the recognized institutions. They will be taken elsewhere. Some things are right and some things are wrong. This type of law is wrong.

We have tended to transfer the effective power over our lives from the constitutionally visible offices of the government to the vast network that is being brought into being in the name of protecting us from exploiters. It seems the very fact that government has made a start towards equality has created a demand for faster progress, and we see federal spending shifting away from the traditional federal functions, such as defence, foreign trade and so on, and toward federal programs that reduce the freedom of individuals and lessen the power of other levels of government.

We must save billions of dollars to develop Canada. There must be more incentives for Canadians to save that developing money. Unless the federal government simply prints more money, the only way it can get a dollar is by borrowing and taxation. When the government borrows, that limits the money available to private industry. And we all know that taxation directly removes it.

We now carry a great burden in Canada because we have built a monster of law and regulations that is clumsy, inefficient and inequitable and, worse still, one that appears unplanned and unco-ordinated in the response to our real needs. That monster is quite literally threatening to bring us to national insolvency and overshadowing everything. The government is spending, spending, spending far beyond the taxpayers' means.

There has to be some trade off between the move toward equality and efficiency. It is probable that the best economic solution will be the best social solution. We must have a government that clearly sets goals in that direction, goals we all understand and can work toward attaining. Our pyromaniac Prime Minister having ignited the inferno, now asks us to help dampen the fires of inflation. I do not oppose the fight against inflation, but I do oppose rules and regulations that will throttle our economy and stifle initiative.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), and I want to say to members opposite that jealousy is a very destructive emotion. Anyone can tell another that he is a poor leader or can criticize a leader, when the critic himself or herself will never have to prove that he or she will ever have to lead.

Anyone can tell us what is absolutely right after the event. That is easy. But who is there in this extremely complex society who can be sure of what is absolute, or whether there is an absolutely right way to resolve the human conundrums? There are many ways to cope with human problems. No doubt there will be solutions that are partially right and partially wrong, but never absolutely right.

There has never been a time in history when our society has been more complex, more crowded, demanding, complaining, worried, and more clearly heard by the leaders of Canada today. In the past, much might have happened. There were wars and there was frustration, hatred and violence, but we did not know because it did not come into our living rooms.

Money today is the measure of success, but remarkably those who have money are greedy to take more. Nationalism is the curse of an immature segment of our society, over-impressed with their false sense of limitless wealth and super worth. These are the problems we face today. Money has become the measure of our success, and greed is the mark of those who never know when they have achieved that success. As a result we are chasing our tail in society trying to find ourselves.

It is in this atmosphere that we must have leaders, and we have them. This is a society where there is a psychic depression greater than even the economic depression. People live in fear and desperation. Worry is worse than the event itself when it happens. Even in affluence we have a large group of professional beggars, people who cry even when they are rich. Crime is so commonplace that we barely get over the tidal wave of one disaster when a new one is floating over us.

That is the kind of society in which you expect leadership. Society is getting leadership. There can be no absolute perfection because there is no absolute in human life. We all want peace. We all want prosperity. The children of the drug and bead cult cried out for peace and love. Every generation wants those two situations. They are the most difficult dreams to achieve since they both require the ultimate in unselfishness.

I could go on, but I want to talk about leadership. I would like to talk about the world we live in, but you people took too much of my time.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: We have a leader. You voted with us once and I thought that was magnificent. You were right, as our leader was right, because the opinion count the other night said we were right.

The court of final resort is the people. The court will be heard in due time as it was heard on that most important issue of our time, inflation. The attack on inflation was rightly timed, planned, and carried out. The people have spoken. They are the most important.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is one of the leaders of whom we can be proud. The member on the side of the angels voted with us. Sixty-one per cent of Canadians favour our anti-inflation program. Only 22 per cent opposed it, probably NDP and Conservative, and 14 per cent remained silent.

Our Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) has done an excellent job for this country. He knows about the democratic process of collective bargaining. He knows that collective bargaining is a sacred trust.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: Come on you guys, give a girl a chance!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: The Postmaster General is a trade unionist at heart. How much more difficult for him. He knows better than you and the people at the top.

• (2140)

Mrs. Holt: They are not speaking for the rank and file of the trade unions. They are speaking for the elitists who would destroy Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I am still trying to tell you how great the Postmaster General is. He wanted a free vote for the rank and file, but members over there fought it down. It is democracy to give a free vote to the union membership. That is what I would want to see.

Now I come to our Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). Our Minister of Justice knows what is happening in the country. What is happening in British Columbia will spread across the country. The crime rate is tremendous. The minister is listening to the people. He has brought in sound reforms. He is working on them, and his record in the past in other portfolios has been magnificent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Our new Minister of Energy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What about the Whip?

Mrs. Holt: Our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) has a most complex portfolio in terrible times. He doesn't want Canadians to use their energy resources too quickly, yet they need them now. Try to resolve those two problems. Hon. members asked about our Minister of Energy. He is great.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Our Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has already shown great strength in his portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Holt: You started it. You started talking about leadership. I am giving you a roll call of leadership.

An hon. Member: What about the back bench?

Mrs. Holt: Oh, the back bench is splendid. But I am talking about the Minister of Transport. He is new on the job—

An hon. Member: What about the Whip?

Mrs. Holt: Oh, the Whip is fantastic. Look at all the people he has brought out. Where are your boys?

The Minister of Transport has already shown great strength and courage in his portfolio. His intelligence and vigour will assure solutions to difficulties involving the dredging prices and the chronic problems of our railway system, and maybe we will get equalization of freight rates in the west through him because he is a westerner.

One last quotation. Everybody has used a quotation from somebody else—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order!

Mrs. Holt: I just wish to put one quotation on record—

The question, "Who ought to be boss?" is like asking "Who ought to be the tenor in the quartet?" Obviously, the man who can sing tenor.

Some hon. Members: Order! Order!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 10 of Standing Order 58, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the proceedings on the motion and of the supplementary estimates (A) and for the passage through all stages of any bill based thereon.

The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin).

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Beaudoin) which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That supplementary estimates (A) 1975-76, laid upon the Table Wednesday, November 12, 1975, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-79, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1976, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-79, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought the government would have learned its lesson a year ago when it tried to pull off the same procedure. Now we have precisely the same attitude: the government is wasting time, running over the rules and over the restrictions of the Financial Administration Act and the British North America Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps the memories of some hon. members are not long enough to remember the BNA Act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. According to the Standing Orders no debate is permissible at this time. I should caution hon. members on both sides of the House, however, that the point of order being raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is a most serious one and ought to be listened to very carefully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to engage in debate. I would merely raise the point of order with a reference to your own words and the words of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) on December 11, 1974. In any event, to found my point of order I would refer to section 54 of the British North America Act which reads:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill is proposed.

Standing Order 62(1) reads as follows:

This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

On the date the President of the Privy Council introduced Supplementary Estimates (A) for the year 1975-76 there did appear at the appropriate date of Votes and Proceedings the following entry:

Mr. Chrétien, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council, delivered a Message from His Excellency the Governor General, which was read by Mr. Speaker, as follows:

And then followed the signature of His Excellency, and the following message:

His Excellency the Governor General transmits to the House of Commons Supplementary Estimates (A) of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending on the 31st March, 1976, and, in accordance with the provisions of "The British North American Act, 1867" recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

The marginal note to clause 5 of the bill at page 3 reads: "Power to raise loan of $2,000,000,000 for public works and general purposes".

There is no provision whatsoever in the estimates, and I invite anyone in this House to examine those supplementary estimates to see if there is any provision, for increasing this loan limit notwithstanding the fact that at the passage of the main estimates earlier this year the power of borrowing was once again raised to add this $2 billion.

I would point out to Your Honour without going into detail, page 2139 of Hansard for December 10, 1974, and page 2142. At page 2139 I raised a point of order by way of a question as to the appropriateness of such a clause. The next day my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), raised a question of privilege precisely on this point. It was interesting to see the remarks of the hon. President of the Privy Council, who said:

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that this was a most unusual proceeding. It was one that some of us were not aware of at the time the bill was introduced. I say, however, that a question was raised on a point of order, an explanation given and a vote taken. There was some opposition. However, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I am not defending the procedure that was followed. I hope we can avoid this sort of thing in future.

I would then refer to the ruling on page 2144 of Hansard for December 11, in which Mr. Speaker found against my colleague on his question of privilege in that the matter had arisen the night before, and he ruled that a matter must be attacked or called into question immediately it arose. In addition to which Mr. Speaker ruled that because a vote had been taken and the appropriation bill passed, it was impossible to deal with the point of order.

Therefore at this time on second reading, when the bill is presented to us, after the first reading given it a few minutes ago, I call into question the appropriateness of the appearance in this bill of clause 5, which goes away beyond the terms of the royal recommendation. It never appeared there.

We were told one year ago that it was an unusual procedure, that it was wrong, and would not be done again. Now, in direct contravention of a standing order of this House which is clear and unequivocal, and of section 54 of the British North America Act, the government, with this appropriation act, seeks to have this House set aside its rules and run roughshod over the provisions of the BNA Act. I invite Your Honour to indicate that clause 5 of this bill goes beyond the powers of the recommendation of His Excellency, and must be stricken from the bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when this question was raised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) quoted words I used last December, when the same point was raised by him. At that time I was quite unaware that the bill then before us included a clause of the kind which is before the House again today. My remarks were directed to this effect: that I was unaware of this, and therefore would not let it happen again. But this time I am aware.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, not only am I aware, but I have before me a list of acts in which a similar clause is to be found. I have 18 statutes, 18 appropriation acts passed between 1955 and 1974, in which a similar provision was included. On each of these occasions I understand that it was quite in order and quite within the terms of the constitution and the British North America Act.

Mr. Peters: Mitch to the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate my support for the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I suggest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) that any of the earlier precedents to which he referred must be looked at in the light of what was said when this issue arose one year ago. Surely the statement of the President of the Privy Council one year ago, to the effect that it would not happen again, should carry some weight.

I draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that we are operating under Order No. 28 on today's order paper, which reads as follows:

Consideration of a motion to concur in Supplementary Estimates (A) 1975-76, laid upon the Table, Wednesday, November 12, 1975.

A few minutes ago, after we had disposed of the motion for the day put down by the Social Credit party, Your Honour put to the House a question in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to the effect that we concur in Supplementary Estimates (A) 1975-76. Thus far I suggest we were operating within the rules of this House. However, I point out to Your Honour Standing Order 58(19) which reads as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated earlier, the point of order involved here was alluded to almost 12 months ago. It is a very serious point of order, one in which I would be greatly aided by having the intervention of any hon. member who wants to contribute to the point. I would very much appreciate being able to hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was about to draw to Your Honour's attention Standing Order 58(19) which is very pertinent to this whole situation. It reads as follows:

The concurrence in any estimate or estimates or interim supply shall be an Order of the House to bring in a bill or bills based thereon.

That motion was passed, the motion in the name of the President of the Treasury Board concurring in interim supply. That, therefore, was an order to bring in a bill based thereon. I submit in line with what has been argued by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the bill that has now been introduced is based in the main on the supplementary estimates that we passed a few moments ago, but that clause 5 of this bill is in no way based on the estimates that we concurred in tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit further that if one goes back earlier into Standing Order 58 and reads what it is all about in terms of the business of supply, he will find it clear that the business of supply deals with the passing of estimates; main, interim, supplementary, what have you. However, the business of supply does not open the door for the government to bring in other measures; financial, taxation, or what have you.

What we have before us now is a bill allegedly based on supplementary estimates that were passed a few moments ago. However, there is more in the bill than was in those estimates. There is clause 5 which is completely foreign to the estimates as a whole.

The estimates deal with the authority to spend certain money. Some of it is new money, some of it is transferred. But clause 5 is an authority to the government to borrow, in addition to all of the other moneys covered in the motion passed a few moments ago, up to $2 billion with authority to do that retroactively to April 1, 1975.

I submit, therefore, that the hon. member for Edmonton West is quite within his rights and is exercising his responsibility in raising this point of order. As you yourself have said, Mr. Speaker, it is a serious one that calls for serious consideration.

● (2230)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, our party, in full agreement with the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, wants to point out the unfairness of clause 5 of the bill before the House. The Prime Minister himself, today, during the question period, stated that the only sources of borrowed money the government resorts to are the taxes of the taxpayers, loans on the foreign market and bonds.

Mr. Speaker, through clause 5, which was never discussed by any parliamentary committee, Parliament is asked to grant the government the authority to borrow $2 billion; this will contribute to indebting Canadians further, under the absolute tutelage of the financial and banking system, without our having had the opportunity of discussing the clause. We oppose that clause, since it was never debated in committee. Never has this government asked permission from any parliamentary committee to borrow or be authorized to borrow the amount of $2 billion. Nor does the government divulge the rate of interest it will have to pay on that amount. As the hon. members for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, the government trespasses on the rights of Parliament by trying to impose upon us a financial and borrowing system that will indebt Canadians further, without considering the opinions of the elected representatives of the people. That is why we respectfully ask that this clause be declared out of order without reservation and, therefore, the whole bill.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the intervention of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The hon. member for Edmonton West was here during the time when two of these bills were presented. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was in the House in March of this year when we presented a bill which contained exactly the same provision, and he raised no objection then. We are not contravening the constitution in what we are doing here. What we are trying to do is to obtain authorization for the following funds.

I agree that Standing Order 62 was passed pursuant to the British North America Act. Standing Order 62 reads:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House—

We are not attempting to do that. We are seeking approval to obtain moneys by way of borrowing in the usual manner, as provided in the Financial Administration Act.

With reference to expenditure, it cannot be made without the approval of the House. There is no doubt about that. That is the role of the estimates we are presently studying. There cannot be expenditure without approval. However, under the Financial Administration Act there is power to seek funds in the usual way by borrowing on the open market in the manner provided by the statute. These funds are expended under the control of the House.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) dragged a red herring across this argument by bringing in Standing Order 58(19). It is true that Standing Order 58(19) provides that there has to be an order of the House in order to pass the estimates. There is no doubt about that, but the standing order does not prohibit this parliament from—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I point out to all hon. members that I am taking this point of order, I say for the third time, most seriously. In order to take it seriously I have to be able to hear the arguments on both sides.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Standing Order 58(19) in no way prohibits the practice that has been adopted by the House and carried on since 1955. Undoubtedly the gentlemen who were sitting in Your Honour's position were made aware of the provisions as the bills were presented, and there is no doubt that the procedure presently followed by the government is in order. I suggest the reasoning of the Chair at that time was exactly that advanced to Your Honour, namely, that the government is attempting at this time through clause 5 of the bill to seek authority to borrow, not to expend funds. Funds can only be expended when the estimates are approved by this House.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make one or two suggestions to Your Honour in connection with the point that has been raised. With regard to the historical argument, may I point out that very significant changes have been made to the whole supply procedure since the days referred to by the government House leader.

The most serious point I want to make to Your Honour is that I believe you should adopt in this case a very strict construction, because there are some very unusual rules under which the bill proceeds through the House. There is no provision for debate.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, in committee.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister has just made my point for me. He says there is debate in committee—debate on the estimates, examination of the estimates, yes, but absolutely no examination or possibility of debate on this clause. Therefore I content myself with saying that there is very clearly a heavy burden on the government to justify including any measure, whether it relates to borrowing or to divorce, in a bill that cannot be debated. I therefore suggest there would have to be very unusual reasons, which have not been put forward tonight by government spokesmen, for justifying the inclusion in a bill that cannot be debated any provision that was not included in the estimates.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I agree totally with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that you should apply a very strict construction to the words used in section 54 of the British North America Act and in the standing orders. As my colleague from Nipissing pointed out in his very able address, the words "appropriation," "estimates", and, in the case of section 54, the words "vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue" mean exactly that and no more.

These supply procedures are in effect the authority to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund, or to make payments as provided in the estimates for this particular purpose. Section 54 is confined to payments out only. It does not apply to the borrowing authority exercised by the Government of Canada traditionally over the years.

The borrowing authority is dealt with by the Financial Administration Act, Section 41, which provides that no money shall be borrowed for a security issue by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of parliament. We are not talking about the case of borrowing for payments out, we are talking about securities or loans issued from time to time by the Government of Canada for the purpose of pay-outs in actual funds. In that sense I would agree with the Leader of the Official Opposition that the strictest construction is to be applied.

When we are talking about the estimates and Section 54 of the British North America Act we are talking about payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The borrowing power of the Government of Canada is not restricted by the British North America Act in the same way, and it is for that reason that for many years we have followed this procedure of authorizing this borrowing in this particular bill without having preceded it with the same kind of recommendation as is necessary in the case of payments out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that no other hon. members to my right seem to wish to intervene in this very interesting point. There are several on my left who have indicated their desire, but I have refrained from hearing them, a fact which I suppose may give some indication of the position I propose to take.

The practice involved in examining and coming to a decision on the supply of money by parliament to the government has undergone some changes in the recent past. However, this still leads to the situation in which, as this evening, the House has had to address itself to all stages of a supply bill without debate and without amendment.

Accordingly, as I think all members who have participated in the discussion have agreed, the strictest interpretation of the rules has to be applied in terms of all clauses of the bill to which the House is addressing itself.

The practice of including in a supply bill a clause which gives to the government the power to borrow money has been referred to, or defended almost exclusively this evening on the basis of the fact that it has been the practice of the House for many years. The fact of the matter is that in respect of supplementary estimates, it has been the practice only very recently. Since 1955, I may say to the House, that kind of clause has been presented only in relation to the main estimates or, in some cases, to interim supply. Its occurrence or presence in a bill which is related, as is this bill, to supplementary estimates is a most recent occurrence, indeed.

If I were to indicate my disapproval, that would probably be not very important. I must go back a year ago to the disapproval of what was suggested or put forward in this House, in unequivocal terms, by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). This has already been quoted by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but the remarks I think bear repeating. This was said by the President of the Privy Council almost exactly one year ago, and it is as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that this was a most unusual proceeding. It was one that some of us were not aware of at the time the bill was introduced.

He was referring to the presence in the supplementary estimates supply bill of a clause relating to the borrowing power of the government. He said:

> —this was a most unusual proceeding. It was one that some of us were not aware of at the time the bill was introduced. I say, however, that a question was raised on a point of order, an explanation given and a vote taken. There was some opposition. However, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I am not defending the procedure that was followed. I hope we can avoid this sort of thing in future.

There is an historical ground or some justification for including in a supply bill which relates to the main estimates, and even a supply bill that relates to interim supply, a clause which relates to the borrowing power of the government. However, the inclusion of such a clause in a bill for supplementary estimates as in the bill before the House tonight, seems to me to be totally without justification, as I understand the remarks and the stand taken by the President of the Privy Council almost exactly one year ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would therefore suggest at this stage, when the supply bill is about to go through all stages before this parliament without debate or without amendment, that in my view it can only go forward through that sort of process if clause 5 can be stricken from it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I might add that according to our standing orders there is no provision for debate or amendment, therefore no provision for discussion of any sort. A point of order has been raised, one that was raised a year ago. I take it as a valid point of order, and I order that clause 5 be stricken from the bill and that the bill proceed for consideration.

It would be most serious and a grave step to interrupt in any way the process of supply at this time and I do not propose to do so. The borrowing-power clause is clause 5, and I ordered that it be stricken from the bill and that we proceed through all the stages of the bill. But this does not open in any way any clause for discussion, debate or amendment. It should proceed quickly and without discussion through all stages.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the second reading motion was proposed to the House, the hon. member for Edmonton West raised a point of order. That point of order has been taken and has been decided. I have ordered that clause 5 be stricken from the bill and I now put the motion for second reading. Is it the pleasure of the House that the bill be now read the second time and referred to committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill as altered read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Bellechasse rising on a point of order? May I remind the hon. member that there is no debate, no question, no reply from the minister, and that he must stand at his place to rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I understand the ruling of the Chair; I wish however to rise on a point of order. I should like us to consider very seriously a situation which occurs every year when—

Some hon. Members: Quiet!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, did you recognize me so that I could rise on a point of order or not?

The Chairman: Order, please. I should like hon. members to let the Chair hear the point of order; if there is no point of order, I shall come up with a ruling. However, hon. members must let the hon. member make the point he intends to discuss.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I find your decision quite wise and honest. Here is the point of order I want to make. A bill of this kind is put before us each year, with the same preamble referring to Her Majesty the Queen as if we had to ask for her authorization to run our country, to get the funds necessary to face the administrative obligations and expenses. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that this wording is obsolete, that we should use a different wording to express ourselves in a language all Canadians understand.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must point out to the hon. member that the point he is raising is not a point of order which can be accepted for the moment and, secondly, that it is not permitted in this House to cast a reflection upon Her Majesty the Queen nor upon our institutions. So, I have to tell him that his point of order is not acceptable, and I hope we will be able to move along now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall mention to the hon. member that the Chair has ruled and that the motion was passed. The Chair did not think that hon. members who said nay did it seriously.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member would resume his seat—

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall ask the hon. member to resume his seat. I shall point out to him that each time an hon. member says nay, if he thinks that the Chair did not hear him he just has to rise. If he says it only for his neighbours, it is then very difficult for the Chair to establish what hon. members might think at the time of the vote. I think the hon. member did not rise. He does only after the Chair put the motion, after it was passed. I cannot accept his request to put the motion again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member rise on the same point of order or another one?

Mr. Fortin: No, it is another one, Mr. Speaker. You called me to order saying that I was not serious when I said nay.

Some hon. Members: It is true—

Mr. Fortin: The Liberals will say it is true. It is because they do not say what they think.

Mr. Speaker, when I said I was against the bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member to sit down because he did not rise on another point of order but is instead continuing the debate, and the Chair is not prepared to allow this debate.

It being past ten o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, according to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering the powers conferred under Bill C-73 to the Anti-Inflation Board, and the regulations that will be made after the adoption of this legislation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House recommend that regulations to be made under Bill C-73 be brought to the attention of the Standing Committee on Finance and Trade before their application.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY ANTI-INFLATION BOARD WILL REJECT SETTLEMENT WITH UNION—POSITION OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In light of reports that the Anti-Inflation Board will today indicate non-acceptance of the agreement between the Post Office and the CUPW, has the minister requested permission from the Anti-Inflation Board to appear before it to make representations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of the reports simply because none have been brought to my attention officially. I have no hesitation to seek—

An hon. Member: Do you listen to radio?

Mr. Mackasey: I am a better friend of labour than the socialists ever were. I may say to the hon. gentleman that if the Anti-Inflation Board thinks this is too rich a settlement, what would it have thought of the 52 per cent settlement the NDP were advocating? Having said that, I suggest I would go to the Anti-Inflation Board on behalf of the workers of CUPW, even though I have contempt for some of their leaders, and be prepared to fight for the workers who have been deprived of wages for 41 days. I think the Anti-Inflation Board in the meantime can address itself to such meaningful things as rolling back the exorbitant prices of certain foodstuffs in this country.

● (1410)

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON APPEARANCE OF POSTMASTER GENERAL BEFORE ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Is it the government's position that the Postmaster General should seek permission to make representation to the Anti-Inflation Board? If so, would the Postmaster General be stating the government's case before the Anti-Inflation Board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge this question does not arise in this way. When the Anti-Inflation Board, in carrying out its mandate, wants to question the validity of any settlement, it gets in touch with both parties. I know it got in touch with certain ministers of the government. I have no knowledge of what it did with labour. I have been told, and this is hearsay, that it has been in touch with labour. There is no question at this time or, indeed, in future, of having the Postmaster General make certain representations to the Anti-Inflation Board.

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT APPEALING BOARD'S REJECTION OF A WAGE SETTLEMENT TO WHICH IT WAS A PARTY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to know the position of the government in the case where the Anti-Inflation Board finds a settlement, to which the government is a party, unsatisfactory. Would the government entertain an appeal with respect to that agreement to which it is a party? This is not a hypothetical question. Is the government prepared to entertain an appeal to itself, in the case where it is a party to the original agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the question is not hypothetical, it probably has reference to the white paper and the commission as it now exists and will exist under the legislation. This is a matter of law. The hon. member is able to read the white paper; he knows the procedure. We have always stated that the government would negotiate in good faith with its employees, including the postal workers, would reach a settlement which we would interpret to be within the guidelines, but that the Anti-Inflation Board has a duty to perform. As I indicated, I know that the Anti-Inflation Board is making certain contacts, at least with this party. That is the status of the situation now.

AGRICULTURE

DESTINATION OF BUCKWHEAT IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES BY CARGILL—POSSIBILITY OF EXPORT TO JAPAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, of which I gave him notice. Would the minister inform the House of the final destination of some two million pounds of buckwheat imported from North Dakota and Minnesota to Manitoba in October, 1975, by Cargill Limited and other grain companies, and can he inform the House what amounts, if any, were imported in November?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a requirement under the Canada Grains Act for licensed elevators which receive foreign grain to report these receipts to the Canadian Grain Commission. I have asked the commission to check into this matter and when I have their report I will be pleased to forward information to the hon. member.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that, Gene?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was the one who was relatively uninformed on agricultural matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: May I ask my colleague from an automotive city the following supplementary? Can the minister tell the House if this buckwheat—and would he please check this—is being transported under statutory grain rates through Canada for re-export to Japan via Vancouver, a practice which I am sure the minister well knows would be a clear violation of Canadian law?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member sent the question to my office at one o'clock. I was not aware of it until just before entering the House because I was at a meeting until two o'clock. We are already asking for this information and will forward it to the hon. member as soon as it is available. As Minister of Agriculture, I certainly do not want anything done that is contrary to our law.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

LICENCES GRANTED FOR STORAGE OF UNITED STATES BUCKWHEAT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Will the minister further advise the House or investigate whether the Canadian Grain Commission has received requests for and/or granted any licence to Cargill or other United States companies to allow U.S. buckwheat to be stored in Canadian elevators, as required under the Canada Grains Act? If so, will he tell us the names of those companies?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, all the information that the Canadian Grain Commission has concerning the use of warehouse facilities, elevator facilities and so on is public information. This is done from time to time. It is all kept according to the law by the Canadian Grain Commission. I will make the information available to the hon. member or the House.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL THAT GOVERNMENT EXTEND INTEREST-FREE LOANS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Finance and it was referred to the Prime Minister. The latter answered as follows:

—there are no such things as interest-free loans. When we grant loans, the government itself has to borrow the money from the taxpayers. If the interest is not paid by the beneficiary, it is paid by the taxpayers generally.

In answer to a supplementary, the Prime Minister gave as example the last borrowing through the Canada saving bonds for which the government pays interest of about 9¼ per cent to lend that money interest-free to foreign countries. This answer puzzled me and to use the terms—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member want to ask a question?

Mr. Matte: I am coming to my question, Mr. Speaker; here it is: Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether interest-free loans to foreign countries are made with money obtained through Canada saving bonds or with money generated by credit making?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the money we lend to developing countries comes to them as a sort of credit. This is only possible if the government itself is in a position to extend credit. This credit in turn depends on the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Canadian government as well as on the monetary system itself. As I said, this monetary system can operate only if the government makes sure that all loans yield interest. With certain types of loans, it frequently happens that taxpayers instead of the borrower must pay the interest. Anyway, when the government must borrow money for its own use, it must pay interest, and this is why I say that interest-free loans do not exist. There are loans on which the interest is paid either by the borrower or the government, that is to say, the taxpayers.

INQUIRY WHETHER MONEY LENT TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES IS GAINED THROUGH BONDS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

My question is clear and precise. Do we know any more clearly whether those loans are taken from the Canada savings bonds fund, or from an altogether fictitious credit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to the answer I made yesterday, I gave an example in which the government itself had to pay interest. I could certainly have taken another example than Canada savings bonds; I could have chosen the issues of the Canadian government bonds. Two weeks ago, I think, bonds were issued which bear a 10 per cent interest for those who agree to lend money to the government for a period of 20 years, I think. So, when the government borrows money from taxpayers, it pays interest, and it is fair that when it lends to others, this interest is paid back to the government, again, either by the borrower, or by the taxpayer himself.

INCOME TAX

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE TAX EVASION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the hon. gentleman tell the House whether, pursuant to any investigations into party fund raising practices which one of the RCMP warrants indicated formed part of their inquiry into the Sky Shops affair, he or his investigatory officials have contacted the RCMP to ascertain the extent to which political contributions have been paid by companies or individuals out of pre-tax dollars?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): While we are conducting an investigation I think it would be inappropriate to make any comment. If the hon. member would wait a couple of weeks I think we will have more information for him.

Mr. MacKay: I should like to thank the minister for that answer and ask him whether he will, in fact, do this and report to the House in due course since it is conceivable that millions of dollars of tax revenue have been lost if this practice has been widespread.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S ALLEGATIONS OF LACK OF FINANCIAL CONTROL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Auditor General concluded in his report tabled yesterday that the present state of financial management and control systems in the government is significantly below acceptable standards and effectiveness and has recommended the establishment of a special agency to co-ordinate supervision of public spending. Since this conclusion and recommendation, in effect, call into question the competence of the Treasury Board and its capacity to rectify the situation, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he, personally, intends to act to deal with this most serious matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not admit the premise of the question, particularly as it relates to the Treasury Board. Naturally, we are very concerned about the state of affairs to which the Auditor General refers and we are looking seriously at the recommendations he is making, including the setting up of a special branch or agency. Early in the New Year I hope to announce the response of the government to these particular recommendations made by the Auditor General. It is certain that in the meantime the government is very anxious to draw inspiration from the Auditor General's report and make sure that the government does improve the efficiency of its accounting procedures.

AUDITOR GENERAL

DATE OF LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): The Auditor General stated on page nine of his report that he has been notified that the report of the independent review committee on the powers and resources of the Auditor General is under active consideration by the cabinet and that proposals will be made in the form of draft legislation. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether the government has yet decided what to do about this matter and when legislation will be introduced?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The words speak for themselves. The matter is under active consideration by the government and we shall make an announcement in the usual manner, should we decide to take action.

POSSIBILITY OF CABINET RECEIVING REPRESENTATIONS FROM GROUPS AGAINST WHOM BOARD MADE DECISIONS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is supplementary to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Since it is apparent that the Postmaster General has been, is, and will be making representations to the cabinet respecting the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board regarding the postal settlement, may I ask whether the cabinet is also ready to receive representations from other groups or other boards in respect of whom decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board have been made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member refers, as I believe the Leader of the Opposition did, to decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board. The only decision of which I am aware is that they are carrying out their mandate in this particular case by talking to the parties to the dispute. One of the parties is the Government of Canada, and that means all the ministers on this side of the House.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to press reports, as late as three quarters of an hour ago a decision had been handed down by the Anti-Inflation Board. But whether it has or has not, may I get down to brass tacks and ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet would be willing to hear a joint appeal by the metro Toronto school board and the metro Toronto secondary school teachers federation regarding the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board of 10 days ago?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again, as I did in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I refer the hon. member to the statute which is in the process of being passed and which will soon be proclaimed, or to the white paper, where he will see what procedure has been laid out. The hon. member refers to a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board, a recent one, he says. No member on this side is aware of any such decision, so if the hon. member has information I wish he would lay it before the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR EXAMINATION OF ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence it might be directed to the Prime Minister. With respect to the vote at the United Nations yesterday concerning the situation in Chile, when the assembly registered its profound distress at the constant and flagrant violations of human rights, a vote that Canada supported, in view of the comments made at that time by our delegate to the third committee that Canada was not totally accepting the conclusions of the report of the special working group because it was not able to enter Chile to observe and make inquiries first hand, would the government take further action directly through diplomatic channels with the government of Chile in order that there can be a full and complete examination of the situation in that country?

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all government members highly appreciate this question. The hon. member points out the concern we have always felt in the past with regard to the situation in Chile. At the time, we protested against the fact that no international commission could go and see on the spot what was going on there. We will continue to do so. Our positive vote yesterday, at the United Nations, in favour of human rights being respected in Chile proves indeed that we will continue to do so.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While appreciating and congratulating the government on the vote, would the parliamentary secretary indicate, in view of the lack of information which seemed to concern our delegate to the third committee, whether we will be taking definite action with the junta in Chile to ensure that there is a full examination by this working group, or a similar one established by the United Nations?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I did not answer the supplementary previously because it seems to me to be fairly obvious that we are working on a multilateral level; I therefore cannot make a unilateral statement on the matter at this time.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS OF AUDITOR GENERAL CONCERNING FINANCIAL SITUATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With respect to the Auditor General's report that AECL is guilty both of inflating the true value of its assets and of understating the current extent of its liabilities, and in view of the $100 million loss on the Argentine project, does the minister intend to consult his colleague the President of the Treasury Board regarding the launching of a full scale inquiry into the financial management systems of AECL?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members will have plenty of opportunity in the public accounts committee to question officials of AECL.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I will direct to the President of the Treasury Board. Does the minister agree that if the practice followed by AECL were followed by a public company in this country, the legal consequences could be very serious indeed?

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Hon. Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the problem there is one of finding a suitable candidate for a vacancy.

An hon. Member: Do you want the job?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEALTH

TROPICAL DISEASES—NEED FOR QUARANTINE AND TREATMENT CENTRES WITH COMPETENT STAFF

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rapid increase in the incidence of tropical diseases and the fact that our facilities are inadequate for treating this increasing number, and the additional fact that the Olympic Games will be held in Canada in 1976 with athletes coming from all over the world, for example from countries such as Ghana, Nigeria and West Africa where the disease lassa is endemic and airborne, possibly one of the most dangerous in the world, with the frightening mortality rate of something like 18 per cent to 50 per cent, which could become epidemic in Canada where, as far as is known no specific treatment is available, I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what provisions his department has made to meet the situation by setting up quarantine stations and treatment centres manned by physicians who know something about the care and treatment of this disease?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I intend to introduce further amendments to the Quarantine Act during the course of the next session which will permit me to name any highly contagious disease such as Lassa fever, as requiring quarantine. Secondly, we have at the present time a quarantine contingency plan in existence to be activated in the event of the development or outbreak of any highly contagious disease. Thirdly, there is a federal-provincial study group known as the Isolation Facilities Working Group studying at the present time all the existing isolation facilities across the country and evaluating whether these facilities are adequate to meet the necessary needs in the case of a contagious disease being imported into Canada. Finally, we are in close and continuing consultation with other countries, in particular the United States and the United Kingdom, with regard to all areas of contagious diseases.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TREATMENT OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES BY MALAWI—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTEST

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary, and it follows the report of our strong vote at the United Nations in respect of the rights of man. It is also somewhat appropriate to the season we are about to celebrate. The question concerns disturbing reports of renewed persecution of Jehovah's Witnesses in Malawi following their expulsion from Mozambique immediately after its liberation. Knowing of the interest in Mozambique's liberation shown by this government, and knowing that Jehovah's Witnesses steadfastly refuse either to vote or bear arms and, therefore, have no one to speak for them in the councils of this world, will the minister make representations to Malawi urging that these people, or those of them who remain, be permitted to live in peace?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT FARE INCREASES NOT EXCEED TEN PER CENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As the authorities of the Canadian National announced publicly yesterday afternoon their decision to increase the rates on the lines serving the suburbs of Montreal by 25 per cent from the beginning of January, can the minister tell us whether he discussed the matter with the CN authorities and whether he favours their decision?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been ongoing discussions among some of our officials and the Canadian National Railways and also with the city of Montreal. In general, the problem which faces the railways is the significant loss on commuter services, and in our view the problem is essentially one to be dealt with by provincial and municipal authorities.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the right hon. Prime Minister.

I think he will understand the meaning of my question because we now have legislation on controls. An agency created by the government is endorsing a 25 per cent rate increase. Is the Prime Minister prepared to urge the commission not to allow increases in excess of 10 per cent, as provided in Bill C-73?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have little to add to what the Minister of Transport has just told to the House. The hon. member is certainly aware that the matter was discussed last week when the Minister of Finance met the finance ministers of the provinces. We tried to establish together a plan which would enable the government to fight inflation as much as possible while ensuring that the taxpayers would bear their fair share of the burden. To my knowledge, the regulation on agencies and Crown corporations is not published. I think it will be issued very soon.

AIR TRANSPORT

THE USE OF FRENCH IN AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In the answers he gave the House of Commons last November 21 and yesterday, December 9, following questions about the use of French in airports, the minister said that a committee of his department was reviewing the implications of the use of French in airports. Can the minister tell the House today when the committee will submit its report, what are the names of the members of that committee and whether French-speaking controllers are represented on that committee?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was a committee which had representation from all sides, including the French-speaking controllers, that made very little progress before discontinuing its work because of some confrontation between the parties represented. What has been going on since is that within our department we have been meeting the various people interested with a view to making progress in respect of the safe use of the two languages in differing circumstances. In the case of air traffic and air traffic control, I will expect a series of reports rather than a specific report in order that we can make progress in a progressive manner.

An hon. Member: And that's a progressive answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPRISONMENT OF SIX UKRAINIAN WOMEN BY RUSSIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTEST

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I want the question answered by the Prime Minister and not by a parliamentary secretary, because they have no knowledge of policy.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask this question in view of the fact that today is International Human Rights day, and that members of the Ukrainian peoples are gathered on Parliament Hill for the purpose of protesting the imprisonment of six women who have committed no offence other than having stated that the constitutions of the U.S.S.R. and the United Nations denies the imprisonment being imposed on these women in the U.S.S.R.

● (1440)

Having regard to the fact that representatives of the Ukrainian people brought this matter to the attention of the government on December 2 and asked that the question of the imprisonment of women who are political prisoners should be brought to the attention of the Third Committee debate at the UN, and since the matter was not raised, will the Prime Minister, because of the very great importance of this matter and its interest to hundreds of thousands of Canadians, and having regard to the provisions of the Helsinki pact, bring to the attention of the U.S.S.R. the injustice that is being perpetrated which denies those principles of the United Nations charter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question, of course, is an important one but it refers to certain dates and discussion in committee of a particular nature, and of such a nature indeed that the right hon. gentleman had to read his question because he was not too much aware of it himself. I think he will understand that if I refer this question to the parliamentary secretary, it would not be the intention to downgrade any member of this House particularly one as capable as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The capabilities—

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order may I say to the right hon. gentleman opposite that I received the representatives of the Committee of Canadian Ukrainians some time ago. I do not recall the exact date. We discussed action and information in respect of the Canadian public on the question the right hon. gentleman referred to this House. This afternoon, in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I am receiving a group of Canadian women who will make a representation so I think he will understand that I would like to listen to their representation before making any statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister saw fit to make one of his smart aleck remarks—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —unused as he is to reading from the record as he speaks. I have before me a document giving the names of these women and I could not memorize them, but because the Prime Minister does not know who they are possibly I should read this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has put a question which has been referred to the parliamentary secretary. If he has a supplementary question perhaps he would put it right away.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a gratuitous and insulting remark was made. However, he is improving; he does not use four-letter words any more. Mr. Speaker, on a question of order I raise this point—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have been here long enough to know the rules.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the right hon. member or any other member has a point of order it can be taken at three o'clock. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EFFECT ON GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT OF RECEIPT OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE BY GRANDPARENT RAISING GRANDCHILD

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that grandparents receiving old age security and the guaranteed income supplement who are called upon to raise their grandchildren find that the family allowance paid for the grandchildren to the grandmother results in the guaranteed income supplement paid to the grandparents being reduced, even though this may happpen in just a few cases, will the minister look at it in the hope that this unfairness can be corrected.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having drawn this matter to my attention before. I am sure this is a matter which probably escaped the attention of all members of parliament when we were considering family allowances and the OAS legislation. I am looking into it further and assessing the actual situation. I hope that after review, if what the hon. member says is the exact situation, we shall be able to remedy this situation at the first opportunity.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUSPENSION OF TWO QUEBEC COMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES FOR USING FRENCH

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport or his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the obsessive problem of bilingualism which prevails at the moment and the inadmissible response of the department which has just dismissed or suspended two French-speaking air controllers because they were bold enough to speak French in Dorval, can the minister tell the House if the Quebec government has made representations concerning this matter and if so what steps he intends to take to check this chronic disease which weakens the French fact more and more throughout Canada and more specifically in Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of any representation made by the province of Quebec on this particular point in the last couple of days since this situation arose but I will make inquiries for the hon. member and advise him.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PORTRAYAL OF WOMEN BY ADVERTISING MEDIA— GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister responsible for the Status of Women in Canada. As International Women's Year is drawing to a close, can the minister tell the House what steps he has already taken or intends to take in an effort to heal the sickeningly dim-witted or even moronic image of women all too often portrayed, or should I say betrayed, by the advertising media.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which was discussed during a conference called "Action 75 plus", which was held in Ottawa recently. Following this conference, the Canadian Advertisers' Association has set up a special workshop to consider this question. I trust the Canadian Advertisers' Association will take the necessary steps to improve the situation in this respect which, as the hon. member has pointed out, is most unsatisfactory.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—SUGGESTED FIRST REFUSAL PROVISION FOR CMHC IN CASE OF RESALE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the minister responsible for housing, but in his absence I should like to address it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the avowed intent of the AHOP program was to provide low-cost housing for Canadians, and in view of the fact that some of these houses are now being sold at a capital gain, would the Prime Minister entertain the thought of having a first refusal provision written into CMHC contracts so that more housing can be provided for Canadians rather than as a means of gaining additional capital funding.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and take it up with my minister.

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF ROYAL TRUST AND ROYAL BANK TO RECEIVE APPLICATIONS FOR LOANS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the Prime Minister aware that the Royal Trust Company and the Royal Bank refuse to receive applications from AHOP applicants, even though they have qualified in every other way, and that the Royal Bank has notified the regional representative of AHOP in Vancouver that he should no longer send applicants for AHOP to the Royal Bank.

● (1450)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would repeat the first part of his question. I think I might be familiar with the nature of the problem, and I might be able to answer.

Mr. Friesen: Is the minister aware that Royal Trust Company and the Royal Bank have refused to receive applications from AHOP applicants who have qualified in every other way, and that the representative of the Royal Bank has written to the representative of AHOP in the western region stating that he is no longer supposed to send applicants to the Royal Bank?

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that at all. I am not at all familiar with the situation with regard to Royal Trust. But I have had very extensive discussions with the vice-president, who I believe is in charge of mortgage operations for the Royal Bank, which is participating. There might have been some difficulties with regard to the period of amortization, but I believe that has been worked out, and if the hon. member's constituent would have his manager contact Mr. Peter Carter at the Royal Bank in Montreal, he might be able to have this matter straightened out.

PROPOSED SOCIAL SERVICES ACT—DATE OF CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON ADMINISTRATION AND JURISDICTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to the envisaged social services act. Can the minister advise whether he has lined up a time for meeting his provincial counterparts? There has been some indication that this would happen either in January or February. Is the minister optimistic in terms of an agreement being reached at that particular time?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I will say that it will be next February 3 and 4. The answer to the second part is yes.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: In an article in the Globe and Mail of December 9 the following is stated:

> Mr. Lalonde said earlier he expected the proposals for a new Social Services Act separating income security from social services will be accepted by provincial welfare ministers at their next conference in January or February and passed in Parliament by the end of 1976.

If those remarks are true, is the minister now stating that there has been agreement in the interim with respect to administration costs, jurisdictional problems and administration? Has there been agreement in the interim so that the minister can be optimistic, if indeed those are his words in that press report?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have consulted all the ministers of social welfare of the country during a recent tour of the provinces. I have every reason to believe that the jurisdictional or administrative problems which might arise in respect of a new law on social services have been thoroughly resolved, and I have no reason to think that any particular difficulty will surface in these two areas at the next meeting.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ALLEGED CHARGING OF SOME OPERATING COSTS TO ENERGY SUPPLIES ALLOCATION BOARD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the Auditor General's report which indicated that the National Energy Board toward the end of its 1974-75 year charged $90,000 of its operating costs to the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, which was a clear attempt to circumvent the control of parliament on spending. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that this is in contravention of the Financial Administration Act and the Criminal Code in the area of criminal breach of trust, whether he will refer this incident to the Department of Justice for a legal opinion as to whether the parties involved and responsible should be prosecuted.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter. I have some cause to be sceptical about the question as stated by the hon. member.

Mr. Bawden: In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance was in charge of the area which governed the National Energy Board at the time of the fraudulent conversion, will the Prime Minister say whether he will take steps to ensure that when looking into this matter it will be on an impartial basis, and will he assure the House that the facts which come out are brought before the House so that the House can judge how this was conducted?

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member knows, the matter was referred yesterday to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and whatever facts he wants to ascertain he can do so at that committee.

URBAN AFFAIRS

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON HUMAN SETTLEMENTS—ATTITUDE OF VANCOUVER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Was the minister able to persuade the mayor and council of Vancouver to agree that the United Nations conference on Human Settlements should go on as planned?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not attempt to persuade the council. I thought that would be presumptuous for a federal minister. I pointed out that we respected their views on a moral issue, and indeed, shared many of them, but we gave our reasons for not being able to accede to their request. I understand, however—and this is on hearsay—that last night the council reversed its decision and now is welcoming the conference, as is the community as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY WHETHER POSTMASTER GENERAL INFORMED OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD DECISION—POSSIBLE APPEARANCE OF POSTMASTER GENERAL BEFORE BOARD

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General in the hope of clarifying some of the information which has been floating around today: first, that the Anti-Inflation Board has been in contact with the union; second, that the Prime Minister said there had been contact between the Anti-Inflation Board and some members of the cabinet; and third, that the Anti-Inflation Board said earlier today that it would be making an announcement later today. The Postmaster General in his earlier response hid behind the word "official". In view of these alleged facts I ask the Postmaster General if there has been any contact between the Anti-Inflation Board and himself, and if so, what was the information imparted?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there has been absolutely no contact, officially or unofficially, between myself and the Anti-Inflation Board. I repeat what I have said all month, and that is that I would be pleased to appear before that board, if it were found necessary by the board, to help clarify certain portions or parts of the collective agreement which the board may feel needs clarifying, particularly on behalf of the labour movement. I think that is precisely what I said in an earlier response to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stanfield: Just honourable.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member can read what he wants into it. I am unaware of any official statement by the Anti-Inflation Board. I simply indicated that there were other duties and suggested that they have a lot to keep themselves busy with.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): In view of the remarks of the Postmaster General just now, I should like to ask if he has made an official offer of an official request to appear before the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. Mackasey: No, Mr. Speaker, for the very simple reason that as the hon. gentleman knows—or as I just tried to tell him—there has been no communication, officially or unoffically, between myself and the board. To the best of my knowledge there is no official statement by the Anti-Inflation Board. Perhaps that is why it is having a press conference later in the day. These questions are all based on speculative stories which have been appearing in the press. I simply repeat what I have been saying all along, that I offered officially, with regard to this collective agreement, to appear before that board and to help clarify any areas of ambiguity which the board feels may or could result in a negative reaction to the settlement.

POSSIBLE RELOCATION OF DEPARTMENTS IN MONTREAL—REQUEST THAT ATLANTIC PROVINCES BE GIVEN CONSIDERATION

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Is there any truth to the report that certain federal departments are to be relocated from Ottawa, the nation's capital, to Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no department moving to Montreal but the hon. member knows that it is part of the policy of the government to decentralize the administration of the government to various regions of the country so far as possible. That is the reason for instance, that certain services of the Department of Supply and Services were established in the riding of the hon. member for Matane some months ago. That is why the Mint has been decentralized to Winnipeg, and the government will continue to follow this policy of decentralization.

Mr. Jones: Is there any consideration being given to relocating or decentralizing some departments or offices to the Atlantic province?

Mr. Trudeau: Decentralization comes under the President of the Treasury Board. He is the one who discusses this at the suggestion of various ministers, and I can assure the hon. member that the government is hoping to decentralize its services to many parts of the country. Of course, the Maritime provinces are prime candidates for consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

On the order: Motions:

December 2, 1975—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on Thursday, June 12, 1975, be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on a question that is of interest to all Canadians who love freedom, and in particular those of the Canadian race who placed before me this afternoon a memorandum concerning six women, whose names are given, who are imprisoned in labour camps in the U.S.S.R. and who have committed no offence. These Canadians of Ukranian origin would have been tremendously interested if they had been here today to see the reaction of the members of the Liberal party against reference of a matter like this—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unfortunately the members cannot be identified because of the numerous groups apparently joined together against a perfectly responsible and reasonable request that I made to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), has a large responsiblity, if not the largest of all, for External Affairs.

These Ukranian people are on Parliament Hill today because it is Human Rights Day for purpose of asking why it has been, that having brought this matter to the attention of the government on December 2 and asked that the matter of the women imprisoned as political prisoners be brought up during the third committee debate at the United Nations, the Canadian delegation did not raise the matter even though telegrams had been sent and appeals made. Nothing was done.

The answer given by the Prime Minister—the pretended answer was one that I wish people of Ukranian origin across this country could have heard and have seen his conduct when he gave it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —when he gave that irresponsible answer to the question I raised. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that disorder ruled in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has the floor on a point of order. Since last Easter it has been the procedure that points of order to be raised during the question period should be deferred until three o'clock. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has been given the floor under that procedure to raise a point of order. With all due respect, however, I must caution him, as he must well know, that at this time if it is simply a criticism of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his conduct in answering or failing to answer a question, that is not a point of order. I would therefore ask the right hon. gentleman to state his point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the question was directed to the Prime Minister and his reply was a surreptitious exhibition of this kind of answer. Instead of giving an answer the question was turned over to the parliamentary secretary to answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: And very well indeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With great respect to her fine ability—and I mean that most sincerely—parliamentary secretaries have no authority to speak for the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked what the government's policy is. This practice has been going on for several months and it is something that cannot be permitted. It is not permitted in the mother of parliaments—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The groans over there indicate a lack of knowledge regarding parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliamentary secretaries may deal with routine matters, but on questions of policy as important as this one, concerning the freedom of the individual, the only person who can answer in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the Prime Minister, or an acting minister.

The point of order I want Your Honour to consider is that parliamentary secretaries, having no responsibility or connection with the cabinet in any way, cannot answer for government policy or with respect to those matters encompassed by government policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs rises on a point of order.

Miss Bégin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some clarifications. I am even tempted to call this a question of privilege since a strange situation exists from the fact that I am a female member of parliament and there is talk about the status of women in other countries, but I will not deal with that. On the same point of order, I want to state that, although the role of a parliamentary secretary may not be very well defined yet but will eventually be over the years, the fact still remains that I took an oath of office and limited myself to the answers which come under the functions of the minister whom the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called upon me to assist. I would like to state that the multiculturalism policy is a known government policy for which a minister is responsible. It was implemented by this government and I did not broach the subject, thinking that the whole House knew it quite well.

Our human rights policy in that respect is just as clear. I answered what I think is not a routine question but a question of representations by a group which fits perfectly in the functions of a parliamentary secretary. I said and I can say the name of the person representing the group of women who will be coming to see me in 20 minutes if I can leave the House. I told Mrs. Hélène Dubois as soon as contact was made with my office that it would give me great pleasure to receive this afternoon the delegation she heads. It is not my fault if the object of the representation was communicated first to the opposition. I want to assure the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that it is within the functions of parliamentary secretaries to do what I did.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has raised a point of order concerning the rights of parliamentary secretaries giving answers to questions that have been put to ministers specifically. In this particular instance it may be recalled that the question was put by the right hon. gentleman to the right hon. Prime Minister. The right hon. Prime Minister made an initial response to the question and then in turn referred the response to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss Bégin). I would rather believe that that practice having been followed in this particular instance, it would be impeccable. The larger question has been raised, however, as to whether parliamentary secretaries in general have the power to respond for their ministers in their absence, particularly in respect of large policy questions which have been raised.

I know the matter has been considered in the past, but naturally I do not have the precedents involved at my fingertips for consideration. I would therefore like to take an opportunity to review them before making a larger pronouncement on the question.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, if you are going to consider this matter I would just make a remark. We would gladly be guided by Your Honour's decision in the future on this particular matter, but when studying the representation of the right hon. gentleman if you follow his suggestion of referring to the mother of parliaments, I would urge that you look at the situation there, Sir, and see that the ministry is much larger and of course the parliamentary secretary does perform a different role. We could avoid this by naming parliamentary secretaries to the positions of junior ministers as is the practice in the United Kingdom.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the right hon. gentleman wants to refer this to the mother of parliaments, as he puts it, it would be more reasonable to follow the practice there. The Prime Minister only appears in the House to answer questions every fortnight or so; again, these are written questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Twice a week.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if this were the situation, I should certainly be prepared to answer all questions, if they were written in advance and I had to come into the House only once a week or every two weeks.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Prime Minister in the U.K. does this twice a week.

Mr. Trudeau: If we are to refer to the situation in the U.K., Mr. Speaker, I hope you will look at the total picture. I am sure you will.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, apropos of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) just said, it is apparent, quite apart from remarks he made about the British parliament, that he has reserved to himself the right to make further submissions on this matter. If he is to be allowed an answer, I hope that we too will be permitted to answer and that there will be a full discussion before Your Honour rules on the point.

As to the Prime Minister's comment about parliamentary secretaries answering questions on behalf of ministries regardless of their size, let me say that perhaps this point is directed more to the competency of a ministry than its size.

Mr. Speaker: I assure all hon. members that before I make any ruling which could interfere with the practice established for many years by this House, I shall certainly allow ample opportunity for further discussion.

2. In the past five years, DSS has contracted for the purchase of 38,590 rucksacks from Manitoba Tent and Awning Company with a total value of $960,823.88.

D. Feehan High School, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. (iii) Estimated total construction cost of $1,307,984. Federal loan approved $365,000. It should be noted that the closing date for receipt of applications from the provinces under this program was September 30, 1974. Including the above two projects, the total number of applications received from the Province of Saskatchewan and approved for both constituencies is as follows: Saskatoon-Biggar—fourteen projects, with an estimated total construction cost of $5,159,747, involving Federal loans totalling $943,504. Saskatoon-Humboldt—nine projects, with an estimated total construction cost of $4,833,897, involving Federal loans totalling $1,057,667.

MIRABEL AIRPORT—INDOOR CAR PARKING FACILITIES

Question No. 3,556—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is there an indoor parking facility at the Mirabel Airport and (a) if so, how many cars will it hold (b) if not, are there any plans to install one?

2. Are there any plans to install an indoor parking facility at Terminal 2 in the Toronto International Airport?

3. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,176, which stated that at Vancouver International Airport the feasibility of a parking structure was being studied, is the Minister of Transport aware that Air

Canada presented a report to the Department of Transport some years ago regarding indoor parking at the Vancouver International Airport?

4. Did a private parking corporation make representations to the government regarding the installation of an indoor parking facility at the Vancouver International Airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Mirabel's three level parking structure, with two levels covered, has a capacity for 2,500 cars.

2. Yes. Construction has commenced on the first module of a five level parking structure for Toronto's Terminal 2.

3. Neither Transport Canada nor Air Canada have been able to identify the report referred to in connection with indoor parking at Vancouver International Airport.

4. Yes. In 1973 Transport Canada received a proposal for indoor parking facilities at Vancouver Airport. The proposal will be considered during Transport Canada's feasibility study for a parking structure.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CONDITIONS AND PROVISIONS GOVERNING CITIZENSHIP

The House resumed from Monday, December 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner that Bill C-20, respecting citizenship, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when I called it ten o'clock last Monday I had been complimenting the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) for his sense of history and timeliness in bringing forward this legislation so close to Christmas. I think this shows his great wisdom, as I am sure the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) will agree.

I was about to compliment the Secretary of State for including in this bill recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. We have, over the years, treated our women with benign neglect, if I may quote from another public document on the status of women. We have neglected them in the work force, in the community, neglected their education, and not given them their just opportunities. These remarks are pertinent at any time, not merely in International Women's Year. Therefore this bill represents a significant and commendable step forward on the part of the government. I commend it for adopting at least part of the recommendations of the royal commission.

The bill improves the position of husbands or wives of Canadian citizens and their children. Indeed in that regard this bill is a significant advance and brings the law into line with thinking in the community.

The bill deals with something else important, to which the minister referred in passing, the question of the British subject. I think it is correct to say that, by virtue of this bill, we are to treat those who are not British, and not member of the Commonwealth of Nations, in the same way as we treat British subjects. On May 21 the minister dealt with this matter when he said, as reported on page 5985 of Hansard:

> ... a British subject ... is not questioned on his knowledge of the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship. He is not tested on his knowledge of the English or French language. No interview is conducted to determine his character. He does not appear before a judge to take the oath of allegiance unless he himself requests it. Normally, he simply takes the oath before an examiner at the time of application.

By that statement the minister implied that we were wrong to treat the British subject differently. But I suggest there was good reason for treating him differently, as I suggested previously. The British subject, by virtue of the accident of history, birth, geography, and familiarity with traditions, was aware of our basic institutions, of our parliamentary system which, basically, was and still is modelled on the British system. So there was some justification for treating him differently. Yet the minister seemed to question this practice. From my reading of his speech, and the bill, the minister seems to think there should not be that difference.

The Minister does distinguish between those from Commonwealth countries and those from non-Commonwealth countries, as the bill refers to citizens of the Commonwealth. Perhaps in that he is saying he does not completely move away from the position that there is a matter of tradition, training, background, and education in Commonwealth countries which would not make it alien for special consideration to be given to those people.

We must bear in mind that many people who come to this country have enjoyed the British parliamentary system, British justice, and other protections of the law as a matter of tradition. An advantage is enjoyed by the citizen from Great Britain, a Commonwealth country, or any other democratic country, English or French speaking, in terms of the necessity of absorbing new traditions.

We briefly touched on the question of the potential one-year credit for what might be termed, in parentheses in the sense of the Citizenship Act, legal residence in Canada. I did not deal with the question of the three or five-year period.

I reviewed the minister's speech of May 21, 1975, to see if there was anything other than a sense or principle of arbitrariness that could apply equally to the three or five-year period. In his speech he indicated that it was his feeling, not a matter of principle, that the three-year period was less arbitrary and less unfair than the five-year period. I take it that was the government's feeling as well.

I will be most interested in the comments made before the committee. I hope that not merely native Canadians will have a chance to appear before the committee. I would like to hear some groups representing new Canadians, immigrants and landed immigrants. They should give evidence not only with respect to this bill but with respect to the three or five-year period.

In the course of representing my constituency in this matter, as well as the matter to which I alluded a few days ago, I come in contact with groups of people who have recently come to Canada. Some are first generation, some second generation, and some landed immigrants who are not yet citizens. They have spoken to me about the three-year period as opposed to the five-year period. I think these people are representative of groups to be found in any part of Canada. They had a mixed view with regard to the shortening of the period of time. I thought it would be otherwise, but that was their view. Some felt that the three-year period would be alright. As I said, these are not native born Canadians, but landed immigrants and others.

One woman who spoke to me said that she regarded citizenship as something very precious. She only recently received her citizenship. She regards this as something that was earned, not only through good behaviour and staying outside the criminal courts, but through knowledge and a number of other things. I would not have paid too much attention to that view except it came from a particular person for whom I have extremely high regard.

I ask the minister to instruct his colleagues on the committee that will deal with this matter to give the widest possible scope to the representations that will be made by the various ethnic groups. If the three-year period is sound, it should be adopted. However, if there is some question about it, particularly among the groups that I have mentioned, and indeed generally in the country, we should listen to those views before making up our minds.

I want to deal now with something the minister dealt with at page 5985 of his speech. It is with regard to the proposed change in the requirement that an applicant be of good character. As I understand the minister's argument, he feels this is not measurable. When dealing with these matters, the minister felt it would be better if we had something that was measurable such as criminal behaviour, a breach of the Criminal Code, or a breach of the Narcotic Control Act. Evidence of a perpetual inability to abide by the law, even though it might be small in terms of the wrong that would be committed in the normal sense, would be something measurable. It would be a record to which the minister or someone else could point.

On the face of it this sounds pretty good. However, there is something which concerns me. I believe this provision is a calculated—and I do not use that word in the wrong sense—downgrading of the citizenship court. It will make that court nothing more than a rubber stamp.

I am sure the minister's field of knowledge goes far beyond that of mine, but having regard to the calibre of the men and women who make up our citizenship courts, their devotion to their discretionary duties under the act, and the good record which the citizenship court enjoys, this downgrading is unfortunate. What is really being said is that citizenship will only be granted in terms of those things that are measurable.

I think the minister wants to be fair. However, in trying to codify the law, giving it parameters that are geometrically ascertainable, he is depriving the citizenship court of a very important jurisdiction that is not within the parameters of the bureaucrat to decide. His answer is going to be, "Well, in certain cases we have ministerial discretion." I do not mean any disrespect to the minister or his colleagues in this context but how better is the minister fitted to exercise discretion than the courts? The ministry is political. There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Nowlan: It is paralyzed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My hon. friend says the ministry is paralysed. I think there is some evidence that that is so. But aside from the paralysis there is a political aspect to decisions which are made by a cabinet, by a ministry, or by an order in council. That is a fact and I am not arguing with it. The one thing a citizenship court can do in terms of the real difficulties which face a person who may not be able to obtain citizenship is at least to give the appearance, and I suggest, the substance of maintaining impartiality. I hope the minister will consider this in relation to the removal from the citizenship code of those words "of good character" which could allow a judge, perhaps, to look behind certain of the documents presented as to a person's behaviour and find in that person's favour. As we try to protect ourselves on one hand we may do damage to the cause on the other.

What is wrong in a society which is opening its doors to people who are qualified under its rules, saying that you must establish yourself in terms of the language, the government, and all these other things we recognize? You must show, as the minister says, that you have not breached the Criminal Code, that you have been a good citizen with respect to that. What is wrong with reserving to, really, the people of Canada, whether native-born people of Canada or people who have come here as immigrants and have become citizens and have elected a government—what is wrong with reserving to them and their government, or perhaps better a citizenship court, an inquiry in the right place with respect to this whole intangible of good character?

The government in this bill is attempting to take discretion away from the citizenship judge. I believe this is the effect of it. It is becoming a bit more like a rubber stamp and we are substituting therefor in essence a ministerial discretion. I think the end the minister is probably trying to achieve in this bill, to evidence fairness, would be better served if that discretion were left with a body or organization which could not be termed political even by the most dishonest among us.

This is why I feel very strongly that the judge should not become a rubber stamp, and that the government and the machinery established by the government, that is to say the citizenship court, ought to have the right to look into the question of good character.

I have an instance that came to me, which brought this home to me as an important omission from this bill, namely, the reservation to someone in authority of the question of good character. There is a constituent of mine who has two children, both of them girls. There is a person living in my constituency who is, in effect, watching and besetting those two girls. That man has never committed a criminal offence. The girls know it is happening, the father knows it is happening, the police now know it is happening, and I know it is happening.

They may never get a conviction against this person, who is a landed immigrant, yet in my judgment, and I think in the minister's judgment if the case were brought before him, or in the judgment of a citizenship court, while he has not contravened those parameters in which the minister is interested, any right minded person would say that that person is not fit to be here. It was perhaps a mistake to allow him here in the first place, though I think not from checking the records. But having come here, he is not a proper person, if we have a choice, to whom citizenship ought to be granted. That is the kind of case which has come to my attention in support of the submission that there is a case to be made for the vesting of power in somebody that would appear to be impartial. I understand the reason behind this omission, and I want to make that clear to the minister. But I really think it is important, and that it is one which ought to be considered.

I shall quote the minister again. I do not disagree with what he said. He said, as reported at page 5986 of Hansard:

> Canadian citizenship enables one to do several things: to vote, to run for public office, to carry a Canadian passport, to exercise certain activities where citizenship is a statutory pre-requisite.

Then he went on to deal with intangibles. I must say I think citizenship carries with it something far beyond those things, and far beyond the sense of belonging to which the minister later alluded in that portion of his speech. I think citizenship carries with it not only activities that the new citizen is enabled to engage in as a result of citizenship, but carries with it obligations that the new citizen, as well as the older citizen, owes to his community in terms of behaviour. I think it is not unreasonable that provision ought to be there in the law of the receiving country for recognizing judicially a "man of good character" in that broad sense. While admitting that mistakes may be made from time to time. I think it is not unreasonable to ask the minister, when it comes before the committee, whether or not that ought not still to be in the bill.

I do not want to take up the time of the House any longer. I want to thank the minister for being here. He was here the other evening when I spoke; I merely want to reiterate the importance citizenship courts have in the scheme of things, and the fact that I regret very much they seem to be downgraded somewhat in the legislation. The experiment with respect to citizenship courts has been a relatively short one, and I wonder if the ministry is not being perhaps a bit premature in terms of the judgment it is making with respect to them.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I want to put on record a few remarks on this bill. As everyone knows, it was introduced in the House and given first reading in October, 1974. It came on for second reading late in May of 1975 and we are now continuing that stage before passing it on to committee. I do not know what the urgency is, but at any rate we are dealing with the bill today.

This bill contains certain positive points with which I very much agree—for instance, equal treatment of men and women. For example, an alien wife or the husband of a Canadian citizen wanting to gain citizenship will be subject to the same waiting period, and this is a good feature of the bill. A father or mother can apply to register a child as a Canadian citizen; derivation of citizenship can come from either parent. This is another excellent point for which I commend the minister. Another positive step is the reduction in the age of eligibility for citizenship from 21 years to 18. I have personally become acquainted with this sort of situation many times in cases where the parents have separated. The father can not be found or his permission can not be obtained, and this is another good feature in the bill.

There are some other provisions in the bill that I hope will be closely examined in committee. I say hope because I am becoming somewhat frustrated with the gerrymandering of the committees of this House. If we do not take hold of the situation in the new session, I think the whole committee system will go down the drain.

While I am discussing the provisions of the bill I might make reference to clause 33(1) in Part VIII dealing with the status of persons in Canada. This clause provides:

> Real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held and disposed of by a person who is not a Canadian citizen in the same manner in all respects as by a Canadian citizen; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from or in succession to a person who is not a Canadian citizen in the same manner in all respects as through, from or in succession to a Canadian citizen.

The rights of owners of personal property who come from another country is a very delicate subject. I am well aware that many Canadians own property in countries other than Canada, so there is a reciprocal factor here. The provinces are very much aware of the problem. Indeed in my own particular riding, as a matter of fact in the town I live in, a whole block has been held by a citizen of Portugal for something like 10 years; the place is a shambles and the town is powerless to do anything about it. The owner of the property is always delinquent in his taxes, but just when the town is ready to seize his property for non-payment of taxes he pays a few back taxes and the same thing starts all over again. This sort of thing has been going on for about 10 years. He even threatened the town with law suits when it passed certain by-laws pertaining to commercial buildings, claiming that the by-laws inhibited him in developing the property.

Sooner or later this is an area about which we will have to take a firm stand. There are numerous instances like this in various parts of the country that I have come across; property is held and held and held, and nothing can be done about its appearance. In the instance I have cited the town is called upon to inspect the property, to close up doors that have been broken into, repair windows and that sort of thing, yet it is powerless to take action.

Several hon. members who have spoken in this debate have referred to clause 5 of the bill. I think unfortunately this particular clause has either been misread or misinterpreted, because I gather from the remarks of some members that they are under the impression that if a person is in Canada illegally and he subsequently becomes a landed immigrant, half of the time he was here illegally counts towards citizenship. That just is not so. I think a clear reading of the clause indicates that the maximum time he can count toward citizenship is one year. It is unfortunate that so much emphasis has been put on this point. It is not entirely clear from the way the clause is written, and it could probably have been drafted a little better than it is. It could have been couched in clearer language with perhaps an explanatory side note, but that is not the case.

One aspect that exercises me about the question of citizenship is that it is not tied in with immigration. I think we all agree that we should go back to the old system where citizenship and immigration were in the same department. I do not think they should ever have been separated; the two are interlinked. Examination of the various speeches on this subject in the House invariably reveals that immigration is discussed along with citizenship.

I believe at one time the government had an immigration resettlement program. I do not know what happened to it, and I recognize there are difficulties in directing people where they can and cannot go. But at the present time tremendous pressure is being put on the larger municipalities, basically those in Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver where the bulk of immigrants to Canada seem to settle. Tremendous pressure is put on housing requirements and services in the municipalities, as well as upon the educational system.

I was talking to the mayor of Toronto some months ago and he mentioned that something like 50 per cent of the children of immigrants going into the public school system for the first time had either a poor knowledge or no knowledge of English. I am not saying that is their fault, but we must bear in mind that the municipalities are trying to handle a problem that results from the federal government's immigration policy.

I am fortunate enough to have travelled rather extensively throughout the world. At the last count I had visited, I think, 35 different countries, some under totalitarian governments. I am always glad to get back to Canada, and I am very proud of my country and of my Canadian citizenship. While abroad I have been approached, as I am sure members on all sides of the House are when they travel abroad, by people who want to come to Canada. They ask how they can get to Canada, what I can do to get them here, and how they can become a Canadian citizen.

Looking at some of these people, Mr. Speaker, you cannot help but feel compassion for them. Some of them came in contact with missionaries from Canada when they were children; they were educated by missionaries, and on reaching adulthood found they were isolated from their own citizens in their own country. They see the advantages and privileges we have in this country, and there is a desire on their part to come here. By and large we have a reputation for tolerance, for freedom, and for freedom of expression, and we certainly do not want to change that.

We must look carefully at this matter of citizenship. The suggestion of reducing the time from five years to three years is one that bothers me greatly, particularly when I look at what other countries are doing, and I think that is a proper thing to do. We see that Britain has a five-year waiting period; the United States has a five-year waiting period; France has a five-year waiting period; and in Belgium under some circumstances the waiting period is up to ten years; West Germany has shorter periods, but the shortest is five years; Sweden has a ten-year waiting period; New Zealand has a five-year waiting period for British subjects; and I believe Australia has a three-year period for British subjects, with a longer period of time for others. When we get the bill to the committee we should look very closely and carefully at what other countries are doing before reducing this to three years. Certainly this is one point that bothers many members on this side of the House.

I have had some objections, like the hon. member who spoke on the matter earlier, expressed by people who have come to Canada as immigrants and have obtained their citizenship after five years, or as they put it, they have earned their citizenship, and they feel somewhat hurt that now someone may possibly come to this country and meet all the criteria, and obtain citizenship in three years.

There are many points that we can discuss in respect of this bill, but the one thing that really concerns me is what will happen to the bill when it goes to the committee. We have seen a great deal of manoeuvring in committees since the last election and many of us are becoming concerned. On a number of occasions when we have attempted to take a vote which may have gone against the government, the government members have left the committee in order that there would not be a quorum. I think that is deplorable action on their part.

We have also seen quite a bit of manoeuvring by the steering committees. On occasion when the members of a steering committee have decided on a course of action for the committee, when the committee itself meets someone has moved a motion to set aside the recommendations of that steering committee, substituting another recommendation—in fact exercising a form of closure or guillotine on the committee by requiring it to report back to the House within a certain time period. There have been numerous occasions of this in the past several months.

What will happen if this sort of thing continues is that when bills return to the House they will be the subject of amendment after amendment after amendment. This will frustrate our procedures. The purpose of a committee, as I understand it, is to find the facts and make recommendations to the House. Committees are charged by the House of Commons with the responsibility of eliciting information, examining the legislation, and recommending a course of action. This is not what is happening.

There are so many important aspects of this bill I am wondering just what will happen when it reaches committee. Will it receive the same kind of treatment as other bills in the past, or will the government see the error of its ways and allow the bill to be considered by the committee unhampered by this kind of manoeuvring? Will the committee be allowed to obtain information from witnesses, from ministers, and from interested parties in all segments of society on this important subject?

I cannot understand the urgency of reducing this waiting period for citizenship from five years to three years, but I am prepared to be convinced that this should be done. If someone can present good arguments, and I believe some hon. members have some, I will certainly be prepared to listen to them. I have listened to those who have spoken so far and I have read many of the speeches, but I still feel we should maintain the five-year period.

After listening to the remarks of the minister the other day I felt there were circumstances in which the waiting period should be reduced. The minister referred to a student who had been here for a number of years studying in this country, and I think such a case would be valid in respect of reducing the time period. This is one of the things we should be allowed to consider.

I sincerely hope that when we get the bill to committee we will not witness political manoeuvring. I hope we will not see a great deal of movement on the government side toward the guillotine, forcing the committee to report back to the House by a specific date. The committee should be allowed full range to discuss all segments of the bill and to call witnesses. Perhaps it would be of value to call some of the citizenship judges from around this area, if that is convenient. They could come before the committee and give us the advantage of their experience.

That is about the sum and substance of what I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see some parts of this bill. There are some positive steps suggested, and I commend the minister for bringing those suggestions forward. At the same time I have reservations about other clauses of the bill. It is important that we be allowed to examine this bill thoroughly and completely in the committee. If there are some particularly sensitive areas in respect of which we want discussion there is nothing to prohibit us from holding meetings in camera. Let us not gang the committee; let us allow the committee a full ranging and complete examination of this bill, with a full opportunity to express its views in its report back to the House so that this piece of legislation can be a credit to citizenship and something we can support.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity of making a few remarks on Bill C-20 as I think it is a very important bill, for which the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) should be commended.

I believe this is the third day on which we have dealt with Bill C-20 in the House of Commons. In view of that fact, and my feeling that there has been a great deal of discussion so far on this matter, I will limit my remarks to what I think are some of the highlights.

I hope it will not be too long before members on all sides of the House agree that this bill should go to the committee for the kind of careful study it deserves. It seems this is not a controversial bill, although there are several clauses about which some of my colleagues are concerned. Their concerns do not seem to be too serious. I hope we can get the bill into committee as soon as possible, hopefully by the end of this day.

The other night as I listened to my colleagues on the other side of the House, a number of my friends came around and asked me what I thought about citizenship and immigration. I said to some of them that I think it probably is just a little late to ask that question, and that probably they should have asked it of my ancestors. I think they had a tremendously generous immigration policy. It is perhaps a little late in a number of ways. One of my good friends in Kamloops, a former chief, said to me that as he looks across the river and sees that the white man is building a cement basement, he knows he intends to stay here a little while.

The bill before us does some very important things. It reflects the thinking of modern-day people living in a very fast moving world. A number of adjectives have been used to describe this particular bill. The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) described it as progressive. It is a very progressive piece of legislation.

The act we have now came into force I believe on January 1, 1947. It has been amended in a number of minor ways since that time. I think that is quite a long period in which to have such an important piece of legislation on the books without serious amendments.

One of the characteristics of the present law that has bothered me for some time is that it clearly plays favourites. It gives rights to men that it does not give to women. British subjects seem to have a special status. They are favoured over immigrants to Canada from other countries. I am glad Bill C-20 corrects all these inequities in the present law.

I am particularly pleased about the clauses that give women equal status with men. Now when we have gone though the process of having the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, International Women's Year, and other important measures to give equality to women, we wonder how we could have been so dumb. Why did we not do many of these things a long time ago? Many of them are overdue. The report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women pointed out five ways in which the present act discriminates against women.

As the law now stands the alien wife of a Canadian citizen wishing to become a citizen here requires only one year of residence. The alien husband of a Canadian wife has to wait a full five years. Bill C-20 provides that the husband or wife of a Canadian citizen must only fulfil the standard residency requirement before becoming a citizen.

Women who had married an alien before 1947 lost their citizenship. Most of these people were not even aware that they were no longer classed as Canadians. Now when they apply for a passport they are told that they must first become Canadian citizens. It is easy to understand the consternation of these women who were born and raised in Canada and who have made their own contribution to this land when suddenly they find that this right has been taken from them. These revisions will also correct this injustice.

The act as it now stands only permits the father to apply on behalf of a minor child so that the child may obtain citizenship. This has been changed so that either parent may make such an application. The same arrangement applies for adoptive parents. These are very progressive changes. There are other changes being made to the legislation that are important, but I think so far as women are concerned these highlight the concerns they have had.

The new provision to allow a person to apply for citizenship at 18 years of age instead of 25 years of age also is very progressive. This favourable change reflects the age of voting and the age of majority recognized in most laws of the land.

I should say, however, I am a little disappointed that the inequality in the voting age is not yet corrected in the Indian Act. Indian people still must wait until they are 21 years of age before they can legally vote in the band council elections conducted under the Indian Act. This is an injustice of which I hope the National Indian Brotherhood and other Indian organizations in the country will take heed, and endeavour to correct as soon as possible. I realize the ramifications involved, but I would say to my Indian brothers that this denial of rights to a large number of young potential Indian voters far outweighs any of the commitments that the organizations might have for the long-term plan of changes.

A bone of contention over the years regarding citizenship has been the term "British subject". This has been dealt with by a number of people here with much justification. I always felt uneasy about the term because in no way did I feel I was a British subject.

I can understand how people coming from many other lands must feel. To me the term "British subject" connotes that a person comes from Britain.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I am stating my opinion. Do not shout no!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I protest.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Then protest, but to me it also suggests that Canada is still a colony of Britain. As a person whose roots go pretty far back in this country I feel this is very unfair to people who come to Canada from other lands.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Surely you do not have such an inferiority complex.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): How about the other way; I am sure no one should be treated as superior either. In the present law British subjects wishing to become Canadians must fulfill all the requirements necessary in respect of any other applicant, with two exceptions. First, the British subject does not have to be examined by a citizenship judge and, second, he does not have to attend a ceremony to take the oath of allegiance.

There will no longer be a privileged status for anyone. People wishing to become Canadian citizens will be treated the same regardless of where they come from.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

I was surprised to hear some of the opposition which came from the other side relating to the change in the act whereby a person could become a Canadian citizen in three years rather than five years. I must say I do not find any of the arguments put forward very convincing. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and others suggest that immigrants must have an adequate opportunity to adapt in economic as well as cultural and other ways before becoming citizens.

I was particularly surprised when my colleague, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, suggested that the only purpose of this change is political motivation by the government which is receiving a considerable amount of representation from newly arrived immigrants who have families in other parts of the world and want them here. I should say that I really cannot see in any way how this could reflect the political motivation of a party or affect the outcome of elections. The real motivation I see behind this change is purely a human one.

It must be a very difficult and emotional experience for people to decide to move from their homeland to another land. This is a very human experience, so I think that once mature people have made the mature decision that they want to become citizens of another country, why should we put them through the agony of having to wait five years? In many cases I feel that people must have made up their minds within three years, and three years is probably too long.

Mr. Epp: Why any time?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Why is there an objection about five years?

Mr. Epp: It is your argument.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): This is a very progressive change, and I welcome it.

Some hon. members mentioned citizenship court judges. I have attended ceremonies where citizens have come before citizenship judges, and I want to commend the judges on the very dignified and professional manner in which they handle their courts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Some of my colleagues from both sides of the House have been citizenship court judges, and they do a tremendous job. They have played tremendous roles since this position was established. The reference in the bill to citizenship judges enhances their position, and so it should because theirs is a very important role.

In closing I should like to pay tribute to a number of private organizations in various parts of the country which help in the process of citizenship. In Kamloops it is the Soroptimist Club. These women make sure that those who receive their citizenship are made to feel very welcome. They do everything they can to help them adjust and to solve any problems, even after this waiting period of five years.

I am particularly happy to be a member of the Liberal party.

Mr. Alexander: I was listening; now you are spoiling it.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): The Liberal Party has a very human and realistic outlook on the way to treat people from other lands. I am particularly happy with the way people who have had special difficulties have been treated. Going back to the Hungarian revolt, I think Canadians responded tremendously well in bringing over people from Hungary when they were in difficulties back in 1956.

I am happy that we as Canadians welcome people from all parts of the world, and I hope that, as we move along with changes in the Citizenship Act and the Immigration Act, many of these basic principles we have discussed will be preserved. We must treat people on an equal basis regardless of where they come from.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand), who has just spoken, attributed remarks I made the other evening to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker), and I think he would like to attribute them to me as the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay, the constituency in which he was born.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to take part in the discussion on the motion under consideration for the second reading and the reference of Bill C-20 respecting citizenship to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

As a member of the Special Joint Committee on Immigration Policy, I wish to take part in the debate. All the members of that committee have acquired considerable experience travelling throughout Canada to hear those who have arrived here and must wait for years before being accepted.

To situate that problem, I think we must consider that our country interests a lot of people, most of them coming from south-east countries as well as from India and elsewhere. However, we have a problem of which those people are unaware—our cold winter and a much higher standard of living than in their own country. In my opinion, those people do not know what they are getting into when they come to Canada and some had not expected the difficulties they face the moment they arrive or even two or three years later.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada one must first of all secure oneself against those problems by working every day to earn a living. There are however other problems. Immigrant children must attend schools where English or French is the main language. After a few years, they are greatly disappointed because they realize that their children, after having attended school for two, three or four years, learned nothing or almost nothing, are not prepared, do not see things as Canadians do, do not live the same way, etc.

We also have a problem that I consider very serious. The minister responsible for immigration is not also responsible for citizenship. I think both matters should fall under the same department. We have often heard of this problem from witnesses who appeared before the committee, and I agree with those who have to deal with it when they say that it is a major one. That boils down to the same thing. Before an immigrant can obtain Canadian citizenship, the authorities must establish his or her working experience before coming to a decision. The file must certainly travel from one department to the other, and the background information obtained from the Immigration Department is certainly taken into account when the time comes to decide whether or not to grant Canadian citizenship to an immigrant.

One cannot help wonder about those who are living outside the law or those who prefer living outside the law. I am thinking, for instance, of tourists; they come here as tourists and end up finding a job somewhere, either on a farm, or in some manufacture, and when they have found a job, particularly in the area of services, where it is even less personal, for a town or a city, then they tend to change their names or to be less easily identifiable, and after four, five, six or seven years, we have somebody who wants to become a Canadian citizen, but we do not have his itinerary, we do not know where he comes from, what he has done, nothing at all.

The case of students is also well known, those students who are imposed upon us by all kinds of organizations. They come from everywhere and they are imposed upon us by all kinds of organizations, and still the provinces do not have any control over those students. I am referring to college or university students, who are either sent here by some fund, or under exchange programs, etc. They arrive here; they may study for two, three, four or five years. I have heard of some who studied in the university for eight years, they collect degrees, because they do not want to go back home; it is as simple as that. And so, they write to the foundation or the benevolent society which accepts them, especially in the province of Quebec where we are really at a disadvantage in this field. Why? Because they take the place of our own students, as there is not sufficient room for our own students in several universities; those students—I would call them perpetual students—keep on collecting diplomas. That is why I feel that the Department of Citizenship should be amalgamated with the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

There is also the matter of seasonal workers. We now accept seasonal workers in many cases when they cannot be found elsewhere in Canada. For instance, in northern Canada, we took in seasonal workers; now, today those workers have taken root here. Most are good citizens, honest people, and because they now have roots here, they do not want to leave Canada. But under the terms of their hiring contract as seasonal workers the Department of Citizenship cannot accept them as Canadian citizens. We therefore end up with a hodge-podge, a problem. When attemps are made to send them back to their own country, or when they are forced to go back, and all the more so then we have to resort to deportation, they appeal to the courts, if they have $100 for a lawyer, and appeals follow without end.

I think that these problems are very important and should be dealt with this afternoon. We should consider the minister's idea, and in particular his views, to be able to get rid of all these problems we have with the immigrant.

In Washington for instance, where I went to discuss this problem of immigration, I was very surprised to learn that they receive immigrants they cannot get rid of afterwards. In American terms they describe them as people who jumped over the fence. We would call them people who jumped over the border. They lost control in some southern states, that is to say they have on their territory some people who are not American citizens and who cannot become American citizens because of their status. To begin with, they do not have the first documents allowing them to enter the United States. I think that we will be in a somewhat similar position next year in Canada with the Olympic Games, in the area of Montreal. We should not be the patsies of some people coming here to have a good time, who like the country so much that they want to stay here for ever. This bill has been before the House for more than a year. First reading was September 10, 1974, second reading May 21, 1975. More often than not, we have to discuss in the House economic and social problems confronting the country, but today on second reading of this citizenship bill may we point out a positive element, the fact that we live in a great country.

If these immigrants who came here anxious to become Canadian citizens were more aware of what is going on here—and this is the key to the problem—I think it would be much easier either to leave them in their homeland or to know exactly who those people are, and finally whom we must receive. When immigrants come to Canada, generally they are very glad to see our large horizons, our incredible natural resources, our great production capacity, a young and dynamic people, a short history but full of courage and determination, and above all peaceful nation. We always were peaceful people, most of us respectful of ourselves and others: that is why these immigrants want to stay here.

But when we travelled through the country, particularly in Montreal, Winnipeg and Edmonton, we met many not so quiet people. They are not willing to discuss at length before getting what they want. They would like to become Canadian citizens on their arrival. They would like to enjoy all the privileges of full citizenship a month or two after landing here. It is unpleasant to sit on a committee to hear witnesses who threaten you With their fists and say: We want this, we want that. Those on the committee are not very impressed and we do not feel like accepting them as citizens.

I met a man in Montreal who has been living here for eight years. He is a student. As I said earlier, he is a perpetual university student. He thought people resented him because he was black. He was completely wrong because he was accepted as a Canadian, five years ago, according to the law. But the moment he got his Canadian citizenship, he began to live on the fringe of the law. He told me: Mr. Beaudoin, I did this, I did that, and after all, I am a Canadian, they cannot send me back home, I don't care.

I think we should be cautious when it comes to accepting people like that, if we wish to have a responsible country and preserve the outlook that we all cherish.

This is why I believe the suggestion of reducing the waiting period down to three years is a bad one because for three years an applicant can live on the fringe of society, especially if he is working in a municipal department, and no one can find out about him. Whereas if he has to wait five years for citizenship it is easier to catch him for wrongdoing or trace his file and complete his records and therefore know more about his past.

Clause 10 of the act provides that the minister may, if he deems it desirable, grant a citizenship certificate and so forth. The bill under study provides for the minister to grant citizenship and for each case to be referred to the citizenship court.

● (1630)

I think this procedure makes no sense because if citizenship is granted to an immigrant prior to his appearing before the citizenship court and before the court finds something to kick about or decides to deport him he will appeal to another court or say that it is contrary to human rights, and so on.

I think the law is much too lenient under clause 10.

The 21 judges must make decisions but they cannot decide in a definitive way. Speaking of the 21 citizenship judges the Secretary of State stated on December 9, 1974, before the Calgary Canadian Citizenship Council, and I quote:

> The twenty-one citizenship judges all across Canada play a key role in this area. They work in large cities and tour the centres around those cities as well as remote areas. The new legislation gives them the legal title of citizenship judge. I am sure you will understand that the response of the government to the needs of potential citizens is determined in a large measure by the attitude of the men and women who are appointed citizenship judges.

Here I would like to say as an aside that the minister did point out that knowing whether or not an immigrant should be accepted as a Canadian citizen depended on the formation of the judges, men and women, on their personal training. I continue to quote:

> In their near judicial role, those citizenship judges make decisions about certain specific points set out in the law. For example, they are the ones who determine if an applicant has an adequate knowledge of one of the official languages and if he understands our country well enough to become a Canadian citizen. During the hearings and the ceremonies, citizenship judges act as ambassadors of the Canadian people. They fulfill their traditional task with dignity and enthusiasm and contribute greatly to make the citizenship ceremony a significant symbol of entry into Canadian life. In a larger context, they act as public relations officers and often address schools and clubs to explain the status of Canadian citizens—the rights, privileges and obligations that it entails.

Under Bill C-20, the minister can no longer refuse arbitrarily to grant citizenship, which makes it impossible to use arbitrarily such a power without public or legislative sanction. The governor general however has the power to refuse to grant citizenship, but only if he judges that to do so would be prejudicial to the security of Canada or contrary to public order in Canada.

In my opinion, this is very important since the governor in council will never take this position if he does not have obvious proof that the landed immigrant has become a citizen after the three years provided in the act, if he does not have an obvious proof that this immigrant is an undesirable. But who can give this obvious proof of undesirability? Must the applicant commit an offense under the Criminal Code? How far can this go? This is the question that we must ask.

As concerns the province of Quebec, those who appeared before the committee were reasonable people who seemed to assume their responsibilities. They knew what they wanted to say. For instance, they told us, and I quote:

(a) That any province which receives immigrants may play a role in choosing these immigrants if they wish to live within its territory; this means that the federal legislation and regulations concerning immigration must provide mechanisms for the participation of provincial governments in the selection of immigrants.

(1) That the admission to a province of foreign students be submitted to the approval of the government of this province and not only of the institution or school board concerned;

That permanent consultation mechanisms be established with the government of all concerned provinces in relation to expulsion and deportation procedures;

This paragraph will not be applicable, will have no value if an immigrant becomes a citizen after studying three years in any university. This is why I do not agree on that three year waiting period before granting citizenship. Again I quote:

That the province of Quebec be directly involved in the individual recruiting and selection of immigrants, have access to all immigration requests concerning it and that federal immigration officers consider the advice of Quebec's representative before accepting or rejecting any requests concerning the province of Quebec;

I recognize the value of reasonable and orderly immigration, Mr. Speaker. Our country may have much to give to and receive from immigration but here I should like my comments to show that I am very puzzled concerning the acceptance of some of our immigrants who are today in our country and who should not be here.

There are many immigrants in Canada today and as they have seen here almost five years they will become Canadian citizen but they should never be granted citizenship because they are not ready to become real Canadians. They are not ready to make the necessary sacrifices.

I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that real culture is above race considerations and that the scope of genuine nationalism extends beyond frontiers.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) on a point of order.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) and I did not intend to take part in the debate this afternoon but I am afraid I have to recall some facts that the hon. member for Richmond seems to have overlooked.

The hon. member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member should understand that if he rises on a point of order, he should do so with regard to the proceedings of the House and not the contents of the statement of the hon. member. He may rise in his turn to oppose the hon. member's statements in whatever way he wishes, but he may not, under the cover of a point of order or of a question of privilege, enter a point of debate with the hon. member on the arguments he put forward. Although he may have the right to rectify inaccurate facts which may have slipped into the hon. member's speech, if he proves that it is a matter of importance, if it is just a matter of opinion, he has no right to take part in the debate at this point.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, this is not an opinion but a fact. The hon. member for Richmond mentioned in his speech that some places in universities of the province of Quebec were occupied by foreign students or students who did not have Canadian citizenship. Well, Mr. Speaker, it so happens that the regulations of the five universities in the province of Quebec, Laval, Sherbrooke, Montreal, McGill and the Quebec university fix a 5 per cent quota on those places available for students, and consequently they are not at all—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is an argument, not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member can rise later and express his views at the time.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Since there is someone opposite who does not even ask to be recognized to make a speech, and thinks he is good enough to apply censorship to our speeches, I would like him to stand up and deliver a speech if he disagrees with my statements, instead of criticizing.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueil (Mr. Olivier) on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) just wanted to point to the House that the hon. member opposite said something untrue. That is just what he wanted to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope hon. members will not request the Chair to bear judgments, for it is too cumbersome a burden. I therefore ask the hon. member for Malpèque (Mr. MacLean), whom I earlier recognized, to proceed with his speech.

[English]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on this bill which is important in a special sense. It deals with citizenship. We can get an inkling of what citizenship connotes if we examine the derivation of the word. It is derived from a combination of words, the original meaning of which was "denizen of a city." That phrase described those who had the right to rest within a city's walls. They were given certain privileges, benefits, and responsibilities, and had to meet certain standards enabling them to be safely admitted within a city's walls. Obviously, it would not have been wise to allow fifth columnists, saboteurs—

An hon. Member: Or Liberals.

Mr. MacLean: —or other undesirables into the city. That is the origin of the word. Its meaning in the present day has been widened. A citizen now is a member of a certain geographic area, usually a politically organized area; in other words, as universally recognized, he is now a citizen of a country.

● (1640)

Some will argue that the traditional conceptions of citizenship are no longer valid or relevant and that they should be modified beyond recognition or scrapped altogether. Some even go so far as to argue that the national citizenship requirements of any country are no longer valid.

The extremists say we are world citizens. This is the global village age. They say that people should be free to migrate at will and settle anywhere without hindrance, thereby benefitting from the natural and man made advantages that exist in any particular spot on the face of the globe.

I do not go that far. Perhaps the strongest argument that we are living in a global village is that we have global village idiots who try to suggest that is a viable situation for a country to espouse.

This extreme notion clashes head on with one of the deepest instincts and emotions that is shared by all of God's creatures, including human beings. It is a sense of wanting to belong somewhere, a sense of territorial requirement. It is a sense of having certain rights because you fulfil certain obligations within a given society or area. It is the territorial imperative that biologists speak about.

This sort of motion is perhaps best expressed by the well-known lines of Walter Scott in "The Lay of the Last Minstrel", although I am not sure about that, when he said, "Breathed there the man, with soul so dead, who never to himself hath said, this is my own my native land."

That brings us to this whole question of what is a reasonable attitude with regard to both immigration and emigration, the transfer of peoples from the surroundings, environment and culture from which they sprong. In many cases, their ancestors have lived there for aeons.

It is obvious that people living in any country who have struggled to build up conditions, institutions and a way of life which bears some resemblance to what they would desire, feel that they have a vested interest in what has been achieved. They feel they should have some say in what the rules should be for membership, in this case citizenship in the country. In that situation, any government has a very special obligation to try its best to represent not only its own point of view, but the point of view of all the citizens of the country who evolve the conditions under which other people may join that country.

There is, of course, the other side of the coin. We cannot be too exclusive. We have to balance our selfish instinct of wanting to preserve what is ours for us, speaking now of the people already here, whether they are citizens or not. We have a moral obligation to all mankind. They have a right to share, to some extent at least, in the very favoured part of the world to which we lay claim and which we own as a country.

We cannot afford to be a complete dog in the manger. On the other hand, we have to be sensible and objective so that in our eagerness to be generous we do not water down the benefit of being a Canadian, or urge people to become Canadians who in the long run may regret the change.

There are many parts of the bill to which one can have no objection. I am pleased to see the amendments that give equality to the sexes, male and female. There is provision for either parent to apply for citizenship on behalf of a minor child. That is long overdue.

Under the new bill, women who did not acquire citizenship under the 1947 act because of marriage to foreign nationals may automatically acquire it upon notifying the minister. That is an obvious improvement.

It is sensible that the age of application for citizenship will be reduced to 18 from 21 years to make it consonant with many of our other laws, including the Elections Act.

Having said that, it would be arrogant for us to assume that the highest ambition of everyone in the world is to become like us and, in order to do that, become a Canadian. That is a superiority complex that we exhibit toward many cultures older and wiser than our own.

An immigrant may have been forced by the direct economic pressures to leave his culture and country to seek a livelihood in another land, in this case Canada. He may not look upon that as an unadulturated benefit. He must have mixed feelings. It must be a wrenching experience for anyone to decide to abandon the land where they were born and grew up, and to give up forever many of the cultural values that they hold so dear.

In many cases people are forced to do this. However, for many, due to conditions in various countries, economic and otherwise, emigration from their native land is their second choice. Therefore in our pell-mell rush to say we are doing would-be immigrants a tremendous favour by making them Canadians, doing it quickly to get it over with, I am not sure we are being entirely fair to the would-be immigrants.

The time when a person may apply for Canadian citizenship implies that around that time he should apply, and if he does not, he is probably under a bit of a cloud. There is some pressure on him to apply for Canadian citizenship. However, in the process of acquiring Canadian citizenship he automatically forfeits his other citizenship, whatever it may have been. His decision at that point has to become irrevocable. This is something we should take into consideration.

The bill proposes to require people with landed immigrant status to have only three years of residence rather than five as is now the case. If I may say so, I think the government has not made a case for the change. I have an open mind. I am willing to be convinced, but I do not think the government has made a case at all. It has just said "Five is an arbitrary figure; let us make it three"—as if the change were of no consequence because the figures are arbitrary. But lots of things are arbitrary. For example, the five years set for the life of a parliament is arbitrary. If we reduce things on the ground that they are arbitrary, maybe we should reduce the life of a parliament from five years to three. It would have the advantage that it would jibe with the argument used in this case, I suppose.

There are a number of things which could be said about this proposal. First of all, I would suppose that any immigrant would want to have enough time in which to make sure that the decision he took to come to Canada was one he wanted to stick with for the rest of his life, and that at no time would he wish to change his mind and exercise again the citizenship he would be forfeiting if he became a Canadian.

Then there are practical things. You know, there is a pet formula which the government and its predecessors seem to use. They take a very subjective view. No matter what is involved they start out by saying it is reform, it is an advance, and it is non-discriminatory. Mr. Speaker, they have used those three terms so often that the value of those words in the language has depreciated. In Canada, "reform" has been debased to mean only the Liberal notion of how things should be done, whether it makes sense or not.

Another word which has been vastly downgraded is the word discrimination. It has been made into a bad word. That has happened because it has been used so often in the sense of discriminating between people so that one of them is treated unfairly—discrimination in matters of taxation, for example. But surely there is nothing wrong about discriminating. I would hate to see the government nationalize the wine industry, for example. If would not wish to discriminate so it would call all wines champagne.

Mr. Epp: And insist on 80 per cent Canadian content?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLean: I make no apology for being able to discriminate between what is suitable and what is unsuitable in a given situation. It is not necessarily virtuous to say that the power of discrimination is being removed from someone. I believe I know what the minister means, but I should like to see the committee approach the bill with an open mind. I believe the committee should arrange for representatives of all points of view to appear before it. Perhaps our first citizens should be there. I am glad the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) has spoken. Except for him I suppose we are all of us immigrants to Canada, or else our parents or grandparents were.

Mr. Stanfield: And his were, once.

Mr. MacLean: Well, in prehistoric times, his ancestors, too migrated here. Every point of view has a right to be heard. I believe we should hear from people who have recently become Canadian citizens. They can contribute a great deal to evaluating the wisdom or lack of wisdom of some of the things we are doing. We should hear briefs from other levels of government which are required to provide various services and amenities, education, among other things, for people who come to this country.

We ought to be able to assess the obligations we place on other levels of government in an objective way. In this connection I understand that in most areas local governments, in order to protect themselves, require children registering in their schools to demonstrate that their parents are in the country legally as landed immigrants or otherwise. We all know that in some of our large cities thousands of people are here illegally. Many of them have children and those children are being denied education because if they went to school the fact that their parents were not here legally would be exposed. So their parents keep them at home. Considerable numbers of children are growing up in our cities who are being denied education because their parents are not landed immigrants and perhaps will never acquire citizenship. These are some of the matters the committee should examine carefully. Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken longer than I had intended, so I will leave it at that.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-20 I believe I can say without reservation that this long-awaited and long-overdue legislation is most welcome, especially among potential citizens of Canada although it touches every Canadian.

Today being United Nations Human Rights Day commemorating the universal declaration of human rights in the United Nations, I think it is significant we should be discussing new citizenship legislation because it does grant new rights to potential citizens which they were not able to exercise before.

The legislation before us provides for fundamental changes in the granting, retaining, resuming, and renunciation of citizenship. These changes, as well as many others in the bill, are unequivocal and fair. That is why the definition of Canadian citizenship as a qualified right represents an important and progressive step in the history of naturalization and citizenship laws in Canada. The federal government led the way in 1947 with its own citizenship legislation, the first such law to be passed by any Commonwealth country, granting a citizenship separate from that of British subject.

The proposed Citizenship Act of 1975 is a logical, equitable, and up-to-date piece of legislation. The new provisions eliminate discrimination on grounds of sex by according equal treatment to men and women.

● (1700)

The new citizenship act is also more equitable to children. For example, the age of application for citizenship has been reduced from 21 years to 18, the age of majority and the age of voting in this country. Furthermore, the new provisions give rights to children born abroad equal to those of children born in Canada. The proposed legislation also eliminates the present registration requirements, thus making the right to citizenship indefeasible in the first generation born abroad. The bill also passes on the right to citizenship conditionally to the second generation, which is a step in the right direction.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) is to be commended, I believe, for presenting so many just and liberal changes to our citizenship legislation, above all including the one which removes preferential treatment for some applicants. It is most laudable that this new bill is firmly based on the principles of fairness and equal treatment for all.

The new status of citizen of the commonwealth also updates the law and brings us into the real world, acknowledging the special ties that unite Canadians with all members of the British Commonwealth.

Waiting periods for application and for reapplication are being reduced, and this will be welcomed by many people. Although some people regard the reduction in the waiting period while resident in Canada from five to three years as too short for an immigrant to become acquainted with this country, the minister has emphasized the changing attitudes, the different cirucumstances, and the many other opportunities in Canada that enable potential citizens to make up their minds sooner and to commit themselves to Canada much earlier today if they want to do so. Some immigrants are ready for Canadian citizenship before others. If at the end of three years an applicant feels he is capable of satisfying the citizenship judge regarding language, knowledge of Canada, and other requirements under the act, then I do not see why the applicant should not apply for citizenship.

The bill also removes arbitrary discretion and redefines citizenship as a qualified right where certain conditions are met. In trying to correct arbitrary decisions this bill grants discretion to the governor in council to refuse citizenship if it would be prejudicial to the security of Canada or contrary to public order in Canada. I think this should answer many of the objectionable remarks which were made in the House this afternoon during this debate.

The changes in the bill which remove many inconsistencies and barriers should encourage more potential citizens to acquire Canadian citizenship without difficulty, and without having to wait too long.

At this point I should also like to make a few remarks about the citizenship courts and their judges. The new legislation will establish the title of "citizenship judge" for those people who administer the citizenship courts in our land. I am sure all members of the House appreciate the government's reponsiveness to the needs of potential citizens by making citizenship courts more accessible, espectially during evening hours and at week ends. This is an outreach program of the Secretary of State that is most commendable, and I wish to thank him for establishing citizenship courts at more than one centre in various cities in Canada. For example, in Toronto and Montreal citizenship offices are open in the evenings, and people are free to ask question about Canadian citizenship and to receive advice and encouragement.

However, the minister should not stop there. Citizenship courts should still be expanded and strengthened by the appointment of more judges. There is a great backlog of cases, especially in Toronto, and I believe that the sooner immigrants get their citizenship papers the happier they will be, and they will become good useful citizens in their new country.

The privileges of Canadian citizenship are many and worth while, and should make us both proud and grateful. In particular Canada's official policy of multicultaralism, which recognizes the cultural values of all Canadians in a country where no one group is superior to another, makes Canada's citizenship attractive and a most valuable acquisition. This policy and the new citizenship legislation not only helps build a Canadian identity, but also strengthens national unity. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I should like to applaud the enlightened attitude displayed by the Secretary of State in presenting the bill to the House, and I also commend the legislation to all members of the House.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, in examining the bill and searching for words to express my reaction to it I am somewhat torn between the positive provisions in the bill and those which I would define as less positive. Let me deal with the positive ones first.

The provisions under Part I, giving the right of citizenship to the children of female Canadians in the same way as it is granted to the children of male Canadians, is essentially identical, at least in purpose, to the provisions in Bill C-275, a private member's bill brought by in by myself this session which followed upon a private member's bill I brought in at each of the previous sessions. In fact I introduced this bill soon after being elected to the House of Commons.

Quite clearly the existing Citizenship Act, which discriminates against the children of Canadian mothers in this way, is unfair and unrealistic in terms of stated government policy and the attitudes and desires of Canadians. As one of my colleagues pointed out during the second reading debate last May, this provision follows on from the recommendation made by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

It was because of this discrimination that I was moved to bring in this private member's bill, but what really triggered it was a situation I became aware of which involved a personal friend of mine, a female Canadian citizen. I think her story is interesting in that it shows the effects that this sort of discrimination can have on Canadians.

Upon graduation from university she sought work with World University Services at the University of Santiago in Chile. While there she met and married a citizen of the Argentine. This citizen of the Argentine left his country—he was also a student at Santiago University—because of political differences with the existing regime. They shortly had a child, and upon the completion of his education they returned to Canada. The child was a citizen of Chile.

After they returned to Canada the Allende government was elected and subsequently deposed, and for a great number of reasons it was not feasible for this family to make use of the facilities available to a Chilean citizen for their son. They could not get a passport. The father was a citizen of Argentina, which also had a change of administration, and he was persona non grata in his own country. Therefore it was not practical for this child to be registered as a citizen of Argentina. His mother was Canadian, they were living in Canada and desired to make their home here, but she could not have her child registered as a Canadian, so the child is essentially stateless.

To complicate the matter further, this couple is now living in Mexico under a two-year program operated through a social agency. This couple is in the peculiar situation of not being certain about the welfare of their son in that he is not a Canadian citizen, although his mother is and his father intends to become a Canadian citizen once he satisfies residency requirements. They are quite concerned in the event that something should happen to them. What would happen to this child? It is their desire that the mother's family should raise the child. The latter are Canadian citizens living in Canada. What happens to a child who is in Mexico with his parents, one of whom is a citizen of Argentina and the other a Canadian? How can that child be taken care of, and what sort of protection would he have from Canadian facilities and services to which he would be entitled if his father had been the Canadian as opposed to his mother?

These circumstances caused me to introduce a private member's bill three years ago to cover the situation, hence I certainly support this part of the bill. There is a difference between my private member's bill and Bill C-20 in respect of this matter of the right to citizenship of a child with a Canadian mother, and that is the matter of retroactivity. The bill I proposed would have given children of Canadian mothers the right to Canadian citizenship, and I am talking about those children who have been born and now exist. Bill C-20 would only give that right to children of Canadian mothers born after enactment.

The minister made some remarks about this bill in that he had some concern that the retroactivity feature if included could lead to some anomaly or difficulty. He gave as an example of his concern a child now 18 or 19 years of age living in his father's home country. As a result of a change in the Canadian law that child might suddenly be declared a Canadian citizen, thereby creating some problem for him.

It is my suggestion that this hypothetical situation could very easily be cleared up. I would suggest, therefore, that the real example I have just given of a child of a Canadian mother, who is now in one sense in jeopardy as a result of not being able to obtain Canadian citizenship, is worthy of more consideration. If you balance the real example against the hypothetical example of the minister, the balance should come down on the side of retroactivity.

The children of Canadian mothers who are now alive should be afforded this advantage as opposed to those who may be conceived and born after this act. These children cannot become Canadian citizens until age 18. With this retroactivity they would become Canadian citizens right now. It would take only a minor amendment to this bill to accomplish this, and it could be accomplished without the risk of the hypothetical example given by the minister. If the minister is paying attention, or will read these remarks later, he will see that this can be done easily by providing that this is done on the application of the Canadian mother. That would quite clearly prevent the hypothetical situation alluded to by the minister.

In terms of this small but important part of Canadian law, one more inequity toward that half of the population which is female is being removed, and that is to be applauded. I dare say that no one on this side of the House would speak against this provision. The only question that is raised is why it has taken so long. One member of the media who became aware of my private member's bill introduced three years ago made the observation that it seemed so self-evident it should have been passed very quickly.

In respect of these features of the law which are clearly discriminatory, and in respect of which public opinion is so clearly defined, there is no reason for such a long delay. There is no reason for the government to wait until it puts all these things together in one omnibus bill. If the government is as concerned as it claims to be from time to time about the lack of productivity on the part of parliament, it should look at this type of situation as one of the root causes. A simple bill like Bill C-275, to remove this discriminatory feature of citizenship, could have passed in about half an hour of the House's time some years ago.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, this bill has good and bad parts. I have spoken about the good parts and I should now like to mention the bad parts very briefly. It is regrettable that the government should resort to these tactics continuously, and I refer to the tendency of the government to put together an omnibus bill covering all possible amendments within a certain area. That sort of procedure is without doubt a major contributor to the slowness and inefficiency with which legislation is dealt with in this Chamber. Instead of blaming the opposition for delaying the passage of legislative measures by foot dragging, the government should look at the manner in which it packages its legislation covering various areas under one legislative blanket for passage through this House.

Perhaps the most serious reservation I have about this bill is the one referred to by my colleagues, and that is the question of reducing the waiting period for Canadian citizenship from five to three years. Canadian citizenship is an honour, and something all of us here feel should be held in the highest esteem. Thus when there is tampering with the mechanisms, the structures, the regulations, and the obstacles that precede the granting of Canadian citizenship, those of us who value it naturally have our antennae stretched out; we are very concerned and interested to learn the rationale and reasoning behind these changes.

Although I did read the remarks of the minister at the second reading stage concerning the reasons for the reduction from five years to three years I did not find any very convincing argument for the change. The thesis the minister proposed is that we live in a modern age with modern communications, and that therefore what took people five years to learn five years ago they can now learn in three years. I suggest that is a very questionable thesis. The evidence in support of that is lacking. The human animal has not changed that much.

I grant that communications and technology have changed and that the world has shrunk in a communications sense, but people have not changed that much.

Although I suppose we all take this position too often I believe it is almost arrogant for those of us who are alive today to consider that we are more intelligent, more perceptive, that we learn more quickly than our predecessors, and that therefore now we can learn in three years what it took people five years to learn previously.

I suggest that is a very weak foundation upon which to base a change. It is a change that is very fundamental. We do not automatically hand someone Canadian citizenship papers at the border. The five-year period evolved through much history. There was much experience which caused us to establish the five-year period. It seems to me that we should have very good evidence before we tamper with that history and tradition and bring about a change in something this serious which represents an obstacle to Canadian citizenship. We require much better evidence than has been provided by the minister during his speech at second reading. I have very serious reservations about this. I would find it exceedingly difficult to support the bill on that basis.

I do not intend to go into any great detail in respect of the other features of the bill. One of the pleasant duties I have performed—and I am sure this is the case with other members—is attend citizenship court in my city from time to time. I have found the experience enjoyable, rewarding, and stimulating.

The emotion that is evident on those occasions is certainly infectious. Every time I have attended one of these courts I have come away feeling a little more proud to be a Canadian. I have felt a real sense of warmth toward those persons who participated in the ceremony and who became Canadian citizens on that day. Therefore as a result of those experiences I enjoyed, as a member of parliament I am very reluctant to suggest concurrence in the amendments to these procedures that would tend to take away the dignity from the Canadian citizenship ceremony and procedures. These procedures and traditions are not carved in stone forever. No one suggests that. However, they are traditions. We are the custodians of our history and it seems to me that before we start changing in any great manner these procedures and traditions which have been established, we should have very good cause.

Quite frankly, from listening to the minister and reading the remarks of those who have spoken on second reading in support of this bill, I find I am still unable to reach the conclusion that sufficient evidence has been provided to justify these changes.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, as one member of the committee that toured our country trying to assess the mood of the people with respect to what our citizenship and immigration policy should be I am pleased to add my comments to this debate. The members of the committee found that it was not as easy to make that assessment as some people might have thought when we set out. It is already obvious we will not find it any easier to obtain a consensus on the recommendations set forth in this bill.

It is well known to almost everyone that our committee was hard-pressed at times to conduct our investigations in an orderly and sane manner. We were often subjected to harassment and abuse by special interest groups and by extremists of every possible persuasion. I would hate to think that even a single recommendation we are now being asked to consider was made as a result of this extreme pressure, or to satisfy the demands of a small but vocal minority faction in our country.

I must begin my remarks by saying I cannot accept some of these proposals for changing or upgrading our immigration laws. In some cases I find the recommendations are inconsistent. In others I feel we are placing too low a value on that precious thing we call Canadian citizenship. It has never really been difficult for people who meet the minimum requirements for landed immigrant status in Canada to qualify for and acquire Canadian citizenship. In fact when I set out with the committee to sample public opinion on this subject I did not consider we had a mandate to make it easier for people to come to Canada or acquire Canadian citizenship.

I understand that 750,000 people applied to come to Canada in 1974. What would we do with all these people if we had an open-door policy? In respect of immigration and citizenship, just making it easy is not the same as making it fair. If we are to consider only the aspect of fair and equitable immigration policy, we must first consider what would be fair to the people already in Canada. We are not, after all, thinking or speaking of the Canada of 200 years ago, or even 100 years ago. We are speaking of a Canada that is already threatened by overcrowding, a country that has a high level of unemployment, a country that is already beset with tensions and animosities based on race, colour, creed, language, and a country which has all the problems that exist in countries from which people would like to emigrate.

I cannot agree with the proposal that would lower the requirement for residence in order to acquire Canadian citizenship. Five years is not too long for any person to wait to qualify for citizenship. It is not too long a time for any person to be asked to live in our society and to learn why we are the way we are, and why we place such a high value on our citizenship status.

Switzerland, one of the most democratic countries, requires at least 12 years residence for citizenship. After all, when a landed immigrant is accumulating the required five years of residency, he is free to work and to live as though he were in fact a Canadian citizen, enjoying the same benefits and the same protections under our laws. I do not see any reason to reduce this requirement for residency. It has already been pointed out that while the requirement for five years residency is arbitrary, so is the proposed three year period arbitrary. Why should there not be an arbitrary period of residency just as there are arbitrary requirements with respect to the character of a prospective immigrant?

There are some proposed changes to the act which I can support, but most of these could and should have been made without the effort and expense of sending the Immigration Committee throughout the country.

For instance, the proposal to confer citizenship on a child who was born outside Canada where one or the other of the parents is a Canadian citizen simply recognizes a discrepancy in the immigration laws which should have been corrected long ago, and which would have had the support of all parties if the government had seen fit to propose the change.

I would have liked to have seen a proposal which would give the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) full authority to act in cases where humanitarian considerations are paramount in deportation proceedings. There have been cases where families have been separated to satisfy provisions in the law, where appeal court proceedings were too expensive for a person to undertake, or where the letter of the law took precedence over the humanitarian aspects of the case. There have been other cases, and there are likely to be more, where there was the very real threat of a person being executed for political crimes if he was deported to his country of origin.

Our courts should not be placed in the position of sending a person to his or her certain death to satisfy a provision in our own laws, especially where our laws either do not recognize that a crime has been committed, or where they do not impose such a serious penalty for the alleged offence.

I noted with great interest the statements made on this bill by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and especially where his remarks touched on the question of citizenship as a whole, and what he described as our very generous immigration policy. I must repeat that Canadian citizenship is a precious thing, very much to be desired and protected. It must not be represented as something available to anyone who can get to this country by hook or by crook and manage to remain here for a given number of years. I agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that it does a disservice to people who immigrate legally in the manner prescribed by law when any part of time spent illegally in Canada is allowed to count toward residence requirements for citizenship.

We have had a serious and long standing problem in this country with respect to illegal immigrants, and it has been said in this debate that we do not know today just how many people are living in Canada illegally. However, we do know that they are not abiding by the laws respecting employment, income taxes, and others, because if they were they could all be traced and apprehended.

I know that one of the reasons the government has decided to let these people earn half a day of residence for every day spent illegally in Canada is that they might be encouraged to come out of hiding and apply for landed immigrant status, but I wonder whether this is a good practice and whether it should be continued.

A few years ago the government declared a general amnesty and suspended penalties for all illegal immigrants in Canada who would come forward and apply for landed immigrant status. In actual fact this meant that people who slipped into Canada and should have been deported found it easier to acquire landed immigrant status than those people applying at the border or from their country of origin. It also meant that people who came to Canada on visitors' permits and faded into the underground after their permits expired could come forward and enjoy the full benefits of the immigration laws.

In spite of this very generous gesture on our part, no more than a fraction of the estimated illegals came forward. In spite of the fact that we stretched our immigration laws to the breaking point, it did not solve the problem. We still do not know how many people are living illegally in Canada, and worse still we have no way of knowing what they are doing. I have to say that we have been overly generous to a criminal element in our society, and it is time to take a more objective view of residence in our country.

Some hon. members have touched on the question of immigration policy as a companion policy to that of residence and citizenship, and I believe we have come to a point in the development of our country where we cannot any longer deal with these two problems in isolation. We cannot continue to use the open door as the symbol of immigration policy, and we have an obligation to inform the other peoples of the world that we too are faced with the prospect of over population. In a nutshell, for a number of very practical reasons we should be making it more difficult rather than easier for people to come to Canada and acquire citizenship.

On my recent tour as a member of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference I found that many of my fellow parliamentarians from other countries were amazed to learn that only a fraction of our three and a half million square miles of land could support habitation and agricultural production. There are still people in the world who believe that we have unlimited living space, and therefore they cannot understand how we could even consider limiting immigration. It is not fair of us to represent Canada as a vast and sparsely populated Utopia where there are unlimited opportunities for employment and the good life.

The plain fact is, as I stated earlier, that we do not provide jobs for a large percentage of our own people, about 800,000, to be reasonably precise, and so ours could hardly be described as the promised land. We have a tremendous obligation to people who live in Canada at the present time, and while I do not suggest that we should close our doors to all immigrants, we should nonetheless take a good hard look at the situation and establish priorities which take into account our own needs, present and future.

Some people might call this a selfish approach to the question of immigration, and I have to agree. If it is selfish to want to save what we have and to want to ensure that we can meet our own needs, wants, and aspirations, then I suggest that we simply steel ourselves to the criticism which might follow.

I mentioned earlier that some of the recommendations made by the Immigration Committee were inconsistent, and I should like to say a few words about that. One recommendation was that we continue to bar prostitutes as prospective immigrants, while at the same time it was suggested that we drop the restriction on allowing homosexuals to immigrate to Canada. I cannot accept that recommendation just because we have accepted the maxim that the government does not have any business in the bedrooms of the nation. It does not necessarily follow that we should not make an effort to raise the moral standards in our society.

In the admission of immigrants to Canada we are making a decision before the fact, and it is then, and not later, that we should decide what is and what is not acceptable to us in the way of public morality. I do not want our country to advertise itself throughout the world as a haven for perverts and deviates, and I am afraid that that is just the way it will appear if we drop that restriction.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I agree with the proposal to drop the requirement that candidates for citizenship renounce their former citizenship before accepting their Canadian citizenship. I think that that was an unnecessary and onerous requirement and I cannot help feeling that new Canadians have often felt that they were demeaning their homelands and their former allegiances. It is not necessary to the fulfilment of a new obligation to renounce and demean a former one, and I welcome this change. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that these few flaws that I detect in the bill will be dealt with in committee.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill before we reach the end of the day. While the bill has some good features, most of which are agreeable, there are two serious deficiencies in it.

I should like to speak on the reduction in time for the granting of citizenship being reduced from five years to three. The other point that concerns me is the time spent in this country illegally that would count toward the time required for citizenship. This I suggest, in the modern world in which we live, is a very great mistake on our part. It is obvious that under this law an alien who has been in this country illegally for six years will be automatically granted citizenship after three years, and that is the only requirement to be considered.

Any discussion on the granting of citizenship must take into account the immigration problems that are inherent in this granting of citizenship. We have heard of other countries that have been somewhat more liberal in granting citizenship, but if one examines them nearly all have other restrictions which are more severe.

Canada is one of the last countries in the world that is still allowing an influx of a relatively large number of immigrants from other countries. In the past five years we have taken in around one million immigrants and I think that any policy of citizenship has to be discussed in this light. A million people represent 5 per cent of our population.

Slowly, one by one around the world, bars are going up against immigrants. Even the United States has shown its propensity to shut out immigrants and to keep aliens beyond its borders. Indeed one of its complaints has been that Canadian immigration authorities are so lax and Canadian immigration policy so ineffective that a large number of undesirable people are using Canada as an entry into the United States.

We have just gone through the problem of the wholesale illegal entry of people in the immigration field. During the discussion in this House it was obvious that our immigration policy was like Swiss cheese, so full of holes as to be ineffective. The government had to pass legislation that presumably would have some effect on stopping the illegal flow of immigrants.

There is obviously in this country a vast reservoir of people who are here illegally and who will not surface for a long time to come. I believe that this problem will become much more acute as economic slow growth increases and illegal immigrants, in one way or another, will fall into the hands of the authorities to have their cases dealt with by them. If illegal aliens present themselves for citizenship that does not in my opinion—because they have entered illegally and because they have circumvented the normal immigration channels, whether they are desirable or not—entitle them to apply their time in the country as illegal immigrants to their normal citizenship time. By coming to this country illegally they have already jumped the queue. Even if they had been accepted as immigrants they would have left in line those immigrants who look on coming to Canada as a privilege, and who line up at our overseas immigration offices in order to be processed legally and lawfully.

Surely if aliens have come to this country illegally, and certainly in many cases some of these people are active in illegal practices, their time here as an illegal alien should not count. This, I think, is one of the most ridiculous aspects of the bill, that illegal immigrants who have perhaps been indulging in criminal practices will have this time count toward their citizenship.

It has been estimated by officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration that there are upwards of 200,000 illegal aliens in Canada. Even during the recent amnesty only 40,000 came forward. Surely there is something illogical about this bill reducing the time to be spent in Canada from five years to three years, and allowing the time spent here illegally to count as part of that requirement.

Does the government want the bill to pass merely as a political measure to enfranchise new immigrants? We know that immigrants tend to vote for the government in power at their time of entry. Is the government attempting to ensure that these new people will give it some measure of support at the next election?

Furthermore, there is no real way of knowing when an immigrant has come to this country illegally because we have only that person's word for it. If he is here illegally, obviously there is no official time that he arrived on record and there will be no official documentation as to when he came. It is going to be almost impossible to establish with any degree of certainty when the individual came to this country. He is not likely to come forward with that information.

Turning to the second part of the bill on which I wish to speak, that is, the reduction in the time spent by the immigrant in Canada from five to three years, again I must make the strongest representation that this should not occur. If citizenship means anything, surely it has to be earned. True, whether it is five years or three years, it must be arbitrary. I suggest if we are going to have any qualification period at all, if we are not just going to hand citizenship to someone the day he gets off the boat or the plane, whether the qualification period be a week or five years should be considered very carefully.

While the immigrant is here under landed immigrant status he has all the rights and privileges of any other Canadian citizen except the right to vote. In a short five years he assumes the full right of Canadian citizenship and surely it is not too long a time in which to understand the traditions of his new homeland. Indeed for many people the five years give them time to reflect on whether or not they wish to renounce their citizenship of the country from which they came. In fact even if the bill does allow this, and assuming that an American, for instance, loses his citizenship at home, there is still time for him to reflect.

I am struck by the fact that I have talked to a good number of Canadians who have emigrated to the United States for various reasons, such as their professions, work, etc., and who fully expected to remain in the United States for the rest of their lives. But circumstances changed their views. Perhaps the pull of family, of relations, or a change in their professional direction caused them to return to Canada. Sometimes such people did not like the United States, the new country in which they expected to live. A good many were happy that United States citizenship took five years to attain, as during that five years many made up their minds that they did not wish to take out U.S. citizenship. Certainly this is true in Canada.

Many who come to Canada from Europe return to their homelands, where living standards are quite comparable with standards in this country. Some do not like our cold climate, or our distances, and wish to return to their countries of origin. If these people were forced to wait five years for citizenship, they could not be stampeded into the early assumption of a new citizenship which they may well later regret. I suggest that there is merit to conferring citizenship only after five years' domicile, as those who stay for five years will very likely spend the rest of their lives in this country. In any case, in the practical sense the five-year wait would mean that the prospective citizen loses the privilege perhaps of not voting in one federal or one provincial election. The right to vote is the only advantage which citizenship confers as compared with landed immigrant status.

In our experience immigrants have generally come from Europe. Sometimes they brought with them a different language and different customs; yet most had a considerable basic background in the democratic system which western Europe gave the world. For example, most understood what was meant by the institution of the monarchy, or the institution of the head of the republic, which is basically the same thing. Basically, they all had some idea of the democratic institution of parliamentary government. They understood the party system, to some extent at least. They knew that although the parties may be different, parties represent the democratic tradition that the state and the individual are the concern of all parties. In the riding it is my honour to represent, Dauphin, there are Slavic, Ukrainian, and Polish peoples who came to this country before the first world war, at a time when the Czar ruled Russia. They understood what we mean by democratic government and democratic traditions.

But what about the many immigrants from third world countries whose views on the value of citizenship and the state are entirely different? Often they have no knowledge of the democratic process. Many think that Canada should welcome them, that they should be given free entry and allowed to carry on unimpeded their activities promoting international Marxism and Communism. As the previous speaker said, they look on Canada as a land sparsely populated, which it is if you consider our population density per square mile. In practice our population tends to concentrate in certain well defined areas where the land can sustain them. These third world immigrants are entirely different from the traditional immigrants of western Europe.

I suppose that in time the mix of Canadians will change. Yet I doubt if there is any advantage to encouraging vast numbers of third world people to come to this country—and we will encourage them if we enact "easy" immigration laws, treat illegal immigrants leniently, and confer almost automatic citizenship after three years' domicile.

We cannot ease the burdens of overpopulation of the third world by taking in large numbers of their immigrants. For example, how can Canada, by taking in immigrants, help India, where the populations increases by 12 million every year? There are many other similar countries where the population is dense and rapidly rising. True, their population is not as large as India's, but they suffer from overpopulation nonetheless. For example, consider countries in the Caribbean.

At the moment the standard of living in Canada is high; yet owing to the rapidly rising cost of energy, and because we as a country consume so much energy, we can expect a prolonged period of slow growth. Bringing large numbers of immigrants to Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and other Canadian cities makes no sense, particularly as they will only increase the pressure on supplies of already scarce resources and housing.

As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, the advantage of a citizen is that he has the right to vote. That advantage is denied the landed immigrant. The three-year rule has this severe shortcoming: it could happen that an individual would be called upon to cast his ballot before observing adequately the workings of the electoral system. For many immigrants their first election is their first chance to observe the workings of the democratic process. On the other hand if we retain the five-year rule it would mean that immigrants coming from the United States, Britain, western European countries, and other countries where the electoral system is highly developed would sit out only one election.

Indeed, almost every citizen of this country misses the right to exercise his franchise at least once in a lifetime owing to the calls of work, ill health, or to being away on election day. Surely delaying citizenship for five years would impose no great hardship on the immigrant. In any event the immigrant is better able to observe the workings of our political system in a five-year period and thus can better appreciate the privilege of citizenship.

Although there are one or two good provisions in this bill, the two shortcomings to which I alluded make the bill unacceptable to me. For that reason I suggest we should not adopt it in its present form. Others have mentioned humane application of our immigration laws. Parts of this bill will, it is hoped, make the application of our immigration laws easier and more humane. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PROPOSED FREEZE OF DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM PENDING DEBATE IN THE HOUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) statement yesterday indicating that his government intends to proceed with major relocations of various departments across Canada, and in view of the tremendous costs of such a program of relocation, operationally, in terms of capital cost and in terms of operational inefficiencies in service to the public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That the government forthwith freeze the program of relocation on the grounds of necessity for fiscal restraint and until the concept has been discussed and determined by the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): No.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO PICKERING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Mr. James Snow, Ontario's minister responsible for transportation and communications, has recently stated that the Pickering airport is an option open to the federal government and he and the federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) are setting up a committee to study the transportation needs of southern Ontario. Since, according to officials, the federal government has no intention of selling or using in another manner the land it accumulated for the purpose of building an international airport in the Pickering area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That the Minister of Transport be instructed by this House to clearly state his intention vis-à-vis the land accumulated for the purpose of building an airport at Pickering and whether or not he, officials of his department or other cabinet ministers are actively engaged in attempts or intend to engage in attempts to have the Ontario government change its decision on providing access routes to the Pickering site suitable for an airport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF SUSPENSION OF QUEBEC COMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES FOR SPEAKING FRENCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent and important matter.

Owing to the glaring injustice done to two employees of the Dorval airport who have been suspended for having spoken in French at work, since there are two official languages in this country and that in addition, French has the priority in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Minister of Transport immediately order the cancellation of the suspension imposed on both employees.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF DIRECTIVES ON BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Company of Young Canadians

Considering that two Quebec air traffic controllers were suspended on Monday, December 8, 1975, for carrying out their duties in French, that the Official Languages Act, which Parliament adopted in 1969, grants equal rights and status to the French and English languages within all parliamentary institutions and the government of Canada and, finally, that Section 508 of Air Regulations and Air Navigation Order No. 15, Series V, prohibit the use of French in all air traffic control operations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe):

That the question whether Section 508 of Air Regulations and Air Navigation Order No. 15, Series V, violates the Official Languages Act of Canada be referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, with instruction to report to the House on or before Friday, December 19, 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

In view of the apparent decision by cabinet to phase out the Company of Young Canadians, and in view of the fact that since its reorganization the company has been doing very positive community development work in isolated and poverty stricken communities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That the Secretary of State or some other responsible minister explain to the House on motions the reason for this action and what alternative assistance to these communities in need is being contemplated.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INQUIRY WHETHER DECISION ON CONTRACT WITH POSTAL WORKERS COMMUNICATED TO GOVERNMENT—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the Anti-Inflation Board has indicated to the government its view that the contract recently negotiated between the Postmaster General and the inside workers in the post office exceeds the government's anti-inflationary guidelines.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I indicated to the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we have some knowledge of the feeling of the Anti-Inflation Board. They have, as is their duty, spoken to the employer side, the government, as well as to the employee side, the union. Therefore, it is fair to say that we know what their thinking is. We discussed a possible response this morning in cabinet, but I called a cabinet meeting for tonight because I am told that, having consulted both sides, they are going to issue a written directive to us, and presumably to the union, to which both sides will have to respond. I am told that we will receive it some time in the course of the afternoon. Cabinet is meeting in the early evening. If we have received this by then and if we can give a written response in time, I will certainly agree to any minister, if the House so desires, making a statement on our response in the House this evening. If not, we will gladly do so tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Stanfield: I take it from what the Prime Minister says that discussions are no longer continuing between the Anti-Inflation Board and members of the government about the government moderating the contract but rather that the Anti-Inflation Board has made a decision, although the Prime Minister says it has not yet been indicated formally to him. Is that correct?

Mr. Trudeau: Insofar as I know, but I would not want this answer to preclude any further communication. If the Anti-Inflation Board wants to talk with us again we would, of course, be happy to respond. But my understanding is that they have communicated with both sides and are in the process of preparing some statement which will be made public, or communicated to us and to the union.

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO DECISION OF BOARD ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Has the government decided that it will accept the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board with respect to this contract to which the government is an interested party? Is the government prepared to accept the ruling of this Board established to define and apply the guidelines or does the government reserve the right to take a special position in cases in which it is itself involved in a dispute?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member is asking about the situation in practice, I would say we would have to see what the Board says. If he is asking for guidance on what the law and the white paper asserts, I can tell him that when questions of this kind are referred to us the cabinet is not bound automatically by the statement of the AIB. This is the spirit of the law which was discussed in the House. There is provision for a final reference to the government of such questions and, of course, if there is such a reference the intention is that the government should examine the question and make a decision in the national interest.

DATE OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH BOARD ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT—NAME OF GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATOR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Prime Minister whether in accordance with the terms of the order in council negotiations did take place between the Board and both parties in order to achieve satisfactory changes and, if so, when these negotiations took place and who acted on behalf of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In the past few days, members of the Anti-Inflation Board have communicated with members of the government.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN POSTMASTER GENERAL AND BOARD ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Postmaster General whether he has had any communication with the Anti-Inflation Board since this statement was made, or leaked, as the case may be? If so, could he tell the House the nature of those discussions and could he also inform us at what time the government referred its final wage offer to the Anti-Inflation Board which, under the law, is the final adjudicator of what is, or what is not, within the guidelines?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): I believe I answered this question to some degree yesterday. The employer of record is the Treasury Board. The collective agreement, if requested by the Anti-Inflation Board would be requested of the employer, namely the Treasury Board, and I am not authorized to speak with authority on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board. I did, however, negotiate on his behalf and at his request; I was delegated by him to do so, as is his right. But in relation to any discussions, formal or otherwise, with the Anti-Inflation Board, I may say that these would properly be conducted through the Treasury Board.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN BOARD AND PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the President of the Treasury Board has negotiated with the Anti-Inflation Board on behalf of the government? If so, perhaps the right hon. gentleman would also tell the House why the Postmaster General was not included in those discussions.

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter for the government which minister is to communicate with the Anti-Inflation Board. As the House knows, one minister is responsible for the board, another is responsible for the administrator. We will always make sure that the Anti-Inflation Board can contact a senior and responsible minister.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON POSTAL WORKERS CONTRACT IN VIEW OF IMPLIED DECISION OF BOARD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has indicated that the government has not heard formally from the Anti-Inflation Board and for that reason has made the decision to have a meeting later tonight, that point notwithstanding, Mr. Pepin, the president of the board, stated on CBC Radio yesterday, as quoted in the press today, that "the gap is too wide between the basic first year raise of 10 per cent permitted under the federal the program and the 30 month award", and so on. In other words, whatever communication the government will receive formally, Mr. Pepin has already publicly declared on behalf of the Board that the Board has decided—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —that the offer of the government to the postal workers is too high. I should like to ask the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —since that is the case, will the government stand by its own contractual agreement that it entered into with the postal workers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I learned not later than last week that it is not safe to make decisions on the basis of quotations, right or otherwise, of Mr. Pepin's statements. I think the House would think it only fair that we see the position in writing. We are told that we will get it this afternoon or that the Board is going to communicate with us. I think it would be not only unethical but contrary to the spirit of the law and the Inquiries Act if the government were to make a response on the basis of a quote by the hon. member of something that might have been said last night or some other time.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister knows full well that the quote I referred to last week—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —was accurate. The question I will put to him is this. Given the government's own decision about what an appropriate offer is or ought to be for the postal workers, and given the existence of Bill C-73 which, when it becomes law, will make it possible for the government to make a decision that goes against the Anti-Inflation Board, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government, as an employer in this instance, will not stand by its original offer to the postal workers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as an employer we will, of course, stand by the original offer, but under the law that has been adopted by this House and which I hope will be proclaimed very soon by this parliament we also have a mandate to speak, not only as an employer, but in terms of the total national interest, and we will not shirk either of those duties.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMMUNIQUÉ ISSUED BY CHAIRMAN CONCERNING HISTORICAL RELATIONSHIP

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Having it both ways is certainly Liberalism in action—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the origin of this dispute can be pinned to the communiqué—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Ask your question.

Mr. Broadbent: Will you shut up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby will realize that on more than one occasion in the past I have invited the co-operation of the House in respect of preambles to questions. On one accasion, I specifically indicated that not only should preambles to principal questions be short but, particularly in the case of supplementary questions, ought to be avoided altogether or, if used at all, restricted to only one line. The hon. member has today used a rather extensive preamble to his first two questions and he is now in the process of using another to his third question. I wonder whether he would just put his supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I had just got about seven words out—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the communiqué issued by Mr. Pepin on November 7 with reference to maintaining the historical relationship specifically was contrary to the white paper which stated that once a decision is made about the historical relationship a settlement should be reached that would maintain the relationship, and the Board ruled that out, I should like to ask the minister if it is the government's view that the communiqué issued by Mr. Pepin contradicts the spirit of the law and the legislation as introduced by the government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Just to reply briefly to the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —it would seem his observation or his question is in the nature of a representation, and I will consider it in the preparation—

Mr. Broadbent: Forget it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —of the regulations.

BILINGUALISM

THE DEADLINE FOR GRANTING BILINGUALISM BONUS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, I put my question the the right hon. Prime Minister.

It seems that during the month of August this year, the Treasury Board and the bilingualism committee in Montreal jointly set December 31, 1975, as the deadline with regard to the granting of the bilingualism bonus. As the government has not yet taken a final decision and there is a risk the civil servants concerned in Montreal and elsewhere in Quebec will stop giving service in the English language, as indicated in a telegram I received today, could the Prime Minister say how the discussions of the government are progressing in that regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall be pleased to inquire, Mr. Speaker. I see the President of the Treasury Board is back in the House. He might be prepared to reply, otherwise he will take the question as notice and answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Beaudoin: I see he has arrived, thank you. Last August the Treasury Board and the bilingualism committee in Montreal chose December 31, 1975, as the deadline of the schedule for the implementation of the bilingualism bonus. Since the government has not taken a final decision on this question as yet, as indicated in the telegram I received this morning, could the minister tell the House at what stage discussions stand on that matter now and what the government intends to do?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): If I understand correctly, Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to reach a decision on that matter because my officials and the unions representing the employees who raised the question last spring are now discussing it.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF FRENCH BY PILOTS AND CONTROLLERS

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the leader of the government.

Considering that one of the corner stones of the policy of the leader of the government is the equality between both official languages and that the Commissioner of Official Languages states in his fourth report for the year 1973-1974 that Canadian administration of air transport should as soon as possible authorize legally what has been the practice for a long time, namely the use of French where it is possible both by pilots and air controllers and considering that—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question, he should ask it now.

Mr. De Bané: Agreed, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the Commissioner of Official Languages states that the Air Transport Association of Canada always reacted with slackness to criticism, I would like to ask—

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

APPEALS TO CABINET FROM DECISIONS OF BOARD—REASON FOR FAILURE TO HEAR GROUPS OTHER THAN POSTAL WORKERS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to the box into which the government has built itself.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the growing impression throughout the country that the restraint program is being administered in a very unfair way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Welcome back to the House.

An hon. Member: Did you have a nice holiday?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has already said this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the fourth time during the question period we have had difficulty with preambles. If hon. members wish, we can have a dozen members with long preambles and few questioners. That is not the spirit of the question period. I will once again ask all hon. members to please respect the notion that the question ought to be put directly. This is the question period and is not the time to make any kind of a speech by way of a preamble. Would the hon. member please put the question.

Mr. Lawrence: Then, obviously—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Lawrence: Will you let me get it out?

An hon. Member: Get it out.

Mr. Lawrence: Obviously, the question period would be shorter if there were not so many interruptions. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Sir, I cannot even get the question out.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Lawrence: My question is for the Prime Minister. Sir, this is about the fourth time I have tried and cannot get it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no difficulty hearing the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Perhaps, Sir, the Throne should be moved down to this end. My question to the Prime Minister is simply this: if special consideration is being given by the cabinet to an appeal in respect of the postal workers, why cannot it be given to other groups which are affected by the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman referred to the law which has been discussed at some length in this House—

Mr. Lawrence: It is not yet the law.

Mr. Trudeau: —he will see that the whole tenor of the law is that the cabinet has some final say in cases which are referred to it. The hon. member refers to this as putting the government in a box. This perhaps shows his own mentality. In our case, we find that as a practice the government frequently has to reconcile the divergent interests of one sector of the economy and try to measure them against the necessity of guaranteeing the pursuance of the common interest.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is simply this: will the Prime Minister and his cabinet immediately entertain an appeal on behalf of the dispute of the Metro Toronto teachers—that is what is being done in respect of the postal strike—and if not, why not?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must correct the hon. member. We are aware of statements which have been made in both these instances. I made it quite clear in an earlier answer to the hon. member's leader that the cabinet was not considering the position of the Anti-Inflation Board but that it would if a reference were made to us in the proper form which is foreseen either under the law or under the Inquiries Act in the present state. Of course, we will do this in other cases where reference is made to us in the proper way.

PENITENTIARIES

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PREVENT ESCAPES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On November 25 I directed a number of questions to the Solicitor General with regard to escapees from the penitentiaries in Fraser Valley East. I wonder if he could now answer the question.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I did ask for information on that question. I was told that despite some recent escapes, the total escape rate now in British Columbia from penitentiaries is down over the last few previous years. We are taking further steps to reduce it. Despite some escapes, the rate of escapes is down considerably over the last few years.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate in respect of the instances to which I alluded if those men have been recaptured yet?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have detailed statistics of the escapes from the penitentiaries in British Columbia, the recaptures and so on, but I do not know whether I should give this information during the question period. I would be pleased to send the information to the hon. member.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY BORROWING POWER EXCEEDED—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN VIEW OF DECISION ON BILL C-79

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister advise the House whether the government has exceeded its borrowing power under the limit placed on it under the Financial Administration Act and by how much. If so, what does the government propose to do in view of the House decision in respect of Bill C-79 of the other night?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to confirm whether there is an actual excess at the moment, taking into account the authority which exists for refunding. With regard to our intentions, we would hope to introduce a bill for early adoption which would in effect enable the House to enact the provisions which were struck out the other evening.

HEALTH

TROPICAL DISEASES—NEW QUARANTINE PROVISIONS—TRANSPORTING OF INFECTED PERSONS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the introduction of the new measures concerning quarantine for lassa fever, will they contain a provision for a period of 20 days, which is the incubation period, and will there be a sterile chamber provided and developed for transportation of an infected person.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member an answer concerning the number of days of quarantine. I will inquire. However, I can tell him that the isolation facilities group to which I referred yesterday which is studying this whole question is actively studying the question of the necessity and feasability of developing separate and new isolation facilities for treatment of diseases such as lassa fever. I am quite confident they will likely come up with a positive recommendation in this respect.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTION BOARD MONITOR FOOD PRICES BEFORE AND AFTER OCTOBER 13 AND REPORT FINDINGS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The latest consumer price index figures show that in the month of November prices rose .9 per cent on the whole, with food costs rising .6 per cent. In view of the Bank of Montreal's recent newsletter stating that some companies increased consumer prices before October 13 and that the November consumer price index might also reflect moves by companies to beat the controls, would the minister or his government now ask the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board to request all food distribution chains to submit to the board their price lists for the two weeks prior to and following October 13 to ascertain the accuracy of the charges in the bank's newsletter, and would the minister also instruct the Anti-Inflation Board to make this information available to the public.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated in response to a question by the hon. member for Edmonton West last week, I have drawn to the attention of the Anti-Inflation Board the allegations made in the document referred to by the hon. gentleman. I will draw to the attention of the board the hon. member's suggestion for further dealing with the question.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ACTION IN AREAS OF ENERGY, FOOD AND HOUSING

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of a speech last night by Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, to the National Press Club in which on page two of the written text of the speech he said that the government needs a positive program to supplement the present anti-inflation program and quoted the third element of such a program as being structural policies to deal with the special problems of energy, food and housing, exactly the policy my party has been calling for, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether his government intends to take steps to implement such structural policies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without being unkind I would suggest that the hon. member pay the same diligence to reading the white paper of early October that he has paid to the comments of Mr. Pepin. He would find that we, much before Pepin and much before his own party, had singled out three areas for structural reform, one of them being housing, the second being food, the third being energy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

THE AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAYS—ALLEGED COUNTER PROPOSAL OF PROVINCE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Has the minister had the opportunity of checking and examining, as he promised my colleague from Gloucester last Tuesday that he would, the nature of the documents from his department which were tabled in the New Brunswick legislative assembly by the premier of that province and, if so, can he explain the purpose of those documents in order to clarify once and for all a situation that does not seem to be clear?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I have had the opportunity of obtaining specific information on the decision of the New Brunswick premier to table certain documents in the legislative assembly at Fredericton some time ago. In fact, the first document is a plan covering all New Brunswick government highway projects for the next five years. The second he tabled, and to which he refers as a proposal from the federal government, that is, from my department, is not in fact a proposal but at the very most a working paper in which we asked the New Brunswick government for additional information which we needed to pursue further our meetings and negotiations with the New Brunswick government. I must say I deplore the fact that those documents should have been made public since that in no way helps the progress of our negotiations in an objective way.

GOVERNMENT POSITION AT OUTLOOK CONFERENCE ON COW-CALF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. TRANSPORT

REPORT OF RAILWAYS ON PASSENGER SERVICE—DATE OF PUBLICATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On March 11 I asked the then minister of transport a question regarding the CN-CP report on passenger rail service and the minister was questioned in committee recently. Can he tell us when he will present the CN-CP report on passenger rail travel and when we might hear his comments?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to specifically present the CN-CP report on passenger travel. We are working on specific proposals for passenger travel on a variety of fronts throughout the country at the moment, and we will probably be into the new year before I can make a definitive statement on it.

ENERGY

HYDROELECTRIC POWER—APPLICATION OF MANITOBA FOR EXPORT PERMIT—POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF ENERGY BOARD ACT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On December 4, 1975, as recorded on page 9711 of Hansard I asked the minister if Manitoba Hydro had violated section 40 of the National Energy Board Act in starting construction of a hydroelectric line from Ridgeway, Manitoba to Sprague, Manitoba, the purpose of which is exportation of hydro-electric power to the mid-west United States. In view of the assurances which the minister and the Minister of Justice gave me that officials of the government would be examining this problem in the next days, can he indicate to me whether that examination has taken place and whether an charges against Manitoba Hydro are being contemplated at this time?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the hon. member a legal opinion. I know this matter is under consideration. I can tell him, however, that the hearing before the National Energy Board will take place on Monday, to the best of my knowledge.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE ELIMINATION OF SOME YOUTH ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS—ALTERNATIVE MEASURES TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it involves two government programs, Opportunities for Youth and the Company of Young Canadians. In view of reports that the government is seriously considering dispensing with either or both of these programs and in light of the fact that the unemployment rate among young people is running at double the national average—some 317,000 young people are unemployed this month—can the Prime Minister indicate whether in fact the government is considering cutting back its programs to assist the young people in terms of employment or what measures it may be considering to alleviate this serious situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is pointing out the importance in our fight against inflation not to forget the other evil in the economy, namely, high unemployment. I can only say that the government is very conscious of these two dangers and will try to do its best to meet the desires of everyone in this country, of the government and of certain members on the other side to cut expenditures. But in doing so we will do our best to make sure not to cut them in such a way as to affect the unemployment situation adversely.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the Prime Minister indicate whether, in view of the consideration that was given some time ago to the establishment of an interdepartmental committee on youth employment and participation, and in view of the continuing increase in the youth participation rate, which amounts to 52.6 per cent now, almost equal to the national average, steps are being taken to develop special programs which might increase further activity with respect to the serious and continuing social situation of the extremely high rate of youth unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat that this is a problem of serious concern to the government. I am not clear—and I say so in a serious way—if the hon. member is suggesting that we find new ways of dealing with this problem and set aside OFY or if he is suggesting that we keep OFY and the other program he mentioned, the Company of Young Canadians, and add other programs. I can assure him that the problem is being seriously considered. The difficulty in all these decisions is that we do not want to increase government expenditures at a rate which all members of the House would find undesirable.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—EFFECT OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF ALLOCATION OF FUNDS ON PROJECTS NEXT YEAR

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St.-George's-St.-Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the restraints and in view of the announcement on job creation that $135 million would be made available to LIP next year besides the $150 million this year, would the minister indicate if that amount is included in the estimates and what will be the result of this announcement on LIP projects for next year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The estimates will be available for perusal without much further delay, and I believe all the answers regarding our decisions will be given then.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH AND COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRAMS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he can advise the House, after having consulted with his front bench colleagues, whether in fact the Company of Young Canadians and the Opportunities for Youth Program have been efficient and viable in his view?

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Company of Young Canadians does not come under the responsibilities of my portfolio but rather under that of the Secretary of State. I think that OFY has been an extremely good program and we will weigh its validity and contribution in relation to other programs of this nature when we make any decisions.

FINANCE

REASON FOR HIGH LEVEL OF INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the widespread feeling that the large increase in the money supply has contributed greatly to the domestic inflationary process of the past few years, why does the Bank of Canada continue to keep the rate at the present high level of approximately 15 per cent when the federal reserves are down to 5 per cent or a little more for the coming year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would remind the hon. gentleman of the statements made by the governor in which he indicated that 15 per cent was at the upper end of the range and would not be acceptable to him. The hon. gentleman might like to read the governor's testimony in the standing committee.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF RECIPIENTS OF BENEFITS IN HAWAII—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since we have an alert Auditor General noted for his vigilance with regard to government accounts, is the minister's department keeping a record of the number of recipients of unemployment insurance and the amounts of their cheques being sent to those Canadians today reported to be seeking employment on the beaches of Hawaii in the luxury of tropical salubrity?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Not specifically, Mr. Speaker, but I would be glad to volunteer to go to check the situation personally, on the beaches.

TRANSPORT

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON DRAFTING OF MARITIME CODE AND REGULATIONS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. During preliminary discussions in respect of the Maritime Code a commitment was given by the former minister of transport to consult with the Maritime premiers in this regard. Has the minister consulted with the Maritime Council of Premiers in respect of the act itself and the regulations associated with it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Since the draft act almost exactly in its present form was on the order paper for a long time, I presume this was indeed done at meetings between the Minister of Transport and the Maritime ministers of transport, but I will check into it. Certainly, there has been ample opportunity for them to comment and I know of no specific objections on their part.

Mr. McCain: There was a commitment to agree to the regulations in advance of the act, as I understood the news report of which, I am sure, the minister has a copy. Have consultations taken place between the minister himself and the provincial premiers to determine whether or not they are in fact satisfactory as the act exists today?

Mr. Lang: There have been no such discussions with me. Perhaps there were some earlier. In addition, I would like to check whatever promises might have been made.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION GUIDELINES BE SUSPENDED UNTIL LAND CLAIMS OF NOVA SCOTIA MICMACS NEGOTIATED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received a copy of the letter that went to the Prime Minister from the president of the Union of Nova Scotia Indians? If so, is he willing to accede to the request of Mr. Denny that the government cease implementation of any new policy guidelines until such time as the aboriginal rights claims of the Nova Scotia Micmacs have been negotiated?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the copy of the letter to which the hon. member makes reference. Basically, our stance on the guidelines is that they were accepted and have been implemented over the past year. We are prepared to change or modify that stance as required but there is no relationship to any aboriginal claim.

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question; in view of the Micmac position is it the intention of the minister and the government to continue to implement the 1969 white paper on Indians without full consultation and acceptance by the people it affects?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, indication has been given on several occasions to the Indian people that we will not be implementing the 1969 policy statement.

THE DIVERSITY OF SOURCES OF GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Considering that newsletters from his department and other departments of the federal government announcing that some departmental decisions would be the responsibility of another minister have reached us, can the minister tell the House why the newsletters from his ministry concerning the allottment of certain subsidies are initiated now by the Minister of Environment, now by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and now by his own authority? Is it a matter of administrative process or an advertising policy aimed at reaching a larger audience?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that this is a long established policy according to which members of the Cabinet participate in the decisions being made which, in many instances, affect several provinces in the country. That is why this policy has been established for many years and I do not see any reason why it should be changed.

POSSIBILITY OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN SUBVENTIONS TO QUEBEC AND INCOME TAX COLLECTED FROM THAT PROVINCE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Quite objectively, I would like the minister to understand the appropriateness of my question, because Canadian taxpayers sometimes ask us—

An hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Who is the Speaker? You or them?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Sometimes people get all mixed up and we try to help them out. Mr. Speaker, I seriously wish to ask my question to the minister, for whom I have much respect, incidentally. When a minister announces a decision made by another department, I would like to know if this is really good and effective administration by which Canadians from the province of Quebec know that those subventions are given back to Quebec for the taxes paid by the people from Quebec to the federal government.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that the hon. member seeks to know whether I did understand his question, namely if the money returned to the provinces through the grants made by the different departments comes from the taxes levied in these provinces. There is no direct specific relation. Naturally, the money returned to the provinces through all the federal programs is indeed a kind of proportional return of the money levied across Canada. I do not see any reason why the hon. member is opposed to this. In my view, this has always been very clear to and so perceived by all the people of all the provinces of Canada.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE HAMILTON CITIZENS' COMMITTEE CAN CONTINUE TO REPORT DIRECTLY TO MINISTER

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that according to the terms of reference of the airport expansion citizen's committee in Hamilton, it was to report directly to him with minority and majority reports but a press release yesterday implied that it would report to a federal-provincial committee? Can the minister assure the House that the committee will be entitled to its right to report directly to him?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to give that assurance. Of course, certain studies we receive may be fitted into broader ranging studies over the whole of Ontario, but it was made clear during our discussions with the Ontario minister that we would have to be free to act on specific recommendations to avoid a buildup of problems, even while other studies were being conducted.

IMPACT OF LOCKHEED ORION PROJECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Could the hon. gentleman indicate if he received any recommendations from the government of Nova Scotia with respect to the potential loss of jobs in that province arising out of the Lockheed Orion project? Could he also indicate, if he has received representations, whether he would be prepared to indicate the nature of his response, particularly in light of the serious impact of the transfer of some 400 jobs from Nova Scotia to Montreal on the very high unemployment rate in the Atlantic region?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection of having seen such representations. I shall certainly check in my office to see if some such representations have arrived. I will also see if other departments or other ministers have received some communication.

POSSIBILITY GOVERNMENT OFFER TO STRIKING EMPLOYEES SUBMITTED TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD PRIOR TO NOVEMBER 19

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Referring to the final offer that forced the longest postal strike in our history, on November 19 the Prime Minister said: "We have interpreted the guidelines in a way which has permitted the Postmaster General to make an offer to the unions." Could the Postmaster General advise this House whether at any time prior to or during the strike the Anti-Inflation Board was formally consulted on the government's final monetary offer and if so, was the position as stated by the Prime Minister taken after such consultation with the board?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I frankly have no intention of satisfying the hon. gentleman's curiosity. My statement is in Hansard for him to read and interpret.

IMPORTATION OF BUCKWHEAT FROM UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DESTINATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell us whether, following his investigation yesterday, the two million pounds of buckwheat imported into Manitoba in October from the United States is destined for a port elsewhere in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are conducting an investigation. As I said yesterday, if any buckwheat was imported into Manitoba illegally by any elevator company, they know that it is illegal to put it in a government licensed elevator. We are checking with our legal advisers to see what action will be taken if they find there was a contravention of our laws. The investigation is not complete.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Since it is my information that Canadian customs informed the Department of Agriculture in Manitoba that such importation did take place, can the minister make sure that all the penalties under Canadian law are brought to bear in this situation?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with importing buckwheat if the proper procedure is followed, that is if it is not put in a licensed elevator and the importers do not try to use the Crowsnest Pass shipping rates to ship it to an authorized port. That is what we are checking.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we deal with routine business, may I ask the government House leader to indicate what the business is to be for today, tomorrow, and for as much of next week as the government can foresee?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I know I speak for all hon. members when I express the hope that we can adjourn by the end of next week. This is still our objective and I know I shall have the co-operation of all hon. members to that end. The government is prepared to postpone consideration of some measures until we resume our sitting in the new year. On the other hand, some measures are urgent and must be disposed of before the end of the current year. They include, particularly, Bill C-69, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. In order to clear the way for this and other major urgent measures, I propose to call as government business for today and tomorrow the final disposition of certain bills which have been discussed for some time and been through committee, namely, Bills C-41, C-28, C-75 and C-78, which is a minor housekeeping bill.

These will be followed by second reading of Bill C-20. That bill has been debated at the second reading stage for some days. May I add that after Bill C-20 is referred to the standing committee, it will not be called again, even if the committee reports, either at the report stage or for third reading until the resumption of the session in the new year. On Monday, as the first order of business we shall take Bill C-69.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the question the hon. member for Edmonton West asked about Bill C-79 during the question period, the possibility of a government overrun with respect to borrowing and the necessity for legislation, will the government House leader tell us if it has been decided to bring in a bill before Christmas or early in the new session if a new session is to proceed soon?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Finance intends to bring in a bill for first reading as soon as one can be prepared, but I do not think he is yet in a position to know if it must be dealt with before Christmas; that depends on what happens to be in the treasury.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for six or seven Thursdays in a row the government House leader has told us that the government is considering a bill to implement the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs concerning Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war. Can he now say if it has been decided to introduce that bill before Christmas?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I raised the question again in cabinet today but the government has not made up its mind.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed the list of legislation the minister mentioned a few moments ago but do not see any reference to Bill C-58. Is that bill now classed among items which it is essential to consider before the Christmas adjournment, or has it been reclassified? Is its status somewhat lower than essential, or not essential at all?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that is a measure we want to bring before the House with the intention of having the House of Commons, at least, deal with it before Christmas.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And a happy Christmas to you, too, Mitch!

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) introduced a new bill, for instance the one on the Halifax Relief Commission, and that he wants several bills to be passed—eight bills within five days from tomorrow—can he tell us if the date for the House to be from vacation has been set, because it is clear that those bills will not be passed before going on vacation?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when we are able to adjourn will depend to a great extent on whether we can achieve our objective by the end of next week. If we can reach that objective and adjourn by the end of next week, we hope to return either on January 19 or 26. A final decision has not yet been made.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

PROVISION RESPECTING STRIKE BALLOTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-420, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, this measure would provide an opportunity for the orderly identification of the sentiments and wishes of union members after the bringing down of a Conciliation Board report, so that the government and people of Canada will know the wishes of the membership of the union involved.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordred to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As was indicated earlier, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) intends to proceed today with the motion appearing in his name on the order paper, the motion having been stood on several previous occasions. Obviously, after the motion is moved there will be discussion and the hon. member will enter into debate. As there is, really, but one more item under Motions on the order paper, I wonder if it might not be tidier, with the consent of hon. members, of course, to complete routine proceedings, deal with questions on the order paper and other related matters, and then revert to motions in order to permit the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to make his comments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

PURCHASING OF CANNED MACKEREL

Question No. 3,334—Mr. Marshall:

Under the two million dollar purchase programme for canned mackerel, would the minister give a list of the producers in the Atlantic Region from whom the mackerel was purchased and the total amount purchased from each producer?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Under the "Bridging" Program designed to assist the Canadian fishing industry during 1975, the Fisheries Prices Support Board was authorized to purchase canned mackerel from the 1975 pack for use in international food aid and development programs of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and the World Food Program (WFP). Due to extremely low mackerel landings in 1975 however, no canned mackerel was delivered to the Fisheries Prices Support Board.

G.W.O.—B.I.D. CONSTRUCTION COMPANY LTD

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): G.W.O.—B.I.D. Construction Company Ltd., Fredericton has not been employed by the department since June 1, 1975.

COST OF ICEBREAKING SERVICES

Question No. 3,583—Mr. Forrestall:

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport):

	(a) Gulf of St. Lawrence	(b) Newfound-land	(c) Arctic
1969/70	$3,232,000	$ 671,500	$2,570,300
1970/71	3,402,000	706,800	2,705,500

1974/75	5,367,000	1,115,000	4,268,100

Dollars are represented in value for each year. There has been no attempt to escalate historical figures to reflect the inflation factors.

REDUCTION IN RAIL RATES—HALIFAX TO TORONTO

Question No. 3,603—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the Department of Transport's best estimate of the reduction, if any, in the rail rates for TEU containers from Halifax to Toronto if the present long term funded debt of the CNR were reduced by (a) 50 per cent (b) 100 per cent?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): If the long term funded debt of the CNR was reduced, there would not be any reduction in the above rail rates. One of the bases which is used, besides competition and service requirements to establish or revise rate levels, is the long term variable cost. The long term variable cost would not be affected by a new assumed CNR debt level, as the long term variable cost only includes charges for the level of investment necessary to move a container from Halifax to Toronto in this specific instance.

*MERCURY POLLUTION IN LOWER ST. JOHN RIVER

Question No. 3,559—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What is the level of mercury contamination in the lower St. John River and how was it discovered?

2. What is meant by the description "lower reaches of the St. John River"?

3. Is the research report by the Department of the Environment biologist who found that several species of fish had levels of mercury exceeding the maximum considered safe by the government, a public document?

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, may I answer starred question No. 3,559? The answer to the first part, what is the level of mercury contamination in the lower St. John River and how was it discovered, is as follows: 1. Environment Canada has been operating regularly a water quality sampling network in the St. John River since 1974. That year, the average level for the whole river basin, including the major tributaries, was ten times higher than the normal background level in other areas of New Brunswick. These results were based on less than 10 samples for any one site in any one year. The 1975 data analyzed to date does not show the same pattern as in 1974. The mercury levels in water in July and August were much lower this year than last year, and it appears that the 1974 data may have been excessive.

The answer to the second part is:

2. The stretch of river between Fredericton and St. John which is estuarine is usually referred to as the lower reaches of the St. John River.

The answer to the third part to do with the matter of a public document is:

3. The research report by Dr. Michael Dadswell was given at a meeting in Fredericton in early November, 1975. A copy of this report can be obtained in writing Dr. Dadswell, Department of the Environment, Fisheries and Marine Service, Biological Station, St. Andrew, N.B.

● (1510)

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to question No. 69, which is the first question on the order paper. It has been outstanding since a year ago last September 30. When a question becomes so outstanding that it appears all by itself as the only question remaining from 1974, its loneliness on the order paper ought to be settled by a government answer. The question is very simple. It asks, basically, how many trips the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made outside Ottawa at public expense for the purpose of holidaying, attending Liberal party functions and that sort of thing. Why does the government not see fit, after a year and three months, to bring in an answer which should be simple?

I would also refer to question No. 1,521, the second question remaining on the order paper, which concerns one specific trip made by the Prime Minister to the city of Montreal. The trip was made last January. I would have thought that by now they would have been able to figure out the answer. I realize the Prime Minister makes hundreds of trips at public expense, but surely with the hundred flunkies in his office, and the high salaries they are receiving, it is about time they were put to work and told to figure out these answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on Thursday, June 12, 1975, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour is aware, the seconder of this motion is my friend, the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles). I might add that if our rules permitted more than one member to be listed as a seconder, there would be a fairly lengthy list. I mention in particular the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) who would like to have been listed as seconder. I deliberately did not ask any of my friends on the Liberal side of the House because I did not want to embarrass them. However, I am satisfied that there are a number over there who would like to be associated with this motion.

The motion, as the House is aware, calls for concurrence in the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which was presented to the House by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) on Thursday, June 12 of this year.

May I say at the outset that during my years in this place I have had the privilege of serving on a good many committees. Frankly, I know of no committee that I have enjoyed serving on more than the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It is true there are times when we have our differences. There have been times when we have had to decide issues by recorded votes. In the main, however, it is a committee all the members of which are concerned for the welfare of our veterans, and most of the decisions reached in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs are unanimous decisions. I am sure that I speak for all who are on that committee in this session, and for all who have served on the committee, when I say it is a privilege to participate in the work of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

The result of this pleasure that we have in being members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is that we are reluctant to bring its reports to the kind of debate that could lead to a vote on the floor of the House of Commons. We prefer that the validity of the reports that we make persuade the government to meet the requests and the proposals of the committee. However, in this case it will be six months tomorrow since this committee's report was tabled, and as yet no action has been taken on it.

As hon. members are aware, I have asked the government House leader literally every Thursday this fall when we might expect legislation to implement this report. We continue to get the answer that the matter is under consideration but that no decision has been taken. I am sure that members in all parts of this House, particularly those who are members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, are deeply disappointed by the delay in dealing with the matter which is set out in the seventh report of our committee.

In general terms, it deals with the question of doing some thing special for Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war. On one hand, it deals with those who were prisoners of war of the Japanese, mostly at Hong Kong, and calls for an improvement in the pension arrangements for those veterans; on the other hand, it calls for something new, namely, the instituting of a limited pension for those who were prisoners of war in Europe. In addition to the proposals that the report makes about prisoners of war, it makes a very important and long-awaited proposal regarding widows of veterans who were on disability pensions. I shall get into the details of that in a moment. In fact, I think I should read the report into the record so that it will be part of today's proceedings.

I wish to make it clear that we are not discussing the whole range of veterans affairs. Rather, we are discussing something very specific, namely, pensions for Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war under two headings, Hong Kong and Europe. We are also discussing the question of what is being done for widows of veterans where the veterans were on disability pension.

I want to emphasize the fact that the report that we tabled on June 12 of this year was a completely unanimous report on the part of the committee. Those present when the report was adopted included some very important personages on the other side of the House. On this side of the House, of course, we are all important. However, we had extremely important persons, namely, the chief government whip, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), and the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) who was then a private member. He actually made the motion for the adoption of this report. We also had with us the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) who has since been promoted and is now Assistant Deputy Speaker of this House. All of them joined in making this a unanimous report.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is not a member of the committee but he was present and took part in the discussion. I think I am being fair to him when I say he was happy with the outcome of our discussions. We did not recommend everything the organizations which appeared before us requested. We did some scaling down, some compromising, but we produced a unanimous report which had the support of the 20 members of the committee and which certainly appeared to have the support that day of the Minister of Veterans Affairs himself. I should like to pay a tribute, in passing, to the hon. member for Mercier who does an excellent job chairing that committee. Although his capacity for being impartial is such that he did not take part in the debate, there is no doubt that he, too, was pleased with the outcome of those proceedings. Indeed, I remember that on June 12, when he presented the report in the House, he did so with a great deal of pleasure and pride.

So we have before us proposals which received widespread, indeed unanimous, support. But we also have to consider the issue of the importance of parliament. What is the point of talking about the work of members of parliament, backbenchers, and so on? What is the point of talking about the committee system and matters being referred to a committee for detailed study if, after all this is done and a thoroughly researched report is tabled, the government takes no action?

I would point out that the report we tabled on June 12, 1975, was not the first time in this very session that we had made a recommendation with respect to one of the aspects of this matter. On October 22, 1974, early in the course of this session, as will be found by reference to page 77 of Votes and Proceedings for that day, we tabled a report having to do with Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war in Hong Kong; we had not yet dealt with those who were prisoners of war in Europe because the J. D. Hermann commission was studying the matter. However, as a result of representations made to us by the Hong Kong Veterans Association we made a report which reads as follows:

> Your committee recommends that the government consider the advisability of introducing legislation to provide for full pensions to all Hong Kong veterans forced out of the labour market.

If I recall correctly, the hon. member for St. Boniface moved that recommendation in committee, even as it was the present Minister of National Revenue who moved the report which was presented on June 12. I am making the point, Mr. Speaker, that twice in six months the veterans affairs committee has reported on the question of prisoners of war.

While I am referring to the number of times our committee had dealt with these matters, may I jump ahead to that part of our June 12 report which deals with the position of widows, especially those whose husbands had been receiving pensions of less than 48 per cent. The recommendation concerning them is in the report of June 12, concurrence in which we are now seeking. May I say that the recommendation that something be done to improve the position of widows of veterans who were receiving less than 48 per cent was contained in the Woods report, one of the finest documents ever produced in relation to veterans' legislation.

At least twice—it might have been three times, but certainly it was at least twice—during our consideration of the Woods report, the government's white paper based on that report and the legislation brought forward subsequently, there were majority votes in the standing committee calling for the acceptance of the Woods committee recommendation that there be a pro rata pension for such widows. I submit, therefore, that what we are talking about today is not something which has been produced from the top of our heads, but something which has been considered and studied for a long time, and that the various elements of this report are elements which have received the endorsation of members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs over a long period of time.

I am not only pleading, as I know others will, the cause of veterans; I am pleading for parliament to be listened to by the government. When you get all these committees making recommendations and presenting them thoughtfully to the government, and when you find the government saying no, not just to us on the opposition side but to an entire committee such as the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, the majority of whose members are supporters of the government, I suggest it is very hard for us to feel there is any great merit in the committee system and that it is pretty hard to believe we have a parliamentary system which is operating as it should. I seems to us, rather, that we have a government which runs the entire show in its own way.

It is time now to put on the record what we recommended in our report of June 12, tabled by the hon. member for Mercier. It can be found in Votes and Proceedings of that day at pages 627 and 628. After reciting the kind of work we had done, making use of the Hermann report, and so on, we set out our recommendations as follows:

> Your committee recommends: That the House give consideration to the following:
> 1) That a new act of parliament be enacted to provide compensation to all former prisoners of war.
>
> The effect of this would be to retain the principle in the Pension Act that payment of wartime disability pension be restricted to those instances where the injury or disease or aggravation thereof was attributable to or incurred during military service, and that special compensation for the maltreatment, indignities and residual disabilities resulting from prisoner of war incarceration which cannot be recognized or identified would be payable under a separate act.
> 2) That the formula for compensation payable to former prisoners of war of the Japanese be changed to provide that each such former prisoner of war will receive compensation equivalent to 50 per cent pension to which will be added the amount of pension payable under the Pension Act on account of his assessed disability to a maximum total of 100 per cent.
>
> The effect of this would be to ensure that those who are the most seriously disabled will receive the greatest benefit. At the present time the least seriously disabled of the former prisoners of war of the Japanese derive the greatest benefit from the special provisions made for these former prisoners of war.
> 3) That prisoners of war of other powers of World War II or who were captured by hostile forces subsequent to World War II be awarded compensation in accordance with the following schedule:

Incarcerated 0-1½ years—10 per cent

Incarcerated 1½-2½ years—15 per cent

Incarcerated 2½ years or over—20 per cent

To this compensation would be added the amount of pension payable under the Pension Act on account of an assessed pensionable disability to a maximum total of 100 per cent. Escapees and evaders should also be considered under this paragraph.

Your committee also recommends to the House that consideration be given to amending the Pension Act to provide that a widow's pension be awarded on a sliding scale as follows:

When at the time of death of the prisoner he was, or would have been in receipt of a pension assessed at 47 per cent or less, that pension be paid to the widow in double proportion to the assessed degree of the prisoner's disability as it relates to the basic pension granted to widows.

At the present time a full widow's pension is paid when the pensioner's death was attributable to or was incurred during wartime military service, or in the case of peacetime forces if it arose out of or was directly connected with service; or when the pensioner's disability was assessed at 48 per cent or more at the time of death. The effect of this would be that because 100 per cent widow's pension is payable when the disability pensioner was paid pension at the 50 per cent rate, a double proportion would be payable if his disability was assessed at a lesser rate, so that, for example, the widow of a 40 per cent pensioner would be awarded 80 per cent of the normal widow's pension.

That is the end of the text of the report that we presented on June 12, and I suggest it is a very good report. I believe its resolution of what we should do about the Hong Kong prisoners is a very wise and acceptable one.

But the time is long overdue for this parliament to do something about those who were prisoners of war in Europe. If hon. members were listening to my reading of the text of the report, they would have noticed that we are concerned not only for those who were prisoners of war and were actually incarcerated but also for those who were shot down over Europe and wandered about from place to place, like one of the distinguished members of this House. They were known as evaders or escapees.

I believe the committee has come up with an excellent proposal in both cases. It comes about because of the Hermann report which was commissioned by the government following a request by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in June of 1972, 3½ years ago. In addition to the Hermann report, which took a long time coming but which was of great benefit to us, we had a number of organizations appear before us. As I have said, we did a great deal of what I think was responsible thinking about this problem and we came up with this very excellent report regarding prisoners of war.

I also think that what the report proposes in regard to widows is responsible and long overdue. As I have indicated, the Woods report dealt with this issue. We were in favour of carrying out the Woods report recommendations when the committee met on the Woods report a few years ago, but the government turned us down. I still think it is most unfair that although in a case where a veteran is on a 50 per cent pension or more his widow will get the full widow's pension, in the case of a veteran drawing a pension of, say, 45 per cent, his widow will get nothing at all. Surely the least we should do is to prorate that pension. That is what the Woods report recommended and it is what is now recommended in our report to the House.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I would be happy, as I am sure my colleagues on the veterans affairs committee would, to talk about the whole broad range of veterans affairs and the other improvements that still need to be made respecting the War Veterans Allowance Act, and so on. But procedurally we must stay with what is before us, and what is before us is the June 12 report of the committee and I urge very strongly that it be implemented without further delay.

As is always the case, I am reluctant to talk about what delay does to certain people, but it has to be said, Mr. Speaker, that every month that goes by means that more and more Hong Kong veterans die off and that still more are not able to stay in the labour market. Statistics are not quite this severe in regard to the prisoners of war in Europe. We have one of them sitting not far from me, a distinguished member of this House, who seems to be doing very well, but there are many others who find it difficult to keep up with the rat race of modern industrial activity. The traumatic experience that they went through of being incarcerated is something that stays with them all their lives.

It is not proposed that we put them on some magnanimous pension. All we are proposing is that the pensions in the schedule that I read out a moment ago be adopted, namely, 10 per cent for incarceration up to a year and a half, 15 per cent for incarceration for 1½ to 2½ years, and 20 per cent for incarceration for over 2½ years. Sometimes when we talk about pensions and percentages a press man will stop us outside and ask, "Ten percent or 20 per cent of what?" Most of us who are involved in this question know what we are talking about, but perhaps it should be made clear that there is what is known as a 100 per cent disability pension for a war disability when a veteran is 100 per cent unable to earn a living. The amount of that pension is roughly equivalent to the average income of persons in the public service in the five or six lower categories, though it has not been kept at that level as we had hoped. So when a person gets a 10 per cent pension because of a 10 per cent disability, he gets 10 per cent of the total figure.

We are not asking for the moon for these veterans who spent time in prisoner of war camps in Europe during World War II. However, I think all members of the committee felt that the case made by those who came before us was a very strong one. In particular, we had representations from the Dieppe Prisoners of War Association and various organizations representing whose who were prisoners of war. Time is going by. We are not talking about something that happened yesterday, but away back in the forties. Many who should have had the benefit of this legislation have now passed on, but there are many others with us who deserve what the report asks for and I urge very strongly that the government accept this proposal.

In the final analysis, that is what has to happen. In our system we do not make these decisions regarding things costing money; the government has to. All we can do, as a committee and as a parliament, is plead. But surely there comes a time when pleading which is consistent, unanimous and responsible ought to have some effect on the cabinet. I have no doubt that this battle has been fought vigorously inside cabinet and I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs is putting up a tremendous case. I suspect he is also strongly supported by the Minister of National Revenue who, after all, moved this very motion when he was in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I hope there are other ministers in the cabinet who are supporting the Minister of Veterans Affairs as well.

An hon. Member: He asked for this in the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is obvious that there must be a majority on the wrong side, or we would have had it by now. When we got the report last June, I pressed on the minister the possibility of bringing in a bill before we rose for the summer. He was sympathetic but did not think we could get one before we adjourned in July. Then when we came back in the fall—well, the record is there. Every Thursday I have asked for this, and my hon. friend for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand have been up on Standing Order 43 motions and with questions. I suspect that though the Liberal members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have not been on their feet in the House asking for this, they have been putting all kinds of pressure on the government to take action on this matter. To go on week after week and simply be told, as the government House leader said today, that no decision had been taken just is not good enough for the veterans and it is not good enough for the parliamentary system.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs has also answered my questions on this matter on two or three occasions and it has been dealt with in a couple of late shows. I am grateful that he stayed for those late shows to give us a sympathetic answer. For example, on October 27, 1975, as reported at page 8599 of Hansard, when the minister responded to one of my questions he told the story of how the Hermann report had been commissioned, how the committee had made its recommendations, and so on. Then he said:

In the meantime I have held consultations on this very important subject with my colleagues. At the present time this, along with other government proposals, must be examined carefully in the light of the recently announced guidelines. I would hope, as would other members of the House, that the request for compensation for ex-prisoners of war will not become a victim of our financial restrictions.

If there were any way I could underline those words, I would do so thousands of times over. This is exactly the way we feel about it. The minister went on to conclude that short statement by saying:

I hope to have something more definite to announce before too long.

That was on October 27, and here it is, December 11, and we are still not able to get an announcement. I suppose the problem that faces us was contained in that sentence I read in which the minister said that this proposal, along with others, has to be examined carefully in light of the recently announced guidelines. I was glad to hear him say, expressing his view, that he hoped the situation of these former prisoners of war would not become a victim of our financial restrictions, and I want to underline that as strongly as I can. Whatever we may think about Bill C-73, about the anti-inflation white paper and the government's anti-inflation program, surely there is no case for a doctrinaire position that says: "No, no, no. This is a new program; therefore, we have to say no".

There are references in the white paper to the rights of those who have been treated unfairly to have a catch-up provision, and so on. Even in times of restraint, and even when you may have to cut moneys from some people, surely you have to look at everything in terms of fairness. I submit it is not fair to our veterans who were prisoners of war to say to them, "The committee may have recommended this last June, it may have recommended it in October a year ago, and it may have been recommending it for weeks and months, but in the meantime the Prime Minister made his Thanksgiving day speech so they have to be cut off". I plead that this not happen. Even if there are cuts taking place in other areas of expenditure, surely this is not the place for that. I repeat, with the full endorsation, I am sure, of the whole House, those words of the minister when he said:

I would hope, as would other members of the House, that the request for compensation for ex-prisoners of war will not become a victim of our financial restrictions.

Why have I presented this motion which has been on the order paper for several days, and why am I proceeding with it today? Surely the answer must be obvious. It is difficult to do this, especially when we are approaching Christmas and there is a lot of talk around of when we are going to get out, and so on, for taking a day for this cuts into any such program. But surely when the minister says, week after week, that the matter is still under consideration, and nothing is forthcoming, parliament has to express itself. I hope that is what is happening today. I hope this day's debate, during which I trust there will be participants from all corners of the House, will be a debate that says to the government, "We think this legislation is justified and we want it now". I hope this will be a day when this House says to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, "The next time you go into a meeting of the cabinet you have the wholehearted endorsation of all the members of the House of Commons".

That is our purpose today, and that is one of the reasons I have emphasized the fact that we operate, in the veterans affairs committee, on a basis of such good will and unanimity. It is one of the reasons I hope there will be no potshots or cracks back and forth, or anything of a partisan sort taking place in the debate in this House. We are as one, all of us who are members of the veterans affairs committee, and I am sure we are supported by practically all members of the House in what we are trying to do. We are trying to get the government to see that parliament wants its will respected, that parliament wants what it has suggested should be done for the veterans, and we are not satisfied to listen to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) say week after week that the legislation is not yet ready.

In presenting the motion today, let me add that there is a special request I should like to put to Your Honour. We are operating under a rule and a ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux that permits this debate to take place because a member has put down the motion, as I have done. It is understood that if tonight a vote has not been taken and the debate is still going, the motion then is transferred to government orders and is not called again unless the government wants to call it. This does not worry me greatly, Mr. Speaker. I think if we can have a full day's debate so members can express themselves on this, it will strengthen our case for these veterans and it will strengthen the hand of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Let me say quite frankly that there is one thing the government can do, but which I hope with all my heart it will not do.

An hon. Member: Don't say it, or they will.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The government could put someone up to move the adjournment of the debate and, of course, with its majority it would carry that motion and thus cut off the discussion. I hope the government will not do that. I am sure the discussion on Bill C-41, which was slated as the first item of government business today and which has been around for several years, can wait for another day.

Mr. Sharp: We will make a deal right now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The government House leader is offering a deal. What is it?

Mr. Sharp: We will put both things through tonight. We will give you the day, if you will give us Bill C-41 without debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, no.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What a shameful play on the backs of the veterans.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that remarks made by a member from his seat are not supposed to be put in Hansard, but I hope those remarks are. The President of the Privy Council is prepared to hold the veterans at bay, depending on what we do with Bill C-41. Surely this motion stands on its own feet. The minister says they are prepared to give us the day, but that is not giving us the bill. I plead that the government have the decency to let parliament debate this all day. In case the government is not willing to do so, I would make this request to you, sir. I have already communicated to the Speaker, as has been indicated, that the seconder of this motion is the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand, one of the members of the Conservative party with a very good name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope you will see that hon. member next so that his case can be made, and I would hope that you might also see the hon. member for Rimouski, so the entire opposition case can be heard before the government could be in a position to move the adjournment of the debate.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Boulanger: How do you know they are going to do that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Mercier asks me how I know they are going to do that. I do not know that and I hope my friend's question implies that the government will not do that. I appeal to the government to have the decency to let this debate go all day so that members in all parts of the House can express their views. That is the purpose of this procedure. This is what parliament is all about. Parliament cannot spend money and cannot enact legislation on its own initiative. Parliament is at the will of the government. But parliament can speak, and parliament can debate, and that is what we are doing today.

I plead, sir, that the government allow this debate to go all day so the views of all members can be expressed. Once again I thank the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand for seconding the motion. I thank my friend, the hon. member for Rimouski, for his offer to support it as well, and I am grateful to those unnamed members on the other side who I know agree with us. I am sure they are just as keen as I am that this legislation be brought in. We have waited far too long. We are talking about persons who have been suffering for decades because of their experience as prisoners of war. We have a responsible proposal before us and the restraint program should not touch it at all. I call for action right away to bring on the legislation to provide pensions for these former prisoners of war that are proposed in our report, and also to enact the improvements in widows' pensions set out in our report of June 12. It is an excellent report. It has the unanimous support of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and it deserves the unanimous support of this House and immediate action by the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before I call upon another hon. member, I want the House to know that I do not wish to leave the impression, by recognizing that hon. member, that the Chair is taking any direction from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I wish to advise hon. members that the matter was considered by the Chair this morning. The possibility of the minister rising at this time has been considered.

I have looked at the Standing Orders and also the written precedents concerning the recognition of alternate speakers on one side or the other. On February 17, 1975, there was a motion by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). There was another motion on April 11, 1973, by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), and on September 17, 1973, again a motion by the hon. member for St. John's East. In such cases it has been the decision of the Chair to give an opportunity first to the seconder of the motion to participate in the debate, and then if anyone from the other parties seeks the floor, to recognize that member.

Of course, this might bring some disappointment to the minister who might wish to express his view early in the debate. I know this report of the committee is a unanimous report and the minister might be anxious perhaps to support the report, I do not know, before any other member rises in criticism of him or the government. I understand his point of view, but in fairness I think I have to recognize, first, the seconder of the motion. If I do so, I do not think I can forget the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) if he should seek the floor.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, first I want to commend Your Honour for your fairness in the ruling just made. I feel honoured to be able to second this motion, not because I support the principles of the New Democratic Party necessarily but because on this particular occasion I support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As he has already stated, all members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs treat matters such as this in a completely non-partisan way, so it is not strange that I should be seconding this motion. I also seconded the motion because ever since June 12, members from all opposition parties have pursued the same objective, namely, to have these recommendations of the standing committee placed in legislative form and put before this House at least for first reading and printing of the bill so that we can see what action the government intends to take.

I am pleased to participate, also, because I follow in the footsteps of another member of our party, my colleague the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), who has made a contribution to veterans affairs second to none in this House. In addition, on many occasions he has lent a hand in assisting, in a very personal way, veterans from all across the country. Also, he has spoken many times on veterans affairs matters in this House.

Our main purpose today is to get the cabinet to reach some decision. We want the government to accept the recommendations and present a bill to the House. We feel new legislation is required. We do not believe it is good enough simply to incorporate a recommendation in the Pension Act, because in that way these people would not receive the benefit of the recommendations of the committee; the benefit would be lumped in with the disability pension which they now receive and they would not benefit in the way members of the committee intended. The intent of the report is that ex-prisoners of war receive a benefit in addition to whatever disability payment they may now receive.

I wish to make it quite clear, also, that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), who was here for the opening of the debate and has momentarily left the House, is not personally the object of our criticism; he is not in any way under attack. The only possible way we could fault him is for inability to convince his cabinet colleagues to do what the committee asks. We know where the minister stands. He is a veteran who carries the permanent scars of war, a reminder of the hellishness of war, if you like, and the stresses experienced by men who participated in war either in action or as prisoner of war camps.

I think he is symbolic of veterans across this land and of the crying need for the government and every Canadian to do a little bit to make the lot of the veteran more worth while so that he might be given some relief in his time of suffering. We believe the minister not only because of what I have said but also because of his forthright remarks in respect of these recommendations. I shall deal with that matter further in my remarks. What we are concerned about is lack of positive action by the cabinet. There is a long list of evasive and non-answers by the government House leader and, on occasion, by the minister.

I am sure that in cabinet the minister has the support of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). Surely he supports the minister, because he was a very valued member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It was he who was able to bring about consensus in the committee. Members of the opposition perhaps wanted a little more than was granted, but they accepted what he proposed. The chairman of the standing committee, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), has performed yeoman service in the committee. I know that if he had the opportunity to express his opinion he would support this recommendation. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) has always been a staunch supporter of the causes of veterans, as well as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), the government whip. The hon. member for St. Boniface should use his whip on the backs of some of the recalcitrant cabinet ministers so that we might have some action.

This is more than merely an effort to persuade cabinet. I think what we are saying is that the will of parliament should prevail, and not necessarily the will or the power of government. The will of parliament in a democratic way, as represented by all members from all sides of the House, should prevail. If the democratic process is to mean anything at all, the government must listen when members speak with one voice.

I wish to review very briefly some of the background in respect of veterans over the years. On Remembrance Day we repeat over and over again the words "we will remember". I ask whether this pledge has been kept. I ask, also, whether the words "veneration" or "valour" figure very largely in today's vocabulary. When we remember that a quarter of a century has elapsed between today and the last great war, and that more than half a century has elapsed between today and the first great war, one can realize that some people are a little prone to forget what we are talking about when we say "we remember". Some members on the government side also seem to have forgotten this.

How have we dealt with the human cost of war? In the case of men who died, have we given adequate pensions to their widows and children? One of the recommendations we are asking the government to implement indicates that we are not satisfied with the treatment accorded to widows. Have we been fair to the thousands who served and came back alive, to the prisoners of war? Many returned with wounds and disabilities which constitute lifelong handicaps; others accepted risks and bore their share of hardship and deprivation which is inseparable from war. As citizens of the Canadian nation, they gave much. How have they been paid? How did they expect to be paid? Here we have an opportunity to make up for some of the sins of omission of which perhaps we have been guilty. I do not say that the government is totally to blame for that; I think that citizens in all parts of the country are prone to forget the great debt we owe to our veterans.

What does that demand? It demands, first, and without any thought of any limits, generous care of the disabled. This has always been given; our hospitals show that. It was recognized following the first great war and a measure of help was given to all the returning men. By the end of the second world war a changing nation and a changing world had assumed new dimensions. Rehabilitation, as the national obligation, and a sound national policy have come to mean helping veterans to establish themselves in civil life in a situation at least as good as they would have had if they had not gone to war. Many of these things have come to pass. Over the years there has grown up a series of principles or guidelines, axioms or truisms—whatever you would like to call them—which have been put together and are known as the veterans' charter. I do not have to read them; we are familiar with them and many of them have been implemented. Credit is due to successive governments which have been in a position to implement legislation for the assistance of veterans. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has performed his part in doing these things.

The present recommendations are another step toward improvement in what is known as the veterans' charter. The report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs was tabled on November 18, 1974—here I am referring to the Hermann report, not to the final report—on the occasion of which the Minister of Veterans Affairs said the following:

> On the whole, the government considers that these recommendations should not be accepted, but is withholding its final decision until it receives the report of the standing committee.

One might ask, in all fairness, is the governement's present reluctance to introduce legislation due to a decision taken a long time ago that the recommendations in the report were unacceptable? Was sending the report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs only a form of window-dressing? Surely not. I would not accuse the Minister of Veterans Affairs of being such a hypocrite, but one has the right to raise such a question. The Hermann report was referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on March 26, 1975, and between April 8 and June 10 six meetings were held to consider the report. Testimony was heard from various veterans and POW associations. The minister attended almost all these meetings and made it clear where his sympathies lay. He told witnesses from the National Prisoners of War Association that he expected one day a recommendation would come to him from the committee which it would be his duty to bring to the government, and I am sure he is doing just that. At that time he said:

> And you need not leave here with any fear that I will not bring the recommendation to government, because I am interested in prisoners of war and I am interested in veterans. That is my job, and do not feel one damn bit worried about me supporting you.

We know where the minister stands. It is certainly not the minister we are criticizing but, rather, his cabinet colleagues who will not listen to sweet reason. At the meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on June 10, the committee unanimously adopted a report on the subject of compensation for ex-prisoners of war which the chairman was instructed to present to the House as the committee's seventh report. It was tabled in the House on June 12. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has put it on the record so it is unnecessary for me to do that.

I want the record to show exactly what it is we are asking, which is certainly not too much. What has happened since then? The subject has been raised many times and each time the reply has been that the matter is under consideration. More recently there have been indications that the government's program of economic restraints is responsible for the lack of legislation on the subject. Surely that is the height of hypocrisy, when we look at some of the frivolous and extravagant spending of this government. It has been brought into sharp focus in the last day or two in the Auditor General's report. Let me quote one or two examples of the type of spending of money which, had it been saved, would have paid for what we are asking.

Statistics Canada paid $210,000 to a language training school for courses given to selected personnel. Of this amount, $36,000 was paid under contract guarantee for which no services were received as personnel attendance was below the guaranteed minimum. It was wasted money. The Auditor General goes on to say that in November, 1973, Customs and Excise decided to discontinue supplying excise duty stamps to tobacco manufacturers, with a target date of September 30, 1974. In February, 1974, DSS entered into a contract, on behalf of Customs and Excise, to supply tobacco stamps for six months, with flexibility provided. Customs and Excise purchased $112,000 worth of stamps over and above the contract amount without the involvement of DSS. That is another example of waste. I could go on and on. Maclean's magazine, in its December issue, had some glaring examples of government waste.

I say that it is hypocrisy for the government to say that they have not brought forth this legislation because of the program of restraint. As I have said, I could mention many other examples of government waste but I will not take the time of the House to do that. I should mention the many times we received the evasive answers to which I referred from the government House leader and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, saying it would be brought forward soon, it was under consideration, and so on. All these replies have been documented and I am sure my colleagues will be speaking about that matter further if they have the opportunity to participate in this debate.

I think the big argument here is the restraint program on which the government is embarking, and the fact that it is using that program as an excuse, or a red herring, not to implement the very reasonable provisions for which we are asking. I think I should put on the record, also, exactly what the National Prisoners of War Association had to say in their brief before the standing committee. I shall read from issue No. 16 of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of Tuesday, April 15, 1975, page 16:14. It reads as follows:

> The National Prisoners of War Association proposes, in order to implement recommendations 1 and 2 of Dr. Hermann's report that:
> By new legislation or by amendments to the Pension Act, special compensation be paid to those members of the armed forces and the merchant marine who were prisoners of war in Europe. These awards would be based on the number of years of incarceration as follows:
> 2½ years or more—50 per cent

1½ years to 2½ years—40 per cent

1½ years or less—20 per cent

These awards be over and above any existing pension and we agree with Hermann recommmendation No. 3 in principle and we agree with Hermann recommendation No. 4

In conclusion, we wish to thank you for the privilege of presenting our brief—

● (1610)

The percentages which the standing committee placed before this House were a little less than that, but I know from speaking to and corresponding with these groups that they are pleased with what has been suggested to the government for inclusion in the legislation.

Death is taking its toll, Mr. Speaker. If we delay this bill much longer, these men will not be here to enjoy the benefit of any increase in the disability pension that might be forthcoming. The Grim Reaper will come. We plead, on humanitarian grounds, for the government to be generous and do something to help these people while the breath of life is still in them.

If the debate is allowed to continue, I am sure my colleagues will bring forward other points in an attempt to persuade the government to introduce the legislation we seek. If the government should move adjournment of the debate—which I hope will not happen—it will mean they are not prepared to give our veterans what is due to them. Hon. members who are veterans and sat on the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs know precisely what we are talking about and I am sure they will support us. They must do their utmost—I am sure they will—to persuade the government not to cut off discussion of this legislation.

Members on all sides should have an opportunity to express their views, so that it is not just the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and myself as seconder, placing this matter before the House for proper disposition. The disposition will be, I hope, that debate will be allowed, and not cut off peremptorily. The minister has indicated that he wishes to speak. I hope he will tell us that he has been able to convince his cabinet colleagues that a date will be set for legislation to be brought before the House. I am sure members on all sides would be happy with that.

With all the sincerity I can muster, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to do something to help these people whom the standing committee unanimously recommended should be rewarded for their suffering as prisoners of war in World War II in the prison camps of western Europe or wherever they may have been incarcerated.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, before I enter the crux of the subject, I would like first to say that I was very happy to see your wisdom in making your ruling with respect to the consideration of this report. I would like now to point out that you said in your remarks that you did not want to leave the impression that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was imposing his dictates on the House but I think on several occasions it would be wise to accept the proposals of that hon. member who has the wisdom and the experience of many years spent in this House, and I would like to congratulate him for all the positions or at least part of the positions he takes in standing up for those who are in distress.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as well as the hon. member who seconded him, the hon. member who preceded me, for introducing a bill which I think deserves very special attention. In any event, I pointed out to him on behalf of my party that we welcome deeply the proposals of this bill to provide allowances for all former prisoners of war.

Furthermore, it gives me pleasure to see that the steps called for in this committee report show beyond a doubt that former prisoners of war are entitled to the gratitude and respect of the whole country. In any case, there is no doubt that in the present economic context marked by higher prices affecting all walks of society the passage of those measures is going to help them. Indeed, one cannot ignore the needs of the veteran who must face like all of us and any other citizen the rising cost of living. For that matter, we see from day to day the gradual erosion of the real value of the benefits now being paid by the federal government to veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point in my speech to quote a few excerpts from the report by Dr. J. Douglas Hermann which I think are excellent and of very great value. If I may I will quote a few excerpts to sum up the conclusions of that report. First of all, in connection with the number of known deaths among veterans.

Based on known deaths, the death rate since repatriation among Dieppe POW is slightly higher than for the control group and substantially higher than for other POW groups.

Based on known deaths, former prisoners of war showed a significantly higher death rate at an earlier age than control veterans who had not experienced incarceration.

All this, Mr. Speaker, to show that veterans who are former POW suffered a lot more than those who fought on battlefields, because they were deprived of many things, separated from and sometimes forgotten by their own.

The Hermann report says:

On a sub-group basis this tendency was most pronounced for Air Force POW.

Based on known deaths, the Dieppe POW experienced a significantly higher mortality rate from cardiovascular disease in general and ischemic heart disease in particular than any other study group.

As regards pensions:

(a) As a percentage of the original numbers of POW, the Dieppe group at 36 per cent has the highest percentage of any of the study groups on pension. The other groups are fairly uniform, with approximately 22 per cent on pension.

(b) As a percentage of POW groups included in the study, the Dieppe group at 54 per cent has the highest proportion of all study groups on pension.The other groups are close to the Dieppe group with 50 per cent of their numbers on pension.

(c) All POW groups examined show that approximately 80 per cent of their numbers who are pensioned receive pensions below the 48 per cent rate.

As a group, the Dieppe POW were incarcerated longer than any other of the study groups surveyed.

The martial status profile of POW and Controls is approximately the same. Both groups slightly exceed the general population rate with respect to broken families.

In the area of health:

A significantly lower percentage of Dieppe POW than that of any other study group report that their health has remained unchanged over the past ten years.

Significantly more POW than Controls report premature aging as being responsible for deterioration of their health.

Significantly more Controls than POW report increases or worsening in pensioned disabilities as being responsible for deterioration in their health.

There is little difference between total POW and Controls in reporting the onset of non-pensioned disabilities as being responsible for deterioration in their health. On a sub-group basis, the Dieppe POW report a significantly lower incidence of non-pensioned disabilities than any other sub-group.

The Dieppe POW report a significantly higher incidence than any other group of experiencing a combination of the three factors which in the author's opinion, for the purposes of this study, constitute a general deterioration in health, i.e., premature aging, increase in pensioned disabilities, or onset of non-pensioned disabilities.

A significantly higher percentage of POW than Controls report nervous conditions. On a sub-group basis the Dieppe POW report the highest incidence of nervous conditions.

Approximately the same percentage of POW and Controls report that their nervous conditions have had adverse effects on their wives and children. On a sub-group basis, a higher percentage of Dieppe POW report adverse effects from this source on their families.

There is little difference in percentages between total POW and Controls in reporting whether their families were adversely affected by lack of contact due to incarceration or wartime service. On a sub-group basis, the Dieppe POW report a significantly higher incidence of adverse effects resulting from lack of contact.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that, in any event, examination of the report reveals that the specific study made of the Dieppe POW proves that they suffered more than the others.

● (1620)

Besides, I remember that the Minister for Veterans Affairs had told the House that, broadly speaking, the government had decided that the recommendations Dr. Hermann put forward in his report would not be accepted but that, on the other hand, it would uphold its final decision until such time when the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs would issue its report.

Today we have the long awaited decisions of the committee. Mr. Speaker, I think it can truly be said that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has, on many occasions in the past, demonstrated that it was unprejudiced and genuinely eager to improve the lot of the veterans.

The recommendations which are being presented to us today may be regarded as reliable and it is our duty to see ot it that they be passed. For it is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that for years veterans have been hoping that the consideration of their case would result in recommendations aiming at the fulfilment of their needs.

We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that the Dieppe prisoners were treated in a very brutal manner. Incidentally, the effects of imprisonment still remain. We are now aware that it is urgent to meet favourably the requests of the Dieppe prisoners as well as those of all the others, because we must admit that World War II prisoners captured during the Dieppe battle have suffered as much, if not more, as any other Canadian veterans.

[Mr. Allard.]

Unfortunately it seems that those priosners have yet to gain sympathy from the government, considering Dr. Hermann's report which tries to give those war prisoners the same status as that of Hong Kong prisoners which has long since been recognized. Mr. Speaker, why are they refused what they deserve, for they deserve it as much or even more than Hong Kong prisoners.

In my opinion, those men suffered as much as those captured in Hong Kong and, in all fairness, their requests should be granted. If we judge by waht has been said, the recommendations which have been made are not that much exaggerated and meet quite adequately the real needs of former prisoners of war.

Mr. Speaker, it would be normal to treat these people in the same way as all veterans and prisoners who, because of distress or traumatism provoked either by their capture or imprisonment, also suffer physiological troubles.

In fact, if I am not mistaken, the veterans captured at Dieppe in 1942 were interned longer than any other group of Canadians serving overseas.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware of course that the Canadian government probably agrees that these proposals are timely in view of the present economic and social conditions. I therefore hope with all my heart that the government will understand the significance of the unanimous decision made by the committee and will also ensure that all necessary action is taken for this proposal to adequately meet the needs of former prisoners of war, because I believe that they must live in honour and dignity, and that if there is a group who deserves a special place in our society, it truly is that of those prisoners of war.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, once again, it is with great pleasure that I support the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I hope that many anonymous members, as was so ably said by the government member, will take their responsibilities and reflect for a few moments on all the suffering that these brave soldiers had to face to defend our freedom. In fact, I have before me the Minister of Veterans Affairs who lost an arm and a leg himself, I believe. I am convinced that if he goes back a few years to the time when he was fighting with his brothers in arms to defend our liberty, he will agree that all these brave soldiers, all these former prisoners, deserve all our understanding. I therefore believe that in all fairness, we should follow up on the report now before the House.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and once again I hope that the minister will be able to bring us good news.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under the Standing Orders of this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe be now heard.

● (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has risen on a point of order under Standing Order 29, at page 24 of our Standing Orders, which reads as follows:

When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place; but a motion may be made that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

I will put the motion.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would point out to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that it is now twenty-five to five and we have private members' business at five o'clock. If we vote on this particular motion he will be depriving the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) of participating in this debate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). Perhaps it has escaped his notice that today is Thursday and the House will sit this evening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29, I will put the motion at this time.

It is moved by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe be now heard.

It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton)) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It being after five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Olympic Games—Criteria used in awarding contract for stamp medallion to Jacques Cartier mint; the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise)—Agriculture—Surplus of skim milk powder—suggested use in food aid programs; the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot

(Mr. Jarvis)—Agriculture—Comprehensive milk marketing plan—inquiry whether agreement amended to permit increased cheese imports.

It being after five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) was seeking the floor to be recognized so that he could commence the debate at eight o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I only wanted to indicate to the House that, it being after five o'clock, on this day the House must proceed immediately to the consideration of private members' business. In my view, the House is not able to address itself in any way to the subject matter of the orders of the day, the matter of motions, because we are now in private members' hour.

Mr. Blais: On a fresh point of order, Mr. Speaker, dealing with private members' business, I would move that all notices of motion be allowed to stand at this time so that we might proceed with Bill S-29 in the name of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau).

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais). It is agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

AMALGAMATION OF EASTERN CANADA SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY AND CENTRAL AND NOVA SCOTIA TRUST COMPANY

Mr. J.-J. Blais (for Mr. Breau) moved that Bill S-29, to enable the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company and Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company to amalgamate, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the mover intends to make a statement at this time. If not, some of us on this side would like to participate. I think, however, the mover should probably speak first to enlighten us in respect of some of the questions we might ask.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to amalgamate the Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company and the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company. Through an anomaly it is impossible to do that either under the Loan Companies Act or the Trust Companies Act without this particular legislation being enacted. The Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company was incorporated in 1887 and has carried on business since that time. It is a loan company subject to the Loan Companies Act of Canada. Its head office is in Halifax. It has 11 branches in various towns and cities throughout the Atlantic provinces. On December 31, 1974, its assets were $368 million and its shareholders' equity was $18 million.

Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company was formed on January 1, 1974, on the amalgamation of Central Trust Company of Canada and the Nova Scotia Trust Company. It is subject to the Trust Companies Act. Its head office is in Halifax and its executive office is in Moncton. It has 23 branches in the Atlantic provinces and none in Saskatchewan. Its assets on December 31, 1974, were $378 million. Its shareholders' equity was $19 million.

As I have indicated, Bill S-29 would permit amalgamation of the two companies. However, the bill is permissive, not mandatory, and prior to amalgamation being permitted certain steps would have to be taken. The amalgamation agreement would have to be completed by the directors in such a way as to conform with the provisions of the Trust Companies Act under which it would take place. As well, there would have to be ratification of the agreement by the shareholders. I might point out that the shareholders of both companies have authorized the bill to proceed. There would also have to be a recommendation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on the report of the Superintendent of Insurance and the approval of the amalgamation agreement by the governor in council. So, effectively, before amalgamation can take place all these matters must be dealt with, including order in council approval of the amalgamation agreement.

It is not a complex bill but it is required because there is an anomaly in the situation, there being two separate statutes governing these two companies. In effect, had they sought amalgamation under either the Loan Companies Act or the Trust Companies Act it could have taken place if the two applicants had been either loan companies or trust companies. So I suggest that indeed this is not a controversial matter. It was before the Senate Committee on Banking where it received a complete hearing. The matter now must proceed to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and I suggest that the House should see fit to pass the bill with due dispatch.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what some of my colleagues across the way might expect, I will not raise any points of order with regard to this bill, I will be perfectly amenable and say that I also share the mover's support for this bill, as I am sure my colleagues do. As explained by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais), it is the result of an anomaly. I have not seen a transcript of the hearings in the other place, but I am sure that explanations will be furnished to members of the committee.

There is one thing that I find somewhat unfortunate. Among those who are the sponsors of bills of this kind, or among their legal advisers, there are some who do not take cognizance of the parliamentary calendar. We have reached the point where a bill of this nature can be considered in the House on alternate Thursdays, but even today a number of matters had to be put aside in order to give this bill priority. I think the parliamentary secretary will agree with me that this situation almost resembles the scheduling that must take place before launching a satellite. There must be some sort of atmospheric window or aperture which is open for only a short time every two weeks when such a bill may be discussed in the House, and everyone is rushed in order to get it to the committee. The committee sometimes goes through a rather precipitate discussion or examination in order to push the bill through so that it can return to the House and be considered at report stage and third reading on one of these extremely rare occasions.

If I may say so, with regard to this session of parliament, today may be the second last of the Thursdays on which a bill of this nature may be considered. I do not think that is quite fair to those people who rely upon a very serious and important business decision, because the history of these two companies will show that certainly one of them is the principal lender of mortgages for construction of residences in rural areas in Nova Scotia, an area which is rather neglected by other lending institutions.

Each of these organizations, as is the case with many things coming from Nova Scotia—here I am not trying to polish an apple for my leader—have a good reputation and have demonstrated a care which commends itself to financial administration in the rest of the country as an example of how an organization put together by people in rural areas, small towns, etc., gathers the savings of thrifty people rather than from the wealthy, mobilizes those savings and invests them in the development of the community. This is something that should be encouraged in this country and I hope we will see more such examples.

If we have to take time out when we could be discussing some other most important matters, certainly I do not begrudge that time and I do not think any member of the House should. I hope the House will see fit to give this bill second reading and send it to the committee. As a member of the committee, I can assure hon. members that it will receive careful consideration at the earliest opportunity and be back in the House once the committee has had an opportunity to discuss it.

My only reservation, and I think I have made these views known, is with regard to the timing of these bills. In some cases it is due to circumstances beyond the control of the sponsors, but all too often it is not. It is only salutary to talk to the solicitors on behalf of the principals in matters of this kind, or in the incorporation of a bank, because one thing that has given us a great deal of trouble, unfortunately, is the fact that bills have had to be put forward to the next session of parliament. This causes a great deal of unnecessary cost and uses up a lot of unnecessary time in order to achieve a relatively simple end. With that note, I commend the bill to the House for second reading.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today, as I understand it, is neither fish nor fowl. As I understand the legislation, two trust companies want to amalgamate. They can get permission from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to amalgamate, without coming to parliament, under section 82 of the Trust Companies Act. However, today we have one trust company and one loan company which wants to amalgamate. It is rather like a case of marrying a horse to an elephant.

If we are going to do something like this, for all I know it might be a good move. I wish the hon. member sponsoring the bill were here, or the hon. member seconding the bill. They should be here to explain what is involved and why these two companies want to amalgamate. I have a great deal of respect for the parliamentary secretary. He may know more about these companies than I do. He is not from the Atlantic provinces, which this bill affects, so he probably does not know very much more than me. These companies are in operation only in the Atlantic provinces. I want to know more about them. I want to know the record of these two companies and how they are treating the ordinary people in the province of Nova Scotia. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or someone else could enlighten the House in this regard. Do they lend out mortgage money at decent rates?

An hon. Member: They cannot if they are loan companies.

Mr. Nystrom: It seems to me that it would be difficult for us as parliamentarians to pass this bill quickly when the mover is not here and no one is explaining it. I should like someone on the other side to provide the answers.

When I look at the trust and loan companies I see them as very powerful institutions, along with the private banks. And when I see two of these companies wanting to amalgamate then I ask why they want to get together. What good is it going to do the people of Nova Scotia? Perhaps it will be good, but I want someone in this House to tell me what benefit there is in this for the people of Cape Breton, Halifax, and Dartmouth.

The Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company and Central & Nova Scotia Trust Company want to amalgamate, but what will the impact be on the social well-being of the people of Nova Scotia? From what the parliamentary secretary said, both companies are quite large and have considerable assets. How are they going to use their funds? Will they pump money into housing, or help the small communities in Nova Scotia to improve their lot? Are they going to lend money to fishermen, to farmers, to the working people in the province?

As a parliamentarian I cannot agree to pass this bill blindly and let them do whatever they wish. Until I have an answer to some of these questions I cannot facilitate the passage of the bill. I think someone on the other side should be able to tell us the record of these companies, what their involvements are, and what plans they have for the future. Will they help the poor coal miner in Cape Breton or the fisherman in Nova Scotia? If the answers are positive then I see no reason why the bill should not pass, but for God's sake let us not pass something about which we know nothing. Give us the details and tell us why we should spend our time on a bill like this.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I am curious why this bill was brought in late. From the report of the Senate committee I notice that it was first suggested to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in June and he gave his approval for the amalgamation of these two institutions. The bill then went to the Senate. The Chairman of the Senate committee was Senator Salter A. Hayden and the questions he asked made it sound as if the amalgamation was going through. He is more the bankers' banker than the banking people themselves. It is interesting to note the leading questions asked by the chairman which allowed both companies to put forward their views.

The Central Nova Scotia Trust Company has assets of $378 million, and I gather that the other company has assets of about the same amount. They are about the same size. Some of the questions related to the structure of the new company and the advantages flowing from this bill. It was indicated that the loan company was restricted in the extent of its business, and the advantage would be that of having both companies come under trust legislation.

Both companies appear to be fairly healthy. The loan company stocks are selling in the eastern Canadian market at 12¼ and 12½ on the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges. The trust company shares are not listed but are selling at approximately 14 or 14¼. I gather that this is not a case of distress where one company would support the other through amalgamation, but that both companies are of relatively equal value and are successful.

Apparently one company cannot issue guaranteed investment certificates while the other one can. It seems there is an advantage for the loan company in amalgamating with the trust company and the amalgamation will give them a larger lending capital. I quote the argument of the chairman of the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company at the hearings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on November 5, when he said as reported at page 7:

> We feel that if we were to combine in this way we would be able to reduce our costs of operation. We feel that if we could keep our costs and our charges to the public down, we would strengthen our position as regards competing with other large national trust companies in Canada. I think we would be enabled to employ in and to attract to our organization a better quality of staff than we can as two separate companies of smaller size and strength. We would like to take a look at the possibility of expanding out of the Atlantic provinces, where we have now built a pretty strong base, and possibly become a national company. We do not feel we could do this with the assets that each of us has available now and in the light of the possible likely expansion of those separately over the next few years. This is an attraction.
> In the case of The Eastern Canada, which is a loan company, we feel that while in recent years the enlargement of powers of a financial nature has largely been given to the trust companies and banks, the loan companies have been more or less restricted in their ability to provide additional services to the public. This has been a constraint upon us. To the extent, therefore, that The Eastern Savings and Loan Company is part of this concept, we feel that by becoming part of a trust company we will be able to have wider powers than otherwise.

I am not from the maritimes and so am not familiar with the vast operations of these companies. I presume that they have been fairly active in the maritimes and have been long established in many communities there. I am a little concerned, however, that one of the reasons why they want power is so they can expand outside that area. This is really in conflict with some of the arguments made to us in the past, particularly where regionalization has been an aspect of developing institutions. I am referring, of course, to regional banks established either in western Canada or British Columbia in order to serve the people of the immediate area. The idea is that the people of the region who deposit money should be able to borrow money.

The committee should consider if these two companies, by amalgamating, will better serve the people of the maritimes, or if their intention is merely to operate as another large, national trust company which will compete with the banks for mortgages and savings deposits. I suggest that this House and the people of the maritimes ought to consider this question carefully. Will these amalgamated companies operate nationally, or will they serve the people of the maritimes who are depositing the money and may want to borrow some?

The parliamentary secretary said that the offices of these companies are dispersed throughout the maritimes. I presume that they serve exclusively their particular areas, that is, that money is collected and paid out in the maritimes.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I am always skeptical when I see people like Senator Hayden, a man who has held about 100 directorships in companies engaged in virtually every aspect of finance in this country, asking witnesses questions about finance. The senator was in the chair when the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of the other place met on Wednesday, November 5, 1975. Allow me to put on record an exchange involving the chairman, Senator Hayden, and Mr. Connor, chairman of the board of The Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company, as reported on page 56:7 of the proceedings of the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I quote:

> THE CHAIRMAN: I understand that the trust companies, with the enlargement of their powers, are competitors of yours in the field of lending, which is your prime business.
> MR. CONNOR: That is right.
> THE CHAIRMAN: And yet, as a loan company, you are under such restrictions as render you unable to compete with them in the other varieties of services that they offer.
> MR. CONNOR: That is exactly so, sir.
> THE CHAIRMAN: So what you want to do is put these two companies together as a trust company, which will give you an enlargement of powers.
> MR. CONNOR: That is right.

If those were not leading questions, I do not know what are. If the witness had wanted to answer in that manner of his own volition, he could have done so. The senator, who had been involved, as I said, with close to 100 directorships in the financial field, did not hesitate to lead the witness and elicit the information he wanted. No one asked if the chairman himself was directly involved with those two companies. That is not beyond the realm of possibility either. For all these reasons I cannot look impartially on the machinations of the other place. I do not think that committee investigated thoroughly. I hope our committee will do a better job.

People living in various regions have complained, legitimately I think, that they find it difficult to borrow money locally. That is why this House permitted the establishment of a bank in western Canada and other areas. It was felt that the people who make deposits should also be able to borrow, and that as the bank collects from the local area it should serve the local area where the need for service exists. For this reason I hope that the amalgamated companies will not become merely another large trust company operating on the national market, to the disadvantage of local borrowers. If this happens, if the new company finds it more advantageous to lend money in the Toronto market or the industrial market, I suggest that the maritime people will find it more difficult to borrow. Clearly the companies involved in the larger market will not necessarily serve the needs of the maritimes. If this were to happen, I would oppose this amalgamation.

Already the people of our less fortunate areas, among which I include the maritimes, northern Ontario, and other distressed areas, find it less easy to borrow than do people of other areas. Although people in our less fortunate areas make deposits, they cannot borrow money so readily. Of course if you want to take comparisons to their logical extreme you could say that we all live in a disadvantaged area, when compared to our neighbour to the south.

I hope the committee will look into this matter closely, and determine if the amalgamated company will serve the people who deposit, or whether it will serve the larger market and compete with other large trust companies, like Canada Permanent.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members opposite for their interest in this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. If the parliamentary secretary speaks, he will close the debate.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I commend the two members of the NDP who spoke and indicated their interest in this bill. I am glad the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said he will pay particular attention to this bill in committee. I suggest some of the questions he asked in the House ought to be directed to witnesses who will appear before the committee.

The shares of the two companies seeking amalgamation are widely held and traded both on the Toronto and Montreal exchanges. There are more than 1,000 shareholders in both companies. The hon. member perhaps suggested that shareholders are concentrated in central Ontario. I suggest that this is not correct as historically large numbers of shareholders in these companies have been eastern Canadians.

I suggest there is an advantage to the company's seeking moneys by issuing guaranteed income certificates and obtaining funds from the money markets of central Canada, because that ability would widen its base. The amalgamation will provide roughly $800 million to the newly amalgamated company, which is a substantial increase of the financial base compared with what was available to each individual company previously. The Trust Companies Act will permit the newly amalgamated company to do exactly what was done in the past through the trust sections of the companies involved, namely, lend money on mortgages and act as real estate agent in areas where the people cannot afford to retain their own real estate agents, such as in the small rural areas of Nova Scotia.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that the company will concentrate its operations in eastern Canada, as in the past, as there is need for greater concentration of capital in that area. Of course when we talk of capital concentration we talk of the acquisition of capital through the sale of shares and through normal activity on the money markets. Effectively, with a larger base there is greater opportunity to obtain greater capitalization.

I thank hon. members for their interest in the bill. I am sure the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) are very pleased that the House is willing to let this bill go to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) that the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on Thursday, June 12, 1975, be concurred in.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), and the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) concerning the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

As hon. members are aware, I commissioned a study of the long term effects of imprisonment on Canadian servicemen who were taken prisoners of war in Europe during World War II. This study was carried out by Dr. Douglas Hermann, who is thoroughly experienced in all aspects of veterans' medical care and is himself a veteran. Upon completion, Dr. Hermann's study was presented to me and I, in turn, tabled the report in the House. It was referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which spent many meetings examining it. Deputations from many veterans' organizations, including the POW Associations, were heard by the committee. Officials of both the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Canadian Pension Commission also attended these meetings and gave evidence when requested.

The statements given by the former POWs before the committee revealed very graphically the conditions of their day to day existence in the prison camps. While some only suffered these experiences for weeks or months, some lived through them for several years.

The unanimous decision of the standing committee was to recommend to this House that certain new legislation be enacted to provide compensation to all former prisoners of war. This decision of the standing committee was presented to the House on June 12, 1975.

The Hermann Report has been before the government and I have discussed it with my cabinet colleagues. I must remind hon. members that all departments have new legislation, or changes in regulations, for which they would like to secure cabinet approval. The successful attainment of these goals is limited by competing priorities and available resources. As all hon. members are aware, the government is committed to a policy of restraint in spending in its campaign to halt and reduce inflation, and no department is immune to this pressure. However, it is important that I make a strong commitment to all members of the House that the matter which hon. members have raised is still before the government for a final decision along with other important programs for my department and many other departments.

I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 25 and Standing Order 32 it is my duty to put the question at this time.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan)) which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is in the House I should like to refer to proceedings earlier in the day when he indicated he would be willing, or the government would be willing to make a statement in the House concerning the cabinet decision with regard to the postal workers' settlement.

Could we have an indication from the government House leader at this time of what the intention of the government is on this matter? Do we now have to ask for unanimous consent to give the Prime Minister, or another minister an opportunity to make a statement? In our view this would be entirely appropriate. Or is it intended to obtain unanimous consent for the tabling of a statement? This, in our view, would not be appropriate, but it would also require unanimous consent.

If I may elaborate on the point of order, the cabinet decision is of great importance. We feel strongly that the statement should be made in the House, even if that requires unanimous consent to go somewhat beyond ten o'clock. The statement should be made by a responsible minister, and the official opposition and representatives of other parties should be given the opportunity to reply.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, speaking on the point of order, I have discussed this matter with the leaders of the other parties. Unfortunately we in the cabinet have devoted so much time here, to the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: —that we have been unable to devote as much time as we should have liked to this important issue. I had hopes that we could spend the day more fruitfully than coming down here for votes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: It would have been our intention to have the statement made in the House. I do not know whether it will be possible, and I speak on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when I say this, to complete the decision and put it in the form of an announcement. If we have completed our work by ten o'clock I hope it will be possible for the minister to come here and make a statement in the House. That is our intention and desire. But I hope that such a proceeding will not be of the ordinary kind which involves a long period of questioning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I think, if there is unanimous consent for this proceeding, that it will be acceptable to the leaders of the other parties if the minister makes a statement, if there are responses from the other parties, and if we then conclude the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on the point of order I suggest that the question of unanimous consent for some sort of statement and reply will depend on the time when any minister may appear in the House and ask for specific consent. That, of course, will depend on when he reappears and, presumably, for what he seeks unanimous consent. I think we ought to leave the matter until that time rather than speculate on what might be consented to at this time and what might occur between now and ten o'clock.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, as I already told the government House leader, any such statement would relate to a matter of fundamental importance and ought to be made in the House. I conveyed that to him privately. I assume he accepts that, coming from me. I regret that the government has so mismanaged the work of the House today that it has been necessary to go through these proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: It has so mismanaged the conduct of the House today that it has been necessary for it to spend a disproportionate amount of time here. It has probably been good for it, even at that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Bob, you have not changed.

Mr. Stanfield: No, I don't change, Joe.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask hon. members who wish to leave to leave quietly and allow the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) to make his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask hon. members either to sit down or leave the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If they want to talk, they are supposed to leave.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the lot of the House leader is never happy, particularly near the end of the session or when we are close to adjournment. I am sure the present House leader will long remember this day as one on which the worst fumbles in his experience were committed.

We are debating on third reading Bill C-41, which deals with the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain. As I said on second reading, I think every party in Canada during the last 35 or 40 years has agreed in principle that the incomes of those engaged in an industry subject to such tremendous cyclical fluctuations as grain farming ought to be stabilized. Also as said on second reading, any agricultural policy must adhere to five principles, of which stabilization of income is one.

I wish to make it clear that Her Majesty's loyal opposition supports the principle of stabilization of income not only for western farmers, but for farmers in other parts of Canada. That is the first part of our position.

The second part of the Progressive Conservative position is that we are of the view that farmers' opinions must be considered. In any stabilization scheme to which the farmer contributes, as he should, the farmers' views must be paramount—not the views of civil service experts, or of the minister, or of others. The views of the farmers affected ought to decide the issue. This bill offends that principle.

In the second reading debate members of my party asked that the second reading vote on principle not take place until we had talked to farmers directly and, face to face with them, discovered their views. But the inflexible minister in charge of the Wheat Board refused; hence we were forced to vote on the principle of this bill before we even knew what the farmers wanted. We said then that you cannot bifurcate responsibility for agriculture between two ministers, that agriculture is a monolithic industry, that one minister ought to be responsible, and that splitting responsibility between two or more ministers leads to trouble.

You cannot have several ministers responsible for policies to do with acceleration of grain sales, the stabilizing of prices, the stabilizing of incomes, the provision of a modern system of farm credit, and the overseeing of regional development programs. Despite these warnings from a party which represents the great majority of Canadian farmers, the government went its own way. As for farmers having some say in their own affairs, well, I can only say that this measure does not meet with their wishes.

Third, it is useless introducing a bill which asks for contributions from farmers, if the farmers do not understand it; because if they do not understand they will not participate, unless you force them and this they will not tolerate. Farmers are willing to participate, willing to pay their money, if they know what the pay-out will be. Good legislation should make that clear. But this proposal, as amended, is so complicated that not even an income tax lawyer can decipher it. I wager that not more than ten of our 250,000-odd grain farmers understand the bill. If more understand it, it will be a miracle.

I read the bill several times. I have gone back through all the clauses. I have difficulty trying to follow it through, even with the best of intentions. How can you ask a farmer to contribute up to $500 a year to this fund when he does not even understand what he will get out of it? On that principle of clarity, this bill is deficient.

As we found out this summer in talking to the farmers they want an individual plan, not complicated by a formula that only benefits the government. They want to contribute to a plan where they know what they are going to get out under certain circumstances or conditions. They are willing to pay into the fund. They are willing to be responsible for paying into that fund, but they want to know what the returns are going to be. I can speak with some knowledge on this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, may I draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of the Hon. François Cloutier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in the Quebec government.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: I will put my mother-in-law in the gallery, so I can introduce her too.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, apropos of what just happened, we do not hold you responsible for everything that happens in this House.

I was pointing out that the farmers want an individual plan. I was saying that I speak with some experience in this because I was present when the first crop insurance plan was put through. We found this difficult to sell to the farmer until one government, the government of Manitoba, sent out their field force to sit at the kitchen tables to explain to each individual farmer how he paid in, the government paid in, and the farmer got paid out. Now that crop insurance is widely accepted it is hard to believe it took 15 years before that acceptance came. I simply say that it is a futile use of the time of the members of this House to ask us to accept this bill when we know from experience that, if the farmers do not understand how the pay-out will occur, they will not sign up for it.

As a party you have a choice if you have this situation in front of you. We thought we could move in this House for a six months hoist which would have the effect of removing the bill from the House until the government could reconsider. In considering that you tend to ask yourself what it would accomplish. Will the government realize there has to be some form of cohesion in agricultural policy, and take this type of income stabilization legislation out of the hands of the minister in charge of the wheat board, who is too busy to look after the wheat board let alone look after this? Now that he is Minister of Transport he has no time for anything at all. I would go for a six months hoist if I thought the government would put this bill under the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) so that members of parliament could hold at least one minister responsible for what happens to agriculture.

It would save a lot of time if we showed our feelings by voting against the legislation at third reading. However, that is not very constructive unless you have some alternatives to put forward. What we have decided to do in this debate on third reading is to put forward as a party a series of three or maybe four proposals that are simple, easy to understand, and based on individual responsibility. At the same time they will help the government achieve what it wants.

The interest of the government in stabilization is simple. If farm income rises and falls in great cycles, when farm income is low the income of primary and secondary industry soon falls off and we get into a recession. Therefore from a monetary and fiscal point of view, it helps the government if you can have a stable income in this very valuable industry so that the tax take remains relatively constant.

To give an example of the mathematics, if the government puts $2 into this fund, the farmer puts in $1, and payments out are made of the $3, that $3 goes through the system to the merchant, the transportation system, the manufacturers, and the primary industry. It has a multiplier effect of three. The $3 becomes $9 when you calculate the tax. If governments collect 40 per cent of the gross national product in tax, out of the $2 invested, the government gets back $3.60. That is the arithmetic of why governments want it.

Under the present plan the government will get back its $3.60 for sure, but the individual farmer does not know what he is going to get. He may get it when he does not want it. He may not get it when he needs it. Therefore it does not meet the farmer's test.

The proposals we are going to put forward meet the government's needs as well as the farmer's needs. These proposals will be made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) and, if he gets back, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) will make the third proposal. There is also one that I will make.

My proposal is elementary and simple. It is first that we allow a variable levy. This means that, instead of being a rigid 2 per cent, the farmer is allowed to pay anything up to 2 per cent or at whatever they set the levy. I say this for a reason. From the evidence given by the farmers, they would like to pay a lot more than 2 per cent in the good years so they can have the privilege of paying less in poorer years when they do not have the money.

The principle of a variable levy is workable. If a farmer wanted to contribute more or less than 2 per cent, that would be his business. The government contribution would be a variation, a proportion of what the farmer has paid. That would be a simple principle that the farmer can understand. If it averages out at 2 per cent, as the government calculates is necessary, the farmer will pay his share.

The second principle is that this plan entails individual accounting. With our present type computers we have the ability to record all the money in, the money out, the interest and so on, on an individual basis for every person in Canada. We do it for the Canadian farmer in the grain business through the wheat board on his shipments to the wheat board and the credits to him. We can do it also with this question of income stabilization.

The third principle is the triggering formula. I really do not care so much for this particular item, but if they want to have a triggering formula it has to be based on the individual. The government can get the gross income immediately from the Canadian Wheat Board and its other sources. It is not hard to establish the gross income. The expenses can be obtained from the income tax forms. The income tax people can do this very simply by tagging the forms to be looked at. This is available for every individual. It is entered into the account. If you want to take a figure for triggering and get the average net income over several years, it can be done. On an individual basis the computer can be programmed so there is no time lost.

The fourth principle, and this is the important one, is that the individual alone decides when and to what extent he uses his individual fund. If he has had a series of good years and the fund is built up, and then he has a slight reduction below his average net income for five years, he does not have to take it unless he wants to take it. He himself decides what he wants to do with his averaging device. Likewise there might be a very bad year and he might want to take more out of the fund than would be normal if it were run by a regular formula. That is his business because, the fifth principle is when his own fund is exhausted, he draws down too much.

I do not believe the people of Canada should be asked to pay a subsidy to the farmer to stabilize his income. I think the farmer will accept that. He wants government off his back. He just wants a fair break. He wants his products sold. He wants to get an average price, a pool price, as they say, and he would like stability of income. But I do not think he expects the people of Canada to subsidize him in that regard. I would not be opposed, on this fifth principle of the program I am enunciating, to lending money to his fund, but he would have to pay interest on it, that is, if he wants to maintain the fund in a series of bad years.

I have put forward a simple, easily-understood type of proposal. It is actuarially sound. The individual decides how much he needs out of his own fund. If he doesn't take as much out as he needs, it is all his anyway. It is all credited to him. If he quits farming, it is there, available for him. Naturally he will pay income tax when he gets it, but the fact remains that the farmer individually is allowed to stabilize his own income.

Participation by the farmer and by the government is in the same proportion as in the bill before us. The government's interests are protected because if thousands of farmers experience a drop in income, a net drop over the whole area, the money would be paid out and go into circulation, and the government would get its taxes in the same way as usual. The interests of the farmer will be protected too, because he will know at all times that for every dollar he puts in he will get back three dollars. That is why he will buy the scheme.

It is in the interest of every Canadian to help this valuable industry stabilize its income, whether he works in a mine, or in the forest industry, or in a city. I say this because the chief sufferer and the chief beneficiary from variations in farm income is the person in other industries. I well recall in 1961, when we were in the recession of 1959 and 1960, there was a great influx of money from the sale of western wheat which pulled Canada out of the doldrums and set us on the longest period of growth this country has ever known, from 1961 to 1968. This was because the minute the farmer got his money he put it into circulation; it moved through the merchants and through secondary industry, the mines and the forests. As the head of the Bank of Canada at that time and as the minister of finance said at that time, this was the spark which brought Canada out of that recession.

I would like to see legislation of this type brought in. I would like to see a start made with a fund of this type.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

This is how you keep the extra cost out of farming and how you protect the consumer against extra cost. If you stabilize a farmer's income you reduce his operating costs.

I put these views forward in very simple form as a bit of evidence that there is a constructive attitude on the part of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. We are not opposed to this legislation. We would just like to see the government pull this legislation out, keep the method of levies the same, keep the principle the same, but make the pay-out individual.

This doesn't mean anything, coming from me alone, unless I can bring evidence to show that this is the viewpoint of the farmers. We held five meetings of the standing committee in western Canada, and I am taking the evidence from two cities alone, Regina, on June 18, 1975, and Saskatoon on June 19, 1975. I am asking the government to note the source of the evidence. I am quoting from the deputy minister of agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan given on June 18, and reported at pages 12 and 13 of the Minutes of Proceedings. My question to Mr. Dalgliesh, the deputy minister, reads as follows:

> My first question deals with your brief on page eight, headed off by the statement:
> "The plan does not provide individual commodity or regional income stability."
> I would think this is the heart of the principle of this bill. This bill is an attempt on the part of the government to provide area stability to an industry, the whole Wheat Board area. You collect individually from the producers but the pay-out is for an area. My question specifically to you, is: in view of the difficulties we have had over the years with PFAA in trying to plan regions and boundaries, in view of the fact that farmers if they are going to accept this bill and go into it in large numbers and in view of the fact that we have had the experience of the crop insurance approach, whether the area approach or the individual approach is most attractive, would you think it would change this basic principle of the present bill to one of individual approach whereby the individual is allowed to decide whether he wants to go into the plan, and his gross income is easily ascertained, and where his expenses to the National Revenue Department are easily ascertained, we could have much wider acceptance on the part of individual farmers rather than on a complete Board area pay-out or block pay-out?

That is a long and complex question. Mr. Dalgliesh answered in this way:

> You are really suggesting that the plan be amended to be on an individual producer basis; if there were 85,000 producers, there would be 85,000 individual programs, one for each individual producer.

At this point I interjected the words, "The same as crop insurance". and Mr. Dalgliesh went on to say:

> Certainly, in concept I think the Saskatchewan government would agree that you do want to try to zero in to the individual producer because really that is the unit you are trying to stabilize. So, certainly, with that objective in mind, that would be desirable. I suppose the question would come in, in terms of ensuring that you were not stabilizing uneconomic production, you would want to make sure that that was not a factor and I think that might present some problems in the approach. I think you have to take some account of production in aggregate. If you stabilize the price for the commodities that he was producing and not put up the crop insurance to guarantee that the quantity of production was forthcoming, I would see the program being workable. Yes.

Now to the layman all this means that he is saying that in view of all the experience we have had, the bill before us does not provide individual commodity or regional stability. He goes on to say that the best thing would be to work with the producers.

Now on the next page, page 13, I am quoting myself again, I was reported as saying:

That really winds up what I wanted to suggest. If we have crop insurance on an individual basis where you have a chance to insure up to a certain amount against the vicissitudes of weather, this gives us a chance on an individual basis, on a voluntary basis, to provide that same type of income protection or market protection, if you like, and with the other qualifications you have here, you have no objection.

● (2130)

MR. DALGLIESH: Right.

MR. HAMILTON (QU'APPELLE-MOOSE MOUNTAIN): In your view, speaking for the minister as well as you are able . . .

MR. DALGLIESH: Right.

MR. HAMILTON (QU'APPELLE-MOOSE MOUNTAIN): . . . would you see any objection by the province of Saskatchewan to going into one of these joint deals like we did with crop insurance?

MR. DALGLIESH: No. Certainly Saskatchewan would be agreed to explore any program that seemed to be feasible and administratively workable.

That is evidence from the government of Saskatchewan, and those of us who were there were very impressed with the clarity of Mr. Dalgliesh's evidence. Some hon. members might say that a deputy minister is hardly a farmer, and I would agree, but let me go to the Saskatoon meeting on June 19 when a representative of the farm union local by the name of Mr. Lemon, addressed the committee. As reported at page 53 of the committee report I said:

Your brief hits on the essential weakness of this legislation; that the pay-out will be made on an aggregate basis.

I now go to the final part of my question on page 54:

My final question is very simple: Do you feel that you have given us an honest expression of the views of those people, when you recommend the individual approach as the most acceptable way to get those farmers to participate?

MR. LEMON: As president of local 611, I am representing those people and nobody else. The membership of local 611 endorsed my views. They elected me president, and each year I come up for re-election. If they do not feel I have done the proper thing for them, it is their duty to say so.

MR. HAMILTON (QU'APPELLE-MOOSE MOUNTAIN): On this particular question of Bill C-41, you have consulted these people?

MR. LEMON: I have consulted with these people. I have gathered opinions from these two people and they have gathered opinions from other people. I have talked with various people and they are a bit reluctant to opt for the program as they see it now.

MR. HAMILTON (QU'APPELLE-MOOSE MOUNTAIN): Most of those people of your local would be members of the Saskpool?

MR. LEMON: Yes they would.

MR. HAMILTON (QU'APPELLE-MOOSE MOUNTAIN): That is right.

I would conclude with one remark. I think this was the best representation we have had to date, in our four days out here, of an honest expression of farmers without any vested interest pressure on them. Thank you very much.

That was an extract from the final part of my questioning of Mr. Lemon, and all it adds up to, Mr. Speaker, is that the farmers of western Canada—other hon. members may bring additional evidence—spoke on every single occasion, as individuals, as groups, or as a government, in favour of the individual approach.

When we came back to Ottawa to meet the minister, who did not go to the meetings to meet the farmers, I asked him whether he would consider positive, constructive proposals from the opposition. He replied: "No; the government has decided this is the way the bill is, and the only amendments we will accept are on four or five minor points brought in by the Federation of Agriculture". In face of this evidence the minister deliberately turned down the request of the farmers of the west who were willing to pay into the fund if they knew how they would get their money out. But no, the minister said the government had already decided. I do not believe the government as a whole ever decided anything. I think it was the minister who decided that he was not going to change, regardless of what the farmers or the opposition said.

So we are faced, Mr. Speaker, with a bill that (a) is not going to be accepted by the farmers, and (b) is going to be forced on the farmers by the minister in the face of their objections. Because this proposal is essentially voluntary, even though the legislation is complicated, I say here and now that the legislation is not going to be accepted by even 10 per cent of our farmers.

There is one group of farmers for whom I want to put in a plea. I know that the older farmers look forward to retirement in the next ten years and they are not so concerned with stabilizing their incomes between now and then. But the young farmers in their late twenties and early thirties who are operating under a huge debt because they are buying land, equipment, and the livestock needed to make an income, desperately want some form of stabilization of income. The reason I so much wanted this bill altered was that these farmers could have stabilization of income while at the same time a sufficient number of farmers were brought into the fund to create stability, thus achieving what the government wanted, and making more certain that young farmers would be protected by a large and available fund.

I have spoken at great length, Mr. Speaker, on the individual approach to income stabilization, and because this is such a serious matter for the western farmers I want to make it very clear that there are alternatives. I say this bill will not be acceptable. Whether we throw it out tonight on a six months' hoist or we vote it out makes no difference. It all depends on the government. If the government really wants to help the western farmers it can withdraw the legislation, amend it, and bring it in again, incorporating one of these simple alternatives that we are prepared to offer. But if the government wants to ram it through regardless of the feelings of the farmers and the opposition, then it has to be willing to pay the price, and the price it will have to pay is continued antagonism toward the government on the part of the farmers of western Canada.

I do not think it is any secret that the government has tried its level best to make the farmers of western Canada love it. But every move the government makes seems to cause more antagonism. I believe one of the reasons for this is the government's failure to realize that the Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta farmers are not ignorant peasants of the last century. They are young, sophisticated, modern businessmen who know exactly what they are trying to do, and who can figure out the pros and cons of any given program. In general they would like to have income stabilization, but they are not going to take on something when they do not know what the payout is.

If the government is really sincere in trying to put an income stabilization plan into effect, let the government make changes. However, I suggest that so long as the matter is in the hands of the present minister in charge of the Wheat Board we will not get these changes made. He is determined to have his own way regardless of what the farmers or the opposition think. Those who sat on the committee with us during the last three years know that the opposition have made constructive proposals. Over and over again the Minister of Agriculture has accepted our proposals and the result has been better legislation. All members of the standing committee know this to be true. But the minute we meet up with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, all we get is his black and white inflexibility.

If the government wants a favourable movement among the farmers of the west, for heaven's sakes let it put agriculture under one minister who at least is willing to listen. After all, we are not all bad on this side. As I say, we have put forward positive suggestions. When a minister accepts them, we stand up in the House and support legislation. I stood up and supported the minister on one occasion in this session, but members on this side disagreed with me. However, that is the agreement we made in committee.

We have tried to push things forward on a constructive basis in order to help agriculture. This is not something you kick around from a partisan point of view, and this is why I plead with members who sit on the government side to put pressure on the cabinet if they have any influence at all. How about working for the farmers for once, and get the government to put agriculture under one minister? Then we will try to help the minister achieve a better agricultural industry.

We need agricultural stabilization and stabilization of agricultural incomes, and I should like to see this applied not only in respect of the farmers growing grain in western Canada, but later on in respect of the livestock industry and farmers all across this country. But it will have to be on an individual basis in order to work.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate at third reading with a view to agreeing with much of what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has said. That should indicate something to the government. In view of the rare occasions the NDP and the Conservatives agree on anything, there must be something to this.

Members of the official opposition and of this party tried without success to get amendments to this legislation accepted in the committee. The government did accept a couple of minor changes which resulted in slight improvements to the bill, but government members were adamant, stubborn, as well as ignorant about accepting some other fundamental changes to the legislation which would not have detracted from or destroyed the principle. They refused to accept these amendments, and as a result the legislation is still bad and terribly deficient.

Some four years ago the Liberal government had the views of farm organizations, the three western provincial governments, as well as members of the opposition on what a grain stabilization program should be. It was expressed at that time that a grain stabilization program should not only be for the benefit of grain farmers but as well for the livestock producers and the growers of other products, including the farmers of the sea—the fishermen. Four years later the government still remains stubborn and ignorant, and still refuses to produce legislation which conforms with the principles of a stabilization program that will stabilize farm incomes involving a variety of products.

The original program laid before the government four years ago has seen many technical revisions, as in this bill. While I agree that the government did accept two of the submissions of the opposition four years ago, it has not complied with the principle. The government did accept the idea that the bill had to be based on net income rather than gross income. This was a 180 degree turn-around by the government.

The plan we now have before us is as abstract in principle as the original bill. It does not seek to stabilize the price of grain and it does not stabilize or guarantee the incomes of the producers. One of the most exasperating aspects of the bill is that it is next to impossible to detect the rationale behind it, and this lack of rationale, together with the extreme complexity of the bill, is what everyone complains about. Even government members admitted it is difficult to comprehend. This makes any attempt at explaining the bill to the farmers an exercise in frustration.

A paper released by the minister on September 4, 1974, lists four objectives for the grain stabilization plan. I should like to comment on each of them.

The first objective the minister outlined was to protect grain producers in the designated area from uncertainty and variation in returns due to temporary market fluctuations. Further on in his paper the minister used the expression "it transforms uncertainty into insurable risk". On page 10 of the minister's paper it is stated:

> —the government has stated that the plan has to operate within a level that is actuarially sound. The level set by the government is 6 per cent of gross receipts from commercial grain production, with the government paying ⅔ and producers paying ⅓.

It is obvious that the plan is being portrayed in the minister's statement as an income insurance scheme, but in reality it is not. In reality payments will be made by the grain stabilization fund if the proceeds from the sale of a proportion of the prairie grain crop in any year falls below the average proceeds in the previous five-year period, after adjustments have been made for changes in certain, but by no means all, expenses incurred in production and sale of the grain. In that event participating farmers will receive payments proportionate to their contributions. Whether individual farmers actually suffer declines in receipts or income is immaterial under this plan.

It seems to me that the proposed stabilization plan is being portrayed as an insurance scheme and, since it is a contributory plan, farmers should know what insurance they are buying; in other words, the plan must relate to the needs of individuals. It should be possible for individuals to determine what benefits would accrue to them if the event against which they are insuring themselves should occur. That surely is a cardinal principle of all insurance plans whether they are private, mixed private and social such as crop insurance, or universal social insurance schemes such as workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, hospital or medical insurance.

A second cardinal principle of all such schemes is that indemnities are paid to those who experience the ill effects of the event against which the plan provides insurance, and not to others. The proposed stabilization act sins against both these principles. In fact the bill completely ignores them.

A farmer who insures his crop with the Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or Alberta crop insurance plans knows what he insures himself for; he knows to what level he is indemnified if his yield falls below the insured level. A worker who pays unemployment insurance knows what he may expect in benefits in the event he loses his job and fails to find another. That is as it should be. In contrast, a person participating in the proposed prairie grain stabilization plan has no way of knowing when he will receive benefits, how much he will receive, or whether he will receive benefits when he really needs them. That is a complete betrayal of the principles enunciated by the minister in his statement.

In the three prairie provinces crop insurance will only indemnify those insured farmers who suffer specified losses, but will make no payments to all insured farmers because the over-all yield in the province may be below the five-year average. Similarly the Unemployment Insurance Commission will pay benefits to insured persons who lose their jobs, but will not make payments to all those making unemployment insurance contributions on the basis that there is a slack in the economy. Yet that is precisely what Bill C-41 proposes to do.

If the Manitoba crop insurance program operated on the same basis, as the minister, his deputy, and the Manitoba Crop Insurance Board told the committee, it could conceivably have taken the $8.2 million paid in indemnities in 1974 and distributed it to the insured farmers on the basis of their premium contributions. It is quite possible then that farmers with very high yields would have received large payments and the farmers with partial or total crop losses would have received far less.

I am sorry the minister is not here since this is his bill. I appreciate why he was not here when the bill was called at the report stage. He had a very important prior commitment to speak to the Alberta Wheat Pool. What I find passing strange is how disorganized that government is over there, shown by the fact that the government House leader would call a bill on a day on which the minister responsible had to be absent. If that is not sloppy handling I have never seen it.

If the minister is at the cabinet meeting advising the government to treat the postal workers in the same way he has advised the government to treat the farmers in this bill, it would be much better if he were in the House for the debate on this bill. At least then we could keep our eyes on him. If we were to operate the unemployment insurance—Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman across the way who is yelling had got up today to speak on behalf of the veterans, especially since he is the chairman of the committee, he might have made a contribution, but he did not have the guts to do so. He just sat there like a sheep when the vote was being taken.

As an indication of how ridiculous this bill is and how it completely perverts the principle of stabilizing incomes whether in respect of grain or anything else, if the Unemployment Insurance Commission were operated on the same principles as Bill C-41 what would happen is that the Unemployment Insurance Commission would calculate for all of Canada the average annual bill for wages and salaries on which unemployment insurance contributions are made. They would adjust it for the changes in the number of unemployment insurance contributors and for certain changes in the consumer price index, and if the adjusted total wage bill fell below the average of the previous five years, the Unemployment Insurance Commission would make a payment to all wage and salary earners. Each would be paid proportionate to his contributions. Those who had paid the maximum would receive the greatest payment. Those who had paid the lowest premium would receive the lowest payment. The unemployed person who had made little or no contributions would receive little or nothing.

I doubt, and the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, as well as many farmers doubt that this kind of a proposal to stabilize the net proceeds from wages and salaries in Canada would meet with the approval of the Canadian people. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, trying to operate the UIC on the basis proposed by this bill? If the unemployment insurance program were operated on the basis this bill proposes, the fellow who worked all year around and made UIC contributions would receive the highest payment from the fund, and the fellow who was laid off for four months and did not contribute to the fund during those four months would receive the lowest payment, or no payment at all. That is what this bill proposes.

The bill rewards the fortunate and penalizes the unfortunate. The farmer who makes the highest contribution to the fund in a year of pay-out receives the highest payment. If that is not backward in respect of any kind of insurance or stabilization plan, I do not know what is. If the national hospitalization program were operated on the same basis the people would pay their premiums, the government would compute the total bill for hospital care in the country, and in a year in which hospital care exceeded the previous five-year average everybody who paid a premium would receive a payment whether or not they had been in hospital. That has to be some kind of perversion of any kind of stabilization plan.

The more we deal with this bill the more convinced I am that it is still a bad bill. It is almost as bad as the legislation of 1971, which is saying something. It is obvious so far as the individual farmer is concerned that the plan does not meet the objective of the minister which is contained in his statement to the effect that the plan would transform uncertainty into insurable risk.

The second objective listed by the minister was to:

> . . . ensure that growth and development of the grain sector is consistent with basic market forces and that the grain sector develops in a manner consistent with competitive advantage in world grain markets.

While the relevance of this statement escapes me, I am disturbed over the policy implications that would seem to flow from that kind of philosophy. In effect the statement seems to suggest that there should be no stability if basic market forces dictate that there should be instability. The expression that the grain sector should develop "in a manner consistent with competitive advantage in world grain markets" I submit is entirely out of tune with recent international events, including the efforts by the Government of Canada to arrive at a better planned, more orderly world food distribution system.

Concepts such as world food banks, international commodity agreements, and the new economic order insisted upon by the developing nations are incompatible with the 19th century philosophy of competitive advantage. Moreover, that philosophy is the exact opposite, I remind the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), to the basic competitive advantage and the two-price Wheat Act enacted by the House of Commons recently.

The legislation betrays much of what the government has said, not to mention betraying the grain producer of Canada, the principle of income insurance and income stability, as well as income stabilization, or whatever one might like to call it. Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

OLYMPIC GAMES—CRITERIA USED IN AWARDING CONTRACT FOR STAMP MEDALLION TO JACQUES CARTIER MINT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to bother the postal department at this crucial time of indecision between the department, the government, and the Anti-Inflation Board. However, when I put my question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) on December 2, the question which we have an opportunity to air tonight, it was of course assumed at that time that the postal problems were solved at least for a longer temporary period than the week or so that has elapsed since then.

Be that as it may, the purpose of my question is simply to find the criteria which led the Post Office to award the Olympic stamp medallion contract to the Jacques Cartier Mint, of which Mr. Norton Cooper is the president, and which is a subsidiary of Silver Shield Mines Limited. The reason I feel we have the right to know the department's decision in this regard is the fact that in November of 1972 charges were laid against the same Norton Cooper, president of Silver Shield Mines Incorporated.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Also, officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were charged and subsequently convicted as a result of bribes being offered by Mr. Cooper to DREE employees for the purpose of having Silver Shield Mines Incorporated obtain a federal government grant. The DREE grant in the amount of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars was later withdrawn and the DREE officials in question suspended, because as the then deputy minister in charge of DREE, Mr. J. D. Love, said:

> An officer in a responsible federal government position was offered and received improper benefits from a person or persons associated with Silver Shield and its subsidiary Jacques Cartier Mint.

Subsequently Norton Cooper proceeded to plan to take legal action against DREE for withdrawing the grant.

On June 8 the federal government awarded Mr. Cooper a contract, number 69C74, for the purpose of minting stamp medallions. On June 27, 1974, Norton Cooper was convicted. As a result, on January 30, 1975, the Post Office Department decided to rewrite the original contract and awarded the new contract to Jacques Cartier Mint—contract number 108C74.

Regardless of any internal changes within Jacques Cartier Mint regarding its directors, the fact remains that Norton Cooper, who is willing to sue the federal government, who is responsible for the suspension and ultimate conviction of federal government officials—Norton Cooper who himself has been convicted of bribery for the purpose of obtaining federal financial assistance, is the same Norton Cooper who today finds himself with yet another lucrative government contract, not to mention the fact that Joseph Zappia, who is the head of the consortium building the Olympic village—who happens to have under his belt a contract for minting Olympic medallions in Switzerland—who has been the subject of recent RCMP raids on his offices and private dwelling, is the Joseph Zappia who is connected with Norton Cooper by way of having the contract of packaging the medal stamps that Cooper's company is minting.

This is just a small example of the background of yet two more shady characters who continue to be able to deal with the government which, in simple terms, is either naive itself or at least just as shady, to say the least.

In these days of uncertainties and questionable practices within the government and its agencies, whether it be the Post Office, Air Canada, or the countless areas dealing with public funds surfacing as near scandalous, one would assume that the Post Office Department would be far more careful as to how and to whom government contracts are awarded. I do not have to repeat that I am one who supports the Olympic ideal wholeheartedly, but I believe that one of the reasons that financially and otherwise the staging of the Olympics in Montreal is encountering the great difficulties that we are all aware of, is there exists a multitude of unbusiness like, improper, and shady practices.

That is why I believe it is imperative for the Post Office Department to come up with an answer to my original question as to what criteria led them to award yet another non-tendered contract, this time to Jacques Cartier Mint.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's concern about our problem in the Post Office at present but I assure him that the moment of decision has arrived. I hope that we will have an announcement in the next short while about where we are going, certainly by tomorrow.

I would also say that the hon. member is correct in his chronology of events up to a certain point, but he failed to mention that Mr. Norton Cooper is no longer an officer of the Jacques Cartier Mint.

I would like to inform the hon. member that contract No. 108C74 was awarded to Jacques Cartier Mint on January 20, 1975. Of course, as I indicated earlier, Mr. Norton Cooper is no longer a director of the said company. A total of eight companies were asked to submit tenders, but only two responded, and Jacques Cartier Mint was the bid that qualified for the said contract on the basis of a quality product. A qualitative analysis of the bids was made in consultation with the Department of Supply and Services and the Royal Canadian Mint.

We would like to underline the fact that the Department of Justice was consulted on the legal aspects of this matter, and the Post Office Department was advised that nothing could be done but to award the contract to Jacques Cartier Mint, with the proviso that the company be advised that Mr. Norton Cooper could not benefit from the contract.

AGRICULTURE—SURPLUS OF SKIM MILK POWDER—SUGGESTED USE IN FOOD AID PROGRAMS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate once again in the adjournment debate this evening. I believe it is the second time in as many weeks.

My deep concern tonight is shared by my colleagues, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis), the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley), the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), and many others on this side of the House. This deep concern is over the recent reduction of subsidy payments by the government to industrial milk producers.

My concern over the present high level of stocks of skim milk powder that are reported to be triple those of last year, and my awareness of the great need and usefulness of skim milk powder for the world food aid program prompted me to raise the following question on December 3, as reported at page 9680 of Hansard:

> As stocks of skim milk powder on hand this year are three times larger than last year's, being 300 million pounds, compared with approximately 100 million pounds, and as CIDA bought less skim milk this year than last, has the Minister of Agriculture made representations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or to CIDA directly, in the hope that additional volumes of this product will be purchased for world food aid?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) replied—and in part he said—yes, we have done that, we have asked the head of the Canadian Dairy Commission and our trade officers to explore every possible avenue for the sale of skim milk powder. He indicated also that the world surpluses of skim milk powder are larger than ever and that the distribution problem is even greater than before. Although I appreciate that information I must point out that I am fully aware of the existence of those conditions. In fact my colleague, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, will touch on one of the reasons for this condition later this evening.

The minister had admitted that discussions along these lines have been held, but let us examine the results. CIDA's purchase of skim milk powder for the world food program for the fiscal year 1972-73 was 25.5 million pounds; for 1973-74, it was 23.6 million pounds, and in 1974-75, 23.9 million pounds were purchased. But CIDA's purchase for this fiscal year of 1975-76 is only 14 million pounds.

At a time when our domestic stocks are in a position of extreme surplus it is unacceptable to learn that our commitment has been reduced by almost one half. I am certain that most Canadians would agree that the need for world food aid has drastically increased over the past ten years.

Canada's current commitment of skim milk powder through CIDA for aid is 1¾ of a million pounds less than our last ten year average.

I do not want to belittle Canada's contribution for indeed in total it is sizeable—4,000 tons of wheat, $5 million in canned beef, $1½ million in fish, and $1 million for beans, in addition to the reduced amount of skim milk powder. I do want to make it perfectly clear that what I am asking for is a greater commitment by the government to the world food program by an increased utilization of skim milk powder.

The government dodges the problem by pointing to present world surpluses. It excuses itself for the lack of success in export sales because of our poor comparitive position which results from the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the government does not support certain dairy products to the extent that they are supported by our foreign competitors.

I want to emphasize that shipments of skim milk powder to the world food aid program are not subject to competition in the world market place. Our commitment is a domestic matter—a local decision made by the government. Thus the amount of food that goes into our foreign aid basket is completely under the control of our own authorities.

I ask the government, and particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), and the Minister of Agriculture, at a time when domestic stocks are at their current level, when our present commitment is only about one half that of the previous two years, and at a time when the need for world food aid is urgent and pressing—I ask that they take prompt action to triple the volume of skim milk powder being placed into the world food aid program. I am certain that it would be accepted gratefully and with open arms. A greater percentage of the world's hungry could be fed; Canada would come closer to fulfilling her obligation in this area, and Canadians would experience a greater sense of satisfaction and pride.

Adjournment Debate

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answering the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) I wish to make a few corrections to what he just said. He spoke of the deep concern on his side of the House—forgetting my side—for the farmers. I am really shocked if the honourable member suddenly recalls the existence of the third world and thinks about the surplus of skim milk. What is basically wrong, it seems to me, with his line of reasoning is that he has forgotten people. Here we have a surplus of skim milk powder. Is he suggesting that if there is a surplus of fish, we should feed the third world with fish? Does he suggest we should decide what they are to eat? If so, that is an extremely wrong position and no member on any side of the House would subscribe to that selfishness.

Mr. Forrestall: In the meantime you would have those people starve.

Miss Bégin: I must also correct some other matters. While it is true that food aid shipments of skim milk powder are lower this year, such shipments have varied considerably from year to year and, in fact, the planned shipments this year are about equal—not less, but equal—to the ten-year average of annual shipments.

Mr. Forrestall: You don't want to feed the hungry people.

Miss Bégin: Listen to the hon. member talking about hungry people. He could lose a few pounds!

Canada has shipped skim milk powder to many countries and organizations around the world. Quantities are allocated regularly to the World Food Program for its use in its food for work and other projects. Other quantities have gone to the United Nations Children's FUND—UNICEF—and to many countries such as those of the Sahel, through the bilateral aid program.

The manner in which these allocatons and those of other food commodities are made is a serious one. Officials must work first from the request actually received from developing countries and from international agencies. They must also consider the availability and the prices of various food commodities in Canada. Between these two poles of demand and supply a decision must be made on how best to meet the need. I emphasize that basically this decision must above all take account of the needs of the poor and hungry,—not of our own little problems—and thus of the need to ensure the maximum nutritional value for each Canadian dollar spent. In the current year—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but her time has expired.

AGRICULTURE—COMPREHENSIVE MILK MARKETING PLAN—INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT AMENDED TO PERMIT INCREASED CHEESE IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, recently the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley), and I have been asking questions regarding the government's industrial milk policy, and tonight I wish to deal with one aspect of that problem.

For almost five years there has been in existence a written agreement which has been commonly called the comprehensive milk marketing plan. It was signed by the Canadian Dairy Commission on behalf of the federal government, and by various provincial government marketing authorities and provincial producer marketing boards. The purpose of the plan is to manage the supply of Canadian milk by means of quotas in order to provide a balance between the domestic supply of butterfat and the requirements of the Canadian market for butterfat in manufactured dairy products, plus commercial exports. It has been made very clear that the purpose of the plan is not to restrict development of our dairy industry. On the contrary, the agreement should operate to promote sales of dairy products at home and abroad. The quotas are designed only to manage the total dairy production, to ensure that there is an effective market for that production.

In April, 1975, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said we may have to continue to import some butter, but then went on to say:

> However, domestic consumption will continue to be met predominantly by Canadian production.

This, of course, is consistent with the comprehensive milk marketing plan.

Then came the shock of the Minister of Agriculture's statement of November 4, and I quote the pertinent paragraph:

> In accordance with the decision of April 18, 1975, imports will be allowed to increase gradually over the next several years until they reach not less than the equivalent of 10 per cent of manufactured products. The current (cheese) import quota of 50 million pounds represents 5 per cent of total Canadian consumption of manufactured dairy products. The size of the next year's quota will be established shortly.

First, and obviously, the decision to permit an increase to at least 10 per cent of our market was not in accordance with the April, 1975, statement. In my view, and in the opinion of milk producers, it is just the opposite.

Secondly, I submit that this decision is a clear contravention of the federal-provincial agreement. The agreement's purpose is to balance Canadian milk supply with domestic and export demands for our dairy products. How can this possibly be balanced when we give away a minimum of 10 per cent of our domestic market to producers and processors in foreign countries?

I do not know what happened between April and November this year and possibly I will never find out, but I can only conclude that, once again, Canadian agriculture has been sold down the river at the bargaining table for international trade.

This brings me to my third point. I submit that this sell-out constituted another breach of the federal-provincial agreement. There is a clear provision, and I believe it is in Section 13, that no order or regulation bearing on the provisions and purposes of the plan shall be made without, first, prior notification to the other parties, and secondly, concurrence by the other parties that such change does not contravene the purposes and provisions of the plan.

Clearly there has been no concurrence by the provincial producer groups and, what is even worse, I believe that there was no notification whatsoever. I specifically asked the minister in the House of Commons on December 9 if he had notified these other groups, and I quote his reply:

> We had many discussions with them. I am not sure whether or not that was discussed, but I am sure that they knew and were well aware of the increased importation into Canada of industrial cheese at that time. They made strong representations against this and they are making strong representations against this at present. We are reconsidering the whole situation.

All I can say is that the government darn well better reconsider. It is clear that the minister did not have provincial concurrence; in fact he expressly states he has just the opposite, and secondly I have a written statement form one provincial producer group which says in part as follows:

> At no time during the current dairy year have the representatives of the federal government notified the signatory parties to the plan that the federal government wanted the definition of what constitutes Canada's industrial milk requirements changed.

Canadian producers are well able to supply the domestic market. As a matter of fact they are now being penalized because we allegedly have too much milk. I remember well just two years ago the government's alarm because milk production was falling. Now the government says we are going to take away at least 10 per cent of your market and give it to foreign producers. How in heaven's name can any milk producer plan intelligently for the future when he is being overwhelmed with almost monthly changes in government policy?

On the one hand we have subsidy reductions which for three of my typical milk producers resulted in reduced incomes for September production of $330.85, $278, and $211 respectively. By year end these losses will range from $1,477 to $2,647.55.

On the other hand we now have an annual cheese import quota of 50 million pounds which costs Canadian producers approximately $18 million, or $360,000 for every million pounds of imported cheese. I also strongly suggest that foreign governments are subsidizing, directly or indirectly, these products which put our Canadian producers in a very difficult, if not impossible, competitive position. Our Canadian cheddar is the best in the world, and we have developed an excellent line of specialty cheeses in recent years, which should be given a fair chance in our domestic market, and hopefully in export markets as well.

The minister has told me he will reconsider this whole problem. I beg him to do so immediately because Canadian farmers, at this very moment, are feeling that again their products have been used as pawns in international trade arrangements.

If the minister wants to know what some farmers are saying let me read a postscript to a letter I recently received from a dairyman:

> In fact what farmers are really protesting is a wage decrease while other professions insist on a substantial increase.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a letter that is being forwarded today by my office to the Minister of Agriculture, other ministers who are involved in the problem, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the Canadian Dairy Commission. It is as follows:

● (2220)

> The members of Perth County Milk Committee, who represent the most producers who produce the most milk of any county in Ontario, would like to express deep concern—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not here. In his absence I have undertaken to answer the hon. member's question. I can sympathize a great deal, I may say, with the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) and the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). Tomorrow I have to face a group of dairy farmers who are also very concerned about this matter. The answer I have to make will not be very satisfying to anyone. Nevertheless, I think the hon. member has partly answered the question himself by drawing attention to the tremendous surpluses of skimmed milk powder which are held around the world. I believe the surplus in Europe right now is a million tons.

The comprehensive milk marketing plan is an agreement under which returns from export sales of skimmed milk powder and domestic sales are equalized. This is accomplished by means of a levy against producer market returns which is used by the Canadian Dairy Commission to assist exports of skimmed milk powder.

The second major objective of the plan is to balance supply with the requirements of the market, on a butterfat basis. The balance takes account of exports, primarily cheese and at the time the agreement was made, imports of cheese and butter accounted for a significant percentage of requirements.

The management committee which is composed of the heads of provincial milk marketing agencies, and which is chaired by the Canadian Dairy Commission, has continuously examined demand and supply.

The statistics which have been used by the management committee included the figure for the actual imports of cheese into Canada for each of the past several years. The management committee was aware that under the import policy existing up to the middle of this year, imports were not restricted in terms of quantity but by end-use. The government moved quickly to put quantitative restrictions on the total of cheese imports when it became evident that imports in 1975 would rise more than in the preceding years. The level of this quantitative restriction is now being reviewed by the government.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF JARVIS ST. OFFICE IN TORONTO IN VIEW OF ACTIVITIES OF MR. HORSEFIELD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the Department of Manpower and Immigration in the city of Toronto and, in particular, the activities of an employee of that department, Mr. Frank Horsefield. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration conduct an immediate investigation of Canada Manpower division office located at 200 Jarvis Street, Toronto with particular reference to the activities of Mr. Frank Horsefield who has been indicted and bound over for trial as a result of investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on five counts of forgery and five counts of taking moneys involving those without landed immigrant status with approximately 30 witnesses to be subpoenaed by the prosecution and specifically that the minister advise the House why this individual, pending the taking place of the customary legal process, instead of being suspended or transferred to duties unconnected with Manpower and Immigration, has instead been appointed to a position as a supervisor located at the Canada Manpower and Immigration regional office, 2180 Yonge Street, Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

PROPOSED CLARIFICATION OF INTERPRETATION OF PROVISION RELATING TO HISTORICAL RELATIONSHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises from the cabinet's overturning of the Anti-Inflation Board's decision on the postal workers contract and in particular the board's complete distortion of the purpose of "historical relationship" as found on page 23 of the white paper on inflation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the government to ensure that regulations pertaining to historical relationships between groups of workers relate to what is said in the white paper on this subject and not to what was decided by the Anti-Inflation Board and published in its communiqué of November 7.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF COMPENSATED DISCOUNT TO COMBAT INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important issue.

Since social stability in Canada is deeply undermined by some anti-inflation government measures rejected by the workers who have no confidence in the government statements on price controls, and since it is urgent not only to control but to reduce prices to enable consumers to buy available products, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House consider as soon as possible the opportunity of applying a compensated discount to consumer prices, which discount would cover all essential products and would be based on the difference between purchasing power and production value, thereby ending inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH ASBESTOS-RELATED DISEASES PROTECTION BUREAU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of recent evidence concerning the alarming number of deaths of workers due to asbestos-related diseases, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That the government consider the immediate establishment in the Department of National Health and Welfare of an asbestos-related diseases protection bureau similar in purpose to the already existing radiation protection bureau and that the government be urged to place before the ongoing conference of deputy ministers of health the proposal that uniform exposure standards for asbestos fibres be made a high priority for federal-provincial negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

GOVERNMENT REJECTION OF BOARD'S OPINION ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT—MEASURES TO RESTORE CONSISTENCY TO CONTROL PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. The government having obviously applied a different standard in supporting the contract between itself and CUPW from that which the Anti-Inflation Board applied in its opinion of that contract, and is applying to disputes between other Canadians, what does the government intend to do to restore consistency to its control program and assure Canadians equality before this law?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The reasons the government did not accept the opinion or the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board on the settlement with the postal workers were set out very clearly in a statement issued late last night. We do not believe that our action in this respect does in any way undermine the anti-inflation program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: it is our belief that in this interim period there will be many very difficult problems to deal with and that there must be a degree of flexibility throughout this period as we pass from contracts entered into before October 14 to those which are entered into thereafter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, O what crimes are going to be committed in the interest of flexibility!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Like your 180 degree turn.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Crouse: Look who's talking about a 180 degree turn!

Mr. Stanfield: Ignore those dishonest charges. Never mind that minor figure on the Canadian scene, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister, ignoring the necessity of the Minister of Finance to resort to dishonest charges—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister cannot possibly believe that the decision last night, in light of the positions previously taken by the Anti-Inflation Board, has not destroyed the credibility and moral authority of that Board. If he does believe that, he is the only Canadian who does. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister what steps the government proposes to take to restore the credibility of the Board so that its rulings can be accepted by the Canadian people?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I simply do not agree with what the Leader of the Opposition has said about the Anti-Inflation Board. If I may say this to the Leader of the Opposition, I think Canadians generally, as well as most members of the House, will want the Anti-Inflation Board to err on the side of restraint. That is what they did in this particular case; if it was an error at all. Certainly, if they are going to bring out decisions, we want them to be in favour of restraint. In this particular case we felt that the circumstances affecting the negotiations with the postal workers were of such a character that it would not be in the public interest to reopen the contract, and I would be surprised if the Leader of the Opposition believes otherwise.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, that comment by the Acting Prime Minister can only be described as pitiful in the circumstances. Are we to take it from what the Acting Prime Minister has said here today, and from the arrogant behaviour of the Minister of Finance, that there is going to be one law for the government and another law for the Canadian people?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is a simple no.

REQUEST FOR GUIDELINES ON INTERPRETATIONS OF THE GUIDELINES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if I might pursue this interesting subject, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister this. Now that it has been disclosed that the machinery of the anti-inflation process was only set up as a lightning conductor to draw the wrath away from the government, and the government having made it quite plain that it intends, within and without the act, to remain the final arbitrator and to act in a political, capricious or arbitrary nature at any time that it sees fit in dealings that it has with this problem, would the government, for the benefit of the public, now publish guidelines as to how it intends to interpret the guidelines from time to time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is our expectation that Bill C-73 will receive royal assent on Monday. Shortly thereafter the regulations will be published which will help to clarify the guidelines and assist in their application. I want to repeat what I said to the Leader of the Opposition, that this government is determined to exercise restraint. It is determined to put into effect the machinery that will encourage restraint, and I hope we will have the support of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Baldwin: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I might gently draw the Acting Prime Minister back to the subject of the question I asked, once the regulations have been published, and since it is now indicated that the government feels free to disregard them as it sees fit, would the government indicate publicly, by declaration or otherwise, the view it intends to take regarding the interpretation of the guidelines, having in mind that any resemblance between the guidelines and the government's interpretation of them may be only coincidental?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government's interpretation of the guidelines will be set out in the regulations to be published pursuant to the Anti-Inflation Act. It will be clear and it will be an expression of the government's view.

ALLEGED MISINTERPRETATION BY BOARD OF HISTORICAL RELATIONSHIP PROVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since the statement issued by the Prime Minister's office this morning in explanation of the Cabinet's decision to turn down the recommendation of the Anti-Inflation Board takes three pages to say that they just differ in the meaning and interpretation of the phrase "historical relationship", I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government agrees that the basic mistake was made by the board back on November 7 when it contradicted what is explicitly in the white paper on the use and interpretation of that phrase "historical relationship" and, if so, has the government made that clear to the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government that the Anti-Inflation Board should be an independent board and not subject to pressure from the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I thought that was a position which would be supported by my hon. friend. The government has set out four reasons for its belief that it should not re-open the CUPW contract.

An hon. Member: Four excuses.

Mr. Sharp: I think my hon. friend agrees with this. I thought the Leader of the Opposition would not want to re-open the postal contract.

An hon. Member: You are a chicken hearted government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is even more pitiful than the earlier answer. Would the Minister of Finance inform the House whether he is checking the recent decisions by the Anti-Inflation Board in respect of the teachers in Hamilton and the teachers in Toronto, and then the postal workers? Is the minister in agreement that the board has consistently misinterpreted the phrase used in the white paper "historical relationship"? Is the government in accord with its rulings, because if the government is, it will be in persistent difficulty as a court for settling labour disputes during the next 12 months?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said to the hon. gentleman before, and I repeat, we feel the board should go ahead and make its decisions, and it would not be useful to be issuing interpretations of the wording the board may use from time to time.

SUGGESTION CHAIRMAN BE ASKED TO RESIGN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question, and I would refer back to the point made by the Leader of the Opposition about having consistency in the Canadian law. I should like to ask either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, given the persistent failure of this board from the day it was first established to establish credibility in the sense of having consistency in the law, is it not time that the government asked for the resignation of Mr. Pepin and put a competent person in there?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

An hon. Member: He may give it to you anyway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN QUEBEC RESEARCH PROGRAM ON MERCURY POISONING

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Your Honour will no doubt allow me, before asking my question, to congratulate most sincerely, on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada, the newly elected government of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Considering that, in late November, the Quebec Department of Social Welfare carried out a series of tests in the Matagami and Lebel-sur-Quévillon area to ascertain the extent of the effects of mercury poisoning on Indians, could the minister advise the House whether he has had conversations with the provincial authorities about this and whether his department is co-operating in any way with the Quebec Department of Social Affairs in the research on this problem?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Minister of the Environment has just arrived.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my question to the minister?

Considering that, in late November, the Quebec Department of Social Welfare carried out a series of tests in the Matagami and Lebel-sur-Quévillon area to ascertain the extent of the effects of mercury poisoning on Indians, could the minister advise the House whether he has had conversations with the provincial authorities about this and whether his department is co-operating in any way with the Quebec Department of Social Affairs in the research on this problem?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to apologize for my absence. I was precisely seeking some information concerning one hon. member's question.

As a matter of fact, the officials of the Department of the Environment are working in close co-operation with those of the province of Quebec. The problem involved is within the jurisdiction of several departments which work in co-operation.

HEALTH

AVAILABILITY OF RESULTS OF STUDY OF MERCURY POISONING TO HOSPITALS

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

Can the minister tell the House whether the studies undertaken by the federal government on the possibility that some Indians are being poisoned by mercury have been made available to hospital centres in northwestern Quebec, that they might have a thorough knowledge of them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to answer that part of the question since it falls within the jurisdiction of my department? I must say that all surveys are available to every institution that is interested in obtaining them; with regard to specific cases, tests are made on private individuals and their results belong to the person concerned. It has never been the policy of hospitals or doctors to place specific diagnoses on individuals at the disposal of the public generally, or even special institutions; but as far as the general analyses and the surveys are concerned, they will be available as soon as they have been completed.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INTERPRETATION OF HISTORICAL RELATIONSHIP PROVISION BY BOARD

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. When the Acting Prime Minister says that the board erred in its decision I think we have a duty to probe the obvious difference between the cabinet policy and the Anti-Inflation Board policy. My question to the acting Prime Minister is simply, does the government agree or not agree with the Anti-Inflation Board policy that where a union has a historical relationship with another bargaining unit this would not justify an exemption from the wage and price and salary guidelines.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the particular case we are looking at of the postal workers is a negotiation that was under way before the October 14 date, and was still under way, and the guidelines spoke about special consideration for special cases. The question of historical relationship is one of the factors that should be part of the special consideration which relates to those contracts which were in a transitional stage.

The question as to what part the historical relationship should have in general in respect of contracts that are not of this very special kind is a judgment that will have to be exercised by the board. In the case of the postal workers it is not the historical relationship that was at issue. It was the fact that this was a case which required special consideration because the negotiations were under way on October 14.

Mr. Lawrence: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There was obviously a very specific indication that historical relationship played a great part in the board's decision. Presumably if the board erred, and the Acting Prime Minister said it did, is it now the position of the government, yes or no, that there cannot and should not be any restraint where there is such a historical relationship. How much more simply can I state it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has misrepresented the guidelines.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No; you have misrepresented them.

DATE OF SUBMISSION OF POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT TO BOARD

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In order to put in proper perspective the events leading up to the government's scuttling of its own anti-inflation program, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, in view of the statement made by the Anti-Inflation Board on November 7 that other considerations would have to be taken into account such as credibility of the program apart from historical relationship, at what time did the government submit for adjudication to the Anti-Inflation Board its final wage offer to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers?

● (1130)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I am correct in saying that my colleague was in touch with the board during the course of the last week and had received some indication of what the board's intentions were, but the government did not know in advance of the approach of the Anti-Inflation Board to the settlement recommended in the Moisan report. As the hon. gentleman knows, the offer was made prior to the entry into the restraint program on October 14, so the offer was already in existence and outstanding when the program came into effect.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT VIEW ON WHETHER PROVINCES SHOULD ACT AS FINAL ARBITER OF GUIDELINES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the position that the government is now taking in setting itself up as the final arbiter in these cases, may I ask the minister if it is his view that the provinces should now follow the same course, which would of course destroy what is left of the program?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would say no, and I suggest that in the special circumstances of this case of the offer and the conciliation board report pre-dating the program, the government's commitment to it pre-dating the program and the fact that we have just come through a 43 day strike, we felt that it would be in the broader national interest for the country not to be submitted to that again.

An hon. Member: Chickenhearted!

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—INQUIRY WHETHER REGULATIONS WILL CONTAIN PROVISION ALLOWING CABINET TO REVERSE DECISION OF BOARD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, without dealing with the particular case to which reference has been made, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether the regulations will contain provisions that whenever the government decides that the Anti-Inflation Board was wrong, it could reverse that decision? Is that the situation today? Because if it is—and it is apparently so—the board has been emasculated completely and has no more authority.

An hon. Member: To match the government.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The situation at present is that the Anti-Inflation Board is operating under the Inquiries Act and there is a specific provision that reference could be made to the governor in council. After the new act becomes law, which I hope will be so on Monday, there will be quite a different procedure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Then, the board will act through the administrator. There is in the end the power of intervention by the governor in council or there may be an appeal to the governor in council. I just say this because the hon. member does not seem to have read the bill.

POSSIBLE COMPLAINT FROM CHAIRMAN ABOUT GOVERNMENT ACTION ON POSTAL WORKERS' CONTRACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): All I can say to the minister is that he has made the confusion more compounded by the answers he has given today.

I should like to ask him this: In view of the fact that Mr. Pepin and his board have completely dissociated themselves from the decision of the government of Canada, being contrary to what the board thought was right, has the minister had any complaint yet from Mr. Pepin on any interpretation or intervention that was made by the Prime Minister as to the views of Mr. Pepin concerning his rights and that of the board?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE MEETING OF MINISTER WITH SUSPENDED AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Can the minister inform the House of the result of the meeting he had with the representatives of the Association des gens de l'air and, on the one hand, whether he is prepared to go to Montreal to meet the controllers who have been suspended and, on the other hand, whether he agrees to reconsider or at least reduce the suspensions imposed on two French-speaking controllers, Mr. Buisson and Mr. Cormier?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was a good meeting between the representatives of l'Association des gens de l'air yesterday with my officials who reaffirmed to them the government's objective of implementing bilingual air communications progressively in the province of Quebec. I think the atmosphere was improved when we reassured them that we fully appreciated the aspirations of the French speaking members of the aviation community, to use their own language, and that with the co-operation of all concerned we believe that we could make rapid progress toward meeting these aspirations while at the same time respecting the requirements of safety and making sure of an orderly transition. The suspension, of course, was for a breach of the rules and we have to re-emphasize the importance of adhering to the rules throughout the whole period of study. I note the hon. member's suggestion of some attenuation. I will look at that, particularly in view of what seems to be a possible improvement in the spirit of working together toward the right and proper results.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR PROVISION IN REGULATIONS TO ALLOW AGGRIEVED GROUPS TO APPEAL TO CABINET

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister in his remarks last night admitted that after Bill C-73 comes into effect, although the arrangements will be different, in that an order of the administrator instead of the opinion of the board will have to be considered, appeals to the governor in council will still be in order as provided in clause 24 of the bill, and in view of the fact that equality before the law is a principal in this country—

Mr. Stanfield: It used to be so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —will the government announce guidelines or arrangements under which other aggrieved groups can get their appeals before the governor in council in the same way that the postal workers had their case reconsidered?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the law itself does set out the provisions. Either the governor in council may intervene, if it wants to take the initiative, or there is provision for an appeal to be made to the governor in council.

An hon. Member: How?

Mr. Sharp: Under Bill C-73 when it comes into effect as the Anti-Inflation Act. That is provided for, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. We will, of course, be publishing regulations which will spell out the guidelines, and in general the governor in council will follow its own laws.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the desire that things be clear, will the government include in these regulations details as to how cases will be brought before the governor in council? While I am asking that question may I ask if, in the same way that the Postmaster General brought the case of the postal workers to the cabinet will the Minister of Labour bring the case of the pulp workers to the cabinet and will the Minister of Finance bring the case of the Toronto high school teachers to the cabinet?

Mr. Sharp: I am quite sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also may want to take initiatives from time to time.

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROGRAM OF DECENTRALIZATION IN VIEW OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I want to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising out of something he said in answer to the Leader of the Opposition when he said that the government was going to err on the side of restraint. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell us, on the basis of that and on the basis of the sheer cost of the relocating of government buildings, installations and structures of new departments outside the national capital at this time, how that can possibly be justified in terms of the restraint program to which this government seems to be paying only lip service now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I expect that my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, will be putting forward some proposals for restraint in government spending, which will certainly not be altogether acceptable to my hon. friend because it will involve cuts that will affect many people in this country in the interests of restraint.

EFFECT OF PROGRAM OF DECENTRALIZATION ON CREDIBILITY OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether or not, with respect to this program and its relationship to restraint, the continuation of the relocation would not have the effect of only badly wounding the credibility of the restraint program, even more than it has been by the government's own action of last night?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the relocation program has two purposes, first, the suppression of the heavy concentration that may occur in the national capital area and, second, the provision of services to groups living in areas which they consider far from the central government. Such purposes will be achieved not through a short term program but through a long term program which will have no negative effects on the federal government's restraint program.

AIR CANADA

ESTEY REPORT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSALS ADOPTED—APPEARANCE OF COMPANY BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since the acting chairman of Air Canada has indicated in a statement that Air Canada has already adopted some of Mr. Justice Estey's proposals, I should like to ask the minister what proposals the acting chairman was talking about and if the minister would inform the House of the proposals now.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the events involved in the Estey inquiry came to the attention of management—and some of this was before the actual appointment of the commissioner—management took some steps to correct some procedures and to improve a variety of other procedures to better ensure that any incident which had not come to the attention of management would do so in future. There were certain other changes made as well in general accounting and financial control procedures. It was changes along these lines, I believe, to which the acting chairman was referring.

Mr. Murta: The minister has not stated anything more than the acting chairman stated in his press release. Since a request from the Transport Committee to the Minister of Transport that Air Canada appear before it early in the New Year has been made, I should like to ask the minister if he is prepared to assure the House that the Transport Committee may have Air Canada before it when it is deemed expedient for both Air Canada and the committee, so that we may ask Air Canada directly a good many questions which we have been asking the minister in the House, to which we have not been receiving very many answers.

Mr. Lang: That is exactly where these kinds of questions should be put and if the hon. member will refer to my previous anwer, I did indicate my willingness to co-operate, as the Department of Transport and ministers of transport have done generally with the committee, to ensure a maximum investigation.

An hon. Member: Two years is too long.

FISHERIES

DATE OF REOPENING OF FISH HATCHERY NEAR CALEDONIA, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the need for additional trout and salmon fingerlings to stock Nova Scotia's lakes and streams, will the minister inform the House whether the fungus infection which brought about the closing this spring of the Kejimkujik Fish hatchery near Caledonia, Queens County, has been cleaned up, and if so, in the interest of our tourist industry and our high unemployment rate in Nova Scotia, when can we expect steps to be taken to reopen this hatchery?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State, (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having the courtesy to give me notice of this question. There was a fungus problem. In addition, the hatchery was one of our less efficient hatcheries. There are no plans for reopening now. We are looking at our whole hatchery program. This was a hatchery area where the superintendent retired and there should be a minimum of dislocation. I would much prefer not to close hatcheries or anything down, but we are trying to make them more efficient and we are reorganizing that part of our program.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the terminal facilities at Ottawa international airport. Considering the propensity of the government to spend large sums of money on Canada's airports, particularly Mirabel and the proposal at Pickering, I wonder if the minister has given thought to redirecting some of the funds originally earmarked for Pickering to upgrading and improving the terminal facilities at Ottawa international airport. The facilities there seem to have fallen far behind Canadian standards, in my view too far for a nation's capital.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member should make up his mind whether he is proud of the standards set when a great airport like Mirabel is built.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: It should be difficult for him to criticize improvements on the one hand and ask for them on the other hand in another place. The question of improved services is one which is before us at all times. It is not a matter of saying that there is money available because Pickering is not going ahead. The question is one of overall governmental priorities, as to what can be justified in the way of expenditures in this period of restraint. I think hon. members will find that we will be doing less in the way of improvement than we otherwise would have done.

but I am glad to have the specific suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister does not have to lecture me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I can very well appreciate that he is trying to hide behind the façade of a restraint program. I simply ask whether Ottawa will receive consideration similar to the consideration given to other airports in this country. I think it is a shame that Canada's national capital does not have facilities which are comparable at least to other capital cities in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I still think if the hon. member looks back at his earlier question he will see some contradiction about whether he is in favour of great, medium or mediocre facilities. I did indicate to the hon. member that every city and every area in this country is given the same kind of examination by the Department of Transport in trying to determine what next should be done in relation to the construction of airport facilities. We will continue to do that, and naturally we will be giving full and fair consideration to Ottawa as well.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER TOUR COUNTRY TO EXPLAIN PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister to make a national tour to explain the distinction between the decision made last evening with regard to the postal workers and the position taken by the Anti-Inflation Board in other respects, and to convince as many of the Canadian people as possible of the consistency of this program. Particularly, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to start off with the school board and the teachers in Hamilton and Toronto?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope our Prime Minister does find time for national tours. Wherever he goes he receives the approval of the people of this country for the leadership he has given.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: On recent tours on behalf of the anti-inflation program the Prime Minister has had a profound effect on public opinion. I hope he continues in this way.

Mr. Stanfield: May I make a very earnest plea that the right hon. gentleman do this at the very first opportunity?

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. gentleman returns from a proposed national tour, would he come to the House and explain?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will pass on to the Prime Minister the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that he go on a national tour. I had not thought it particularly necessary, but I hope he takes the advice of the Leader of the Opposition.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question with regard to restraint. The national accounts indicate that the seasonally adjusted expenditures of all levels of government for the second quarter of 1975 are running at an annual rate of more than 50 per cent of the gross national product. This represents a dramatic upswing in governmental participation from a level of 43 per cent in 1973. Is the minister aware of this trend toward government sector dominance of the gross national product, and does this lack of restraint concern him?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is why we have proposed setting specific limits with regard to the levels of compensation in the public service and, indeed, that is why my colleague the President of the Treasury Board will be making an announcement this coming week about very substantial cuts in federal estimates for 1976-77.

Mr. Clarke: Considering the alarming increase in government involvement in the economy, can the minister tell the House whether he has a ceiling in mind for maximum public sector involvement beyond which he would not tolerate further government expansion, and if so, what is it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman seems to be assuming that I have some control over the provincial governments and the municipal level as well.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You have no control over your own government.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member should recognize the fallacy of his question. In so far as the federal government is concerned, certainly we will be making every effort to restrain the impact federal expenditures have on the possible increase in the rate of inflation in Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCLUSION OF MINISTER'S PERSONAL GREETINGS WITH DECEMBER PENSION CHEQUES—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if I might disturb him for a moment. While no one will criticize arrangements made by his department, as recently announced, to have January pension cheques arrive before Christmas rather than the usual end of the month time, could the minister tell the House what entitled him to print, at public expense, his own personal Christmas greetings to the pensioners of Canada and to circulate them with the December pension cheques?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, those inserts and greetings are sent regularly, on a monthly basis, to all pensioners and family allowance recipients. They cover a wide range of matters concerning government activities. While informing pensioners that pension cheques will be raised as of January, I thought it would be appropriate to offer them our best wishes on behalf of the government, and I am glad to do so, once again, here in the House.

● (1150)

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare prepared to make public the cost to taxpayers of this use of public funds, which, obviously, has created the situation in which he is trying to make it appear that Santa Claus really is the Liberal party?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, if I remember well, I have already given this information to the House in answering written questions from hon. members. However, if the hon. member wishes to ask another question, I shall be very pleased to supply him with the requested answer. I wish to point out that all details pertaining to the cost of inserts enclosed with family allowance and old age pension cheques have previously been made available to the House on several occasions.

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON PRICES—SUGGESTED PUBLICATION OF FOOD PRICES IN FORCE BEFORE AND AFTER OCTOBER 14

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the Anti-Inflation Board has, so far, publicized only those decisions affecting wages, such as the cases in Toronto and Hamilton and that involving the postal workers, when will the board decide to cut back prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that both the chairman and vice chairman of the board have expressed concern about this area, particularly food prices. I anticipate that there will be some early decisions and action by the board for restraint in this area as well.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister drawn the board's attention to the desire of members of the House to make public the price lists of food companies in force immediately before, and after, the Prime Minister's statement on Thanksgiving Day? Has the board decided to require food distribution chains to make these price lists available, and will they be made public when they are available?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire if the board has made that decision.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH PARK IN LOWER SAGUENAY—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs.

Can he tell us, in reference to the federal park which is supposed to be located in the lower Saguenay area, what is the result of the negotiations taking place with the Quebec government and, more specifically, whether or not the government has decided to open up a national park in the lower Saguenay?

[English]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is the government's wish to see a park created in the Saguenay area. Negotiations have been going on and we are making headway, with the active assistance of the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There goes your good old restraint.

Mr. Buchanan: The matter is being discussed this week at the cabinet meeting of the provincial government. Mr. Simard, the minister of tourism, hunting and fishing, has been trying to reach me—and vice versa—since the meeting. I am optimistic that things are in good shape.

FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE RATES ON WOODCHIPS WILL NOT EXCEED ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am sorry I did not have the opportunity to give him notice. Will the minister review the 20 per cent freight rate increase imposed in August this year, and particularly the 18.5 per cent increase to be imposed on January 1 next, on the transportation of woodchips in New Brunswick, as this situation has apparently brought about the potential closing of at least one mill at Deersdale, New Brunswick? Will the minister keep close watch on these rates and make sure that increases do not exceed the price restraint guidelines?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we intend to ask the appropriate regulatory agencies to examine freight rate increases, in connection with the guidelines. We shall specifically ask the CTC to do this, in order to report to the administrator if there appears to be any exceeding of the guidelines.

AIR TRANSPORT

REASON FOR SUSPENSION OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER AT DORVAL

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister confirm whether the air traffic controller who was suspended without pay this week at Dorval was suspended on grounds that he does not speak French, although Dorval airport is not a designated area for bilingual air traffic control? Is this a reflection of government policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, that was not the reason for suspension.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the results of the provincial election held in British Columbia yesterday, will the minister consider declaring the NDP endangered species, particularly in B.C.?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL CONTRACTS SPECIFY USE OF CANADIAN CERAMICS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Because of the comparative advantage we enjoy in the ceramics industry in Canada, will the minister, together with the Minister of Supply and Services and Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, assure this industry that government contracts will specify the use of available Canadian ceramic products and that we will not follow the practice followed in the case of the new Calgary airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government observes some broad rules in connection with Canadian materials. I do not know if they apply in the particular case in question, or to a specific tendering operation, but I will look into the matter.

TRANSPORT

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SHIPPING WHEAT THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Now that the shipping season at Churchill has closed and will not re-open for at least seven months, are arrangements under way to ship 30 million bushels of wheat through the port of Churchill next year? The shipping season began 21 days late, but we still shipped 22 million bushels. Are arrangements under way to increase the amount shipped next year to 30 million bushels?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is always the object of the Wheat Board to ship as much grain as possible through Churchill. The kinds of difficulties which occurred this year, inasmuch as many vessels expected earlier in the season did not present themselves, put some limitation on the volume which can be shipped through the port. But the ongoing efforts of the Wheat Board will certainly continue next year. Its object will be to make maximum use of the port for shipments of wheat and barley.

MANPOWER

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the shocking and tragic unemployment on Cape Breton Island, where workers have been laid off in the steel industry, and coal industry, where an automobile plant has closed and CN cut back its operations—Mr. Speaker, you name it, and it's happened—may I ask the minister, as general manager of this country's employment service, what plans the government has to put people back to work on the island?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, and we have discussed this privately, substantial funds are devoted to direct employment in that area, as well as others. We have no additional funds to put into that particular program at present. I am conscious of the problem, as other representations have been made to me as well. I will be glad to re-examine it, in co-operation with my colleagues, to see what may be done, although recognizing that there are no magic wands we can wave to eliminate that problem.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday, after the usual Thursday question concerning business of the House, the government House leader answered. I made a careful note of his comments, and nowhere did he refer to Bill C-77, the National Housing Act amendments. Since the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs met for four separate sessions yesterday, totalling ten hours, which ended at 10.30 last night, I wonder if the minister would inform the House when that important piece of legislation will be called before the House.

● (1200)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when I was dealing with House business yesterday, I was dealing with the bills I was calling for Thursday, Friday and Monday. I was not quite sure how long Bill C-69 would take. It is our intention, however, to call more bills, including Bill C-77, Bill C-58 and others that may come out of committee in the meantime, or one that has already come out of committee. It is our intention to proceed with Bill C-77 until it is completed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY STATEMENT MADE OUTSIDE HOUSE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I appeal to Your Honour, as the guardian of the rights of members of this House, and I hope you can indicate to me some remedy that may be applicable in this case. I shall be very brief.

Last night, after the House rose and after the polls closed in British Columbia, a press release or statement containing some very major elements of government policy was issued by the government. I understand it was issued in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). There was frequent reference to it this morning. I feel very deeply and most sincerely that my rights and privileges as a member of this House to know what that statement and declaration of policy may or may not be have been transgressed. The statement should have been made this morning in this House at the earliest opportunity for a minister to stand, on behalf of the ministry, and make a statement on motions.

I believe my rights and those of all hon. members have been transgressed. This action is in contempt of all members of this House. I appeal to Your Honour to indicate if there is any remedy available to force such a statement to be given for the official record of this House and at the proper time in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege. Last evening it had been the intention of the government, if it had reached a decision and had been able to complete the drafting of this statement, to appear in the House and make the statement then. Unfortunately, because of circumstances that I explained last night and shall not repeat, that was not possible. We completed the drafting of our reply just before 11 o'clock last evening. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a brief statement to the press before the television cameras as he left the cabinet room. Later in the evening, getting on toward midnight, the statement was released in the two official languages.

If the House is agreeable, I will be quite happy to table the statement that was made last night. Under our procedure, of course, we have had a very extensive cross-examination on the basis of a statement that I made sure was distributed to all members before the opening of the House today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I shall deal first with the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). It is, of course, not a matter of the procedure of this House or, therefore, a matter of privilege, whether a minister at any given time decides to make a statement of any sort during routine proceedings.

On the second question, namely, the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) that he have the consent of the House for the tabling of these documents, I am not aware of the nature of the documents or whether this requires the unanimous consent of the House. In any case, the President of the Privy Council seeks consent to table them. I presume that consent is forthcoming.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

LANDED IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 2,366—Mr. Robinson:

What is the breakdown by nationality of the 18,884 aliens who became landed immigrants in Canada through Orders in Council during 1974?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): See table following.

NOTE: The following list represents 13,619 persons whose particulars appear in our statistical records as having been landed in 1974 through the use of the Order-in-Council procedure. The difference of 5,265 persons between Order-in-Council authorization and landing is accounted for by such things as, persons for whom it was necessary to waive more than one prohibition therefore receiving more than one Order-in-Council authorization. Persons who do not proceed to Canada, or leave Canada voluntarily after Order-in-Council had been obtained, etc.

FRENCH LANGUAGE RADIO STATIONS OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Question No. 3,103—Mr. Jones:

1. Is the establishment of French language radio stations outside Quebec based on the 1971 census figures for the number of persons in various areas who were reported as able to speak French, including bilinguals for whom French is a second language?

2. Has Statistics Canada informed CBC that the number of French-speaking persons outside Quebec was inflated in the original figures published for the 1971 census and, if so, which areas that would have had French radio under the original figures have been taken from the list as a consequence of the correction?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, Statistics Canada and Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. It is assumed that the question refers to the CBC Accelerated Coverage Plan under which five applications have to date been submitted to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for the establishment of CBC French language radio stations in locations outside the province of Quebec. These applications indicate that the population figures shown therein are 1971 figures.

2. (a) See part 4 of Question No. 3,102, tabled in the House of Commons on November 26, 1975. (b) No deletions were made since the results of the edit were incorporated into the official published figures, which were the ones used by the CBC.

STATEMENTS IN PRESS ATTRIBUTED TO PRESIDENT OF PANARCTIC OIL

Question No. 3,305—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the President of the Treasury Board aware of the statements in the press attributed to the President of Panarctic Oil during the week of October 20 to 24, 1975 indicating the possibility that Panarctic Oil will purchase three Scandinavian crude oil tankers for transport of Arctic oil to market should that be feasible?

2. Is the Minister aware of the extent of participation in Panarctic Oil by the government and its agents and, if so, to what extent is this participation?

3. Has the Minister examined the implications of going outside Canada for such vessels in terms of the long-term viability and health of the Canadian ship-building industry and trade balance and (a) if so, what conclusions have been reached (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board):
1. Yes.

2. 45 per cent.

3. The Advisory Committee on Industrial Benefits from Natural Resource Development will be meeting with Panarctic Oils in the immediate future to discuss the implications of the announced oil discovery, including marine transport implications.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—TOBOGGANS PURCHASED

Question No. 3,611—M. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,164, can the Minister of Supply and Services advise what are the special features of the toboggan purchased by the government that the cost was over $200?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as DSS is concerned, the toboggan is of a special DND design and is used as a lightweight, air droppable, 200 lb. capacity, cargo carrying device in Arctic regions. The toboggan is boat-shaped, manufactured from magnesium in order to minimize weight, has plastic runners, and is specially reinforced for strength and ruggedness. Other features include a cargo pack kit which is a nylon enclosure to contain and protect the supplies being transported, a special magnesium handle for pulling the toboggan, and various ropes, straps and cleats to adapt the toboggan to its various functions. The toboggan is used primarily for transporting supplies on field trips in the Arctic, but is also used as a parachute drop platform, and as a litter.

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Upon agreement with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I deleted 80 questions that were on the order paper and put on ten others to allow the government to answer quickly. The government seems to be afraid to answer my questions. I believe I have been very patient. If these questions are not answered before we come back after the Christmas recess, I will have no alternative but to put back on the order paper the 80 questions which I deleted. I would also like to add that we on this side of the House believe in co-operation. We would like promises to be kept on the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, at adjournment last night I was attempting to analyse the minister's statement of December 4, 1974, in terms of what he said about the four objectives of Bill C-41. I want to deal now with objective No. 3 which he cited in that statement, namely, that Bill C-41 would be complementary to the development of the livestock industry. It is difficult for me to understand what, if anything, it will do for the development of the livestock industry.

We can all generally agree that recurring booms and busts in grain markets have a disruptive influence on the livestock industry. Because the grains stabilization plan purposely avoids interfering with the market forces which the minister mentioned in his statement, the plan will do nothing to protect the livestock industry from those disruptive influences. Stabilization payments made at a time when grain prices tumble and markets are glutted will not change the fact that the low-priced grain is there to be diverted into the feeding of additional livestock. When basic market forces dictate that grain prices are high because of scarcity, the livestock producers suffer. We have seen this cycle repeated time after time to the detriment of both the grain and the livestock industries. I therefore submit it is wrong to say that a plan which leaves the basic market forces intact will contribute to the development of the livestock industry.

The fourth and final objective the minister listed in his statement of December 4 was that the grain stabilization plan would be based on a set of principles consistent with general objectives for agriculture which could be applied to other commodity groups. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that has to be the most incomprehensible statement ever made on the proposed grain stabilization plan. I challenge any hon. member to find any other example among the long list of private or public insurance or social security programs in this country which is based on a set of principles similar to that proposed in the grain stabilization plan.

In fact, Bill C-41 has its priorities backwards. The authors of the plan have adopted as principles what are considered to be beneficial side-effects of other programs to protect individuals or groups against uncertainties and vagaries inherent in our economic and social system. It is well known that programs designed to protect individuals and groups against financial losses resulting from accident, illness, unemployment, old age, and so on, have the beneficial side-effect of preventing a sharp decline in spending. Because such programs tend to prevent the economy going into a tailspin in that they maintain aggregate spending, economists have dubbed them "built-in stabilizers". The primary purpose of the program is the protection of individuals. The factor of economic stabilization is a side-effect. The proposed grain stabilization plan, however, has as its primary purpose the aggregate stabilization of the cash flow from grain sales. Protection of individual farmers would be a side-effect of the plan and is by no means assured. This is why we submit that Bill C-41 has its priorities backwards.

It is ironic that the statement should be made that Bill C-41 is based on a set of principles consistent with the general objectives of agriculture which could be applied to other commodity groups. If this were so, why did the government see fit to put through the two-price wheat act and introduce Bill C-50, an act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act? If the principles on which Bill C-41 are based are so sound, why not apply them to cattle, hogs and sheep, industrial milk, industrial cream, corn and soy beans? Those commodities are not governed on the basis of the principles the minister has embodied in this bill.

I think it should be made abundantly clear that the government of Manitoba does not support the principles upon which the proposed grain stabilization plan are based. The government of Saskatchewan does not support them. Neither do members of the official opposition or members of my party. Farmers, by the thousands, do not support them. The farm organizations which the minister feels are supporting his legislation are, in fact, so fed up with waiting to get some meaningful stabilization legislation that they are throwing their hands up and saying, "Well, it is better than nothing." How the minister can consider this as amounting to wholehearted support for Bill C-41 is beyond me.

We cannot support the principle that the maintenance of an aggregate cash flow is an important public objective while the provision of basic security to individual producers is merely incidental. We have endeavoured to persuade the government to adopt a number of amendments, but the government has refused to accept any but a couple of minor ones. Even if the amendments we proposed had been accepted, the legislation would have remained deficient. Surely the provision of basic security to the individual producer must come first. Everything else is incidental.

Let me illustrate the degree to which the legislation is unfair in other areas. The minister did come around to our point of view, expressed four years ago, that any income stabilization program should be based on net income, not on gross income. He has come at least part of the way by basing pay-outs on the net cash flow. This means that the farmers real and legitimate costs of production have to be taken into account in order to arrive at their net income. Although we tried in committee and during the report stage to persuade the government that it is excluding legitimate costs of production in the most arbitrary and unfair manner, in terms of arriving at the point at which a pay-out had to be made from the fund, our efforts were unsuccessful.

Mr. Speaker, in every kind of business, under present accounting practice items such as depreciation on farm buildings, farm machinery and equipment are considered to form part of the cost of production. But this is not recognized in the bill before us. If Your Honour has had any dealings with grain producers you will know that depreciation of farm machinery and equipment is a major item each year. Even more unfairly, the bill in no way specifies that interest charges on buildings, machinery and equipment may be considered a legitimate expense in computing a farmer's net income from grain sales.

The parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), tried to persuade me in the House during the report stage that the legislation could be construed as meaning that interest charges would be covered. I still cannot find support for his contention after reading the bill. I believe the hon. member is wrong and if the legislation passes, interest payments by farmers on buildings, machinery and equipment will not be allowed as a cost of production.

I now turn to the 2 per cent levy which farmers will have to pay. Everyone I have talked to has concluded that this levy is a premium which has to be paid in order to secure coverage under the plan. But the minister says this levy cannot be counted as a cost of production. The premiums a farmer pays for the insurance of his property, crop insurance, and so on, are allowed as legitimate deductions for income tax purposes. They are included in the cost of production. This is a practice accepted under all normal accounting procedures, it is followed by farm management clubs, and so on, but not under the proposed grain stabilization act. The cost of this premium can amount to $500 a year and it is, of course, a cash expense. The minister talks about cash flow. If the payment of interest on farm buildings and machinery is not a cash flow out, I do not know what is. The 2 per cent deduction for the levy is a cash expense that affects the grain producer's cash flow, but it is not covered by Bill C-41.

Let me talk for a moment or two about how this legislation is going to be unfair to producers because it covers all grain producers, not grain producers as individuals. There is an instance occurring right now along a branch line in my constituency where the CPR has not run a train for two weeks and says it is not going to run one for several more weeks. I had telephone calls from three producers along that line last night—one of them lives half a mile from his elevator and has a malting barley permit—and these producers have a total of four carloads and have to deliver to the next branch line, an additional haul of 30 to 40 miles for each of them. The additional hauling costs will use up the premium on the malting barley.

Those producers are unable to deliver their grain to the delivery point because the CPR says they are not going to run any more trains over that track for a few weeks. I hope the minister is making a note of this because I will phone his office about it later today. On this particular branch line somewhere in the order of 10 of 20 carloads of malting barley will have to be delivered to another branch line, meaning an additional haul of 20 to 50 miles for each producer. If the grain stabilization plan were in effect and those farmers were unable to make their deliveries, their effect and those farmers were unable to make their deliveries, their income would drop. Their cash flow would drop, to use the minister's term. But they will not be protected under this program unless every grain producer's cash income drops.

The province of Manitoba, in its submissions to the committee, and also the submissions of the Manitoba crop insurance board to the Senate committee, made not only what I consider most practical and proper proposals for a grain incomes stabilization plan but also offered to administer the plan for the government with only a small increase in the staff of the crop insurance board already in place. They offered to administer it on an individual basis so that farmers could pay their premiums and would know what coverage they were buying. They would be protected against losses due to economic circumstances over which they have no control.

In other words, our grain income stabilization program would be integrated and meshed with crop insurance so that the farmer would have complete protection against natural hazards under crop insurance and against the hazards of the marketplace and prices, whether they be domestic or international. The farmer would have individual coverage, and that is the only way this kind of legislation would be fair and proper. I agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and other members of the official opposition. We have taken the same position, that the program should be on an individual basis. It can be on an individual basis, and why the minister insists on an aggregate basis is beyond me. It betrays the whole principle of income insurance, income protection, income stabilization or whatever you want to call it.

Take the case of producers of grain, rapeseed, and so on, in northern Saskatchewan. They could have a good yield, which would mean they had no coverage under crop insurance. But the yield could be of poor quality, consisting of low protein wheat or barley not fit for malting, for which there is no market. On the other hand, grain producers in the rest of the region might have a good yield of high quality grain and they can make large deliveries. The Canadian Wheat Board and purchasers of non-board grains will buy the higher quality crops. I am sure the honourable member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) can verify that the income of farmers in that area would drop because they make low deliveries due to economic circumstances over which they have no control, and under this legislation they will not be protected.

The only way these producers would get a pay-out is if the total net income of the entire Wheat Board region falls below the previous five-year average. Under this legislation you could have 5,000, 10,000 or 15,000 grain producers whose income drops through no fault of their own. If this drop in income is not due to natural hazards, they are not covered. Surely that is the wrong kind of stabilization program to have.

This bill needs to go back to committee and the minister should agree to make fundamental changes in the legislation. Once the legislation is in place, Mr. Speaker, we all know that no matter how unfair it is and how badly it is working, it will take years to get such fundamental changes as this made. The province of Saskatchewan has expressed support for the position taken by the province of Manitoba, and I am confident that the province of Alberta will do likewise.

This program should be integrated with the crop insurance program and farmers should be protected on an individual basis. Then they will know what they are buying, what protection they will get and against what hazards they are covered. They will not have to wait until the entire region suffers before getting protection. The minister can hand over administration of this program to the crop insurance boards of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and also British Columbia because the Peace River district is in the designated area.

I and my colleagues are unable to support this legislation in its present form, and I regret that very much. The minister has made some changes from the legislation of 1971. He did learn his lesson a little then, but he still retreats from the kind of income stabilization program that is needed. He still refuses to depart from the nineteenth century concepts about the free play of the open market, and so on, and protecting the grain producer or any other producer from the hazards and fluctuations of so-called basic market forces. I do not want to be party to legislation that is designed to reinforce systems that continually get grain producers or livestock producers into difficulties with boom and bust cycles. The grain stabilization program of the minister will not level out and protect the incomes of individual grain producers in times of boom and bust. Indeed, the legislation is deliberately designed not to do so.

I see my time is almost up, so I would urge the minister to reconsider the legislation. Let him take it back to the drawing board and re-examine the submissions of the government of Manitoba, supported by many other submissions and by the province of Saskatchewan. I am confident that Alberta would also support it if the minister discussed it with them. Let him redraft the legislation and implement a grain stabilization program that covers farmers on an individual basis and is administered in conjunction with crop insurance. It would then be welcomed by members on all sides of the House, by individual producers and by all farm organizations.

If the minister fails to do this, he should not be surprised if there is lack of urgency on my part and on the part of many other members of the House to deal with this legislation. In fact, if the legislation does not see the light of day it will not hurt my feelings, and my impression is that it will not hurt the feelings of the grain producers in western Canada. Indeed, they are yawning over it. They are bored by it. They cannot understand it. It is too complicated for the minister to explain, and it is certainly beyond me. If you read some of the provisions of the bill you will end up talking to yourself. To accept that and to try to explain it to grain producers in order that they will be interested in taking part in the program is an exercise in frustration.

The history of the grain stabilization program has been well noted for this House. For years the grain producers, provincial governments and farm organizations have been asking for income protection in relation to prices and markets, as well as in relation to natural hazards. One would think the minister would finally realize that this is the kind of stabilization program these people want, rather than the proposal contained in this legislation.

I hope other members of the House will take part in this debate in order to bring these things to the minister's attention in a last-ditch effort to persuade him that the legislation should not pass in this form but, rather, should be sent back to the standing committee to be redrafted in line with the proposal made by the province of Manitoba. The minister would find that such a proposal would be acceptable to the members of the three opposition parties and to the provincial governments and, most important, acceptable to the individual grain producers in western Canada.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of participating in the debate on third reading of the western grain stabilization bill. Initially, we were told by the minister the urgency of this legislation and that the producers in western Canada were clamouring for its passage. I checked the record this morning, and it is interesting to note that first reading was given on December 4, 1974—over a year ago. Second reading was not given until April 28, 1975. Finally, yesterday, December 11, we reached third reading stage. It is over one year since this bill was first introduced.

Mr. Peters: They just throw it in when they have nothing else to discuss.

Mr. Neil: That is right. It seems to me the minister has been too busy with some of his other portfolios to take a real interest in piloting this bill through the House.

I go along with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) when he said yesterday that agriculture should be under the purview of one minister rather than being the subject of divided responsibility, as is the case today. Only if we have one minister in charge of agriculture can we have the co-ordination and co-operation necessary to make agriculture really go in this country.

First of all, we should consider what this bill does. Let me make it clear at the outset that it does not provide stability of income to the individual producer. What it does is attempt to stabilize the over-all economy of western Canada and make a relatively table tax base for the government. This is not what the producer in western Canada is interested in or wants.

When the bill was tabled for first reading, I obtained a number of copies and mailed them to various farm organizations in my constituency, as well as to the reeves and secretary-treasurers of the municipalities, and asked them to let me have their comments. I received one reply asking for further information. I made some inquiries later during the summer of those individuals and organizations in an attempt to find out why I had not heard from them. Their answers were very simple. The bill was such a complex and complicated piece of legislation that they could not understand it; therefore, they were not in a position to ask questions or to make comments. How can one comment on a bill that cannot be understood?

In June of this year the Standing Committee on Agriculture travelled to western Canada and visited the major cities in the three prairie provinces. Prior to that visit we requested farm organizations and individuals to make presentations. Some 18 organizations and representatives from the departments of agriculture for the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan made presentations. Without exception, their first comment was about the complexity of the legislation. All these organizations and representatives of wheat pools and the National Farmers' Union said they really could not discuss the bill with their grass-roots members because of its complexity. This was after representatives of the Department of Agriculture had travelled throughout the west making presentations as to how the bill would work and how it would affect the prairie farmer. A similar presentation was made to our committee, during the course of its hearings, which included a series of charts and figures. Those charts and figures did not explain the bill.

Time will not permit me to mention all the points that concerned the groups which made representations to the committee. Other speakers have already touched upon some of them, but I should like to mention one or two. The first matter involves the question of including depreciation as an expense. The minister and his parliamentary secretary attempted to give an explanation of why depreciation should not be included. Farmers in western Canada will tell you that depreciation of their equipment and buildings is a major expense of carrying on farming operations. Briefs also touched on the suggestion that interest should be included as an expense of carrying on operations. They did not ask that interest on land be included as an expense but, rather, the interest on their capital investment for machinery and on their borrowings from the banks for their day to day operations. The minister has not seen fit to include these items as expenses.

The minister has spoken of voluntary compliance with the plan. As the plan stands, farmers are included unless they opt out. They can opt out and in only once, and then they are in for all time. This is something that concerns producers in the prairie region. They like a voluntary plan, and do not like to be forced to participate in something they do not like and do not understand. The majority of those who made presentations were concerned about the global aspect of the plan, as well as the fact that pay-outs under the plan are only triggered when the average cash flow in the entire Canadian Wheat Pool area is less than the previous five-year average. The majority of the representatives of these organizations spoke of a regional basis on which to trigger the payments. Almost without exception, when questioned each organization and each individual indicated that an ideal plan is one based on individual participation.

I should like to refer to the minutes of the meetings held, one in Saskatoon and one in Winnipeg. I shall refer to issue No. 53 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, dated Friday, June 20, 1975. This is a presentation by the Manitoba Farm Bureau. It reads in part:

> In discussions with grain producers it often becomes evident that there is some tendency to reject the idea of participation in the plan because as it stands it does not provide for application of it on a regional basis.

A little later in the same issue, at page 81, in a presentation made by Mr. Otto Fielman who is a grain producer from the area of Rosenfeld, Manitoba, and also a director of the Manitoba Wheat Pool, we find this statement:

> Farmers are independent business operators that want a stabilization plan to fill their individual needs, and not a lottery type chance of payment which has no connection with their own operation.

In issue No. 52 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, at page 42 Mr. Lemon, a representative of the National Farmers' Union, local 611, had this to say:

> To average the entire Wheat Board area appears to be ridiculous as a protection for individuals or localized areas.

Mr. Speaker, the bill covers six different grains—wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed. As I mentioned before, payment is triggered when the net cash flow in the entire Canadian Wheat Board area in a particular year is less than the previous five-year average. But consider the situation of the various producers in the prairies. There are many who specialize in producing a particular type of grain, depending on the area in which their farm is located.

There are areas where people specialize in the growing of rapeseed or feed grains or flax. Let us suppose a farmer specializes in one of these particular crops and in one year or, perhaps in two or three years, the volume of sales is low and the price of the particular grain is low, yet the price of the other five grains remains high and the volume of sales is high. Under those circumstances, the average net cash flow in the entire Wheat Board area would exceed the five-year average and there would be no payment out. In other words, there would be producers who, because they specialized in producing a particular type of grain, would not be able to receive benefits under the plan.

If it worked on a regional basis, there would still be problems similar to those if we used the entire Canadian Wheat Board area. Many members here, and most producers, will recall PFAA legislation, which I understand started on a global basis and then worked down to a regional basis. With the PFAA program on a regional basis there were many situations in which particular farmers who were just across the border from the area where a PFAA payment was being made did not receive a cent. A farmer across the road may have a much better crops than them, but because they were in a particular region they were not able to receive payments.

What I am saying is that the utilization of a regional basis is not a fair way to operate a plan. Our party and most producers in western Canada feel that an individual plan is the only basis on which we should be stabilizing income. The minister, of course, would not accept this concept. He suggested that we should put the bill through as it is and then we could make changes. But why put through a bad bill? Why put through a bill that is not acceptable to the producers, the people who will be participating in the program? The producers in western Canada do not want a bill they do not understand. It seems to me the function of any committee is to consider legislation, to listen to representations by interested people and to take heed of what they say. We heard many representations. I think we, as members of the committee, heeded the representations but the minister did not.

This bill is drafted in such a manner that it is impossible to amend it. The minister should have withdrawn the bill and submitted a new one. He cannot use the excuse that time was important because, as I said at the outset, this bill has been before the House off and on, for over a year. So there has been plenty of time for him to consider withdrawing the bill and bringing in a new one. I am sure that if he had done so, the bill would have been passed quite a long time ago.

It is intersting to examine the figures that were presented to members of the committee by representatives of the Department of Agriculture. I am referring to a historical review which covers the period 1954 to 1974 based on actual production and the assumption that this plan was in existence during that time. During that 20-year period, producers in the Canadian Wheat Board area, had this plan been in existence, would have contributed in the order of $441.6 million.

However, if we look further at the chart we find it would have been necessary for the government to lend money to the fund from time to time. It would have been lent at varying rates. In the period 1954 to 1959 the rate would have been 4 per cent; in the period 1960 to 1969 the rate would have been 5 per cent; and in the period 1970 to 1974 the rate would have been 7 per cent. What do we find? We find that during the same period the producers would have been called upon to pay interest of $210.1 million to the government. In other words, their contribution to the fund would have been $441.6 million and they would have had to pay interest of $210.1 million.

Almost half of the producers' levy would have been used to pay interest to the government, leaving only $221.5 million of the producers' money to be used for stabilization. Granted, the contributions of the producers drew interest which totalled $7.4 million. The average amount that would have been paid into the plan annually by the government during that period was $43.5 million. During this period, of course, the plan was not in operation, but under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, under PFAA and under some other schemes, the government has contributed some $70 million annually. These schemes have all been phased out or cancelled. On a historical average, using the stabilization bill, the government would be contributing some $43.5 million annually.

As I stated earlier, this program should be administered on an individual basis. There are several ways in which this could be accomplished . I will mention only two. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) will be presenting a third plan later this afternoon. The first alternative I am suggesting is based upon a 2 per cent contribution by the producer and a 4 per cent contribution by the government, but the producers' and the government's contributions would be put into the individual account of the producer and to that account would be added the accrued interest as it built up. We are suggesting, as well, that gross sales would be up to $35,000. If you use that basis, at the end of the first year the producers' levy would be $700 and the government's levy would be $1,400. At the end of the first year the producer would have in his account $2,100 plus interest. At the end of the second year the producer would have in his account, assuming there were no withdrawals, up to $1,400 and the government's levy would be $2,800, for a total of up to $4,200, plus interest.

The operation of the plan would be based on income insurance. The producer would receive a payment from the plan under the following circumstances. At the beginning of the crop year, when the Canadian Wheat Board establishes its initial price, the Department of Agriculture would fix a maximum insurable price for the six different grains based on the five-year average price and the cost of production. The producer, based on the contributions in his account, could insure for the amount per bushel up to a maximum being the difference between the initial price announced by the Canadian Wheat Board and the maximum insurable price fixed by the Department of Agriculture. The producer would then be entitled to receive payment of an amount per bushel equal to the difference between the maximum insurable price and the final realized CWB price per bushel or the amount for which he insured.

Let me give an example. Using crop insurance statistics, if the average yield in the crop district for wheat is, say, 25 bushels per acre, and if the initial price fixed by CWB in the spring is $2.25 a bushel, if the Department of Agriculture fixes the maximum insurable price at $3 a bushel the producer could insure for the amount per bushel up to a maximum difference between the maximum insurable price and the initial price; in other words, $3 minus $2.25, or 75 cents a bushel. In his first year of coverage, the producer would have a maximum coverage on 2,800 bushels, or 107 acres at 26 bushels an acre. If the final realized CWB price were $2.50 a bushel, the producer would receive 2,800 bushels at 50 cents, or $1,400.

According to the second alternative, a separate account would be set up as before, but rather than using Statistics Canada officials to wander from farm to farm picking up statistics, certain colour coded income tax returns could be used and the Department of National Revenue could inject these figures from the returns into a computer and get an accurate figure on the aggregate net income and the expenses. Payment under this program would be triggered, first of all, when the aggregate net income or the net cash flow in the entire CWB area was less than the five-year average, or if the net income of the individual for the particular year was less than his five-year average. The producer would have the right to elect whether to apply for a payment under the program and he could do so when he filled his income tax return each year. On his retirement, whatever remained in his account, plus interest, would be returned to him, less the benefits he had received.

Neither system would involve government loans. Such a program would be actuarially sound, it would save millions of dollars in interest, and I am sure it would be acceptable. These are only two of a number of possible individual programs. They would be understandable to the producer. I plead with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board to give serious consideration to accepting one or other of these plans in substitution of the plan which is before us. I suggest that he withdraw the bill and bring in another one some time in the near future which would be more acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us attempts to stabilize the net proceeds of grain farmers in western Canada. I disagree with the fundamental principle of the bill, which is an aggregate pay-out as opposed to individual compensation. It seems to me that Bill C-41 is just a means which the government is using to try to replace some of the legislation which has been taken off the statute books. As the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) said, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and deficiency payments amounted to about $70 million per year.

[Mr. Neil.]

Federal assistance is certainly warranted, in view of the importance of the western grain industry to Canada and to the world. I suggest that we need a list of priorities for the western grain industry, but surely Bill C-41 is a long way down the list. As we travelled across the prairies last summer, it was said many times that no one really understands this bill. That is because of its language. With regard to persons deemed not to be actual producers, clause 5(8) of the bill reads as follows:

> Where an actual producer who is not eligible to participate under this act makes an application for a permit book together with an eligible actual producer, the actual producer who is not eligible shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be a producer who is not an actual producer.

Is it any wonder farmers threw up their hands when they were asked to comment on this very complicated bill? The minister has compared this bill with fire insurance. The only difference is that if a house burns down, its owner is paid for it; but under this bill, if a farmer loses a crop he will not necessarily receive any money. We have had many years' experience with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and over the years the act was brought closer and closer to an individual basis. With the experience the government has had of administering that act, I suggest it could well bring this grain stabilization bill toward an individual basis such as we have with crop insurance. It works very successfully in western Canada.

It is hard to overemphasize the importance of western grain to this country. I am looking at the daily Thunder Bay outward traffic report for December 6, 1975. There were 1,170 cars. For the same day, in Vancouver there were 511. There are about 1,700 cars of grain per day being unloaded. Of course, this year everything is moving well. It will not be a record year, but exports will probably be 600 million bushels with another 200 million moving within the country by rail for domestic purposes.

Recent world trends in grain stocks underscore the extent of Canada's food power. Supplies in the world are steadily declining, and for the first time the United States has established a national grain export policy in place of the free rein which was allowed commercial grain exporters in the past. We see the Americans, who are our main competitors in grain exports, negotiating long-term agreements with our good customers, Russia, Japan and Poland. These deals indicate how eager foreign countries are to nail down the world's grain supplies. They are buying fixed volumes in an orderly fashion.

I suggest the Canadian government could do much more for this country along that line. Canada and the United States now account for 70 per cent of the world export of grains. I indicated how much grain was moving for export right now; some 1,700 cars a day are being unloaded. This is going to mean something over $3 billion in exports for Canada. This is over 10 per cent of our total exports. When you consider the multiplier effect of grain sales in this country, one can see that the federal government could well afford to put more money back into the industry. In a world of growing scarcity, Canadians must be made aware of the great power of their grain industry. When ministers of this government go abroad with a little wheat in their pockets, doors are opened to them. Wheat, more than anything else we possess, will open doors for our ministers. The United States ability to produce food has regained for that country much of the diplomatic clout it lost over the Viet Nam war.

Our country is going the stabilization-supply management route. This scheme, like other stabilization schemes, must inevitably lead to border restrictions. As the United States scales down its so-called give-away programs under public law 480, new opportunities will open for Canada. New cash customers will look to Canada for the kind of grain we grow. Saskatchewan is by far the largest grain producer in Canada. I shall, therefore, put on record part of the telex communication Mr. Kaeding, the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan, sent to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. He said:

The Saskatchewan government believes that the whole philosophy behind Bill C-41 is subject to serious question since it does not relate payments under the program to need but rather to historical price levels . . .

The plan does not provide individual, commodity or regional stability. It neglects the geographic and climatic factors which influence the production of various grains throughout the prairies. The implicit assumption is that the prairies are a homogeneous area. This assumption is not valid . . .

If present levels of support for livestock production remain in effect once Bill C-41 is passed, the excessive shifting of resources between livestock and grain production will continue.

He then said:

Interest depreciation and labour cost must be included in any reasonable computation of costs for producers.

This matter was mentioned in the agriculture committee hearings. The communication went on to say:

The use of the Income Tax Department as an administration mechanism should be examined since it could be more efficient and reduce administration costs—

Right now, western resources and resourceful westerners are keeping this country afloat. As I said before, grain export sales this year will amount to over $3.5 billion, or 10 per cent of Canada's exports. If anything interrupts or shuts down the flow of this commodity, the Canadian dollar would be devalued overnight. The word I hear from agricultural producers in my constituency is, "Please do not help us any more with government stabilization plans because they do not seem to have served any useful purpose in western Canada." Actually, since the government introduced its so-called stabilization plan we have seen more violent fluctuations in cattle prices than ever before.

Very simply, grain producers need some means, in years of high income, of deferring tax-free money to an individual, registered stabilization fund. This money could be withdrawn in years of low income. Grain producers already are given the privilege of deferring grain sales from one year to the next. I suggest that this program could well be expanded and money paid to farmers on their deferred grain sales should earn interest. There is a need, in the agricultural industry of Canada from coast to coast, for a type of vehicle through which individuals or corporations whose primary business is that of agriculture can be encouraged to save funds, avoid incurring an income tax liability of abnormal proportions in good years and defer those liabilities to bad years. The present system of taxation permits some relief to this end but does not go far enough. As well, it gives an inducement to save. At present, if the individual has a bad year he is allowed to back-average and thus obtain some relief. The problem with this is purely a matter of timing. By the time the individual has received the effect of the carry-back, he may well be through his next year.

We need a plan which would allow an individual to build up a cash reserve, through an individual, registered stabilization fund, which would allow him to have an even flow of cash income and taxable income over the years. The plan would be a self-administered, to be set up within existing government regulations, namely tax legislation, and would not require any red-tape commission to administer it. The government should allow an individual or corporation whose primary business is that of farming to acquire a deposit certificate at any chartered bank, credit union, trust company or treasury branch. The amount of the individual fund deposit should not be greater than 75 per cent of the gross sales of agricultural products, grain, cattle, etc., for the year in question.

The advantages of this type of self-administered program would be these. Producers would save dollars and increase the reserves in our banking system. Producers would spend dollars on a more systematic basis. The program would cause the feast or famine syndrome afflicting farmers to vanish. Finally, the program could be set up at no cost to the taxpayer. Such a program would help to smooth out the economic situation of farmers and the feast or famine situation of the entire Canadian economy, in which I include farm equipment manufacturing, and so on.

The strength of our grain exports is no illusion. These exports are a real and growing force in international relations. They must be used with skill to establish a healthy trading relationship between Canada and the rest of the world. Instead of continually dealing with symptoms, the government should put much more effort into this particular area of endeavour. I have put forward one proposal and the hon. member for Moose Jaw made two others. I hope the government will consider them seriously.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed stabilization a number of times in the House in the last five years, always with the hope that we could develop a system which would stabilize the income of farmers producing a certain commodity and allow them at least to regain their costs of production plus a reasonable return. Canadian farmers have watched with keen interest the machinations of federal and provincial governments with respect to stabilization. Last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said that the government had introduced stabilization legislation this year to cover specific commodities. He went on to say:

Stability for the producer will be reflected in stable production and stable prices for consumers. There are many ways, some major and some minor, to bring about this stability. One major advance was the recently passed amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Effective stabilization legislation encourages rational production decisions. A prairie grain market insurance plan will also help.

His statement is undated, but I think it is safe to assume he made it before the agriculture committee last Tuesday. The bill before us is not a grain marketing insurance plan.

It is complex and is not well understood by most. It will, at best, produce a levelling-off of losses that may flow from the cash flow position of farmers when there is a decrease in certain categories of the grain production industry in western Canada. This bill is difficult to understand. I pointed this out to my colleague who is very interested in the English language. He often refers to the fact that when I first came here I used long sentences.

● (1420)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: They began, went off at an angle and came back to the original thought. I thought they were in fact clauses which were at least related to the subject. I will read just one sentence from the bill in order to show the difficulty of the farmer. I trust this is not in conflict with the rules.

(4) For the purpose of determining the adjusted marketing to production ratio referred to in paragraph (1) (b) for a year under review, the minister shall

(a) make the following calculation in respect of each of wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax seed and rapeseed:

(i) divide the actual aggregate number of bushels of such grain produced in the designated area and sold by all producers in the year under review by the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield for such grain for the five years immediately preceding the year under review;

(ii) divide the difference obtained by subtracting

(A) the opening inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain for the year under review, determined as being the closing inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain for the year immediately preceding the year under review, determined in December of that immediately preceding year,

from

(B) the closing inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain determined in December of the year under review, by the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield of such grain for the five years immediately preceding the year under review;

(iii) multiply the number of acres on which such grain is seeded in the designated area in the year under review by the difference obtained by subtracting

(A) the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield for such grain for the year under review

from

(B) the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield for such grain for the five years immediately preceding the year under review, and divide the product so obtained in respect of such grain by the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield for such grain for the five years immediately preceding the year under review;

(b) add the eighteen quotients obtained pursuant to subparagraphs (a) (i), (ii) and (iii); and

(c) divide the sum obtained pursuant to paragraph (b) by the number of acres on which grain is seeded in the designated area in the year under review.

That is one sentence, Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to explain it. Possibly Your Honour might like to interpret what it means. In any event, there will be some difficulty. That sentence is not going to help the average farmer in this country to use the average over the five years, and so on. The average farmer is interested in two things. He would like to ascertain how much production he should have, how much acreage he should sow, and whether he should go with one commodity or another. Second, he wants to know what the market price will be.

For him to be successful in meeting his commitment both to this nation and to the consumers of this nation, he has to produce enough to cover any disaster that may occur from year to year, something that is not covered under the umbrella of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act of which we are disposing. He will have to take into consideration the weather, yield and protein quotient in his production. He must do this knowing that he will be able to pay for the production expenses that he incurs. Secondly, when he reaps his harvest he wants to be assured of a relatively stable market and a price that will pay for his production and provide him and his family with a decent standard of living. That is fairly simple.

We are not asking for very much. Agriculture is a very important part of our production and export market. As stated by other ministers, Canada must be committed to helping those parts of the world which do not have enough production to feed themselves. The Canadian grain market has an immense role to play, and this can only be done when there is stability. Anyone the least bit interested in food production is aware of the need to establish a market price that will pay for the cost of production. Second, we must meet the commitment that we make as a nation to export to those countries not able to produce the required amounts of protein.

Everyone agrees that we must have some stability. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said that during the recession in 1961 it was western grain production that enabled Canada to get back on the road to recovery. By exporting large quantities of grain we were able to bring in hard cash. Hon. members will recall that many sales were made to countries not normally within our wheat trading bloc, such as Russia, and payments were made in gold. That currency was desperately needed at the time. It played a major role in our recovery in that recession.

There is likely to be little disagreement among farmers and Canadians in general that food production, cereal grains in particular, must play an important and ever-increasing role in Canadian agriculture. In order for that to be possible, we have to ensure that we will be able to sell our products at reasonable prices. It is my feeling that if we were to add the commodities which come under the Wheat Board to those which already come under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, and put the whole thing back under the control of the Minister of Agriculture as it used to be, we would find that the farmers in western Canada would receive a much more reasonable return for their money than they are likely to receive from the legislation before us today.

The reason the government has not acted along these lines is simple. Income stabilization plans have the potential of costing a lot of money, especially if we cannot ensure that production is related to sales prospects. The government might well be placed in a position of having to act as a buying agency at 80 per cent of the average price in the preceding five years. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this might not be a bad idea. I have for years been interested in the Biblical parable, or maybe it was a Biblical historical fact—my knowledge of the Bible is not that good but I remember the story—or I could certainly consult some of my hon. friends; we have them from all faiths, Baptists, Anglicans, Catholics—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the originals and the aboriginals.

Mr. Peters: And the originals and the aboriginals, in the theological sense. But it would seem to me that the story of Egypt, where they prepared for ten bad years by collecting the harvest of ten good years, was not more applicable in Egypt than it is today in the modern world of 1975. We have been lucky in Canada, but they have not been so lucky in other parts of the world. There is a surplus in Canada of many cereal commodities and the price is such that many Canadians overeat, particularly in the field of cereals. At the same time, there are others across the world who are badly in need of the protein in our cereal products but who are unable to get it.

I see nothing wrong with the establishment by the Government of Canada of a granary which would provide for the needs both of this country and for our commitments to the rest of the world over a ten-year period. To accomplish this we would have to store grain, though not, as now, at the expense of the farmer. The farmer is already doing this to some extent. If he depended for storage on the Wheat Board and the grain commissioners, we would be disappointed; we would find that there is very little grain stored in the elevators. There is no grain held in the federally-controlled elevators at Moose Jaw and Lethbridge—they are trying to give away those facilities. Most of the grain presently in storage is held either on the farm or in private grain elevators. I presume there is less than a year's supply. Yet we have done nothing as a nation to provide a world food bank to demonstrate in a practical way our wish to help the hungry people of the world.

I suggest that if we were to substitute for the bill before us an agricultural stabilization bill, we would find, in paying 80 per cent of the five-year average, that we might in the foreseeable future be buying stocks of grain and building up a reserve sufficient to establish a barrier against disasters which might occur not only here but in countries abroad.

It seems to me that in any measures taken to stabilize agriculture we must keep in mind the moral commitment made by the Minister of Agriculture at the international food and agriculture organization. We are under a moral obligation to provide the facilities necessary to maintain basic supplies of commodities which we grow in great abundance. No one, it seems to me, disagrees with the idea of stabilizing farm income. If farm income is not stable, it is likely to be difficult to keep people on the farm.

Some hon. members on the other side seem to think the farmers of western Canada are very well off. Some of them think they all have planes and Cadillacs, or both. That really is not true. We have seen many economic disasters in western Canada, and laws have been passed to protect the farmers so that the mortgage holders do not walk off with the actual facilities for agricultural production. We have had our ups and downs. Weather conditions have been severe, and though they have not been so severe in the past few years in Canada, that is not the case as far as the rest of the world is concerned. So there is no argument that stabilization is necessary.

The bill which is now before us has been presented on a number of other occasions in slightly different forms. It has been called Bill C-74—

Mr. Mazankowski: The old number was C-71.

Mr. Peters: One simple proposition would be to refer this measure to the farmers and find out what they think of it. When the committee went to the farmers with this bill there was no support for it in any of the provinces affected. It is true that in some of the provinces there was not much objection, but that was because farmers really did not think it would make much difference one way or the other. I suggest that the formula being used is so complicated that farmers cannot reasonably be asked to decide whether they are in favour of the bill or not. It is for this reason farmers have been slow in making up their minds whether or not they want to participate in the scheme.

As the minister says, you can check into it or you can check out of it. There are some restrictions, of course, and there have to be otherwise big farmers would take advantage of the scheme by entering when the cost was not high and taking the benefit when the cost was high. It is very doubtful whether there will be widespread and continued support for the legislation. My recommendation is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who is piloting the legislation through the House, should be prepared to discuss the matter with the farmers at the Outlook Conference being held in Ottawa next week. He should be prepared to make this a major topic. I have seen the agenda, and it is not on the agenda. If the Federation of Agriculture and representative of other farm organizations who will be attending the conference agree that should certain changes be made they are prepared to support these proposals, then I would not be opposed to the passage of the legislation. The last time the Federation of Agriculture discussed this question they put forward a couple of very important suggestions. These are as follows:

1. An assessment be made of the position of the sector by the Stabilization Board and discussed in depth with producer representatives for that sector. It should be required that part of this assessment be an examination of production costs in the industry. The development of the necessary statistics and information, and conceptual basis, for such an examination of cost of production should be subject producers.

2. Following producer consultation, the government be required to issue a statement of its plans and programs for the stabilization of the industry, both for the production period immediately ahead and in an intermediate term context. This announcement should include an assessment of the industry position and outlook, relating this assessment to the stabilization program and plan in terms of the adequacy of that program to ensure stability and a fair level of producer returns. In such a statement stabilization policy per se should be related to other policies and programs, federal and provincial. The stabilization program and plans should contain within it, provisions for necessary adjustments in the target level of returns in the program in response to increases in producer costs and the rates of inflation in the economy, during the production period.

These producer consultations on a commodity basis should be preceded by at least one intensive and comprehensive producer-government examination of the state of the industry, involving provincial governments as well as producers, in which commodity inter-relationships could be examined and the industry situation discussed in relation to an over-all look at trade developments, the general state of the economy and any other relevant considerations.

Stabilization policy should, in short, be handled in such a way that first of all its central focus should be the income adequacy objective. Moreover the planning of stabilization policy should be integrated into an over-all process of improved industry organization and planning (whether such plans be detailed and regulatory, or broad and directional only).

What that says, Mr. Speaker, is that the farmers, the farm organizations, the provincial governments and the federal government should examine stabilization and develop realistic policies to determine how much of any given commodity should be produced, how the costs of the commodity are divided, and the regional difference in cost due to size of production, distance from market and so on, is split. We must then reassess the needs of the industry in terms of production quotas. Then, and only then, can we establish some long-term and short-term directives to deal with the immediate situation as well as the long term.

Anyone who knows anything at all about agriculture will know that during recent months much attention has been focused on the egg marketing legislation. Consumers and consumers' representatives have been making a lot of fuss about producers asking for too much for their eggs. The argument rages between whether his costs are short-term or he has to lengthen the period of time for which he sets his price, ignoring some of the temporary ups and downs so far as production costs are concerned.

Consumers' representatives have been saying that their costs should be reflected immediately in consumer prices. The producer argues that he is not able to do this on a short-term basis. We have all witnessed the fighting that has gone on between Mrs. Plumptre of the Food Prices Review Board and the Minister of Agriculture. She was questioning the increase of a cent a dozen the same week that the international market for feed grains was dropping. Actually, the price has now dropped and the price of feed grains is fluctuating from day to day, so it may well be that the board will not be able to equalize production costs over the short term.

There are both short-term and long-term objectives to be considered, but it seems to me that in order to eliminate this kind of fluctuation we should first of all keep a healthy, stable agricultural industry in place, we should provide the Canadian public with first-class agricultural commodities at reasonable prices, and we should begin to meet our commitments to those in the international community who are experiencing shortages of both protein and cereals. We have not faced up to our obligation in this regard, and we have not done so for the simple reason that we have not established the capacity to store Canadian grain for future sale.

Once more we have a surplus of powdered milk. At the same time there is a shortage of cheese, butter and fluid milk in Canada. As far as the dairy industry is concerned, the best way it can contribute to the international demand for food is by supplying milk powder, which can be easily transported, distributed without refrigeration and does not need special care. What is more, it does not cost countries less fortunate than we are very much to buy it. This surplus in powdered milk has caused the price of industrial milk to drop.

A few years ago the Minister of Transport introduced a program that paid the farmers to take land out of production. The LIFT program lifted agricultural land out of production because we said that we did not need it. After but one year the price of grain went from $1.75 for No. 1 Northern wheat to $5.95. This suggests to me that the statistics on which the minister has based this legislation are totally inadequate. The government is not setting the right criteria or being of much value in bringing about stability of supply of any given commodity.

We should establish, first of all, how much of our land in this country is suitable for agricultural production. Surely without much difficulty we can stabilize the two standards of land values being used in this country. In Ontario we start with number one land as the best for agricultural production, and as I understand it you could not possibly farm anything less than about number five land in western Canada. It seems they start out backwards to us, or perhaps the other way around. In any event, it seems very simple for the agricultural department to provide one set of standards to be used in Ontario and in all other parts of Canada. In that event, land valued as number five in Saskatchewan would be the same as land valued as number five in Ontario.

My understanding is that something less than one-seventh of the land in Canada is arable, and only about one-fifth is suitable for agricultural production. Perhaps we should have a new land survey in order to determine the exact amount of land in Canada that is suitable for agricultural purposes. The minister of agriculture in the days when ARDA was first brought in, now the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), suggested at the time that we should catalogue or assess the value of land in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) rises on a point of order.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I raise this point only to call the hon. member's attention to the fact he may unintentionally be misleading the House by his statement in respect of standardized land values. These lands are standardized all across the country under the Canada land inventory. I fully agree with the hon. member's main point, but I know he would not want to leave us with the impression that number one land in Ontario does not have the same standard as number one land out west. The standards are common to the whole country.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's point is well taken, but we had quite a discussion with some of the western members the other day about land values and some of them indicated that number five land in western Canada has a potential for agricultural production, but number five land in Ontario is rocky and will produce nothing but trees. I am told that the best land in western Canada is rated as number nine or number ten. In Ontario this is the reverse, and number one is the best land.

Mr. O'Connell: It is the same out west.

Mr. Peters: If that is the case, then some of the western farmers were confused.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no.

Mr. Peters: During that discussion I understood we were not talking about the same thing because of different designations. The only point I was making is that the federal government should standardize in respect of land values so that everyone will be talking about the same thing. The situation now confuses the general public as to what kind of land is available. The general public is confused as to the agricultural potential. We, as Canadians, have always said that we can double or triple our agricultural production by doing all sorts of things. I am not sure that we cannot, but I am not sure how far we can go.

Ontario has been referred to as a leader in the field of developing new crops and improving old ones. We in Ontario have been able to develop strains of cereal grains that require a growing season of only 80 days, compared to the old growing season in the range of 105 to 110 days. I understand that some grains require an even shorter growing season. We have done a very good job in developing new strains, which may result in doubling the amount of land suitable for agricultural production. I sometimes think that we in this country have to be convinced that we need a heathy agricultural industry. Once we have been convinced, we should then know how much the land will produce and how much subsidization this production requires. Agriculture in every country in the world is subsidized to some degree.

Our crops take a great deal out of the land and this has to be put back before additional crops can be produced. We only follow that procedure if the price of the crop is sufficient to provide a reasonable return, while covering the cost of fertilizers that put back the minerals and the other necessary things into the land. So far we are only doing this when the price is high. When the price is not high enough to cover the cost of production, these essential ingredients are not returned to the soil. Some lands in Canada are entirely dependent for production on the fertilizers and other things that are put back into them. It is fine for the Minister of Agriculture to travel to the World Food Agency in Rome, making the statement that we will give a certain value in agricultural commodities to the world. We can do this, but only if we know how much we can produce. It seems that we can only do this if prices are such that we can afford to continue putting back into the land what we take out. In this way we can make the maximum use of land available. Once we are able to do that we will be able to meet these commitments.

I disagree with the legislation before us because it contains the phrase "stabilization of income," and starts out by saying it will stabilize net proceeds from the production and sale of western grains, and then refers to certain amendments to statutes as a consequence. Most farmers do not believe this bill will meet net proceeds. This whole thing involves a very complicated production formula which cannot be applied, as this bill intends, to very large areas. Agricultural production in western Canada has historically shown that the net proceeds in one township can vary vastly from the net proceeds in the next township. This has been true in areas where there are such things as hail, grasshoppers and other natural disasters. Often one township is affected and the next one is not.

My colleague pointed out how ridiculous this proposal may be when related to a total drop in one large area. Let us say there was some difficulty in an area, perhaps not in the way of a natural disaster but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I would not want to take advantage of the generosity of hon. members in this way, Mr. Speaker, as I know I would not be given the extra time if I asked for it. I do not wish to abuse their courtesy. I would conclude by saying that the farmers and the provinces have not been consulted. The opportunity is available to the government on December 17 at the Outlook Conference to be held in Ottawa to explain this proposal. Representatives of the provinces will be together at that conference, as will farm representatives and representatives from all segments of the economy.

It seems to me that stabilization is not just a western problem, but a problem that affects all Canadians. This affects all our food sources and, more important, it affects the agricultural industry whether in the production of grain or something else.

It has been suggested by some persons recently that farmers should go into the production of pigs. I shudder every time I hear an official make a statement that we should move into something that we are not in now when there appears to be a shortage. That was the case in respect of the cow-calf situation. The producers could not obtain enough money from the calf to keep the cow for a year. There now is a suggestion that they should go into the production of pork.

Every housewife knows that the price of bacon and pork is increasing very rapidly. If producers went into the production of pork they would find themselves in a great deal of trouble. If they went into the production of pork today they would be victims of the fluctuations in the grain market, which are quite sizeable and regular. Anyone who went into this on the basis of the price of pork today, I think would find that as the number of pigs increases the market will not be there. The price normally is 50 per cent of the price of beef. I do not think anyone in this country who really looks at the situation would be stupid enough to believe that one could produce pork today at half the price of beef.

All segments are being affected by the stabilization in any one field. I would suggest to the Minister of Transport responsible for this bill that he not stand on his principle, but rather look at the economics of the proposition he is putting forward. I think he should ask for the advice of the farmers and should discuss this matter at the Outlook conference. Then perhaps we would come back in the next session and find that this bill would have a different number and be a different bill, under which it would be easier to operate, and which would be easier to understand.

I would hope then we would have a bill which would go much further toward developing stability of the net income of producers and which would go some way in helping develop a national and international market for Canadians in respect of a product which I think can have increased production, and which would undoubtedly have a major impact on our economy.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been the usual consultation through the usual channels and at this time I would propose to move the adjournment of the debate in the hope that, after dealing with relatively non-contentious bills, we might be able to return to Bill C-41. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay):

That the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the order in which we propose to deal with the bills would be first Bill C-75, second Bill C-78, third Bill C-28, and fourth Bill-21.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES IMPROVEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE RATE OF RETURN ON GOVERNMENT ANNUITY CONTRACTS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-75, an act to increase the rate of return on government annuity contracts, to increase their flexibility and to discontinue future sales thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Andras moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will not take very much time on this matter. As we all know this is a non-controversial bill but I think I should commend the government for bringing in this legislation. The government, of course, should be criticized for the length of time it took in awakening to the problems that have been encountered as a result of the low rate of interest.

I think this bill serves three purposes. It attempts to solve the problem related to the low rate of interest. Second, I think it adds flexibility in that the governor in council can either lower or raise the rate of return. I understand it does not move in terms of allowing the rate to be lower than that which was originally applicable. The third matter involves the discontinuance of sales because the government, in its wisdom believes that the sales of these annuities has served its purpose. The government believes that the annuities have been superseded by retirement plans in the private sector.

Dealing with the first point I am amazed that the rate of interest encompassed by the legislation is only 7 per cent when we are talking now of an inflationary rate of around 11 per cent. One can see that the purchasing power has been eroded by some 3 per cent or 4 per cent. I am not talking about indexing in this bill, but I am saying that the government should have appreciated the circumstances which exist in terms of hardship when we look at a 7 per cent rate in respect of this bill compared to the inflation rate of 11 per cent.

My second point concerns the discontinuance of sales. The act was first introduced in 1908. The House leader of the New Democratic Party says that the bill was born at the same time he was. I think that is a commendable situation. It shows how long that member has been in and around this House and that since birth he has been interested in pension schemes. He still is. In terms of reviewing his concern in this area may I say that the bill was brought in primarily to give people the idea that thrift is a necessity in our way of life and that they should put something away for their old age. If those principles are still applicable the government should accept that.

Perhaps these sales have to be discontinued because there has not been sufficient promotion and because the rate of return is simply disgraceful. I respectfully submit that the private sector has not in fact taken over the necessary pension schemes that workers should have in Canada. The latest statistics in this area, taken in 1970, indicate that almost 7 per cent of the people employed by private companies are not receiving coverage. Therefore I take a very dim view of the government indicating that we will now get rid of this annuity contract, which in effect is a pension scheme, because the private sector has taken it over in a satisfactory way.

These are the only comments I have. My colleague, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), will be our only speaker following me with respect to this matter. We appreciate the fact that the government has brought in this bill and we appreciate the thinking behind it, but at the same time we say the government should be chastised for taking so long to realize that such a step was required.

In its recent report the Canadian Council on Social Development criticized the attitude taken by the government in stating, that the private sector has taken over in this respect. It stated that the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec pension plan have been downgraded so that the private sector could carry on, and it has reached the conclusion that there has been a dismal failure in that regard.

The Montreal Gazette of November 27 reported the following in an article:

The Canada and Quebec plans should be given the central role in the over-all pension system, it argues. They are popular, straightforward, universal, portable, secure, looked upon as faithful friends by many workers and have the "tremendous advantage" of being indexed upward with the cost of living.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although the answers we received when we were in the standing committee on this bill did not completely satisfy us, the fact is that we did get our questions answered. I think it is appropriate for me to say that we had a very good discussion of this bill at that stage. Accordingly I do not think it is necessary for us to extend the debate at third reading. Indeed we are prepared to give our endorsation to the bill.

I would be less than human if I did not thank the hon. member who has preceded me for referring to the fact that the act itself was debated in the House of Commons on the very day that I was born. So I suppose my interest in matters relating to pensions can be identified as a lifelong interest.

It is true that we would like to have seen improvements of even a better one, particularly with respect to a greater rate of interest, and there are one or two other things that might have been done, but on the whole we think it is a good bill. I may say that the amendments that were made in the committee at the instigation of the government also improved the bill.

My only other comment is in the same area in which comments were made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), namely, with respect to the old age security picture as a whole. I think it is timely that the Canadian Council on Social Development produced its voluminous report a short while ago on the state of retirement pensions in this country, and I think it is particularly relevant that in that report emphasis is placed on the need to extend the role of the Canada Pension Plan in the retirement security of our people.

I had to say in the committee that I did not agree with the statement made in the name of the minister that private pension plans have taken over the role of extra security for our people. The fact that so few contracts under the government annuity system are now being purchased is due, I think, more to the fact that we have the Old Age Security Act, and the Canada Pension Plan now, which of course had not even been thought of when this legislation was introduced back in 1908.

But the report to which both the previous speaker and I have referred is, in my view, dead on when it urges a review of our whole retirement policy, and particularly in its urging that the Canada Pension Plan be enlarged so that adequate security will really be available to all our people, not just to those who can purchase supplemental benefits, whether from government or private sources. This is a measure of the progress that we made in these 67 years. All that parliament could do 67 years ago was to provide, under government auspices, a means whereby those who could afford it could do something about their old age. We have moved from that to the point where we realize that it is our social responsibility to see that something is done under the aegis of the government for the adequate retirement and adequate security of all our older people.

One thing I do not like happening is to see something taken away before something else has been put in its place. The something else that should be in place of this plan is a greatly enlarged Canada Pension Plan which provides much more than the 25 per cent pension that it now provides.

I hope that this action, together with a study of the volume produced by the Canadian Council on Social Development, will lead to early legislation along the lines suggested in that document. For the moment, however, we are prepared to give our support to the passing of this bill.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very brief comment on the government annuity bill, C-75, at its third reading. As the two members who have preceded me indicated, I feel it is a very worthwhile bill. My particular interest stems from the fact that I happen to be one of those contract holders, and have been for quite a number of years, although not nearly as far back as the first speaker, and I have a personal interest which provokes these remarks.

I am particularly concerned with the retroactive date of April, 1975, and I would like to suggest that the government has in fact admitted the inadequacy of its annuity policy by the very fact of bringing in this bill to which we are now giving third reading. I am critical only of the retroactive date, and I suggest that surely it could have been at least one year earlier, and I say this very sincerely. I raised this point in committee, and the chairman of the committee in response to my question stated that the only reason they did not make it go back to an earlier date was the cost, which would amount to $38 million for the year.

I suggest that when these contracts were taken out in the earlier days—in my case it was around 1940—they were considered a very good, solid, long-term investment. There was no high powered sales job done at that time to encourage people to buy government investments. They were considered a really good investment. Over the last few years I have received, as I am sure other members have, many complaints from constituents about the low rate of return on these contracts. I can appreciate the need to phase out this policy, but I think the government might have been a little more considerate of the people who bought a contract and supported the government in their own way, and who now have such a low rate of return.

I wanted to put those views on the record, but in spite of that I certainly support this type of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister is seeking the floor at this time, and this being a third reading motion he can only speak with the unanimous consent of the House because of the fact that he has moved the motion. Does the minister have the consent of the House to seek the floor at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong the debate, but I do want to express my appreciation to hon.

members on all sides of the House for the co-operation they have offered and displayed in getting this important and rather happy piece of legislation through so expeditiously.

I particularly want to thank my parliamentary secretary for appearing for me before the standing committee, and I was glad to hear from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the answers to the questions, if not totally satisfactory, were sincerely and forthrightly given. Again I wish to thank the House for its co-operation in this matter.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HALIFAX RELIEF COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL ACT AND TO AUTHORIZE CONTINUATION OF PENSIONS PAID BY COMMISSION

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-78, to repeal an act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it may seem strange to most hon. members that before this parliament winds up its normal course in a couple of years time, the great explosion which shook the city of Halifax will at that time have been 60 years in our past. At that time, with the present rate mortality among those receiving help under the Halifax Relief Commission, it is likely that there will still be some four dozen people benefiting from the activities of the commission.

I do not propose to detain the House long with my contribution. It represents the distillation of consultation between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who is the hon. member for Halifax, and myself, on the few points we would like to make, and I think these are points which can usefully be answered in committee.

Four of these points actually come to my mind. The first is that under the new set up one should be alert to ensure that the pensions provide are adequate. Our understanding is that they are really based on the same circumstances as if these people had been injured in the front lines of the first world war, but whatever the formula it should certainly provide quick and adequate remedies for those who receive the pensions.

The second point is that upon this change being made there should be a review of the scale of pensions being offered.

The third point is that the machinery, which is going from a set-up where pensioners can march down the street, as it were, and deal with people they have known for a long period of time, and which no doubt will be replaced by something else, should be equally as humane and equally as accessible.

The fourth point is really an extension of the third, and that is that the minister should set up some special telephone number or location to which the pensioners could write with their problems. I say this because the Canadian Pension Commission is probably too large a concept for these pensioners to deal with if they are trying to chase someone in the Halifax telephone book in that large section which deals with the Government of Canada. In other words, there should be some instantly accessible source to which these people can turn with their requests for the help the Halifax Relief Commission has afforded to them over the years.

Finally, when dealing with this issue it is always customary for public figures to ask what happens if there is any money left over when all the claims have been met and the last claimant has passed on. I note that the bill provides that if anything should be left over, it should go toward municipal works or municipal action in that part of Halifax which was devastated by the explosion. I have no quarrel with that concept, but I think there are too many people in Canada who have lost sight of the fact that if it had not been for the very generous contributions which came from Boston, Massachusetts, and other parts of New England, but particularly Boston—what we in the Maritimes call the Boston states—the Halifax Relief Commission would not have prospered so well over the years. The generosity of Americans to the city of Halifax in its greatest hour of need is something I personally will never forget, and I hope others will never forget either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), I believe this bill can be dealt with quickly at this stage, and I am sure it will have the support of the House. Even so, there are one or two things I should like to say, and there is one particular question I wish to pose in the hope that it can be answered at some stage. As a matter of fact if it were possible to receive the answer to the question I have in mind here on the floor, I would not object if an attempt were made to take the bill into committee of the whole house.

However, the officials who were in the gallery have disappeared, so I suppose getting an answer to my question may not—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where is everybody?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope I am not interrupting an important conversation.

Mr. Hees: We are trying to find a minister.

Mr. Fairweather: We are trying to help.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank my hon. friends who are trying to get attention to what I am saying.

Before I get to my specific question I wish to emphasize, as the previous speaker has done, that although the Halifax explosion of December 6, 1917, took place a long time ago, there are still 50 or 60 persons who are drawing pensions or assistance of one kind or another. I believe the total number of persons killed in the explosion was in the order of 1,800 and during the years some 1,250 persons have been on pensions of one kind or another.

The problem which still obtains for survivors I think is well set out in a letter which I have before me, from a correspondent of mine who was four years old when the explosion took place. That would make him about one year older than the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Although I was nine years old at the time, I remember hearing about the explosion, even away out on the west coast where we were living. I have this letter from this man who is now 62 years old and has been blind for the 58 years since the explosion took place. He says in part:

● (1530)

In discussing the events of the Halifax explosion most people find it incredible that so much suffering did occur in many of the north end Halifax families. In my immediate family my grandfather and his oldest son were killed, my grandmother lost her sight, one daughter lost her hearing plus the sight of one eye, another daughter lost a foot and the youngest son lost his sight. In my family I lost my sight and forty-six of my father's relatives, brothers, sisters, aunts and uncles, were killed.

Later in the letter he says:

Most people regard the Halifax explosion as ancient history but to me it is still very real.

The difficulty of this correspondent is that although he has been paid a pension from that fund for many years, the pension has not been increased to keep pace with the rising cost of living or the rising standard of living. It is his concern today that he should be granted a pension similar to what would have been granted, as the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants suggested, if he had been a person hurt in the front line of war. That has been the theory and rationale behind the fund, but many survivors feel that it has not been carried out. I hope that the transfer of these funds and responsibilities from the Halifax Relief Commission to the Canadian Pension Commission will not result in the books being closed.

That brings me to some particular questions I should like to hear answered in specific terms. Bill C-78 provides for the money in the fund to be turned over to the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), and for the administration of the fund to be undertaken by the Canadian Pension Commission, which also deals with the disability pensions of those who served in war. The language of the preamble includes the following words:

. . . and the Canadian Pension Commission to continue the payment of pensions, grants or allowances to those who suffered as a result of the explosion; . . .

Clause 3(2) of the bill empowers the Canadian Pension Commission to:

pay a pension, a grant or an allowance to any person who the Canadian Pension Commission determines is eligible to receive a pension, a grant or an allowance in respect of death or injury sustained in the explosion at Halifax in 1917.

What I wish to know is this: does that authority merely mean that the Canadian Pension Commission can continue to pay what has already been authorized, or will the commission be given these two other elements of authority? Will it be able to escalate pensions now being received and increase those payments where they have fallen far behind the rise in the cost of living? Second, will the Canadian Pension Commission have authority to pay a new pension or new pensions? Even after all these years, one or more of the survivors might demonstrate that there should be such a provision.

In addition, we must consider what happens to the survivors of the survivors. In the meantime, these people have married, raised families, and so on. Are they to be regarded as though they were in the front line at the time of the Halifax explosion in 1917? Will they be given that sort of treatment?

The idea of winding up the commission seems sensible. I notice that there is provision for the pensions of those who have worked on this commission. Also the idea of turning the administration over to the Canadian Pension Commission makes sense. Actually, I have received representations asking this to be done. But I want to know if the Canadian Pension Commission will simply be a bookkeeping office that carries on what has already been set out, or will it be authorized to make increases, or even, if this is called for, to provide for new pension payments.

The other point I make in passing is one to which the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants referred. What will be done with the money when the need for it ends? It seems reasonable to propose that it should then be turned back to an appropriate authority in Halifax, for the continued rehabilitation of the area of the city damaged in the 1917 Halifax explosion. As I say, I was a boy of nine at the time. I mention this, so that hon. members will not think that I am older than I really am. My family had come from Nova Scotia, but we were away on the west coast when this tragedy took place, and we were concerned.

I think it is appropriate that, many years later, we should spend this afternoon in the House of Commons recalling the suffering of those affected by the explosion and recalling, as the previous speaker did, the contributions which came in from all over Canada, New England and the United Kingdom, to help the people of Halifax in their time of need.

We support this bill gladly; if I could get an assurance that my questions will be answered I would not mind if the House went into committee of the whole to deal with the bill. But if we must send the bill to a standing committee, to get answers to questions the previous speaker and I have raised, then of course, we shall agree to that being done.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for participating in the debate and approving the intent of the bill. I share their concern for those people who have suffered these many years. As indicated earlier, some 65 people are still receiving compensation. That number, although not large, has received help from the relief fund. Over the years, hundreds have been helped. Numbers alone do not indicate the extent of the suffering of those directly involved, and of their families, for many years.

I share the concern expressed both by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre over the matter of pensions. Both hon. members were absolutely right in saying that there is to be a transfer of money and responsibility to the Minister of Finance and the Canadian Pension Commission. But nowhere in the bill do I find language suggesting the possibility of escalation or new payments. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was particularly concerned about that point, although the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants would also like to see the matter of pensions reviewed. I am wondering if this bill would permit such a review, or the inclusion of new people who are still suffering and are seeking some consideration. From my reading of the bill I am not aware of such possibilities. However, this point can best be raised in committee.

At present I cannot satisfactorily answer questions hon. members asked. I think we can address ourselves to those particular points once the bill is in committee. I therefore ask hon. members to give this bill second reading and send it to committee, where points of concern to hon. members can be resolved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND THE APPLICATION OF THE ACT

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-28, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury (for Mr. Whelan) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few comments to the House at this time on third reading of this bill to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I wish to say at the outset that I do so on behalf of the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), who is unable to be here today. I mention that because of the very excellent background work the hon. member performed which helped all members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture when they were considering this bill. Because of his background as a veterinarian I think it is appropriate that I mention the work which he did on this particular bill.

We on this side, as I am sure do most members of the House, support the bill. The only critical comment I can make is that it took the government so long to bring it to this final stage. First reading took place on October 21, 1974, well over a year ago. It is perhaps appropriate to note that this is fairly typical of the low priority given to new agricultural legislation. Perhaps we fail to appreciate the genuine importance and value of agriculture in Canada today.

The members of the standing committee certainly appreciated the work done by, and the co-operation received from the various branches of the Department of Agriculture. I mention in particular the Health of Animals Branch. This bill amends an act which is over 100 years old. By the very nature of the Contagious Diseases Act, the Health of Animals Branch must be very closely involved.

I speak with some knowledge of various cattlemen's associations across Canada. They too had the co-operation of the Health of Animals Branch with regard to the many representations they made to the department on this bill. I am sure the same applies to other branches of the Department of Agriculture.

I wish to refer to the concern of cattlemen with regard to the shipment of calves from western Canada to Ontario and points east of Montreal. After many years, this legislation will now make it legal to ship calves a little faster from western Canada by way of Winnipeg and Toronto to their final destinations, mostly in Ontario. For many years there has been an obstruction in getting calves shipped here quicker and, consequently, getting them here in a healthier condition.

At one time trainloads of cattle had to be stopped every 36 hours for a feed and rest period. Through mutual understanding, and I stress that as it involves the co-operation of the humane societies, it is now recognized that if calves can travel faster and without unnecessary stops, they can go for periods of 42 to 58 hours, and perhaps longer. The theory is that the quicker they get to their final destination, even when longer hauls are required, the better the health of the cattle will be. This legislation makes this possible. It takes the authority for those regulations out of the Department of Justice and gives it to the Department of Agriculture where it belongs.

This bill will update considerably the amount of compensation for animals that fall down on the brucellosis test. This is a very timely topic. We have heard a lot in this House and across the country about brucellosis over the past two or three years, particularly the past six months. Questions asked in the House clearly indicate there have been some problems with brucellosis.

It was reassuring to hear from the representatives of the Health of Animals Branch who appeared before the committee that progress is indeed being made. I believe more progress will be made, and possibly there will be a complete eradication of brucellosis. As this bill provides higher compensation to cattle producers, hopefully there will be better co-operation. After all, when the compensation is not very high there is a tendency not to advise the proper authorities that there may be brucellosis in the herd. Therefore this is a very forward step.

I hope this spirit of co-operation between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the various branches of his department will continue when the regulations are being drawn up. They will of course be very detailed and involved. I am sure that many agricultural commodity groups will want the opportunity to take part in a continuing discussion when the regulations are being drawn up.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that we in the official opposition clearly support this bill.

● (1550)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that there is not much time to discuss the bill before us because I think it is a very important one.

Canadians should be very proud of what we have been able to do in the one hundred years this legislation has been in existence in terms of eradicating animal diseases from the Canadian scene. I suppose it is possible to say that if Dr. Ken Wells, Veterinary Surgeon-General, had been in charge of medicine in this country over the last number of years we would have eradicated many diseases rather than having just found methods of treating them. I presume some of our major diseases would by now have come under test procedures which would enable us to discover and eliminate diseases early. I do not know whether he would have been able to arrive at suitable compensation if his work involved human beings in the same way he has been able to do it with animals. But he certainly has been successful, Mr. Speaker, and maybe we should be looking at that method of getting rid of some of the—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): You realize what he is saying, don't you?

Mr. Peters: I am aware of what is being said. I just think that we have been able to solve the problems of animals one hell of a lot better than we have with people, and it may be that it involves selective eradication rather than some of the treatment we have had.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I know some politicians who are worth more dead than alive.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, much of this bill is involved with compensation, and I suppose that if we were looking at eradication in any field that would be a factor. But I approve the suggestions which have been made and the major decision which has been made with regard to brucellosis, bearing in mind that vaccination has the unfortunate side effect of creating carriers and the knowledge that under vaccination the eradication of brucellosis will not be entirely possible. Eradication will hopefully allow us to establish completely free zones in Canada which will enable us to continue the same degree of export as has been possible over the years simply because of our control of the disease. We have controlled brucellosis, tuberculosis, and many other diseases in this way and I am pleased to see the department has now taken a look at some of the other factors which have developed involving the health of animals.

One of the major problems affecting animals has been that of safe and humane transportation. Stories have appeared in the newspapers over the last few years of cattle arriving at destinations in a very unsatisfactory condition; quite often a number had died. This matter, I believe, is to be looked after by suitable controls which are to be established.

Two other segments have been added which will put the Veterinary Surgeon-General in a position of looking after the health of human beings as well. You know, with the very poor rates of benefit being paid to some senior citizens some have felt the need to conserve their money to the extent that they have been eating food designated for animal pets, and there have been abuses of the regulations which have been in force over the years in that field. Now new regulations will be made to control that situation, not only for pets but for others who may find it more advantageous to buy pet food for human consumption than to do without entirely. The controls we are putting into the animal food compartment raise many problems that are related to this bill, but the initiative being shown by the veterinary staff in their willingness to supervise animal plant food, is to be commended.

The controls which have been extended to the rendering plants also is in the same field, since it affects human beings. There have been cases where food designated for pet food factories and rendering plants has been made into other products such as fertilizer, meal, etc. Those are now being controlled by the department and it seems to me this may eliminate, in provinces where there is no provincial control, the danger of some of the meat finding its way into human consumption. The Veterinary Surgeon-General may find himself the largest supervisor in the Olympics when he looks after the hamburger and hot dog fields. Any control which assures to Canadians that meat designated for disposal otherwise than for human consumption stays exactly in that field, which has not been the case in the past few years, is most welcome.

I concede therefore by repeating that this is a very worth-while bill. I would like to congratulate the veterinary service on the work they have done in controlling animal diseases in Canada. We have an enviable reputation, and extending their supervision into those fields where abuses have taken place in the past is worthy of support, and we certainly like to give praise where it is due.

The veterinary staff has been very competent in doing a good job on behalf of Canadians and by giving them this bill, and the increases that are made in compensation, we may ensure that progress wherever possible can be made in the control of contagious diseases. This is a field into which they themselves did not want to get, but no other national agency is controlling the rendering and pet food industry. Control will certainly be welcome there also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I wonder whether the House would give unanimous consent to the consideration at this point of Bill C-21? I believe we could handle it in three or four minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we do not see the clock and proceed immediately to the consideration of Bill C-21?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT FIXING OF INITIAL PRICE FOR PRODUCTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-21, to amend the Agricultural Products Co-Operative Marketing Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury (for Mr. Whelan) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

● (1600)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I can comply with the stipulation of the hon. member in regard to the three or four minutes, but I do want to raise one matter concerning the bill.

During the committee hearings on the bill we asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for assurances that any product that might be marketed under this act with the benefit of guaranteed loans from the government of Canada should have a price established on the basis that any provincial subsidies that might be paid by the province on the commodity in question would be deducted. The purpose, of course, was that if a producer received a loan guaranteed under the act and at the same time obtained assistance from the province in which the product was grown, it would put the producer and the co-operative associated with the producer and his product at a very distinct advantage in relation to other producers who might not get assistance for their product.

The minister gave us a clear assurance that in such cases if there were provincial assistance for the commodity in question there would be a deduction—to cite a prime example, if subsidies were paid on fertilizer. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture would the cabinet minister now responsible be prepared to confirm the statement of the Minister of Agriculture as government policy, and will he give the assurance that the act will be administered in this way, either as announced policy or by regulation, or by whatever means necessary? Since there is only one minister on the front bench, I guess I will have to ask him for that assurance.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am not on the front bench.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. McCain: I did, of course, mean the very front bench, if I may reassure the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nystrom: Are you on the front bench?

Mr. Blais: Unfortunately not, Mr. Speaker. The best reply that I can give the hon. member is that we will bring his representations to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. We cannot answer his point now. Unfortunately this is the position in which we find ourselves at the moment.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think it would satisfy the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) if one member of the committee stood up and stated that he had heard the minister make that statement in committee. That would be on the record, and I think it is the type of assurance that the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte would find acceptable.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I want to put on the record that the minister, in answering the hon. member's question in committee, did say that this would certainly be taken into consideration and that such a move would be made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I had been scheduled to proceed with a bill standing in my name under public bills, but I wonder whether there is consent in the House to deal instead with private members' private bills. If so, I would then deal with S-30, an act to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, standing in my name as well.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be difficult but I did have a discussion with the hon. member, and as I recollect it our discussions certainly did not deal with the Continental Bank. We talked about another matter. Perhaps the hon. member could clarify this and I can consent. I did give him certain undertakings, but not with respect to the Continental Bank.

Mr. Reid: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. The proposal I spoke to the hon. member about was the IAC bank. IAC is converting itself into the Continental Bank, and the title of the bill to which I referred is "An act to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada".

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Then that satisfies me. I just wanted to make sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) that instead of proceeding with public bills, specifically a bill under his name, Bill C-204, the House by unanimous consent proceed to consideration of a private bill appearing in his name, S-30, an act to incorporate the Continental Bank of Canada. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved that Bill S-30, to incorporate the Continental Bank of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the House for allowing me to proceed with this bill this afternoon; it is a courtesy I appreciate very much.

The bill before us is a complicated one, one that I believe the House and its committee will want to look at very closely. In fact as sponsor of the bill I would advise members of that committee to examine it under a very powerful microscope. The reason is that the bill takes an already existing financial institution incorporated under the various provincial laws and incorporates it into a bank, a somewhat different institution.

To my knowledge this is the first time that a retail sales finance company has attempted to convert itself into a bank. Indeed, to my knowledge, it is the first time that any other financial institution has attempted to convert itself into a bank. Consequently, because we are taking an existing business and converting it into something else, the bill provides for a series of transitional periods and alters a number of very important aspects of the Bank Act in order to transform an existing business into something else.

I do not want to describe to the House all of the exceptions that are contained in the bill, but I do want to give some brief history of the company and to indicate what are some of the changes proposed in the bill in order to convert the IAC into a chartered bank.

First of all I think it important to indicate that IAC is a Canadian institution. At one time, when it first originated, it was an American institution, but 50 years ago the American owners pulled out and a group of Canadians took it over. Under their leadership the company has prospered. At the present time some 12,000 Canadians own 96 per cent of the common shares of the company, amounting to approximately 13.5 million shares.

The business of the company is extensive. Some 65 percent is in business financing, 16 per cent in sales financing, 10 per cent in consumer loans, and 9 per cent in residential mortgages. I think it important to recognize that a substantial portion of IAC's present business is in areas covered by chartered banks at the present time. In point of fact 70 per cent of the assets of IAC result from activities which are normally considered to be the preserve of the chartered banks in Canada.

It is also important to realize that IAC is a financial institution of substantial size. According to the figures I have here IAC with assets of $2,139.5 million ranks 11th in size among Canadian financial institutions, with an equity base of $203.6 million. When one is looking at institutions that are larger one finds names such as the Royal Bank of Canada, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Toronto-Dominion Bank,Banque Canadienne Nationale, the Royal Trust Company, Banque Provinciale du Canada, the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation, and the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, then followed by IAC, with the 12th on the list being General Motors Acceptance Corporation of Canada, Limited, which has its indebtedness guaranteed by U.S. parent corporations.

When we are dealing with IAC we are dealing with an organization that is indeed of some considerable size. It is quite clear that if the bank does obtain its charter it will have a substantial chance of being able to provide services across the country. IAC carries on business now at 270 locations in all ten provinces and the Yukon. It employs 2,800 people at those locations, and has four divisional headquarters at Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver.

There are a number of changes or exceptions to the Bank Act which are being proposed under this bill. I think it only fair to indicate to the House what some of those exceptions are; exceptions which I am sure the House will want to examine. For example, Section 7(3) allows a period of two years for full compliance with Section 18 of the Bank Act prescribing qualifications of directors. The Bank Act prohibits directors of banks, deposit-taking institutions and similar financial organizations from being directors of another bank. Ten out of the 19 directors of IAC fall into this category. For sound practical and financial reasons, IAC has requested this two-year period to permit the orderly phasing out of these ten directors. This is a question I think the committee will want to investigate quite carefully.

Another section the committee may want to look at is Section 15(4), which permits a four-year period within which shareholders holding more than the 10 per cent maximum permitted by the Bank Act would be allowed to continue to hold and vote their shares. At the present time there is only one shareholder who fits into this category, but again this is something that members may want to look at; that is, a means of easing the financial difficulties of transferring substantial numbers of shares from one shareholder to others.

There are also other questions I think the committee will want to look at, particularly Section 18(11) which deals with the relationship between the Continental Bank and IAC Limited during the transitional period. Both institutions would be in existence during this transitional period while Continental is being built up by the infusion of assets from IAC, and IAC in turn is being run down.

I do not want to take more time going into the details of the bill except to indicate to hon. members in all fairness that it is most complex, dealing with a very complex subject. The details of the bill have been worked out by the company and by officials of the government, particularly those responsible for administering the Bank Act and for supervising the activities of banks.

I want to say one of the things that interests me about this project is the fact that it is complicated and that it will provide an opportunity for the House of Commons to look at the difficulties and the potential of banking financial institutions in Canada moving from one agency into another. This will allow the House of Commons to deal with this question of setting its own guidelines on the form it would like to see for such conversions in the future, if indeed the House makes that decision. I hope the committee will be able to give careful consideration to this proposal. It is a worth-while proposal, one which I commend to the House and the committee. I hope it will result in the development by the House of a policy to deal with situations like this in future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Paproski: You sure did well yesterday in Vancouver. Tell us about British Columbia, Lorne.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) get up and tell us all about his new Social Credit membership card and his new party alliance. I would remind him that the Social Credit party will be holding a national leadership convention very soon and I am sure he would make an acceptable candidate for that job. In fact he would go over very well. He would fit right into the mainstream of that new, grand alliance in the province of British Columbia.

I would like to say a word or two about the bill before us today.

An hon. Member: Get back to the heady, high financial aspects.

Mr. Nystrom: The idea occurred to me last night when I heard the results coming in about the new alliance in British Columbia that perhaps the day had come when the Liberal and Conservative parties in the House should move to make the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) the Prime Minister, formalizing the alliance federally as well as in the province of British Columbia.

The bill before us today is one that once again deals with banking. Let me comment at the outset that there are a lot of questions to be answered here that none of us can answer. As the parliamentary secretary has said, this is a new endeavour which is going in a new direction. This step will make the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, with assets of $2.1 billion, as referred to by the parliamentary secretary, the new Continental Bank.

I do not see the need for any more privately owned banks in this country, and I hesitate to change the rules of banking until we have had a chance to study the changes during the decennial review of the Bank Act in 1977. For reasons of that kind I do not really think we should be in a hurry to get this bill through the House. I realize this bill is going to raise a lot of questions and, therefore, I have no opposition to referring it to the standing committee. I look forward to discussing the bill in the committee with the parliamentary secretary and other members. Hopefully we can learn a lot from that study and make some decisions that will help us in reviewing the Bank Act in 1977.

As I said yesterday, or the day before in the House, I would like to take a whole new look at financial institutions in terms of making them publicly owned institutions. To me the banks and financial institutions have a tremendous say in what happens in this country. They have an awful lot of economic clout. They work in many cases hand in hand with multi-national corporations, and they have objectives and priorities that are based along the same lines as those of large corporations. They are profit and corporate motivated, and I think that is wrong.

I would like to see a big bank in this country owned by all the people of Canada, operated as a public utility or a publicly owned institution. That is the direction I think we should be going. Therefore I do not feel any need to co-operate in the formation of a new bank.

I do not want at this time to hold up the bill. I should like to see it get to the committee in order that we might have a chance to ask a lot of questions, and a chance to offer some amendments. In this way we might have a real chance to find out the purpose of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation in wanting to make this move. There are a lot of questions to which I want answers. I want to know who the primary stockholders are; who owns the corporation, and who sits on the board of directors. I want to know what positions they hold with other banks and other financial institutions. In addition, I want to know who they have in the Senate; are there any senators who sit on the board of directors of this company?

Once again I note that this is a bill which originates in the other place. I have said in the House before, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said on many occasions, I do not see the need for the existence of the other place, and to me it is a slight to see a bill originating in or introduced by the other place. That is not a democratic institution, but one that we think should not exist. It is a place I think has many conflicts of interest, particularly when it comes to a financial bill or a bank bill. Many of those people sitting in the other place are sitting or have sat on the boards of directors of many financial institutions or banks, dealing with bills concerning banking. To me that is a gross conflict of interest. I think this House should deal with all bills that come before us in a public sense, particularly those that deal with banks and financial institutions.

As I say, I do not want to hold the bill up. I am looking forward to dealing with it in the committee, if it goes to the committee, as I look forward to dealing with similar bills involving banking and financial institutions that come before this House in the years ahead.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that it seems to be the view of the House that this bill should be sent to the committee.

I agree there are certain clauses of the bill which require careful scrutiny by the Committee. I also agree there should not be provisions in the bill if, as, and when it finally passes which I expect it will, which amount to exceptions to the Bank Act other than exceptions of a transitional nature demanded by the particular situation. I would agree that changes of a permanent nature in respect of the Bank Act should be made in the course of a review of that act.

Generally I favour incorporation of an additional bank. I would have to disagree with my hon. friend in the New Democratic Party who just spoke. I think the more competition there is in the banking business of this country the better. I think there should be more sources of financial credit available to Canadian individuals and Canadian businesses, large and small. The hon. member also indicated a desire that Canadian banks be publicly owned. I do not want to provoke an argument at this stage on Friday afternoon but I suggest to him that times have passed him by, that he has been by-passed by developments in advanced theory.

I think it is now pretty well agreed in most countries that ownership does not give control. I do not wish to push the argument too far, but I would ask the hon. gentleman to reflect on how much control there is by Canadians over the Bank of Canada or the Canadian National Railways. I understand, for example, that in Great Britain the government has been able to exercise virtually any degree of control it wishes over private enterprise but finds itself almost completely helpless in controlling or operating the enterprises it owns. I suggest it is high time there was a little re-thinking done about how the public maintains most effective control where it is necessary, and perhaps a little examination of whether it is not considerably a myth to think that ownership by a government as such really provides the people with any meaningful degree of control over large companies. However, I do not rise to provoke an argument. I am just trying to do my little bit in educating a younger member of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Another younger member.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not informed long enough in advance that we would be considering this bill today; it was determined only this afternoon. I do not intend for my part to object to this bill being referred to committee for consideration. This bill I am sure deserves lengthy consideration. The Social Credit Party of Canada is reluctant with respect to the Canadian monetary system. That does not mean that we have something against banks or bank owners but we do have something against the legislation which allows banks to create and control credit in Canada. The leader of the opposition said earlier that having more chartered banks would allow a better control to be exercised. I wondered somewhat if he would not go as far as suggesting that we each have our own bank or piggybank. There would be a good opposition, and we could all have our own credit. I do not think it goes that far; I do not know exactly who are the shareholders. I do not know them myself but I think IAC is well known in Canada. It is precisely that company which wants to be incorporated as a bank to get a charter in Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, usually when a company or a group of men ask for a bank charter the appropriate bill is rather limited. Bill S-30 is indeed rather voluminous probably because it has to do with a company which already exists and wants a charter transfer. That is why we will have a lot of questions to ask the representatives of IAC when they appear before the committee of the House and we will certainly take that opportunity to voice our opinions on the way currency and credit should be created and controlled in Canada.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have just one short bit to add to this very interesting discussion. When the bill goes to the committee there should be a method whereby the promoters of this bank will be required to live up to their undertakings. I am sorry to say this has not been the case in respect of the most recent bank which came before this House. The promoters in that case gave undertakings which they have not lived up to. I think this is a contempt not only of parliament but also of the Inspector of Banks and so on. I hope when the bill gets to the committee the undertakings will be given and that the Inspector of Banks will be given the responsibility to see that the undertakings are lived up to after the seal of approval is given, if it is, by parliament. Otherwise a mockery will be made of our system. I for one regret that these undertakings were not fulfilled in the last instance.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak for just a moment. Generally I agree that the addition of further banking opportunities in this country is important in order to accelerate the degree of economic activity in the private sector. I share both the concern of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the development or the experience as pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. Stanfield: You cannot sit on both sides.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not attempting to. I think it is exceedingly difficult to control these institutions in the traditional way in which an attempt has been made to control them through public ownership. I think a vital question we will have to face at the next revision of the Bank Act will be the degree of influence available concerning the transactions and general activity of the banks in this country. As was mentioned a moment ago, there is a concern about the degree to which investments are made in this country and whether there are pressures which exist from outside the country.

One final point I believe is vital in terms of the banking institutions of Canada. I refer to the degree to which these institutions adequately reflect the financial needs of the various parts of the country. I think we will have to look very carefully at the way in which the financial portfolios are dealt with by the major banks inasmuch as we still have the problem of making sufficient capital available in some of the underdeveloped regions of the country. If the banks have not yet found sufficient means of their own to achieve this, then I think some assistance and direction will have to be given. This is something that I hope will be kept in mind in the creation of the new Continental Bank of Canada.

I hope there is not some kind of irony in that the initials of this new bank will be the CBC, inasmuch as we are already spending a good deal of public funds through that particular agency. We want to be sure that the way in which this bank is operating will achieve some measure of economic stimulation and activity.

As a final point let me say that this week there has been a national meeting of two boards of directors of two national banks in this country with respect to their investment portfolios abroad. Very serious questions are being raised about the investment that takes place on the part of these banks in countries with which we have serious disagreements, such as South Africa. I think we do not want to encourage banks that will be investing the individual resources of the depositors of this country in areas where a measure of basic inequality has been maintained, based on something as unacceptable to the people of this country as racial division and separation.

With those few remarks, I look forward to further study of this proposal when it comes before the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTION THAT STEPS BE TAKEN TO IMPROVE RELATIONS WITH UNITED STATES IN VIEW OF STATEMENT OF AMBASSADOR PORTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning Canada's consistent worsening relations with the United States and arising particularly concerning the statement made during the weekend by U.S. Ambassador William Porter with regard to the necessity of something being done about this unfortunate situation. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the House regrets the necessity of United States Ambassador William Porter having to draw attention to the deterioration in relations between our two countries; that the House regrets the anti-American statements made by the Prime Minister on such occasions as his visit to the Soviet Union and also on return from his last visit to the United States; that the House further regrets certain of the government's anti-American policies and, finally, the House requests immediate steps be taken to improve relations with our closest neighbour and largest trading partner by putting an end to our present foreign policy toward the United States, dominated by Ivan Head and the Prime Minister's office, and by placing it more properly under the direction of the entire cabinet and in the hands of a competent Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSAL TO EXPEDITE APPROVAL OF GRADE SEPARATION PROJECTS IN VIEW OF ACCIDENT IN SCARBOROUGH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which arises from the tragic loss of life which occurred last Friday at a level crossing in Scarborough. In view of the fact that metro Toronto has requested the grade separation at three particularly hazardous crossings as long ago as last February, and despite repeated prodding no action whatever seems to have been taken by the Canadian Transport Commission or the Ministry of Transport to approve the applications which, if carried out, would have prevented this tragic accident, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the government to ensure that a full inquiry be made into the circumstances of the accident, in particular as to delay in providing for the construction of grade separation projects, to speed up the procedures and to provide the necessary funds so as to proceed with meeting such requests with a due sense of urgency.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST THAT BASIC INCOME TAX EXEMPTION BE INCREASED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the constant devaluation of the purchasing power increasingly affecting the small Canadian wage earners and since the workers have no other choice than to try to make up for those losses with salary increases already spent which bring about price increases, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House consider right now the serious decrease of purchasing power by indicating the correctives which the government must take as soon as possible and by demanding more particularly that the basic rate of tax exemptions be raised to leave additional purchasing power to the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

SUGGESTED EXPEDITING OF APPROVAL OF GRADE SEPARATION PROJECTS AND INQUIRY INTO REASONS FOR DELAYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the tragic accident at a railroad crossing in Toronto last Friday causing eight deaths and dozens of injuries, partially as a result of the delay by the Canadian Transport Commission in approving applications by the Toronto metro roads commission to proceed with grade separations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to take all necessary steps to have the Canadian Transport Commission make immediate decisions on all pending applications relating to grade separation projects, and that he look into the reason for delays in this and other applications and report to this House his findings.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR PORTER ON CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to ask the Prime Minister about the statement made by Ambassador Porter suggesting that our relationships with the United States have deteriorated during the past two years and an atmosphere of suspicion, if not of hostility, is developing in important American quarters. Does this come to the Prime Minister as a surprise, or does the information that the government has been receiving from our own diplomatic service confirm the views expressed by Ambassador Porter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it comes to me as a surprise both as to the substance and as to the form. I have not seen the text of Ambassador Porter's statement and therefore I should not like to make any final comments on it, but I must say I am surprised that an experienced diplomat like Mr. Porter would not find other channels for expressing views if he thinks they are right.

Mr. Cossitt: You are anti-American, that is what is wrong with you.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, I am surprised about the form, and I repeat that I have not seen the text of Ambassador Porter's statement. I hope I will be seeing it fairly soon.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On the substance, of course, we do know there are problems being solved between our countries, and that there have been, will be and are various forms of irritants that we are always working to overcome. On the over-all substance, I think the most fair answer is to say I have seen President Ford three times during the past year and talked at great length with him at those meetings and at other times on the telephone. Secretary Kissinger was here a very short while ago, and made private and public statements to the effect that our relations were very good. I am, I confess, somewhat surprised at the tone of the remarks, as reported, of Ambassador Porter, and I must say they do not correspond to what either the President or Secretary Kissinger have been telling me.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we can all agree about the importance of the question. My question really was basically whether the government of Canada would advise us of the tenor of the advice or information the government of Canada has been receiving from our own diplomatic services in the United States, and does it confirm or refute positively, one way or other, the opinions expressed by the ambassador? If the Prime Minister needs to look into this matter, does he intend, either himself or through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to make inquiries of our diplomatic people in the United States in order to confirm or otherwise the impression the Prime Minister now has about relations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that in my reply. If I can be more precise, let me say I did talk to Ambassador Warren last week, our ambassador in Washington, about other matters and this type of remark did not come up. I repeat that Ambassador Porter's remarks do not in any way reflect what I have learned from President Ford or Secretary Kissinger or from our own ambassador. This does not mean there are not difficulties which are arising all the time, solutions to which we are working on and attempting to find. The House knows that ever since the two countries have existed there has been a constant series of problems which have been discussed and solved, and that to me is the nature of our relations, not the kind of relations that Ambassador Porter is reported to have stated.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO RESPOND TO INVITATION OF UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE TO HAVE REPRESENTATIVES EXPLAIN FOREIGN INVESTMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister referred to the views he has received from President Ford and Secretary Kissinger he may be aware of the fact that Ambassador Porter referred as much to the media as to other aspects of government, particularly Congress. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is aware of the fact that the Joint Economic Sub-Committee on Inter-American Affairs of the two Houses is meeting tomorrow and Wednesday basically to study our foreign investment review legislation, and whether or not he is aware that the staff have asked for representations from our government and have so far been refused, even though there are some prominent Canadian businessmen who will be appearing over the next few days? Will the Prime Minister indicate why the decision was taken not to appear to explain this important legislation to the United States legislative body?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of this request but I will look at it with some attention. As a matter of general principle, I am sure all members on both sides of this House will agree that it is not proper at first blush for members of the Canadian Public Service to appear before legislative bodies of other countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED REVIVAL OF CANADA-UNITED STATES MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE ON TRADE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Prime Minister meant to indicate by the final part of his answer that there will be no spokesmen there to explain the Canadian government policy position. I should like to ask a further question of the Prime Minister in view of recent representations to the committee of the other place studying Canadian-U.S. relations, specifically by former U.S. Ambassador to Canada Schaetzel, in respect of the Canadian-U.S. ministerial committee on trade and economic affairs which has not met for the past five years. Ambassador Schaetzel specifically recommended that this committee be revived as an important instrument to overcome some of the difficulties referred to by Ambassador Porter. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether the government is giving consideration to this important committee in order that we might be able to overcome some of the difficulties that have presently been suggested.

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, what I intended to convey, and think I did convey, was that if the United States wants to know about our policies, the way to know about them is not to summons our civil servants in front of their Congressional committees. Our ambassador is there. There are constant meetings at the ministerial level between Canada and the United States. We, of course, are very prepared and desirous to defend any aspect of our policies and to explain them to the American government, but we are not a colony of the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: On the meeting of the committee to which the hon. member refers, I think this is an interesting suggestion. I will see when the last meeting was held and whether another one is called for. It may be that because of the frequency of the meetings by ministers of many departments in the past several years the committee was not absolutely necessary. I know the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Finance have all been meeting at a fairly frequent pace. Perhaps it was not necessary to have this continuing committee meet.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, just to be clear to the Prime Minister with regard to this joint economic sub-committee that is meeting tomorrow and Wednesday, the request was made through the regular diplomatic sources in Washington through our embassy. The embassy officials there did not offer either to advise the names of anyone or suggest in what way we might be adequately represented. Perhaps the Prime Minister should look into that in order that we can effectively explain this new policy initiative taken by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR PORTER ON CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—SUGGESTED PROTEST OF AMBASSADOR'S ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since the remarks made by Ambassador Porter were not in print but apparently were deliberately made without a text before some senior journalists in Canada and that therefore the Prime Minister will not be able to check the text, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, since pretty well all the people at this conference with the ambassador are in agreement concerning what he said or is alleged to have said, whether he and the Government of Canada would make clear to the United States government that we do not accept as appropriate ambassadorial activity explicit criticism made internally of federal and provincial government operations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is as stated by the Leader of the New Democratic Party that I do not have the exact text. I can only assume that some of the things alleged to have been said, if said, were meant to be stated personally as an opinion of the ambassador. Certainly he was not speaking as the ambassador. Some of the quotations attributed to him, particularly as they concern provincial politics, certainly are beyond the acceptable bounds within which an ambassador should stay. I am sure the United States government would agree with this, but once again the whole case is based on reports which I have not been able to verify. I would like to add that word of caution. It is possible that Ambassador Porter himself will want to deny some of the statements which have been alleged or put in his mouth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since the ambassador apparently took pains to say to some journalists as they were leaving the meeting that they were free to comment either in the written media, on television or through other forms, it seems to be the deliberate policy of the U.S. government at this time for the ambassador to make such a statement and it seems extraordinary that such an experienced man would simply express a personal view in such a serious area. I would like to repeat in a sense the first question to the Prime Minister to confirm if this is the official U.S. policy and, if it is so, would he make clear that it is unacceptable to Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Stated in that form, the question is hypothetical, but I will try to answer it nonetheless by repeating my earlier statement. I know from President Ford and from Secretary Kissinger that they consider they have good relations with Canada. Secretary Kissinger publicly stated here that there is no country with which they have closer ties and better communications than Canada.

Mr. Baldwin: That is when the switch was open.

Mr. Trudeau: He also said, "I consider our relationship to be very healthy". This is enough for me, and if Ambassador Porter has views to convey, it is just possible that he should be conveying them to this own government rather than in this particular way.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the reputation of the new ambassador, who will be coming to Canada before long, is, from the Canadian point of view, one about which we should be even more apprehensive than about that of the present U.S. ambassador—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —and I say that with care—considering his reputation in making statements about the internal affairs of other countries, I would like the Prime Minister to make it clear, not only to the present U.S. ambassador but to the future U.S. ambassador, that that kind of behaviour is totally unacceptable in Canada.

Mr. Baldwin: After he has heard you, he might not come.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT BASIC INCOME TAX EXEMPTION BE INCREASED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Considering that the cabinet is now busy drafting the forthcoming Speech from the Throne, a speech which will reflect on the gist of the next budget, and since a great many Canadian workers, witnessing the constant erosion of their purchasing power, are vainly trying to compensate for this loss with already eroded salary hikes, which is also responsible in part for price increases, could the minister advise the House whether he will consider the possibility of increasing the basic income tax exemptions to compensate for this loss in purchasing power?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we are not now considering the projects likely to be included in the budget. However, I take note of the hon. member's suggestion.

REQUEST FOR EXPEDITING APPROVAL OF GRADE SEPARATION PROJECT AT MIDLAND AND ST. CLAIR AVENUES, SCARBOROUGH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, and I also have a supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. O'Connell: Will the minister meet at once with representatives from metro Toronto and Scarborough city councils to investigate any causes for delay with a view to expediting approval of the application for regular plus special grants for the grade separations at Midland and St. Clair avenues in Scarborough? I ask this in view of the tragic accident there on Friday, December 12, which has taken nine lives.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the processing of this particular application was underway and the final recommendation was being prepared for me in connection with it. I am not sure a further meeting may be required, but I will certainly consider the suggestion.

● (1430)

I should point out to hon. members, however, that even in the original planning for the submission, the earliest time in which the grade separation would in fact have taken place would have been some time in 1977, and the crossing would have been in use until that time. So that however much sympathy one may have for those involved in the accident, the processing of the application would have no effect upon it.

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE FUNDS FOR GRADE SEPARATION PROJECTS

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Will the minister undertake to maintain the capital funds available for grants for railway overpasses and underpasses at a level substantially higher than the average of the past three years, in view of the safety requirements of rapidly growing municipalities, especially those with rail commuter systems, and in view of the rapid escalation in construction costs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Obviously, the question of maintaining a fund at a particular level is not one for the minister alone but for the government as a whole. This is an area about which we have a great deal of concern and in which we have had an active interest over the years. There has consistently been a demand for funds in excess of whatever could reasonably be provided, and no doubt that will continue to be the case. However, I am glad to have the support of the hon. member for the application of funds for this purpose.

REQUEST FOR ASSESSMENT OF ADEQUACY OF SAFETY MEASURES AT LEVEL CROSSINGS IN SCARBOROUGH

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport. Again with regard to this major accident involving, as it did, two types of public transportation, will the minister undertake an assessment of the adequacy of existing safety measures at this and two nearby level crossings, all of which involve main Scarborough bus routes as well as extensive automobile and pedestrian traffic?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, immediately following the accident officials from the Canadian Transport Commission were on the scene investigating the various aspects of the accident which relate to the rail mode of transportation to determine whether there was any failure in the rail or signalling system. Part of the other aspects of the safety measures required is, of course, in other hands, but we will certainly consider the whole question.

BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT CONCERNING DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister give clarification to the House with respect to the statement he made this weekend that advisory services will be designated as bilingual, and in particular the commitment that the last phase of the transition to bilingual air-ground communications would be the introduction of bilingual operations at Dorval and Mirabel international airports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to clarify, in view of some of the press reports about the statements which have been made. I should like to make it clear to hon. members that the discussion of immediate implementation of measures in both languages at Dorval and Mirabel was specifically in relation to ground to ground communications, where we anticipate that following the development of procedures which are nearly complete and discussions about those procedures it will be possible to implement rules for such ground to ground communications in either language on April 1.

The question of any further steps, and specifically the question of the introduction of IFR bilingual procedures, was clearly indicated by me in my statement to be subject to the need for extensive tests of procedures. We will be proposing to make use of a new simulator in the Department of Transport to test IFR procedures during January and February to develop therefrom certain procedures which may be appropriate for the use of two languages; that these will in turn have to be tested again on the simulator; that in each case of the development of procedures we will be consulting all parties involved in safe air travel; and we will repeat the procedures of development of methods and the testing on the simulator until we are indeed satisfied that safe procedures are available.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON WHICH DECISION TO ESTABLISH BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS BASED

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Regardless of what the minister says, I should like to ask him if he would be prepared to table the reports which led him to the conclusion that air communications at Quebec airports will gradually become bilingual. Would he be prepared to table this report so that the House and also the country can see the considerations which led to this decision?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I would be very glad indeed to provide the hon. member with the four or five page statement which I made in Montreal, and I will provide it to him in both languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SAFETY ONLY CONSIDERATION INVOLVED IN ESTABLISHING BILINGUAL AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Would the minister assure the House that the policy being followed is in the best interests of air safety and air safety only, which certainly should be the overriding concern of everyone involved with this transition?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I do not agree that that is the only interest involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It had better be.

Mr. Lang: It may be very important for hon. members to appreciate that air safety is a pre-eminent consideration and one which we will not in any way downgrade. However, there is another consideration involved, and that is that in this country there are two languages, and when we can we will develop proper procedures for the use of both languages in this area. We will do that with safety, but it is not the only element involved. We will ensure safety, but we will also, when possible, ensure the use of both languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED SHORTENING OF PROPOSED CHRISTMAS RECESS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the government House leader advised the House on Thursday that it was not the government's plan to have parliament reassemble until January 19 or January 26, but at the same time gave us a long list of legislative items which the government considers must be passed immediately for the public good, a list which cannot possibly receive adequate consideration before Christmas, would the Prime Minister not agree that it makes far more sense to have parliament reassemble on Monday, January 5 so that we can proceed then in a constructive, orderly fashion to deal with this very large volume of work—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —in a way in which the people of Canada would like us to operate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, certain bills which must be dealt with even before January 1, and I understand that the government House leader has been discussing with his colleagues ways in which this might be done before January 1. However, as the hon. member can see, there is great support on this side for coming back on January 5 or earlier. This is something I hope all parties will discuss. In the name of the government, the government House leader has mentioned January 19 or January 26, but of course we are always willing and able to meet without any holidays or any break at any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUDITOR GENERAL

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REPORT OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move to a related subject. I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Do you agree with George?

An hon. Member: Did you hear what George had to say?

Mr. Baldwin: Is it the intention of the government to change its course and move away from the easy ride it has been having in connection with government expenditures? As a substantial element in any such program will the minister introduce, before this House adjourns, for first reading at least, the new bill to deal with the role of the Auditor General so that we can take some steps to staunch the very considerable waste and extravagance which has been recently demonstrated?

[Mr. Lang.]

● (1440)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we hope to table the bill concerning the Auditor General as part of the next Speech from the Throne and thus proceed with the legislation as early as next spring. We considered the Wilson report and most of the recommendations are acceptable. We are considering the Auditor General's report and the hon. member will understand that it takes a few weeks to go through such a complex, although well prepared, document as the one submitted by the Auditor General. The federal government certainly intends to proceed as soon as possible with both aspects of this problem.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that there has already been a period of gestation of seven months in connection with this report of the independent review committee, if the government fears to move because of bureaucratic apprehension will it at least refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts under the able chairmanship of a member of this House?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is because we want to proceed as quickly as possible that we have decided to proceed with the bill and the bill will be ready. If we were to proceed the way the hon. member is suggesting, I am sure we would still be debating the matter in committee. Now that the government has made the decision about 95 per cent of the problems suggested by the hon. member will be taken care of.

MEASURES TO EXPEDITE PROCEDURE FOR DEALING WITH GRADE SEPARATION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Transport is supplementary to a question asked by the hon. member for Scarborough East. What steps is the minister taking to expedite the procedure for grade separation of hazardous crossings?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated that, with regard to this specific crossing, the application went through the usual process and a recommendation was on its way to me. That is the normal procedure when there are almost always more applications than there are funds available.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary. As the normal proceeding seems to have taken over ten months and produced no results, is the minister considering some further method of expediting these proceedings?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the examination of the application was at the point where a recommendation on it was now available. It is of course a matter of choosing between applications where funds are limited and not available for all purposes to which they might be applied and the decision being taken. I also pointed out that tying them to a particular incident is rather unfortunate, in view of the fact that even the period of construction would have taken another year or a year and a half before there would have been grade separation at this point.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF LOCKHEED ORION CONTRACT ON REGIONAL COMPANIES IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I welcome him back to the House. It has been a week or ten days since I put a question to him with respect to the industrial benefit arising out of the LRPA program. Is the minister now in a position to indicate what protection will be built into the program with respect to regional companies such as IMP?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his welcome. In so far as IMP is concerned, which I believe is the company for which the hon. member has the primary concern at the moment, I will be glad to provide him with figures as to how much they will participate in the actual LRPA program. There has not yet been a determination of repair and overhaul work following the introduction of the LRPA. I would be glad to sit with the hon. member and discuss with him what possibility there may be in that connection for maritime companies, for example.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question. I wonder if the minister could indicate to the House whether he would agree—and indeed the Prime Minister left some impression in this regard the other day—that there is not much point in the transfer of some 400 jobs from one part of Canada to another; at the same time, if he does agree, would he not give some assurance that some input into the technological and engineering development of this new LRPA should go to IMP so that those 400 jobs in the Atlantic area could be protected?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with the proposition the hon. gentleman puts forward. He should recognize, however, that in changing from the particular aircraft on which IMP has been working to the new one, we must work out some formula for repair and overhaul. As I said, I will be glad to do that in detail in the period we have, which is perhaps three or four years, between now and the point where the new aircraft comes into operation.

Mr. Forrestall: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The very thing we are all afraid of has just come out now in the minister's answer. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that unless this question of access to the industrial benefit of this program does include the technological and engineering involvement by companies such as IMP—and the minister is correct that it is not the only one—they will not be able to participate later on in the program. It is in the next two weeks that such a decision has to be made. I wonder if the minister might not look closer at that some time this week.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I fear there has been some misunderstanding in terms of the question the hon. member asked. I thought he was primarily interested in whether a percentage of the repair and overhaul that presently exist could be maintained and that is what I said we had a period of time to examine. If we are talking about what part of the construction program can be transferred or assigned to IMP at the moment, of course that has to be decided shortly. I think there has been an assessment already of what the program may mean in terms of that particular company but I will be glad to talk it over with the hon. member.

CABLEVISION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Communications. I take this opportunity to congratulate her on her new appointment.

Nothing having transpired since October 13 in the field of cablevision, could the minister tell the House when she will make a statement to the House about the discussions between Ottawa and Quebec in order to refresh hon. members' memory and inform them of the state of negotiations on that matter?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): I thank the hon. member for his good wishes. There is no negotiation going on between the province of Quebec and the federal government on the question of cablevision in the region of Matane and Rimouski at the present time. However, an appeal is now before the courts and that is why it is difficult for me to comment on that question right now.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF HIGH COST OF FOOD IN THE NORTH AND TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDY ON SOME ITEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and concerns the report of the Food Prices Review Board on food prices in northern Canada which has just been released. At the urging of the Consumer Association of Canada and of the Yukon that an independent investigation be conducted with respect to establishing the reasons for the high cost of food generally in the north and since that appears to be a recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board, will the minister exercise the authority which he undoubtedly has and cause such an investigation to be made which appears to be in keeping with this recommendation?

Oral Questions

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not absolutely certain that I possess such powers but I will be happy to look into the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. Since the report also recommends that, in order to help bridge the nutrition gap in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which is caused by this unjustified gap between food prices and the cost of transport, a selection of nutritious foods be subsidized by the federal government, particularly fresh foods and dairy products, in the interim will the minister speak to his cabinet colleagues in the hope that a decision might be made to implement that recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board forthwith in order to ensure a continuous supply of nutritious foods in the north at the same prices as other Canadians pay for them?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to look into the recommendation of the hon. member.

OLYMPIC GAMES

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING FOR SILVER COINS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General, I will put my question to his parliamentary secretary or, rather, the President of the Treasury Board who is closely connected with this subject matter. In view of the fact that over the weekend an American television network, CBS, stated in a report that Canadian silver Olympic coins, due to over-production and overpricing, are unlikely to increase in value, contrary to the Olympic coin advertising campaign, is the government prepared to take steps to have the advertising campaign under the coin program altered in a way that it will no longer be misleading to the public?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised at the CBS statement. We have an excellent coin program in all respects. Sales have been very good. It seems that the problem lies with the lack of sophistication in the American market. We have done extremely well on the European market in the sale of our coins. Sales have been excellent. It seems that the American market may be a little slow due to this lack of sophistication.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO DEAL WITH ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING FOR OLYMPIC SILVER COINS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Notwithstanding the parliamentary secretary's non-answer to my question, I will put my supplementary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that many Canadian coin dealers, as a matter of fact nine out of ten I talked to this morning, confirm the statement made on the Columbia Broadcasting System as factual and added that there is even a likelihood of the coins decreasing from their original value and therefore clearly making the whole Olympic coin advertising campaign, through its ads over television, misleading to the public at large, is the minister now prepared to enforce the provisions of his own Combines Act, Section 36, dealing with false and misleading advertising?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, given the type of questions he puts and interventions he makes, I have always wondered whether the hon. member is really for or against the Olympic Games. One again I notice that his intervention reflects a rather clouded mind, and the way he puts his questions surely hides ulterior motives. On the other hand, if the hon. member has elements of proof or other pertinent information to convey, I shall be pleased to transmit them to the director of inquiries.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR PORTER ON CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister because I am anxious that we do not send any gunboats as a result of Ambassador Porter's frankness. There is a fair amount of hyperbole about this issue. I think it is worth while keeping our perspective. Is it not a fact that it is healthier for relations between two countries to have this type of exchange rather than the usual platitudes that take place on our respective national days? Does the Prime Minister not welcome this somewhat unorthodox method of reminding Canadians and Americans of what are obviously irritants on both sides of the border?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that gunboats will not be called for. I thought I made it clear that we had no quarrel with what the President of the United States or the administration said in these matters. Therefore, if gunboats were called for, it would be against an ambassador. That obviously is overkill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member seems to feel that this is a healthy state of affairs. I do not want to intervene in the way in which the United States runs its affairs. However, I suggest if it has this kind of representation to make to me, I find it passing strange that it does not come from the President or Secretary of State, but comes from some ambassador talking to somebody else. I suggest that is not the usual way of proceeding.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON REDUCTION OF FUNDS FOR EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In light of the statement made by the ambassador from the United States and the irritants between the United States and Canada which have become more acute, has there been any discussion at a high level or another level with regard to a reduction of investment in the oil and gas industry, exploration and development of which is going to be accelerated in 1976? Has there been any discussion with regard to a unilateral cutback in the United States or a discussion between the two nations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I saw the Secretary of the Treasury in Washington last Wednesday. There was no such suggestion at all at that meeting.

Mr. Woolliams: Can the minister assure the House that discussions at the high level he has just stated will continue so that exploration and development of natural gas in particular in Alberta and elsewhere will continue in order that we will always have a guarantee of being self-sufficient in Canada, something that is very important to our domestic and industrial welfare as well as with regard to controlling inflation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the present Secretary of the Treasury is a former federal energy administrator. As such, he knows a great deal about the energy scene in North America. In particular, he is supportive of the energy policies we have been following in Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGATION MINISTER SOLICITING FUNDS FOR LIBERAL PARTY FROM EXECUTIVES OF CROWN AGENCIES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This relates to the decision by the minister recently to solicit donations for the Liberal party directly from the executives of Crown corporations and Crown agencies through letters sent to these employees using their official titles and business addresses. Will the minister say whether he intends to expand the letter solicitation for the Liberal party to bring pressure on larger numbers of public servants and will he table in the House a list of those employees of Crown corporations and government agencies who were solicited for donations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to point out that, contrary to the Progressive Conservative Party at least, we did not send any letter to the Treasury Board and most of the departments to obtain contributions.

Secondly, those letters were sent out by the Quebec branch of the Liberal Party of Canada to a large number of citizens, as such, throughout the province of Quebec. If some of them happen to be employees or civil servants of Crown corporations, it would not surprise me. But I feel there is nothing in the law, nor even in political tradition that prevents the citizens who work for a Crown corporation or even a government, from contributing or refusing to contribute to the political party of their choice. They are free, as citizens, to do as they please. However, I am very pleased that the Liberal Party should invite all Canadian citizens to contribute to our party, because I feel it is an excellent thing.

● (1500)

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am going to permit the hon. member for Calgary South one supplementary which will conclude the question period. I should caution him that initially he questioned the Minister of National Health and Welfare in an area that is outside his jurisdiction as a minister. Because it pertains to solicitation of employees of Crown corporations, I let it go. It must stay in that area.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate how sensitive the minister and members opposite are about this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bawden: It would be appropriate if the minister would inform the House whether donations from such public servants will affect promotions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bawden: If not, what action has he taken or will he take to assure these public servants that such donations will not in any way change their future employment opportunities? At the same time, will he assure the House that this practice will cease?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, any contribution exceeding $100 made to a political party is public, recorded and available to all citizens, the hon. member included. He will be able to see who contributed and what happens or does not happen to contributors. As far as I am concerned, any Canadian is free to contribute to the Liberal party, and I invite people to do so.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and Your Honour may even rule that it is a question of privilege because of the fact that every time I have raised an Olympics question the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and other ministers have implied, with racial overtones, that I am against the Olympics. I cannot accept an accusation of that kind on the part of the government.

I should like to make my position very clear, as I always do when I speak on this subject: It is not that I am anti-Olympics, or against the fact that the Olympics are to be held in Montreal, but I am anti-fraud and I am against the manner in which the government has allowed the financing of the Olympic Games to be dealt with. I simply asked the minister whether he would apply the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is laughing. I would remind him that the Olympics are going to cost Montreal $1 billion. I simply asked him whether he would apply the law, the Combines Investigation Act, Section 36 having to do with misleading advertising, which is applicable to the Olympics silver coins issue since nine out of ten of the coin dealers across Canada say that the coins will not increase in value by three, four, eight or nine times as the advertising suggests, particularly on television.

I hope the minister will either assure us that he intends to apply the law, the Combines Investigation Act, Section 36, or not and continue to deal fraudulently with respect to the financing of the Olympics Games through these coins.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised, by way of a point of order, what is primarily a complaint about the answer he received from a minister today. As such, it cannot be regarded as a valid point of order. There was, however, another aspect of his complaint, one which is more serious. As I understood it, the hon. member did say something about a racial overtone in the answers he had been given. If such has been the case during the question period while I have been in the chair, I certainly was not aware of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If there is any evidence that the hon. member might wish to put forward in this respect, perhaps he would bring it to my attention. His remarks on introducing the point of order prompted the reflection that the Chair might have allowed, perhaps unwittingly, some suggestion of a racial overtone to pass. But as far as I am aware, that has not been the case. If there is any information to the effect that there has been any kind of racial overtone in any of the answers given, it should be brought to my attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Beaudoin: I would like to point out to Your Honour that today we could only ask one question without any supplementary. We do not want to appear to be smart, but I understand we had today supplementaries with an excessively long preamble and that took most of the oral question period. With the cooperation you always gave our party, we would like to have a chance in the future to ask at least two questions. I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that there was a problem today. Only 12 hon. members of the official opposition and two of the New Democratic Party asked questions today, according to the normal proportion. There was also one hon. member of the Social Credit today. This is unfortunately the situation which prevailed during the oral question period. The hon. member is perfectly aware that on other days at least two and sometimes three hon. members of the Social Credit can ask their questions. Unfortunately it was impossible this afternoon. I regret it as much as the hon. member.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO EUROPE

Question No. 3,085—Mr. Cossitt:

Other than news media personnel, what are the (a) names (b) addresses (c) job designations of government employees, accompanying or in any way connected with the Prime Minister on his current trip to Europe including Helsinki, Finland and, in each case, what is the purpose of the presence of each individual and the particular service provided?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Consideration has been given to a number of motions which were tabled at the report stage. Two, it seems, of the 22 motions which are before the House for consideration appear to be out of order, and perhaps the question of procedure involved could be discussed when we come to them. I refer to motions 4 and 6. These two motions appear to the Chair to introduce into the bill a concept larger than that originally envisaged in the royal recommendation, in that they would extent the qualifying period to those who are on strike lawfully and to those who are out of work for the purpose of establishing a self-employed operation. Both would appear to increase benefits by extending the period of qualification. When these motions are called, hon. members might be prepared to put forward arguments addressed to the procedural aspects.

Furthermore, the Chair has some concern about motion No. 13 in that it appears, by way of amendment, to delete a section which is not proposed to be deleted by the bill. However, there is the fact that clause 11 proposes to amend a very similar subclause of the bill regarding the initial benefit period and the amendment would delete a second or a different section, but a similar kind of prohibition, with respect to the extended benefit period.

It may be that by argument and explanation the motion can be shown to be in fact in order. I simply caution that when motion 13 is called, there ought to be some attention paid on both sides to the procedural argument. On balance, it would seem to the Chair that the motion should probably stand, but there may be a question whether or not it goes beyond the scope of the bill. The two provisions seem to me to be so related that probably the motion should stand, but I would simply suggest that when motion No. 4 is called there ought to be argument about the procedural regularity of motions 4 and 6. When motion 13 is called, it ought to be argued procedurally as well.

The remaining motions seem to be in order. Motions 1 and 2, it appears, ought to be discussed together but voted on separately. Motion 1 should be voted on first, because it proposes the deletion of a clause; motion 2 would be voted on if motion 1 does not carry, because it proposes the deletion of a portion of the clause. Motions 9, 10, 16, 21 and 22 ought to be discussed and voted on separately. Motions 7 and 8 should be grouped for debate, I would think, along with motions 14 and 15, and perhaps all four motions could be disposed of by a vote on motion No. 7. It appears that motions 11 and 12 ought to be grouped together for discussion, and motions 17, 18, 19 and 20 could be grouped for debate and disposed of with one vote.

Perhaps, while motion No. 1 is under discussion, hon. members could give consideration to that proposition and return to further argument on it as the day progresses.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, if it pleases the Chair. My point of order has to do with the royal recommendation. I should like to enter a caveat against the royal recommendation to this bill being taken as a precedent. These recommendations limit the right of all hon. members, except a minister of the Crown, to propose amendments. There appears to be a tendency on the part of the person responsible for drafting these recommendations to overwrite them; that is, the recommendation is written to cover clauses that do not appropriate public funds, as well as those that do.

Here the offence is worse. Funds for the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, are only appropriated out of public funds if unemployment exceeds 4 per cent; below that figure all moneys in the account are private funds. Yet the recommendation is written as though all funds were appropriated from public revenues. Indeed, the recommendation is so written although one of the purposes of the bill is stated in the recommendation to be "to provide, in the manner prescribed, for a new basis for the calculation that determines the proportion of the basic cost of benefit for a year that will be borne by the government". In effect, the provision supported by this recommendation will make the public contribution to the account less, and the private contribution more.

There is a definition in section 136 of the act which indicates the extent of the commitment of public revenues under this act. That definition is headed, "Government cost of paying benefit". That phrase should be used to limit the recommendation so that it would read, "To the extent of the government cost of paying benefit, His Excellency the Governor General has recommended", etc. That is all His Excellency can recommend and that is as far as the recommendation should go.

As I understand it, the private sector is responsible for the cost when unemployment is 4 per cent or less, so not only is the government contribution involved. We would not want the draftsman of the legislation to consider that a precedent has now been put forward with which we on this side agree, and I bring this to Your Honour's attention so that Your Honour is apprised of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has raised a point of order concerning the drafting of the recommendation. At this stage 22 motions respecting amendments to the bill have been put forward. The bill has gone through committee, and opportunity existed for amendments at that time. I therefore take it that the hon. member for Hamilton West is not seeking, at this particular time, a decision on his point of order but, rather, is pointing out generally that there may be a problem existing and he is putting on record the fact that a complaint does exist. I would tell him that his point is well noted. If there are no other hon. members who wish to contribute to the point of order, perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton West should have the floor on motion No. 1.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since Your Honour said that motions Nos. 1 and 2 would be grouped together for debate, should not both motions be placed before the House at this time?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the point well taken, of course. His motion No. 2 seeks to delete a portion of the clause that is sought to be deleted in its entirety by motion No. 1. Therefore, motions 1 and 2 should be before the House at the present time. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) should presumably have the floor first, followed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The hon. member for Hamilton West moves:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-69, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 1.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moves:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-69, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in clause 1 by deleting subclause (2) at page 1 and by renumbering subclause (3) as subclause (2).

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, it is surely not our intention on this side of the House to filibuster this bill, but as a result of concern expressed by members on both sides of the House—though I do not speak particularly for those members sitting across from me—there is some question about the purport of clause 1. Firts of all, I believe that clause 1 is not only discriminatory but is taking a certain direction that we find difficult to follow at the present time. Clause 1(1)(e) provides that sponsors of programs like LIP, LEAP or programs of the federal government to create employment are entitled to unemployment insurance, notwithstanding that these sponsors are employers. Although the act states that self-employed persons are not within the jurisdiction of the legislation, an exception is being made of sponsors who may be employers.

Programs like LIP and LEAP are essentially short-term programs which have been brought in to help alleviate high unemployment in Canada. We on this side of the House have continually indicated to the minister and the government that we are not impressed with this sort of move, particularly when it is related to an eligibility period of eight weeks within the work force. A period of eight weeks in the work force is sufficient to qualify for unemployment insurance. Indeed, the minister has himself indicated that he is taking a look at the whole benefit structure. What this means to me is that the minister is looking into the eight-week eligibility period and perhaps even into the amount of benefit payable thereunder, whether it is too high or too low. Indeed, the eight-week period may be a disincentive to work. Bearing in mind the latest government statements concerning the possible dropping of LIP, LEAP and the Company of Young Canadians, we are wondering whether the right hand in fact knows what the left hand is doing.

My objection to this particular subclause is that it is discriminatory in that it indicates that a certain percentage of individuals within the work force shall be treated as self-employed and brought within the confines of the act. Of course, generally speaking the act disallows this. I will rest my case on that.

We on this side of the House have expressed our concern in no uncertain terms about the second paragraph in clause 1 in which we find there is a substitution by the words "employment of a person who is 65 years of age or over". Those are the words that are being substituted for something else. This appears to be the first step of this government in its fight against high unemployment insurance costs and it is put on the backs of our senior citizens. We resent this very much, because it seems to us that when this bill was first brought in there was every reason and every need for including our senior citizens in the work force. Senior citizens should be involved in the work force because of what they can contribute. In this way they could contribute to unemployment insurance up to the time they reach age 70, or until they opt out by applying for the Canada or Quebec Pension Plan.

It seems to me this government is trying to bring about the forced removal of our senior citizens from the work force. These are people who have made an excellent contribution to the work force of this country, without whose contributions we could not get along at this time. Notwithstanding what has been said on several occasions about appreciation for the work ethic not being what it used to be, if anyone appreciates the work ethic I suggest it is our senior citizens. The minister has said that the government is not trying to take them out of the work force; they can work if they want. He then limits them by saying that if they do stay in the work force, they will not be allowed to make a contribution to the unemployment insurance scheme or receive any benefits. It is this that we find unjust, harsh and callous. It shows complete disregard for the plight of those who are in the twilight of their years but find, for a number of reasons, they want to maintain an effective role in the work force. Many of these people find they must keep working because of the high cost of living coupled with double-digit inflation. It is only right that they should be given the opportunity to work when there are so many people in this country who do not want to work.

We on this side of the House register our concern in the strongest possible voice about this part of the legislation, because it is discriminatory. In effect, the legislation provides that the government appreciates involvement in the work force of those over 65, but it does not need them now because payments under old age security and the old age supplement have gone up.

I would ask the minister what this has to do with the fact that certain individuals want to belong to the work force and continue to make contributions to and get benefits from the unemployment insurance scheme, but through no fault of their own they find themselves unable to work. These people should be given that opportunity, which has nothing to do with how much money they have paid in. I am not talking about that at all. I am trying to emphasize the part that it is time we considered what this government is doing to our senior citizens.

We heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)—I will only digress for a moment—talk about spouses. What he said was discouraging and disillusioning to a lot of people between age 60 and 65. The minister, in effect, said that a spouse would be looked after, but he would not even recognize the fact that within the bill a spouse would, in effect, be either party to the marriage.

There seems to be a trend to put the blame on our senior citizens for a good many things. This is not the correct approach. We must be more concerned in seeing that these people are kept in the work force in order that those who wish to do so can still make a contribution. We believe that many of them still have a great contribution to make. The minister says that this program will cost the country in the neighbourhood of $120 million. What we should look at is the way in which this government is climbing on the backs of our senior citizens. This government and the minister should be more concerned with reducing high unemployment, the national rate now being about 7.3 per cent. A 1 per cent reduction in that rate would save a great deal of money, without picking on our senior citizens to whom we owe so much.

We are extremely worried about this kind of approach by the government. We do not understand the government's thinking, and we will not accept this kind of move. We on this side of the House register our concern and we will not go along with the government in this regard. We will not go along with the government's attitude in respect of our senior citizens or its attitude in respect of calling a sponsor under LIP or LEAP a self-employed person who, under ordinary circumstances, would not come within the confines of this act but will now because of this government's thinking. For these reasons I have moved that Clause 1 of the bill relating to these matters be struck.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at this point we are debating report stage motions Nos. 1 and 2 at the same time. They are similar in that each of them would do something to clause 1 of the bill. As the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has pointed out, his report stage motion No. 1 would strike out clause 1 of the bill in its entirety. My report stage motion No. 2 would strike out only subclause (2) from clause 1 of the bill.

That may sound as though we are being very fine in our perception of the situation. May I point out that subclauses (1) and (3) of clause 1 of the bill propose to bring under unemployment insurance coverage certain individuals not now covered. In the main, those are persons who are sponsoring certain programs funded by the federal or by other governments. We suggest that if the individuals working in these groups are entitled to unemployment insurance coverage, the sponsors or the persons in charge of the project should also be covered.

It is for this reason we welcome the inclusion of subclauses (1) and (3) in clause 1 of the bill, and that is the reason I put down my report stage motion No. 2 in wording different from that of the hon. member for Hamilton West what I wanted to pinpoint was the need to strike out subclause (2) of clause 1.

One or more of my colleagues will have something to say about our position particularly as it pertains to subclauses (1) and (3), but I want to make, in a strong terms as I can, the case for the removal of subclause (2) from clause 1. Subclause (2) is the portion of this bill which would deny to persons 65 years of age or over any participation in the unemployment insurance program either as contributors or as recipients of unemployment insurance benefits. With the part of the speech of the hon. member for Hamilton West which dealt with this matter, I am in full agreement. I was glad to hear him speak as strongly as he did, and I hope that there will be many members from all parties in this House who will support our contention that the right to participation in unemployment insurance should not be denied to persons between age 65 and age 70.

As the previous speaker pointed out, one of the arguments advanced by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) is that by making this change the government will save $120 million a year. That, of course, comes as a very cruel argument since in effect we are being told that the government wants to get out of some of its unemployment insurance financial difficulties by imposing this burden on senior citizens between age 65 and 70.

Sometimes it is argued that in this age bracket there are large numbers of persons who really do not want to work and wish merely to carry on their unemployment insurance participation to the point where they can then pick up benefits. I submit that is probably less true of persons between age 65 and age 70 than it is of persons in the lower age brackets. By the time persons have reached an age between 65 and 70 they have a pretty responsible attitude. This is a 67-year old saying it, so I can confirm it. I suggest that the notion of exploiting or abusing the fund is less likely to be the case with persons in this age bracket than in any of the other brackets below that age level. In any case, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration made it clear in the committee that it is possible for the government, with its extensive use of computers, to ascertain those who really do not want employment, those who are turning it down.

I suggest that that method of denying people unemployment insurance, while in some instances we think it is very rough, is much more fair than applying the refusal to a particular age group. The government says it can sort out the married women, the young persons or the persons of advanced age who really do not want to work and therefore should not receive benefits. If they can do that with those categories, they can do it with those persons between age 65 and 70. I think it is unfair to deny arbitrarily to everyone between age 65 and 70 the right to participate in unemployment insurance either as contributors or as recipients of benefits.

Therefore, because, like the hon. member for Hamilton West, I think this is most unfair, I hope the House will support my motion No. 2 for the deletion of subclause (2) from clause 1 of the bill. I suggest that, coming at this time, this amendment is particularly unfair; indeed it is almost cruel. Up to a few years ago there was no age limit on the right to participate in unemployment insurance, but in the bill which became law in 1971 there was an age limit inserted, namely, age 70. That affected quite a few people. There were persons age 70 who were offended and annoyed by that provision, but at least time has gone by and people now know that when they reach age 70 they can no longer participate.

One of the things we felt was unfair about the insertion of age 70 in the law previously was that it caught people who had been contributing in the belief they would receive benefits if they qualified in other respects, and then suddenly any entitlement they might have built up was wiped out by the passage of that bill. While that act had its adverse effect on persons over age 70 at the same time at least it seemed to say that persons under age 70—in other words, persons between age 65 and 70—were protected. The law said that up to age 70 one could be a contributor to unemployment insurance, and that if one contributed and met the qualifications one could draw the benefits. So there are those persons between age 65 and 70 who are at work, who have been at work and who have been contributing in the belief that if they become unemployed they will qualify for benefits.

These people, who may have contributed for two, three or four years in that period between 65 and 70, suddenly on January 1, 1976, if this bill should become law, no longer will have that right. I do not think this right should be taken away, but if it is, I suggest it should be taken away gradually, with some notice that persons between age 65 and 70 who are now paying and have the right to expect to draw benefits will not have that right taken away from them now, but that by 1980 the change might be in order. As I say, I think this is unfair in general terms. We think it is unfair particularly to those persons who are now in the age bracket between 65 and 70.

One argument that has been used by the government in presenting this proposal is that persons in this age bracket are now taken care of by other government programs. Of course, those programs are favourites with some of us, such as the old age security program, the guaranteed income supplement and the Canada Pension Plan. These programs are coming along. They are a lot better than was the case when I first came to this chamber. However, it still is not luxury living even if one is on the full amount of all these various programs. There are many instances of persons who do need additional income, not because they are greedy old folks but because they have responsibilities, because they married late in life and still have children going to school or university, or because they have other family needs or have grandchildren they must raise. There are persons who, whether they like the work ethic or not, feel they have to work. I submit that it is not fair to say to them that from here on they must be satisfied with what they get as old age pensioners. I do not mind an adequate old age retirement plan taking the place of unemployment insurance and taking the place of employment for remuneration, but what I do not like is seeing these things taken away before there is an adequate plan in its place.

I remind you, sir, and I remind the minister that for all the tremendous progress we have made in the field of old age legislation—and I speak of that with some pride—we have not reached the end of the road. There is that very interesting document produced a short while ago by the Canadian Council on Social Development which assesses our retirement plans and says there is much that is yet to be done. One of the main elements in that volume is that the Canada Pension Plan needs to be greatly expanded and enlarged. If that were the case, if the Canada Pension Plan were paying pensions up to 75 per cent of the recent earnings of those who had left the labour market, that would be a different story from the case at present, where the most you can get out of the Canada Pension Plan is 25 per cent of the average of your recent earnings.

So I join in expressing approval of the progress we have made in terms of old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and the Canada Pension Plan, but they have not reached the point at which it can be said they are adequate and, therefore, people should not expect unemployment insurance coverage. This raises another question—and I am glad that not only is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration present but so is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)—regarding the attitude of our society toward persons between age 60 and 70. As you, sir, I hope, are aware, I am a strong advocate and a hard fighter for lowering the pensionable age to 60. I have made it clear in every speech I have made on the subject that what I advocate is that old age security and Canada Pension Plan benefits be available at the age of 60 for those who leave the labour market. In other words, I have not advocated compulsory retirement at 60 but, rather, legislation which would make it possible for those who wish to retire to do so.

It is in this connection that I am especially interested in the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development which argues very strongly that we should do something to remove the idea that there is any age at which one must retire compulsorily. That report has some critical things to say about pensions at 65 as we achieved them. Even though the report wants them improved, it points out that there has been a tendency to establish the proposition that people must retire at 65, are supposed to retire then, and that it is the ethical and social thing to do. I really think we have to adopt the more voluntary position that our legislation, both our old age pension legislation and our unemployment insurance legislation, should be designed to create a state of voluntarism, should be designed to make it possible for people to do either, that is, to stay in the labour market up to 65 or 70, if they wish, or to leave the labour market early.

I think one of the things that is wrong about this measure of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is that it seems to harden the notion about the age of 65, namely, that that is a point at which you should not be working any longer, you should not be in the labour market and you should not be drawing an income other than what comes to you by way of pension of one sort or another.

As I have said, I support vigorously those parts of the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development which state that we should do some more thinking—and I am prepared to include myself—as to what we do with regard to the decade from age 60 to 70. I do not like this measure because it flies in the face of thinking about the rights of people between age 60 and 70. You do not have to go back many decades to the time when those people had little or no rights at all. If they lost their jobs, as they did because of age, they had to depend upon their children or their relatives. They had no social life, no public life, they were left in the back room, they did not have clothes to wear to go out, they did not have car fare—in modern terms that is bus fare.

We have come a long way from that. Now we provide pensions that are more reasonable. We have medicare and free hospitalization for almost everyone, and certainly we have it for our older people. We have pharmacare in a number of provinces, and we have senior citizens' residences which make it possible for many of these people to enjoy accommodation which was unknown to them some years ago. That is fine. I am glad that we have made this progress. But there is a terrible tendency around here to think that because we have done something for older people—done a fair amount, if you will—that is the end of the story and there is nothing more we need to do. By this bill the government is in effect saying, "once you are 65, that is it. Enjoy your pension, enjoy your senior citizens' accommodation, your free hospitalization, medicare and all the rest of it, but forget it so far as being an active member of society or an active member of the work force is concerned."

I think it is wrong to do this. Certainly the whole decade from 60 to 70 should be a time during which persons, ought to have the choice either to work or to retire. What our legislation should do is, not fix things is some hard and fast way but make it possible for persons to exercise that choice. You do not do it if you say to persons at the age of 65, "You are not in the unemployment insurance picture any longer." That is what subclause (2) of clause 1 of the bill does. For these general reasons, and because I think that the whole proposition is unfair, I plead very earnestly that this House give serious consideration to this matter. Other colleagues of mine will have something more to say about subclause (1) and subclause (3) of clause 1 of the bill. An argument can be made against those subclauses such as the one made by the hon. member for Hamilton West, but I think they are far less important, either way, than what is in subclause (2) which cuts persons at the age of 65 off unemployment insurance. In many ways it is completely wrong and unfair.

As I said earlier, I thought the same about cutting them off at the age of 70, but it did not affect as many people and we did not have as many complaints about that action as we are getting now. There were not as many persons who had already built up some kind of entitlement because the law was changed, but there are many of them now who will suffer, when this bill goes through, the loss of entitlements for which they have paid. I think that for the government to bring the cut-off age from 70 down to 65 so soon after it seemed to make the age of 70 the age of retirement by law, is cruel and harsh. Therefore, I urge very strongly that the House support my report stage motion No. 2 which would cut subclause (2) out of clause 1 of the bill and leave Canadians the right to participate in unemployment insurance up to the age of 70.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to unduly extend the debate on Bill C-69, on which I understand all hon. members apparently have agreed, so that we can adjourn on December 19 for the Christmas and New Year recess. However, when a few weeks ago I raised in the House the question respecting the government's intention to deny people aged 65 to 70 any benefit entitlement, I was told my question would be answered in the House when this debate on the bill took place. Well, I trust the minister can give me a proper explanation for that amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act. However, having said that, I would remark that I had the occasion yesterday to meet with a number of people in that age bracket; three quarters of them are still gainfully employed and were concerned about the Unemployment Insurance Act amendment to deprive them of their benefit entitlement should they decide to retire.

Mr. Speaker, I can imagine those people remain on the labour market because they need a higher income to meet their commitments, because I guess with their old age income pension and even the supplement, their income would not equal what they get through their present employment. All that is depending on the fact that they have commitments which force them to go on working and the fact that their physical condition enables them to do so. However, if they are granted that benefit entitlement for three weeks only, they also will obviously become unable to contribute to the plan.

I would however like the government to consider very seriously the possibility of proceeding gradually, because it would be unfortunate that a great number of people who would have contributed to the unemployment insurance fund, and never or hardly ever derived any benefit from it, would be bereft in such a radical way of their right when they were in a position to take advantage of the legislation. I think the government would be wise to proceed by stages, so that those people would be informed beforehand of those changes and might prepare for them accordingly.

I would not, Mr. Speaker, elaborate on the statements made earlier by the two hon. members who spoke before me, because they actually pointed at problems which I consider to be extremely serious, and the arguments put forward with respect to the proposed amendments in clause I confirm the fact that those amendments in my opinion are quite appropriate because in this way we want to ask the government to review its position so as not to effect a too sudden change for those people.

Here is the second point it would be time to point out. If we finally decided to lower to 60 the age of retirement and old age security on a voluntary basis, which means that those who want to keep on working could do so, we should not exclude others from the benefits of the legislation which Canada can afford to provide to more people. I think there should be some link between the proposed amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Old Age Security Act. That being said, Mr. Speaker, I must sincerely support the amendments moved by the two hon. members and which appear as motions Nos. 1 and 2, because I think they are justified.

I hope that before completion of the study of the bill, the minister will consider the comments and ideas that hon. members will have expressed and that the government might be able to reverse its stand or still give explanations so convincing that all hon. members, I mean Parliament, will have to accept the bill.

● (1550)

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to say a few words in support of the motion introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I take some exception to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that only one of these subclauses be deleted. It has been mentioned that one subclause proposes to bring another category of workers under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and the other proposes to delete a group of individuals from participation in the plan.

I suggest that to bring an additional number of individuals under the provisions of the act at a time when the minister is using the argument of restraint, and to remove some others, is rather paradoxical. When we think of those who are to be brought under the provisions of the act, those who are sponsors of projects under programs conducted by the Government of Canada pursuant to any act of parliament,—some of these programs are LIP, OFY, CYC, and possibly others which may be introduced from time to time—it seems rather strange, at a time when the minister is contemplating disposing of such programs, that he now sees fit to propose that the sponsors of such projects be brought under the provisions of the act.

While these programs have done a great deal of good in many areas and in many respects, they are only palliatives at best. The problem is unemployment. These programs were brought about to provide employment opportunities for those who were unable to obtain employment, and if the government paid more attention to solving the unemployment problem in a long-term fashion rather than by these piecemeal programs, greater credit would accrue to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: In budget debate after budget debate, when the former minister of finance was bringing down budgets, he proclaimed the necessity of solving the unemployment problem and stated that the government was determined to do this. However, like some other promises, particularly with regard to inflation, we find that instead of getting better, the unemployment problem is getting worse, which just shows the complete inadequacy of the plans and proposals of the government to meet this very pressing problem in Canadian society.

Instead of bringing out these piecemeal programs and trying to put sponsors of projects on the UIC rolls, the government should be doing something to solve the overall problem; then we would not be faced with the necessity of doing so. It has been pointed out that these programs are short-term. LIP is an example of one of these. They are short-term programs; those who were engaged for a very short period of time would qualify to take their place on the Unemployment Insurance Commission rolls and receive benefit. It seems that when we tie this in with the additional provision of deleting those over age 65, it is cynicism at its worst. I would say in passing that programs such as winter works and winter employment expansion which were used in this country at one time were very effective in many respects, much more effective than even some programs that have been mentioned today.

I should like now to refer to the second proposal included in clause 1, the removal from participation in unemployment insurance of individuals over age 65. In the debates that took place in this House at the earlier stage of the bill, the minister stated that the unemployment insurance plan was not a short-term pension plan. Like a great many Canadians I could take exception to that and say that is just about what it is in many respects—a short-term pension plan. The minister also argued that other provisions had been made for people over 65 years of age, but I say they are still inadequate to meet the needs of our senior citizens. When the Canada Pension Plan was introduced, it was pointed out in the course of debate that it was an extremely poor investment program and that, considering the small returns or the benefits received after 45 or 50 years of service, it was not really worth while. I know improvements have been made to the plan, but I suggest it is still not a very good investment as far as the workers of this country are concerned. If you tie in with that the basic pensions that accrue to senior citizens today, I do not think they would justify the removal of this group of individuals from participation in the unemployment insurance program.

We think of those who would be affected by this measure, those who have made a tremendous contribution to the development and building of this country. I know it is almost trite to say it, but it is a fact that they have made a tremendous contribution. Now we find they are going to be put on the shelf. They can take work, and although they have been paying unemployment insurance for many years, if they are past age 65 they will not be able to receive benefits from the scheme. This is an insult to those individuals in the declining years of their lives who are without adequate resources and are unable to provide for their later years. One of the reasons they are unable to provide is that the government has allowed inflation to eat away their savings to the point that they cannot meet their needs. I think these people deserve better treatment.

I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who said that people should not be required to retire at any age. Here we have individuals who have gained a vast store of experience, knowledge and skills that would be of benefit to our society, but we are placing them at a disadvantage in saying they may continue to work but must not expect to participate in the unemployment insurance program. Put the two things together: people are allowed to participate after a brief period of employment, and another group of people have worked for years and years, many never claiming unemployment insurance, and now they will be told they cannot qualify for it.

Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in speaking in favour of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton

West because I believe this clause should be deleted in its entirety.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my contribution will be brief. The point has been made by other participants in this debate, but I should like to say a few words on how this issue strikes me in theory and in practice. With other members of the House, I have given a considerable amount of thought to the merits and disadvantages of this measure. I clearly understand the motive and the reasons of the minister and the commission in proposing the measure. Evidently it has the great advantage that it cuts down on all sorts of administrative control: you decide that any Canadian in the labour force above this age will no longer be a participant in the program, and therefore he or she is no longer the object of intensified administrative control. From the point of view of practical administration, therefore, and from the point of view of saving money on the program, this would appeal to anyone concerned with the difficulties of administration.

On the other hand, if one looks at the total issue and tries to avoid being drawn into rhetoric on the whole subject, it does not seem proper to exclude from the right to participate in this program anyone who wishes to be in the labour force, whether they be young or old. It seems to me that the way to make sure no one abuses this particular measure is to apply the same controls that we apply daily to everybody who has to turn to the Unemployment Insurance Commission for service because of reasons beyond their control. We all know this is done very effectively in the field every day, every week and every month of the year. If it can be done for people below the age of 65, surely it can be done for people over the age of 65.

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: There are people of this age still with family commitments because they started a family late in life. In addition, we have people who have assumed family responsibilities because of the sudden inability of parents to take care of their children and this falls to the lot of the grandparents. Then we have immigrants who work in this country and have not reached the residence requirement of ten years needed to qualify for the old age pension at age 65. A variety of persons in the age group over 65 are bona fide workers with attachment to the labour force, and they ought not to be disqualified from this universal right of contributing to and drawing from this general fund.

Therefore, it seems to me that if the administrator feels there is an abuse in this particular area—and the hearings in committee and the speeches made so far do not seem to indicate that this particular group abuses the scheme more than any other large group—this kind of screening and control would best be carried out by the commission itself. The liberal approach to this question would be that we do not look at the age or sex of the person, or any other consideration of that kind. We only look at the willingness of the person remaining in the work force and seeking an alternative job when the opportunity arises.

It does not disturb me that if a person in this age group, having worked for 40 years and having contributed for a long time, is allowed under the law to draw benefits for up to 52 weeks. Actually, this kind of consideration, retribution or a lengthy period of benefit-drawing, is an indicator to us as to the kind of program we should have. We should have a program of rewarding people in the labour force, one that would allow them to draw from the fund in proportion to the number of months, years or decades of contributions they have put into it. This seems to be the notion that you pick up when you speak to the workers.

If a person has paid into the fund for 31 years, he does not understand why he should not be able to draw a considerable amount from it. He wants to know why a person who has contributed for only eight weeks can draw almost as much from the fund as him if he becomes unemployed. It is perceived in the field by those for whom the scheme has been designed as a measure that is not quite fair. Those aged 65 or over could draw for up to 52 weeks if they were so entitled and if no alternative job could be found, provided search for a job has been demonstrated by the action of the claimant. I would have no objection to that at all. However, I do see the merit in tightening up the administration to ensure that those not legitimately searching for a job but just trying to beat the system would not be allowed to do that.

The legislative route with a legislative measure of this kind draws a very deep line between those below age 65 and those above it. It should, instead, be approached through a kind of administrative measure as we find it possible in the daily operation of the commission for people who are below that age.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on this clause. Everyone, of course, is for those who are 65 years of age. According to what the minister told us in committee, last year there were 17,500 in this group who were drawing benefits. According to labour force statistics, the average number of unemployed was 7,000. It is hard to believe that this government can be so hard up at this time in Canadian history. They have been preaching the just society and talking about being compassionate Liberals, yet they pick on those in this country who are over 65, completely wiping them out of the unemployment insurance plan.

How much money would it involve? The Canadian Council on Social Development—this was referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—made a study of those over 65 years of age. I am sure members opposite know they found that one-half of those people were living in poverty. Not only do we have a regressive tax system from which to fund this unemployment insurance plan, but we are "doing in" those over age 65, so much so that Mr. Baetz, executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, said:

—I have a good deal of heartburn over removing the age 65 and over from coverage. We all know that many of this group have effectively retired, the majority of them, it might be stressed, compulsorily, not necessarily of their own volition. We are also aware that some employers, in collusion with aging employees, have violated the spirit of unemployment insurance. Nevertheless, we must seriously ask whether it is sound social policy to throw the baby out with the bath water, to use a poor metaphor for this age group, by excluding all of this age group from further coverage. Should we not try again to find a formula that would accommodate those 65 and over who continue to have a bona fide attachment to the labour force? Surely, the principle of personal choice should be exercised here to the greatest degree possible.

With deference to the minister, I am sure that those in the gallery and others have done a considerable amount of study in the past month on the present situation in Sweden with regard to this problem and the handling of old age security. That is still on an experimental basis; it has not yet passed into law. As my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, stated, there is a voluntary aspect to the Swedish program.

We should not be cutting off from the labour force those 65 years of age. At one end of the scale we are keeping people in college for many years; they are cut off from the labour force. This, of course, results in better employment statistics. By cutting off all those aged 65, taking away their incentive to work by refusing to allow them to collect unemployment insurance benefits even though they have contributed to the fund, this also shows up in the employment statistics. As far as the government is concerned, it affects the revenue picture.

I strongly suggest that we listen to people such as Mr. Baetz. We do not like hearing this because most of us, especially those in this House, live a rather affluent life. We, of course, have heavy expenses. However, as long as I have my seat in this House I want to repeat that we have constantly to remind ourselves that in 1951, 20 per cent of the families of Canada, those on low incomes, were getting 4.4 per cent of the total economic pie, or the total GNP pie. In 1975, the bottom 20 per cent are receiving only 4 per cent. As far as distribution of income in this country is concerned, 60 per cent of the people are only getting 33 per cent of that pie, while 20 per cent are getting 44 per cent. I am proud of Canada, but I am not proud of that fact. I am not proud of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) who would treat those 65 years of age in the way they are being treated in this bill. That is a shameful, scandalous, Scrooge-like policy on the part of this government.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear at this point that I rise to speak in favour of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Certainly I could not support the sweeping amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). We have on this side of the House begged, cajoled and urged the government to embark on some kind of program—any kind of program—which would stimulate job opportunities in this country.

One of the direct ways it has gone about doing that is with LIP and with LEAP. We could make criticisms of those programs, but in effect they have attempted to get down into the municipalities and have attempted to create employment. Any move on the part of the government to include coverage under the unemployment insurance plan for the sponsors of LIP or LEAP programs—I stress here that I am talking about the sponsors of LIP and LEAP—to get them into the work force, possibly giving them some experience in that area so that they might find fulfilling jobs in the future, would meet with our approval.

The clause which my hon. friends and I are concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is clause 1(2) which deals with 65-year olds. I think it appropriate that the bill has come before the House at this time of year, just ten days before Christmas. There sits Scrooge. I can just see him in his dream. Instead of the clanking of chains, he hears the creaking bones. As far the minister is concerned and as far as his hon. friends over there are concerned, with the exception of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), they wish these 65-year olds would just go into a corner and get away from them. They don't want to be bothered. They just wish they would go away and be unemployed on their own.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Rodriguez: Members over there from the province of Quebec have a great deal of unemployment to deal with. I can imagine the number of 65-years olds who are involved in that high rate of unemployment. But they do not care. Any Liberal who can stand in his place and support the government on this particular clause has got be sleazy, mean and miserable like the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: The question which occurs to me is why the government, at the advice of its nabobs, has decided to bring in this measure. Having sat in the committee, having looked around at those sittings and having seen all the aparatchiks from the Unemployment Insurance Commission sitting around the room—at least 100 of them—I would like to commend the minister on his one-man attempt to solve the unemployment problem. All we have in evidence is what the minister tells us concerning the reasons for which he has brought the measure forward. The first reason he gives is that we have so many other social programs in the country. He tells us we have the Canada Pension Plan, the old age security plan and the guaranteed income supplement plan. He says in effect, the unemployment insurance program is not designed for people who are 65 years of age or over; it is not intended to be an income supplement for 65-year olds.

We tried to tell the minister during the committee hearings that nobody in our party had suggested we wanted to see the Unemployment Insurance Act used as an income supplement program for 65-year olds. The minister fails to realize, and his nabobs fail to realize, that people of 65 years and over who must still work should still have the choice as to whether they wish to stay under the coverage of the plan or not. After all, Mr. Speaker, it is a plan sponsored by the people of Canada and it discriminates when it prevents people who are 65 and over from participating in the coverage.

The fact of the matter is that the programs the minister talks about—the old age pension, the Canada Pension Plan, the guaranteed income supplement—provide workers of 65 years and over with a monthly benefit which is less than 39 per cent of the average industrial worker's earnings. These benefits were never intended by the government to provide adequate income as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) himself noted in an address made late in 1973, I quote his words:

> The Canada Pension Plan was not set up to provide full retirement income. Rather, it was viewed as the middle tier of a three-tier system; old age security, the Canada Pension Plan and private pension benefits.

This means that older workers must depend on a private pension to provide an adequate income. Statistics Canada has reported that less than 40 per cent of wage and salary earners have a private pension plan. We tried consistently during the committee hearings to bring home to the minister and to the government that when a worker becomes 65 years of age and becomes unemployed, he does not retire from the work force. He must seek work, Mr. Speaker. It is economically important that he continue to seek work. People do not all look forward to the day when they are 65 and will stop working to retire to the cottage, or to Florida. They must continue to seek work. Many of them still have dependants who need support. What the minister has proposed is to cut them loose from the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Act. What a miserly thing to do, Mr. Speaker.

What the minister has admitted—one of his nabobs, the Unemployment Insurance Commissioner, admitted it to the committee—is that there is some problem about the administering of this group of people. He states that the average number of weeks a person of 65 years or over collects benefits is 31 weeks, representing the sum of $2,800. He says this proves something of a problem for the administration. Surely we do not make legislative decisions based upon what is wise for the administration. Obviously, the minister and his nabobs do.

A 65-year old who is unemployed and seeking work and meets every other requirement of the act is not just a statistic to be administered. Surely we must not allow these people to be thought of in such cold and calculating terms. People in the age group 65 years and up find it very difficult to obtain work. The minister admits this is so. Nevertheless, provided they fulfil the requirements of the act, that is to say, are available for work, capable of working and are actively seeking work, they should be eligible for the benefits under any plan set up in Canada to benefit Canadians who meet the requirements. What the minister has coldly and calculatingly done is to eliminate them from that particular piece of government legislation.

We are not thinking of just a small group of people. Statistics Canada reports that the participation rate in the work force of those 65 to 69 years of age is 29 per cent. So we are not talking about a small group of people. The minister has said of these people—he has inferred it, and hinted—that they are dishonest, that they want to continue to collect private pensions and collect unemployment insurance benefits when they are not actively seeking work. But what the minister is really telling us is that his department is really incapable of enforcing the act. It came out during the committee hearings that the commission is able to segregate groups of people by sex and by age and, having done that, can enforce the regulations with respect to specific groups of people.

Mr. Symes: It is on the computer.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: Certainly it is on the computer. Well, then, surely they can do it for those aged 65 to 69. If it is possible in one instance, it is surely possible to enforce the act with respect to the 65 to 69-year olds, as it is, I would hope, to enforce the act with respect to any other age group and not just selectively on women or on 60 to 65-year old women. We should be able to enforce the part of the legislation that provides that a claimant must be available, capable of working and actively seeking work. Surely it is not beyond the capability of the legion of administrative nabobs that I heard from during the committee hearings to do this.

• (1630)

Mr. Symes: It is easier to make the elderly scapegoats.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) says that it is easier to make the elderly scapegoats, and it is. It is easier for the minister to do that under the guise that it is administratively difficult to enforce this provision. Indeed, he argues that since we have all these other "rich" social programs, the 65-year olds really do not need to collect unemployment insurance.

Have you noticed, Mr. Speaker, how the government restraint program is operating? It is beautiful the way the government restrains itself. Certainly there is no restraint concerning all the nabobs who were before the committee; I am sure they were making an everage of 25 G's a year. The restraint is for those least able to defend themselves, and there are three groups in society who fall into this category—children, women, and the 65-year olds and over. In this particular case the minister is picking on the 65-year olds and over.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Rodriguez: Certainly it is a shame. The minister comes from the same sort of area of the country as I come from, where it is difficult for a 65-year old to find work. Such a person is unemployed. He goes out to seek work and is conforming with the act in every instance, but he cannot find employment. The minister is telling this person that he has to live on his Canada pension, old age security and GIS, which may bring a grand total, in all its generosity, of about $3,000 a year. That is how the government restrains itself.

The government says it wants to save about $125 million. This does not include the $31 million that is due almost immediately, in 1976, to those who, under the government's amendment, become eligible for the three weeks' retirement benefit which I call a bonus. According to the minister, the government is saving, under the plan, about $89 million. It is of interest to note that when the legislation having to do with retirement of members of the Senate was amended to set 75 years of age as the retiring age for senators, those already sitting in the Senate were excepted. So far as we are concerned, this is restraint in the wrong area.

If the government were really interested in saving the unemployment insurance fund money, it would take action to increase productivity in this country. If it were interested in raising tax revenue in order to extend present programs, the answer, surely, is to reduce unemployment by even 1 per cent. If this were done, the consequent savings would be three times the saving that will be realized by the government's restraint program as it affects the 65-year olds and over.

Mr. Symes: Five times.

Mr. Rodriguez: Certainly five times. We on this side of the House are not alone in recommending deletion of the part of the clause having to do with the 65-year olds. The Canadian Labour Congress, which represents a vast number of those organized into trade unions, has advised that this is a regressive step at this point in time. Unemployment continues to rise with every monthly report from Statistics Canada. The Canadian Council on Social Development representatives appeared before the committee and also recommended that this amendment be not carried. But the minister is not interested in these opinions. He has already had advice from above, literally and realistically, and he intends to follow that advice.

If there is any doubt about the restraint program, the minister makes provision later in the bill for that particular clause to become effective January 1, 1976. This is why we have called this the Christmas present from the Liberal government to the 65-year olds and over. It is of interest to note that at least one member on the government side has had the courage, foresight, humanity and sensitivity to realize that what is being put forward in the legislation, by his colleagues on that side of the House, is indeed regressive and hits the 65-year olds and over very hard.

Mr. Symes: He is obviously a man of principle.

Mr. Rodriguez: He certainly is, and when the time comes for the vote on this amendment he will stand and be counted with the progressive forces in this House. As I have said, the minister hopes to save the plan some money, and I have suggested that he can do this by embarking on programs to create employment.

There is one other point to be made. This party has not suggested in any way, either inside or outside the House, that any person who does not conform to the act should collect employment insurance benefits. We must stress that point. The minister will later rise in this House and say that somehow or other we on this side of the House want these people to continue to rip off the unemployment insurance system. That is his own idea; he thinks that somehow or other the 65-year olds are dishonest. That is not our view on this side of the House at all.

We have said consistently that the minister can enforce the act. He has benefit control which, in effect, can sort out those 65-year olds and over who are not available for work and those seeking work actively and are capable of work. The minister should be progressive in dealing with this problem. It is surely not beyond the technical and administrative ability of the nabobs in the Unemployment Insurance Commission to separate legitimate claimants under the act from the illegitimate. That is what we said in committee as well as on second reading. This is what the government should be doing, rather than wiping out holusbolus the 65-year olds as if they did not even exist.

I know that the minister is going to reply, "We certainly don't deny the 65-year olds the right to work, and there is nothing in the amendment that prevents them from seeking work", and so on and so forth, ad nauseam. That is what he said in committee, as though he had been programmed to say that by the Unemployment Insurance Commission officials, who will be well taken care of when they are 65. They will not have to worry about collecting unemployment insurance, unlike those who have no pension plan through their employer but must depend on continuing to look for work, and to take work if it is offered, beyond the age of 65.

As I have already said, we are concerned with the 65 to 69-year olds presently active in the work force or who will become active in the work force. The minister tried to hide behind the argument in committee that somehow this gives the 65-year olds security. It is all one government and it is responsible for the old age security program in this country, the Canada Pension Plan and every other piece of social legislation at the federal level. The minister should not be allowed to duck or to escape his responsibility as a minister of this government to keep progressive legislation on the books, making it more progressive, and not regressive as he has suggested in this particular clause.

I urge hon. members of this House to stand and be counted when the opportunity arises, saying to the minister and his nabobs in the commission, who I might say are ill-advising him, that we do not want those 65 years of age and over, who must work and conform to the act, treated in such a shoddy manner by a government which starts restraint with others rather than with itself.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I already had the opportunity on second reading to say what I thought about that bill concerning individuals 65 years of age and over. Really I am surprised to see that the minister and his advisers have not seen fit to make proper amendments to that bill. It is truly unfair to try to have those regulations passed for the good reason that 65-year-old persons who have contributed during 30 or 34 years to the unemployment insurance fund are still anxious to work and take advantage of all the benefits of a legislation passed several years ago. And suddenly without any warning, the government makes such a decision.

I had even suggested that if only to lessen the after effects of this clause of the legislation we could at least do as we did when the old age security act was amended and begin at 69 years of age, then 68, 67, 65. I do not know why such a procedure cannot be used, because at least the older people would not be so taken aback with that unfair legislation.

But no, it seems the government wants to have this piece of legislation passed just as it is. I have also had on numerous occasions the opportunity to say that the main clauses of this act are always intended to protect the fund and, in the present circumstances, I would very much like to hear someone prove the contrary, because according to information provided us in committee, I find what they mean by that subparagraph "repercussions on implementing conditions". Indeed, these repercussions mean: disqualification of persons, 65 years or over; net reduction of costs: $120 million; persons involved, 170,000. What a beautiful Christmas gift to these 170,000 persons. Really, to draft such a legislation, one has to be totally devoid of any humanitarian sense; this is total nonsense. Estimations of basic cost for the year 1976, taking into account a 7 per cent unemployment rate, these estimates are based on that calculation. The 170,000 persons involved include 63,000 active claimants, aged between 65 and 69 who will no longer receive any benefits. And we seem to rejoice in this.

One would think that the technocrats who drafted this famous legislation and made the calculations submitted in committee greatly rejoice in depriving a group of workers who have contributed all their life to the maintenance of an unemployment insurance measure that was passed by this House, in this Parliament of Canada for all Canadians. And now they are told: You are not entitled to it any more. There will be some old age security legislation to replace this program advantageously. I shall say that it is not entirely true. If we take a look at some particular cases, we can see that many 65-year-old people are still willing and able to work and still have some responsibilities. Those who married late for instance and still have children at school.

Then, they need a relatively high income. Two lumbermen came to see me at home last week. They are brothers one is is 66 years old and the other 68. They had finished their work in the bush. They were in cracking form; they had cut many cords of wood during the summer and they asked me what they could do under this legislation and what they could expect from it. I told them: Make an application, the legislation is not passed yet and I hope that the majority of members will study thoroughly this clause and take it off from the bill. Those were the suggestions I made. And then, what surprises me most, is that hon. members have recently received, like ourselves, requests from several old age groups. I have here the recommendations sent by the secretary of l'Association des fonctionnaires à la retraite du Québec Inc. and it was, I am sure, sent to every Liberal and Progressive Conservative member from Quebec. How come those people did not take this seriously? Yet, I think it is clear in the second recommendation that the proposed amendment is unfair and discriminatory toward people aged 65 or more and who do not have a sufficient income to live decently.

During the current period of inflation which this government contributed to create, those people are told: You do not need benefits any more. Manage as best you can with your income, with the procedures you will have to follow to get several things under the old age security legislation. Of course there were some improvements in that respect, but in too many cases it is not enough and it all depends on the commitments those people have. They are still working and they expect to get eventually unemployment benefits as they have contributed to the fund for many years. But this was sent to all members; they are certainly aware of that matter.

From what is recorded in the report, I should be quite surprised if English province residents had not done the same thing. Hon. members of the Liberal party and Mr. Minister, you are in the right position to meet senior citizens and inform them that you have adopted legislation to favour them. It is easy to congratulate the aged and wish them the best of health, even when it is necessary to adopt bills which will deprive them of all the benefits of the current legislation. To conclude, I dare hope hon. members will wake up and vote in favour of the proposed amendment to strike out from the unemployment insurance bill this clause which would deprive people 65 years of age of the benefits they should rightfully collect.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the enthusiastic remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I wondered what part of the administrative anatomy a nabob was—either a serf in the department or at a higher level—and I had to go to the dictionary to find out. For that reason, I assume other persons who may be reading his remarks will wonder at which level nabobs are to be found, particularly in view of the fact the description has been used so often.

● (1650)

There are before the House in these amendments two ideas which are unrelated in terms of interpretation. One I can wholeheartedly endorse. The other I would support with some reservations. The amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which would withdraw the restriction in respect of unemployment insurance benefits for persons between age 65 and 70, would seem to be worth considering in light of the remarks of the hon. member for Nickel Belt in terms of the Unemployment Insurance Commission being in a position to sort out these people.

As has been pointed out by other speakers, many of these people must work, for personal reasons. There are no universal, supplementary pension plans in industry throughout the country that would enable a large number of these people to take advantage of any private insurance program. Therefore, what we really are talking about is the social security of the people of our nation which would go into effect at age 65, or in some instances at age 70.

We are not talking about any great sum of money. The amount involved is not what is considered the normal retirement standard of 60 per cent of one's income. Many hardships are placed on a number of people in this category and there is some unfairness, as has been pointed out by previous speakers. Two things bother me about the reduction in the age in respect of unemployment insurance. First, many people are not mentally tuned to retirement at age 65. I think this represents a larger category than those who may of necessity require unemployment insurance beyond age 65, or employment, as the case may be.

I think one problem in this country has been our inability to educate or to train people for retirement. People spend many years in a job which has become very routine, with which they are familiar, where they have friends and where in fact they spend a large part of their waking day. When that situation changes and a person finds himself in his home for 24 hours a day, he finds mental and physical problems develop. I do not think many of our senior citizens have been able to cope with this situation.

The minister, coming from an area where there were large bush operations and where the railroads were a major factor, will remember there has been a long history of political decisions having been made. These decisions were made in respect of fishermen, bush workers and railroad workers. These were political decisions which in my opinion represented abuses of a program which had been in effect. Previous speakers have referred to people who have come to count on being able to work beyond age 65. In many cases these people have never been unemployed, but they are now at an age where sickness may develop and when it may not be easy for them to find a job.

It may be necessary for many of these people, for the first time in their lives, to face unemployment, yet with this legislation they would have no protection in the form of unemployment insurance. I am not, and never have been, in favour of a situation like that in respect of railroaders who were granted six months' or a year's pay after retirement and were told they were entitled to draw one year's unemployment insurance benefits. That is a fact. They were never bothered, because the Liberal party looked at the number of seats that party held in railroad areas and made that political decision in exactly the same way the decision was made in respect of Newfoundland. That decision was also made in respect of northern Ontario, for the same reason, relating to the bush workers.

There have been some bad principles. I think that was a bad principle. It is a principle I cannot support. I do not support the idea that if one pays into unemployment insurance for 40 years, one is entitled to receive his money back. I do not think such a person should get the money back. I do not expect to get back the money I have put into life insurance policies. There will not be any more money there than I have paid in, in any event. One is insured for a specific purpose. Unless that event takes place, one does not receive any benefit. One insures one's house for fire protection, and unless it burns down one does not receive any money. One insures his automobile against an accident, and unless there is an accident there is no payment. I do not think one should get back the payments one has made over a long period into the unemployment insurance fund.

On the other hand, if for 30 years you have been paying premiums and expect some coverage, and then the government decides it does not want you in the labour force after age 65, the government may not be taking into account some of the problems you have. You may have married late in life and may have two or three children still at school. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be receiving the old age pension before his children are in high school.

An hon. Member: He does not need it.

Mr. Peters: Probably he does not need it. Some people, however, believe that what one does for himself one should do for everybody else, and vice versa. The Unemployment Insurance Commission can sort out the situation on its computer and determine whether or not a man has a good work record. The commission also has the advantage of being able to ask the type of questions they ask everybody in my riding. I am surprised that the people in the riding of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) are not having any difficulty with unemployment insurance. In my area, where there are ten times the number of people seeking jobs as there are jobs, every day someone is cut off unemployment insurance because he will not travel 200 miles to look for work.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to intervene at this time, but I must point out that the hon. member is incorrect when he says we do not have any problems in respect of unemployment insurance in my riding. Of course we have problems. At the same time, I must state that the staff of the Unemployment Insurance Commission have been good in this respect and we have been able to solve many of the problems. The hon. member should not mislead the House by saying we do not have any problems. That is my only comment.

Mr. Peters: I certainly accept that statement. I apologize. In listening to the hon. member, I had the impression that really the benefit control problem was not a problem any longer and that with respect to persons 65 and over it would not be a factor. I am sure the benefit control officer would be able to handle the problem in respect of people over age 65. I do not suggest it would be easy, because we know abuses would take place.

Many people want to get their money back. I am not in agreement with that. But I know of many persons between the age of 65 and 70 who, if they are not out looking for jobs and actively seeking work, are not able to support their families and must go on welfare assistance. This applies even to people beyond the age of 70. I know of many cases of people over the age of 70 who have to seek welfare assistance because employment is not available to them. I suggest that this could be worked out and that protection could be given to people at that age who are actually looking for work and are capable of taking it. There are many people who do not qualify because their health is not good, but there are many others in my area who are denied any kind of provincial or municipal assistance simply because they are not declared unemployable, and if they do get employment they cannot receive these benefits.

I should like to say a few words about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West to delete the whole of clause 1, which would affect the sponsors of LIP and LEAP projects. I agree that that clause should be deleted. However, it seems odd that we should include a qualifying sentence stating: "An individual referred to as the sponsor of a project in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) shall, for the purposes of this act and the regulations, be deemed to be an employer in respect of his remuneration from the project."

I assume that this presumption is put in there to indicate that he is not a government employee, yet he is self-employed. He dreams up the project and he administers it. As soon as the project is over, he can draw unemployment insurance benefits and start writing his application under the Opportunities for Youth Program or one of the other programs, and then perhaps qualify again. This can go on almost continuously. It would come under the same category as perennial students. They will be perennial sponsors of projects which they initiate. This is like planning your own business but not being allowed to decide when it ends; that is up to the ones who administer the project.

I am inclined to agree on the necessity to eliminate the whole clause rather than just the part contained in paragraph (2)(a), because I believe that although there are abuses, in the case of LIP and LEAP projects there is no need to establish under the act another category which I consider to be a political category. People in that category can provide employment and receive money for the project, and when the project is completed they can draw unemployment insurance. In many cases the length of employment may last no longer than the life of the project.

I hope the minister will give some consideration to amending the provision on retirement at the age of 65. It may not be so important in rural areas and in some of the urban areas where it is not hard to find a job, but it is of major concern in my area and in some other parts of northern Ontario where many people 65 years of age and over should be given special consideration.

I suggest that if the minister, who is also responsible for Manpower, wishes to do something in this field, he might allay some of my fears and the fears of some of my colleagues, and certainly those of some people who are about to retire, by considering the provision of a period of training before retirement. The aim of such a training program would not be the time of employment but, rather, the time of retirement. We might then be in a much better position to recommend to persons over the age of 65 that they retire, with the knowledge that the benefits they receive will be sufficient to allow them to maintain a reasonable standard of living.

Other countries which face this problem make sure that the pension plans provide in the range of 50 per cent of the salaries or wages earned in the five or six best years of employment, but we in Canada, despite the claim to the contrary of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), certainly do not come close to meeting the needs of many of the people who retire in this country. I hope that hon. members on all sides who are concerned with Canadians who have to retire at the age of 65 will give favourable consideration to the amendment before us, so that these people will find it less difficult to retire if they are allowed to do so gradually rather than being dumped off, as the hon. member who preceded me indicated, knowing that this Christmas will be the deadline for them.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External affairs; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social security; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Regional economic expansion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. Accordingly, this would also postpone a division on motion No. 2, which will stand deferred.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, are you not going to put the question on motion No. 2?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are having a procedural difficulty. The hon. member will agree with me that if motion No. 1 had been accepted by the House, there would not be a clause 1 in the bill, so motion No. 2 could not be put. We have to wait and see what happens to motion No. 1 before we can make a decision on motion No. 2. If the hon. member agrees with this, we will defer putting the question on motion No. 2. This is my opinion, but I am prepared to receive the opinions of hon. members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I just thought the point should be made so that we will have the right, when the vote on motion No. 1 is taken, then to call a vote on motion No. 2 if motion No. 1 is defeated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is one other point I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members. When he was in the Chair, Mr. Speaker suggested some groupings but he forgot to say anything about motions Nos. 3 and 5, appearing in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), which attempt to achieve the same purpose, to exclude people under sentence from the provisions of the act. I suppose the hon. member would agree that both of them could be debated together, and that one vote on motion No. 3 would automatically decide motion No. 5. Is that agreed?

Mr. Alexander: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-69, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in clause 4 by striking out lines 22 to 24 inclusive at page 2.

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-69, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in clause 5 by striking out lines 19 to 21 inclusive at page 3.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in prefacing my more concrete remarks I would say, without imputing motives, that any hon. member using his mind or his mouth to vote against this must have rocks in his head. It is my conclusion that, through implication, the government has indicated that crime does pay. Let us consider a hypothetical situation, a person who is a law-abiding citizen who, through the good graces of the work ethic, acquires an eligibility period and then goes sour for some reason or another. I cannot imagine a situation whereby he may go sour—but he then goes to jail.

The government says that after he comes out of jail he is entitled to pick up his eligibility period, because the government has now extended it to cover the amount of time he spent in jail. When I think of what the government has done with respect to our senior citizens, by indicating that it wants to remove them from the work force and thus from taking advantage of unemployment insurance, and on the other hand then saying that if a person commits a crime—and I am not talking about the merits—he is to be allowed subsequent to his release to pick up where he left off, I wonder what kind of nonsense this is.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Alexander: The government now says there should be a moratorium. If a chap goes to jail, I do not hear mortgagees saying that they are very sorry and that because he has gone to jail they will not call for payments. Can the minister advise me of any organization or institution which has moved into this area? Of course he cannot. I do not hear of banks, as a result of their loans which demand repayment, saying, "Gee, we are not sorry you stole from 'X' bank and not from us. We appreciate that, and as a result of this kindness we will not call for the repayment of the loan while you are in jail." They do not give a moratorium; you pay a penalty.

I get a little worried about this government. If a person, through a quirk of fate, ends up in jail, finance companies still want their money. All these institutions to which I have just referred demand payment and there is a penalty involved.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Alexander: There is my socialist friend with his big mouth. The hon. member, I am sure, will debate this point in his usual—

Mr. Rodriguez: Wise way.

Mr. Alexander: —wisecracky way, and he will be given that opportunity; but in the meantime I should like to finish. I am not trying to filibuster this bill because, unlike my hon. friend, I will make my point in a very short space of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: However, the hon. member will go on for days being repetitious and bringing in a whole lot of nonsense and extraneous material, and we will all have to sit and listen.

As I was saying, I think I have made my point. We must be concerned about what this government is attempting to do. We are all concerned about the rehabilitation of criminals. But why in the Unemployment Insurance Act? The minister and his officials stated that they received some representations. Representations from whom—the ordinary Canadian? Could the minister accept this if he saw his mother, a senior citizen, his father or his uncle in the twilight of their lives, being kicked out? If the minister thinks Canadians will accept this, that is a lot of nonsense. I plead with the minister to bring some sanity back into the Unemployment Insurance Act in terms of being at least fair and just.

There are not very many people involved in these two clauses. I think I have made my point. Under the circumstances, there is no way the minister can justify an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act which indicates to me and to all reasonable people that crime does pay, at the expense of our senior citizens. Therefore, I hope that after the minister gets a blast from one or two more speakers from this side of the House, he will ask that this clause be stood. The minister shakes his head. Shame. If the minister says no without giving this any further consideration, I think he ignores the reality of the matter.

Mr. Baldwin: The government is looking after its friends involved with dredging companies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Let the record show that the House leader on this side is a very wise man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1720)

Mr. Alexander: He understands the situation here. As I said, we do not want to hold up this bill unnecessarily, and we did have a good crack at it in committee. The minister understands our position. He understands that he has made a mistake. We would only hope by accepting that he could be wrong he would have second thoughts about bringing in these two amendments, particularly when it is noted what he has just done to our senior citizens. He plays Santa Claus to those who are incarcerated and plays Scrooge when it comes to our senior citizens.

My friend from Spadina (Mr. Stollery) laughs, but I know that a man of his worldly travels, with the understanding and compassion that he has expressed for senior citizens, knows that these two clauses are nonsense. If he is the kind of man I think he is, he might want to take part in this debate. But perhaps he has been misled like the rest of the backbenchers over there. They have a lot of sympathy with what we say, but they never get the opportunity to be honest with themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: They might be honest and say, "My God, the hon. member for Hamilton West is right on because he knows the direction the minister is taking." Mr. Speaker, we have to be extremely concerned about the principle the minister is espousing. He is calling for a moratorium on matters in which criminals are involved in terms of unemployment insurance. I think this is vile, odious and obnoxious and I hope that after listening to me he is convinced that I am right. I ask my colleagues on the other side to break away from partisanship, to bring a sense of justice to this place and vote in favour of the amendments related to clauses 4 and 5.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have known the official opposition for the last three years—such men as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). Their leader is a sensitive man who recognizes the need for reform, and that is why this particular amendment is put forward by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). We could never accuse him of being Santa Claus, but surely we could expect that his party would live up to the ideals of sensitivity and reformation and would correct past bad practices, enabling those who have been incarcerated because of their mistakes to fit into the fabric of society much more smoothly than in the past.

My party argues against this particular amendment. We recognize that prisoners who have been incarcerated probably have a difficult time obtaining employment. Surely any kind of society that would want these individuals to be reoriented into society must extend to them the things which we recognized prior to 1971. This is nothing new; it was part of the act prior to 1971. Surely these people are injured; surely they are suffering because of their own faults and their mistakes against society. Certainly these are not involuntary acts, as the minister said in committee, but many were made in the full knowledge of what was being done. But it is up to society to ensure that after a sentence has been served, double punishment is not being imposed. They have been behind bars, so surely we do not want to deny them support when they are released, whilst they try to get back into society.

I know the Neanderthals on the far right would find that a repulsive suggestion, but I appeal to the more enlightened minds in this House. I call on them to defeat this amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton West and to treat it as it ought to be treated, with immediate defeat.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a brief word. The clause under discussion is a very positive and liberal measure and the minister ought to be congratulated for it. Hon. members with good memories know that clause 4(b) resulted from debates held during private members' hour over the years. If I am not mistaken, during those debates a number of members from the Conservative side spoke in favour of a measure of this kind being included in any future amendment of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The argument was made, and quite rightly, that if you contributed to the fund for a certain period of time and then happened to get into trouble with the law, it would make sense that upon release from prison you could draw income support until you found employment. That is the aim of this clause.

We are not only in favour of the clause, and in opposition to the amendment proposed by the Conservative party, but we congratulate the minister for having included it in this bill.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is always unwise for a member to enter a debate that he has not followed as attentively as those who sat in committee, but I cannot help wanting to add a word or two. I would put them in the form of a question and perhaps the minister could respond next time he intervenes.

The point made by my friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), is born out of concern that we seem to be licensing unlawful activities. We all know that this country has a cadre of habitual criminals. It would seem that if this particular clause were accepted, a habitual criminal could establish his benefit rights and then for some reason find himself in jail. He can establish his right to benefits, be in jail for the winter, warm and comfortable, and pop out when there is no job opportunity in his trade classification or general work area. When such opportunity does become available, he could again provoke police authority and end up back in jail. Indeed, by wilful decision he could spread this over two or three years.

Mr. Alexander: Only up to two years.

Mr. Forrestall: Two years. If it is in fact suspended, you could have a new benefit period and supplementary period extending over three calendar years without any difficulty at all. This is not just a technicality. Anyone familiar with the comings and goings in our magistrates courts could, on the basis of their experience, find situations where this could occur. Should something like that occur it would be a travesty of justice, which is the point made by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very short; however, I rise to say that I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), because I do not think it is normal to find in one piece of legislation provisions which deprive senior citizens of benefits, and other provisions which encourage those who were convicted. So, if I understand the law correctly, somebody who has been in prison for, say, two, three or four months, and who has already contributed to the unemployment insurance program, would be eligible for benefits when he gets out of prison. I do not see anything in the bill which could prevent it. That means, therefore, that the law would protect criminals who have been sentenced to more than a year, that is 52 weeks. That is going a little too far. I do not really agree with that clause of the bill. I am willing to try to help those people by all means of rehabilitation possible, to try and find ways of giving them jobs. But, now we are encouraging them. The previous speaker said that there are people who manage to stay in a warm place during the winter and work for a few weeks—eight at least—to be eligible for benefits. Therefore, I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and other members on this proposed amendment. Somebody in an aside comment stated that the hon. member for Hamilton West was thinking of a filibuster. I do not think this is so. He is, of course, often full of bluster. Perhaps that is what was meant by the aside. Anyway he and I have had various exchanges of this sort.

I can defend the basic amendment in Bill C-69. I think it is probably a bit opportunistic to make the comparison he made about restoring this provision, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), that was in the previous act. That comparison to the other amendment we were debating a few minutes ago is odious, not relevant, and a bit politically opportunistic. In fact I wonder if that was not the reason for the attack on this particular amendment in Bill C-69.

As the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) indicated a few minutes ago, in the debate of several years ago when this matter came up, it was supported in almost every corner of the House, certainly in the corner occupied by the hon. member for Hamilton West and his colleagues.

There has been very considerable representation over the past two or three years, since the amendments of 1971, by provincial governments and many other organizations concerned about them. We are not rewarding crime. We are not making it pay off by any stretch of the imagination. We are simply saying that people who run afoul of the law after having earned unemployment insurance entitlement through legitimate work activity were, under the amendments of 1971, when the clock started ticking from the time they were incarcerated, losing their entitlement even though that incarceration might have been for a short-term sentence. We are simply providing 104 weeks in which that entitlement can be maintained. When they come out of incarceration they have to answer to all of the obligations under the act such as a job search, willingness to accept suitable work, and so on.

The amendment proposed in Bill C-69 is a decent amendment. It does not in any way encourage crime. It simply restores a position long established and accidentally left out of the 1971 amendments.

I would ask for the support of hon. members in denying the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton West and leaving as is the amendment in Bill C-69.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division. This disposes of motion No. 5 at the same time. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would at this time be ready to receive some argument as to the acceptability of motions Nos. 4 and 6, as suggested by Mr. Speaker in his comments at the opening of report stage on this bill, or any other suggestion, unless hon. members prefer that we suspend the consideration of motions Nos. 4 and 6. I leave it to hon. members.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems that the arguments are not too prolonged and could be disposed of at this time. I see that the mover of this motion is here.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, what I have attempted to do with Section 18 of the act is to extend and expand the classes to which the extension of the clarifying period would apply. This is not foreign to this particular section.

Those on legal strike or attempting to go into self employment and fail were covered with this section prior to the 1971 changes. As the minister stated about those who are incarcerated, these people were left out when the new act came into being in 1971. What I am attempting to do is put back into Section 18 something which had been included prior to 1971.

I cannot quote reams and reams of Beauchesne and back it up with procedural arguments. I am asking that this motion be allowed to be debated and voted. Surely the members of this House can decide whether they would like those two groups included in Section 18. If members are permitted to move motions to delete certain classes, it is only logical that they be permitted to add classes. This ought to be a two-edged sword that can cut both ways for members of parliament.

I do not hold myself to be an expert on parliamentary procedure. I prefer to leave those matters to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. Nevertheless it seems only common sense that if we can move to take out certain classes from the bill we ought to be permitted to move motions to add classes.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has just established what is unacceptable about this motion. He says quite candidly that it adds classes extending the Unemployment Insurance Act as amended in 1971—classes which were certainly not contemplated in Bill C-69. In his opening comments about the admissibility of certain of these motions the Speaker referred to citation 246(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition. I believe this citation clearly demonstrates that the motion is unacceptable on the ground that it does add classes and constitutes an additional financial burden. Beauchesne reads as follows:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

On those grounds, Mr. Speaker, motions No. 4 and 6 are not acceptable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would first of all bring it to the attention of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to change the rules. It is the duty of the Chair to apply the standing orders and to abide by the precedents and practices established. I have no objection to the hon. member making the point that the powers which private members enjoy might be extended, but I would point out that to accomplish this the basic rules of the House would have to be changed, even the constitution, since the proposal the hon. member puts forward would seem to imply setting aside precedents which have been followed for many, many years, and the provisions of the BNA Act.

The hon. minister, it seems to me, has correctly cited the precedents. Citation 246 in Beauchesne is clear on the subject, and if the hon. member wishes to consult another author he might read Erskine May, page 508 in the eighteenth edition, where it is stated that an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or goes beyond the scope of a bill.

The hon. member knows that in accordance with our practice any expenditure of money has to be accompanied by a Royal recommendation. When one looks at the bill one finds that the Royal recommendation does not specify the enumeration of persons to be included or excluded but is attached to a measure in which one finds these specifications. So even if the hon. member is tempted to make the argument that the Royal recommendation is sufficiently open to include the persons he wishes to include by his amendment, in my view the Royal recommendation is limited by the bill, the hon. member's proposal would go beyond the bill, and would create an additional burden on the finances of the country.

I would refer the hon. member also to page 510 of May, eighteenth edition, paragraph 12, where it is stated that amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed.

In the light of all these considerations the Chair must reject the motions as proposed by the hon. member. Motions four and six cannot be accepted.

As suggested by Mr. Speaker, we should now proceed to the consideration of motions 7, 8, 14 and 15. It was suggested that these be debated together and that they might be disposed of by a division on motion No. 7. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Alexander moves Motion No. 7:

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 6.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Rodriguez moves Motion No. 8:

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 6.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Alexander moves Motion No. 14:

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 12.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Rodriguez moves Motion No. 15:

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 12.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have had some delightful news from my House leader. I may not reveal it at this time because it is extremely confidential but I can say it is most encouraging in terms of Christmas—I will put it that way. Therefore I do not intend to take up much time.

An hon. Member: Is Christmas coming this year?

Mr. Alexander: What we are attempting to bring home to the government is the unacceptability of the amendments it has produced with respect to the poor. This amendment of mine affects those at the lower end of the income scale.

● (1750)

Section 24(1) of the Act provides as follows:

The rate of weekly benefit payable to a claimant for a week that falls in an initial benefit period

(a) in the case of a claimant without a dependant is an amount equal to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of his average weekly insurable earnings in his qualifying weeks or twenty dollars, whichever is the greater,

Pausing there, this provision applies to a person who, without a dependant, is entitled to unemployment insurance equal to 66⅔ per cent of his insurable earnings. Then in the same provision, the government, in its wisdom, said, "Just a minute, we must be more concerned, rightly or wrongly, about those who have dependants and are faced with financial hardship". The key phrase there is "who have dependants". Therefore section 24(1)(b) went on to provide:

—in the case of a claimant with a dependant is an amount equal to

(i) seventy-five percent of his average weekly insurable earnings in his qualifying weeks or twenty dollars, whichever is the greater—

In other words, in 1971 the government said the amount for single people is 66⅔ per cent of their average weekly insurable earnings and for those with depedants 75 per cent. This could have been questioned in the first place in terms of pure insurance. But this is not the only area in which the government moved away from the principle of pure insurance; sickness and pregnancy were added, I think as a result of the International Labour Organization convention which declared that these events amounted to the involuntary removal of a person from the work force. The insurance scheme, as it were, was destroyed at that time, even though I have continued to bring home to the minister that we want a program that is insurance oriented, not one combined with welfare or one that destroys the work ethic.

In Clause 6 of this amending bill the government is providing as follows:

Subsection 24(1) of the said Act is replaced and the following substituted therefor:

"24.(1) The rate of weekly benefit payable to a claimant for a week that falls in an initial benefit period is an amount equal to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of his average weekly insuranble earnings in his qualifying weeks or twenty dollars, whichever is the greater."

In other words, everyone will now receive the percentage of 66⅔ per cent in the initial benefit period, and I wonder why. Upon questioning the minister we find that the amount of money to be saved is something like $30 million, though to be fair to the minister this is out of a total of some $3.75 billion. I think the minister thought I was going to say $4 billion.

Mr. Andras: It is $3.4 billion.

Mr. Alexander: In the long run I think it will be $3.75 billion. In other words, to make it look as if the government is credible in its attack on the high cost of unemployment insurance we are going to shaft the poor. The government has forgotten all about the reasoning used by the minister's predecessor, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), in 1971 as to why this provision was necessary. He related it to the cost of food and shelter. We all cast a quinzzical eye on that move, but nevertheless it made sense.

Things are even thougher today as a result of the government's archaic approach to the fight against inflation, especially now that we have a bill that will not work. The dependants who require this extra money are going to be the ones hardest hit. At the same time there is going to be an increase in premiums. We do not like the flip flop of the government in this regard, which says that because dependants get $20 per child under the Family Allowance Act they no longer need nor should they require benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act at an extended rate in the initial benefit period.

I say that the payment under the family allowance scheme has nothing whatsoever to do with unemployment insurance. You pay your money and you get your benefits, as they say in the street, and that is as it should be. For some reason the minister wants to save money. He may be saving money, but at the same time, with the environmental malaise that a lot of these people suffer from, further payments will have to be made under our social assistance plan since the minister feels that what was right for 1971 is wrong for 1975.

I see it is now six o'clock, so may I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

Unemployment Insurance Act

AFTER RECESS

The House met at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion no. 7 which, for the purpose of discussion, has been grouped together with motions nos. 8, 14 and 15, and it stands in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, when I called it six o'clock I was trying to bring home to the government as vividly as possible the error of its ways in respect of the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which deal primarily with fighting the high cost of unemployment insurance on the backs of the poor.

I attempted to indicate that the reason the bill stands as it does is that the government, back in 1971, had some compassionate feeling for those faced with the high cost of food, shelter, and clothing. At the time the government felt that if a person had a family or dependants that person should be recognized as such. Now, as I stated earlier, it seems that the government is taking from the poor in order to give to those who are pregnant.

The government's reasoning now seems to be that it does not want the scheme to be a welfare scheme and is trying to move in the direction of a pure unemployment insurance plan or an insurance scheme. Let me point out that so far as this principle of unemployment insurance is concerned, it is destroyed once the government moves in the direction of recognizing pregnancy as a sickness for the purpose of the plan. It is interesting to note that the government did not move in this regard in violation of the principle, but rather in favour of pregnancy, making coverage even more flexible. It seems to me there is an undue amount of hardship being placed on those who are at the bottom of the economic ladder, at this particular time of high inflation and high cost of living, making these people feel the pinch even more.

What is even more strange is that the clause, as I understand it, subject to check by the minister in his usual style, is talking about $5 per person. This is the type of saving the government anticipates when it is referring to savings of some $30 million.

I was impressed by one or two briefs that were presented to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration when it dealt with the bill clause by clause. We heard from the Council on Social Development, represented by Mr. Reuben Baetz, and we also heard from the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I express my appreciation to those people for having taken part in what I felt at the time, and now know, was a very significant debate.

Let me read just one part of the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress. I realize I may be repetitious in this regard, but I want hon. members to know how concerned this group is about the moves the government is engaged in at this particular time. The brief states in part:

> In a time of rapidly rising prices it is inconceivable for the government to remove this protective clause from low income earners who are struggling to maintain themselves and their families. The loss of 25 per cent of their original earnings is bad enough without the government knocking them even further down the economic ladder.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

It seems to me the government is attempting to achieve restraint by taking $5 per week from these unemployed with dependants' earnings at a maximum of $3,200 per year only. That is when the circumstances are the most dire and the recipient could most use the money. In light of the fact that the new principle of unemployment insurance has been destroyed in any event by the government recognizing that sickness and pregnancy benefits should form part of unemployment insurance, then it seems to me that it is morally wrong at this time to remove this very small bit of protection for those who are with family, if you like, and who are counting on this amount of $5 a week.

● (2010)

In conclusion I would state it is wrong for the government to take from the poor—I do not say this lightly—and give to prisoners in order to bring about a facade in terms of amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. These small reforms dealing with the aged and the poor mean nothing whatever. What should occur is that the government should move in an area whereby it can initiate policies that would bring about a satisfactory employment level. We will get into that later when it proposes to move the bench mark up to 5.6 per cent on an eight-year moving average.

This is where the government must move if it wants to make money. It must bring down the interest rate and bring down the eligibility period whereby someone can become eligible for unemployment insurance after being involved in the work force for a period of eight weeks. The minister should direct his attention to this particular clause. The fact is that after being in the work force for eight weeks one can continue for a period of 40-odd weeks as a recipient of unemployment insurance. Surely if the minister wants to do something for the Canadian people he should direct his attention to those two areas. He should convince his colleagues on the front bench to bring about a meaningful policy to reduce unemployment and, second, to move in on the eligibility period. Then I am sure he would get all the support required on this side of the House.

In the meantime I would ask the minister to pay particular attention to the speakers who will follow me in this regard because I am sure I speak for not only those on this side of the House but for many of my other colleagues who, for one reason or another, will not stand up and give voice, or be counted as my hon. friend says.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, once again we witness an attempt on the part of the government to embark upon restraint. Once more we embark on restraint. Earlier today we saw the initial move toward restraint. Who was the government restraining then? It was restraining those people 65 years of age or over, eliminating them from benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Now we find another group being restrained. One would think that perhaps this is a very powerful group. We find it is a group of Canadians who, through no fault of their own, have become unemployed. We should ask ourselves what group it is which receives the extended benefits and the dependency rate under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Is this group composed of those who have earned the top buck while working and before becoming unemployed? Let us find out.

The people in this group are the claimants whose earnings were less than one third of the maximum, $185 a week, or in other words less than $62 a week, because the scheme is based on a percentage of earnings. Therefore workers with families, particularly those on low incomes and in severe difficulty, even when employed would face extreme hardship.

Let us look at these workers who earn $62 a week or less. One of the statistics provided by the minister shows that this particular group of workers which will become unemployed represents .2 per cent of the total claim load. It is interesting to note that when we go to the extended benefit period that particular group becomes 7.4 per cent of the total claim load.

Mr. Speaker: Presumably the House will want to resume at this point.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Deputy of His Excellency, the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will want to know this is probably Colonel Fortier's last appearance in this role.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (2030)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-79, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1975—Chapter No. 74.

Bill C-73, An Act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada.—Chapter No. 75.

Bill C-2, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.—Chapter No. 76.

Bill S-27, An Act to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.—Chapter No. 77.

Bill C-76, An Act to wind up The King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund for Canada and to authorize the sale of the assets and securities of the Fund and to transfer the sale proceeds and the balance of moneys to the National Cancer Institute of Canada.—Chapter No. 78.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and of motions Nos. 7, 8, 14 and 15 standing in the names of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I was asking before I was so rudely interrupted—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: —who are the latest victims of government restraint? I am most concerned about this because tomorrow the government will announce its restraint program, and what it is prepared to do to cut back its expenditures so that it can show to the Canadian people that it is about to fight inflation. If this legislation is an example of what we saw earlier this afternoon when the government brought in an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove 65 year old people from contributing and collecting under the act, then we will see another aspect of that restraint program. I fear what is to be announced tomorrow in terms of the sacrifice the government is prepared to make on social legislation and on social programs in its so-called fight or great war against inflation.

Who are these people who are getting the dependency rate? We are told by the government and by the Unemployment Insurance Commission nabobs who are in the gallery that these are the people who earn $62 or less. They are the people who qualify for the dependency rate provided they have one, two, three, or more children. I was pointing out earlier that the minister told us in committee that this group of persons who are collecting the dependency rate represent .2 per cent of the total claim load. It is interesting to note that in the extended benefit period it jumps to 7.4 per cent of the total claim load, and that is an important distinction to make because these are the people who are the poorest of claimants and who obviously are the longest on unemployment insurance.

It is absolutely imperative that if these people are spending so much time on unemployment insurance, there ought to be some make up for the cost and the upkeep of their dependants. We might ask what was at the back of the mind of the government when it brought in this clause in 1971. Surely there must have been a reason for it in the first place. I realize that the government does not need reasons, but all we can go on is the report which was prepared for the particular minister at the time. It is interesting to note that it is called "Some background notes on the unemployment insurance program", and this deals with the dependency rate. These are the reasons, and I quote:

Studies indicated that the benefit structure should permit the unemployed worker to meet at least non-deferable expenses while in search of new work. Economists estimated that about one third of a family's expenses could be deferred for a short time and it is for this reason that benefit payments in the initial stages of the program are set at two thirds of a claimant's average weekly earnings.

In the later stages, benefits can be raised to 75 per cent of average earnings if the claimant had dependants, because non-deferable expenses become more critical if unemployment persists.

That is important in light of the information the minister provided in committee, that in the extended benefit period that group grows to 7.4 per cent of the total claim load. This report went on further to state the following:

As well, the low income groups, i.e. those earning $50 a week or less at the time they become unemployed, are permitted the dependency rate from the outset of their claim in recognition of their lesser capability to absorb a drop in income.

These are the people against whom the government is proceeding with its restraint program. It is not proceeding against the powerful but against those who are the lowest paid while they are working and those who have dependants to maintain.

What reason could the government have for bringing in this kind of amendment at this particular time, that is, the measure to reduce everyone to sixty-six and two-thirds? The government has said that since it has improved family allowance benefits, etc., there is no real need any more for this kind of dependency allowance. Let us consider that for a moment. One has to be a pretty hardhearted chiseller to chisel poor people out of a dependency rate.

The government would have our 100 per cent support if it were really attempting to do the kinds of things which ought to be done in terms of fighting inflation. For example, all it has to do tomorrow is to bring in a bill to suspend the 7 per cent increase for members of parliament and the maximum of $2,300 or $2,400, and this party and this corner of the House would certainly support that. That would really be action against those who have in our society. But what does the government bring in? It brings in this kind of clause which takes a real swat at those who can least defend themselves.

As I was saying, what is the argument? Family allowances are up. Let us consider that. The grounds for this change are the increases since 1971 in family allowances, which for a family with three young children, have risen from $18 to $66 per month. Considering the fact that family allowances were low in the first place, that they are now taxed, and that the increase amounts to an additional $3.71 per child per week at a time when inflation alone has increased the costs per child for a low income earner by a minimum of $4.50 per week, there is absolutely no justification for the government to reduce the benefit rate to unemployed workers with dependants, many of whom are at or below the poverty level. What does the government say? It says it has brought in family allowance increases. I have just demonstrated that the family allowance increases are a sham. How many times can the government use that as an excuse?

In my hands I have a press release regarding the extension of the fluid milk subsidy. The government announced on August 16, 1974, that the fluid milk subsidy would be dropped. It was being dropped because it had increased the family allowance. Time and again subsidies that would help the poor people have been dropped, and the reason given was that the family allowance had been increased. How many times can the government use that argument, Mr. Speaker?

● (2040)

Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) pointed out very effectively that we have done nothing to redistribute wealth. After a hundred odd years of fiddling with the Income Tax Act we have not approached that problem at all. We find that the poor people of this country are no richer than they were a hundred years ago. There has been no appreciable change in the redistribution of wealth, and every time the government has to fight inflation or tighten the belt it is the poor people who suffer. The government can spend millions and millions of dollars on new aircraft for NATO, and hundreds of millions for leasing tanks and armoured cars, but it does nothing to eliminate poverty. Instead it brings in this kind of amendment and asks us to make decisions with respect to cutting the dependency rate for those who earn $62 per week or less.

It is not coincidental that at the same time this House approved Bill C-73, the anti-inflation bill, the government was fiddling with the Unemployment Insurance Act and redefining what is an acceptable rate of unemployment. From 1968 to 1972 every time the government had to fight inflation it was on the backs of those least able to defend themselves.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was proud to boast that he was prepared to let the unemployment rate rise to 6 per cent and that he was going to hang tough. It has risen beyond that and it is very difficult to bring it down, but what does the government do? It does not bring in measures to improve employment opportunities; it brings in measures which will only create hardship for those who can least defend themselves.

What else has the government said in committee about the dependency rate? It said that if a person applies for a job he is not paid on the basis of whether he has dependants. There is a pay scale and he fits into that. The minister wants to extend that argument to the act. We know that the act is not an insurance act, Mr. Speaker, because it is not based on any actuarial study. We can insure fishermen and lumbermen, but we do not pay rates according to groups and the incidence of unemployment in those groups. There is a rate and everybody pays it. It is not an insurance scheme but more a wage replacement scheme in case of unemployment, and in many cases it can be predicted when unemployment will occur, yet there is no differential in the rates.

The argument that the unemployment insurance scheme is not a bona fide insurance scheme is not a good one. While it may hold true in the work place that a person should not be paid on the basis of his number of dependants, surely when the government sets an earnings limit of $62 it cannot then tell the workers that they are going to lose 66⅔ of their weekly income. How in heaven's name does it expect to come to grips with the disparity in incomes by proceeding that way?

Figures presented by the minister to the committee showed where most of the unemployment insurance money goes in this country. A great deal of unemployment insurance benefits goes to the maritimes, for example, and similarly in parts of Quebec a great deal of money is transferred from the central fund of the Unemployment Insurance Commission directly into the hands of people in areas of high unemployment.

We have said, and it is a truism indeed, that the answer to the problem of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is unemployment itself. But the government is not addressing itself to the problems of unemployment in Canada. Bill C-73 does nothing about unemployment, it does nothing about the 82 per cent of plant capacity we are using at the moment, and it does nothing about the 700,000 people who are idle. Instead the government proposes to redefine the unemployment insurance rate and to tackle the old unemployment insurance act.

We in this party object to the removal of the dependency rate from the Unemployment Insurance Act. The reasons given for a dependency rate when the act was introduced in 1971 are as justifiable today as then. Those who are receiving this dependency rate need it. From my experience, those who are on benefits, those who come to the M.P.'s office for help with the commission are the poor people, the least educated, those who have great difficulty reading and understanding the act and the application forms. People who are wise and can handle the reading level of the application form and the act can certainly handle themselves when it comes to obtaining benefits.

This particular aspect of the government's proposal is one which we cannot support. We feel that removing the dependency rate can only acerbate the problem and, as a result, we recommend support for motions Nos. 7 and 8.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just a few comments on the motions that are now before us, that is motions nos. 7, 8, 14 and 15, which have been grouped together by authority of the Chair. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, the hon. members of this House went to the other place where Royal Assent was given to a few bills. This is an interesting and impressing ceremony that should urge us, as members of Parliament, to think more about our responsibilities and to consider very carefully the various bills that will become laws after they receive Royal Assent, laws that all Canadian taxpayers should obey and respect.

Therefore, it is our duty to thoroughly discuss all bills before us at their various stages and to amend them, if need be, in the most efficient way to make them as sound as possible and consistent with our way of life, so that Canadians who are called upon to respect and observe the laws passed by Parliament may have absolute confidence in them.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments proposed under motions 7, 8, 14 and 15 should be studied in the most objective way as they are of interest to all members. I often reflected on the Unemployment Insurance Act. As the number of unemployed is rising alarmingly in our country, more Canadians must have recourse to this legislation to get benefits for which they have paid.

As it is presented, the bill provides for reduced benefits for several groups of claimants. As it was passed by Parliament some years ago, the legislation aimed at protecting workers who were occasionally and accidentally unemployed against running into debt. They were asked to contribute to a fund in order to get some benefits during their period of accidental unemployment.

I recall that when I was secretary in a municipality, I often had to fill forms for workers who became accidentally unemployed to help them benefit from this legislation during their period of unemployment and, if my memory serves me well, the amount of the benefits was much lower than today. It was $14 a week for workers with a family and less for single persons.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think that because of an economic situation that could be corrected by this Parliament if we really wanted, if we really assumed our responsibilities, because of an economic situation compelling many people to stay inactive and unemployed.

As the situation worsened, the Canadian government brought forward some amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, as regards the weekly amounts to be paid. But, in 1971, the act was amended in such a way that one was entitled to get, if one had a dependant, 75 per cent of one's salary. I think that at that time, the House of Commons passed a wise legislation that recognized the responsibilities of the head of the family towards his dependants.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-69 is to reduce benefits from 75 to 66⅔ per cent of the worker's salary. In my opinion, we will be failing in our duty if we pass this bill in its present form. Actually, if we are to admit that a person has the responsibility of one or more dependants, we have to provide him with an additionnal benefit, to allow him to meet his obligations. I understand the principle that says "equal pay for equal work". This is a well-known principle of economics, which emphasizes the truly human aspect of our country, and of our statutes. We wanted to recognize in our laws a basic right, the responsibility of individuals with a dependent wife or children.

We should not move backward. We should continue to progress and keep this legislation into effect to enable those who have greater responsibilities to enjoy higher benefits. While those motions are under consideration, I would suggest some amendments which I think are quite effective. I admit that when an employer has an unmarried person or the head of a family who render him equivalent services, he must pay them alike. However, since we live in society and must encourage those who assume the responsibility of raising children to give the best to society, that is human capital, through our laws we must promote the fulfilment of that vital cell called the family and recognize to the head of a family the right to a supplement enabling him to face his responsibilities. I am tempted to say something. What I will say will not fetch votes for a politician who wants to get re-elected, but we must at times take risks and we must speak plainly and this is what I want to do this evening when I say the following.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is going through very difficult times, being the neighbour of a great country which is economically strong, but suffering from a terrible fever. The newspapers are reporting on this situation and, because we are the neighbours of this great country, when the economy of the United States is strained economically, automatically so is Canada's.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we must take the necessary medicine to be able to recognize that, in our society, it is not normal to pay each week to the unemployed wages which are as high as those paid to the employed. The time has come for us to think about that, because it is shocking sometimes to hear some people tell us to our faces: Why work? Why get up early in the morning to get to work? The government chops off three quarters of the salaries through taxes and levies. Whereas when someone lives on unemployment insurance benefits or on social welfare, at least he does not waste his health nor his clothes, he does not make any effort and he gets as much as those who work.

An hon. Member: The average is $74!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): If the hon. member wishes to express his opinion, he should resume his seat and wait till his turn comes.

In this situation, we must consider things as they are. A great many employers could expand and produce more, which would help fight the plague of inflation, but they cannot get workers at salaries allowing them to produce at a cost which could bear foreign or national competition. Many very gifted industrialists are giving up the idea of expanding, creating employment, increasing their production and helping our country pull out of an economic situation that need not be desperate if the Canadian Parliament were willing to take the necessary steps to solve the situations that can be solved through appropriate legislation. Mr. Speaker, criticizing alone is useless; proposals must be made, measures passed to encourage workers to depend on work as the instrument that will enable them to earn a decent living.

Mr. Speaker, whoever earns a fairly high salary and who, because of a special situation, is laid off for reasons over which he has not control, should be given an amount equal to his salary, because his unemployment is accidental and will last only a few weeks. He will soon be called back by his employer and asked to reintegrate the work force. But whoever banks on an act that will allow him to go to work, at times nonchalantly, to then enable him to get unemployment insurance for 52 weeks, deserves a decrease in payments because he is not encouraged to work, to make a personal effort and contribute to our social and economic life. In fact, the amendments now proposed to the present act place on the same footing he who takes his work to heart and he who works reluctantly.

That is why, in my opinion, the amendment to the bill on unemployment insurance, Bill C-69, is not quite appropriate and why I support amendments 7, 8, 14 and 15 because they maintain the status quo in favour of those who want to work, to go back to work as soon as possible to earn a reasonable and decent living.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the consideration of a bill like Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, is a good opportunity for the House of Commons to remember the first law of work which was given us by our Creator and which says: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." We all agree, Mr. Speaker, to eat our bread in the sweat of our faces, but we do not want an economic system which has no respect for those who have such courage.

We want an economic system which would allow those who are willing to work to find a job; and if by accident they become unemployed, we want them to be protected by an adequate legislation which will uphold the sacredness of any human being who wants to earn a living through his work.

That is how I look at things, and that is how I wanted tonight to briefly tell you my thoughts, honestly and objectively, to induce a true reflection on those amendments to the act, so that those changes will provide incentives to those who want to work.

A lot of things can be achieved through work; work can change the whole economic aspect of a nation for it is disheartening for those who work, those who get up early, who go to work in spite of snow and ice, to see other people draw their curtains and make fun of them passing by.

Mr. Speaker, I think 800,000 unemployed in Canada is too much. We can control the situation by passing legislation to provide incentives to work and to encourage employers, businessmen, intelligent Canadians to give our nation what best they can offer through initiatives in keeping with their abilities and intelligence; those brave people could thus provide their fellow citizens with an economic development and a level of production which can be achieved here, and we would not have to import what we can produce in our country. Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Act should be viewed in its true context. It is a legislation for particular circumstances, aimed at helping those who, as I said earlier, are accidentally faced with unemployment, so that they do not run into debts.

Such is the fraud of unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker, and if we are not intelligent enough as members of parliament to view it in its real context we will by that very fact have failed to assume our responsibilities and generations to come will have to judge us; and if their judgment is severe, we will have to bow our heads and accept it.

[English]

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, mine will be a very short intervention. It seems to me that the government, in its effort to reduce the cost to the general taxpayer of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, has done very well by introducing at least three measures which are worthy of support.

It has increased the premiums to be paid by employers and employees, while at the same time increasing the moving average above which it must contribute to the plan. formerly this was 4 per cent but the rate is now to be brought up to 5.6 per cent. It is also proposed to eliminate the measure commonly known as advanced payments. I find these measures commendable considering the fact that the government wishes, and understandably so, to reduce the tax burden on the shoulders of the taxpayer. However, when it comes to this particular measure I think perhaps an alternative approach would have been preferable. I would have looked very hard in the direction of increasing by a number of weeks the period before which a claimant becomes eligible for unemployment insurance.

As we all know, at present the period is eight weeks. I have the impression that employers in particular are rearranging their employment plans around this provision to take advantage of this period of only eight weeks. I would have preferred an alternative approach for the very simple reason that the reduction from 75 per cent to 66⅔ per cent affects people in Canada who, according to the evidence given to the committee, live in areas that benefit from the government's regional economic expansion program. The provision means for the average claimant a reduction in benefit from $75 a week to $66 a week, assuming a benefit in the range of $100 a week.

The approach of increasing the number of weeks would have affected people who have a short attachment to the labour force but who also live in the large industrial areas where there are alternative opportunities for employment much greater than for people who live, say, in parts of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, northern Ontario and other parts of northern Canada.

I say this not only to put my remarks on record but to encourage the minister, who evidently has gone through a very difficult process of decision making, none of which is palatable, before making his choice, which was not an easy one. Nevertheless I have to express these thoughts in the hope that we will one day come to a concept of unemployment insurance that is at least as broad as it is now.

This is where I part ways with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). He seems to be torn between the narrow concept of insurance as it is known in the private sector and the concept that we have gradually adopted over the years, which is not insurance but really income support. The hon. member reluctantly came to the conclusion in his very fine speech tonight that this is exactly what we have before us—a program of income support—and that we might as well call it what it is. Otherwise we would not have in the program maternity or sickness benefits as we know them.

These were fine Liberal measures introduced by the Liberal government in 1972, which we all supported both here and out in the field, and quite rightly so. Through these measures we have made Canada's unemployment insurance scheme one of the most advanced and enlightened in the world. This is why I believe this benefit rate for claimants with dependants would be within that spirit, and would be more advanced if it were kept at the level it is now, namely, 75 per cent.

Let me conclude by quoting an excerpt from a speech that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) made to the Board of Trade in Vancouver on November 25 last year which I think reflects very well the dilemma he is facing and the choices he had to examine. I hope it will be the direction we will take whenever in future we think of unemployment insurance in the 1970's meeting the needs of a fairly sophisticated and progressively educated labour force. This is what the minister said on that occasion:

> ... why can't we use the public funds that we spend through this program ...

That is the unemployment insurance program.

> ... in a way that not only meets the income requirements of the U.I. claimants, but which also enhances their capacity to engage in useful and satisfying work?

Then the minister went on to say that it seemed to him much more sensible to talk of employment insurance rather than unemployment insurance. This speech was delivered just over a year ago to the Board of Trade of Vancouver, and I hope the minister still remembers it clearly.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if I had any doubts that the government has given up any intention it may have had of dealing with the problem of unemployment or inequity in this country, those doubts would have been dispelled not just by the introduction of this bill but by the speech just concluded by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I had always thought of him as being one of the more progressive Liberal members of parliament, yet a moment ago I heard him endorsing two principles which he correctly said are fundamental to the changes being proposed by this bill: first of all, that the premiums for unemployment insurance paid both by employers and employees should be increased; secondly, that the percentage of unemployment insurance above which the government assumes the cost of payments should be raised from the previous 4 per cent to, I think he said, 5.6 per cent this year on a sliding scale, which would mean that next year it would probably be up over 6 per cent, and more than that the following year.

Why are the two proposals endorsed by the hon. member for Davenport necessary? They are necessary because the government has completely failed to deal with increasing unemployment. In fact through this bill and others it has made clear that it has no intention of aiming for full employment.

Let us look at the record, and I hope that the hon. member for Davenport is listening. For the first 11 months of 1975 we have not had less than 6.7 per cent unemployment in any month. This 6.7 per cent was registered last January, up 1.2 per cent from January of 1974 when unemployment was 5.5 per cent. In actual numbers this was an increase of 140,000, from 520,000 to 660,000. In actual numbers as well as percentages unemployment has been increasing every month since last January.

I am not going to put all the figures on the record tonight, but let me take the month of November as an example. In November, 1974, there was 5.5 per cent of the labour force unemployed, representing 542,000 people. In November of this year 7.3 per cent of the labour force was unemployed, or some 734,000 people, an increase of almost 200,000. The increase in jobs between October and November was only 15,000 and that did not keep pace with the increase in the labour force consisting of 24,000, leading to a .1 per cent increase in unemployment. That is the situation in which we are today.

Let us compare that situation of today with what the minister accepts, and what the hon. member for Davenport thinks is quite normal, as reasonable unemployment. Apparently this is acceptable because the government is prepared to see the benefits and the premiums increase, because the increase is necessary in view of a much larger percentage of people being unemployed.

Let us compare that with what the former minister of manpower and immigration said in 1971 when he introduced these major changes that almost completely rewrote the act. I do not think it is an accident that that minister is not in the House for this debate. He must be terribly ashamed about what his successor is doing. Let me quote these words of that minister, who is not some wild-eyed socialist in the New Democratic Party. This must be a man with some ability, if ability counts, because he is again a member of the Cabinet. Let me read from page 5043 of Hansard for April 19, 1971, where the minister is reported as having said in respect of this question of what is an acceptable rate of unemployment in this country:

> Since the figure of 4 per cent has attracted a good deal of attention, I imagine somebody is going to suggest that the government has determined 4 per cent to be an acceptable rate of unemployment in Canada. Well, it is not my criterion. Like everybody else, I believe the acceptable rate of unemployment is the least possible rate. This is what we should be working toward. This should be our goal as a country. Our system is really on trial if we cannot operate on the basis of lower rates of unemployment than have been traditional, particularly in the light of the fact that the working force is growing at a tremendous rate. We have used the 4 per cent figure because 4 per cent, according to our computer estimates, triggers the government's contribution to the fund at a realistic level. If it were lower, the government's injection would need to be extremely massive, so massive that some form of additional income by way of taxes would be required. Five per cent would practically eliminate the government's contribution. So, we think 4 per cent is a realistic figure.

That is a much better and more concise explanation than I could ever give of why the government is changing the whole system with the result that instead of 4 per cent being the acceptable level it will be 5.6 per cent in 1976, more in 1977, and even more in 1978. The government no longer believes it can eliminate or is desirous of eliminating unemployment.

I presume the then minister spoke on behalf of the government of that day when he referred to grappling with unemployment. This was his whole approach to the question. It was an approach that would be humanitarian, sensible, and decent, instead of an approach that will result in a higher rate of unemployment, and it will be higher because of the government's anti-inflation program. That program will create more unemployment.

Those of us who have been around for a while know that inspired rumours come from some minister who is preparing the climate of opinion for something that is to happen within the next few months. We have been hearing inspired rumours to the effect that the government intends to cut expenditures by $1.5 billion.

I am not one who believes that every dollar spent by the government is a dollar well spent, but I do not intend to disagree at this time with every program of the federal government. If the government is talking about cutting government expenditures by $1.5 billion we can be certain that this will increase the number of unemployed by several tens of thousands, and it will increase the rate of unemployment probably by at least one quarter of 1 per cent.

When the former minister talked about the changes he proposed, he talked about making this program part of our whole system of economic distribution. We should compare that idea with the proposition put forward today, keeping in mind the speech the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) made last year, and which I am sure he wishes could be expunged from the record. That speech was great reading at the time because the minister talked about the inequities in our society. I suggest they are as bad in 1975 as they were 25 years ago.

Some 25 years ago 20 per cent of the population at the bottom of the income scale in Canada received just over 4 per cent of the gross national product while the top 20 per cent received over 40 per cent. That was back in 1950. Now in 1975, after 18 or 19 years of Liberal government, we have precisely the same situation. Still about 20 per cent of the population at the lower income level in this country receive just over 4 per cent of the gross national product, and the 20 per cent at the top, in spite of all the valiant efforts by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare, receive 42 per cent of the gross national product.

When he was introducing his major changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971 the then minister gave his reasons for the changes. Let me put on record a few sentences from the very fine speech he made at that time, most of which I agree with, and compare this with the parsimonious, penny-pinching, ruthless attitude of the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). Reading again from Hansard of April 19, 1971, at page 5038, the minister said:

> —we have substantially increased the benefits to which a person is entitled under the proposed act so there will be a direct relationship between the benefits received and the level of income that he has achieved over a period of time.

Returning to the specific question we are discussing and the amendment we have proposed, what the minister proposed is that those few people with large families, and I will come to the details in a few minutes, who could not get by on their unemployment insurance benefits were permitted, as a result of the amendment introduced in 1971, to 75 per cent of their potential. This is now being reduced to 66 2/3 per cent, just like everybody else. I suggest that is a complete rejection of what the minister suggested in 1971.

The minister then went on to say:

> It is significant that of the 1,200,000 who will be coming under the act for the first time, at least 700,000 are earning less than $7,800 at the present time, and only about 500,000 of those people coming into the plan for the first time earn above that figure.

● (2130)

I suggest that the people who will be adversely affected by this proposal of the minister are precisely the people in the lower income brackets who need most the assistance the minister is cutting down. Then he said:

> Another reason for the proposed increase in benefits stems from the fact that many Canadians today drawing unemployment insurance must also draw a welfare cheque in order to support themselves and their families.

Of course the then minister thought that was bad. He disapproved of that. Yet that is precisely what the present minister is proposing. There is no question in my mind that a person with a large family, entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, if he only gets two thirds as proposed will require extra to make up the difference between what he is getting in unemployment insurance and what he requires. He will require benefits through welfare in order to live.

The then minister made some calculations and said:

> By increasing unemployment insurance benefits substantially we will effect savings of some $80 million under the Canada Assistance Plan, $40 million to the federal treasury and $40 million to the provinces.

I suggest that what the present minister will take away from the unemployed who qualify for the extra benefits will have to be paid in substantial part through welfare payments. Now let me quote the last sentence from what the minister said in 1971:

> ... the increase in benefits will postpone the day when people chronically unemployed must turn to welfare if they have no other sources of income. It can be said that the benefit structure has been developed by people who care about people.

I suggest to the minister that the converse of what the then minister said is happening today. This benefit detriment is being prepared by a minister and officials who do not care about people.

One of the main arguments the minister gives for the elimination of the dependency rate is the idea that unemployment insurance benefits are strictly a wage insurance plan. If that is so, and benefits for those with dependants have no place in the program, the insistence by the government on the insurance aspect of this program, to say the least is in contradiction to the refusal of the government to provide insurance to people aged 65 who have been and are working.

There are many people who over the years have been considered eligible for benefits and who will never pay in sufficient to insure themselves. I refer to people such as fishermen, those who take part-time work in the woods and so on. Of course in a theoretical way I could agree that their needs ought to be met in another way than through an employment insurance fund, but we have not developed that kind of a comprehensive social security system. Liberal governments may talk about it but they talk about it as taking place some day in cuckoo land, in the dim distant future when none of us, including the new 20-year old members, will be here if we wait for the kind of people we now have in the Liberal government to act.

One member opposite who does not have the courage to stand up says that now they are in power they have to be responsible. Is he suggesting that in the years when they were not in power they were irresponsible? I never pay attention to those dough heads at the back who just bray and do not get up to speak.

An hon. Member: You are wasting time.

Mr. Orlikow: If I am wasting time then I can at least take the pleasure that I am inflicting the same waste of time on members opposite. If we depended on the backbenchers on the government side, the whole business of parliament could be accomplished in about three days in a year because they would just come down here, press a button, say yes to anything any minister said, and then they would go home. So long as we have a democratic system and so long as there are opposition members of parliament, those opposition members have a right to speak. It does not bother me that the member opposite interjects. I have a right to speak and I will decide when and for how long I speak. I will not wait for some Godhead in the front rows, as back-benchers on the other side do, to tell me how or when to speak.

Perhaps I might return to the argument I was attempting to put forward. Let me say that in our opposition to this provision in the bill we are in pretty good non-partisan apolitical company. We have as company the Canadian Council on Social Development, the chairman of which, if not at the moment, until recently was a very close relative of one of our cabinet ministers. Therefore it cannot be too radical an organization. The council has opposed this proposition. Mr. Baetz, the executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, said:

> The low-income earner is not only hit inequitably with a 20 per cent increase in his premiums but the provision in the bill to eliminate the 75 per cent benefit rate for claimants with dependants hits the low-income earners since they are one of the two categories that had received this special assistance.

He said further:

> Now admittedly it has been argued in many countries that unemployment insurance benefits should not take dependants into consideration since wages also do not take this into account. Wages do not take into account the size of the family. I will say this, that I have, on occasion, theoretically argued that point as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, since several members of the opposition said great truths about the amendments to Bill C-69, I think it would be superfluous on my part to further comment on the amendments to this bill.

The fact still remains that one clause among others drew my attention. I refer to section 24, subsections (2) and (3), dealing with rates of benefits and qualifying weeks.

Often, Mr. Speaker, one finds that the last 20 weeks of insurable employment do not generally correspond to the salary earned in the business, for in businesses hiring on a seasonal basis one usually finds a reduction in working hours corresponding to the demand for production.

So one may conclude that it is normal for an employee who at a certain moment was hired for a period of 40 hours of work to reduce his hours either because of a temporary slowdown in production or still because of the forthcoming closing down of the business. And that employee leaves his work voluntarily because it is easy to imagine that if the eventual claimant persists in working at reduced hours for a few weeks before voluntarily leaving his job he will be penalized twice because, first, he will be penalized under subsection (1) of section 41 for a period of three weeks under the present legislation but as soon as the amendments that were brought in are accepted it will be for a period of six weeks because then the employee will have left his job voluntarily. Out of spite there will be a change in the service contract because it is extremely difficult to use that reason to prove there was a just cause to leave one's job voluntarily.

Furthermore, the eventual claimant will be penalized a second time under subsections (2) and (3) of section 24 of the act since he will have worked only a few weeks at reduced hours and the rate of qualifying weeks will be deducted accordingly.

We can therefore conclude that under the provisions of the act as it now stands, the employee who notes at a certain time that the company for which he works will soon reduce its production or close down its plant because of a lack of market opportunities for its products or must reduce the hours of work of its employees will naturally find that it is to his advantage to quit immediately his job instead of working a fewer number of hours, which would reduce his salary.

Consequently, the government should take action so that unemployment insurance rates be based on the average of the 20 highest paid weeks of insurable employment during the qualifying period instead of amending the act and establishing the rates on the basis of the last 20 weeks.

As concerns the dependency rate, which would be reduced from 75 per cent to 66⅔ per cent, this seems to my mind very unfair because, at this level, the government says that the reduction is guaranteed by higher family allowances.

In my opinion, family allowances are not sufficient to cover even the cost of feeding and clothing the children. In any case, Mr. Speaker, family allowances have nothing to do with the future claimant, the future unemployed, because when he works, he also receives his unemployment insurance benefits, and when he becomes unemployed, he is once again punished, as I said earlier, because he has lost his job.

I find it very unfair to treat in this manner those who help build society and contribute to the development of our country by punishing them in this way. For this reason, I shall not support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. Allard.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section (2) of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could it be made clear that the vote which will be recorded on motion No. 7 will also cover motions Nos. 8, 14 and 15?

Mr. Alexander: That is the understanding on this side of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): We now go on to motion No. 9 in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): moved:

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 8.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems of the system we use is that if one has not been present in the committee one has not heard the justification of either the civil servants, the commission, or government members as to why a certain clause should be deleted after having been adopted on a trial basis for several years. This clause, which I propose should be removed, will have the effect of reinstating the three week period during which an unemployed person would receive his pay immediately following his last employment. The reason for that provision in the act is to enable the claimant to look for another job. If he cannot find employment within the three week period, he will not have to pay back any of the advance money paid to him.

It is surprising to me that Liberal members wished to remove this provision because, in my opinion, it was used very seldom. The payment is not done by way of computer but by hand. It has to be authorized in the local area, and in an area where mail claims are used it cannot be put into effect within the first three week period. So obviously this provision only works in those areas where there is a large concentration of people, which usually means a large concentration of job opportunities as well.

The commission indicated that 70 per cent of all persons drawing unemployment insurance benefits had been earning less than $6,000. It was for that reason, and with the knowledge that these people would not have large resources available when they were laid off, that this provision was put into the act. It enables them to receive three weeks benefits, which is added to their last pay and which enables them to cover their expenses during the time when they are seeking another job. I think the idea behind it is very good, but the sad part is that it rarely works. In fact in many areas it was not used.

The weakness in many sections of the act is that they are not uniformly applied. I mentioned this afternoon that the method of control used was different in one area from that applied in another area. Although conditions may be different in different areas, I think that the federal law should be applied equally. This was not the case in so far as this provision is concerned.

If the reason the government is recommending the removal of section 28 of the act is that the payment of the three week benefit when a person becomes unemployed will be done by computer rather than by hand, and that not many people have taken advantage of that provision, then perhaps we should consider whether or not it has some merit. When I inquired of our member on the committee, he indicated that this had not been abused, or at least there had been very little discussion about abuses, but the indication was that it also had not provided many jobs.

If it did not provide for what it was supposed to, then the person who received the three weeks pay would subsequently go on to regular benefits, and when he did he had to make up the three weeks which he had already been paid. The only time he received anything for nothing, and that would be doubtful, would be if he was to suffer any further unemployment at some time in the future in the benefit year. However, it would only apply, and it would only be a benefit, to the person who was off for a week or two weeks, or less than three weeks, and received the benefit and did not have to repay it. In other words, if this was not a factor, was not abused, and was not a big cost factor, it seems to me we should leave it in because it does mean that the person would at least be paid in the first three weeks.

Though the officials will not agree, in my area it is impossible to receive a benefit payment in less than four weeks, and not likely before the sixth week. Normally it is considerably longer than four weeks, and there are few who receive it in four weeks. As a result the three weeks is paid within a period of a month and a half, and families earning $6,000 just do not have enough money to keep themselves for six weeks with the cost of living as it is today.

The unemployed in my area go to municipal welfare offices and receive assistance while waiting for their cheques. They make an assignment to the welfare department. When their money comes from the UIC, the welfare agency is paid back. However, it seems to me that in many cases we are asking municipalities to cover the period during which the application is being processed, the time in which the separation slip is sent in and the cards are made up, when they are sent to Belleville, and a cheque is sent from Belleville to the claimant. In most cases that is four weeks plus. It is normally a six week period, and I suggest that in paying this three weeks pay we are really paying for the inability of the UIC to make that payment within six weeks.

If the minister thinks he can do something about this problem, I wish he would tell me what it is. I remember in 1971 sitting in the committee, and we were told by UIC officials that there would be a cheque within a three week period. I told them no one was getting paid within three weeks, and we had only a two week waiting period at that time. We extended it another week. It was just impossible to collect within that time. It worked out that I was right and they were wrong. It takes six weeks for an applicant to receive that money in my area, and if anything goes wrong it could take up to ten weeks or more. It cannot be less than six weeks, and I should like some hon. members who think we should move to this three week waiting period to tell me why. This has very seldom been abused in my area, and it has been useful. If the officials are pushed hard, they will issue a cheque by hand for someone, but it is not usually within the six weeks, it is usually longer than that, and they will issue a cheque because the act gives them the right to write one cheque within three weeks.

If we take away that right a person through no fault of his own will not receive any money for a period of six to eight weeks. That is two months, or four pay days, and a person living on $6,000 sure as hell is not going to get by for two months without going to the welfare department. If we keep this three weeks and we do not need it, then what is lost? If it provides a means of creating employment in the cities, that is obviously the only place it could work; it cannot work in small communities. It cannot work for the simple reason that they cannot get the three weeks pay. From where will they get it? They cannot get it from the sub-offices in my area.

A person could drive 150 miles and talk to the officials in Timmins, but to whom could he talk? When a person drives to Timmins to talk to UIC, he talks to the dumbest person there because that is the last person hired and the least qualified. That person answers the telephone and is also on the desk. It should be the manager on the desk meeting the public, or at least someone who is able to give some answers.

So if a person drives 300 miles there and back, he has talked to a girl hired off the street two weeks before who hardly knows what UIC stands for, let alone what the program is about. Whoever drives to Timmins is not likely to receive the three weeks pay anyway, but there might be a chance. If a person were really belligerent, swore at everyone and kicked the door down, he might receive it, but it is always possible that a member of parliament can telephone the office stating that this person has not received any money for the last six or eight weeks and how about issuing a cheque.

On occasion the officials will be generous and issue a cheque, because under this act they have the right to issue that three weeks cheque. If we take away the three weeks, how are they going to issue one even if they want to do so? Until it is totally cleared through the computer they will not be able to issue a cheque. The only way is through this loophole which has been established. If we expended some energy on job placement agencies, which would likely mean the elimination of Manpower centres, this would be a better route, but until we do that we will not be able to provide the three weeks pay, or expect people to get jobs during that three weeks.

There are probably 10 people unemployed for every available job, and while in cities like Ottawa or Toronto it is quite possible that there is room for mobility in a region, in an area like mine where the pulp and paper companies are all shut down, where the wood industry is in serious difficulty and where the mining industry is also in serious difficulty, it is not possible. So I suggest that unless the government is willing to give us some justification as to why it wants us to take this out—it has in rural areas served some purpose—I damn well think hon. members representing rural areas in other parts of Canada should get up and say why they think we should take it out, and what the reason is for the abuse.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ISRAELI ATTACK ON REFUGEE CAMPS IN LEBANON—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on December 5 I asked the Acting Prime Minister if he had conveyed to the Israeli ambassador the Canadian government's concern about the attacks by the Israeli air force upon Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon. I note that later on in the question period the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) put forward a question on the same subject.

We all know that deep emotions are involved in the continuing Middle East crisis, and suffering and violence are widespread. No thoughtful or reasonably informed person would assert that acts of violence are the exclusive approach of one side to the confrontation in the Middle East area.

It is sadly true that for the last half century, and indeed, longer, death and destruction have stalked the ancient land. The years prior to the U.N. establishment of the State of Israel were especially marked by terrorist violence. The blowing up of the King David Hotel in Jerusalem where British military and mandate officers were quartered, the assassination of Lord Moyne, and later of Count Bernadotte, were grim highlights of the activities of those who were determined that, despite the views of the indigenous people, a State of Israel would be set up. There were massacres of villages and other violence of horrendous proportions. Of course those who did not wish the creation of the state of Israel did not confine their response to passive resistance; far from it.

While one cannot establish a graduated scale of violence nor measure the iniquity of a violent act by the numbers killed or wounded, there are some incidents which by their very nature cry out for an expression of moral outrage. The Munich attack by the Black September group, the shoot out of innocent airline passengers at international airports, the shooting down of the Libyan civilian plane come to mind as particularly reprehensible.

The incident to which I referred the other day is thoroughly deplorable. In the past quarter century no group of people have suffered more painfully nor longer than the Palestinian refugees. These unfortunate people were driven from their homes, and after terrible privations they ended up in camps scattered over the Middle East where they have lived year after year in tents or tin huts, without hope, without normal home life, and in prolonged misery.

One might think that people living in this kind of squalor and depression had suffered enough. How then can we visualize the feelings and fears of the women and children when the Israeli air force launched an attack upon them the other day? As a consequence of this military attack by modern aircraft many innocent women and children were slaughtered.

Not surprisingly, there were expressions of anxiety and concern from many parts of the world. Pope Paul roundly condemned the unmerited and exceptionally ruthless attack, and for this humble, stubborn Presbyterian the pre-eminent Catholic spoke nobly on the issue.

Tel Aviv's own afternoon newspaper asked why the air strikes were ordered immediately after a United Nations Security Council decision to which Israel objected.

The Ottawa Citizen in an editorial said:

> ... the Israeli air attack on Palestinian refugee camps and guerrilla bases in Lebanon this week was a shocking example of savage terror.
> Many victims of the attack were women and children whose only crime seems to have been that they were Palestinian. For this accident of history, they could not return to their homeland, despite repeated United Nations resolutions and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and were doomed to a life of exile in a foreign land. Even so, they were not safe from death.
>
> Honest people everywhere can only condemn the Israeli attack as wanton massacre of innocent civilians.

A Globe and Mail editorial had this to say:

> ... the traditions and principles around which the State of Israel is built are not such as to prepare us for the callous decision to go ahead, in the certain knowledge that innocents would be among the victims, with this week's strikes against camps in Lebanon. There is nothing Israel could have done that would have blemished more darkly its own cause.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that our government, known for its devotion to compassion, fairness, peace and good will, made its view clearly known to the Israelis on this matter.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his very thoughtful statement. It is evident from the time he took in preparing for this late show that he feels very deeply. I recall when the question was asked in the House by the hon. gentleman, and I recall as well the statement made by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs at that time.

I am informed that the text of the statement made by the hon. minister has been drawn to the attention of the Israeli ambassador in Ottawa by the Department of External Affairs.

I have not spent as much time as perhaps I ought as a parliamentarian in studying the problems of the Middle East. It is a situation that all Canadians are intimately aware of, whether they concentrate on the difficulties or not, because some of our citizens are representative of that area. We have groups on both sides of the conflict, and the human problem faced in that area is one common to us all and has transcended historical ties.

I do not want to appear as a philosopher but I know the difficulties there are very human and deep. Both sides deny the recognition of individuals and groups and it is of necessity, therefore, an extremely violent, fundamental and basic conflict. One often tends to pass judgment on the rights of one party or the other in these circumstances, but I want to avoid that temptation. One can express, as the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) has done, his shock and dismay at the consequence of the acts of either party involving innocents. One can express that dismay; however, one must refrain from passing judgment as to the motivation for the acts that are performed.

The comments of the hon. member have been noted. As I pointed out, the government has indicated its position. It has indicated its reaction to the repugnant acts not only of one side but of the other. I take it the hon. member is content that the government has been very active and analytical in its consideration of the facts.

SOCIAL SECURITY—PROPOSED INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSION AND STUDY OF RETIREMENT POLICIES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, November 27, as recorded at page 9495 of Hansard, I put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde):

> Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian Council on Social Development has recently published a report entitled "How Much Choice—Retirement Policies in Canada" in which it is declared that more than half of the senior citizens of this country exist on incomes at or below the poverty level, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if consideration will be given to an immediate catch-up increase in old age pensions, and will the government also institute a study of retirement policies in this country?

The answer of the minister, which appears at page 9496 of Hansard for the same day, was to the effect that in this view there are different levels of poverty and that he was not sure it would be useful to have a general debate on the poverty level. He concluded his answer with this sentence:

> As for the member's suggestion for an immediate increase in the basic pension, the matter is not being considered at the present time but, as I said to the hon. member, it will be increased according to the rise in the cost of living as of January 1 next.

I readily understand the attitude of the minister every time I put these questions to him in defending the government's old age security program. I have a fair amount of pride in it myself because I have been involved in it over a good many years. Although one can compare what is done for older people today with what was done ten, 20, 30 or 40 years ago and realize that we have made progress, surely we never come to the end of the road. Surely what counts is the living conditions of our senior citizens today, compared with today's standards.

I hope, therefore, that the government will join with me in welcoming the report produced by the Canadian Council on Social Development entitled "How Much Choice—Retirement Policies in Canada" which was written by Joan C. Brown. I hope the government will pay attention to the facts in this volume and the proposals made therein. It does document the situation with respect to retirement at the present time. It is ever so much better than it was a quarter or half century ago, but it is still true that more than half of our people 65 years of age and over are at or near the poverty level. It is also true that our pension plans, good as they are, are not filling the bill. Proud though we may be of what we have accomplished, surely common sense and ordinary decency require that we take another look at our whole system. That is what this report calls for and I urge the government to undertake it.

There are a couple of points made in this report which are extremely important and which, it seems to me, go to the heart of the issue. One is that although no one should write off what the private sector could do, it does seem to be a fact that the best chance of improving pensions for everyone lies in substantial improvements to the Canada Pension Plan, for example, getting it to the point at which it pays, let us say, 75 per cent instead of 25 per cent of one's recent earnings. I hope the government will consider this very seriously—the need to improve substantially the advantages of the Canada Pension Plan in association with old age security measures.

Another point which is made in this document, and one which I believe to be of extreme importance, has to do with the age of retirement. The author urges very strongly that we should introduce more voluntariness into the question of the retirement age and that persons over the age of 60, indeed between 60 and 70, should have the option whether to retire or not. This may be putting it in language somewhat different from the language I sometimes use when I call for the pension to be brought down to the age of 60 for those out of the labour market, but in effect it is the same proposal. However, my purpose is not to get into an argument between two doctrinaire positions, but rather to urge the validity of my assertion that further studies should be made as to the retirement age and that the government should take this matter seriously.

I have just about reached the end of the time allotted to me on this subject tonight. I trust I can persuade the government to make a serious study of the pension situation. I know this cannot be done in a week or a month or even, with the present government, in a year. It takes time. But it is grossly unfair to those who are at or below the poverty level to fob them off with a statement that a study is being made. That is why there should be an immediate catch-up increase in the basic amount of old age security. Though the minister said the other day that the matter is not being considered, I hope that in his absence the parliamentary secretary will speak from his own heart tonight and admit that such an increase ought to be provided without delay.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for doing his usual job of helping to put before us and before all Canadians the situation of our senior citizens, their standard of living, and their treatment at the hands of the government. I might say, since he has asked for a response on my part, that my earnest desire is to become, one day, a senior citizen of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It doesn't take long.

Mr. Kaplan: It doesn't take long, but it is not inevitable. In that spirit I want to tell the hon. member that the government has found the report to which he referred to be an extremely valuable one, and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) does propose that a far reaching study be undertaken of all pensions in Canada. We are now in the process of organizing a review of the entire pension issue.

The hon. member referred to the need, as he put it, to improve the Canada Pension Plan to the point at which it would provide a pension on the basis of 75 per cent of earnings. I might say that the Liberal Party of Canada supports that position. At our recent national conference a resolution very much to that effect was passed.

As for the question of the age of retirement, this is a much broader question than simply one of the government taking action. It is a question that I hope will be considered with a view not only to flexibility for a lower retirement age in our society in general but also flexibility for a later retirement age for those Canadians who choose to spend their senior years in continuing employment.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member say that he took a fair amount of pride in Canada's pension system, in old age security and GIS which are provided. I think he ought to do so. I think all Canadians ought to take a fair measure of pride in the burdens that they gladly bear to help assist our senior citizens.

However, I want to point to what I believe is a misreading of the report on the hon. member's part. It is true that the report notes that over one half of those over 65 have incomes that are regarded as being below the poverty line. But the report goes on to point out that they are eligible for some assistance through the federal guaranteed income supplement scheme, and that indeed over one half of our senior citizens receive this form of assistance, which takes their income up considerably higher. That is to say, a great many of the incomes of these people are lifted above the poverty line by the very programs in which the hon. member and all of us take so much pride.

Since October 1, 1975, the basic OAS pension has been $129.28 per month for an individual pension. In addition, the single pensioner with no other income—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his time has expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—SUGGESTED ASSESSMENT OF IMPACT OF REDUCED FEDERAL EXPENDITURES ON UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, while the question I am raising this evening was originally raised on October 28 and had to do with the operation of the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion, it is altogether appropriate that I should be raising the question again on the adjournment debate tonight, on the eve of the announcement of the government's restraint program in respect to its own expenditures.

Hon. members will recall that on October 28 I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) whether or not he had been asked by his colleagues in cabinet to monitor any alteration in federal expenditures or programs which would have a negative impact on programs of regional development administered by his department or in which his department might have an interest and responsibility.

Before I elaborate on that question I want to say at the outset that this question is fundamental, I think, to the fiscal and economic responsibility of the government in regard to the disadvantaged regions of the country. I say that because of the experience we suffered about five years ago under a federal restraint program. Members in the House at that time and citizens generally will recall the situation that existed in this country when it was announced by the government that there was an overheated economy in the more highly developed parts of Canada, such as the central part of the country, around the Toronto area, and of course in western Canada, particularly in some of the major urban centres.

At that time there was a specific program of federal restraint, but to put it briefly, the war on inflation, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said would be wrestled to the ground, was fought very largely either on the backs of the low income people or of the people in the disadvantaged regions. Those of us who were able to monitor the cutbacks in federal expenditure which occurred in federal programs generally were unable to see at that time any kind of selectivity or priority in relation to the very real economic burden that existed in the Atlantic provinces, where unemployment was running at double the national average, where we experienced in many cases a very high cost of living factor while incomes generally were as little as half the national average.

That situation is now in danger of being repeated. I say that because very shortly after the announcement of the program of price and wage restraint by the Prime Minister on October 13 I asked, on October 20, the following question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald):

● (2220)

—in view of the likelihood of there being some restrictions in federal expenditures. Will the minister be announcing a program or will he be designating the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to be responsible for making sure that possible cut-backs in federal expenditures will not create further unemployment but rather that a specific program will be devised to deal with the difficulties in regions of economic and social disparity?

At that time, on October 20, as recorded at page 8339, the minister is reported as having said:

Mr. Speaker, when the colleagues of the hon. gentleman call for reduction in total expenditures we all bear in mind the difficulty this can cause in areas such as his.

I was quite frankly shocked at the lack of sensitivity or historical recollection to recall the previous difficulties we had encountered in the early 1970's in respect of the previous restraint program, and I asked the following supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. I asked whether there would be some flexibility with regard to these potential reductions in order that greater hardship would not be created for substantial numbers of the people in underdeveloped areas. The Minister of Finance in effect repeated his first answer and said:

—of course, the call for reductions in expenditures would fall particularly heavily on those sectors of his area—

Of course, that meant the Atlantic provinces, and that is why on November 28 I moved a motion under Standing Order 43, the same day I had asked the question being responded to tonight, urging that the House recommend that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be instructed to review and monitor all federal programs that could possibly be altered in order to prevent or offset further unemployment in regions of persistently high unemployment during a period of national fiscal restraint.

That is the specific problem we are faced with tonight, on the eve of an announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) about substantial proposed cutbacks in federal expenditures. Will there be flexibility and will there be allowances for specific needs and very high unemployment? In my constituency unemployment is close to 20 per cent, and in other parts of the Atlantic provinces it is well over 25 per cent. These are hardship depression statistics, and ones that must be responded to.

This is not just a question from one member of the opposition in this House. As quickly as the day following the announcement by the Prime Minister, on October 14, the premier of my province is reported to have said, and I think he has stood by this since, that while he indicated morale support for the program, that support had to be qualified. He said:

—I am worried that the coming restraints on government spending will be applied uniformly, without proper recognition for the limited budgets of PEI and the other provinces in the Atlantic region. The program does not appear to be sensitive to regional disparity.

That is the motion I was trying to bring before the government, and I have tried on a number of occasions this fall. To date we know, on the basis of what the government has done or is planning to do that it is not yet sensitive to regional disparity. The premier went on to say on this occasion that:

—his government will make immediate representation to the Trudeau government seeking assurances that capital spending and investment in the "slow growth areas will keep pace with inflation."

Since we have a parliamentary secretary with us tonight who has his roots deep in the soil of the Atlantic provinces, more specifically Prince Edward Island, I am hopeful that he will be able to reflect this concern. It is of crucial importance to the credibility of the program the federal government is engaged in, and it is also of crucial importance to the credibility of this particular department the parliamentary secretary represents here tonight.

When the department was established in 1969 it was given a very clear responsibility, because for the first time we had established a federal department that was not only going to administer a program to deal with regional development, it was going to act as some kind of over-all coordinating agency to ensure that the actions taken by other departments, whether they be Public Works, National Defence, Supply and Services, or whatever other agency may possibly have an impact on future development of regions like the Atlantic provinces or parts of western Canada, which the parliamentary secretary knows well, would be co-ordinate and effective in this regard.

It is not enough for the minister to give me the assurance he gave me on October 28 that there would be no reduction in the program, or the assurance he gave my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), on October 22. What is equally if not more important is assurance at this time that there will be effective co-ordination. The credibility of this program and the credibility of the department are very much at stake.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Egmont put the case very well. I appreciate very much the sincerity of his remarks on the subject matter he has brought forward in his question.

I think the hon. member is well aware that the government's total package insofar as anti-inflation measures are concerned is distinct from what has come to be known as traditional methods of fighting inflation. For that reason I do not share the same fears he has that his part of Canada, or indeed other less advantaged areas of Canada, will necessarily suffer as a result. This certainly would be counter-productive, if you like, to our policies in this regard.

Indeed it is the Atlantic area and other similar areas that will suffer even more if we do not take action and do not bring about some control to the inflation that has been taking place. Those areas do not have the large industry, the large unions, and the powerful sectors that there are in other areas, and for that reason those areas perhaps are more susceptible to the rigours of inflation than some others. I think the figures in respect of the cost of living in Saint John and in some other cities show this is the case there more than elsewhere.

As the hon. member knows, a great deal of progress has been made since 1969 with the establishment of this particular department. I know he is well aware that my minister was recently in his province of Prince Edward Island where he signed another five-year agreement, which I think is an indication of the concern of the government in trying to ensure that that area of the country, and indeed other similar less fortunate areas, are not affected by the impact of the government's program and policies such as we are now embarking on in connection with the question of inflation, government expenditures, and the rate at which these are increasing federally, municipally and provincially, which is a factor in the sense of the inflationary pattern we have seen. I can assure my hon. friend that the points he makes are the concern of my minister and the government, and that the action we take will be taken in light of the points made by my hon. friend from Egmont.

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST THAT EXPANSION OF ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS PARK BE DELAYED PENDING CONSULTATION WITH AREA RESIDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity resulting from the sincere and welcome statement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) to a delegation from my constituency last week representing some hundreds of constituents who oppose the present plan of the government to expand, at a cost of $30 million, the St. Lawrence Islands National Park by acquisition of additional land, and particularly arising from the minister's public statement after the meeting in which he guaranteed those present that his department and the government would not attempt to negotiate the purchase of any additional land in the area before consultation with people in the area took place.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of Supply and Services immediately advise the House whether his department has been approaching certain property owners in the area of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park offering on behalf of the government of Canada to purchase their land and, as a specific example, why a William Fraser and a Robert Fraser, claiming to represent the Department of Supply and Services, recently approached the owners of island number 52 offering to purchase it on behalf of the government of Canada, in direct violation of the orders issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whose department is responsible for Parks Canada; and further, that the House requests the Minister of Supply and Services to forthwith order his staff to desist from such practices if such are in progress.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that Canada is rated among the most important importing-exporting countries of the world; considering that the volume of Canada's exports of grain, oil, minerals, lumber and other commodities is constantly increasing; considering that our economy would benefit from it and that it has been hardly mentioned in the last Speech from the Throne, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the government take immediate steps to ensure that Canada will give itself a merchant marine as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT SAFETY BE CRITERION IN CHANGING AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion of interest to the Minister of Transport, and I do so as an active flying crew member of some 34 years. The matter I consider to be of urgent and pressing importance, one which I hope will meet with unanimous consent, is this. In light of the fear and uncertainty left by the minister yesterday in his statement, as recorded at page 9997 of Hansard, that the criterion with respect to air regulations and procedure is not that of safety, and since the matter concerns bilingual air traffic regulations in one of the provinces of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House, and the government by giving unanimous consent to this motion, reaffirms the invariable and long standing practice of the government, and in particular the Department of Transport, in the bringing about of any changes or alterations or additions in regulations and procedures respecting the control of air traffic in Canadian air space be based on the sole and exclusive criterion of safety of the hundreds of thousands of air travellers and all air traffic using Canadian air space throughout Canada, including the province of Quebec.

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion under Standing Order 43.

Considering the steep increase in unemployment, especially among young people in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That this House unanimously ask the government to provide an exhaustive revaluation of make work programs now in effect to make this fight against unemployment really effective and encouraging for our young people on the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTED AFFIRMATION OF RIGHT OF CITIZENS TO SERVICES IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent necessity.

Considering that articles published this morning in a number of Quebec newspapers indicate that some members of the Public Service of Canada will not supply their services to English-speaking people in Quebec, that such action is condoned anyway by the alliance as a bargaining technique, and that such denial of linguistic services in both our official languages is in fact a form of blackmail and a despicable means of confrontation which may only result in antagonizing and irritating part of the public;

[English]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul (Mr. Campbell), and in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I would address my motion to the Prime Minister:

[Mr. Nielsen.]

That the Prime Minister do now, before this House, restate and reaffirm this government's intention to assure all our citizens equal access to federal government services; and further that the Prime Minister reaffirm that everywhere in Canada the government will enforce the right of citizens to have access to either of our two official languages; and, finally, that wherever in Canada federal civil servants attempt to deny to Canadians that access to both official languages, those civil servants will be suspended without pay until they have agreed to conform to the legislation passed by the elected representatives of the people in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion being pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

DEFICIT ON AUTO PARTS TRADE WITH UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister who said yesterday:

—there have been, will be and are various forms of irritants that we are always working to overcome.

Is it the view of the Prime Minister that a trade deficit with the United States of possibly as much as $2.5 billion this year in respect of auto parts is an irritant for this country, or a matter of real urgency that demands some significant initiative and, if so, have formal talks on auto parts been arranged and when will they be held? I direct this question to the Prime Minister in view of the significance of the problem involved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any such talks have been arranged.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSSIBILITY OF RENEGOTIATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that it is high on the government list of concerns to negotiate or renegotiate certain aspects of the auto pact. In light of the Prime Minister's confidence, as manifested yesterday, that our relations with the United States are very healthy, during the recent visit by Mr. Kissinger was the question raised about renegotiating the auto pact or, if not, is it the intention of the Canadian government to seek a renegotiation of this auto pact? I direct this question to the Prime Minister in view of its importance to the country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kissinger did not raise it with me, nor did I raise it with him. I will inquire to see if it was raised in his meetings with other ministers.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am simply stating the facts and not trying to be sarcastic. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister apparently does not seem to know anything about these matters, I would ask him whether he would request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to seek a first opportunity to make a full statement as to the irritants that are under active discussion between our two countries, including the two matters to which I referred.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank—and I do not mean to be ironic—the Leader of the Opposition for the suggestion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECONVENING OF JOINT MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE AND INVITATION TO APPEAR BEFORE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister with regard to two specific cases; one, the joint sub-committee which is meeting today and tomorrow to hear from a number of prominent Canadian businessmen, and whether or not action will be taken by this government to ensure that adequate representation will be given to the new policy initiative taken in foreign investment before this important sub-committee; second, he indicated he would also look into the matter of the reconvening of the joint ministerial committee which has not met since 1970.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I deal with the first question. It is my understanding that this committee of the United States Congress is meeting because they are considering a similar kind of legislation to our own. We have had no request from the administration to have any officials there. The secretariat of the committee did inquire whether it would be appropriate to have a Canadian official appear before the committee and we said that in accordance with long-standing practice it would not be appropriate. There are some inquiries going on as to whether academics or businessmen from Canada might wish to attend.

STEPS TO RECONCILE VIEWS OF AMBASSADOR PORTER AND THOSE OF THE ADMINISTRATION ON CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very different governmental situation that exists in Washington compared to our own with divided responsibility between the administration and Congress, and in view of Ambassador Porter's remarks which specifically were directed toward the growing sense of unease in Congress and in the media and as a result of the minister's answer concerning the lack of participation in this important sub-committee, I am wondering whether the Prime Minister can indicate what steps are being taken to reconcile the statements made by Ambassador Porter, later confirmed by the State Department, with the views of the administration apparently presented to him over the last few months by President Ford and Secretary Kissinger.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only refer to the preamble as stated by the hon. member and say that it does not reflect the facts as they exist. Since yesterday's exchange in the House my office communicated with the White House and our Secretary of State spoke with Secretary Kissinger in Paris. It is quite apparent to me that the facts are as I stated them in the House yesterday, that Ambassador Porter was not conveying a message form the administration as the hon. member indicates in his question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I did not put the question clearly enough. I was asking whether or not the Prime Minister had taken steps to ascertain whether or not the views taken by the Congress and the media in the United States are such as presented by Ambassador Porter and confirmed by the State Department, in view of the importance of the congressional decisions or developments which might take place in that country during a presidential election year.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must again take exception to the question as asked when the hon. member says it was confirmed by the State Department. Mr. Speaker, I assure the House my information from the administration, from the White House and from the source I indicated in Paris is to the contrary.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

PRE-NOTIFICATION OF PRICE INCREASES—REASON FOR USE OF TWO PER CENT AS BENCH MARK

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising from the announcement made by Mr. Pepin yesterday. I should like to ask the minister why it was decided that a 2 per cent bench mark figure would be used in the case of pre-notification for increases in prices for products in a particular product line but there was no percentage or bench mark given in the case of individual products. I would ask the minister why that decision was made and why also it has been left up to the companies on their own initiative to decide when a significant increase has occurred in the case of an individual product.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without having discussed this with the board, and given the fact that the board is exercising the discretion given it by the government, I cannot give a full explanation of all the terms or the decision taken by the board in this regard. This has obviously been done on their own judgment. I would assume from it that this reflects in part the degree of difficulty involved in having to monitor what could be literally hundreds or even perhaps thousands of price increases. But it was the board itself, in carrying out its mandate, which has determined these two factors.

● (1420)

INQUIRY WHETHER ALTERATION OF QUALITY OF PRODUCT WOULD INVOLVE PRE-NOTIFICATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Can the minister tell us that in cases where a company decides to reduce the quality of the product it is making or subtracts some of the components from the product it is selling and decides to continue to sell the product, without modifying the price at the same time, such changes, which would ultimately result in higher profits on individual lines of products, will require the submission of pre-notification of this kind of behaviour to the board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I think it would be undesirable to give an interpretation in detail except to point out to the hon. gentleman that if the profits exceed the net profit margin which the company is entitled to make, under those circumstances it would, of course, be in violation of the guidelines and subject to action under the law.

Mr. Broadbent: In a final supplementary question I should like to ask the minister for clarification on that precise point. Is the minister saying that a company which chooses to operate within the program under the terms provided for a clearly identifiable product line is also subject to the 95 per cent procedure for assessing whether or not they have exceeded the guidelines? My understanding was that it was an either-or proposition and they were not subject to both requirements.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think the hon. gentleman is confusing the application of one of the three alternative means of control, either the direct cost pass-through rule technique, or if that were not possible the net profit margin rule or, in the case of distribution trades, the gross margin profit rule. It may be that in relation to certain lines of products the net profit margin rule may apply and in relation to other lines of products it may be possible to apply the net cost through rule.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED WASTE OF RESOURCES BY QUEBEC FOR PROFIT OF UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister stated, following the statements by the former U.S. Ambassador to Canada, that Canada is not a U.S. colony. Yet, it was announced last night that the U.S. State Department had confirmed that their ambassador's statements were in accordance with their policy.

Mr. Speaker, here is my question. If we are not a U.S. colony, does the federal government or the Prime Minister have anything to say or any action to take in respect of a government like, for example, the government of Mr. Bourassa in Quebec who is squandering the province's natural resources for the benefit of Americans, and is spending his time in the United States trying to borrow for the James Bay project, for Quebec Hydro, etc.? Does the central government have anything to say to prevent Quebec from becoming a U.S. colony?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can answer the whole question, but as regards the first part of it, I want to assure the hon. member, as I think I did a moment ago, that the alleged statement by the Secretary of State that ambassador Porter was authorized to say what he said, that so-called news is false and that the Secretary of State himself, Mr. Kissinger, is not of that opinion. Now, it would be surprising that his department would have a different opinion from his.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

I just spoke of the province of Quebec. To enable it not to become an American colony, would the federal government allow it to borrow directly from the Bank of Canada, at home, instead of it having to borrow from the Americans to develop our natural resources?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall make sure Premier Bourassa is acquainted with the advice the Social Credit leader is giving him.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have one last supplementary.

Is the Prime Minister aware of the statement made by the Americans, since the Social Credit victory in British Columbia, that the results of the election are giving American investors renewed confidence in that province and even throughout Canada? Does the Prime Minister intend to take steps similar to those taken by the Social Credit Party in British Columbia?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say to whom the results of the election have inspired confidence, but I do know they have considerably reduced that of hon. members sitting to the right of the hon. member.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED INSISTENCE EMPLOYEES PROVIDE SERVICE IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—POLICY ON PAY DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It relates to the motion by the hon. member for Lachine under Standing Order 43 at the beginning of the proceedings and to the reports today of the intention of certain federal public servants to embark on a policy of supplying federal government services in Quebec in one language only. Having regard to the policy of the government, and indeed, the expressions of this parliament with respect to the matter, can the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that the government intends to insist on federal service being made available in both languages in accordance with the established guidelines of this House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty in asserting that those who have bilingual positions in the province of Quebec will have to comply with the legislation of Parliament and offer services in both official languages. Moreover, the problem is being discussed with the National Council, but we have made some progress on this problem. We are not in a position to come to an agreement with the union at this time and the negotiations with the union representatives are proceeding. Once we have come to an agreement, we will announce the change if necessary but I do not intend to yield to threats, be it on January 1, 2 or 3 next.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Since the question seems to have arisen as a result of a demand for a pay differential for second language skill, which the President of the Treasury Board and, indeed, the Minister of Public Works have indicated is now before cabinet in the form of a proposal and upon which they have also said no decision has been made heretofore with respect to that problem, would the President of the Treasury Board advise the House what is the policy, if any, on the question at this moment, and is the government contemplating any change in the existing policy at this time?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House and the committees that, as far as I am concerned, if someone has to work in both official languages, this adds to the difficulty of the task. It can be seen very easily: when I use the other official language of the country, I must make a little more effort. We decided to consider this aspect and to add certain points in the classification of employees who must work in both languages, but this problem is not solved at this time because we are discussing with the union the mechanisms which are to be established. Once we have found mechanisms which are acceptable to the representatives of both the employees and the government, we will act but we are not in a position to announce the solution of this problem at this time.

TRADE

INCREASE IN CURRENT ACCOUNT DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO OVERCOME

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I should like to welcome him back from his odyssey to France where he has been searching for orders which seem harder to find day by day. As the $250 million increase in our international current account deficit in the third quarter was caused largely by rising imports and falling exports, has the minister any plans for correcting this very serious situation, and if so, when may we expect to hear of them?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, obviously this is a continuing campaign and program, and unlike what the hon. member seems to have suggested, I think we made a very good start on changing that situation in Europe. The 30 top businessmen who were with me rolled up orders amounting to several millions of dollars. The forecasts are for a substantial increase in trade between the two countries in the immediate future, and I hope to repeat that in other countries as well.

● (1430)

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the minister's answer sounds good but I am afraid it has a very close resemblance to the broken record of his predecessor which he played during the past three years while imports kept rising and exports kept dropping. May we expect something a little more concrete than we have been told we could expect over this period?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED RE-ALLOCATION OF UNUSED FUNDS FOR LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAMS

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like my question to be answered by the President of the Treasury Board.

An hon. Member: So would we.

Mrs. Holt: In view of the restraint programs to which we as a government are committed and in view of the reported, or rumoured, plans to cut back on LIP, OFY and hopefully Canada Council and other grants, and since there are members like myself—the hon. member for Vancouver East, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour and others—who have large sums of unused public moneys left over from our LIP allocation—

An hon. Member: Oh you have, have you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: —because we rejected phony make-work applications, would the President of the Treasury Board consider restoring these unused public funds to general revenues for all Canadians rather than them being allowed to go into a slippage fund, as was the custom in the past?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the generous offer she makes to the government, and I will discuss it with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGOLA—INTERVENTION BY CUBA AND RUSSIA—POSSIBLE TOPIC OF DISCUSSION WITH DR. KISSINGER AND PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister which is really supplementary to the one asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition. In view of the recent statement by the United States Secretary of State, Dr. Kissinger, that the United States cannot remain indifferent to Soviet and Cuban intervention in Angola and that continued intervention could have serious consequences for east-west détente, I should like to ask if this matter was discussed during Dr. Kissinger's visit to Ottawa and if the Canadian government, in the interests of world peace, has sent a note of protest to Russia and Cuba imploring those countries to stop their militaristic imperialism in Angola?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has repeatedly—and particularly at the United Nations—made statements protesting this type of foreign intervention in local conflicts. That remains our position and it applies to all countries intervening in whatever conflict. I know of no specific note having been sent to the countries mentioned by the hon. member.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PREVENT PREDICTED DROP IN FARM INCOME—POSSIBLE DECLINE IN FOOD PRICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the report of Statistics Canada to the Agriculture Outlook Conference yesterday that net farm income might drop by as much as 25 per cent next year, can the minister inform the House what specific programs he might announce to prevent such a sharp drop in farm income?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I could predict world conditions I would also be able to say what these figures actually mean. Some of the figures given last year were wrong and I am hoping they are wrong again this year. What they said was going to happen last year did not happen.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. At the same conference the president of Dominion Stores predicted that food prices would rise 10 per cent or 15 per cent during the next year despite the predicted fall in farm income. If that is the case, can the minister assure the House that if farm income is to fall he will see to it that the price of food at the retail counter will also go down?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if the report given to me is the same as the one the hon. member speaks of, the person he is talking about said it would not be because of what farmers receive for the food but it would be other costs involved in handling that food that would raise the price.

My question is the following: can the minister tell us whether he had any consultation about that and whether studies have been made as promised concerning the organization of the business of the House, by taking into consideration the school calendar as far as possible throughout Canada, in order not to experience situations such as the one we are faced with every six months when the time comes to adjourn the House?

INCREASE IN PRICE OF CATTLE FEED—PROPOSED REFERENCE TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that the cost of some cattle foods and in particular brewery grain, is skyrocketing because certain suppliers seem to be in the process of forming a monopoly and in consequence many calves are being slaughtered at birth because it is impossible to raise them economically? If the minister is aware of this, is he prepared to have it referred to the Anti-Inflation Board for study?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it has not been brought to my attention that distilled mash or grain is being sold at an exorbitant price but I shall look into it. In light of what the hon. member has said, I am sure the efficient Anti-Inflation Board will investigate.

POSSIBLE REVISION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PARTS INDUSTRY AND PRICE PARITY FOR VEHICLES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that a committee within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is studying possible revisions ot the autopact, will the minister assure the House that this committee will, as a priority, study carefully the position of the auto parts industry to see if this industry group can be brought in under the autopact in any autopact revisions recommended by the committee?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what the hon. member means by being "brought in under the autopact" because, of course, it already is, for all practical purposes. There may be some distinctions that I do not understand from the question but I would be glad to consult with the hon. member on it.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question. Can the minister assure the House as well that although the automobile price parity is outside the autopact, the committee will carefully study this subject and determine whether it can be brought into the pact or whether separate letters of commitment can be secured from the manufacturers to assure price parity as soon as possible?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take note of the hon. member's representations.

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFERRING RESPONSIBILITIES FROM OTHER DEPARTMENTS TO COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Is the government giving consideration to the transfer of certain responsibilities currently exercised by the Department of the Secretary of State to the Department of Communications, such as responsibility for the CBC, which was being contemplated apparently at the time Pierre Juneau was appointed minister of communications?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the distribution of responsibilites within the government rests with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, could I refer this question to the Prime Minister? I am not sure if he heard it. Is consideration still being given to transferring some responsibility which currently comes under the responsibility of the Secretary of State, such as the CBC, to the Department of Communications as was apparently intended at the time of Pierre Juneau's appointment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am always happy to receive suggestions from the other side on the reorganization of the administration or portfolios but at the present time nothing is being contemplated.

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell the House why the CRTC is being required to drift without a permanent chairman since August 29 when Pierre Juneau was appointed minister of communications and when does the government intend to announce the appointment of a permanent chairman for the CRTC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the intention has been to wait until the minister was appointed to proceed with that appointment. As the hon. member knows, Mr. Juneau did not remain minister long enough to confirm that. I am sure that the new minister, in discussions with me, will be able to appoint a permanent chairman very soon.

INCOME TAX

REASON FOR EARLY MAILING OF FORMS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the usual Christmas postal rush and the backlog of mail remaining from the recent Post Office shutdown which, until as recently as yesterday, included the hundreds of bags of mail stashed away on Parliament Hill, why did the Department of National Revenue find it necessary to send out millions of personal income tax forms, when they will not be needed for several weeks at least and some people probably do not care if they ever get them?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I want him to know how efficient the department has become. We want to send the material out as soon as we can, so that people can see how easy it is to fill out income tax forms.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF MANDATORY SENTENCES FOR VIOLENT CRIMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since, because of his efforts, juggling and dealings with personnel of the committee, we are to have mandatory sentences for second or third breathalyzer offences, and as the former minister of justice said he did not favour mandatory sentences for crimes such as extortion with kidnapping, is it now the minister's policy to bring in mandatory sentences for crimes of violence like kidnapping with extortion, or any crime committed with the use of firearms.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are no minimum mandatory sentences for these offences. The minimum mandatory sentences for second offences of impaired driving have been in the Criminal Code for some years, and there is no change in that regard in Bill C-71.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since section 247 of the Criminal Code deals with kidnapping and since the words "liable to imprisonment for life" mean in law that an offender may be imprisoned for one day or for life, I ask again, will the minister's new policy call for mandatory sentences in cases of violent crime, and will he implement this policy in the same way as he seeks to implement law and regulations with respect to the breathalyzer test?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, whatever legislation will be brought down, will be brought down in due course, and sentences will be shown in it. I assure the hon. member that, in my opinion, there is not an argument generally for having long mandatory sentences included in the Criminal Code.

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTION BILINGUAL BONUS BE GRANTED TO QUEBEC EMPLOYEES BEFORE END OF YEAR

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question following others which were put to him previously in the House.

Considering that the Official Languages Act grants parity of salaries to civil servants working in bilingual positions throughout Canada, and considering that secretaries working in bilingual positions in Quebec are paid the 7 per cent bonus granted for bilingualism, can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House if the representatives of the Public Service Alliance of Canada and those of the Treasury Board are agreed and will rush through the discussions so that the salary scale for civil servants working in Quebec in positions classified as bilingual may be reviewed before the end of this year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a major problem which does not concern only such civil servants who are working in Quebec; it concerns also all civil servants working in both languages throughout Canada. We are making progress and hope a solution will be found very shortly. On the other hand, as far as the reference to bilingual secretaries is concerned, the policy which had been announced several years ago to meet an emergency was an exceptional one. As for other functions, we intend to follow a different path than the one which was then followed, namely granting a 7 per cent bonus.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

APPLICATION OF SWIFT COMPANY TO PURCHASE CHECKERBOARD FOODS—REQUEST FOR EARLY ACTION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I shall direct a supplementary to his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the absence of the former minister, may I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary? Is the minister aware of an application from Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., to purchase the property and equipment of Checkerboard Foods Ltd. of Ingersoll, Ontario, which is presently before the Bureau of Competition Policy of his department, with interviews scheduled for tomorrow, and is he aware that failure to process this application by January 1, 1976, will result in 160 people being laid off in Ingersoll as of that date?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lee: I am aware that an application for this acquisition is presently under consideration by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. In the course of their review process the agency seeks the advice of the Bureau of Competition Policy in my department as to the competitive effects of such acquisitions. The director of the Combines Investigation Act has already provided the Foreign Investment Review Agency with his views on the proposed acquisition. However, both the Foreign Investment Review Act and the Combines Investigation Act require that their proceedings be carried out in private until such time as such proceedings may become public in the ways allowed under the legislation. I am not aware of the details relating to this matter and I am not aware of any reason why the target plant will be closed on January 1, 1976.

APPLICATION OF SWIFT COMPANY FOR PURCHASE OF CHECKERBOARD FOODS—REASON FOR REVIEW BY BOARD

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I address my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? With further reference to the same application of Swift Canadian Co. Ltd. to purchase only the real estate and equipment of Checkerboard Foods Ltd., why is it necessary that the Foreign Investment Review Agency approve of this transaction, when no inventory, stock or accounts receivable are involved, acknowledging that if the target company were to have shut down and laid off its staff a few months ago a sale of the property now would not come under the purview of the Foreign Investment Review Agency?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I may give chapter 2 of the reply?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: As hon. members know, it is not appropriate to discuss matters before the Foreign Investment Review Agency; but I am sure note will be taken of the hon. member's representation.

MULTICULTURALISM

REASON FOR DOWNGRADING THIRD LANGUAGE TEACHING IN SCHOOLS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the program of multiculturalism. Since the O'Brien report and the Canadian Consultative Council on multiculturalism stressed the absolute necessity for third language teaching in schools, if the multicultural character of Canada is to survive, why has the minister downgraded such help for language training in schools?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did not downgrade it. Actually, I indicated to the voluntary sector working through the grant program, and people in the ethno-cultural groups who are prepared to assist in this regard, that such assistance will remain a component of the program. Actually, we shall be able to put more resources into it. But I indicated the reality of the situation. Certainly, the educational system is the responsibility of the provinces, and it seems to me that they should extend the type of aid of which the hon. member talks.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister explain the apparent change in policy, evident from speeches he has made? Apparently he has done this without meeting formally with the Canadian Consultative Council, which the government appointed. The minister seems to have done this either by consulting with a few of his officials, or engaging in informal discussions with members of the council or other people.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have been meeting with the Canadian Consultative Council on an ongoing basis. I have been meeting people all across the country and talking about the various aspects of the policy and the direction in which it should go. In addition, I have met directly many ethno-cultural groups of this country. As late as last night I was talking to the Germany community in Kitchener about this aspect of the policy.

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF PROPOSED INSTITUTION AT STURGEON, ALBERTA

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. What is the status of the proposed medium and maximum security penal institution in the municipal district of Sturgeon, Alberta?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are re-examining that particular site for a penitentiary but we would like to stay there. We have already purchased land and spent a good deal of money on development. We have already spent $213,000, and when we went to that site, we had the support of the provincial government. So it would be with great reluctance that we would withdraw from the site. But we are considering representations.

● (1450)

Mr. Elzinga: In view of the fact that the construction permit issued by the municipal district has expired, and bearing in mind the minister's statement that if the general public in the surrounding area were opposed to the prison he would alter his proposal, would the minister explain why a sum in excess of $200,000 was spent on feasibility studies before the public had an opportunity to express their opinion with regard to the choice of this site?

Mr. Allmand: Well, Mr. Speaker, we started working on this site more than a year ago and although it was known, or should have been known, that we were doing so, no objections were raised until very much later. As a matter of fact, the local authorities and the provincial government, gave us the go-ahead. A lot of work had been done before any protests were made. They came much later.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROTEST AGAINST PROGRAM "THE SIX YEARS OF WAR"

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that on Sunday evening, November 30, the CBC saw fit to portray a television play "The Six Years of War" which emphasized out of all proportion the lewd side of service life rather than the honourable intentions of the many who volunteered their services in time of war, I should like to ask the minister on behalf of the many veterans and others who have officially protested this presentation through the Royal Canadian Legion whether he would intercede with the CBC with a view to seeing that future presentations which are in extremely bad taste will be prohibited from being viewed on our national network?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I will make sure that this representation gets to the corporation.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED EXPANSION OF ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS PARK—REASON FOR ATTEMPTS TO PURCHASE LAND

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and a short supplementary to the Minister of Supply and Services. I should like to express my appreciation to the Minister of Indian Affairs for the courteous almost two-hour hearing he gave representatives from my constituency concerning the expansion of the St. Lawrence Islands Park.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: While the minister guaranteed that no negotiations for the purchase of private property would take place in the area until certain studies had been made, can the hon. gentleman tell the House why persons claiming to represent the Department of Supply and Services have been negotiating and attempting to purchase certain islands and land in the area? Has Parks Canada become aware of this?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I stated to the hon. member earlier, approximately 20 individuals have come forward and offered their land and there have been discussions.

However, subsequent to the meeting to which the hon. member referred I asked that a hold be placed on any negotiations and that nothing further should be done. There is one problem: we may have reached a point at which we have a legal obligation toward three of these individuals. I am not certain of this yet and have asked that it be verified.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF MEASURES TO IMPROVE STATUS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the fact that there are only 15 days left before the end of International Women's Year, will the right hon. gentleman advise the House specifically what he has done for the women of this country during the past year?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Let's hear it, Pierre!

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF RESTRICTIONS ON UNILINGUAL PILOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? Is he or his department considering placing any restriction on the licensing of unilingual English-speaking pilots flying into the Province of Quebec in Canadian air space or on uniligual French-speaking pilots flying from the Province of Quebec into the remainder of Canadian air space? If not, is it the intention of the government to impose any such restrictions?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The existence of English and French controls throughout the country makes a simple negative to the first part of the question straightforward. As far as the second part of the question is concerned, the only issue at the moment is the broad one of the pilot's basic ability to perform the functions which are required having regard to the control facilities which are available.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE SAFETY WHEN ADOPTING BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL REGULATIONS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In the light of the answer given by the minister, may I ask what precautions or extra safeguards are under consideration by his department in order to avoid tragedies which are inherent in the examples of near-misses which come to our attention—there was one recently when a matter of a mere 20 to 40 feet separated two jumbo aircraft in the United States where only one language is being used. What extra precautions are being taken by the department to avoid this additional safety hazard which his policy will likely cause?

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The main precaution I think I shall have to take is to avoid misapprehensions which the hon. member may create in trying to relate particular instances to the language question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: As he pointed out, the incident to which he referred occurred in another country where one language is in use. Canada has a record, I think I can safely say, as having one of the safest procedures anywhere in the world with respect to air space and flying procedures. It is our intention to uphold that standard. We are confident we can do so and, in addition, better meet the needs of people using both languages.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF REAL GROWTH AND JOB CREATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In November, 1974, the former Minister of Finance predicted that real growth in the economy in 1975 would be four per cent and that a quarter of a million new jobs would be created. As there are now only 15 days left in the year, and since only 123,000 jobs have been created to date, would the minister indicate what is likely to be the real growth in 1975 and what will be the shortfall as compared with the prediction of the former minister with respect to job creation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As the hon. gentleman will recall, in the budget of June, 1975, my predecessor had something to say on the same question.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister indicate what his prediction is for 1976 concerning real growth in the Canadian economy and job creation in that year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would say that my aspiration is 5 per cent. But there are a lot of factors, of course, which are beyond my direct control.

NATIONAL PARKS

JASPER—POSSIBILITY CANADIAN NATIONAL DIVISIONAL HEADQUARTERS WILL BE RELOCATED—CONSULTATION WITH RESIDENTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the hon. gentleman advise the House whether the parks branch has dedicated any funds to having studies made of the question of relocating the divisional headquarters of the CNR and its facilities away from Jasper National Park? What has been done with regard to consulting the people of Banff and Jasper and neighbouring regions with regard to this matter?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, an extensive study has been under way for the last 12 to 18 months involving the citizens of Jasper and employees of the CNR. A very substantial report has, I understand, just arrived and a summary is being put together for me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When does the minister expect to make any definitive announcement taking into account the traditional history of the park and the CNR, recognizing that the park was created for the railroad and that people ought to use the park, not just the bears?

Mr. Buchanan: I hope to be able to do that shortly after the turn of the year, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JELINEK—ALLEGED DISPARAGING REMARKS BY MINISTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege pertaining to remarks made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) yesterday, as well as on previous occasions, when attempting to answer simple and straightforward questioning. As the Chair will recall, I rose on a point of order yesterday on the same matter and suggested that the minister in question once again implied in his statement what I believe to be racial overtones against me. The Chair then asked that, if there was any information to that effect, it should be brought to the Chair's attention. I would, therefore, like to refer back to other statements which this minister has made in this House to show, by a course of conduct, that his statement made yesterday suggesting that my questioning of the Olympics, in his words, once again "hides ulterior motives", ties in with his previous statements relating to the same subject matter.

● (1500)

On March 8, 1974, as reported at page 332 of Hansard, when referring to me and to my involvement in Olympic questioning, the minister, who was then the postmaster general, said:

—he continues to throw mud to discredit Quebecers. This is the typical way to act for some members of the Progressive Conservative party.

Another statement accredited to the same minister, again referring to me and my party:

They unduly and incorrectly pestered us in committee through the voice of this member who keeps on sullying Quebecers. The PC party continue to divide people in this country—

And yet a further statement made in this House by the same minister, again referring to my party and myself, to quote Hansard once again:

They are opposed to everything stemming from or directed to the province of Quebec. The Progressive Conservative members are against French Canadians and they always have the odd greenhorn to sully people.

There is no question in my mind, when the minister said yesterday that as a result of my questioning on the financing and staging of the Games I was trying to hide ulterior motives, that through a course of conduct tied to his previous statements he was implying, once again, by racial overtones, that I am not only anti-Olympics but anti-French Canadian and anti-Quebec as well. If the minister would take time to check the records he would find that his implications are totally and absolutely incorrect and unjustified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: There is no question that a pattern of not only racial overtones but direct racial accusations has developed from the minister's continuing statements relating to my Olympic questioning. One can only assume that the reason for this attitude is to attempt to hide the obviously incompetent manner in which the government has handled the Olympic situation from the outset, particularly during the period the minister held the Post Office portolio.

I have made plain the basis of my question of privilege, and if it were not for the fact that this session is drawing to an end, with much important government business to be attended to, I would move a motion to have this matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Instead, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will take this opportunity to withdraw the racial implications which he continues to make against me.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the question of privilege, I should just like to ask permission of Your Honour and the House to allow the minister to answer this point when he is next in the House. Today he is in Montreal on official business; he is opening an office for consumers. I know he would want to deal with this matter very seriously, so if it is acceptable I would ask that the matter be stood over till tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: It seems only reasonable, before any decision is made by the Chair, that both sides be heard. Notwithstanding the fact that no motion is attached to the hon. members question to give the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) an opportunity to make a contribution to the point. Therefore, the point will stand over until that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the question period you recognized me to allow me to ask a question, and I thank you for it. My question was directed to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if the simultaneous translation might have been effective but, in any event, knowing the usual courtesy of the President of the Privy Council I am convinced in advance that he would have answered my question.

Since the question I asked related to this Parliament as a whole and was supplementary to a question I have previously asked in this session which seemed to meet the approval of all colleagues in this House about setting up a calendar for session periods which would correspond as much as possible to the school calendar in order to allow parliamentarians to be able to live a family life during two or three periods in the year, especially as there is now a private bill before this House which was tabled by an hon. member and which is also in agreement with the proposal I had made on that occasion, and since the President of the Privy Council at the time stated in this House that he would recommend to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization that it examine that question, which is very serious not only for parliamentarians themselves but for the efficiency of Parliament as such because I consider that when we have in advance a well determined calendar I think that every parliamentarian will do all he can to give his full effort to meet the obligations he has to meet in the given period.

So my question was this: Can the President of the Privy Council say today where things stand in respect of that matter, and will the government be introducing soon a session calendar so that we can work with more efficiency, more assurance and waste less time on useless discussions: Are we going to adjourn or are we not going to adjourn?

That is my point of order, Mr. Speaker. And if you allow the President of the Privy Council to be kind enough to answer my question I would be very happy about that, and I thank you in advance.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member, but either I was inattentive or the translation facilities were not perhaps working properly and I did not catch the introduction to his question. I am very sympathetic to the hon. member's desire to be able to know when we can leave this House for our constituencies and for home. For example, by Friday of this week—I have given notice of this over and over again—it was the desire of the government to rise. However, it is not really for me to say whether we will or not, since there is some government business still uncompleted. I am still hopeful that that will be the case.

I should also like to say to the hon. member that in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, on which his party has a representative, we have established a subcommittee on the management of time, and I am hopeful that that subcommittee will be able to arrange affairs in such a way that we can have a more definite idea when we can go to our constituencies.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on a point of order.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege concerning the decisions you make so that members on this side are not recognized during the question period. I would respectfully submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we consider the jurisprudence used in England, members have the floor in turns no matter which party they belong to. No matter which party we belong to, Mr. Speaker, we are all equal. Mr. Speaker, some months ago you ruled that a parliamentary secretary could not ask questions. Today you followed the practice whereby only two government members are entitled to ask questions. I think that this is illogical and that you violate the member's privileges.

Mr. Speaker: I only wish to tell the hon. member that perhaps he felt better yesterday when I think three or four government members asked questions. It changes with each sitting.

● (1510)

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member may have a good point, but probably members on the government side could take 15 minutes before their Wednesday caucus in order to get the answers in caucus.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege having to do with a question I asked during the question period today, a short while ago. It seems to me a very serious matter when a minister of the Crown, in this case the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), has announced a freeze on the purchase of private land in the St. Lawrence Islands area and advises the public accordingly, by public statement, while at the very same time another minister of the Crown, purportedly the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), apparently permits two persons, claiming to be his representatives, namely, William Fraser and Robert Fraser, to go contrary to this freeze and as recently as the last few days attempt to negotiate the purchase of some of this very same land.

My question of privilege is that the Minister of Supply and Services should either disassociate himself completely from this event or, if it has happened, I think I am in order to suggest that he should explain to this House why he, by his very behaviour, would be going contrary to an arrangement made by another member of the cabinet and an understanding given to the public and members of this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on a point or order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to ask you to look into the statistics and you will realize that 10 per cent more members from the opposition side are recognized than from the government side, and that by your own decision.

So, when you say that government members are allowed to put three or four questions, I think you have not taken a good look at the figures. May I suggest you review the statistics and you will realize that, during the question period, you continually recognize the opposition. It is wrong to pretend that government members are granted the same privilege.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), let us not forget that the oral questions period lasts only 45 minutes. And according to tradition, its purpose is to allow members of the opposition parties to put questions to the government. That was how things worked when we had a Progressive Conservative government. I know what I am talking about because then also I was in the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I think government members have nothing more to do than phone the ministers and let members of the opposition have the floor to ask the government questions so that democracy be respected.

SPORT FISHING AMENDMENTS—1976

Question No. 3,331—Mr. Brisco:

What measures have been taken by the Ministry of State (Fisheries) to ensure that sports fishing amendments for 1976 will be gazetted before the end of May thus avoiding the unwarranted delay which was experienced this year?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): All amendments to regulations are processed through the Fisheries and Marine Service with a minimum of delay, once proposals are received from regional or provincial offices. Provincial authorities have been requested to present their proposed 1976 amendments as soon as possible after the close of the 1975 sports fishing seasons. To date these have not been received from any of the provinces.

EXPORTS OF COAL TO JAPAN IN 1974

Question No. 3,508—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government aware of the cost in 1974 of shipping Canadian coal from Robert's Bank, British Columbia to Japan and (a) if so, what was it (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: see reply to question No. 3,511.

EXPORTS OF MINERAL ORE AND CONCENTRATES TO JAPAN IN 1974

Question No. 3,511—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government aware of the cost in 1974 of shipping Canadian mineral ore and concentrates to Japan and (a) if so, what was it (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: the cost of shipping concentrates to Japan is the cost of handling and transportation between mine and smelter destination. These detailed costs for 1974 would be known by the companies involved in the transactions. However, the government maintains a general awareness of the order of these costs which can be described as follows. Mineral products each with total volume greater than 100,000 tons exported to Japan in 1974 were: Iron Ore, direct shipping, 207,000 short tons; Iron Ore, concentrates, 4,377,000 short tons; Iron Ore, pellets, 90,000 short tons; Iron Ore, total, 4,674,000 short tons; Copper ores, concentrates and matte, 1,200,000 short tons; Lead ores and concentrates, 190,000 short tons; Zinc ores and concentrates, 410,000 short tons; Coal, 10,993,000 short tons; Asbestos milled fibres, 146,000 short tons; Total of the above, 17,613,000 short tons. Freight rates for cargo originating in Canada and destined for Japan fell sharply in 1974. For example, a charter rate of $25/long ton was typical for 20,000 ton ships at the start of 1974. This rate fell to $14/long ton for the same size of ship by mid 1975. An average figure for 1974 for this size of ship is assumed to have been $20/long ton. Lead, zinc and copper ores and concentrates and asbestos fibres are generally shipped in this size of vessel. Iron ore products and coal are generally shipped in large vessels with considerably lower rates. Assuming the average ship size in the case of these products was 50,000 tons an average cost for 1974 would have been approximately $4/long ton for iron ore and $6/long ton for coal. In some cases Canadian mineral products are sold on a c.i.f. basis in which case the seller pays the shipping cost. In other cases Canadian mineral products are sold on an f.o.b. basis with the buyer covering shipping costs. The basis of the sale would be reflected in the selling price. The total cost of shipping Canadian mineral ores and concentrates to Japan in 1974 on the basis of the above data can be calculated approximately: (a) 1,946,000 short tons @ $20/long ton, $35,380,000; (b) 4,674,000 short tons @ $4/long ton, $16,996,000; (c) 10,993,000 short tons @ $6/long ton, $59,958,000. Total approximately, $112,334,000.

MAINTENANCE DREDGING AT, AND DOWNRIVER FROM PORT OF QUEBEC

Question No. 3,585—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the Department of Transport's best estimate of the annual cost of so-called maintenance dredging at, and downriver of the Port of Quebec?

2. Who will bear the cost of such dredging and how much of this can be apportioned to the taxpayer in Metropolitan Halifax and Saint John?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. In light of the recent unacceptably high bid which was received for maintenance dredging downstream of Quebec at North Traverse, and other factors currently under review, the Department of Transport is not in a position at this time to reply to this question. In any event, it would be prejudicial to the government to indicate any of its cost estimates prior to receipt of tenders for any work. Finally, as a matter of interest, the best quantity estimate for annual maintenance in the North Traverse after its deepening was 175,000 cubic yards.

2. Government of Canada, Department of Transport, Vote 10.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1975

BORROWING AUTHORITY FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-80, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for public works and general purposes—The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of this bill. This is an unusual situation and maybe there is an answer to the point, but I note there is no Governor General's recommendation attached to this bill, nor have we had any message from His Excellency signed by his own hand. Usually, requests of this kind have been under supply bills based on the estimates, and that would be covered if it were done in that way. On the other hand, if it is a borrowing bill—and I have never heard of borrowing without it costing money—should there not be a Governor General's recommendation?

Supplementary Borrowing Authority

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could speak to the question. The recommendation from His Excellency is required under the British North America Act, and the recommendation is specifically for the purpose of appropriating any part of the consolidated revenue fund, or public moneys, for the purpose of expenditure. The hon. member is quite right in saying that from time to time the executive has to appropriate money for the purpose of making payments on the public debt and that is done through the normal estimates process. A borrowing bill, however, is not an expenditure bill. It is a distinctly different process of acquiring the means to pay expenditures that have already been authorized by parliament. In that sense, then, it is not covered by the provisions of the British North America Act and for this reason the Governor General's recommendation would not be required.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not satisfied.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raises a most interesting point of order about the bill, one that has occurred to the Chair and we have given it some preliminary examination. It is true that in the past a clause to extend to the government the approval of parliament for borrowings has been part of a supply bill which in fact has, therefore, been subject to the identical restrictions in respect of borrowing recommendations, the same restrictions sufficient to include it under that umbrella of separation as a result of the ruling last week.

A separate bill to deal only with borrowings raises, in a totally new way, the question of whether it is the kind of expenditure, in and of itself, that would require a recommendation of His Excellency in order to comply with all those restrictions that have traditionally surrounded financial initiatives of the Crown. For the moment, perhaps I might indicate that, being in some doubt about the matter, I should like to reserve on the question. I think it is important that the bill not be delayed, and I understand there has been an understanding or some agreement that the bill should go through all stages this afternoon. At the moment I should like to see the bill proceed while I give some consideration to the matter.

If the bill is to be given swift passage through all stages this afternoon, then I would for the moment, perhaps, be prepared to say that because there is on the face of it a separate statutory authority under the Financial Administration Act for borrowing, because in a sense the money that is being borrowed cannot be spent without that separate authority, and subject to the scrutiny of estimates and a supply bill, it would seem the borrowing of the money is not for the purpose of expenditures which have not already been authorized, scrutinized and approved by parliament but, rather, is in respect of those estimates and supply to which parliament has already directed itself and to which a royal recommendation has been appropriately attached. Therefore, it would seem that the safeguard in that respect is adequately provided.

Perhaps what I am saying, in another way, is that for the moment I should like to see this bill go ahead. If there is not sufficient time to study the matter in respect of this particular bill, the question ought to be held over for argument at some time in the future when separate consideration can be given to the point. All my remarks to this point have been based on the understanding that the bill would go through all stages this afternoon.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (1520)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it would have been my proposal, in my remarks on second reading, that unanimous consent be requested that this bill be referred to the committee of the whole House instead of the standing committee. I believe that is agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we agree to that. I suggest that if during the afternoon you come to the view that a royal recommendation should be obtained, it would not take very long to get it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I admit to some confusion at this particular stage. We seem to have gone through first reading and are now about to have second reading, and I have not even seen a copy of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has not received a copy, there might be some difficulty. However, I understand that other members have received their copies.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-80, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for public works and general purposes, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House seeks to increase the statutory borrowing authority by $2 billion, retroactive to April 1, 1975. This is exactly the same increase in borrowing authority as that sought in clause 5 of the supply bill on December 9.

May I begin, Mr. Speaker, by addressing myself to the procedural questions which have arisen in this connection. The Financial Administration Act, part IV, section 36, requires that "no money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of parliament". That, of course, is the provision referred to by yourself, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the point of order a moment ago, indicating that a specific statutory enactment is required if a borrowing authority is requested. Conversely, on the other hand, a royal recommendation is not, in my submission, required for borrowing authority. This refers to new funds—section 36 refers to new funds—since section 38 of the same act permits the borrowing of such sums of money as are required for the repayment of any securities that were issued under the authority of parliament other than section 39, and are maturing or have been called for redemption.

It has been the custom since confederation to include requests for new borrowing authority in one of the first Appropriation Acts for a new fiscal year. Furthermore, when circumstances have necessitated an increase in this borrowing authority, such increases have always been sought in subsequent Appropriation Acts. Any unused borrowing authority remaining at the end of a fiscal year is cancelled when new borrowing authority has been granted for the new fiscal year.

The need for new borrowing powers during each fiscal year reflects several factors. It reflects the amount of expenditures approved by parliament in the main estimates, interim supply bills and supplementary estimates. It reflects the budgetary and non-budgetary financial requirements resulting from the difference between the expenditures approved by parliament and the sources of revenues approved by parliamant.

The prime justification for including the new borrowing authority in the appropriation acts is that borrowing powers to make up any shortfall between revenues and expenditures should follow fairly automatically since the shortfall and the borrowing requirements are a consequence of actions already taken by parliament. I realize that the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) the other night is basically that the Appropriation Act on that specific occasion was not the subject of debate, and I understand the House leaders are now discussing new procedures whereby we may have a discussion on that particular bill including the borrowing authority. It is the government's intention, subject to discussion, to continue the long-established practice of including requests for new borrowing authority in Appropriation Acts in the future.

As a result of the highly successful Canada savings bond campaign, the Government of Canada raised about $4,336 million in the current fiscal year to November 28, 1975. That is a gross figure from which must be deducted redemptions. Of course, redemptions of Canada savings bonds are taking place continuously and normally average about $100 million per month. In the absence of new borrowings, the government would, therefore, be well within its present $4 billion statutory borrowing authority by the end of fiscal 1975-76. However, unless additional new borrowing authority is authorized by parliament, we will not be able to raise the additional funds which we need in the remainder of this fiscal year.

In this connection, it will be recalled that I terminated sales of this year's series of Canada savings bonds on November 14. This decision was taken because it then appeared possible that net sales of Canada savings bonds might use up most, if not all, of the unused statutory borrowing authority. At the same time, the ongoing treasury bill financing program was brought to a temporary halt and it was subsequently decided not to raise new cash in the December 15 marketable bond refunding issue which was announced on November 28.

The borrowing authority of $4 billion granted by parliament not only reflected the shortfall between expenditures indicated in the main estimates and anticipated ongoing sources of budgetary revenues, but it also provided some margin for contingencies. In the budget presented to the House on June 23, budgetary and non-budgetary financial requirements were revised upwards to a figure of $5.3 billion. The various provisions introduced in the June budget were subsequently debated and approved by parliament. On November 14 I also informed the House that financial requirements for this fiscal year would be between $5 billion and $6 billion.

Supplementary Borrowing Authority

While the $2 billion additional borrowing authority sought in this bill reflects the higher level of financial requirements anticipated for fiscal 1975-76, new funds to be raised in capital markets during the balance of this fiscal year are expected to be substantially less than this amount. Without wishing to be too precise concerning the government's borrowing plans over the balance of the current fiscal year, I would say that, subject to prevailing market conditions, an amount equal to about half the increase in borrowing authority might be raised in the capital markets. The balance will provide a margin to deal with any unforeseen contingencies such as foreign exchange transactions, and to provide adequate flexibility in debt management and monetary policy.

It is the government's intention to recommence a regular borrowing program through the issue of treasury bills early in the new year, and to raise new funds through the issue of marketable bonds on February 1 when $150 million Government of Canada bonds will mature. It is for these reasons that an increase in the statutory borrowing authority is being sought before the Christmas recess. If opportunities to raise new funds in the capital markets are missed now, then additional burdens would necessarily have to be placed on capital markets in the next fiscal year.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need make any apology for the fact that we are now facing this special bill this afternoon as a result of the action I took in raising the question of order on the night of December 9, and consequent upon Mr. Speaker's decision with regard to the regularity of clause 5 of that appropriation bill. But I would say, first of all, I think the minister really is finding himself hoist on his own petard, in that he was the first architect, as government House leader in 1969, of the changes in House rules which eliminated the committee of supply. That was done ultimately under the sanction of closure, again a subject which is totally repugnant to me because, as a long-time member of the House, I feel it is the House which is in charge of its rules, not the government trying to impose rules in order to master the House.

So there is a difference of approach on this subject. Certainly we have seen the wheels start to turn the other way. I must say that my motive the other night—and, I think, a motive which will commend itself to hon. members this afternoon—was simply a reassertion of the fact that it is parliament which is supposed to control the purse strings, and not that parliament is to disburse money on behalf of the administration by simply pushing down the button on the cash register.

It is a slow step and there are some gains and some losses. I hope that this has been a gain. The minister may speak all he wants about customs since confederation, including authorizations for borrowing power under the Appropriation Act, but I would say that the abrupt change came in 1969 when the Appropriation Act which follows the study of our supplementary estimates must come before this House without debate or power of amendment.

A year ago, and then the other night, the minister's predecessor introduced into the supplementary estimates a clause, hitherto unreferred to and undiscussed, in which the government merely sought borrowing powers. What was that for? I asked the question last year as a point of order because I had seen that particular type of clause the first time in supplementary estimates under the Appropriation Act. I am told that it has happened on eighteen occasions in the past. But there are different rules, and I must say that if some of these things slipped through at that time, it must be remembered that prior to 1969 there was debate permitted on any clause in the clause by clause study.

I dare say, without going back to the records, that some people did make inquiries about borrowing. Last year the former minister of finance furnished an explanation, albeit a very brief one, in saying that the sales of Canada savings bonds had been so successful that the government, willy-nilly, had found itself forced through the ceiling of its borrowing powers. Today the minister has given us an explanation. Certainly some people may want to question it, and I would say that that is what is needed now.

I think the minister, and possibly others, have indicated that the House leaders are discussing ways and means of trying to avoid that sort of thing. All I will say is that I have a number of suggestions for him. Of course we can have a bill of this nature, leaving aside the question of whether or not a recommendation is necessary, but in any event we can have a bill that authorizes an increase in borrowing powers.

Also, I think it is possible that at the time of the tabling of the main estimates, when quite often the borrowing authority matter is raised, it might be referred to by the President of the Treasury Board on tabling the estimates. His whole statement then becomes the subject of discussion in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, wherever the minister appears. Therefore, that subject is discussed. The same approach could be used with regard to miscellaneous estimates. They could be referred to in the statement at the time or, although I am not a devotee of $1 items in supplementary estimates, it seems to me that a $1 item is the same as asking permission of the House to transfer moneys from one account to another.

This bill seeks not to spend money but to raise money if there is a deficiency. It is not even required for refinancing, but permission of the House is sought. The item is debatable in the committee. I hope that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization will come in for more fruitful discussion. I suggest to you, sir, that the appropriation bill, instead of being subject to restrictions on debate and amendment, should allow for debate in which ten o'clock is not seen and, if necessary, one could start a debate at, say, three o'clock on the afternoon of the last day, to be continued until 1.45 the following afternoon. But in any event, debate which would allow members to ventilate their objections to any and all items appearing in those estimates.

There would be full discussion then and culmination of a lot of work done in the Standing Committees on Miscellaneous Estimates. At present, as I indicated the other night and have on other occasions, the work of committees studying estimates is totally frustrated, first by the inability to discuss them in the House unless a supply date is allotted to a particular subject; and, second, by the lack of even a simple expression of views. I suggest, with respect, that the Chair has missed the record with regard to the interpretation of the rules on the posting of items for a vote and the giving of priority to the government to restore items rather than having a vote as set up in the notice given by a member regarding estimates.

Since we have not had an opportunity of discussing this bill, I have to leave the procedural aspects to one side for the moment and I want to go into the matter of what we are doing. I have a list here going back to 1961 in which borrowing powers were referred to in the first appropriation bill and in subsequent appropriation bills. It has to be noted that there is no such thing as a residual borrowing power. Anything that is not used in any year lapses at the end of the year, so that the government cannot accumulate a series of unused borrowing powers. However, I think this March, particularly since 1970-71, the effects of inflation are to be seen. In 1970-71, the first appropriation bill asked for $2 billion. A subsequent appropriation bill sought $1 billion. In 1974-75, authority was sought for $3 billion in the first appropriation bill, and a year ago the amount was $2.5 billion. Earlier this year, in June, there was one appropriation bill for $4 billion, and now the minister is asking for $2 billion. Where in the past have we seen figures so high, except in 1967-68 when there was a supplementary appropriation bill seeking approval of an increase of $2.75 billion?

We should want to look at the public debt. An examination of the bank account tables with regard to public debt indicates that charges on the gross public debt currently are expected to increase by $598 million in fiscal 1976 compared with fiscal 1975. The 18.9 per cent increase in these charges is due both to higher average interest costs and to the fact that the size of the debt has increased markedly over the year.

Just as an indication of how our national debt has mounted, I have before me the Bank of Canada Review for November, 1975, and table 21, entitled "Government of Canada direct and guaranteed securities", indicates that as at November 12 the total outstanding debt was $35,885 million. If we go back five years to 1970, the figure was only about $25 billion. I should not say "only $25,746 million", because that is a lot of money. In 1964, when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) did not have his feet in the Department of Finance, the amount was $20,733 million. Over 11 years we have seen an increase of some $15 billion in the national debt, or a 75 per cent increase.

From the end of fiscal 1975 to November 20 of this year the amount of unmatured debt, as I have indicated, increased by nearly $4,300 million and has actually gone up—because my report here is more recent than the tables I referred to—to $37,384 million. Even using this shorter time period, less than eight months, unmatured debt has already increased by an amount in excess of the increase between fiscal 1973 and 1974, a total of $3,915 million. Based on current unmatured debt levels and current interest payments forecast in the main and supplementary estimates, the average rate of interest paid on unmatured debt will be near 7.5 per cent in fiscal 1976 compared with nearly 7.1 per cent in fiscal 1975. Hon. members should note that particular fact, and certainly the public as well, in that already we are seeing the influences of inflation at work for 1976.

The average interest rate on government indebtedness this coming year is expected to be 1.5 per cent higher than it is this year. All that means is that private individuals, investors and corporate investors expect inflation to be that much higher because they are hedging their investments. If the remaining months of the current fiscal year show an increase in the level of unmatured debt while the interest payment figure remains constant, then the effective rate of interest will decrease. Further supplementary estimates for interest charges while the debt remains constant, or drops, will increase the rate of interest.

We should have had the opportunity of discussing the total debt of the Government of Canada at this time. However, the way supplementary estimates are handled through committee, and because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) can only appear at this time for a matter of about an hour and a half, it is almost impossible for any hon. member to do any questioning with regard to this subject. I hope that when we get to clause 1 we will go into the subject a little more deeply than is indicated in the statement of the minister.

I recommend that the House give this bill second reading so that it can go to committee of the whole, and that we agree that under the circumstances this afternoon we dispose of the bill entirely so that it may go to the other place and the government can be in a position to meet its financial responsibilities.

There are two bills before the finance committee this afternoon dealing with financial institutions. There is another one down the road, there is a report in the works with regard to metric conversion, and this is all to be dealt with by Friday. There is no possibility that this bill could go to the committee and expect to make it back to the House by Christmas, even if we sat there until the night of December 23. Under those circumstances, I urgently ask hon. members to examine this bill. The government has acknowledged that it committed an error and did something it should not have done. It tried to do something—perhaps it was induced by other factors, or was trying something on—but there was no way out and the best thing was to come clean, as the minister has done this afternoon. Let us get on with repairing the damage and then deal with other legislation.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be very long at second reading of this bill. I wish, however, to put a few questions in committee of the whole. The bill before us will give the government the power to raise up to $2 billion by way of loans for public works and expenditures for general purposes. At the outset I should like to say that we are not talking about anything new: this is a routine, government borrowing bill. The government will be going to the money market or we are authorizing it to issue more Canada savings bonds, and so on.

Supplementary Borrowing Authority

In the past, this parliament has controlled the expenditures of the government by voting on new programs, by discussing the estimates and passing or amending them, by voting interim supply and supplementary estimates, and so on. So we have, in essence, made commitments to spend a certain amount of money in the fiscal year 1975-76. The government must now find the revenue it needs to carry out those programs. There is a shortfall, the government has to meet that shortfall, and at this time it does not have the authority to raise the money it needs. Therefore, I think this bill is pretty straightforward.

I understand that one reason we are dealing with $2 billion is that the government does not really feel it will need $2 billion, but some unforeseen circumstances—for example, changing exchange rates—may take place between now and the end of the fiscal year which will perhaps require the government to borrow up to $2 billion. That is my understanding. There are two or three things I wish to mention. Perhaps some of the money that is to be raised would not be necessary if the government considered some cuts in expenditures for the last three months of the fiscal year. I know there is about to be an announcement with regard to expenditure cuts in the next fiscal year, but we still have a few months to go in this one and perhaps all of us here could agree some programs could be eliminated or reduced which would save millions of dollars in this fiscal year.

For example, if the government is to get rid of Information Canada next year, why could it not do so a few months ahead of time and save some money in January, February and March of this fiscal year? There are several other programs like that on which the government could perhaps save money. It then would not have to go out and borrow money, pay high interest rates and increase the national debt. Another thing we should consider, when we have a shortfall in revenue, is revising the taxation system. I am still firmly convinced there are many tax loopholes which some wealthy people and some corporations can walk through. If the tax system were revised along the lines recommended years ago by Carter, there would be greater revenues.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the increase in the national debt and I am concerned about high interest rates in this country. When we talk about borrowing money, be it the federal government or any other government, we should look at the financial system and interest rates; we should get into a discussion about lowering interest rates and about foreign exchange controls. However, I do not want to take up the time of the House with a detailed discussion now, Mr. Speaker.

When I look at the question of borrowing money, I want to know why it is being borrowed. I do not want to see funds borrowed for general operating purposes or something that is not going to produce a return for the people of this country. For example, if money is borrowed to pay civil servants or electric bills or fuel bills, that seems to me an expensive proposition. If you borrow money for a capital asset, as Premier Blakeney is doing in New York to develop the potash industry in Saskatchewan, that will give the people of the province additional revenue in years to come. This was done by the former government when they created the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, which is now providing benefits to the people of the province. But when you talk about borrowing money, I want to know what it is for. If it is primarily for investment in an asset that will be beneficial to the people, well and good.

Most of us borrow money to buy a house or some other major item. The government is doing the same thing when they borrow money to invest in order to improve the livelihood of Canadians. I hope we can ask questions at committee of the whole stage and receive more information from the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes to explain my views in reply to the minister's statement on Bill C-80.

Bill C-80 is another version of clause 5 of Bill C-79 introduced in the House on December 9 last. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), with the support of all opposition members, noted that clause 5 of Bill C-79 was contravening the standing orders. The fact was admitted by the Speaker of this House whom we thank for his fairness and his great respect for the members' principles. We must also remember that clause 5 of Bill C-79 was withdrawn from the bill for those reasons and also because those $2 billion were for us a blank cheque given to the government which had not been discussed in committee nor by the members.

I would like to be brief. I want also to ask my questions later in committee of the whole, but I will add before concluding that we have agreed to let the bill pass through all stages today. I would also ask those who want to ask questions to put them in committee of the whole.

Bill C-80 leads us to ask many questions. First, what does the minister intend to do with the $2 billion? How will the money be spent, what interest rates will the government pay on that money and where will the funds be borrowed? I think that it is quite important since it is the objective of the bill now under consideration. I congratulate the minister for having introduced a special bill so that we may ask questions and be sure of what we are talking about.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I was rising to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise for only two or three minutes in order to comment on what we are doing and, more particularly, on what I think we should do in the future. As everyone knows, we have this bill before us because the Chair found clause 5 of the recent appropriation bill to be out of order. It strikes me that the thing that was most serious about the inclusion of clause 5 in the recent appropriation bill was that it denied members of the House of Commons any opportunity to discuss what was being done by that clause. The provisions of that clause had not been referred with the estimates to the various committees, and accordingly we received the clause only at the last minute at the point where the rules prohibited any debate. In practical terms, I think that is the most serious thing that happened. It is also serious that something was put into a bill for which there was no authority in the resolution on which that bill was based. But what was denied was the right of members to discuss the matter at that time.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), in commenting on this bill, said that he understood discussions were under way to find some solution to the matter. I hope those discussions will continue amongst those of us involved, and that whatever we do we will at least find an opportunity for discussion of the whole question of borrowing authority, whether it is included in an appropriation bill or brought in by way of a separate bill.

I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) should not only be commended for having raised that point of order, but I think he is also to be commended for suggesting that any discussion of this matter ought not to stop with this one point. We passed a motion the other day that continues the supply procedure experiment of this session into another session. I would hope that as part of that experiment we will find a better way to deal with a bill in its last moments. It is not quite as bad now as it was a few years ago when we sat here all night just saying, "Carried", "Carried", "Carried"; or, "On division", "On division", "On division". However, it is still a bit of a farce and I hope it will be corrected. If this whole incident has helped to bring that into focus, it has been worth while.

I shall not pursue any further the point of order I raised before the bill was called this afternoon. Mr. Speaker has reserved judgment on that, although I gather that if the bill gets to the final stage before he has given the official decision, he is prepared to let it go. However, I would stress the fact that it seems to me that it is a bill that will involve the spending of money. I know that the bill provides for borrowing authority, but it says that this borrowing may be done at rates of interest to be determined by the governor in council. Once you determine rates of interest, you will spend money.

● (1600)

Section 36 of the Financial Administration Act reads:

No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of parliament.

It does not say that once you have the authority of parliament, everything else flows from it. Actually, the act says again and again that the governor in council may do such and such, as provided in that act. If this bill provides for the payment of interest, I suggest it is a money bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Read section 45.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, I noted section 45, which reads:

The payment of all money borrowed and interest thereon and of the principal of and interest on all securities issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty with the authority of parliament is a charge on and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

That language seems to confirm my point. If charges are to be made on the consolidated revenue fund, the payment of those charges should either be authorized by parliament generally or covered by a Governor General's recommendation.

None of us wants to hold up the bill today. We are correcting an error made on December 9 and taking a few minutes to emphasize the point that this matter should be straightened out and put on a proper basis before it arises again. Most of all, putting it on a proper basis means that hon. members should have the right to discuss, for instance, the borrowing of $2 billion instead of having to vote for it without any discussion at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I feel the minister ought to give us further information concerning Bill C-80, to allow the government to borrow up to $2 billion in special or additional loans, as may be required for public works and general purposes. This means anything, anywhere and anyhow, for clause 2. (1) states:

The Governor in Council may, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by Parliament, by any Act heretofore passed, raise by way of loan, under the Financial Administration Act, by the issue and sale . . .

The issue and sale of what? The minister does not say.

. . . or pledge of securities of Canada, in such form, for such separate sums, at such rates of interest and upon such other terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve . . .

Again, the minister does not say what the interest rate will be and from whom the government will borrow up to $2 billion.

. . . such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole, the sum of two billion dollars, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I said that the minister should tell the House how he intends to borrow up to $2 billion. The minister is surely aware of the fact that Parliament is sovereign and that it can issue bonds for the financial needs which might arise at anytime.

Indeed, this special legislation authorizing borrowings up to $2 billion should be explained more fully, because under the Bank Act, the Bank of Canada is authorized to buy bonds from the federal government as well as from the provinces. And when the Bank of Canada buys a government bond issue, this buying by the Bank of Canada constitutes a reserve for the chartered banks, for the Canadian banking system.

It is established that the current reserve must be 6 per cent. Let us examine the case of the government issuing $2 billion worth of bonds sold to the Bank of Canada. So, as soon as the Bank of Canada buys the government bonds, the chartered banks can multiply that reserve, because the bonds become a reserve; the banks are entitled to multiply sixteen-fold, according to the law, that two-billion dollar bond issue; that gives the chartered banks the right to grant loans for $32 billion dollars, on the basis of the $2 billion the government would claim or of the bonds the government would sell the Bank of Canada. This confirms what we, Social Crediters, have been saying for many years. That discretionary power should be given the people's bank, the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the government is playing with fire when it asks Parliament to approve a bill such as Bill C-80, which grants even more powers to those who control money and credit, to those, as we often say, who control the economic blood of the nation. All the problems, as we know, all the problems of inflation, mentioned by the Minister of Finance, stem from the absurd financial system which forces us to pay back two or three times the amounts the government is about to borrow.

Now, the government does not want to borrow from the Bank of Canada. It will borrow from the chartered banks as usual, or resort to foreign investors, borrowing or begging from them, as Mr. Bourassa of the province of Quebec does so nicely, with so much elegance, it will go and borrow from the Americans every week or every month.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proves clearly, beyond a doubt, how right the Social Credit Party is in saying to the government: regain control over the issue of money and credit, appoint a national credit commission to make sure that at all times there is no more credit in circulation than real wealth in Canada.

● (1610)

But when we have real values, when there are public works to be done, why do we not use the method proposed by Social Credit and have interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada. If it costs $1 billion, the Bank of Canada can create credit as well as any American according to the same values and it could be repaid according to the depreciation of the works if they last 25, 30 or 40 or 50 years. The government should repay during that period so that we may get more credit and more achievements in Canada.

The government refers not only to public works but to general purposes. What does it mean by general purposes? To create an anti-inflation board to pay the bureaucracy required in other fields? But this bill, Mr. Speaker, is inflationary because if the government has recourse to loans at an interest rate of 10, 10½, 10¾ and even 11 per cent over 20 or 25 years period, like the recent $200 million loan secured by Quebec Premier Bourassa in the United States at 10 per cent over 25 years, which means that in 25 years we shall pay only for interest $250 million in interest alone and still owe $200 million for the capital. If it is not inflationary, Mr. Speaker, what is it?

And the government urges the people, the workers to limit their demands to fight inflation. In the meantime, we feed that inflationary system, we encourage excessive interest rates, and we do not have the guts to turn down the financial exploiters of the Canadian people, and provinces.

Not later than yesterday evening, an Ottawa news report told us that the Hull municipality was going to raise its taxes by 28.5 per cent. The government does not say anything. Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin will have nothing to say either. Municipalities, provinces, are allowed to raise their taxes by 20, 25, 30 per cent. Natural gas in Canada will go up by 30 per cent. We find precise reasons to allow organizations to increase their prices, whereas the workers will not have the right to have an increase exceeding 12 per cent.

This is, Mr. Speaker, a flaw in the system, and I say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) that he will never fight inflation to the ground with bills such as the one we have in hand, Bill C-80. He will never subdue inflation as long as those who control money and credit will not be controlled. They should be controlled first, but the Minister of Finance pretends not to hear, he does not listen, he does not hear; it makes no difference to him provided the Canadian public let themselves be drugged by bills which enable the government, on the pretext of doing something necessary for Canada, to engulf further the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 is going to pass, because the government has the majority. There was a discussion between House leaders to have this piece of legislation prepared and put forward. It is not a complement, it is not a new invention. In Bill C-69, things were not clearly established, they were on the shady side of constitutionality, unlike in Bill C-80, which gives the government permission to borrow up to $2 billion, but I would like the minister to tell us where he is going to borrow the money and how and for what reasons, apart from public works.

Mr. Speaker, it would be good if we knew once and for all what is the purpose of the borrowings the government intends to make. Will the government be borrowing from the Bank of Canada without interest, or at an interest rate covering administration? Will the government be borrowing from chartered banks, or will it borrow in the United States? It would be good if the minister took note of these three points—the Bank of Canada, the Canadian banking system, or American financiers. Where will we be borrowing, for what period of time, and at what interest rate?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went-into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—Power to raise loan of $2 billion for public works and general purposes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might make a small correction to the material I put on record in the course of the discussion on second reading. I should like to bring it up to date. I stated that the outstanding indebtedness as of November 12 was some $37 billion. According to the Bank of Canada report of December 4, on December 3, 1975, there was a total outstanding of $38,041 million. This was made up of $6,200 million in treasury bills, $15,939 million in Canada savings bonds, and $15,902 million in all other direct and guaranteed securities.

The reason I want to put these figures on record is to draw attention to the preponderance of government savings bonds. We are aware of the average rate which has been quoted for these bonds; they are to yield just under 10 per cent for the next 10 years or so. It may even be longer. People talk about lower interest rates for housing. Where will they come from? The government has put itself on a hook by issuing Canada savings bonds this year which are to yield around 10 per cent for over 10 years. There is bound to be the cost of administration over and above that, so I cannot see federal government interest rates getting below 11.5 per cent unless there is a drastic cashing-in of those savings bonds because people do not wish to maintain them for the sake of accumulating interest.

I would hope one might find a little more diversification. These Canada savings bond campaigns provide short-term cash for the government. Certainly the bonds are more attractive for the investor because on every $100 bond he will be paid hearly 10 cents on every dollar for holding them, since they are immediately cashable at the bank. Indeed, I suppose that a bearer bond is easier to cash today outside a bank than a $100 bill would be. Has anybody tried to cash a $100 bill lately in a general business or store?

An hon. Member: You cannot do it.

Mr. Rodriguez: I never have one.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In any event, I thought I would put those corrections on the record. I hope the clause will now pass.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the discussion which took place on second reading. I am glad the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Edmonton West made it possible to separate this issue from a supply motion. I am grateful for the information provided by the hon. member for Edmonton West and his explanation of the way in which some of the borrowing is made. This fitted in very well with the observations made by the hon. member for Témiscamingue and his charge that much of this borrowing is highly inflationary. He indicated that Canada savings bonds accounted for $18 million, guaranteed borrowings amounted to $15 million, and there was another $18 million worth of savings bonds, presumably at the same rate of interest. In other words, there is a sizeable amount of money there.

● (1620)

Under the old system we were informed how such money was raised and spent. Although the members who sit on the various estimates committees may have some idea how the money is spent, the system does not allow members of parliament an over-all look at government expenditures. Up until now it has not allowed an over-all look at government borrowings, and this bill does not allow it either.

Perhaps we should adopt the Social Credit philosophy of printing the money we borrow, making it unnecessary to go to the lending institutions. It might be more advisable to do just that. Let us print the money, put it into the national debt, just as we do in time of war and for other purposes, and then if we get the money back through taxation we can take it out of circulation again. We would then not contribute to any inflationary spiral by borrowing money. It is foolish for the government to say it will cut back on expenditures when one of the major items of government expenditure is interest rates. Canada savings bonds carry over 10 per cent, which means that in about seven years you have doubled your money.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have paid for some of that money.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says I have paid. I am not a chartered bank. I do what most other people do; I use a credit card and end up paying more than 10 per cent. The only people who make money in the end are the shareholders of the banks.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend says no, but it seems to me that a very good investment for anyone who wants to make a little money is to buy the stock of the new bank.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And hold your breath for years.

Mr. Peters: Not with the one the Mafia thought they would make a killing out of. They got the shares up to $17 and then they dropped right back to $3. But I am sure you can double your money very easily. After all, somebody must be getting this 10 per cent interest rate. That is what the Canadian public pays when the government borrows. It just does not disappear.

The Liberals should not find it hard to accept Social Credit philosophy. Some of their former cabinet ministers joined forces in British Columbia, so it should not be too hard for them to find a solution which, it appears to me, would eliminate some of these expenditures. However, my point is not so much that we borrow money, but that this House is being asked for borrowing authority. It is a little like your wife, Mr. Chairman, asking you to give her four or five times the usual money you give her for groceries, making a request that is retroactive to last April because she has overspent her grocery bill by a number of months and wants to recoup her losses.

If there is to be a new system for bringing in appropriation bills, I think the government would do us a service if they provided a breakdown of how the money is to be spent. The minister has indicated the revenue from Canada savings bonds, which are borrowings, and there are other ways of raising money, of course. But it seems to me that this appropriation bill is a sort of last ditch request for money.

I realize that expenditures are revealed in the estimates in one way or another and that we have approved expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1976. So why does the government ask for money in this manner, making a retroactive request to April 1, 1975? As I say, there should be an explanation given in the bill of what the money is for. It is possible that some of the money will be used for housing purposes, that some will be put in a revolving account, and that other moneys will go into the general revenue fund to meet expenditures listed in the supplementary estimates. But if this is so, the amounts should be specified and there should also be an indication of any amounts required for anticipated expenditure.

Supplementary Borrowing Authority

One of the problems of a member of parliament is to understand what happens to the revenue of the government and how the money is spent. This point was made by the Auditor General. Due to the change in format for the supplementary estimates, we do not know exactly how government money is spent. The explanations given in the estimates do not relate in a positive enough way to any specific item of expenditure as an indication of how that money is to be spent.

In the appropriation bill the other night the number of votes relating to transfers from one department to another had increased extensively. These transfers used to be effected by a $1 vote, and even in the days when the estimates were discussed fully such items were always looked at with a jaundiced eye because they were statutory items. You did not know what they were for or what the transaction was. There was a great deal of leeway. Now money is transferred from one department to another department and the transaction may or may not be covered in the estimates, either approved or anticipated. If the government gives a breakdown of its borrowings and indicates what the purpose is, we will at least know how the money is to be spent.

One of the most thorny questions that I have been asked by my constituents at public meetings from time to time is what the national debt is and what we are doing about it. I have not the faintest notion what it is and I do not think any other member has either. We have discussed it, but it becomes obvious that we do not know how much it is or what it is for, and we cannot give any consideration as to whether we pay it out or do not, yet we are being asked for this $2 billion. That is a sizeable amount of money. We are not told where we borrow it from, how we get it, what it is to be used for, whether it is just raised against the estimates, or very much else about what is going on. It is just being raised against the estimates, and the estimates have been monkeyed around with and tinkered with a great deal by the government and the various departments.

● (1630)

I suggest that all the statutory items in the estimates always have some connection to the transfer of funds. I consider that the $1 items represent the transfer of funds. Certainly the vote we had the other night related to the fact that we took certain funds from one item for transfer to another, and that certainly is tinkering with the expenditures. This monkey and tinkering with expenditures is not obvious to anyone studying the supplementary or interim estimates. I would ask the House leaders, when they are considering the change or format, to give some thought to some of these matters with which I am concerned, because the way it is now we are not likely to get answers to these questions by following the method under which we have appropriations. Perhaps that is the wrong word.

An hon. Member: Pick any word you want.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps "borrowing" under the Appropriation Act is more financially correct. It seems to me to be very difficult to ascertain what these borrowings will be used for, what the percentage of interest will be on any amount or even what the general interest will be on the money that we borrow. I understand from the hon. member for Edmonton West that it amounts to some $39 million. In that area it seems there must be a multitude of methods for raising money other than straight taxation. It would also seem that the cost of that money would vary from time to time and from item to item. These facts are not readily available to hon. members in relation to government requests for this kind of money. The amount of $2 billion boggles the mind. It certainly boggles my mind and I suppose it boggles the mind of pretty nearly everybody else I know. Even most of the rich people in this country have no conception of billions of dollars.

We are being asked to raise $2 billion as an afterthought to a bill which did not have any connection at all. We are being asked to raise this amount through a bare bones bill which does not indicate the interest, where the money is to come from or where it is to go. The bill does not indicate whether this represents the total anticipated government expenditure over a certain period of time, and it does not indicate any connection with the curtailment of expenditures which the government is now preparing. It does not indicate whether it anticipates a government decision to reduce my salary or whether such a reduction will lessen the $2 billion required. The bill does not indicate whether it anticipates a voluntary, or otherwise, 25 per cent cut in civil servants' salaries, a 10 per cent cut or a 10 per cent lay-off. It does not really tell me if such a reduction will make any change.

If my wife asked me for more money to pay for the groceries, and I found that groceries were going down in price, I would have some suspicion. If one of the kids left home and was not eating as much there, I would anticipate the grocery bill would go down. So far as this bill is concerned, it seems to me that no matter what we do, it will not make any difference to our borrowing. There is no indication that this is a final borrowing for a specified period of time. I am simply confused about what it is, and I do not think the minister will take the time to tell us today.

Many members sit here and do not really take any interest in what is going on. They would be well advised to interest themselves in what the government is doing with our money. It would seem that in an appropriation bill there should be a clearer indication of what are the expenditures. It may be possible to find this out in another way, but when we are asked to vote this kind of money it seems to me that type of information should be made available to all hon. members.

It is true that the hon. member for Edmonton West and others are members of financial committees of this House and have been involved in these matters for a number of years. They may know where to find this information. They may have officials in the treasury branch who are able to tell them about these things. I do not have that expertise or those connections with the treasury branch. But I would like to have that information, as I am sure some of my constituents and others across the country would like to have it. These sketchy explanations really do not enlighten me very much.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: Sure.

Mr. Friesen: I was interested in his suggestion that it is just not good fiscal practice to borrow money to pay retroactive expenditures. I recall that the former premier of British Columbia hired the former member for Skeena as a consultant in British Columbia. He hired him in December but made the hiring retroactive to November.

An hon. Member: And the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Friesen: I was wondering if, as a result of the election in British Columbia last week, the hon. member for Timiskaming has learned this and is therefore using it in the House today.

Mr. Peters: That is very interesting question, Mr. Chairman, but one that I think goes beyond the purview of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have learned something.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Timiskaming has raised a number of questions about the nature of the public debt. Let me say to him, in respect of the question of analysis and perspective on the public debt, the document from which the hon. member for Edmonton West read was a monthly report of the Bank of Canada which set out an analysis of outstanding Government of Canada debt, for which the Bank of Canada is the agent. The bank publishes this analysis from month to month, along with reference to any events that may have occurred during the month.

Several other questions were raised. The hon. member asked whether the money has already been spent. The answer is no, it has not. It will, of course, be spent in the first three calendar months of 1976, which is the last three months of the 1975-76 fiscal year. This will really put us in funds for the purpose of making the remaining expenditures in the heavy end of the year. The hon. member asked why it was April 1, 1975. Let me say there was an issue of Canada savings bonds, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, that was extremely well received by the public. Indeed, it overshot expectations. However, depending on the balance of redemptions, there may be a temporary case of an overrun in borrowing during this period. In the event that this has occurred, this is really a retroactive authorization in connection with such borrowings.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) asked questions about the financing for the remainder of the fiscal year authorized under this bill. I think it cannot be said exactly what the interest rate or what the market will be, that is whether the financing will take place in Canada or on the international market, for the remainder of the year. It can be said that there will be financing made up of long term bonds on February 1 and also at that time there will be a study of the additional money for the expenditures of the government of Canada. There will also be for the same period of the remainder of the year studies of treasury bills for the financing of the government of Canada. It is totally impossible on every issue, as on February 1, for example, for the Bank of Canada to take part of that issue from banks, funds, bonds.

● (1640)

[English]

I think that responds in a rather general way to some of the questions that have been raised.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in order to assist the hon. member for Timiskaming, and to add information to that which the minister has given, I have a series of four tables which are not taken out of the Bank of Canada as the source but are private compilations showing, first of all, the interest charges on the public debt, the interest as a percent of government expenditures, the effective interest on the public debt in table two, the unmatured debt per capita in table three and the unmatured debt and GNP in table four all from the years 1968-69 through 1975-76. I take full responsibility for these tables and, rather than leaving them out, I would ask leave of the House to have them tabled as part of my remarks at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: My understanding is that a private member cannot table documents.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that a private member may table tables like this. The alternative—and I say this to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the Clerk as well—is that I shall read them. I would ask the Chair to reflect upon the decision given a few moments age. I have not referred to a public document. I have sought leave of the House to table these tables, and I would respectfully ask the Chair to reconsider its position on that.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed by hon. members that they be printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, the minister was rather explicit in his answer but there is a detail of some importance missing. We would like to know the approximate rate of interest he will have to pay on that borrowing and whether he suggests he will be borrowing part of that money or whether banks will make part of that money available?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, it is quite possible that the Bank of Canada take up part of those bonds. How many? It depends on the monetary position of Canada, and on the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada at the present time. That may vary according to the market conditions for bonds and interest rates. But one cannot specifically state, for the time being, how much the Bank of Canada will assume.

The matter of interest rates remains to be determined with the Treasury Board officials at the time of issue of treasury bonds or long term debentures. It is impossible to be specific as to the interest rates at the moment. The latest bonds issued by the government of Canada carry an interest rate of 9½ per cent for long term investments and of 8½ for short terms. This is only an example. That will depend, of course, on the international market, on the currency and on the market position in Canada in January, February and March.

Mr. Beaudoin: A last question, Mr. Chairman. Talking about issuing the last bond issue, what do the expressions long term and short term mean?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, long term issues were for 20 years and short term ones three years.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions for the minister. Do I have the correct understanding that the Canada savings bonds issue that has been closed will not be reopened during the remainder of this fiscal year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The issue was closed at the earliest possible date, which was November 14. As you know, we said the issue would be open until that date. It would have been unfair to some people who had made plans if we had closed it earlier. We did have an overrun for that reason. We will have a fresh savings bond issue at the same time next year.

Mr. Nystrom: Can the minister give us an idea of the mix of the borrowings? I refer to treasury bills. I notice the figure is $150 million. Would the minister be more specific about the sources from which the government hopes to borrow? Perhaps I missed something the minister said earlier, and if so perhaps he would enlighten me on that as well.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I cannot be very specific about the mix. I think it would depend on the flow of interest rates at the time. It is intended there would be a division between the treasury bills and long-term money. As I mentioned in reply to the hon. member for Richmond, there would have to be a refunding of outstanding obligations to February 1. It is very likely there would be new money issued in relation to that. As to the actual balance to be achieved between treasury bills and longer term obligations, that will be very much dictated by the state of the market as it proceeds through the remaining quarter.

Mr. Nystrom: I have one or two last questions, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister comment on the question I raised about the possibility of scrapping some programs on which money may not have been spent, and cutting back on some programs in the last three months of this fiscal year that would coincide with the Prime Minister's announcement later this week about spending cuts? I do not know what is coming, and obviously he cannot tell us what is coming, but is there any possibility of saving some money there?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There might be some minor reductions in the balance of the year. I think I would have to say there is not a great prospect of cutting existing programs at the present time without at the same time incurring substantial liabilities. For example, the laying off of a substantial number of employees at short notice, that is to say on two weeks' notice just before Christmas, is not a policy we would like to follow. Therefore, since much of this expenditure will be in the form of wages and salaries it will be difficult to terminate this employment without some advance notice in fairness to all employees. I think the conclusion of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, is that while there are some opportunities here of a minor character, there are no major cuts which effectively would be made in the period of the 1975-76 year.

Mr. Nystrom: I have one final question. I assume the minister cannot be any more specific concerning what the money borrowed will be used for. I know he is talking about spending it for public works and general purposes. Can he be any more specific this afternoon concerning where that money might be spent? Will it be in operating costs, or are there any particular projects that still need some financial commitment for which he does not have the money?

● (1650)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I cannot be specific. I would have to go to the paymaster general to determine what obligations he expects to have in the balance of the year.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I only want to ask a final question.

The minister just said in the House that there would have to be a refunding of the bonds which will come to maturity on March 1. Could he indicate what is the average rate the government is paying on those bonds which will come to maturity on March 1?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member mentioned March 1, but maybe he wanted to say February 1?

Mr. Beaudoin: As I said earlier, I meant March 1.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it is February 1 . . . one moment please—

This issue must be paid on February 1 at a rate of 9¼ per cent.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed, from Monday, December 15, 1975, consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions, although not extensive, on the basis of which I wonder if the House would not be interested in taking some of the votes tonight. I refer to the recorded votes which have been deferred. I think there are three or four already which have been deferred, and there might be others. My suggestion would be that at 9.15 tonight we interrupt our proceedings, have a 15-minute bell and then take the recorded votes on all motions the divisions on which have been deferred up to that time.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and I believe the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has much the same view.

Mr. Alexander: Speaking on the suggestion made by both hon. gentlemen, we on this side of the House certainly go along with it. I think it is necessary to get on with the business of the House. It appears that a 15-minute bell will be satisfactory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It is so ordered.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned the debate on this bill yesterday I was discussing the clause to repeal section 28 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Since that time I have had some discussion with a number of people regarding the effects of retaining or removing this section. I should like to clarify a point which I made last night regarding the difference between the operation of UIC in an urban area and its operation in a rural area. The indication is that the time it takes to process claims from an urban area, and the time it takes to process them in a rural area, differs considerably, to the detriment of those in the rural area.

I also mentioned that this section in the act had not been implemented in my area to any great extent, a fact which I confirmed in discussions with the district officers in my area. The reason that they give is simply that if it were applied and a claimant was given this three-week advance payment, there might be considerable delay in making regular payments at a later time. The minister was kind enough to send me a note stating some of the reasons it was desirable to remove this section from the act.

In my opinion, it is unfortunate for members of the House, and is probably a matter which should be brought to the attention of the chairmen of the committees of the House, that this matter received very little discussion in the committees, as is apparent when one looks over the proceedings of the committees. In discussing the matter with one of the members of the committee—to be specific, with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)—I found that at the time this bill was discussed, the committee members had a number of documents indicating how many people had drawn benefits under this section and indicating the effects of that. The documents indicated also—this has been brought to my attention by the minister—that the results appear to be detrimental rather than advantageous.

One of the reasons this has happened is that jobs are not very plentiful, particularly in areas where there is a large amount of unemployment of a temporary nature and where it would be anticipated people could get jobs if they were given sufficient income to enable them to move from one area to another. This clause would have been advantageous where very recently there was a shutdown. There were difficulties getting separation, and because the separation had to be issued two or three times before it was correct there was considerable delay in making the benefits available to the claimants. The claimants were under a very severe handicap because the cheques which were paid a month before the cessation of work at that plant had bounced. They received no money from those cheques and those who took them to the bank and had them cashed had to repay the money. They were unable to draw the last pay cheque because the company had no more money.

In addition to that, there was no vacation pay and none of the other things which normally would be forthcoming. I understand that it has been the practice, where this payment was made, that the additional moneys which might be available were not taken into consideration and that the three weeks provision was applied in the hope that the person would be able to look for a job outside his area, and that if he got a job he would be entitled to keep the money, and it would only be reclaimed if there was a subsequent claim.

The requirements which were necessary to establish this were quite stringent, in my opinion. They demanded a major attachment to the market. The job had to be terminated without any expectation of recall. It was necessary that there be an expectation of the person being able to find employment. Health requirements were originally not taken into consideration. I am sure this was something which could have been corrected, and probably should have been, because it would not meet the normal requirements of the act.

The minister indicated there will be some other method of trying to accomplish what apparently has not been very satisfactory in terms of section 28 of the act. I do not know how it worked in the minister's area, though his area is very much like mine. I am in the area of the Timmins, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie and North Bay unemployment insurance offices, and I found very little difference in any of them. To my knowledge, none of them was making any attempt to use this legislation. I think Thunder Bay was in somewhat the same circumstances, and it was not used very extensively there.

I think the officials of UIC should have given it a try in some areas. I understand that where it was used, it was not satisfactory. One of the problems I have in my area is that when a person is unemployed—and he does not have to be unemployed very long—he has no money to pay any of his expenses and he has to turn to municipal welfare. A number of these people have gone to the municipal welfare people asking for the use of an assignment and a payment by the welfare office. This has been of particular significance where the person agreed to get out of town and go somewhere else for employment.

In my area it has been normal for the municipal welfare department to give favourable consideration to those claimants asking for assistance where it means they move to one of the major communities where they can find employment. They have the same problem whether they are unemployed or employed. Where a situation develops and work is no longer available and will not be available, it is absolutely essential they move out of the area.

I found that the assistance being given through mobility and the other programs has not worked advantageously. When a mine closed in my area, most of the people who moved out and got jobs did so in a fairly short period of time. All of them did it on their own, and almost all of them disqualified themselves from any mobility grants because they obtained jobs by themselves rather than through Manpower. However, in at least two or three cases that I know of, in order to do that these people were financed for transportation by the municipal welfare department. I suggest that if this three weeks' payment would obviate that situation, it certainly would be worth while.

My staff handles eight or ten cases per day, and they had never heard of the three weeks' payment. I suggested they telephone and find out why they had not heard about it. They telephoned and were told it was not used. In many areas it has not been given a fair chance, and I can see that it could be of some advantage.

In closing, I should like to say that I appreciate the indication by the minister that he has no intention of eliminating the emergency pay, because I can say that in my area it has been used. The officials have been very generous when there has been extreme difficulty, and it has been used on a number of occasions. I can honestly say that seldom has it had to be paid back. In other words, the insurance officers had enough information to assume that the claimant was going to be paid, and when the emergency payment was made it was usually made in good faith and received in the same way. I was pleased to learn that that is not to be cut off, because it has been very useful.

However, I am still of the opinion that if the three weeks had been used in some instances which come to mind in my area, it would have eliminated some of the difficulty which arose. The most recent example is when a sawmill closed and 400 or 500 workers were laid off. Bush and mill operations were terminated and the employees had not received any money for the previous month's work. They encountered considerable difficulty in getting their separation slips. This three weeks' payment would have been a godsend to almost everyone who worked in those operations. I suggest it may not be entirely due to the provision not having been used, and it may also be true that there had been abuses and that the record which was used indicated it did not accomplish what we wished. I am always hopeful that when we make a reasonable offer to the ordinary worker, such as an advance of three weeks' pay, most workers would be willing to take advantage of it if jobs were available in their area.

● (1710)

In reading the committee reports, I regret that I may have been somewhat stronger on this subject than it warranted. I should like to suggest to members of the committee, however, that the documents used in helping them arrive at a decision should be attached to the report so that other members when looking over the record would have access to the expertise developed in committee which helped arrive at the decision.

I still believe that clause 28 could work to the advantage of claimants who have a long-term attachment to the labour market and were laid off without hope of recall by a company for which they had worked for a long time. They should have the opportunity of using UIC money for several weeks while they seek employment. I believe most of the people I come in contact with would use the money to advantage.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) finds fault with the committee. He should have shown an interest when the committee was sitting. I am not finding fault with him in this regard because I know he is very busy and cannot be everywhere at once. We in this party reject the hon. member's motion most strongly. We have called for a public inquiry to determine what the disincentives in this act are and how they can be removed. It was pointed out to members of the committee that the three-week advance payment in clause 28 is a disincentive to work. The minister puts a figure of something like $5 million on it, but I am not interested in figures as much as I am in the fact that the government is creating disincentives in the act. The experiment was well intentioned, but I would respectfully suggest that it went sour. This three-week advance payment was meant to assist people in finding work, but that is not what happened. They took the money and left. In my estimation, after deliberation, these provisions played a significant role in destroying the work ethic.

Some hon. Members: Huh!

Mr. Alexander: My friends say "Huh". I say it is a disincentive, it was being abused and it should go. We in this party will not vote for the hon. member's motion. Let me bring the hon. member up to date on what happened in committee. The committee was provided with a document prepared by the minister's officials which gave a history of problems and suggested solutions for all particular amendments that came in. It is unfortunate that the hon. member was busy and that members of his party have not shown the document to him.

Mr. Paproski: He always "peters" out.

Mr. Alexander: He means well, but at times we have to straighten him out.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. member mind tabling a copy?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude by reading into the record a portion of the Unemployment Insurance Commission information paper on Bill C-69. On page 2 under the heading, "Subject: Advance Payment—Present Legislation", it reads:

> The present legislation provides for a three-week advance payment of benefits to major attachment claimants after the two-week waiting period. This payment is made to claimants who have been laid off from their employment and who are not expected to be recalled by their previous employer within five weeks of the interruption of earnings. The payment is also provided irrespective of earnings and the active job search and availability obligations during that period.
> When this provision was introduced, it was thought that it normally took five or six weeks for people to find new jobs. The purpose of the advance payment was, therefore, to provide a strong incentive for claimants to find work quickly in the early weeks of their claims and draw no subsequent benefits.
>
> Problem:
> It was found in 1974, however, that 85 per cent of the recipients of the advance payment were still on claim in the sixth week, whereas only 66 per cent of the non-recipients remained on claim at that point. This led to the conclusion that the original purpose of the advance payment was not being achieved.
>
> Proposed Amendment:
> In order to encourage recipients of advance payment to find work more quickly, it is proposed that the provision be removed from the legislation.

I questioned the minister, my good friend, about the meaning. I will not misquote him or take him out of context. I said, "Mr. Minister, are you stating that in fact"—mind you, the word "disincentive" is not within the confines of the document that I just read—"or are you suggesting that you found, as a result of your studies, that this particular clause is a disincentive to work?" The minister said, "Yes." Be that as it may, and keeping in mind on this side of the House we want an act that is cognizant of the disincentives that have been destroying the work ethic and that we should have them removed, I repeat that we accept the government's statement in this regard and reject the hon. member's motion.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to say anything on this—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: "But".

Mr. Rodriguez: —but I have been convinced, after listening to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that I ought to say a few words because this question is important. All I heard from the hon. member for Hamilton West in committee was "incentives" and "disincentives," and the minister talked about "the work ethic" and "disincentives." Why is it that members of parliament, who enjoy probably one of the highest incomes in this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —feel that having subsidized meals in the House of Commons restaurant is not a disincentive?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: I recognize the sensitivity of hon. members—

An hon. Member: Give your increase to charity.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why is the increase to parliamentarians and senators not called a disincentive to work? Why is it that we call moneys handed to multinational corporations incentives—

An hon. Member: Does he come from northern Ontario?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the hon. gentleman who is now speaking uses more of the facilities of this House than anybody else, and has accepted the salary and is always talking about it.

● (1720)

Mr. Rodriguez: That is exactly my point. These are exactly the same birds who will turn around and say that giving the unemployed advance pay is a disincentive to work.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are preaching to the wrong people.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I am preaching to the right people. If the government wants to introduce a restraint program, let it show those who are eligible for advance pay claims that it is putting its money where its mouth is. Yes, let us bring in a bill either to defer members' increases or cancel them altogether. You talk about restraint. That is the kind of restraint I want to see from the other side.

An hon. Member: Silence.

Mr. Rodriguez: An hon. member says, "silence."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: You had better explain yourself to the poor.

Mr. Rodriguez: And you had better go back to your samovar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Would the hon. member please address the Chair.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who are these people whose incomes we want to restrain? We discovered in committee that 70 per cent of those on unemployment insurance earn $6,000 a year or less; and we are moving in on them. Earlier in the debate we saw how the government wants to restrain the less fortunate, those 65 years old and over. Yes, it is moving in on those people, too. It has already moved in on low income earners by cutting back the dependency allowance. Wasn't that a fine thing to do? The government wants to restrain the little people, the women and children, those 65 years old and over, and the poor.

Consider the people of the area I represent. The minister knows what kind of people they are. He represents a northern Ontario constituency and knows what it is like. He knows how poor the area is. As soon as a person loses his job and applies for help from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, he is told that he must actively seek work.

Mr. Epp: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: He must do that first. The hon. member to my right has complained about people being forced to travel from the farm to the city to look for work.

Mr. Epp: Me?

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, you.

Mr. Epp: I did not.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: As I say, the commission says to the people, "You must actively seek work." But if a person is poor, how can he move around? We know that he lacks assets in the bank. How can he survive the next two weeks of waiting, let alone afford money for travel? How can he travel around looking for work? The mobility program is to be limited because the government claims its resources are limited. The Department of Manpower and Immigration, which also falls under the minister's responsibility, is cutting back its mobility program and no longer willing to move people around the country. So here we have low income earners who more than likely do not belong to a union, are not protected by collective bargaining, and are at the bottom of the income scale, being told to seek work actively. The advance pay program would enable them to make ends meet. But this must be done properly. I suspect that the experiment the minister and his nabobs carried out was not well promoted.

I wonder how many in my constituency are aware of the advance pay program. When people fall six to eight weeks behind in benefits they have the devil of a time getting their local office to write cheques and keep them off the welfare rolls. The program is no good if it is inadequately promoted. If people do not know about a program, the government can say that the program was not popular and not successful. Therefore, if you are to introduce an advance pay program you must promote it among the unemployed. Low income earners need advance pay in order to seek work actively. Only recently have local UIC offices been given authority to write cheques to claimants who have such a need. Indeed, the problems in my area were so great that it was necessary for me to meet the regional director of the area, the local manager and the UIC commissioner, in my office in the Confederation Building in order to straighten out some of the difficulties the local office is encountering. I am referring to the willingness of the office to issue cheques to claimants in need.

Obviously, in times of high unemployment jobs are scarce and the need for the advance pay program is greatest. Those with the least education and skills will most likely be unemployed, or the longest out of work, especially in areas of traditionally high unemployment. Those lacking skills are the most difficult to employ; those, therefore, will stay longest on unemployment insurance. Therefore, the minister's statistics are not surprising. So by and large we are dealing with poor people, with people who are poor materially and poor in skills.

When the advance pay program was first introduced in 1971, between 3.8 per cent and 4 per cent of our work force was unemployed. If the rationale behind the program was valid then, how much more valid is it now when unemployment is on the rise and people are losing jobs through no fault of their own? What do people mean by disincentives? Falconbridge announced that it will lay off 450 people in the Sudbury basin. They did not ask to be laid off. Falconbridge has received grants from the government, retraining grants from Canada Manpower and DREE grants for its plant at Bécancour, Quebec. All the same, the company will lay off some 450 people in the new year. Really, I do not know what people mean by incentives. I suppose it depends on how you look at it. If the advance pay program were properly promoted and used, it would help claimants in a meaningful way. Naturally, I am talking of legitimate claimants. Advance pay would help them. But they also need help with their claims.

That brings me to my other point. There is no claims assistance service in the Sudbury office. It is strictly a factory operation, with people coming in, making an application, being referred to a claims officer and going through the usual procedures. But there is no claims assistance procedure in the office. The unemployment insurance office is in the suburbs and the Canada Manpower centre is downtown. There is no bus service between the two. Indeed, the unemployment insurance office is located on a busy thoroughfare. What happens? A man is laid off. Here, in one part of town, is the office which is supposed to help him find a job, help him make his application and see that he is presentable for an interview. The UIC office is on the outskirts of the city, miles away. And, as I have said, there is no claims assistance service in Sudbury; merely a factory-type operation.

● (1730)

Surely if we wish to make this program work we ought to offer proper counselling and help the unemployed person find a job, not necessarily in his own area but anywhere across Canada. If the rationale for this kind of payment was sound in the past, it is as sound today as it was then. It is probably more needed today. The step proposed is a retrograde one. The minister told us he had tried an experiment. As far as I am concerned the department never experimented much in my community. I never heard of anyone benefiting from it. It is difficult enough for people to get the pay the UIC owes them after they have been unemployed for six weeks.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out that no one gets paid in less than six weeks. Since he made that statement everyone has been coming to his door trying to prove to him that it is not six weeks but four. Even four weeks is a very long time for a person earning $6,000 a year to wait before receiving the payments which are due to him under programs to which he has contributed.

It is easy for people who earn between $26,000 and $30,000 a year, and for those who legislate and earn $34,000, to embark upon programs of restraint and say, "We will drop this group, or that group." There is something very odd about people earning salaries which are among the highest in the country deciding that a $6,000 a year person should not be entitled to a three week advance pay if he is in financial difficulties, or to assistance in finding work.

The nabobs of the Unemployment Insurance Commission who sit up there in the gallery and feed information to the minister, and give advice, most of it bad, think of the unemployed person as a statistic, not as a human being who must find a job and support a family. Many of them have never worked out in the working world with their hands. Many of them went straight from university to jobs in the administration. All the bumboys of the administration end up in the bureaucracy. These are the people who are saying to constituents of mine that they shall no longer enjoy certain benefits.

What wonderful workers we have in this country, Mr. Speaker. What incentive do they have to work for $6,000 a year with the cost of living as high as it is now? We are very fortunate to have workers of this kind, because certainly they have nothing to look forward to, and in many cases unemployment is not a matter of choice. It comes without being sought. Lo and behold, these are the persons who go to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

The UIC should not be content simply to pay out benefits. It should be asking the question: how can we get these people back to work? The Commission should ascertain what skills these people have and offer them a program of assistance. This would be of more value than having them make an application, processing that application, and then sending the benefit control boys after the poor claimant. As it is, when a file has been processed they proceed to the next aspect; the leashes are untied, and there go the benefit control boys. I am sure they go to work to see how many disqualifications they can come up with in a day. I am sure they must work on a quota system; they must select groups for special attention by the control officers.

We are told from time to time in committee that the UIC has adopted a new approach—helping the claimant out of the maze. That was the fantastic sign I saw in an Unemployment Insurance Commission office. It said, "Let us help you out of the maze". Well, Mr. Speaker, I suspect claimants were deeper into the maze when they left that office than when they entered it, given the kind of program we have. Then they start on this kind of—

An hon. Member: Vendetta?

Mr. Rodriguez: Vendetta, if you wish to call it that. The minister has referred to it as part of the restraint program. As I said before, if the government is really interested in restraint, let it not pick this group of people as the first victims.

If we were really interested in saving money we could save a million dollars right off the bat by cancelling the increase in the wages of members and Senators which is due to come into effect in January.

The hon. member for Hamilton West talked about removing what he called disincentives. I do not think the little fellow at the bottom is exposed to any disincentives if we give him three weeks advance pay. Indeed this is likely to be one of the best ways of diverting money from the federal government to those in the low income sector. It might be the most efficient way of doing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: You will hear it all again.

An hon. Member: I didn't listen the first time.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was persuaded to enter this debate by the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

An hon. Member: We will get him to withdraw.

Mr. Orlikow: I was surprised to hear him say he would vote against this amendment because he thought it would act as a disincentive to people who were unemployed, in other words, discourage them from going back to work. I get the impression—I hope I am wrong—that the hon. member and many of his friends really believe there are a large number of people who are unemployed and who are drawing unemployment insurance benefit although in fact they do not wish to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Right on!

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) says "hear, hear". I do not suggest for one moment that there are people who are unemployed and drawing unemployment insurance although they do not want to work. If I or the hon. member for Provencher were to believe that, we would have to assume there are more people in Newfoundland ripping off the system than there are in Manitoba. Over 20 per cent of the people of Newfoundland are unemployed, and the situation is almost the same in New Brunswick. Are those people more rapacious than the people of Manitoba or Saskatchewan? I do not believe they are.

● (1740)

There is a larger percentage of people in Quebec east of Montreal who are unemployed than there are between Montreal and the Ontario border. Are they ripping off the system more than the people in Montreal? I do not believe that. In November of this year 734,000 people in Canada were unemployed. This means there were almost 200,000 more people unemployed last month than there were in November of 1974. Are all these people less interested in working than they were in November 1974? I would not accept that for a moment.

There is less unemployment in cities like Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, and Toronto than there is in that part of Thunder Bay represented by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), or in St. John's, Newfoundland, or in many other one industry towns. The reason for this is not that the people in these places are less desirous of finding work; they are unemployed because the economy does not work to their advantage.

Members of the official opposition have joined with us in criticizing the government over the number of housing starts in Canada, which is substantially lower than last year. The number of housing starts in the United States, which buys a large part of its lumber needs from Canada, is down dramatically.

Mr. Blais: Is this a housing bill?

Mr. Orlikow: If the hon. member would open his ears and listen for a change, instead of interjecting as he does so frequently, he would very quickly catch the point I am trying to make. I have not yet spoken for five minutes, Mr. Speaker, so I do not think I am abusing the time of the House. The fact is that the lumber industry is in a depression. This means that lumber workers in Canada, not just those in British Columbia which had an NDP government but those also in North Bay, are unemployed and are now drawing unemployment insurance benefits. They want to work but the lumber market has gone soft. There were 750 miners in Sudbury recently laid off by Falconbridge and they are now drawing unemployment insurance benefits. They are unemployed because the international demand for metals like zinc, copper, and nickel has dropped.

I did say that in November 734,000 people were unemployed, but that figure is not a complete one. I do not blame Statistics Canada or the Department of Manpower and Immigration, but the fact is that we do not include our native people in our unemployment figures. I am sure I am not far wrong in saying that 80 per cent of our native people in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and northwestern Ontario are unemployed. I do not accept the suggestion of any hon. member, whether made inside or outside the House, that our native people do not want to work. The reason is that we have not developed programs that give them the opportunity to work.

When hon. members say they are opposed to this amendment because it will be a disincentive to work and will encourage people to stay on unemployment insurance, I say that in 95 per cent of the cases that is sheer nonsense. We would have full employment in Canada if the government set full employment as its objective. For the benefit of members who are so good at interjecting but so bad at making their own speech I shall not repeat the remarks I made last night when I quoted extensively a cabinet minister who had the fortune, or perhaps the misfortune, to be the manpower minister in 1971 when the last amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act were debated. At that time he bemoaned the fact that we had over 4 per cent unemployment, and he promised the people of Canada that the Liberal government would make as its major objective the decrease of unemployment. He said that figure was too high and was a disgrace for a country endowed with the resources Canada had.

We agreed with him at that time, yet today with the same Liberal government we have more than 7 per cent unemployment. Next year we could have between 7½ per cent and 8 per cent unemployment, perhaps more because none of us has yet been able to calculate the effects of the anti-inflation program implemented by the government which will undoubtedly mean more unemployment.

I know it is unpopular to tell the truth these days; in times of difficulty people like to put the blame on to somebody else. I have heard many people who are employed say that people who are not working could do so if they wanted. I say that is not the case. Secondly, I say that if we had a government that believed in full employment and which provided programs to put people to work, the number of people who cannot find work would be reduced very markedly.

Let me close by suggesting to the minister that he examine a proposal being made by Senator Hubert Humphrey of the United States. He came within one half of the one per cent of the votes required to be elected president of the United States. He has introduced a bill in the United States Congress, which will be debated very shortly, and which if enacted would make it the responsibility of the U.S. government to see there is full employment in that country. If private industry cannot be induced to employ all people who want to work in the United States, then the U.S.

government would be responsible for devising programs to put these people to work.

The situation in the United States is much more serious than ours. Their depression has been much more severe than ours. If Senator Humphrey can propose full employment for the United States, surely we should be discussing, planning, and implementing proposals for full employment in Canada. We should not be passing bills which have as their basic principle the concept that large numbers of people in this country do not want to work, and that they have to be penalized and driven back to work, I suppose by hunger. I do not accept that argument and I think the minister is moving completely in the wrong direction.

• (1750)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to indicate that I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that we cannot support this amendment.

When we studied this matter in 1971 we pointed out our great reservations about this idea of the three-week period. At that time the period was increased from one week to two weeks, and the suggestion that the three weeks be used as a sort of a lump sum seemed to nullify the savings obtained by the change from one week to two weeks. By eliminating this change it would make the bill somewhat better as a truly insurance scheme, and should not in any way take away from the individual who is unemployed and genuinely seeking work. I think it is better if it is done this way.

It has been my experience that people living in rural areas have not had the opportunity of collecting unemployment insurance because of the application of the residency rules. This is obviously the result of officers, probably as a result of departmental prodding, attempting to hold the line. This is difficult to argue one way or the other, but certainly there are a great number of people paying unemployment insurance premiums who will not likely ever collect under these rules. That may be unfortunate but it is true. This change will make this a more true insurance scheme. Therefore I cannot agree with the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London-East)): Is the House ready for the question, which is on the motion by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), that Bill C-69 be amended by deleting Clause 8?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Unemployment Insurance Act

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the hon. member's motion stands deferred.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Is the House ready to proceed with motion No. 10, or would members prefer to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Peters: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in Clause 9 by striking out line 36 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"thereof and the extended benefit period (described in section 34) shall not exceed the maximum".

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of motion No. 10, on the basis that the said motion excedes the Royal recommendation as contained in this particular bill. I draw your attention to the fact that motion No. 10 seeks to change Section 29 of the said act. Proposed sub-section (5) of Section 29 reads as follows:

"(5) Where benefits are claimed under this Act by reason of

(a) pregnancy, or

(b) any prescribed illness, injury or quarantine, or

(c) pregnancy and any prescribed illness, injury or quarantine, the maximum number of weeks for which such benefits may be paid in an initial benefit period and the re-established portion thereof shall not exceed the maximum number of weeks for which initial benefits may be paid pursuant to Table I of Schedule A."

Motion No. 10 seeks to amend that sub-section by adding at line 36 the words:

—thereof and the extended benefit period (described in section 34) shall not exceed the maximum.

Effectively what the amendment seeks to do is add an additional category, namely, a benefit that can be claimed not only during the initial benefit period or the re-established portion of that period, but also during the extended benefit period, and by allowing a claim for any extended benefit period this would infringe on the Royal recommendation.

What occurs is that presently one can obtain benefits if one is a female and pregnant for a period within the initial benefit period, but that benefit is not available during the extended benefit period as otherwise provided under the act. My submission is that the amendment proposed for making that extended period of benefit available to the claimant, namely 15 weeks, which otherwise would not be available under the present statute, would increase that particular benefit with a resulting additional impost or duty imposed on general revenue.

In effect there are a wide number of claimants who otherwise would not be eligible but now would become eligible. As an example, there are a number of members here, who make representations on behalf of their constituents. Let us take the case of an applicant who makes application for sick benefits which are only available now during the initial benefit period, and there is a determination that the initial benefit period has expired—therefore there are no sick benefits available to the claimant. Under this amendment the claimant would now seek to claim sick benefits and the possibility of benefits under the initial benefit period or reconstituted initial benefit period, but would not now have access to this. Under the proposed amendment in motion No. 10 the claimant would have access to the sick benefits to the full amount as indicated in Table 1 of Schedule A, being the full 15 weeks.

As another example, if the initial benefit period had expired, the claimant under the present statute would be entitled to that portion commensurate with the unexpired benefit period corresponding to Table 1. With the amendment the claimant would be entitled to the full benefit, namely, 15 weeks, although the portion of reconstituted initial benefit had expired, just as long as the claimant was entitled to the extended benefit period under Section 34.

I draw your attention in this instance to Citation 246 (3) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which states in part:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all . . . not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

May I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Once and for all it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for dinner I was citing sub-paragraph (3) of citation 246 in Beauchesne. I indicated that I was coming to the juicy part which reads in this way:

> In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

I stress:

> . . . if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication . . .

In this instance the Royal recommendation sets out that this bill is authorized to provide in the manner prescribed for changes in qualifying periods, benefit periods, entitlement to benefits, and rates of benefits. One of the prescriptions is section 29, sub-section 5. There is an attempt by the government pursuant to the Royal recommendation to extend the benefits for sickness or pregnancy to those who are not only in the initial benefit period as previously, but also in the reconstituted benefit period. What motion No. 10 seeks to do is extend that entitlement not only to the 39 weeks under this particular bill but away out to the 51-weeks that would be available under the extended benefit period.

I simply want to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the cases I cited before dinner where there is an additional burden on the general revenue, as there would be in respect of this proposed amendment. It would entitle a greater number of individuals who otherwise would not have access to sickness or pregnancy benefits. In that sense it is not prescribed by the Royal recommendation and any attempt to deal with it infringes the rules and the precedents. It also infringes Standing Order 62 which speaks of this House not dealing with any measure or bill which does not contain an appropriate Royal recommendation. Inevitably the Royal recommendation in this instance which I have read to Your Honour does not include the extended benefit from 39 to 52 weeks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to impose on hon. members but it is my feeling that motion No. 10 has some procedural relation to motion No. 13. Unless members have different opinions I wonder whether the procedural discussion on both of these motions could not be taken at the same time, and then I would make my ruling.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the only point I wish to make is to draw your attention to the fact that, when we commenced the report stage of this bill, Mr. Speaker gave his view both in general terms and in specific terms concerning the report stage amendments. He found only two of them definitely out of order although he expressed his concern about a third one. The two he felt were out of order were motion No. 4 and motion No. 6. Then he said that he had some concern about motion No. 13. What he said, as reported at the bottom of the first column on page 10006 of Hansard, was in these words: "The remaining motions seem to be in order." A little later, when he was lining up the debating and voting on the motions, he said:

> Motions 9, 10, 16, 21 and 22 ought to be discussed and voted on separately.

I am reading that from Hansard of yesterday. I realize that it is not part of the record, but he was good enough to send around to us his memorandum regarding the various motions and in that memorandum there is a reference to a string of motions, including motion No. 10, as appearing to be in order. I do not want to press that too hard. This was not a final decision, but certainly we started debate yesterday on the understanding that what Mr. Speaker said would apply, namely, that he would find it difficult to accept motions Nos. 4 and 6, and he would find some difficulty with motion 13, but that the remaining motions seemed to be in order. I think it is a little unfair to have that plan upset by this point of order being raised at this time.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) has placed before us very cogently the reasons why motion No. 10 appears not to be acceptable. You, Mr. Speaker, have made the suggestion that the principle, if accepted in our argument against motion No. 10, might also apply to motion No. 13. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has suggested that motion No. 10 was passed by in Mr. Speaker's comments yesterday but that motion No. 13 was identified as causing some doubt. I think the principle of unacceptability on motion No. 13 almost applies in exactly the same way to motion No. 10, and I do not think that one ruling could be consistent without applying to the other motion, as you have suggested.

In addition to the very significant reason placed before the House by the parliamentary secretary, I want to make another point. The parliamentary secretary has indicated that this motion makes the payment of sickness, pregnancy unemployment insurance benefits available in the extended benefit period, and all the arguments he made are absolutely correct. It widens the risk in time, and it also adds a financial burden to the benefit pay out by virtue of including those people whose payment entitlement would have ceased due to the fact that the re-established initial benefit period had lapsed.

There is another cogent reason as well. Section 136(2)(a) of the Unemployment Insurance Act as amended in 1971, to which there are no amendments whatsoever in Bill C-69, clearly indicates that the government bears the cost of all extended benefits paid, and while the threshold for the initial and re-established benefit period at which government costs take over has been amended in Bill C-69, there is no suggestion in the bill that the government not continue to pay the total cost of extended benefits. In technical terms, the wording of both motion No. 10 and motion No. 13 would have the effect of paying sickness and pregnancy benefits in the extended benefit period, therefore being a charge to the government cost which was not intended in the Unemployment Insurance Act, and indeed not at all contemplated in Bill C-69.

For this reason, in addition to the very significant reasons presented by the parliamentary secretary, I submit that both these motions are in fact not receivable.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have a clarification on two specific cases. One is the case of a gentleman who is working and whose job ceases. He receives benefits and two weeks later he suffers a heart attack, following which he receives sickness benefits. When these benefits run out, his doctor tells him that he is not sufficiently fit to go back to active work, but his job is waiting for him. On what does that fellow live? Does he get any benefits whatsoever?

The second case is that of a fellow who has a heart attack during his working hours. I know of two such specific cases. He is laid off and he receives sickness benefits. In the 15 weeks he is not able to go back to work, his doctor tells him that he is not well enough. The problem is that if he wants to go on pension, it is months before he can get it. What provisions are made to cover a case of this kind?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the point of order let me say that the clause which resulted in our motion No. 10, in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), is one in which the minister recognized there was a problem. The act recognizes that there is a sickness provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act which permits claimants to collect up to 15 weeks of sickness benefits.

What we have attempted to do in this amendment is to extend the period so that a person may get the 15 weeks of sickness benefits and does not have to get them within 39 weeks. In effect, the minister pointed out the problem quite correctly. An injured person may, for example, receive 10 weeks of regular benefits and then return to work. If this person falls sick within the initial benefit period, his or her entitlement to sickness benefits is restricted to five weeks. When that situation occurs a person stands to forfeit several weeks of benefits to which he or she would be entitled.

What the minister has done with his amendment is to extend the initial benefit period by 10 weeks. But of course that does not solve the problem; it extends it. If a person under the act is entitled to 15 weeks of sickness benefits, what we have attempted to do is to say that he or she should be able to collect 15 weeks of sickness benefits, irrespective of whatever other claims he or she may have had on the fund.

That is the point of sickness benefits, to give people a replacement of their earnings because, as has been pointed out, what happens if a person runs out of weeks under the minister's present amendment and is short of, say, 10 weeks of sickness benefits? What do they do? Do they fall on the tender mercies of the welfare department? I say that the minister should not hide behind the formality of the act. If he wants to be Scrooge, let it be out in the open so we can vote on the amendment. I urge, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that this amendment is in order, and then members of the House can decide whether or not they want the act as amended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think I am now in a position to make a judgment, unless hon. members want to pursue some further points.

With regard to the last point made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I should like to remind him that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to decide whether or not an act or a bill is just, or meets the requirements or standards which it was meant to achieve. The Chair is only here to try to judge as to whether or not a motion, or an amendment, or a bill is procedurally acceptable.

Of course the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) raised two specific cases on which the Chair cannot comment. This bill may in its application be sometimes unjust to some persons, but is not the responsibility of the Chair either to pass judgment on the act or interpret it. This has not been my concern.

● (2020)

In my opinion the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not make a very strong argument as to the acceptibility of both of these amendments, with the exception of the point he made about Mr. Speaker's comments with regard to the acceptability of motion No. 10. Of course the hon. member did mention that Mr.

Speaker further indicated that he had some reservation as to the acceptability of motion No. 13.

Perhaps it might be simpler for me to start with motion No. 13 in this case, taking into account the fact that Mr. Speaker has indicated a caveat or a reservation as to the acceptability of that motion. In making a decision on motion No. 13, I think hon. members will later come to the same conclusion I have on motion No. 10 because of the close relationship of one amendment to the other with regard to what they both seek to achieve.

In referring to motion No. 13, Mr. Speaker made the point that it sought to go beyond the scope of the bill which is before the House at this time. That is the only argument he made at that time, but the hon. member must understand that, at the outset of any report stage debate, after a general and rapid examination of the amendments the Chair makes suggestions on groupings and on the acceptability of some of the amendments. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and other hon. members would be the first to complain about a rigid decision at that time from the Chair without any hon. members having been heard. So I think that we can take the words of Mr. Speaker for what they are, and in the context of the time they were uttered to the House at the outset of the debate without precluding the rights of hon. members.

I am sure hon. members will agree with me that motion No. 13 suggests the elimination of subsection 36(1) of clause 11, which is really a section in the act and not in the bill in front of us, and that what the hon. member is trying to do is to eliminate a clause which has not been brought before the House for discussion or modification. If hon. members will take the time to read a citation in May's eighteenth Edition at page 508 they will find that an amendment is out of order if it is beyond the scope of a bill, irrelevant to the subject matter, or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

Clause 11 of the bill proposes to eliminate subsection 33(2), but there is no mention of subsection 36(1). On that ground alone I feel that motion No. 13 cannot be accepted. Although it was not mentioned by Mr. Speaker, the Chair had been concerned also about what would be achieved by the elimination of subsection 36(1), which is proposed in motion No. 13, but it had not noticed at that time that motion No. 10 was attempting to achieve the same purpose.

Because of the intricacy of the act and the difficulty for the Chair is seeing all the implications behind such a complicated piece of legislation, it was felt that instead of bringing it to the attention of hon. members early in the report stage in a procedural debate, the Chair should wait and at least invite hon. members to participate in a procedural argument when we came to motion No. 13. This debate has now come earlier because of the point of order raised by the hon. parliamentary secretary, and I am sure that even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is well known for his competence in the interpretation and application of the rules of the House, and for identifying precedents upon which decisions can be made as to the acceptability of amendments, would argue with difficulty against the points which have been made by both the minister and the parliamentary secretary. The citation put forward by the parliamentary secretary, citation 246 of Beauchesne, is very clear in paragraph 3, and I do not wish to read this paragraph again.

If some hon. member could have convinced me that these amendments would not bring a financial burden on the Crown, I would have been ready to let the motions come to a vote and to let the House decide. However, considering the basic principle by which a proposal, which definitely commits public money, has to be accompanied by a recommendation to support the expenditure of money, it is impossible for me to accept either of these amendments.

Just to be clear, because of everything I have said, which has been supported by arguments put forward by some hon. members and by the references to which I have referred, I declare that motions Nos. 10 and 13 are not acceptable.

We will proceed now to the consideration of motions Nos. 11 and 12 which are to be debated together and are to be disposed of by one vote on motion No. 11.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves:

Motion No. 11.

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 10.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moves:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting Clause 10.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be long with respect to my motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: If I hear clapping from the other side I am likely to be extremely repetitious in terms of what I think is wrong in the thinking of the government when it comes to dealing with our senior citizens.

My motion once again registers extreme concern about the position the government, through its minister, is taking regarding our senior citizens. I am endeavouring to wipe out clause 10, with some sympathy from the minister who perhaps could show some compassion in this regard, but knowing he is involved with those in the bureaucracy who advise and counsel him, perhaps he cannot lean my way. I know that the minister has some sympathy in this regard.

● (2030)

What I should like to point out in reference to this particular clause is that in order to appease the senior citizens after having thrown them off the cliff, after having disenfranchised them regarding unemployment insurance, then the government wants to give them, as in the prior bill, a three week bonus. At the same time clause 10 amends section 31.(4) of the act to read:

Any benefit period established for a claimant under this part if not earlier terminated under this part terminates—

This is the important word, Mr. Speaker.

—terminates at the end of the week in which he attains the age of 65 years.

I say shame to that, Mr. Speaker. Look at the minister over there—his conscience must bother him.

Mr. Stanfield: It should.

Mr. Alexander: If it does not, it should. These people have made a magnificent contribution to the development of this country.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister?

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no!

Mr. Alexander: As a result of it many of us are either standing at this particular instance, or sitting. This minister wants to cut them off—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Alexander: —send them out to pasture.

An hon. Member: Callous.

Mr. Alexander: I do not know how the minister can sit there and smile.

An hon. Member: That's easy; he's a Liberal.

Mr. Alexander: I have made my point with respect to this matter. I think it is wrong, unjust, callous—

An hon. Member: Cruel.

Mr. Alexander: That is another good adjective—cruel. There is no compassion shown for our senior citizens who have done so much for our country. As I said before, the government wants to give prisoners who are incarcerated some sort of relief and bring them into the unemployment insurance picture after they are discharged from jail or the penitentiary.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I hear the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). The government seems to have more compassion for those who are incarcerated than for those who are abiding by the law. I do not understand that, but I will not let the minister distract me from what I want to bring home to the government. Look at the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). He has his problems and I do not want him to disturb me because I do not want to disturb him. He has problems with Skyshops, with Air Canada, with air traffic controllers—I am glad he interjected. Let me tell him that it can never be said that we on this side are not concerned about safety. I will stop there and get back to my original point, Mr. Speaker.

The minister is intelligent but it is unfortunate that his intelligence does not show with respect to his portfolio.

An hon. Member: He is sitting on it.

Mr. Alexander: I told the minister what I thought of this particular clause. He has played Scrooge for our senior citizens, and Santa Claus for the prisoners. We will not accept that attitude, and I know that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) will have more to say about this. Our senior citizens have every right in the work force, not because they enjoy work or that it is a hobby but because they have responsibilities to their families. As a result of the government's attitude toward inflation these are the people who are being hurt most by the high cost of living, by the two figure inflation. The government says they are not being forced out of work. All it wants them to do is not pay premiums and not draw benefits. I have not been so angry since I came here, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: That is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). He just had a little conference with his colleagues at the provincial level to see whether they would accept a human rights commission in principle. He should direct his attention to that and see whether legislation can be brought in to assist Bell Canada remove hate messages from the wires. That would be a service to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Read their communiqué.

Mr. Alexander: I will ask the minister a question about this tomorrow. On a matter of such seriousness I resent members of the front benches interjecting. When I am talking about the plight of our senior citizens they make light of it.

Why single out the senior citizens, Mr. Speaker? I direct that remark to the minister. We have the benefit control system, and if they are abusing the system they can be caught and let out of the system. Look at the minister smiling. There is something about him that reminds of Kojak, but I cannot think what it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Why pick on the senior citizens? Benefit control officers can find out if they are abusing the system and take steps to correct it, but why cut them off? In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as I look at the handsome face of the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Nielsen: You look at what?

Mr. Alexander: I will not be much longer. As a matter of fact I will sit down right now and my colleague, the hon. member for Dauphin, will carry on, but I must say that we resent the attitude of the government regarding our senior citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since I sit across from more sedate cabinet ministers like the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), and my friend from Winnipeg, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), perhaps I will find it easier to stay on the subject than did my friend, with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) facing him and interrupting his remarks.

Mr. Basford: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Basford: I regard that remark as a very sad and unfair reflection both on my very good friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), and myself. We are both sedate, and I took the inference from the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we were not. I think my friend would agree with me that we are both sedate.

An hon. Member: Sedentary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the smile I just got from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I think only someone of his capacity could make an appropriate reply to that question of privilege so I will leave it to him to be dealt with later. As for the state of sedation of ministers opposite, perhaps we can leave them until they are 65, when they might be concerned.

● (2040)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): When we read that point we will be, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some of us need not worry about waiting for that point.

In debating motions Nos. 11 and 12 we are, in effect, discussing the other side of an issue we debated yesterday when discussing motions Nos. 1 and 2. In both cases the sponsors are the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We are expressing our concern about the unfairness the government proposes to inflict on persons between 65 and 70 years of age. The debate yesterday revolved round the proposal to change that part of the Unemployment Insurance Act which permits those persons to contribute to unemployment insurance. Now we are debating changes in the act which will deny people between 65 and 70 years benefits under the act. In other words, the two provisions go together; and we suggest that they do a great disservice to Canadians between 65 and 70 years old. I speak of those in that particular age bracket because those 70 years old and more have already been excluded from the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance act, whereas this bill, as it now stands, will put those between 65 and 70 in the same category.

We all appreciated the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who suggested that as the Unemployment Insurance Commission employs controls and methods to prevent people from abusing the act, if those controls can be applied to people in their thirties and forties they can be applied to workers between 65 and 70, and that it is unfair to single out persons over 65 years old who may be working and say to them, "You will not get benefits which other workers who happen to be one or two years younger are getting."

Mr. Béchard: What about those over 70?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would take the same view. It so happens, if the hon. member is not aware of it, that his government a few years ago took this right away from persons of 70 or over. The Unemployment Insurance Act in its original form had no upper age limit at all. Persons in the labour force had the rights of all other workers, regardless of age.

An hon. Member: What were the benefits then?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They were a lot less than they are now. Really, I am waiting for my hon. friend to make a speech. He has put a good many words on Hansard in the course of this debate, but always from his seat.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): They do not pick up comments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I know how he sounds sitting down. I wonder how he would sound on his feet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Because we feel that certain parts of the bill are unfair and discriminate against workers on the basis of age, we feel that those portions of the amending bill should not be passed in their present form.

As I argued yesterday, much more needs to be done for people as they reach the age of retirement. At present we make retirement compulsory, whether people want to retire or can afford to do so. At the moment, 65 is the age of retirement. Surely it is possible for us to devise means whereby Canadians can retire when they want. That is why pensions ought to be available at age 60, although not universally as they are at age 65. I suggest that pensions ought to be available for those who choose to leave the labour market.

If people choose to stay in the labour market when they are between 60 and 65 years old, they should have the right to do so; but they should also have the right, throughout the decade 60 to 70 years of age to contribute to and draw benefits from the unemployment insurance legislation. It is as simple as that. As I say, yesterday we debated the paying inside of the proposition; now we are debating the benefit side of the same legislation.

I was twitting my hon. friend across the way a moment ago about his frequent remarks from his seat and saying I should like to hear him on his feet. That is just part of our exchanges back and forth here.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Hurrah, he is on his feet!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member opposite, for whom I harbour no animosity, wants to know what I think of the bill, he need only look at my speech on second reading. He was in the House, although I do not think any of his colleagues were. As the hon. member's leader said not long ago, we are the party in government and must show more responsibility.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having a second time in my speech provoked a point of order which, obviously, is not a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Obviously the hon. member opposite is not spending enough time in the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My referring to the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) was a preamble to my saying that the person from whom we really want to hear in this debate is the minister. Of course he may tell us that he spoke on second reading and appeared before the committee.

When we adopted the provision for report stage debate we provided for the mover of the motion to speak for 40 minutes, and the minister to reply for 40 minutes. Everybody else may speak only 20 minutes. We recognized that when a serious proposal is made by way of report stage amendment, the minister should be given a special opportunity to reply. He has said very little, yesterday and today, in this report stage debate, and he had nothing at all to say on the taking away of unemployment insurance protection from those aged 65 years and over, when we discussed the subject yesterday. I hope he will enter the debate today, or enter it at an early stage. No doubt he has arguments to advance in support of the validity of this measure; otherwise he would not bring it before us.

Having heard the arguments made by members of all parties in this House, to the effect that this provision should not stand, I invite the minister to enter the debate. And when I speak of all parties I remind him that the members of the Progressive Conservative party want to rescind the cancellation of benefits at age 65; we want to do it, too. My friends in the Social Credit party take the same position, and at least one Liberal member, the hon. member for Davenport, took this position openly yesterday. I understand that when the vote comes, several Liberals may vote with us. So, in all corners of the House members think this measure unfair, and I hope the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will say something to us about it.

Sir, as I said yesterday, we have come a long way in the decades I have been here in improving the lot of our older people, particularly in terms of pensions, medical care and housing. But that is no reason for taking away from them their right to be part of the work force, if that is their choice.

● (2050)

In removing the right to participate from workers over the age of 65 we are taking away a right which applies in the case of workers in a younger age bracket and I hope, therefore, that when the vote comes on these two motions, despite the fact that we are pretty well along the way, the House will this time decide that Canadians between the ages of 65 and 70 should remain eligible for participation in the unemployment insurance program. Surely that is their right.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has stated fairly well what all members of the House think about the abolition of unemployment insurance benefits for individuals aged 65 or over and even 60 or over.

Mr. Speaker, workers are now paying their unemployment insurance contributions and I think they are entitled, as long as they have opportunities for employment, to those benefits if for one reason or another, they become unemployed. Pensions are denied to workers of 60. We have been advocating that in the House for some fifteen years, however, the government maintains it is unable to pay those pensions to individuals over 60. For purely financial reasons, it is suggested that at 65 people are unable to work. We have considerable evidence that some individuals of 65 or over even of 70 and up to 75 can still perform paying work which is considered as adequate. I have in mind the case of an 85-year-old Rouyn-Noranda man who was sawyer 40 or 50 years ago. Last year, a north western company needed such a man; they went and hired him at 85 years of age to continue to saw in this Rouyn-Noranda sawmill.

Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that any person of 85 can do the same thing. This citizen was not contributing at that time to unemployment insurance, because he was over the required age. However, nothing prevents a great number of persons, 65 to 70 years of age, to accomplish a sensible and essential task in many cases. While there are young people who cannot or will not assume working responsibilities, there are people 65, 66 or 67 years old who are employed.

Mr. Speaker, if these working people who are 65 and paying unemployment insurance premiums became unemployed while remaining able and willing to work, there is no reason why they should not be paid unemployment insurance benefits.

I feel that my colleague the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) who is well informed about work and unemployment insurance has clearly expressed the position of the Social Credit Party on this unique legislation which the government has introduced in Parliament. And I sincerely believe that hon. members from both sides of the House want that citizens 65 years of age and over in their ridings be allowed to work if they want to. On the other hand if they decided not to stop working or to leave the labour market and receive some annuities or pensions, then it would be all right to discontinue payment of these benefits. Yet, if this citizen chooses to go on working rather than draw old age pension, the government should be respectful towards those Canadian citizens who are the agents of the normal development of our country with their own work. Instead of penalizing them when they reach the age of 65, let us grant then the right to decide by themselves about their work and their life and not by a unilateral act of the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I should like to say a few words in connection with this amendment, Mr. Speaker. In effect what it is saying to the Unemployment Insurance Commission is that workers should retire at the age of 65—that they are not needed in the work force any more. I think this is a wrong attitude to take. Many workers over the age of 65 have important responsibilities. But the attitude of the Commission is: this is a bad-risk group so let's get rid of them. It is rather like saying that all drivers under 25 are bad risks so they should be prevented from driving cars.

Approximately 25 per cent of the total cost of unemployment insurance consists of extended benefits. Those who continue working will still have to pay their share of the tax dollar wich goes to defray the cost of extended benefits. In effect, the right to pay in and take out is being denied to these older workers, but they will still have to pay through general taxation a sizeable portion of the cost of unemployment insurance. This is a serious mistake and I believe it will discourage older workers from remaining in the work force. Nevertheless, I think we are going to need them. A recent study conducted in England showed that older workers were, on the whole, more reliable and diligent than younger workers, and performed their duties better.

The thinking of the Unemployment Insurance Commission seems to be based on the fact that benefits drawn by members of this group amount to approximately $2,800 as against approximately $1,800 in the lower age groups. Some weight was also given to the idea that they were all getting approximately $1,000 a year from the Canada Pension Plan.

The question has been raised as to the effectiveness of benefit control officers in relation to the claims of older workers. Mr. Speaker, it is my experience that control officers are usually more severe with older workers than they are with youthful workers. If there is any discrimination on the part of the officials it is my experience that the older worker is discriminated against—he is often expected to meet conditions which do not seem to apply to younger workers.

If it were decided that unemployment insurance benefits ought not to be paid to those over 65 on the basis that they receive payments from the Canada Pension Plan, there is an obvious way out. It is that the person concerned should not be obliged to accept Canada Pension Plan payments but would be permitted to remain in the work force, pay unemployment insurance, and receive benefits if he became unemployed and met the appropriate conditions. Thus he could remain in the work force while building up his Canada Pension Plan contributions.

I also take exception to the fact that severance pay is not given those who retire at 65. In the present act the cut-off age is 70. This really means that anyone who is unemployed in their sixty-fifth year will be denied the three weeks' severance pay, or a portion of it, and I think that is wrong. The argument is made that those over 70 have suffered the same experience, but in point of fact not too many people over 70 are working these days, whereas many people are still working when they reach 65. So the government is saving a week or two severance pay at the expense of these people, and this is not a good thing.

If there is to be severance pay, let everyone receive it equally, whether they are 65 or over. If they are 64 they should not be discriminated against in this regard.

I think this clause is ill-advised. It decreases the incentive of older workers to remain in the work force, with a consequent loss of productivity to the nation. This means we lose the benefit of what age brings with it, namely, experience and reliability. Such a provision is prematurely removing people from the work force by making them no longer welcome.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to sound repetitious but some things have to be said again and again to the government, things that bear repeating. I do not know what it takes to get through to the bureacratic nabobs who advise the minister. Certainly there is not much use my directing my arguments to the minister; I have to direct them to the bureaucracy which is guiding the minister in his fight against inflation.

During committee study of the bill the minister and his bureaucrats put forward two basic reasons for dropping the 65 to 69 year olds from coverage under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The first reason given by the minister, which doubtless he will give again on third reading, was that the government has improved old age security, the Canada Pension Plan, and the guaranteed income supplement. In committee the minister admitted that the maximum a person could collect under these three plans would be about $3,000. The minister talks of the social security program as though it replaces the income of a 65 year old who has dependants.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has recognized that the Canada Pension Plan is only a supplement to private pensions that workers contribute to while employed. Less than 40 per cent of the workers of this country participate in a private pension plan, which means the great majority do not enjoy any kind of contributory pension plan.

Mr. Peters: As a miner I had to join this place to get a pension.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) points out that as a miner he had to join the House of Commons so he could enjoy a pension plan. And what a pension plan it is! Certainly it is an incentive to come back here again and again.

Mr. Peters: And we pay for it.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. The government claims that its social security programs are a replacement for income, yet the health and welfare minister recognizes that the Canada Pension Plan is supplementary to pensions in the private sector. As I have pointed out, most workers do not have a private pension plan. When they reach 65, 66 or 67 they must continue to work instead of retiring. It is essential that they continue to seek work and try to earn a living in order to keep themselves and their families. After all, it is not unusual for a 65 year old to have dependants. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will have dependants when he is 65 so I am not talking about an unreal situation, though he will not have to worry about unemployment insurance.

An hon. Member: He may in 1978.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who knows. The government has embarked on what it calls a restraint program. But against whom is its restraint directed? The government usually picks on those least able to defend themselves, the aged, children, and women. It never picks on the rich and powerful. The government is going to announce shortly what it intends to do to fight inflation, but what bothers me about the government's fight against inflation is that it is always fought on the backs of the poor. We have seen this in the elimination from the Unemployment Insurance Act of the over 65 year olds. We have seen it in the proposal now before the House to eliminate the dependency rate. We have seen it in the proposal to eliminate advance payments. I point out that 70 per cent of those who collect unemployment insurance earn less than $6,000 a year, and it is against these poor people that these provisions are directed.

Although many of these arguments have been made before, it seems to me absolutely essential that they be made again and again. I have no respect for a government with the majority it has that uses its power in this way. The unemployment insurance program is a social program, not an insurance program at all. It is one of the most direct ways of transferring funds to those who earn the least amount.

I know one of my colleagues in the opposition also wishes to say a few words this evening, so at this point I will take my seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes we have left to discuss Bill C-69, which is very important for the class of workers over 65, let me, on behalf of the official opposition, ask the government to give benevolent consideration to citizens over 65. Many of them have come to see me in my constituency, and I am sure that similar representations have been made to government members, I would even say, to request government compassion, and to say how much they think it is important to defeat this amendment.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, and I sound the alarm at the last moment, because I am sure that hon. members from my province and from other provinces as well have made the same representations to beg for more understanding and compassion on the part of the government, which seems to be too hard on that class of people who not only deserve but are entitled to the continued enjoyment of unemployment insurance benefits. May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, in the few seconds I have left, to appeal to the minister, to beg of him to understand the importance of being just towards them. My colleagues of the Social Credit Party, the NDP and the Progressive Conservative Party agree with me that it is unthinkable that we should stand alone on this side of the House, when I see people like the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), who received representations from their ridings, but who did not even speak to this bill. Other hon. members on the government side did not even have the courage to ask the minister to understand. I see the hon. member for Laval—

Mr. Speaker, I know my time is limited, but allow me to cry out for help on behalf of those people of 65 or more. I ask the minister to understand the importance of cancelling this amendment that is unjust, discriminatory and unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, before—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Béchard: You hear the members of the opposition: it is a perpetual muzzle—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member for Joliette a question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is difficult for the Chair to make a decision concerning a point of order. Because of the din, we did not hear anything on this side of the House.

I shall call upon the hon. member to present his point of order after we have disposed of various questions.

Order. It being 9.15 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to the provisions of the order which was passed today so that the House may proceed to the deferred votes concerning any motion aimed at amending Bill C-69, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Peters) negatived.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do so not to dispute any vote which has taken place but to seek your guidance in connection with future votes. I am referring to the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) was not in his place at the time the Whips sat down.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps members opposite would quieten down. It did not affect the outcome of the vote, but I cannot recall any instance since I have been here when a minister whose vote was recorded was not in his seat at the time the Whips took their seats, and since there is the possibility of dispute in the future over this kind of question, I seek your guidance.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Hon. members over there can settle down for a moment. I am seeking guidance for future situations so that there may be no misunderstanding. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice has anything to say about this tonight, but it might be helpful if Your Honour would inform the House as to the view of the Chair on this question. Must a member be in his place for a vote according to the traditions of this House when the two Whips sit down, or is moving around in the chamber after the Whips have taken their places in order?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) raising this matter in order, as he says, that Your Honour might give guidance to the House on this issue. I do not have the rule in front of me but I believe it says that members must be in the House at the time a vote is called. I want to assure honourable members that I was in the House. I apologize to Your Honour for not being in my place at the time you called the vote. I was discussing a matter of urgent public and state importance with the honourable member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

● (2210)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I have always regarded him with high esteem, and his conversation was so engaging that I apologize to Your Honour for not realizing you had called the vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) raises a point of order which certainly is worthy of consideration, and he is totally accurate when he indicates that I would not propose to deal with it at this time. The question of whether or not the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) was in the Chamber is one I noted carefully when the matter first arose. Certainly the minister was in the chamber at the time. However, there are clear restrictions against members moving about during the taking of a vote, the obvious reason being, of course, that members who move about during the taking of a vote even after casting their ballots make accuracy very difficult. Therefore respect for the rule is expected.

The Minister of Justice has apologized to the Chair for what is a very rare occurrence. Presumably it would affect the first vote; those thereafter I presume will be valid because the minister was properly in his seat. The Leader of the Opposition does not challenge the vote in any way; that is clear. The vote having once been taken and recorded, it cannot be challenged in any event. The Leader of the Opposition has asked the Chair to take the point of order under consideration. This I will be pleased to do and perhaps will reconsider it at a later time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS ON EMISSION STANDARDS APPLICABLE TO SYNCRUDE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see the House vacating itself so quickly. I am aware of what happened in British Columbia last week, but I am delighted to see that some of my hon. friends are remaining.

This matter arises from a question asked of the former minister of the environment on November 14 dealing with the ecological effects of the tar sands development in Alberta. The minister answered a variety of questions over several days, and as reported at page 9016 of Hansard she answered my question as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that we do not feel we have a conflict of interest. Quite to the contrary, it is precisely because we have some involvement in that project that any activity at that site falls within government policy, under which environmental impact studies must be produced to the satisfaction of the Department of the Environment.

That answer was given to protect the government from the allegation that, in view of the heavy investment made by the Government of Canada in the Alberta tar sands project, its ability to protect people of the area, in the Northwest Territories and in Saskatchewan, from the probable effect of excessive SO_2 emissions in developing the tar sands is inhibited.

My point in again raising the issue tonight is to get the government to come to grips with a serious ecological problem associated with that development, and also to challenge the abandonment by the government of any kind of ecological leadership, particularly in view of the recent decision to eliminate the Department of the Environment as a separate department, in a sense drowning it in the Department of Fisheries.

We have been concerned for some time, in this party and on this side of the House, with what appears to be an eroding attitude in respect of protection of the environment. In fact what we have been faced with is really a policy paralysis in ecological matters. When I and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) asked the government, specifically the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), to explain why the federal government had not yet had a representative on the board of directors of the tar sands project, and why no final agreement had been signed, his answer was that it had not been signed yet, but an agreement in principle had been reached on February 3 of this year.

During that ten-month period decisions which will have important environmental effects have been taken by the management committee which is running the day-to-day operations of the tar sands projects. One of these important decisions taken by management was to enter into an agreement with the Alberta government which allows the Syncrude project to emit 287 long tons of sulphur dioxide per day, in spite of the fact that experts within the Department of the Environment had said in 1974 that 140 long tons a day was an unrealistic figure, but that 40 long tons were O.K. in terms of existing technology.

If, as the minister says, the government has representation on the management committee which signed that agreement, I can only suggest that their impact on that important decision was ludicrously feeble, or that the government has given them inadequate direction or, worse, that the government does not really care about the environment when it interferes with making money on that project, at the expense of the health of the community.

Another possible explanation is that the leadership in the Department of the Environment has been confused or feeble in its ability to get its interests across to a Cabinet that is now hot in pursuit of energy and profit from the Syncrude project. Certainly confusion characterizes the answers we have received in this House about SO2 emissions and the role Environment Canada had and should play in guaranteeing clean air and good health to the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta, who are now living under the threat of ecological disaster.

In answer to a series of questions I put to the then minister of the environment regarding national emission standards, the minister said that such standards were provincial matters. Later she said that any activity within Syncrude fell within standards established by the Department of the Environment.

The key question is, why have there been no emission standards taken or adopted as if there had been no environmental standards declared under the Clean Air Act? After the minister left her portfolio, and we now have a vacant portfolio, a declaration was made. It appeared in today's paper and has regard to asbestos fibre standards finally coming into force under the Clean Air Act. Yet significantly nothing has been done with regard to SO2 emissions from the tar sands project.

Why is it that the government continues to drag its feet? In this case of the tar sands it must be a matter of justice not only being done but appearing to be done, and that conflict of interest we have charged the government with is now demonstrated by inactivity in terms of enforcing ecological standards in respect of the tar sands. Again the management committee, with federal representation, has agreed to standards which the Department of the Environment rejected a long time ago. This is a clear erosion of the kind of environmental standards to which Canadian people are entitled.

There is in the long term, and I think Mr. Maurice Strong said it recently, in times of economic uncertainty or economic recession, a tendency for the environment to be the first thing to go. The government has demonstrated a lack of leadership and a feebleness toward that subject which the people in the tar sands area, and indeed the people of Canada in general, are going to remember long unless significant change takes place very quickly.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to my hon. friend this evening on behalf of the Acting Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), and the parliamentary secretary. The former minister's statement in the House in response to questions by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), clearly indicated the approach we have taken with regard to this project.

The government of Alberta, which has the primary responsibility for the control of air emissions from the Syncrude plant, has worked and continues to work in close co-operation with the department in ensuring an adequate and realistic assessment of the potential environmental impact of the project and the best means of effecting the controls found to be necessary.

The former minister tabled in the House in November, 1974, the department's review of the environmental assessment prepared by Syncrude for the Alberta Ministry of the Environment. I should note that the government of Alberta requested our review of the report, and this was in keeping with the spirit of co-operation that exists between the two governments in environmental matters. Both governments, not surprisingly, found the report deficient in a number of areas. A project of this magnitude using new processes has potential effects on all facets of the environment, and the preparation of an environmental assessment that will satisfy all questions posed by the scientific and technical community and the public is probably an unreachable goal, but is a goal that we will continue to strive for.

The department now has in operation an environmental assessment and review process to deal with major projects such as this involving government financing. The process is designed to avoid duplication of effort by utilizing assessments that may have been initiated by provincial governments, as is the case with Syncrude, where federal financial involvement was announced earlier this year.

We have taken steps to plug the gaps in scientific knowledge revealed by our review, with regard to the potential impact on the environment in the tar sands area. The $40 million joint program with the government of Alberta referred to earlier in the House is largely devoted to this task. However, by their very nature, such scientific studies require time. Even with such research completed, when one considers the complexities of ecological systems, we will still have uncertainties. It is because of such uncertainties that the policy of the department is to promote the prudent approach of containment at source, utilizing best practicable technology.

Our review of the environmental assessment prepared by Syncrude lead to the conclusion that practicable technology was available that could reduce emission of SO_2 substantially below that authorized by the Alberta government in July of 1973. The technical review by the department in 1974 was based upon limited technical information available at that time. Since that time, meetings with both Syncrude and the Alberta Department of the Environment have continued in order to exchange technical data which will allow for more precise technical assessments and the reconciliation of differing viewpoints as to the practicality of control methods. We fully expect that substantial reductions in sulphur dioxide emissions will result.

While direct discussions have continued between the department, the Alberta Department of the Environment, and Syncrude in order to assess the control approaches necessary, the department has also drawn to the attention of Energy, Mines and Resources, the lead federal agency in this project, the need to ensure that environmental safeguards are given appropriate consideration by the management committee in line with federal policies in regard to pollution control.

[Mr. Goodale.]

TRANSPORT—ARRANGEMENTS FOR SHIPPING WHEAT THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, tonight I should like once again to raise the issue of the port of Churchill in terms of its potential capacity for grain shipment. I do not like to sound repetitive, but I feel it is necessary for me to speak on this topic again especially in light of the fact that those responsible on the government side have paid seemingly little attention to the half dozen other speeches I have made in this House concerning the port of Churchill.

It is indeed unfortunate that I must stand up time and time again to try to sell such a unique northern facility like Churchill, not only as a member of parliament for the Churchill constituency but foremost as a concerned citizen of northern Manitoba. I shall continue to haunt those sitting across from me so that in time they may see the light and buy the idea of a northern port being used to capacity.

When dealing with this great mid-Canada inland seaport, it is not difficult to see that Churchill has many positive aspects, due mainly to its geographical location, that make this port most conducive to the shipment of large quantities of grain. Churchill itself boasts a railhead, an airport suitable for jet service and, of course, the deep water port, well protected with direct access to the sea.

These are important characteristics which the government seems to ignore. The port of Churchill, for those who are not familiar with its climate, location, and facilities, provides Manitoba with a unique distinction among the prairie provinces because of its access to the sea. There are 3,065 feet of wharf, with five deep sea berths and one coastal berth. The climate is in itself a major factor which makes Churchill an ideal grain port. The present shipping season usually starts around July 20 and lasts for the duration of the summer months until October 20, and the winter throughout the rest of the year provides superlative storage conditions because of low temperatures and humidity.

As I have said on previous occasions, farmers from Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta benefit from the port because it provides ready access to European markets. Figures from the Canadian Grains Industry "Statistics Handbook '75" indicate the cost savings of shipping grain through the port of Churchill as opposed to other Canadian ports are indeed significant. To show just exactly how prairie farmers would benefit by moving grain through Churchill, I have the following examples.

To ship grain from Scott, Saskatchewan, to Rotterdam via Churchill rather than east coast ports, a saving of 32 cents per bushel would be realized. From Scott through Churchill as opposed to shipping through St. Lawrence ports would mean a saving of 18 cents a bushel. Churchill instead of Pacific coast ports would mean a 15 cent per bushel saving to the exporter.

You can see my point, the statistics speak for themselves. Besides its accessibility to European markets, Churchill has definite locational advantages with regard to Arctic supply and also the supply of possible pipeline materials and distribution. Churchill has been called "The Gateway to the Central Arctic".

Then there is the railway that links Churchill with its southern neighbours. Most of the railway that runs from the Pas to Churchill has been upgraded during the past few years to the point where it is now capable of handling light aluminum hopper cars which exist for transporting grain. CNR officials have informed me that at present their facilities are capable of handling between 30 and 40 million bushels of grain without difficulties. I feel that the Wheat Board should be forced to make maximum use of this line, and I would go as far as to say the CPR should be allowed running rights by CNR.

At present the facilities at Churchill can handle 5 million bushels of storage. Although the port has the capability of handling upward of 40 million bushels in a shipping season, only about 22 million bushels are actually exported. If the facilities were upgraded and expanded it would not be an exaggeration to say that up to 14 million bushels of grain could be handled each month during the three month season.

There are many other pertinent reasons that come to mind when I think of why the port facilities should be upgraded. From the perspective of the prairie grain farmer a great deal of money could be saved if the bulk of his grain could be shipped through Churchill. There is also the point of reducing overhead costs. By shipping 40 million bushels—remember that is double the current quantity that is moved through the port—the overhead costs could reciprocally be reduced. There is also the question of simple economics that further strengthens my conviction that Churchill should and could be used to peak capacity.

The port is the only bright prospect for the community of Churchill. In fact the port is an important part of the economy of the entire north. The federal government has invested a lot of money in Churchill to revitalize the community. What is needed, though, is an economic base to support the existing facilities, and additional funds to upgrade these facilities further.

The advantages of shipping grain through Churchill are easy enough to comprehend. Why then has the federal government not accepted the fact that there are these advantages? The people of central Canada cannot seem to get the government to understand, although we have been trying for long enough, but we cannot get the government to realize that we have a sea port in central Canada that has not been utilized to its full capabilities.

● (2230)

The estimates for the past year indicated that $12.5 million will be spent on the port of Churchill during the next four years. This amount will cover little more than maintenance. It is because of a lack of funds that port authorities cannot keep the port in operating condition. It is unfortunate that the government did not stick to its election promise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Could I not finish, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It has expired.

Mr. McKinley: One minute only.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Thank you. Now that I have touched upon the reasons why the port of Churchill could become a more highly utilized terminal in terms of its capacity for grain movement, I feel I should make a few suggestions as to how the port could reach that state. At the port of Churchill the arrival and departure of ships should be better co-ordinated. At the present time the government does not see fit to co-ordinate the arrival of ships at the proper time. I feel that perhaps the government should be offering an incentive for grain handling ships to come into the port of Churchill, thus speeding up the movement of grain out of that port.

In closing I should like to say that I, for one, am convinced that Churchill could move double the amount of grain which is currently handled. For example, the shipping season this year opened July 23, but the first grain ship did not arrive in the port until August 18. The harbour board was still able to ship 22 million bushels of grain from August 18 to October 18. This proves beyond any doubt that Churchill could easily handle 40 million bushels of grain.

Henry Hudson discovered the bay which was named after him in 1610, and the site of Churchill was inhabited some 19 years later. One wonders—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I just have two words, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I am sorry.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I very much enjoyed the contribution of my hon. friend this evening with respect to the port of Churchill. I, and many others on this side of the House, have had the opportunity of hearing him speak on this subject on previous occasions in the House, and I can assure him that his representations do not go unnoticed.

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) informed the House on December 12, it is always the object of the Canadian Wheat Board to ship as much grain as possible through Churchill. In the 1975 shipping season, as my hon. friend just mentioned, 22,710,000 bushels of grain, all of which was barley, was shipped from Churchill. Unfortunately, in both of the last two years shipments from Churchill have begun rather late in what is a short season. In 1974 the first vessel did not arrive until August 11, and this year it was August 15.

While every effort is made by the Canadian Wheat Board to increase the level of shipments from Churchill, it must be recognized that the board as seller cannot dictate to buyers the type of grain they are to buy nor the port from which delivery is to be made. Buyers purchase grain out of Churchill only to the extent that it is economical for them to do so, taking into account the cost of financing their inventories, ocean freight, and the cost of marine insurance.

Churchill is ideally located to service western European markets, the U.S.S.R. and eastern Europe. However, shipments out of Churchill during August, September and October arrive at destinations during or just after Europe has harvested its own crop. The storage facilities of these buyers are full or nearly full at that time, and there are extra costs to them in financing stocks which are not required for consumption for several months. As a result, these buyers have some difficulty in utilizing Churchill as fully as we would wish.

The trend toward increasingly large vessels in the grain trade is another factor which affects the level of shipments from Churchill. On the other hand, there are definite advantages to the Churchill route, including the shorter rail haul, and others my hon. friend mentioned this evening. The Canadian Wheat Board is fully aware of these advantages and is continuing, and will continue to move as much grain for shipment from Churchill as possible.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR FRASER VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, December 4, I pointed out to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) that the Fraser Valley was experiencing serious flooding, and areas were still in imminent danger.

Officials of the Department of the Environment have already informed me that inflation had completely eaten up the entire budget of the Fraser River Flood Control Program and that completion target dates had been put back to 1979-80. They mentioned also that the department had gone to the Treasury Board requesting further funding for this very important project. My question, therefore, to the President of the Treasury Board was as follows:

> Will the minister give this high priority in view of the fact that a dike broke yesterday in the eastern part of Surrey and the South Westminster district is facing imminent flooding?

The answer was not only inadequate, in part it was also condescending and gratuitous. I am thankful he did allow that:

> . . . when we are dealing with emergencies like that one, we take the necessary steps if we have to pay for our share of responsibilities.

That in itself is acceptable and encouraging. But then the minister went on to say:

> I hope the hon. member will inform the leader of his party that he is pressing us to spend more money.

You bet I am! I make no apologies for that. When the needs that I have brought to the minister's attention cry for solution I will continue to press for funding.

[Mr. Goodale.]

The minister's answer brings into sharp focus the whole problem of the government's distorted priorities. I am talking about a community of 600 to 1,000 people who have endured a building freeze since 1968 because of poor drainage and sewage facilities. These people cannot get building permits to upgrade their homes because one or other of the levels of government has decided that money spent on proper drainage is not a good investment at this time. Meanwhile we get the latest model cash registers in the dining facilities here on Parliament Hill, and we get a $36,000 carpet to cover the marble floor in the parliamentary dining room.

I am talking about a community where the water table rises and falls with the tide but the flood boxes and the pumps are not working properly. Meanwhile, not too many miles away, the CBC is planning to erect a French T.V. station. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the people in Bridgeview would gladly sacrifice that TV station if only they could get proper drainage.

I am speaking of a community where the ditches are up to five or six feet deep, they are open, and they have algae in them. They are increasingly filled with water because the higher ground to the south of Bridgeview has been subdivided, and now all that run-off is bestowed on the people of Bridgeview. These ditches surround the community playground, are adjacent to the school and community centre, and parallel all the streets on which the children walk to school. There does not seem to be enough money to drain these ditches, but there is plenty to pay for the thousands of square feet of unused government leased office space across Canada.

I am speaking of a community that really does have a community spirit—where neighbours talk to each other and help each other out—where the community hall is a busy place both for social events, recreation, and business meetings. These people have an esprit de corps and sense of kinship as few communities have today. In a day when most people are so busy they have isolated themselves from each other, we find a community where people stick together. Adversity, I suppose, has done this for them.

The joint federal-provincial program to provide dikes and drainage for areas like this is already far behind where it ought to be. The provincial government has asked the municipality of Surrey to buy up the right of way to build and improve dikes. The municipality has kept its part of the bargain and proceeded to do this. Now they are told that funding has been cut, partly due to lack of federal funds. And now the minister says, "You are asking me to spend more money." I most certainly am. But I am asking for more than that.

I am asking for a re-ordering of priorities. I am asking the President of the Treasury Board to remember that we are not talking about asking people to wait for luxuries. We are talking about people and very fundamental needs that they have—needs like safety from flooding or drowning, needs like hygiene, needs like the opportunity to build up their community so they can be proud of it. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the municipality of Surrey is doing its part, the people are doing their part, and now they are waiting for the federal government to do its part.

● (2240)

In closing, as we are to hear from the all-purpose parliamentary secretary who tonight is covering for three different ministers, I suppose we could exchange him for a cassette tape recorder.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my response this evening would have been somewhat more jovial if my hon. friend had refrained from making his last comment. Once again this evening I am responding on behalf of the Acting Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc).

The Fraser River Flood Control Agreement was signed on May 24, 1968, and at that time the estimated cost of the total program was $40 million and the cost to the federal government was $18 million. In 1974 the federal cabinet approved an increase in the federal contribution to $30.5 million, thereby almost doubling the available funding to this program.

Construction costs have increased rapidly in the lower British Columbia mainland area and this, along with demands from local authorities for improvements to drainage systems, has resulted in a further increase in the amount of money required to complete the work. Additional time will be needed as well, since the original agreement was to terminate on May 24, 1978.

As the former minister of the environment has already informed the House, Environment Canada has made a submission to Treasury Board for funds to cover federal-provincial cost-shared agreements on water programs. The department is working on a specific submission for funding of the Fraser River diking project, consistent with approvals on this over-all program.

With probable financial constraints it will not be possible to provide complete protection to all parts of the valley, nor to correct inherent drainage problems in sparsely settled areas. Highest priority is being given to diking for the purpose of reducing possible loss of life and property damage. Environmental factors are also important, and conservation of areas important to wild life and fisheries and fish habitat must take precedence in some areas in determining dike locations.

Contributions to the Fraser project represent a large part of our total flood damage reduction program and are indicative of the high priority the federal government places on flood protection in the lower Fraser River Valley. It should interest the House to know that, with the works now currently under way and those already completed, a high level of flood protection is being provided to approximately 80 per cent of the residents of the lower Fraser who are subject to flood damage.

Provided that additional funds are made available, it will be possible to continue this work to reduce even further the flood damage potential of the Fraser River.

Environment Canada, at the same time, is also actively pursuing its flood damage reduction program jointly with provinces by providing flood risk mapping in the major population centres affected by flooding across the country. The department is also actively engaged in flood prevention works in Ontario, Saskatchewan, as well as British Columbia, and in planning studies which will lead to reduction in flood damage in Quebec and New Brunswick.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CIRCUMVENTING OF UNION IN BARGAINING WITH FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, as a result of reliable reports of continuing and rather extraordinary ineptitude in labour relations on the part of officials acting on behalf of our country's national airline which resulted in a strong protest in the form of a telegram being forwarded on behalf of CALEA to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), Mr. Joe Morris of the CLC and assorted members of parliament. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Transport investigate immediately the role of Mr. Dale Atkinson, General Manager of finance, Air Canada, who, according to the President of the Canadian Airline Employees Association, took it upon himself to circumvent the union's negotiating committee when he initiated direct bargaining with the Air Canada finance branch employees in Winnipeg for whom the union is certified as the sole bargaining agent and that the minister report his findings to this House, since this type of action may be contrary to the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST THAT COMPANY RESPECT PRINCIPLES OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING WHEN DEALING WITH FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgency, as has already been indicated, is the action of the general manager of the finance branch of Air Canada in circumventing the certified union of the employees of that branch. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urges the Minister of Transport to call upon the general manager of Air Canada's finance branch to respect the principles of collective bargaining by dealing with the employees of the branch through their certified bargaining agent, the Canadian Airline Employees Association, so that negotiations may be conducted in accordance with appropriate employer-employee relations.

Mr. Speaker: This motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED STUDY OF LACK OF RECOGNITION OF BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the considerable reaction among federal civil servants in Quebec as a result of the government delay in adopting a specific policy on a fair indemnity for bilingualism, considering the undertaking of the government in August last to abide by the date of December 31, 1975, that is in a few days, as the limit for the application of the bilingualism bonus, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That this House consider immediately the problem concerning the effective non-acknowledgement of bilingualism among civil servants and that it indicate to the government the policy to be followed for the application and granting of bilingualism bonuses.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTION MR. MARCHAND FURNISH EVIDENCE FORCE LEAKED INFORMATION ON VISIT TO OFFICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the statements made yesterday by the minister without portfolio that he still was not convinced that the RCMP had not leaked information to the news media about their intention to visit him and if they wanted to go fishing in his office they would have to use their guns. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the House requests the Minister without Portfolio to either furnish evidence that the RCMP was indeed responsible for the leak in question to the news media or that he withdraw his additional accusation of yesterday and, finally, that the minister's further statement that he will contest any search warrant obtained by the RCMP and that in effect he will permit them to only make a limited form of examination of his office files, raises the perhaps totally unjustified implication that the minister has something to hide and therefore the House requests an immediate statement from the minister clarifying this situation.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

FOOD PRICES

PROPOSED IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE ON TRENDS IN FOOD PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to seek the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 for a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion is based on the statements made yesterday by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the President of Dominion Stores and the Deputy Minister of Agriculture referring to the need for a national food policy in this country because of indications that food prices will continue to rise notwithstanding the fact that prices to primary producers and farmers are declining. In view of the fact that the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices in its final report concurred in by this House on January 11, 1974 recommended that the government give consideration to the advisability of establishing a comprehensive and realistic long-term food policy for Canada and that further the Food Prices Review Board in its report of June 1975 recommended such a policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

That this House direct the government to take immediate steps to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices as concurred in by the House on January 11, 1974.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED PROTEST TO UNITED STATES AGAINST BUILDING OF SUBMARINE AND MISSILE BASE AT BANGOR, WASHINGTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the announcement of construction recently of the Trident Nuclear submarine and missile base in Bangor, Washington, some 60 miles from the city of Victoria and the lower mainland of British Columbia, without consultation with the Canadian authorities, and in view of the recent declaration by the city of Vancouver of Trident concern week, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make immediate representation to his United States counterpart and the President of the United States protesting this unnecessary escalation of the arms race and protesting increased risk inherent in this construction to Canadians in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REASON FOR DELAY IN PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Why have the regulations under the government's so-called anti-inflation act not been tabled in the House, why are they not before the House, and why are they being held up until tomorrow in view of the fact the legislation was passed last week by both Houses and apparently the government has had time to prepare the regulations in pamphlet form so that they could fall into the hands of a journalist in Toronto? Why are these being delayed particularly in view of the obvious desire of the citizens to have the information in these regulations.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is so obviously in the public interest that we felt the regulations once promulgated should be printed and made available in sufficient quantities right across the country so that the people could have immediate access to them. Hence, while the regulations have been prepared, we are now taking steps to put them into place across the country so that after they are tabled in the House tomorrow they can be made available to the general public.

With regard to the journalist in Toronto, I do not know the specific basis for the reference, but my only comment is, if the hon. gentleman is referring to the CBC report this morning, it strikes me that the CBC may have read the white paper for the first time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: How about you reading it for a change?

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF REGULATIONS TO PROVINCES—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER MEETINGS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the minister will be disappointed to know that he has not satisfied me as to why there is all this delay. I should like to ask him whether the regulations have been made available to the provinces which are, of coure, slightly concerned with this whole operation and have indicated they would not make any definite commitment with regard to the program until they have seen the regulations. Have the regulations been made available to the provinces and when?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have concluded that the members of this House would have felt that the regulations made under a federal law should first be made available to the House and to parliament before they are made available outside.

An hon. Member: You are finally getting the point.

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder how many times the Minister of Finance will keep going around that barrel before he stops.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He is keeping the information away from the public and using that as an excuse for keeping it away from the provinces. Some of us have some interest in seeing this program succeed despite all the bungling that is taking place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether he has made arrangements for the Ministers of Finance or whether the Prime Minister has made arrangements for the premiers—once the minister is gracious enough to make the regulations available to the provinces—to have a further meeting so that the people in Canada could know whether the provinces are in on this plan, whether they are part of this plan, and, if so, to what extent.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am delighted to learn from the hon. gentleman that he is indeed in support of the program. We have had discussions at the official level about further meetings of officials on the regulations. Obviously, they will be made available to the provincial governments and we will be following up with them appropriate means of bringing to finality their participation in the program.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—CONSENSUS OF PROVINCES ON DURATION OF PROGRAM AND UNIFORMITY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, concerning discussions with provincial officials, can the minister advise the House specifically whether there has been a consensus or an agreement with the provinces in respect of, first, the duration of the program, and second, the uniformity of regulations across the country so that at least, if the federal people are unable to do so, the provinces will come up with some consistency and evenness in respect of the administration?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer the hon. gentleman to previous responses in this regard. The different provinces have taken different viewpoints, so there is obviously no consensus upon this point. We hope that with the promulgation and publication of the regulations provincial governments will be able to make a final judgment as to what their position is. Obviously, our advocacy would be to have their full support for the program we have laid before the country and parliament, the kind of support that they promised at the premier's meeting in Saint John earlier this year.

Mr. Lawrence: Presumably the minister and the government have received no assurance that there will even be a uniformity of regulations across the country. Can the minister tell us whether he has obtained the assurance of at least a uniform level of participation by the provinces?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman is raising questions to which I have responded on a number of occasions referring to the different participation by, for example, Quebec and Ontario and the position taken by the government of Alberta. I think probably in the interest of saving time in the question period I should only refer the hon. gentleman to Hansard and the answers I have given.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTION THAT PROVISION FOR EQUALITY OF SEXES WITH REGARD TO INCOME BE MADE MANDATORY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with regard to the fact that women in Canada earn on the average 60 per cent of the amount earned by employed males. Last March, in response to a question on this matter, it was suggested by the Minister of Labour that largely this fell within provincial jurisdiction. Since the anti-inflation legislation now clearly involves the federal government with regard to wage and salary matters at all levels, will the government be insisting that the provision in the white paper for an exemption from the general guidelines to ensure the achievement of equality of the sexes with regard to income, be made mandatory instead of optional?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, within our jurisdiction we certainly would do so, and indeed, the other measures which are now before parliament with regard to equality of treatment within the work force will have this effect within the federal jurisdiction. We will, of course, advocate the same course of action to the provinces within their areas of jurisdiction.

Mr. Broadbent: With respect, and I do not say this critically, I think the minister missed part of the question. Considering that the white paper uses the word "may" with regard to the exemption for women, will the government either clarify or, if required, change its policy, and instead of making that an optional choice for exemption, make it mandatory so that women in Canada who do the same job as men will be paid at the same rate?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is the intention of Bill C-72, which is now before parliament, not just within the context of the prices and incomes program, but indeed continuing for all time in Canada. As we have said with regard to other aspects of the program, this is to make certain that there is no restraint upon women under the program with regard to increases to bring them on to a basis of equality. As I have said, Bill C-72, which is on the order paper, introduces the tense of the verb the hon. gentleman referred to: that this shall happen within federal jurisdiction.

SOCIAL SERVICES

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF DAY CARE CENTRES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My supplementary question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if I can get his attention. He is the minister responsible for women in this particularly important year. Does the government at long last plan to implement the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government contribute on a cost sharing basis with the provinces in the capital costs for the establishment of day care facilities and not simply contribute to maintenance costs once they are established?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy the hon. member raised the question. I will send him a copy of the guidelines which were published last year which indicate quite clearly the federal government's sharing in the cost of the rent of the day care centres, and second, in the cost of the depreciation on the capital cost of the day care centres. This shows that the federal government is sharing in the cost of day care services more generously than in any other social service in which it shares. I think this shows the determination of this government to bring its attention to problems regarding women in this country.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION BOARD INVESTIGATE ALL PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL TAX INCREASES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Considering that the Anti-Inflation Board has the power to control prices and wages and to review them at any time, does it also have any power to control provincial taxes, taxation rates, and municipal levies? For instance, Hull has announced a rate increase of 28 per cent; Mr. Bourassa also announced higher provincial taxes for next spring. Will these levels of government be subjected to laws or to the Anti-Inflation Board review?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, following provincial conferences on this program, the provinces have emphasized that their right to taxation be kept outside the control of the Anti-Inflation Board.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE—PROPOSED CONSULTATION WITH RAILWAY OFFICIALS AND TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask if the government is planning a reduction of rail passenger service in its new policy to be announced early in 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the policy is announced it will indicate the variety of plans. Needless to say in the rationalization there will be changes in service and in certain areas there may well be a reduction. There is also an important aspect and that is that where service is provided it should be provided efficiently.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question. Can the minister assure the House that officials of both national railways as well as those of the CTC are being and will be consulted on any proposed changes in rail passenger service that are under consideration by the government?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and the CTC will play a very important role as well.

Mr. Murta: A final supplementary question. In view of what the minister said, and since there is still apprehension in western Canada regarding the proposed policy, can the minister now assure the House that service in that part of the country will not be reduced to one transcontinental line going west from Montreal and Toronto through Winnipeg to Vancouver?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should try to forecast that part of the policy or the implications of it. As I said earlier, it is very important to consider the cost of the service now being provided and the implications for people travelling on services that are heavily subsidized and the availability of alternative services which may be cheaper without a cost to taxpayers. All of those things will be put together in determining the extent of the service offered in any particular area and that will be developed progressively with a role being played by the CTC.

HEALTH

STUDY OF ORTHO-MOLECULAR PSYCHIATRY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. About a year ago we asked a question about orthomolecular psychiatry and he told us an evaluation was being undertaken. I wonder if the minister could tell us if that evaluation of megavitamin therapy has been completed for cases of schizophrenia in Canada, and if it is used as a drug in this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That investigation has not been completed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister at what stage the evaluation is, and when we might expect it will be completed so that physicians across Canada may know whether they can use megavitamin therapy?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a firm date to the hon. member but I can tell him that the health protection branch of my department has not yet received sufficient evidence from properly constituted and controlled clinical investigations which would substantiate any conclusions for the efficacy of high doses of vitamins in the treatment of psychiatric conditions or the common cold.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REASON FOR DELAY IN PROCEEDING WITH SECOND READING OF BILL—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF PROVISION COVERING HATE MESSAGES BY TELEPHONE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Now that Bill C-72 has been mentioned by the Minister of Finance in dealing with the federal human rights legislation and seeing that the minister has now met with his provincial counterparts regarding this very important matter, can he give us any reasons why he cannot proceed with the early introduction of this bill for second reading after the Christmas recess?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful meeting, and as a result of that discussion, I shall be making some recommendations to my colleagues in cabinet with regard to the bill. I would hope it could be proceeded with in the session following Christmas.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Another matter of some sensitivity involves Bell Canada and hate messages. Has the minister directed his attention to this particular matter and was it discussed with his provincial counterpart? Is he going to move in this particular area to outlaw these messages and will there be room for censorship by Bell Canada? Is this the type of thing he is recommending to his colleagues to be brought within the human rights legislation or will there be separate legislation?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, it was raised by the delegation from Ontario and I have also had correspondence and discussion on the subject with my counterpart, Mr. McMurtry. I am not proposing that we should introduce in that bill, or any other, some form of censorship, but I am conscious of the problem and issue raised by the government of Ontario and have undertaken to examine both their specific proposal and other proposals, to see if the problem can be dealt with either under the Human Rights Act or some other appropriate piece of legislation. That is one matter on which I am reflecting following our meetings and on which I hope to make recommendations to my colleagues before the bill comes back to the House.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As, later this week, important government announcements will be made covering spending cuts in the order of $1.5 billion; as, on October 9, the Prime Minister, answering a question put by the hon. member for Calgary North, repeated that it is the intention of the government to keep its election promises during the course of this parliament, will the Prime Minister say, in view of his complete about face on wage and price controls, if he will now make a similar about face with respect to the $3 billion worth of election promises he made in his desperate bid for re-election just one year ago?

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF BAGGAGE HANDLING METHODS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of Transport is put on behalf of the thousands of beleaguered passengers who now travel on that once great airline, Air Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: In so far as Air Canada has managed to lose my bags on six occasions—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, again, I ask this question on behalf of thousands of beleaguered passengers. Since my own bags have been lost on six occasions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi would contribute to order if he would put his question.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, would the minister investigate the baggage handling procedures of Air Canada? I largely suspect that the problem takes place in the now famous terminals in Toronto. In my case this has happened six times since I embarked on a certain campaign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret to see the hon. member reach for the support of those members of his party who go on attacking Air Canada and try to follow that course of action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Air Canada is a great airline, the great Canadian airline, and will continue to remain so. Would the hon. member inform me if the suitcases he lost are wee, little suitcases—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: —or medium sized suitcases? I assure the hon. member that Air Canada is much concerned about lost luggage, has been watching the figures and improving them regularly. I have been much impressed with the improvement in the figures—

Mr. Crouse: But you don't go by Air Canada. You use the Jetstar.

Mr. Lang: In one sense, considering the few bags now being lost, I am glad that so much of the loss is concentrated with the hon. member.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PROPOSAL TO TRANSFER UNUSED FUNDS TO PROJECTS IN AREAS OF NEED

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and I would like to come back to the question asked yesterday of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) concerning the LIP program.

Would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration agree, against the recommendation of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, to transfer the remaining LIP funds in the prosperous, rich and affluent constituencies of the west coast to the constituencies of the Atlantic region, which have a very high unemployment rate this winter and where Canadians want to work if they are given the opportunity?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the funds allocated to this excellent program are, on occasions, not absorbed by individual constituencies. According to standard procedure, each year they are re-allocated in the final stages, to those constituencies with high rates of unemployment which are not concentrated, of course, in the east but are found throughout the country.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REASON FOR RENTING STORE FOR OFFICE SUPPLIES IN GALLERIE DES BOUTIQUES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the government is asking Canadians to show restraint in order to restore the health of the economy, is the minister aware that the Department of Supply and Services is renting a store in the Gallerie des Boutiques, one of the most expensive and exclusive shopping malls in Ottawa, and employing two clerks to man the store which carries office supplies and has a large sign saying that the goods in the store are not for sale to the general public but will be sold only to government departments? If so, does the minister feel that the spending of government funds on the renting of a store in this expensive shopping centre, and staffing it with two clerks, is a good example to set when the government is asking the working people of Canada to show restraint?

LASSA FEVER—POSSIBILITY OF INTERFERENCE WITH REGULATIONS BY WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION—EFFECTIVENESS OF QUARANTINE MEASURES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and is a further follow-up question on Lassa fever, mentioned on page 9891 of Hansard. The question deals with the distinct possibilities of the fever being transmitted to Canadian Olympic personnel by athletes coming from areas where the disease is endemic. Does the minister anticipate any interference from the World Health Organization on which there are athlete representatives from affected countries? Also, will the minister's quarantine bill effectively eliminate any risk of this disease hitting Canada, with disastrous results?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week in the House, I intend to propose during the forthcoming session a number of changes to the Quarantine Act. Under these changes, a quarantine officer would be authorized, with the minister's approval, to detain any person who is really suffering from a contagious disease. This would include both the incubation and contagious periods. There is no such provision in the current act, and we feel that such an addition would provide quarantine officers with the necessary powers to prevent any individual suffering from a disease similar to that mentioned by the hon. member from entering Canada. As to the first part of the question concerning the World Health Organization, I do not foresee any interference from this organization in this area.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ASSISTANCE WITH HIGHWAY AND BRIDGE BUILDING PROGRAMS IN NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Following the meeting yesterday between the minister and Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, which resulted in seven news releases today disclosing among other things some helpful and badly needed assistance with highway construction in northeastern New Brunswick and the phaseout of New Start and Multiplex, did the minister discuss with the premier apparent differences over the highway and bridge building proposals by the province which the premier referred to in his legislature and, in particular, is the minister considering a comprehensive five-year program of assistance with highways and bridges in all parts of the province?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly draw the minister's attention to this when he returns. He can undoubtedly give a reply in detail.

ALLEGED SLOWNESS IN IMPLEMENTING POLICY IN NOVA SCOTIA

Has the minister discussed with the Minister without Portfolio the restrictions which that minister is reported to have placed on his cooperation with the RCMP and does the Solicitor General consider these restrictions in keeping with the kind of cooperation the force might rightfully expect from a Privy Councillor?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not make public my discussions with cabinet ministers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary. Since the Minister without Portfolio saw fit in an interview published today to again state his feelings with regard to an alleged press leak by the RCMP, can the Solicitor General tell us whether his colleague has turned over to him any evidence whatsoever to support those feelings? Has the situation changed from the last time?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. If so, do they have the name of the administrator and when will the appointment be made? Also, can the Prime Minister undertake that it will not be a civil servant who will be subject to possible influence by the government in light of the very difficult position the administrator will have?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate these representations. Perhaps the hon. member could give me a list of the people who he thinks

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF LIMITATION ON CHEESE IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to Canada's import quota on cheese. In light of the indication which the Minister of Agriculture made at the Agriculture Outlook Conference yesterday that he would not allow foreign cheese imports to harm Canadian cheese production, is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in a position today or will he be in a position in the near future to make an announcement on this very important and pressing matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give an actual date because, as the hon. member will know, the discussions are quite complex and are still going on, merely interdepartmentally but in terms of the GATT provision and related international questions. I can assure the hon. member it is being given urgent consideration at the present time. An announcement will be made as quickly as possible with regard to the quota for 1976.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he supports the tightening of a quota on foreign cheese imports which is apparently supported by the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, my views on the matter will become known at the time the quota is announced.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Statistics report that nine-tenths of the young Quebecers who joined the work force last year are bound to become unemployed; one might as well say that they joined the unemployed force. Taking into account the fact the Minister of Transport has been studying, for a long time now, the possibility of creating a Canadian high seas merchant marine and the fact that said project is finally only sailing on a sea of studies, while Canadian shipowners are forced to fly foreign flags, can the minister tell the House whether that great Canadian dream is about to become reality?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the maritime code bill, which is now before a House committee, makes a first step in the direction of ensuring more use of Canadian vessels. The whole question of a Canadian merchant marine and greater use of Canadian ships and Canadian labour on those ships is the subject of an ongoing interdepartmental committee study. It will be some time before the results of that emerge in the form of policy.

POST OFFICE

RANKIN INLET—REQUEST FOR RECLASSIFICATION OF OFFICE AND IMPROVED SERVICE

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General and follows one I asked several days ago about postal service at Rankin Inlet, Northwest Territories. It has come to my attention that incoming mail is being distributed by a volunteer but this person cannot send mail out or provide any other services such as money orders, COD's and so on. In light of this information, will the minister send a postmaster to Rankin Inlet to provide adequate service to this community before the Christmas rush is over? Also, will he undertake to reclassify the Rankin Inlet post office so that adequate money will be provided to pay for the space and salaries required?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am unavailable for the trip, but I will certainly send the unimaginative civil servant who is responsible for the foul-up to there very shortly, preferably between Christmas and New Year's.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF REGULATIONS TO BOARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question with regard to the regulations under the anti-inflation act. He has not given them to the House or the provinces. Has he made a copy available to the Anti-Inflation Board? If so, is this what made it necessary for the chairman to leave the country for awhile?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the regulations were of course discussed during preparation with various officials of the government, including the Anti-Inflation Board.

COMBINES

PROPOSED INQUIRY BY BRYCE COMMISSION INTO FORMATION OF MONOPOLIES FOR SALE OF BREWERY GRAIN

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Yesterday, as reported by Hansard at page 10,044, I put a question to his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, concerning the skyrocketing prices of secondary cattle feed, brewery grain in particular. As these unexpected increases may be caused by the advent of monopolies in the brewery grain business, would he be willing to order the required inquiry or, if need be, to put the matter to the Bryce Commission, and make sure that a monopoly is not now in the process of being created or, if one already exists, that it be dissolved?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the hon. member that the Bryce Commission was not set up to deal with such problems. On the other hand, the director of combines investigations will certainly be advised of the comments of the hon. member. In addition, I should like to remind the hon. member that every time the director deems an investigation necessary, he orders one, but the matter is kept confidential.

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY IF DEPARTMENT WILL PURCHASE ADVERTISING IN "LE JOUR"

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

We saw yesterday in the Montreal daily Le Jour excellent publicity for and an excellent photo of the Postmaster General who was handing over a commemorative plaque to the editor for his achievement in journalism. Since the minister has also outlined Mr. Michaud's outstanding achievement in establishing and maintaining a new newspaper in North America, I would like to ask the minister whether after having himself benefitted from this publicity he intends to recommend that his department pay for publicity in this newspaper?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Well, Mr. Speaker, I did participate in the awards given by the Montreal press club, and I did congratulate Mr. Michaud on his ability to create a new newspaper. I happen to believe that our system of federalism permits the ultimate freedom of speech and permits the creation of newspapers like Le Jour. I also made the point, however, that as a federalist I did not intend to finance the movement of the separatists through advertising by our department. If the hon. gentleman finds himself more compatible reading that newspaper than others, that is up to him. It is a very free country.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED EXCESSIVE CHARGES BY AIR CANADA AND EASTERN PROVINCIAL IN NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the excessive passenger fares being charged by Eastern Provincial Airways and Air Canada compared to other airlines in New Brunswick, would the minister kindly investigate the reason for the overcharge to passengers using the airport facilities at Charlo airport in New Brunswick serving northern New Brunswick and the Gaspé coast? Would the minister also ask the Canadian Transport Commission to investigate these unfair rates charged out of Charlo, New Brunswick?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for bringing this problem to my attention. It does seem peculiar to see these differences in rates between the single airline total fare and the combination of two airlines, but I will be glad to investigate the matter and report again in due course.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—APPLICATION TO PARTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. After the minister's astute remarks in this House yesterday, I am convinced that he must be aware that the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association feels that the auto pact offers them insufficient coverage and has said that "the safeguards incorporated into the auto pact, such as Canadian value added and production to sales ratio have failed", would the minister please explain how he could say that the auto pact covers parts for all practical purposes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is the kind of answer that I can give in a few words. I have said that so far as the auto pact is concerned there was, of course, inclusion of auto parts, but I am aware, as the hon. member is, that the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association has been making representations. I have listened to them and I will continue my discussions with them, and if there are to be changes in the auto pact we will try to accommodate them as best we can. Obviously, at the moment I cannot go beyond that.

AIR TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ALLEGED COMMITMENT TO ASSIST IN PROVIDING PRAIRIE AIR SERVICE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the minister has now shot down Skywest and the Manitoba and Saskatchewan governments have decided to abandon the company, does the commitment of the Prime Minister that the federal government will assist in providing prairie air service still stand?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be clear to the hon. member that I did not shoot down Skywest but that rather Mr. Evans pulled the plug on the operation by withdrawing in the face of a request for further information. We have stood ready at all times to purchase two aircraft and make them available to a carrier. However, we insisted that it be a carrier with a licence, and I think that is a reasonable proposition. We are still in the position of trying to pursue with Manitoba and Saskatchewan the possibility of providing service. I have had some discussions with the premier of Manitoba about this and he has indicated some willingness to support financially a venture in which the carrier provides a service to the communities of Brandon, Dauphin, Yorkton, between Saskatoon and Winnipeg, and we will be pursuing that question.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED TAX SECURITY AT TERMINALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it has to do with lax security at Air Canada terminals in the United States and Canada. Is the minister aware of the complaint by the Gloucester police chief of lack of co-operation on the part of Air Canada to inform investigative authorities of valuable gold shipments passing through the terminal of Air Canada at Uplands and, if not, will he seek the reason from Air Canada and inform this House as soon as possible? Also, would the minister investigate the recent theft of a box of diamonds from Air Canada flight No. 745 from Kennedy airport to Montreal, as authorities are now questioning Air Canada employees in New York in regard to the missing diamonds?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was aware of the earlier complaint on the part of the chief of police. I have no doubt that that matter is being discussed. I have also full confidence that the second issue will be investigated in the ordinary course and that there will be no need for any additional investigation on my part.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO AID TEXTILE AND FOOTWEAR INDUSTRIES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Considering that the textile industry in Canada has really been in a difficult situation for several years and that the footwear industry has now the same difficulties as many companies must dismiss more than 80 per cent of their staff, will the minister have the opportunity in the next Speech from the Throne to announce a policy which will rescue these industries which represent now thousands of jobs in the Eastern Townships?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would doubt very much if there would be anything by way of, as the hon. member puts it, something to include in the throne speech on this subject. There is a comparatively new policy with regard to both textiles and the footwear industry which has been in place now for something like a couple of years and we are continuing to examine it. A number of initiatives have been taken under it, but I believe it is generally agreed that the strategy that has been adopted is the most appropriate one in the circumstances. We will continue to look at the situation as various new developments occur, but that policy is the one that I anticipate we will continue to follow.

IMMIGRATION

REASON FOR DELAY IN DEPORTING ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister inform the House whether it has been the decision of the department to allow Roosevelt Douglas, a militant convicted and jailed for his part in the Sir George Williams University riot six years ago, to remain in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Douglas was ordered deported some time ago.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Andras: Roosevelt Douglas. He most certainly does not come from Nanaimo-Cowichan and those islands! His deportation order was appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board. The appeal was rejected. He is under a deportation order. He has made several appeals to the Federal Court and to the Supreme Court. There is now another appeal before a judicial body of this country, and until that appeal is disposed of we cannot move to implement the deportation order.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LOSS OF QUANTITY THROUGH CONVERSION FROM POUNDS TO GRAMS BUT SAME SALE PRICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Several days ago I forwarded to the minister containers showing a change from pounds to grams, which were 1.2 pounds less in the conversion from pounds to grams. However, the same price was charged by the retail outlet. I wonder whether the minister has investigated the matter and whether other cases have been brought to his attention where less product is available at the same price in the conversion from pounds to the metric system? I would also like to congratulate my constituency review board which brought this to my attention, a group composed of volunteers.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member who sent to my office these exhibits which have been submitted to the officials of my department for inquiry. I can assure him and the other hon. members, that I will inform him of the new developments in this matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JELINEK—ALLEGED DISPARAGING REMARKS BY MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on a question of privilege.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, when the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) raised a question of privilege, you told the House that you would give me the opportunity to express my views before making any decision on the matter.

I only wish to say that last Monday, when the hon. member asked his question, he denounced fraudulent practices used in the financing of Olympic coins. This severe denunciation is found at page 10,002 of Hansard. In answer to his question, I said, as recorded on page 10,000:

> On the other hand, if the hon. member has elements of proof or other pertinent information to convey, I shall be pleased to transmit them to the director of inquiries.

But, two days after those remarks I checked with my office before coming to the House at two o'clock and the hon. member had not sent me those elements of proof nor had he sent them to my staff. This leads me to say that the hon. member seems more interested in his own question than in the answer given and the purpose of his questions has always puzzled me: they stem either from malice or from insignificance. The hon. member said yesterday that he was not trying to be malicious. Having no reason to doubt his word, I must therefore conclude that the second alternative is right.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As indicated yesterday, the role of the Chair in deciding on this difference between two members of the House has been made a great deal easier by virtue of the fact that the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), in raising the question of privilege, originally did not add to it a motion which might seek any action on the part of the Chair. In many cases the chances are that the decision would have been the same, and that is that it is a matter of difference and debate between two members and cannot be classified as a question of privilege.

ORDER OF BUSINESS BEFORE CHRISTMAS RECESS

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of the business of the House for tomorrow. I am not asking the usual Thursday question; I know that today is Wednesday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of reports we are getting from outside the House that an important statement may be made tomorrow, can we be told whether it will be on statements at two o'clock, or is it to be at eight o'clock; and in any case, do any special House arrangements have to be made for it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, although it is Wednesday it might be useful if I were also, and in addition to answering the specific question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to give an indication of the government's program for the period before the adjournment. The government wishes to dispose of the final stages of the bill now under discussion at the report stage, Bill C-69, and then Bill C-77 and Bill C-52. I will also be putting down an adjournment motion which will recommend that we resume the session on January 26.

On resuming the session, the government will call the remainder of the sessional program, including Bill C-58. I mention that first because I want to emphasize that this bill continues to have the full commitment of the government.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Sharp: We will also be calling, specifically, among a number of bills, C-41, C-20, C-68, C-71 and C-61, and if the Minister of Justice decides he wants to proceed with Bill C-72, that might also be part of our program. It was not clear whether the bill was put down at this point for first reading and comment, to be then reintroduced, but I will be consulting the Minister of Justice to see whether he wishes to continue with Bill C-72 during the present session.

Mr. Speaker, to come to the specific question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, tomorrow I intend, on motions, to seek the agreement of the House to revert to statements and the tabling of documents by ministers at eight o'clock for the purpose of a statement to be made by the President of the Treasury Board on economies in the government, and for the Minister of Finance to table the regulations under the anti-inflation act.

Mr. Stanfield: Why does that have to be done tomorrow night?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council has answered more than I asked and had dealt with the business for the remainder of the session, may I ask, very seriously and very earnestly, whether the business between now and the end of the session will include a bill to implement the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs having to do with former prisoners of war?

An hon. Member: Say yes.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I suppose if we did not adjourn for a very long time and sat during Christmas and New Year's, that would not be impossible. It was not my intention to call such a bill, if one were prepared, before we adjourned for Christmas.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say that I asked whether we could be assured of having that bill before the end of the session.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader whether he can give us some explanation as to why we must be asked to give special leave for the tabling of these regulations tomorrow night. Why have they not been tabled already, and why do they have to be tabled in the evening? Is it because they can't stand the light of day?

Mr. Sharp: The reason is very simple, Mr. Speaker: these regulations could have an effect upon the stock market.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I should like to ask the government House leader a question in respect of Bill C-58. I do so on behalf of the people who are to be directly affected by this bill, since it was to become operative on January 1, which obviously cannot be the case now. May I ask whether for all intents and purposes the bill will be considered a tax bill and will become operative as of January 1 regardless of whether or not parliament has dealt with it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is a tax bill and the same principles will apply to it as to any other bill brought forward in this way. The date January 1 is in the bill, and that is the intention of the government. That is why I made it very clear by saying we would continue with this bill and no one should be under any misapprehension about our intentions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HNATYSHYN—OBLIGATION OF MINISTERS TO ANSWER ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to seek your direction in respect of a matter that has occurred from time to time and to which I have alluded on previous occasions. This related to the whole proposition during the question period of the obligation of ministers to answer questions, particularly when the obligation is by virtue of an undertaking by a minister to give an answer.

The point I raise is simply this. Your Honour has made it quite clear on previous occasions that a minister is not necessarily obliged to answer questions, and I suppose that is the prerogative of those on the treasury benches, under the rules; but when a minister undertakes to make an answer, it seems to me that he or she abuses the privileges of the House if in fact the answer is not forthcoming within a reasonable period of time, preferably on the floor of this House as opposed to some form of private communication. It has been pointed out to me very forcefully by colleagues that the idea of the question period is not to receive a written letter in response to a question; that is not the reason we raise these questions on the floor of the House. We expect, and deserve, an answer in the House.

I would ask Your Honour to indicate, by way of guidance, whether when a minister undertakes to give an answer there is a firm obligation, and whether if there is an obligation and a failure to so comply with the undertaking, it would constitute an abuse of the privileges of this House and a reflection on the rights of individual members, particularly those of us in the opposition who attempt in our own way to keep the government within bounds of reasonable action.

● (1510)

Mr. Lang: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to observe, since it implicates ministers, that there is some difficulty in ministers rising during the question period to give answers to previous questions, because of disorder that is created in the question period. Furthermore, I should like to observe, in relation to the very interesting comment by the hon. member, my friend from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that the question period is designed to get these kind of answers on the floor of the House. I would suggest to him that if he would adapt the practice, that is shared by only a few of his colleagues, of giving notice to ministers about questions, he would find that answers could be given much more often on the floor of the House without a delay, therefore, causing confusion at a later date. That kind of habit and practice would be very much welcomed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has raised a point of order that has been raised previously. It touches on a difficulty with our oral question period. Often a question is asked to which the minister really is not expected to have the answer in detail on the day in question, and the minister quite frequently makes the answer that not having the information available to him, he will seek the answer and bring it to the attention of the House at a later time. In that situation I follow the practice of not allowing supplementaries on such occasions because, presumably, on a later occasion the matter will be followed up by a further answer and it is on that later occasion the hon. member will want to have the opportunity for supplementary questions.

However, it also raises the problem, when that undertaking has been given, that there does not seem to be a convenient opportunity on subsequent question periods for ministers to rise and, perhaps, in the course of answering one question to one member, direct another answer to another member. That tends to pre-empt any priorities which I may have been trying to set in recognizing members. In any case, it is not a very satisfactory resolution of the problem. The fact of the matter is that there really is no easy resolution of this particular problem except perhaps to facilitate this kind of thing in the first instance by notice, as has been referred to by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), or in the alternative, after a period has elapsed for the hon. member who put the question originally to seek the floor a second time, to put the minister on the spot, as it were, and say, "having given the undertaking a few days ago to answer the question, does the minister have the information and would he bring it forward?" Up to this time there does not seem to have been any better resolution than that, and after reflection on occasions on which the point has been raised, frankly I cannot say I am aware of anything I could suggest. If hon. members have any suggestions for improving that procedure, I would be pleased to receive them.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to draw to the attention of the House an error in the proceedings as printed in yesterday's Hansard in respect of the vote of members on division No. 91. I am not shown as having voted on that division. I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that I voted for the motion. It seems that the Table has made an error between myself and my seatmate, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I should like the record to show that I voted yea on the division on motion No. 91.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to embarrass the hon. member, but I listened to his point of order with great care because it is so unusual. My attention was drawn to the location of the hon. member in the House. If the Chair made a mistake, it was because the hon. member was moving in his seat, or doing something, because I had the distinct impression that the hon. member was on his feet. Perhaps the hon. member was moving, but I did see him. He may have been squirming, or doing something. This was observed by some of my colleagues around me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) has raised a legitimate point of order. I recall very distinctly that he not only was on his feet to cast his vote in favour of this particular motion but, furthermore, the vote was duly noted by the officials at the Table. If a mistake was made in Hansard, it was simply a technical error which I am sure will be corrected.

REFUGEE HOUSING PROJECT IN VIETNAM

Question No. 3,219—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the contracts for consulting services and construction for the Refugee Housing Project in Vietnam in 1968 and 1969?

2. (a) Who were the (i) consultants invited to submit a proposal (ii) contractors invited to submit a bid (b) who was the successful bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract for the project and, if not, for what reason?

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. A contract for consulting services was not awarded. The criterion used to select the company for the construction contract for this project was the ability to construct facilities for displaced Vietnamese on an emergency basis, at the best possible price. This was financed under grant, to the Government of South Vietnam. The selection of the company was made by the SSEA, on advice from CIDA who maintained a permanent engineering adviser in Vietnam at the time.

2. a) (i) Not applicable as there was no consultant involved in this project and, therefore, no proposal call. (ii) The contract was awarded to Engbuild Builders International (later Victoria Builders International).

3. To the best of our knowledge, the lowest bidder was successful. To confirm this would require searching many documents at inordinate cost and length of time.

4. CIDA believes the costs were within the estimates. To confirm this would require searching many documents at inordinate cost and length of time.

5. Mr. D. Veitch who was CIDA's engineering representative in Vietnam at the time, was concerned with this project among others. He was present at the job site on continuous inspection. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest, and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

6. Canadians were not employed at the construction site. As stated above, Mr. Veitch supervised the work of the contractors. Only Canadian citizens or landed immigrants may be employed on CIDA projects under normal circumstances. There is, however, no record of the number employed, as this information is not required for purposes of payment. Payments are made relative to the specific performance within the scope of work and the payment budget or, according to approved rates by discipline and total time worked, depending on the contract. The actual number of individuals employed is the prerogative of the consultant or contractor.

ÉCOLE POLYTECHNIQUE DE THIÈS PROJECT IN SENEGAL

Question No. 3,220—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the contracts for consulting services and construction for the École Polytechnique de Thiès Project in Senegal in 1973?

2. (a) Who were the (i) consultants invited to submit a proposal (ii) contractors invited to submit a bid (b) who was the successful bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract for the project and, if not, for what reason?

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. There was no construction or consulting services contract awarded for this project in 1973. However, a technical assistance contract was awarded to la Corporation de l'École polytechnique de Montréal to take over the educational responsibility and administration of the school. L'École polytechnique de Montréal, as a technically-oriented university was particularly competent in this field. It also carried out the feasibility study on this project and was therefore the logical choice for the major contract. This is normal practice in selecting a university to fulfil a contract since we do not invite competitive bids in the case of universities.

2. (a) (i) (ii) No proposals or bids were invited. (b) As mentioned, bids have not been called.

3. As mentioned, bids have not been called.

4. As mentioned, no contract for construction has been awarded.

5. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest, and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

6. Only Canadian citizens or landed immigrants may be employed on CIDA projects under normal circumstances. There is, however, no record of the number employed, as this information is not required for purposes of payment. Payments are made relative to the specific performance within the scope of work and the payment budget or, according to approved rates by discipline and total time worked, depending on the contract. The actual number of individuals employed is the prerogative of the consultant or contractor.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

FIELD TRAINING AND DEMONSTRATION CENTRE PROJECT IN VIETNAM

Question No. 3,221—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the contracts for consulting services and construction for the Field Training and Demonstration Centre Project in Vietnam in 1972?

2. (a) Who were the (i) consultants invited to submit a proposal (ii) contractors invited to submit a bid (b) who was the successful bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract for the project and, if not, for what reason?

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No consultant contract was awarded for this project. The criterion used to award the contract for construction was the lowest bid received.

2. (a) (i) No consultant contract was awarded; therefore, there was no proposal call for consulting services. (ii) Victoria Builders International AJN Construction Limited. (b) Victoria Builders International.

3. Yes.

4. Because additional work was required and carried out under CIDA financing, eventual costs of construction were $286,000 as versus an original contract amount of $250,140.

5. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest, and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

6. Under normal circumstances only Canadian citizens, landed immigrants or nationals of the recipient country would be employed on CIDA projects. To the best of our knowledge the only Canadians employed directly on this project was the Site Manager, and two engineers who carried out site inspections. There is, however, no record of the number employed, as this information is not required for purposes of payment. Payments are made relative to the specific performance within the scope of work and the payment budget or, according to approved rates by discipline and total time worked, depending on the contract. The actual number of individuals employed is the prerogative of the consultant or contractor.

ÉCOLE NATIONALE DE PÊCHE PROJECT IN ALGERIA

Question No. 3,222—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the contracts for consulting services and construction for the École Nationale de Pêche Project in Algeria in 1973?

2. (a) Who were the (i) consultants invited to submit a proposal (ii) contractors invited to submit a bid (b) who was the successful bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract for the project and, if not, for what reason?

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. A list of companies was prepared on the basis of competence and normal professional standards from all those registered with CIDA. The criteria for selection were professional qualifications, relevant and related past experience, availability of expertise, ability to undertake the work, overseas experience and language requirements. The list of five companies was presented to the SSEA with CIDA's recommendations for his approval. The construction contract was not awarded by CIDA; the criteria for selection are, therefore, not on record.

2. (a) (i) Within the financial limits of the project, no proposal call was required. The firm of Demontigny, Dion, Métivier, Gagnon was selected. (ii) Not applicable to this project as the construction contract was not awarded or financed by CIDA. (b) Not applicable to this project as the construction contract was not awarded or financed by CIDA.

3. Not applicable to this project as the construction contract was not awarded or financed by CIDA.

4. Not applicable as the cost of construction was not paid from CIDA's funds; a comparison of actual versus contracted cost of construction is, therefore, not on record.

5. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest, and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. As for consulting services, a list of companies was prepared on the basis of competence and normal professional standards from all those registered with CIDA. The criteria for selection were professional qualifications, relevant and related past experience, availability of expertise, ability to undertake the work, overseas experience and language requirements. The list of five companies was presented to the SSEA with CIDA's recommendations for his approval. The construction contract was awarded on the basis of the lowest qualified bid.

2. (a)(i) Within the financial limits of the project, no proposal call was required. The firm of Leslie Fairn was selected. (ii) The contractors invited to bid on the construction contract were: Leonard L. Chang, W. V. Lynch, Abraham, Henriques & Joy, Marley & Plant, Framhill Construction Co. Ltd., Mais & Sant, McGregor & Levy, Paul Johnson Construction; (b) The successful bidder was Marley & Plant.

3. Yes.

4. The construction cost were below the budget.

5. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest, and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

6. Only Canadian citizens or landed immigrants may be employed on CIDA projects under normal circumstances. There is, however, no record or the number employed, as this information is not required for purposes of payment. Payments are made relative to the specific performance within the scope of work and the payment budget or, according to approved rates by discipline and total time worked, depending on the contract. The actual number of individuals employed is the prerogative of the consultant or contractor.

SHASHE/SELEBI-PIKWE POWER STATION PROJECT IN BOTSWANA

Question No. 3,224—Mr. Paproski:

1. What criteria were used to award the contracts for consulting services and construction for the Shashe/Selebi-Pikwe Power Station Project in Botswana in 1972?

2. (a) Who were the (i) consultants invited to submit a proposal (ii) contractors invited to submit a bid (b) who was the successful bidder?

3. Was the low bidder awarded the contract for the project and, if not, for what reason?

4. Did the cost of construction exceed the contracted amount and, if so, for what reason?

5. Which members from CIDA and/or the Department of External Affairs visited the job site and were their trips charged to the project?

6. How many Canadians were employed on the project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. All consulting services were financed by the IBRD; CIDA financed the construction contract and the equipment. The consulting services were provided by the British firm of Sir Alexander Gibb & Partners, who sub-contracted electrical and mechanical systems to the British firm of Merz & McLellan. The IBRD also financed the services of Shawinigan Engineering who were selected by the British firms to interpret the specifications, and expedite and purchase the Canadian equipment. CIDA was not directly involved in the selection process for the consulting services and did not establish the criteria for selection. The selection criterion for the construction contract was the lowest qualified bidder.

2. (a)(i) As mentioned consulting services were financed by the IBRD. CIDA was not involved in the issue or evaluation of the proposals for consulting services and as a result has not maintained a record of those asked to propose. (ii) The contractors invited to bid on the major construction and installation contract were as follows: 1. Canadian Comstock; 2. Foundation Company of Canada; 3. CANA Construction Limited; 4. Commonwealth Construction Limited; 5. CANRON Limited. Many suppliers were invited to bid on the remaining 16 supply contracts. The lists of those eligible were prepared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and CIDA and submitted to Merz and McLellan. (b) Canadian Comstock was the successful bidder on the major installation contract. The following firms were successful bidders on the remaining 16 supply contracts: 1. Canadian General Electric; 2. CANRON Limited; 3. Babcock Wilcox Limited; 4. F.P.E. Pioneer Electric; 5. Jeffrey Manufacturing Company Limited; 6. Canadian Overhead Handling; 7. Canadian International Comstock; 8. Wallace Tiernan Limited; 9. Bédard Girard Limited; 10. Canadian Westinghouse International; 11. Bingham Pump Limited; 12. CHECO Engineering; 13. Ruston Diesel Limited; 14. Bédard Girard Limited; 15. Degremont Canada Limited; 16. Marley Canadian Limited.

3. Two bids were received for the major construction and installation contract. They were not comparable as to price because the conditions laid down by one of the bidders differed significantly from the other. In view of the fact that this bidder was not prepared to modify these conditions it was ruled unresponsive and negotiations proceeded with the remaining bidder, Canadian Comstock, and the amount of the bid reduced significantly. The contract was awarded to Canadian Comstock. For the remaining 16 supply contracts only one was not awarded to the lowest bidder, because the materials were not up to the standard required for the project.

4. The final cost of the work will exceed the forecast estimate which was based on the assumption that there would be no changes in the specifications or time frame. The extra costs over the original estimates were a result of modifications and extensions to the work over the life of the contract, and the interpretation and changes which resulted from the use of British design.

5. Records of visits or travel by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not maintained by project as travel is related to overall programs involving several specific areas of interest and records are normally kept on this basis. Travel costs by CIDA and/or Department of External Affairs members are not charged to project funds.

6. Only Canadian citizens or landed immigrants may be employed on CIDA projects under normal circumstances. There is, however, no record of the number employed, as this information is not required for purposes of payment. Payments are made relative to the specific performance within the scope of work and the payment budget or, according to approved rates by discipline and total time worked, depending on the contract. The actual number of individuals employed is the prerogative of the consultant or contractor.

Motion for Papers

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PETITION PROTESTING CONSTRUCTION OF U.S. NUCLEAR BASE NEAR VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this afternoon to present a petition to the House representing one signed by some 10,500 Canadian citizens, protesting the construction of the Trident nuclear base some 60 miles south of the city of Vancouver. In essence, the petition seeks action from this House to protest the lack of consultation by the United States in respect of the construction of the base, and also to protest the dangerous escalation of the arms race this base represents in having a first-strike capacity. Further, it follows the decision of the city of Vancouver to declare November 23-29 as Trident Concern Week in that area.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the letters the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has just tabled, I wonder if the government House leader would agree that these be printed today as an appendix to today's Hansard, because of the importance of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been a request that the documents tabled by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) be printed as part of Hansard. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: This can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. There is not unanimous consent.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 16, 1975, consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and of motions Nos. 11 and 12 of the hon. members for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, this is to supplement some of my comments I made last night. I know that we are about to adopt this bill, which appears most important to us on this side of the House.

Last night I took the opportunity to make a last appeal to all my colleagues of this House, considering the refusal by the government to make any change to its original proposition. I still think it is my duty to reiterate this representation today and to urge the majority of hon. members to prevail upon the minister to consider the suggestions which have already been made in this House. I know that many statistical and evaluation data have been given. We are also aware of the fact that, in order to bring about the necessary cuts in the federal government budget, we are presenting legislation which seems unfair to us. I contend that the injustices which we spotted in this bill have also been recognized not only by hon. members of the opposition parties but also by some government members as well.

Therefore, for the sake of curtailing expenditures, the government is bringing forward legislation which provides for increased contributions, for decreased benefits and, what affects us most, for the disentitlement to unemployment benefits of people aged 65. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is one hon. member in this House who would not acknowledge the applications which are made in our constituencies by those senior citizens who wish to withdraw from the labour market but would like to keep receiving the benefits the Canadian Parliament had granted them. To the risk of repeating myself, Mr. Speaker, I would like, before the bill is adopted, to appeal to the compassion of the government which has been, hitherto, insensitive. Last night I mentioned how cruel it was of the government to deny those people the benefits they are entitled to. I would not like to have to infer that this government is heartless, Mr. Speaker, when it refuses to heed the pleas and representations made in the House by several hon. members and not only by my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, we are still hoping that at the last moment the minister will consider improving this bill to make it acceptable not only to one party, but to Parliament as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that many representations have been made to all hon. members. I am also convinced that the government members would have liked the minister to be more attentive to representations made in committee at second reading or now in the House. I hope that we shall be able to take a few more minutes to make the minister understand our representations and the need to improve this bill so that it may meet the needs of the people involved. If it is a question of appealing to common sense, Mr. Speaker, I would like to do so. I truly wonder what has been happening since the last election, for instance, since all the legislation that has been introduced has only increased the difficulties facing Canadians.

We know very well, Mr. Speaker, that tomorrow new cuts will be announced and we can already guess that the less favoured people will have to suffer the burden of this legislation. Proposals are now before the House which will cause hardship for certain people who do not deserve it. As concerns the people aged 65 and over, who deserve the respect of parliamentarians, who have worked for 40 or 45 years, who have paid unemployment insurance for 30 years or more, the bill now before the House is the gift that the government wants to give them just before the Holiday Season to thank them.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would like my comments to be brief. I hope that the minister will realize the importance of this legislation, the hardship that it brings to this group of people, the difficulties that it will cause. We therefore hope that he will amend the legislation and act like someone who seems to understand the difficulties facing Canadians today.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we shall have good news for these people. There could not be any greater gift for these unfortunate people before the Holiday Season than to see the government act in their favour. It seems to me that the minister cannot be unmoved by the appeal I am making on their behalf.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing this matter with my colleagues who, as I indicated, can speak on this subject with impartiality. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are not too many people who can discuss this clause in the abstract, with disinterest, because most of us will eventually reach the age when this law will apply to us.

I was interested to hear the arguments put forward by UIC regarding this clause, and I was particularly interested in the difficulties which the UIC indicated had been apparent to them in the operation of that provision which affected people between the age of 65 and 70, a category of people between the ages 65 and 69 under this bill. Before this bill was put before the House there was a choice, when you reached the age of 70, whether or not one applied for the Canada Pension Plan or Quebec Pension Plan benefits. In my experience, this affected two classes of people: first, those who were being retired compulsorily, which included civil servants, railway people and some of the highly organized sectors of our labour force who in many instances were going to receive a pension. So with respect to those people, the provision applied in a totally different manner to the way it applied to others in the same category. Those who had to retire on a certain date had to decide whether they would retire or take work in another field.

Many of the people in this category had spent their lifetime in that occupation, and this meant a total change in their field of work. In many cases, in the community in which they had previously worked there was very little opportunity to change their work, so it meant they had to retire somewhere else. If that was the case, they undertook a totally different kind of work. It began with railroaders who had to retire at 65 years of age. They had worked hard all their lives. They were used to working. Many of them were highly skilled. Many of them had steam licences, and this was useful in other fields totally unrelated to the jobs they had been in, so quite often they took different work, for example, the maintenance of boilers. They used their steam certificates for employment in new jobs. If they did not, hon. members are well aware of the fact that they did not live very long. Within a year or two they would be dead anyway, so they either made a total transition to a new job or they were not around to be worried about any of the problems of retirement.

These people were totally unprepared for retirement. They had been working all kinds of hours, under all kinds of weather conditions, on a call-out basis. There was no opportunity to develop friendships or hobbies, so that when they retired they either had to find a totally new occupation where they could use their skills, or leave the work force. In many cases they did leave their particular areas and their occupations entirely, went to new occupations and continued to work, which was both a desire and a need. It was not necessarily a financial need, but it was a need.

In other fields where an automatic retirement was made mandatory—this affects the civil service—most people have been able to make that transition fairly easily. They have been in associations and involved in all kinds of outside activities. The nature of their work allowed them to have hobbies, and therefore they made the transition. Their pensions were sufficient to allow them to retire. In fact, many of them retired around this time of year because it gave them a considerable advantage which could not be had at any other time of year. This category of persons counted on retirement and were prepared to retire. This was the difference. Many methods were used to solve the problem of retirement of a compulsory nature, and certainly the establishment of the Canada Pension Plan and old age security was a very worth-while asset for them; but retirement could have been possible for many of them in any case.

There is another group of people retiring. However, before I leave the first category I should like to say that I disagree entirely with the officials of UIC, and particularly the chairman when he says that in this category 29 per cent wished to participate in the rate. I presume that is 29 per cent of that group, not of the whole number. I do not think there are that many in this group, but if 29 per cent had to continue in the labour force, that to quite an extent includes the group we are discussing. They are being taken in because the chairman goes on to say that the average rate for recipients in that category between age 65 and 69 amounted to $2,800 as the benefit which they would draw as opposed to other recipients. I presume that refers to the other categories, the other recipients who would draw $1,300.

That indicates that these people were able to obtain a very different kind of employment from those in the second category, and because of the pay-out I imagine this also indicates that they are receiving a higher rate of return. Let us consider civil servants who retired recently. The deputy minister of finance took an early retirement. Why? Because the job he was going to was to pay him much more than the government did. I understand that he left a $60,000 job for a $100,000 job.

Mr. Murta: Where did you hear that?

Mr. Peters: That was Sam Reisman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Simon.

Mr. Murta: Where did you hear that?

Mr. Peters: Those are the figures I heard. Others may feel that they are incorrect. I have known Mr. Reisman for a long time.

An hon. Member: If you know him so well, his name is Simon.

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not intimate with him.

An hon. Member: I hope not.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps some of my colleagues have been, or are. For the edification of the hon. member, I am not really connected with the George Weston chain, either. I would bow to his judgment in that respect because my understanding is only through hearsay. The understanding of the hon. member is probably factual because of his connection. However, I believe Mr. Reisman was a very valuable civil servant and that whatever job he now has he will do to the best of his ability. He is probably worth all the money he is being paid. The point I am making is that, while he may have reached the age of retirement, he will certainly be in a higher income bracket because of his knowledge, experience and ability. This is true of many people retiring from government service. I know many RCMP officers and many officers in the armed forces who went to other jobs paying considerably more than they were able to earn prior to age 65.

The chairman of the commission may be quite right in indicating that this group will be in a higher category than average. It may be that we should be able to provide a segregration in this group which would help the second group I wish to talk about. The second group is that between the age of 65 and 69—and in many cases over 70—who have worked all their lives at the bottom of the labour ladder. They have never made a great deal of money. They have never made much more than enough to get by on. Many of them reach this age and do not own a house and do not have any of the amenities of life, although they have raised their families and spent the money they earned to that end. This group will have to continue working, not for the mental or physical reasons I mentioned but because there is no alternative for them. They cannot live on the old age pension and the very small CPP they will receive, because their contributions were based on small wages which did not provide a reasonable pension.

In this category we find people who have difficulty finding employment. For the most part, we are not talking about people who are in good health. Almost everyone in this category who has worked hard for a long period of time has a physical disability of one kind or another. I agree with the chairman when he says that the jobs many of them are capable of performing in the community—are limited to night watchmen, flagmen on a highway, janitor in a public building. These are minimum wage jobs, available to people not in the best of health. They have difficulty in keeping jobs, however.

It is a fact that these jobs are of short duration, as are many of the menial tasks performed by our senior citizens who should, therefore, be offered the benefits of unemployment insurance. Many of these people desperately need employment; they need a guarantee against unemployment. The minister says we have increased the old age pension, the guaranteed income supplement, and we have added medical care and, under certain circumstances, have added the spouse who is under 65. All these things do not add up to very much money, and unless people are able to find continuous employment they will be dependent on the social security structure most of the time.

There was considerable difficulty last time when we integrated the two sections covering the same subject, but if the claimant were aware of all the facts he could decide whether to apply for the Canada pension and take the pay-out, or continue making contributions and forgo the payment of the Canada pension. I suggest it would be a mistake to change the act to make it mandatory for everyone over age 65 to apply for the Canada pension. That means that the person who has retired and gets into the three weeks' pay-out is finished as far as unemployment insurance coverage is concerned. That seems to me to be rather unfair.

Many people have made that kind of decision in relation to the Canada pension, and indeed many members of this House made that kind of decision in regard to their own pension plan, whether they wished to take advantage of the benefits that may accrue under one section or another. It is an individual decision. It should also apply to applicants for unemployment insurance if there has been a major attachment to the labour force. Of course, there will be many people who have never had an attachment to the labour force and at age 65 are faced with entering the labour force. I presume these people would not be entitled to start contributing because there will actually be nothing for them to fall back on. It would really be using the pyramid system: those who are paying would be supporting those who are drawing. The unemployment rate under this government is too high to make that possible or desirable.

Long before a pension plan was introduced in this House—which later became the Canada Pension Plan—I had asked for years for the establishment of a contributory pension plan that would be portable. We were in favour of a plan that would pay 50 per cent of wages upon retirement. With the rampant inflation there is in the country today, 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the best five years' earnings would be necessary. It just is not possible for the social security system to be used as a retirement plan.

It has been pointed out that some of our senior citizens still have families to support, so I should like the minister to reconsider this whole question of the mandatory cut-off at age 65. Some people are not in any difficulty when they reach age 65, but there is another group of people who are, and after a lifetime of struggle in the labour force—many of them started work at 14 years of age—it seems to me we could be a little more generous without abusing the principle of insurance for people in this age category.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motions proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I think the Unemployment Insurance Commission is making a mistake in trying to cut back on the cost of the plan by eliminating senior citizens. They say that these older people have a better pension plan than in the past, that the Canada pension is indexed, there is old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, and all these plans are new and better than they were years ago. I hope to persuade the more progressive members on the other side of the House, and some who are not so progressive—like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee)—that even someone who is getting the maximum benefits of the CPP, the OAS and GIS is getting only approximately $3,000 a year. This means that many people over 65 have to work whether they want to or not. The pension plan is not sufficient to provide them with the necessities of life.

I know many old age pensioners, my own family amongst them, where one spouse is a lot older than the other and therefore the pensioner has to work to make an income for his family. He cannot possibly retire on the basic OAS, GIS or CPP with a spouse under age 65. If he has to work, why should he not participate in the unemployment insurance scheme? He is more likely to be unemployed, if an industry is cutting back, than someone over 65, so why should he not be able to draw benefits from the unemployment insurance plan?

Some members have already pointed out that many old age pensioners have dependent children. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) mentioned that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) becomes an old age pensioner he will still have dependants, but obviously he is not going to live in poverty. The Prime Minister will not need to work to support his family once he reaches the old age pension age. But there are many people in my riding and across the country who are over 65 and still supporting kids in elementary school and high school. Their children are not even in university. Why should not such people, in a free, democratic society, be given the right to participate in the unemployment insurance plan like other workers? Once they reach the age of 65 they may need the protection of the plan much more than many younger workers.

In my riding an immigrant came from Czechoslovakia. He came to see me a couple of times to explain that he cannot draw the old age pension in this country until he has lived here for ten years. He told me that he does not possess many skills, that the kinds of jobs he finds lead to frequent periods of unemployment lasting two, three or even four months. He explained that he is not lazy, not trying to abuse anyone, not trying to rip off the system. He is in good health and willing to work beyond age 65 or 70 at a labouring job. He does not want hand-outs. He said that he will not qualify for a pension in this country until he reaches the age of 70 or has been here ten years. He thinks this is unfair. Since he is forced to work, he thinks it is only democratic, fair and liberal—in the small "l" sense—that he should qualify for unemployment insurance. Otherwise, what will he do? He must go to the welfare office to collect welfare, which he does not want to do because it offends his philosophy, sense of decency and pride. People like this will be left unprotected. In 1974, I believe, 170,000 members of the work force were between the age of 65 and 69. They did not take advantage of the unemployment insurance fund. I understand that only a representative number of those people collected UIC benefits last year. Why should we discriminate against those people on the ground that we want to save money for the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Hon. members fail to realize something else. Many of them say that we have in this country so many good, private contributory insurance plans with generous pay-out provisions that we can tighten the belt in other areas. Mr. Speaker, under 40 per cent of our people are covered by contributory pension plans. Many who do not have the advantage of such pension plans cannot afford to live on the old age pension or on the small pay-outs from the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore, they must work. If they must work, why cannot they be given the right available to all other Canadian workers to make contributions to the unemployment insurance plan and guard against the possibility of some day being laid off or losing their jobs?

The measure before the House discriminates against senior citizens, against those who laid the very foundations of this country and made it what it is. It will not bankrupt the government if it accepts the motion supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the genial hon. member for Hamilton West. If there is any meaning to those great Liberal phrases, "participatory democracy," the "just society" and involving all the people, I think hon. members opposite should be prepared to stand in this House and demonstrate their individuality and liberalism by voting in favour of the motion before us which seeks to remove the discrimination against the elderly.

I look across the way and note the presence of the hon. member from Toronto, a great Liberal, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), and several others. I know if the whips did not crack their whips so hard, those hon. members opposite would be disposed to vote in favour of the motion brought forward by the two hon. members alluded to. Hon. members opposite know that the Unemployment Insurance Act as proposed by the government will discriminate against many of their constituents. I see the hon. member for Vancouver East scratching his head. I suggest hon. members opposite can show Canadians they are Liberals with guts if they support our motion calling for the amending of these clauses being proposed by the minister. Since I am confident that this will happen, I shall resume my seat and expect hon. members to rise to indicate support for this sensible motion.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I assured the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) privately that I would rise in this part of the debate on this motion. He publicly tried to goad me into rising, but I assure him that I wanted to rise. However, I intend to be brief.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Because there is so little to say.

Mr. Andras: I do not in any way deny the sensitivity, concern and emotionalism surrounding this issue. It was evident particularly, too, with one other amendment introduced concerning the dependency rate. Many speeches were made on the subject in the six-day debate on second reading and, indeed, in the many sittings of the committee, as well as on motions 1 and 2 and on the one now before us. I cannot produce for hon. members new versions of my thinking on the subject, but I think it important to put my views on record in this part of the debate.

I say, frankly, that this motion, and the necessity for the present adjustment and rationalization of an insurance plan and the dependency rate amendment gives me and my colleagues no joy. We believe it is our responsibility to do this, but it falls heavily on us and we take no joy in it. We think it is necessary, particularly in these days when we note that even in this fortunate country our resources are not infinite, are not totally unlimited, and that there is always the necessity to allocate properly, through proper channels.

The principle was established some time ago that there would be an age at which unemployment premiums would no longer be payable, nor benefits payable when there was an interruption of earnings on the part of an individual. In 1971 we established that age as 70, and the arguments made against any arbitrary—if you wish to call it that—limitation or threshold of age in the present debate could probably have been made against the decision reached in 1971. I note, from examining the record of debates at that time, that there was some discussion about making that age 65 years rather than 70. There was, however, concern that the Canada Pension Plan would not mature until 1976. I think it takes no great stretching of the imagination to suggest that the implication of those discussions was that this issue should be reviewed and discussed again, which is what is happening now.

We are proposing that 65 years should be the age at which some measures which now come into effect at age 70 should come into effect under Bill C-69. Indeed, for whatever reason, 65 years has now become the age at which programs provided by public institutions in Canada, provincial governments and other bodies, become effective. At that age there is, so to speak, a converging of support measures specially provided for people reaching the later stage of their lives.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Come, come.

Mr. Andras: We find, for example, that the Canada Pension Plan was designed for people in that age group—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Come, come.

Mr. Andras: I do not say that all these people have lost their energy, ability or competence. That is not the issue which I am arguing.

Mr. Nystrom: And they are not all in the Senate.

Mr. Andras: However, 65 years is the age at which we find a convergence of some programs specifically designed for the benefit of those whose desire to continue in active work is tapering off. We recognize that that is the age with respect to which society is prepared to make special efforts, particularly in terms of financial support. For example, we have the Canada Pension Plan, revised this year. It is available now, without a means test, at age 65. We have old age security, which is basic support for all and a universal plan. We have the guaranteed income supplement. We have, of course, moved to assist in terms of some support, recognizing spouses of people aged 65 provided those spouses are 60 or over. There are tax exemptions, too, that have been made available especially at that age. Indeed, some of our housing programs also recognize that that is the age at which special housing assistance should become available.

● (1600)

One can argue that there needs to be more basic support programs in terms of amounts made available to what we call, for want of a better expression, perhaps, senior citizens. However, it is not inconsequential, the totality of the funding that has been invested to provide for this group of people and the tremendous increase in that funding over the years, particularly since 1971. Many members have put on the record the individual monthly incomes available through the Canadian Pension Plan, old age security, guaranteed income supplement and the like. However, in this sense of responsibility of allocation of what are, even in this country, limited resources requiring proper allocation, it is important to put on the record the magnitude of that assistance. In 1971 the expenditures under the old age security, guaranteed income supplement and Canada Pension Plan retirement programs totalled $2.267 billion. In 1975, those expenditures are expected to reach $4.315 billion, including the cost of benefits under the new spouses allowance program. That is an increase in expenditures, over four years, of over $2 billion a year, an increase in current dollars of some 90 per cent.

It can be argued that on the basis of the maximum combined old age security, guaranteed income supplement and Canada Pension Plan being $150 monthly in 1971, this has gone to something like $285 or $286 a month in 1975 with a further increase due in January. You can look at the individual payment and say it still requires bolstering. I would not say nay to that, but $2 billion or a 90 per cent increase in those government pension plans triggered at age 65 should cause us to ask whether the unemployment insurance program, which is not designed to supplement retirement, is the place to be further bolstering such a supplementation. We do have, as I indicated on other occasions, some other difficulties in this particular category.

My honourable and very respected friend, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), indicated—and this view is shared by others—that perhaps we should get at this problem administratively. The question of administrative difficulties is not the only reason we made the decision to place this amendment before the House. That is not to say that this is not an area of very great difficulty. Labour force surveys by Statistics Canada calculate the number of unemployed. By extrapolation, we see that the average number of unemployed persons 65 years of age and over at the end of every month of 1974 was a little in excess of 7,000. We also note that the average number of claimants drawing unemployment insurance at the end of those months in 1974 was in fact 17,500.

Hon. members can say that the administration should be tightened up. There is a bit of ambivalence, an almost schizophrenic reaction on this point from some parts of the House. They say we are already being discriminatory in the benefit control operation but they are now also saying to the commission that they really should get tougher. People of this age already attract one of the highest disentitlement rates. That indicates there has been a firm approach to it. The suggestion that we do this adminstratively and separate the 7,000 from the 17,500 can certainly only imply that we have to get a good deal tougher. But that is not the only reason for amendment. It is the combination of several considerations and the need for rationalization of our programs—a word I sometimes deplore but it gives the meaning I have to convey—that is the rationalization, not in any insensitive way but I firmly believe that we must preserve resources so that we can allocate them through the proper programs and in the proper manner.

At this stage, for whatever reason, we have collectively, as a society, decided that 65 is the significant age at which the special assistance programs are triggered. That, then, is the age that we should look at when switching allocations from one program to the other. I might say that a $2 billion increase in government pensions over the last four years is not insignificant.

I respect the arguments presented, which stem to a great extent, from an emotional response to this age group which we all share. We know that $2,800 or $3,000 pension per year is not a great deal. It is argued that people of this age should be allowed to continue in addition to take the average $2,800 of unemployment insurance after age 65 when the interruption in earnings occurs, over and above these pensions. If you want to use that argument, you must remember that at age 65 they have the Canada Pension Plan, OAS, available to them. If a man aged 64 has an interruption of earnings, he does not have that extra assistance available to him. In fact, he is totally dependent on unemployment insurance. I really think there is a slight gap in that argument.

I also think it is stretching the argument to imply that by this amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act we are in fact having an influence or effect upon the access of people 65 years of age and older to work. It does not have anything to do with their ability or access to work if work is available to them and they want to continue to work. Nothing in this amendment prevents them from continuing to work. We have been over this ground many times. I say, again, this is a rather joyless necessity and responsibility. Nevertheless, I believe at this stage it is a proper step to take.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House, but I do want to register my support of this motion and to say that I think clause 10 of the bill, which excludes persons 65 years of age and over from the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act, is both a reprehensible and retrograde step. I could not help but feel, while the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) was speaking, that for one who is usually so cogent in his presentation of an argument, he was today half-hearted. I thought his heart really was not in the arguments he was putting forth. I listened with great interest and I know the minister is a man of great human sympathy; however, I felt it was almost an apology rather than an advocacy of a position which the government has taken.

It seems to me that there can be only two reasons for excluding persons 65 years of age and over from the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The first is to save money. The minister hinted as much when he said that, after all, this country had limited financial resources, we could not do everything and somewhere we had to draw the line. I am not sure this will save the government any money. If a person can keep on working in the knowledge that unemployment insurance is available to him or her, the government are not called upon to pay that individual the guaranteed income supplement or to pay any welfare under the Canada assistance plan, so I am not sure that on the trade-off the government will save any money. But even if this provision does save money, I question that we want to save money by discriminating against a group of people who have spent a good part of their lives working and paying into the unemployment insurance fund and who at 65 find that, if they continue to work, the benefits of the plan will not be available to them.

The other reason for the legislation is that the government has decided to use the unemployment insurance program as a means of requiring or virtually compelling people to retire from work at 65 or face the penalty of being excluded from the unemployment insurance program. I am one person who has always wanted to see Canada have the kind of social security program that will enable people to retire at 65 if they want to. I agree with the minister that in the last number of years we have built up a fair measure of public support to make it easier for people to retire at 65. But the fact is that, while we want people to retire at 65, I would strongly object to our using measures that compel them to retire at 65. The hon. member across the way seems to be disturbed about something.

Mr. Duquet: I was talking to another hon. member. I would not dare talk to you.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member was not talking at all, but gesticulating, and I was not sure whether he wanted to leave the room. I will give him permission, but he should ask the Speaker if he wants to leave the room. The point I was making was that, while it is desirable to make it possible for people to retire at 65 so they can follow hobbies and other avocations they enjoy in their retirement years, it is a totally different thing to say that if they do not withdraw from the labour force they will be penalized.

It seems to me there are two classes of people that will be hit by this provision. First of all, there are those who cannot afford to retire at 65 from the labour force. It is true, as the minister has said, that they can get the Canada pension and old age security. If the spouse is over 60, then under the new provisions she will get financial assistance. But there are a great many people in the labour force today earning low wages, who have fairly large families, who have not been able to buy a house and who still have to pay high rent. These people cannot afford to drop out of the labour force. We will be saying to these people that if they continue to work they will not have any of the security, in times of periodic unemployment, that persons under 65 are able to enjoy.

I point out to the minister that in my constituency, for instance, men working in the lumber industry and in the forestry industries do seasonal work. They may be out of work for six or eight weeks when the snow closes up the logging camps. For this period of time this legislation will mean for them that they have no revenue at all from the unemployment insurance fund, despite the fact that they have paid into it for years. On the other hand, another individual who is two years younger will receive unemployment insurance. Both these people will go back to work when the logging camps reopen, one having had the benefit of unemployment insurance, the other not. I think this is a reprehensible discrimination against one group of individuals compared to another.

The second group of people that will be affected are those who do not want to retire because they have no particular hobby they want to follow and they are anxious to keep on working. Clause 10 of the bill will penalize these people. In a good many countries elderly people are encouraged to work. For instance, in Great Britain some of the factories now are hiring retired people for four hours a day. They have one shift in the forenoon and another in the afternoon. Their productivity has been comparable to that of workers of a younger age, and they have found that the psychotherapy that results has been excellent. Many of these people, Mr. Speaker, have worked all their lives: they have not learned how to play golf or to do any of the things people usually do when they retire. The fact that they have four hours of work a day and a little extra pay coming in means a great deal to them.

I took a group of people to Sweden some years ago and we spent a long time studying the labour market system in that country. They are training workers of 63, 64 and 65 years of age in new skills and encouraging them to stay at work because of the value not only to the economy but to themselves. As I have said, I am all for making it possible for people to retire early if they want to do so, so they can play and enjoy some of the leisure they have not had in their working years. But if people want to work or, more importantly, need to work in order to get sufficient income to maintain a decent standard of living, surely we ought not to penalize them.

The minister says there is nothing in this legislation that prevents them from continuing to work. No, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to prevent them from continuing to work, but they continue to work knowing perfectly well that if they, like many other Canadians, are doing seasonal work, so that periodically they are out of work for a month or two during the winter, they are not going to get any unemployment insurance benefits during such period.

I think the government is making a very serious mistake in putting this provision in the bill. I hope that even at this late date the minister can persuade his colleagues—I have the feeling I do not need to persuade the minister—to agree to withdraw clause 10 from the bill so that we may continue, as we have in the past, to allow people over 65, if they wish, to carry on working and to enjoy the benefits of the unemployment insurance program. If they do not want to work and if the social security measures we have provided are adequate for them to retire, then I would be very happy to see them retire. But I do not think that in a free society we should do everything we can to encourage people who want to continue in the labour force and earn an income, at the same time enjoying the benefits of the unemployment insurance program to which many of them have contributed for a great many years.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved:

Motion No. 16.

That Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 16.

He said: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), it seemed to me that the minister did not really give any leadership to his colleagues who went along with this usual practice. This makes one wonder if there is really any point in discussing anything about this bill, because members do not have to listen or pay attention—all they have to do is vote. It makes me wonder if we all come from the same country.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I have one extra person in my office for the simple reason that I have to handle all unemployment insurance matters in my area. If I did not have these problems I would not need that extra person. I am sure there are other members in this House who have the same situation, and if they intend to be around here again they had better pay attention to these problems. There are many areas in this country with as much unemployment as in my area, yet the representatives sit here complacently, dispassionately following this usual practice. I am becoming convinced that I should be making this argument to those nabobs in the gallery, because obviously the minister did not contribute much input in respect of the last motion. He expressed his sympathy and realized that the arguments he was putting up were not very good.

Mr. Andras: Not at all.

Mr. Peters: He indicated there was not really much money going to old age pensioners; and particularly in the northern climate where the people have to pay higher heating bills during the wintertime it is not much money. There is not much left over if they are living only on old age pensions and do not hold down part-time jobs. This is one of the serious complaints we receive.

It may be that we should not waste time passing bills here in this House, but putting the Unemployment Insurance Commission in a position to make its own regulations. Then if those people found anything developing which they did not like, they could make another regulation to cover the situation. This would solve a lot of problem. It would certainly solve a lot of my problems, as a member from an area where there is considerable unemployment. Apparently that is not true of many other people here, because nobody seems to pay much attention or to take much interest in this measure we are now discussing.

Many people have been disqualified on the basis that they have quit their jobs. Very often when they have written to me explaining why they quit, and I related that reason to officials of the district office, followed by an investigation, they have been reinstated. This is not the exception; it is becoming, in the main, the rule. When they write in and give me an explanation of why they left their employment and I pass that explanation on, they are, more often than not, reinstated.

One thing being said by many ordinary people not involved with unemployment insurance is that an individual can work for a certain length of time, then quit, sit back for the three-weeks' disqualification period and the two-weeks' waiting period, and then draw benefits indefinitely. That is not true. If the conditions I have outlined do exist, these people are on a limited benefit period and do not draw benefits indefinitely. It is not possible to work for eight weeks, then quit and draw benefits indefinitely. Those hon. members here who represent people who believe this is the situation are also those members who supported and voted for the idea that it was possible to bring these people back into the labour force by imposing a disqualification period. I suggest it is to their advantage to draw the eight weeks' benefits, suffering the small disqualification penalty which amounts to no more than a small fine.

Those who will support this recommendation are also those who supported the suggestion that a sponsor of a LIP program who designates his own work project should be entitled to qualify. In my opinion, these are the people who are able to set themselves up for a benefit period because they can initiate a program for a certain length of time by manipulating the size of the program, the number of people involved and thereby the duration. They are going to be entitled to benefits and nobody seems to worry a bit about that. In this case, the people can dictate the circumstances and set the duration of the project and even, in some cases, the amount of benefit to be paid.

Many of the people sponsoring these LIP programs will only be in the labour force for a short period of time. Many of the other people who are disqualified have good reason for quitting their jobs. Let me tell you about one case that came to my attention not long ago. A young fellow had what I thought was a fairly good construction job. I did not have much sympathy for him when he told me he had quit his employment. He was working out of town, making pretty good money, but he quit and returned home where there was no employment available. As I am sure most hon. members would do, I asked him why he quit his job. I was quite surprised by the reason he gave. He was working as a helper to a rigger on a high steel construction job and the rigger kept telling him that if he did not speed up and do this thing or that thing, he was going to throw him off.

He put up with this for two or three days until his nerves got the better of him to the point that he could not sleep at night. He started to feel that if the rigger did not throw him off, he was going to fall off. I asked him why he did not report this to the boss and he told me that he would have been fired anyway. He said it was that man's word against his and the rigger would be believed. I do not know whether he was honest, and I do not know whether the UIC officers might have felt he was honest. I felt this man should have appealed to someone on the job site to justify leaving his employment. However, he did not do so. Perhaps he could not. Construction jobs being what they are, the people involved are fairly tough when it comes to someone reporting on someone else. It is the kind of a job where, for one's own safety, one must get on with the people with whom one works because an accident might happen and no one would know whether or not it was an accident.

This person actually indicated he was afraid he would fall off or be pushed off. But he liked the job. He was willing to do that work or any other kind of work because he needed a job and his parents would not keep him. I do not know how one would assess this any more than one would assess the situation in respect of the waitress who keeps getting propositioned. Before she completes her probation period in the restaurant, she either goes out with the boss or is not accepted as a permanent employee. She may quit, and if so, how does she prove the situation that existed? I always believe what women tell us, so I would believe her.

The hon. lady opposite says that we need more female restaurant entrepreneurs. I agree. We continually hear about such cases. I might give another example. A man reported to me that he quit his job driving a truck because the truck he was driving had defective brakes and his boss did not want to have them repaired. He said he reported this to the boss, who told him to either drive the truck or quit. He reported it to the office of the Department of Transport but nothing was done about it. I did not believe him because I do not think a person owning a $10,000 or $12,000 truck would operate it with defective brakes if he knew this to be the case.

An hon. Member: He must have been a Liberal.

Mr. Peters: Under those circumstances, an NDP'er would fix the brakes before he sent the driver out with the truck. I made inquiries throughout the community. One thing that impressed me was the turnover of workers at that company. I spoke to people who said that the brakes may not have been completely gone, but that they were substandard and that all the equipment of this company was substandard.

I have given three examples of a person being fired who had difficulty proving the reason. I think these are legitimate cases. The minister will talk about the appeal procedure, and so on. It is not worth a damn. Everybody knowns that. I do not think there is much difference, in respect of the tribunal, between the employer representative, the union representative or the labour representative. I do not know where these people are found. They are carried away with their own importance.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is a little closer to these people than I am. Sometime ago I learned more about the appeal procedure than I had known previously. The hon. member for Nickel Belt spoke in very strong language to the members of the tribunal, It was interesting to note that of the 13 cases being considered at that time, the district director examined 12 of them and reinstated them after they had been turned down by the tribunal. I may be unfair to some people. I am speaking very generally. I am not referring to the particular representative of the hon. member for Nickel Belt, because quite often my representative is the same one.

When the hon. member for Nickel Belt raises hell, they start putting a "no" on it and it is not necessary to go to the umpire. A reference to the umpire should not be undertaken in respect of anything except an interpretation of the act. In my opinion, this should not be undertaken unless it is a matter of an appeal in substance rather than in respect of a specific case. What does this section say? It says that instead of penalizing the person, often wrongly, for three weeks, he will now be penalized for up to six weeks. There is mention of one week and up to three weeks, or from one week to six weeks. I shall bow to the superior knowledge in this field of the hon. member for Nickel Belt because I have not played around with that tribunal.

An hon. Member: What do you play around with?

Mr. Peters: I play around with the operations within the offices. Let me say to the minister, and to the hon. member who probably knows nothing about the subject at all, that my experience is that if the information is provided to the officials at the local offices, almost inevitably the correct decision will be made on the information given. If the information is not complete or is incorrect, then when it goes to the tribunal there is no new information. The hon.

member may not be involved in this in his area because his constituents in Mississauga have cars and can drive a short distance down to the unemployment insurance office and make the appeal themselves. They can speak to the people in the office.

In my area, or in the minister's area, sometimes these people must drive 300 or 400 miles. Then when they get there, quite often they do not know what to say because the hearing is similar to a court hearing and they have not had any experience with courts. They do not know how to present their case. I deal mainly with the officials. I find that if they are given the information, they check it out and then make the decision. There is no need to go to the tribunal. My experience is that if they do not make the change on the information I have given them, then the tribunal will not make the change either, because it would be making the decision on the same information the officials had. I am pleased to give that explanation to the hon. member for Mississauga.

An hon. Member: "Mississauga."

Mr. Peters: I come from an area where we pronounce Indian names in the Indian fashion. We have not totally Canadianized them. It seems to me that the penalty being paid is a sizeable penalty with the three weeks. The point I started out to make is that I have not had any experience that would indicate to me there is a discretionary power in respect of the one week and the three weeks. Perhaps there is. Perhaps sometimes that is a fact, but I do not know of any case of disqualification where the person was told that for such and such an infraction he was disqualified under such and such a section of the act. I do not remember ever seeing two weeks or one week mentioned. Perhaps the hon. member for Nickel Belt, who has seen all the documentation on adjudications, may have seen such cases, but I have not. We are really talking about three weeks and six weeks, not about a period between one week and three weeks or one week and six weeks. We are talking about the maximum disqualification which to my knowledge has always applied. I have not seen any discretionary powers used in these cases.

● (1640)

Mr. Andras: The average has been 1.7 weeks.

Mr. Peters: I have never yet seen a letter stating that a disqualification was for less than three weeks. In most cases the two sections were included so that the total amount applied. Perhaps more problems occur in my area than in any other area, but I do not think so. I think the information with which the minister has been provided could be separated into two parts: the urban operation of UIC and the pseudo-rural operation which occurs in both our areas.

Mr. Andras: I thought you would say the information was either right or wrong.

Mr. Peters: Honestly, I have never seen a disqualification for less than the maximum time, and it comes in a form letter typed on an electric typewriter on which perhaps you can push a key telling you the disqualification time. I think these disqualifications are unfair and that in the case of a person moving from one job to another reasons can be given for disqualifying him. It has been my experience with one of the UIC offices that if a person is moved to another location, say a husband is transferred from one region to another in his job and his wife has to follow him, she has to terminate her employment, a move which is considered as quitting for no just cause and the three-week disqualification is applied in her case.

We have argued these cases on a number of occasions and we won them but, as I have said, almost automatically the three-week disqualification is applied, which is then questioned, under some circumstances with successful results. Usually, officials at UIC are shocked when they are told they are helping to break up families and that their decisions lead to social disruption in the community when wife and husband are separated. Normally they agree that the husband has precedence—I suppose this does not fit in with women's lib—and if the wife follows the husband for the sake of maintaining the family as a unit, she should not be disqualified for having left her job without just reason. In almost every case I have had coming from one UIC office they are automatically disqualified for three weeks every time that type of circumstance arises.

We are not really facing the major problem. There are people who move into areas where there is no work for them, work for which they are trained. In my opinion, they do so to get out of the labour force and be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits in the new location. In my opinion, such people should be prosecuted because somewhere along the line they must have made dishonest statements as to whether or not they were looking for work which would normally be available in the area to which they were going. These are the cases which benefit control almost always picks out. Most people who are involved in the UIC day to day operations would agree that the abuses which are taking place should be stopped and that certainly something should be done to stop the fraud that sometimes takes place.

I should like to say a few words about the provision which would make the sponsors of LIP and LEAP projects eligible for benefits. I am reminded of one of the municipalities in my riding which decided to provide eight weeks work for all the unemployables in the area. If they got the work, they would not be drawing welfare from the municipality, and at the end of the work they would be eligible for unemployment insurance, which would take care of probably half the welfare they were getting previously. I consider that to be fraud also. It is dishonest and surely those people know it. That practice should be discontinued.

I may be wrong, but perhaps these cases in my area are treated differently from similar cases in other areas. But I doubt it, because if they move me any farther after the next election I will be dealing with some people who are now in the minister's area. My friend suggests that I should discuss this with the UIC officials. We have had considerable success in dealing with them. I have found them to be very reasonable, but they must operate within the act, and what we are doing now is changing the act. In changing the act we are not allowing them to use their judgment; we are making certain things mandatory.

I am quite sure that good judgment is not always used in certain cases of disqualifications—and I think other hon. members will agree with me—such as when there is some doubt about the reason for a person having left his job. For example, a person may find it too hard to do the work. This happens in mines, in bush operations and even in restaurants. The day comes when one's feet are too flat, the floors are too hard, or the dishes too heavy and work becomes unbearable, so one leaves. Then there is the question of whether you had a sufficiently good reason for leaving the job, if you were not sick or incapacitated in some manner.

If you argue that case, the disqualification period should run from one week to six weeks, depending on the case the claimant made. There should be some leeway. In my opinion, the decision should not be the length of time the claimant should be disqualified, but whether his claim should be accepted or rejected. It should be either the maximum penalty or no penalty. It is black or white; there is no grey. You either win the case, or you lose it. Quite often, because of his inability to fight the case, the claimant loses it. I have made many statements about the number of people who were fully disqualified in my area. I have also said that the period of their disqualification has always been the maximum period, which does not coincide with the information reported to the minister by his officials. I should like to make it very clear that these are the 8 per cent or 10 per cent of the cases which are handled by those offices. We only hear about the bad ones. We do not hear about them before the end of six weeks. If I hear about them they have gone beyond the end of six weeks. If there is a case of disqualification, it is the three-week disqualification.

If people are able to go into the office, argue and get half of that—a week and a half, which the minister says is the average—they would probably feel quite satisfied and would not write to me saying they were disqualified, abused and should not have been disqualified. I can only go by my experience because I have no way of checking the actual figures. I would not believe them if they were given to me, because they totally disagree with my experience. I do not trust figures very much, in any event. I am told that the rate of unemployment is only 7 per cent. The rate is 100 per cent for the person who is unemployed.

My understanding of the act is very limited. My experience is with appeals only. I never have anything to do with the initial presentation of a case. When disqualification occurs, I deal with the person who is not satisfied. He feels he has not received justice and appeals to me. It may well be that there are more lenient people in some of the other offices, and it may be that they give people a week and a half or a week instead of three weeks. I am sure I am right, because I was more often here when we changed the Unemployment Insurance Act than most members. I think I have probably participated five times in major changes in the act, and in every case the fears I had about the changes came to pass. I foresee not a three-week disqualification from now on, but always a six-week disqualification. It may well be that it is only because I am part of the appeal structure, but surely some hon. members have had the same experience as I have.

Those who win do not come to us telling us how successful they were and that they only had to have a one-week disqualification when originally they had to have a three-week disqualification. The only time they come to us is when they are not satisfied, or when they have been badly treated. I suggest that from now on it will be six weeks instead of three weeks, and if any hon. member is that remote from his constituents, he should not bother wasting his time sitting here, because he will not be re-elected. If he does not handle his appeals where there is no other appeal procedure, he can only hope that this parliament goes on until he has been here six years, because then he can qualify for retirement pension.

All hon. members, I am sure, are faced with bad UIC cases—and there are some. However, I do not agree with hon. members who feel that there has been unfair treatment by senior officials of UIC or officials of their district offices. There are many complaints and many problems. We have had problems with regard to disqualification. But there must be two sides to everything, and I am certainly not one who always agrees that the worker should have the final word or that his case is always right. The worker's interpretation is what he wants it to be, and often employers have their interpretation as well. An employer will not admit that he fired a girl because every time he tried to pinch her, she said no. He will say that she was not suitable. The employer is going to show himself in the best light. If he says that he fired the employee because of her incompetence, or for unsafe practices, that is a justifiable dismissal. However, the employee may have a totally different viewpoint. The commission, of course, must consider both sides. There are occasions when the stories are in agreement because of collusion. These are cases which the system is really not capable of handling, and our structure is not able to deal with them.

I urge that hon. members consider their own experience and decide for themselves, regardless of party. I urge them to look honestly at the problems which have developed and which come to them through their constituency offices or their offices here, and ascertain whether abuses which have occurred or whether the penalties which have been applied under the three weeks' disqualification have been marginal. Some of these hon. members have been able to argue successfully. The fault has not always been with the claimant or with the employer. It this penalty must be applied to prevent abuses by people quitting their jobs without just cause, I wonder what advantage there would be in applying double the penalty without being able to solve the problem itself.

I know there are abuses; I know there have been abuses. But by doubling the penalty in this case the minister is attempting to satisfy those hon. members who profess to be for law and order and is using opportunity to penalize someone who may not meet their criteria. I suggest that doubling the penalty in this case will not do much good. I see no justification for increasing this from three weeks to six weeks. I have not been in the committee to follow the discussions there. The discussions are very hard to follow because they flit from sections of the act to clauses of the bill, back and forth. I have not been able to ascertain any justification for the increase in penalty, other than to reduce the cost of the plan.

In my opinion, there is an easy way to get rid of the abuses and the cost of the unemployment insurance program, and that is for this government to quit playing games with our unemployed and to bring in employment measures which will provide full employment. This act was designed to operate at a maximum rate of 4 per cent unemployment. In its generosity, the government agreed to pick up the premiums beyond that; but only for two months, I think, since 1971 has this plan ever operated at what was considered to be the maximum level of unemployment anticipated. Rather than increasing the penalties for those unfortunate persons who are out of work, this government should be instituting employment programs.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will just take a few moments to say that we reject this motion. My friend indicates this time, as he did last time, that he does not understand the decision. I would refer him once again to the paper that was supplied to hon. members to assist them in determining whether to accept the minister's position with respect to another amendment. For the hon. member's edification, I refer to the paper that I quoted from yesterday which gave the information that the minister and his officials have accumulated since 1971. The last paragraph on page 2 reads:

> Evidence accumulated since 1971 indicates that the three-week disqualification has not been achieving its objective of minimizing the extent to which claimants voluntarily terminate their employment without just cause, are discharged for misconduct, or refuse suitable employment.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on, that is not complete.

Mr. Peters: That is like hanging everybody because somebody got their purse snatched in the park.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I sat here listening to my hon. friend and never said a word while he went on for 20 minutes and said zilch. I have been up for a minute and a half. But I will not be distracted. I do not want to take the time of this House; I want to get the bill passed. I want to make a couple of points, however. We on this side of the House, and particularly members to the immediate left, are always looking for disincentives. The socialists dislike that word. Now we have found another disincentive, the three-week disqualification period.

If the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) had had the opportunity—notice how kind I am—of attending the hearings of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, he would have had the benefit of the advice of Mr. Chafe who is a member of the Canadian Labour Congress. In issue No. 23 of the proceedings for November 20, at page 23:10 Mr. Chafe said:

> I do not think we would argue very strongly about whether it was one to six weeks or one to two weeks. The problem lies in the fact that, before that disqualification is attached to a claim and before it ensues, the claimant should be given a better opportunity to make his case to the insurance officer or to some agency in the commission.

At page 23:11 he said:

> Mr. Alexander, we may have a question of a technical draft or something, but the suggestion I would put forward immediately is that the committee might recommend a change in that amendment that will build into it the feature that claimants, faced with disqualification under these sections, would first be given the opportunity to put their case before the commission, before the insurance officer actually applies the disqualification.

In other words, he was not too worried. He was worried about the appeal procedure, however, and this is where I would ask the minister to focus his attention. I should like to refer to issue No. 27 of the proceedings of the same committee. I respect the minister and I know that he has a lot of information that I do not have, so I ask questions in order to find out what he has. I was concerned about this sort of thing, about whether we were dealing with a disincentive or not. In the proceedings for December 2, at page 27:11 I asked the minister:

> In other words, the section as it was, is a disincentive. You have accepted that, therefore you are attempting to tighten it up. Do you agree with all that, sir?
> MR. ANDRAS (PORT ARTHUR): That is correct.
>
> MR. ALEXANDER: Thank you.
>
> THE CHAIRMAN: Mrs. Appolloni.
> MR. ANDRAS (PORT ARTHUR): There is only one comment, Mr. Alexander. I would not want to accept the broad condemnation, or the implied condemnation of the UIC as the general disincentive. I said there were some disincentives in the act, this being one of them.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up any more of the time of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: At least I am more responsible than some of the people to my left and all the nonsense they come up with. Let me end without getting caught up in that nonsense. We have said that the Canadian people are looking for the removal of disincentives. They found one in the three-week advance, and we removed that. We hope that will satisfy some of us who are extremely concerned about the direction the act is going. We found another disincentive, and we are removing it. As a result, I have no hesitation in saying that we do not intend to support the hon. member's motion.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) spoke about disincentives, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why it is always a disincentive when some poor person is getting hit. Why is it not a disincentive when wealthy people are getting hand-outs or subsidies? Rich people can write off a tax burden because of capital gains, and that is called an incentive; but if it is a poor person, it is no longer called an incentive.

I should like the hon. member for Hamilton West to visit my riding or my office. I will show him some of the disincentives on file where rural people have been disqualified because they cannot afford to drive 100 miles a day for the minimum wage or below. Is that not a disincentive? Would many wealthy people working for high salaries go to that expense? It is like Conservatives saying that free enterprise must get a contract—but free enterprise has to get a subsidy to keep going.

Mr. Epp: Like Skywest.

Mr. Nystrom: Like Skywest. I am glad the hon. member mentioned that. He wants that contract to go to a private airline. That is free enterprise on the backs of the taxpayers. No wonder those Neanderthals went in droves to Bennett in British Columbia to support the new type of Social Credit.

Mr. Epp: Tell us about Barrett.

Mr. Nystrom: He had 40 per cent of the vote in British Columbia, and you had 4 per cent. Mr. Speaker, if you could get those Social Crediters to quieten down, I would like to come to my point. This motion deals with something that the hon. member for Hamilton West has made me rather angry about. It is about people who might refuse employment without just cause. I have some grievance with the UIC office, and I am glad the minister is here because I have written him many times about the way UIC discriminates against rural people in. The hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) and members from many other rural areas know what I mean. I know of many cases where someone has been turned down because the UIC did not think they were searching for a job or because they were rural people, and I can give examples.

There is the case of a lady in Balcarres, 50 miles from Regina. She used to live in Regina but went to Balcarres because of her husband's employment. She was unemployed, and applied for UIC while looking for a job. She said, "I am willing to look for a job in Balcarres. I am willing to work at almost anything." But they turned her down. They said that she was limiting herself in terms of where she would go for a job. She could not afford to go to Regina, which would have meant driving 50 miles each way, or 100 miles a day on the round trip. The couple had one car, kids and babysitting expenses. She was willing to look for work in Balcarres or in the immediate, surrounding area. There are towns and villages in that area. But she was disqualified because she was living in a rural area.

I do not think that is fair. A person who lives in Hamilton—for example, the hon. member for Hamilton West—can get on the bus or walk the streets looking for a job. In the big city, one can go by subway. You cannot do that in a rural community. It is not economically worth your while to take a job if it means driving the 100-mile round trip to Regina each day merely to earn the minimum wage or slightly more. The person in that position is discriminated against vis-à-vis the person who lives in the urban centre.

Let me mention another case in my riding. It involves a guy who lives in the little community of Langenburg, 55 miles from Yorkton. He is a labourer who works in a garage and makes little more than the minimum wage. He was laid off and willing to work at any job within a reasonable distance of his town. But the commission said, "Look, you are not willing to drive to Yorkton, which is 55 miles away, each day; therefore, you are cut off." I do not think that was fair. One can see how our present system discriminates against people in rural areas. Case after case of this type has come to my attention. I have written to the minister. I think the UIC act should make some allowance for these people. It should take into account the economic factors involved and define more clearly what is and what is not a just search for a job. It should specify circumstances in which an applicant is not limiting his ability to search for a job because of the special circumstances involved. As it is, the act discriminates against rural people.

In my riding—and I have heard many other rural members talk about this—if a person is honest when he applies to the UIC and says he cannot afford to travel 100 miles a day to and from work merely to earn $3 or $5 an hour, he is cut off in many cases from benefits from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It says to these applicants in rural areas, "You are limiting yourself, and not really searching for a job." But if that person lies to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and says, "Yes, I am willing to look for work anywhere and work at anything, at any wage," he will obtain UIC benefits. I do not advise my constituents to lie to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if some of them do lie they will get benefits, and if they are honest, they will not. This sort of thing spoils a good plan. It whips up the sort of backlash that we see on the part of the more right wing Neanderthals in the House. It makes them think that the poor people are ripping off the system.

The present unemployment insurance plan discriminates against the people. Its effect is that if people lie to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, say they are willing to go anywhere for a job, to the moon, if necessary, and work for any pay, they will obtain benefits; but if they tell the truth, the commission will cut them off. It says to such people they are limiting their search for a job. I have seen this happen time and again. If any hon. member does not believe me, I invite him to my office where I can show him countless letters documenting the sort of cases I have just mentioned. Every time I go to my riding for office hours I run into people who have been cut off UIC benefits because they limited their search for a job. Possibly the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has encountered similar situations in his riding, which is smaller than mine and much more urban.

People of any rural community encounter these difficulties. Why must we operate under a system which encourages people to be dishonest? Why can we not design a plan which will make allowances for those living in rural areas? The lack of such provision irks me. I do not want to advise my constituents to lie or cheat in order to get around the guidelines. That, often, is precisely what they must do if they want to draw unemployment insurance. This could be corrected by changing the act to take account of those special factors affecting people in rural communities. As I have said, I referred many of these cases to the minister's office. The majority—some came from my riding—concern people who had been disqualified because of improper job search or unwillingness to travel great distances to look for a job. These factors make the plan unacceptable to many members of the general public, and this must be changed.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned the case of the spouse, either male or female, who quit employment because the other partner moved to another town or city to find employment. Cases like this have arisen in my rural riding. It is not uncommon for people to move from one town in my riding to another, say from Yorkton to a small town like Kamsack or another town 30, 40 or 50 miles away. If the spouse is a housewife, say, she must quit her job and follow her husband when her husband becomes employed elsewhere. Such spouses are cut off from benefits and may find it difficult to find another job in a small rural community. The commission expects them, in many cases, to drive 50 or 60 miles each way a day to another job.

If the minister were to curb these discriminatory aspects of the plan which work against the interests of people in rural areas, we might end much of the public backlash against this plan and not hear so many speeches on the subject by some of the more conservative members of this House. I hope the minister will comment on some of the problems rural people face. I have been aware of these difficulties in my riding for many years. I think every other rural member encounters similar difficulties. The last time I went out to my riding—

Mr. Epp: What year was that?

Mr. Nystrom: I went out a couple of weeks ago. I am not like the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who, I am told, goes to his riding about every year.

Mr. Epp: Every week.

Mr. Nystrom: I recall that when I was last in my riding I learned of a case involving a person who had paid into the unemployment insurance plan for many years. He was a hardworking person who had worked at an unskilled job for a low salary. He lost his job through no fault of his own. Because he could not afford to drive 100 miles a day he was cut off. It was alleged he was not looking for a job seriously, that he was not really serious about driving 100 miles a day for the sake of a job. He could not afford to drive those distances. He earned little more than the minimum wage and had kids to feed and a family to look after. He could not afford to drive 100 miles a day, and was disqualified. But if he had said to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, "I am willing to go anywhere and accept any salary," he probably would have received UIC benefits. That illustrates an anomaly which ought not to exist in the Unemployment Insurance Act. I hope the minister will consider, if he replies later this afternoon, some of our representations on this subject.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there are times when I wonder why some of those on my extreme left do not buy a one-way ticket to another jurisdiction. The system under which we live seems to suit them so badly that their only hope lies in that solution. One of those hon. members made some rare remarks with which I agree. The hon. member who spoke previously mentioned the position of rural claimants for unemployment insurance who are in a most difficult situation.

Mr. Nystrom: First you chastise me, then you agree with me.

Mr. McCain: Our present system may need a multitude of change, but it has evolved over a long period and has created a pretty good society which you, to judge by your speeches would destroy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. McCain: The occasional appearance of sanity in the remarks you make relating to our system suggest paranoia or schizophrenia—certainly no solid groundwork for the political career you espouse.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member referring to you, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McCain: People in rural communities must pool their transportation requirements. Many who work must arrange for babysitters. In some cases when they are asked to go to work they are not given enough time to arrange for a babysitter or transportation. As I say, many use transport pools. I drew the minister's attention by letter, today, to a lady whose job came to a halt but who wanted to work more. She happened to be pregnant at the time of her dismissal but needed to continue working primarily because she was pregnant. An investigator from an office arrived and discovered that she was receiving unemployment insurance while pregnant: She had, therefore, not been eligible for benefits from the beginning, and should return the entire amount received and would not be eligible for pregnancy benefits thereafter.

This is the imposition of a hardship which I am sure the minister does not support. It was brought about by virtue of the fact that on the date of her application she lived 100 miles from the decision-making office. I submit the individual who investigated could have used some judgment in respect of her need and position. Instead, he respected only the ruling which was made in head office.

When somebody appeals a case from 100 miles away it is extremely difficult. The unemployed person does not have the means to get to the point where he or she can appeal. My particular appeal to the minister at this moment, as we are discussing unemployment insurance, is that there be some realism injected into the administration of the act and the decision-making process of who is eligible and who is not. They should quit nitpicking and look at the realities of those located in the rural communities. These people do not have public transportation at their disposal such as is available within quite a number of miles of this House or many miles of Toronto, public transportation provided by public funds from this government and governments of other jurisdictions.

These people in rural communities must have time. They cannot be expected to go to work the moment they receive a call. They should not be asked to go to work until they have had a reasonable period of time to obtain pooled transportation and a babysitter. I beseech the minister to ask his rural, decision-making people to use judgment and to extend mercy or, if necessary, alter some of the regulations under which aid is granted under this act.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to note how hon. members to my right, notably the previous speaker, castigate this party for putting forward a motion. They say they cannot support it and then turn around and raise the same kind of problem that is covered in clause 16 of the minister's amendment. They recognize the problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: There is a disincentive. Why should you stand up and argue for disincentives? Surely you think the act is good. They are phony and hypocritical: they want to suck and blow at the same time, coming out on both sides of the issue.

Clause 16 of this bill proposes to extend the period of disqualification from three to six weeks. It will, in effect, shorten a claim by six weeks. When we discussed this clause in committee I asked the minister a question. From my experience in handling unemployment insurance problems it is the appeal procedure and administration of the act which falls very heavily on the shoulders of the claimants. On Tuesday, December 2, I asked the minister the following question:

I want to know from the minister, Mr. Chairman, what provision he has in the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices to help claimants who have been hit with a three-week disqualification, and what machinery he has to help them in preparing an appeal to come before the referees.

The minister replied:

First I will make a general comment, Mr. Rodriguez. I have asked for the whole appeal system to be reviewed. Mr. Chafe and Mr. Wightman, representatives of the employee and the employer groups, are involved in that examination now, with whatever assistance they are asking for, and I think they will be able to give us a report early in the new year. And I am eager that people, particularly non-union, have a better opportunity for some form of advocacy. That is the general policy appeal system.

There it is in a nutshell. That is the reason we on this side of the House say "No" to the six-week disqualification. We do not have any objection to those who quit their jobs, refuse to look for work, or refuse to accept jobs under the same conditions, being penalized. The problem lies in the administration of the appeal procedure. In our motion we say to the minister that he should do what needs to be done first. There should be an examination of the appeal procedure and a proper advocacy system. There must first be a proper administration of the act in a wise and fair manner so that claimants get the benefit from that kind of enlightened thinking.

The minister is putting the cart before the horse. He is increasing the punishment and then, after the fact, will look at the administration of the appeal procedure and bring in changes. We in this party say that is doing it backwards. If the minister will come in with proper procedures for the administration of the act with regard to the disqualification section and proper appeal procedures, we on this side will support any increase in punishment in terms of increasing the disqualification to six weeks. This argument was made by the Canadian Labour Congress. They argued that it is the appeal procedure that creates the problem. They stated this very clearly in the brief which they presented to the committee studying this bill. I quote from the brief:

The real problem behind this amendment lies in the administrative area. Investigation officers are merely, it seems to us at least, accepting the word of the employer that a claimant voluntarily quit without cause or was fired for just cause. These cases are being inadequately investigated and the claimant is not being given the right to be heard. In a number of instances grievances have been processed and won by trade unions on dismissals, but the unfortunate claimants were denied unemployment insurance under the disqualification period.

That shows the unfairness of the present system. The minister admits there are problems with the administration of this section. He admits there is lack of proper advocacy procedures in the bill. The minister also knows that those being discriminated against do not belong to a collective bargaining unit. They are non-union people. I am not as concerned about the union people with respect to this clause, because they have a form of grievance. They have the support of union officials who are well versed in the act and have connections with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Their case is not as serious as the vast majority of Canadian workers. Only 29 per cent of the Canadian work force is organized into unions; 71 per cent are unorganized. This large group does not have the benefit of support programs and the grievance procedure with qualified union personnel to help them with their appeals. It is that group that concerns the members of this party.

I can give you legions of examples, Mr. Speaker. I have presented them to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and to the minister himself and related the problems they face. For example, there are many people in my constituency—and the same is true in other constituencies—who are in a service operation. If they are fired by their employer, he claims for misconduct, it is very difficult to defend yourself against that kind of dismissal. What is misconduct? In my experience, a person who does not have the support of a union official or any help from the Unemployment Insurance Commission usually decides there is no point in fighting it. They do not understand their rights or how to proceed. Indeed, they are threatened by the very office that the minister has said is there to help them. The appeal procedure before the board of referees is indeed a threatening procedure. If they do not turn to their MP, usually they do not appeal their case. Some of them appeal because it says on their notice of disentitlement that they have a right of appeal. They write a letter saying they are appealing the case, but many of them never appear before the board of referees. In effect, the system has broken down. Justice must not only be seen to be done, but must indeed be done.

Let me give some specific examples of what I mean. I am not talking pie in the sky; these are concrete cases. If this sort of thing happens in one case that comes to light, the House can imagine the legion of cases that do not come to light. I had a case of a young woman who was working as a bookkeeper for Electrolux in Sudbury. She was fired by that company, and on her letter of dismissal it said she was fired. She went to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and, lo and behold, they came in with a three-week disqualification. In most cases disqualification is automatic. I always thought that a person was innocent until proven guilty, but in this case they deemed her guilty of misconduct and gave her this three-week disqualification. This young woman called me, and what did she reveal? She revealed that the manager of the Electrolux company in Sudbury had told her that she was to make certain bookkeeping entries. In her opinion those entries that were demanded of her were illegal entries. Indeed, Electrolux was up in the courts in Sudbury charged with a similar kind of abuse. She refused to make the entries that she was told to make, so they fired her.

It so happens that this young woman has a little more education than many others who get laid off or fired, and she came to her MP. It turns out that the UIC was prepared to back up the three-week disqualification. By the time we got to the hearing, following several telephone calls, something like four weeks or a month and a half had elapsed and finally the UIC backed off its three-week disqualification.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, is this the kind of justice that is handed out by the commission and the department? The UIC is supposed to be the agency that helps workers who have lost their job or who have refused their job or quit it for good reason. In this case we were successful and won. I know of several other instances where the three-week disqualification was applied, and it took a long period of time, going all the way from Belleville to Ottawa, back to Belleville to the local office, before we got any action at all. I point out that 70 per cent of those on unemployment insurance earn less than $6,000 a year, so that all during that period of time while this process is gone through, these people have to keep looking for work to support themselves. They get no benefit from unemployment insurance for which they have contributed.

The minister has made much of the fact that 250,000 quit their jobs in 1974. Taken out of context, that seems like lot of people, but we must keep in mind the total work force. With a total work force of nine million people, 250,000 is about 2.5 per cent. The minister has also made a great deal of fuss about the 21,000 people who refused jobs. That is less than 1 per cent of all unemployment insurance claimants and less than 0.25 per cent of the total work force. This gives us a proper perspective of the extent of this problem.

What is even more important about the people who have refused jobs or quit jobs is this. The minister has not said much about this and his nabobs in the bureaucracy have not shed much light on the matter. What is the reason that the bulk of the persons quit their jobs? Did they do so without just cause? The Canada Manpower centre in Sudbury referred workers to Denison Mines at Elliot Lake where it has been proven safety conditions are not up to the standards demanded by Atomic Energy of Canada. There we have working conditions that no worker would be anxious to experience. Conditions in the mines are such that the very lives of the workers are threatened. As a result, the workers referred to Denison Mines by the Canada Manpower centre refused the job, and they are reflected in the figure of 21,000. I do not blame them for that, Mr. Speaker. Workers who refuse to work in such conditions, or in asbestos mines where safety conditions are not up to scratch, are reflected in the 21,000 and are cut off from unemployment insurance. We have appealed such cases and lost, because the commission said, in effect, that since other workers are working in the mines these people should take the job.

The minister has not given us any breakdown of these figures showing why people quit or refuse jobs. Who are they, how many are women, how many are men, how many are in the low income brackets without skills? When throwing around a figure like 250,000 or 21,000 we have to see what kind of people the minister is talking about. Instead, the minister assumes in his sweeping statement that these people are lazy, good for nothings, that they are not interested in working at all. That is what he is inferring and it is why he has brought in clause 16. This si also why we cannot support it. We think the government has to give us additional information.

In this economy of ours there is much mobility. When workers in a low paying job want to try and improve themselves, it seems to me this is a pretty good reason for quitting. One would think that if the government really wanted to improve working conditions and pay, they would raise the federal minimum wage. It is sadly lagging behind the industrial wage. What do they do? They bring in this kind of clause, so how is the worker to defend himself against disqualification for quitting without just cause? That is a pretty difficult defence. How does he defend himself against disqualification for being fired for misconduct? In these days the discriminations are not obvious.

● (1740)

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out some of the problems. From my experience with unemployment insurance problems I have found that when it comes to a question of believing the employer or the employee, invariably the weight of the argument is always in favour of the employer. This is especially so if the employee is a young person, has a beard, has dishevelled hair and is not dressed in a suit and tie. The weight of the argument is also always slanted against the claimant if she happens to be a woman, and particularly if she happens to have two children at home. Right away, a certain concept flashes through the mind of the benefit control officer. I have had this experience at first-hand. I have knowledge of this and have seen it happen up close.

What the minister is doing by putting in this kind of clause is making those who work in very poor conditions for low wages think twice about quitting and trying to move to something better. It seems to me they will lack that mobility we have been able to give them. What we are doing for some of the worst employers in this country is guaranteeing them a pool of low-paid workers who will be stuck with poor working conditions.

Let me remind the minister that those in this country who work for less than $6,000 a year now make up 70 per cent of the unemployed. We cannot support the minister's clause, and that is why we have brought forward this amendment.

Let me say to the minister that he should first investigate his appeal procedure and the administration of this part of the act. If he can then assure us that the claimants will be dealt with in a just and fair manner, he can come back to this House and ask for a ten-week disqualification period for quitting the job and we might support him. We will support the minister to the hilt, but he should not sell us a pig-in-a-poke, telling us to do this, until he does what I suggest.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I often had the opportunity to see the difficulties of the unemployed, mostly because of disqualification and I will express some views concerning the usual method of the UIC officers.

As I said, we should change the legislation to give to well intentioned civil servants the possibility to better understand and help the unemployed. Unfortunately, it is not the case because of Bill C-69. We still have too many articles that will do nothing but complicate things for the unemployed.

It is already complicated enough so why should we not improve the legislation, make it more flexible, more acceptable, better adapted to needs? It is not the responsibility of the unemployed if the general economic system supported by the majority of the government does not create enough jobs for all Canadians willing to work. They should not suffer from a bad legislation which is not even adapted to their needs.

Bill C-69 includes amendments concerning the period of disqualification that goes up to six weeks for claimants who voluntarily leave their employment without just cause or who lose their job for misconduct or refuse suitable employment or have failed to apply for suitable employment that is vacant. Who decides if it is suitable employment? Commission officers or Manpower Centre officials should not be left to decide by themselves. However, it happens very often and they neglect to avail themselves of an opportunity to get suitable employment. If the man is broke he can hardly be expected to travel 25 miles to see if the job suits him. Apparently it is something that the civil servants or technocrats who draft the legislation do not understand. I guess they do not understand anything about it since they turn out legislation that is irrelevant or hardly applies at all. But in any case, it brings a lot of trouble to the unemployed.

In that respect, may I remark that it is not up to the Unemployment Insurance Commission to determine all by itself whether a job is suitable or not, and that it is not normal either for the commission to force a claimant to accept any kind of employment with any employer.

It is not normal, and it all depends on the officer the unemployed person will meet. I am not criticizing civil servants as a whole. There are some good ones among them. I usually say a number of them perform their task well, others are not as good, and others still are definitely third rate.

If the unemployed worker meets an officer who is unwilling to cooperate, imagine how difficult it will be for him to explain himself. The worker should have the right to know whether he is replacing somebody or if he will be in a new position. If he is taking someone else's place, he should be given the opportunity to know since when and why the job has been vacant.

Such matters do not seem to overly concern Manpower Centre officers. It would be normal for the worker to know also if there is an association of employees or a union in the corporation, and to be given the name of an officer with whom he could have an interview. He has to get organized. He cannot leave just like that to take an employment without knowing whether it will be interesting or not. He should also be told about the policy of the corporation with respect to working hours, and about overtime pay.

Surprisingly enough, when it comes to searching for employment, the Unemployment Insurance Commission does not seem to be satisfied that Manpower Cantres are qualified enough, as it does not recognize the fact for a claimant to have registered with a Manpower Centre and regularly renewed his job request as a job search proof.

● (1750)

Why do we have those fellows in Manpower Centres? They cost a lot to the Canadian taxpayers. I am not too critical of the organization as a whole but why? They should also be able to operate. Their only purpose is to take the names of the local people and say that in such an area there is no work, or to record names and maintain a file of what they call a "job bank" set up with posters that can be checked on the way in. These banks contain a list of jobs available in the area and outside but these people cannot indicate them themselves.

Last spring, there was a boy in my constituency who was very willing. To wit, he went to Alberta. Two of his friends were completing school at 17 and wanted to go to Alberta. I contacted the Rivière-du-Loup Manpower Centre to know whether there were accommodation for young people willing to work in an English-speaking province. They wanted to learn English at the same time. No there were no opportunities, no facilities, nothing doing. Well the boy, to show he was willing, came with me to Ottawa and I took him to the train at 9:59 p.m. one evening and he spent the summer in Alberta. He found work through his own research.

But the people in Rivière-du-Loup Manpower Centre get paid with taxes collected from every Canadian, and I am not referring only to those in Rivière-du-Loup. Unfortunately those are the facts. They did nothing to direct that boy to a job, although he was willing. He wanted to go, he did so, he came back and he earned a certain amount of money, all that on his own steam, without the help of government bodies supported by the taxpayer to guide workers to areas where they have a chance to find a job.

Secondly, I appreciate the reasons why the Unemployment Insurance Commission does not rely on facts supplied by the claimant who made regular applications to the Manpower Centre. The UIC say this is not enough. They must go to Michel Brochu and Diane Chevalier, they have to look on the spot, in actual areas where the unemployment rate now exceeds 20 per cent. People are having all kinds of difficulties with the present freight transportation system, for instance in the furniture industry, as concerns custom duties, in the leather industry, and therefore these people are not ready to hire new employees because they do not need them for the moment. They can only make reasonable profits to keep their present employees.

In these circumstances, why are the Unemployment Insurance Commission employees not trained and not given instructions to better understand the unemployed. Each time I go home during the weekend, I go to the arbitration board of Rivière-du-Loup. Why? To defend the unemployed of the area who have difficulties, and I hasten to say that the Rivière-du-Loup office is not any worse than the others because it is staffed with understanding people, but they have to act on bad legislation and no effort is made to change it, and it is regrettable to note that a group of members, who seem in a hurry to leave, are passing such badly written legislation and are leaving the unemployed to face all the hardships and consequences that follow a period of unemployment.

If Manpower Centres are not sufficiently efficient, they are very quick to report to the Unemployment Insurance Commission any job refusal on the part of a claimant. And not much care is taken to find out why he refused the job.

There is another way for the officials of the commission to disqualify a claimant, and that is on the basis of a presumption. And the definition given by the dictionary of the word "presumption" is as follows:

PRESUMPTION: The taking of something for granted; the inference that a fact exists, based on the proved existence of other facts.

It is therefore urgent to curb the habit of the commission to send disqualification notices to claimants based on insufficient evidence, including presumptions.

The following situation is not uncommon: A claimant receives two notices from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the first one disqualifying him under section 41 (1) because he voluntarily quit his job. The second notice is one of disentitlement under section 25A, namely that because the claimant voluntarily left his job it is an indication that he no longer wishes to be on the labour market. Consequently, he does not meet the requirements of section 25A. That is the deduction that is made. He may have had several reasons for leaving his job but they do not try to find out why. As soon as he leaves his job, conclusions are drawn. The same phenomenon of presumption will be found in several situations, especially as regards disentitlement under section 25A of the act, and section 145 of the regulations.

Here are two other frequent examples: a claimant is found disentitled because he was absent for two days. Anyone who is somewhat involved in getting guys out of that ridiculous social condition of distress must have witnessed similar situations. That happens regularly. My area is no different from others. So, because a claimant was absent for two days, no matter what the reasons for his absence are, in several cases the UIC officer will serve notice of indefinite disentitlement because his absence tends to prove that he is not on the labour market. Let us consider a bit the notion of sadism in that. The other case will be that of the claimant who did not prove his availability because he did not actively look for work during the period going from x to z. Quite frequently, the officer at the unemployment insurance office will serve notice of indefinite disentitlement under section 25A and 145(9) of the regulations. In the three cases I just quoted, quite often the officer bases himself on indications and sometimes on actual facts which would have no incidence if before making a decision the insurance officer had pushed his investigation further.

Let us take the case of the claimant absent from his area for two days. Often we found that unemployed persons returned to areas where they had worked for a long time to look for a job when they had recently moved there. In that case if the officer had inquired about the reasons for his absence not only would he not have disqualified him indefinitely but quite likely he would simply not have disqualified him. But he did not try to find that out. It is a lot less tiresome to handle a file like that and say, we are not paying anymore. It is clear that he would receive reports, that he would write what he would want on it, but we are not sending cheques.

In any event, to our mind, in the three cases described here, an honest summary is made of the thousands of decisions taken by the civil servants of the commission. Let us have a look at what Superior Court Justice André Nadeau had to say about presumption.

Excerpt from the Traité de Droit civil du Québec, Chapter 1x, and I quote:

A presumption is a consequence drawn from a known fact and applied to an unknown fact. The unknown fact must be the true object of the proof, but to demonstrate it, recourse is had to another fact which is more easily proved. There is displacement of the object of the proof since the proof, instead of bearing directly on the law generating fact, bears on another related fact.

That the principles of logic should intervene here, nothing is more obvious. But what is less so, is the fact that prudence demands, in some cases, that the judge keep out of a judicial debate some facts proposed as basis for presumption even though they may be logically pertinent.

So, the practice I alluded to earlier, to which the employees of the commission resort because they have on their hands a poorly drafted act, is clearly contrary to the legal tradition whereby no one is considered guilty until proven so.

It often happens that the arguments of the officials are solely based on the intentions of the claimants. It nevertheless remains that the umpires, in spite of their shrewd and wise impulses, too readily judge on intentions. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROPOSED DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF PIGGYBACK TERMINAL IN WINNIPEG PENDING ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion relates to the CNR locating a piggyback terminal in southwest Winnipeg adjacent to a residential area and as the Department of the Environment study completed earlier this year is now obsolete due to the Minister of Urban Affairs granting a loan to the Manitoba government to build housing west of the terminal and in light of the fact the city of Winnipeg has sent a telegram to the federal government protesting the terminal being located on Wilkes Boulevard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House instruct the President of the Privy Council to rescind the Order in Council granting CNR the funds to build and that the Ministry of Transport direct CNR to halt all proceedings and calling for tenders until the Department of the Environment completes a new environmental study and that alternate sites be explored.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST THAT RAILWAYS BE ORDERED TO RUN TRAINS ON ALL SUBDIVISIONS UNTIL WHEAT BOARD ORDERS FILLED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a problem that you and I and many farmers in western Canada have. In view of the fact that the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways have decided not to run trains on certain branch lines in western Canada for weeks or months this winter and that this arrangement is agreed to by the Minister of Transport who also happens to be in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, would you believe, and since farmers are being told they must deliver carload lots of malting barley to another rail line, resulting in 30 to 40 miles of extra hauling, and hundreds of Canadian Wheat Board shipping orders being unfilled, if I may have uanimous consent from both sides of the House I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House calls upon the Minister of Transport, in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, to require the railways to operate trains throughout the winter until all outstanding wheat board shipping orders on any given subdivisions have been filled.

Mr. Speaker: The motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED STUDY OF DAIRY POLICY AND CONTROL OF DAIRY PRODUCT IMPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the alarming content of the federal government's new dairy policy which seeks to reduce production of industrial milk by at least 10 per cent while increasing the import of dairy products, primarily cheese, and since this will inevitably result in a substantial reduction of the producers' revenues and automatically raise consumer prices, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House consider immediately this new dairy policy which affects very unfavourably all Canadian producers and consumers in an economy which is already stifling them, and that it require the government to change immediately its agricultural policy and take such measures as controls over imports which protect Canadians rather than weaken them in several ways.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

SUGGESTED REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which is self-explanatory, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister will be addressing the nation on television and radio this evening for purposes of outlining to the Canadian people the nature of the cuts in government spending in keeping with the government's declared policy of restraint, the House requests the Prime Minister to include in his remarks the setting of a personal example to the Canadian people by declaring a new year's resolution to curtail and cut the staff size and the expenses of the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices to a reasonable level, to further demonstrate personal restraint by announcing reductions in the heavy expenditure from public funds at his official residence of 24 Sussex Drive and, finally, a statement that personal holidays in 1976 would be paid for by himself rather than continue poaching from the taxpayer's pocket.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF CRITERIA USED IN ASSESSING APPLICATION FOR GRADE SEPARATION PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the sensitive and prompt response to the request for a grant to build an underpass at the St. Clair Avenue level crossing in Scarborough following the accident which caused nine fatalities, and in view of the fact that several other communities in this country are also in desperate need of approval of existing plans for similar construction, especially the city of New Westminster, where plans and applications have been on file since 1967, where continued injury and damage occur and where the greatest bottleneck in the lower mainland of British Columbia continues to foul up traffic to an incredible degree, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Minister of Transport immediately formalize existing agreements where the need has already been demonstrated, and further that the whole subject of rail crossings be forthwith referred to the Standing Committee on Transport for examination and reassessment of priorities and criteria presently employed by the government in making decisions on these matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MR. MARCHAND ON CO-OPERATION WITH FORCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister without portfolio. Would the minister welcome the opportunity to clarify his position with respect to co-operation with the RCMP in the production of records and documents and the giving of evidence and, if so, can he state briefly the situation at the present time with respect to his dealings with the force since I believe another officer and a commissioner had a meeting with the minister yesterday afternoon?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the situation is crystal clear at this moment. We co-operate with the police. I think that now we only have to wait until they bring some results.

Mr. MacKay: Is it the minister's position that if the RCMP will specify the areas in which they are interested, he will let them have all the documents which they request relating to these areas and if the minister is unwilling to permit voluntarily the RCMP to remove large numbers of files, as they have done with respect to other persons, he would permit them to sort through any files they wish in his office?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that his question is hypothetical.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INVESTIGATION WILL PROCEED EXPEDITIOUSLY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): My final supplementary is for the Solicitor General. Having heard the position of the Minister without Portfolio with regard to his willingness to co-operate with the RCMP, I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he can tell the House that as the responsible minister he is now satisfied that this investigation is able to proceed as fully and expeditiously as necessary?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—ALLEGED USE OF WARRANTS RELATING TO COLLECTION OF FUNDS FOR LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. On December 1, as recorded at page 9573 of Hansard, the Solicitor General said flatly, and I quote: "There is no investigation of Liberal party fund raising practices." I wonder how the Solicitor General squares that statement with the fact that certain of the warrants obtained by the RCMP in the course of their investigation refer very specifically to material—and again I am quoting—relating to the collection of moneys for the Liberal party.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, search warrants often ask for evidence in the hands of people who could be witnesses but not suspects, and that is what I was pointing out to the hon. member.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I wonder if I could then ask the Minister without Portfolio whether, in view of the negotiations which are now taking place with the RCMP, he believes that he is not obliged to make full disclosure of documents to the RCMP on a principle akin to the apparently discredited doctrine of executive privilege in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FEDERAL LEVEL FOR ASBESTOS FIBRES—POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON NATIONAL LEVEL

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries) in his capacity as Acting Minister of the Environment. In view of the announcement he made recently of national levels under the Clean Air Act for two fibres—asbestos being one, for which we congratulate the minister—and in view of the conflict which arises throughout the various provinces in terms of fibre levels—for example, in British Columbia the level is five, and there are various other levels—can the minister advise what instructions he is giving industry as to which of the levels it should comply with? Secondly, is there yet any federal-provincial agreement in terms of the enforcement of the national level in provincial areas?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me credit which belongs to my predecessor, the present Minister of Communications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I merely came in and signed the press release. I will study the question of the hon. member, ascertain the details of the consultations with the provinces and try to give him a substantial answer tomorrow.

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF FULL-TIME MINISTER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): At the present time we have a problem in Port Hope with regard to the closure of the school and a house as a result of radiation poisoning. Mercury poisoning is occurring throughout the country, with some cases being confirmed, and at Syncrude there is a problem with SO_2 emissions. Will the minister continue to take this portfolio as his second responsibility, or will there be a full-time minister of the environment to deal with these very serious problems which are arising?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Acting Minister of the Environment): I suggest to the hon. member that this question would be better asked of the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Why don't you ask him?

POSSIBILITY OF SETTING NATIONAL STANDARDS FOR SO_2 EMISSIONS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): In view of the belated actions of the previous minister in declaring national standards for asbestos under the Clean Air Act, does the minister intend to set a national standard with regard to SO_2 emissions, because the emissions out of the tar sands will be well above federal studies? Will the minister now take action to declare national standards with regard to SO_2, which he has the clear power to do under the Clean Air Act?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Acting Minister of the Environment): I will, of course, take the suggestion of the hon. member very seriously.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF DAIRY POLICY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that the industrial milk producers in Quebec are now experiencing a drop in their revenues with reference to the grants they received in October on 75 per cent only of their production, and considering that an economist named Barry Proud has said that the dairy farmers' revenues will greatly drop in 1976, can the Minister tell the House whether he will introduce amendments to the dairy policy which will take into account the actual production costs in order to prevent a drop in the revenues of those producers who make up an essential sector of this country?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the dairy policy we have sets production goals for dairy farmers and it is one of the most fair policies in the world. I wish hon. members would realize that our dairy producers are amongst the highest paid in the world. We are paying exactly what we said we would pay on the production we requested. In April this year we told them how much money we had and we told them we wanted 100 million cwts. of milk. That comes to about $278 million. If they produce above that they will have to produce it for less money.

[Translation]

ACCEPTANCE OF DAIRY POLICY BY QUEBEC PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I understand perfectly well the Minister's answer and explanations, but in view of the general concern, justified or not, about the decrease in the dairy farmers' revenues that is expected in 1976, I would like to ask the Minister whether the president and the membership of the Union of Quebec industrial milk producers agree with the Minister's decision and the dairy policy, and if so, could the Minister recommend that the membership be kept informed as to their union leaders' stand.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we met with the provincial ministers of agriculture yesterday. One issue we discussed was the dairy policy for the coming dairy fiscal year, 1976-77. They know that new quotas will be set for the dairy year which begins in April of 1976 and they will have to produce according to those quotas. They know the programs that were suggested last year. There is an escalator clause and the CPI indexing formula in the contract which is still to be used. We can only use so much milk in Canada and only so much for industrial milk products for the world market. It does not make any economic sense to produce more than we can market. That is the problem we face. At the present time farmers are producing more than the market requires. They have increased productivity about 6 per cent over what it should be.

POSSIBLE MEETING WITH DAIRY REPRESENTATIVES TO EXPLAIN POLICY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a supplementary question.

In view of the answers he gave to the hon. member for Bellechasse, given the fact that Mr. Pigeon, former President of the Milk Producers Federation, has branded the present government's attitude towards the dairy industry as a blatant sabotage of this industry, and considering also the risk of the disappearance of the cheese industry in Canada, can the minister assure the House that he will meet with the officials and try to work out a solution with them in order to dispel these concerns and this obvious danger?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with the dairy farmers concerning the skim milk powder problem. Through consultation we were able to work out a revolving fund. We have already had meetings with them concerning the importation of speciality cheeses. I was asked publicly by Mr. Pigeon what I said to the dairy farmers, and I challenged him to a public debate any time on the question of what we are doing about the dairy industry in Canada. We have done more than any other government in the history of this country.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

HEALTH

ALLEGED CONTAMINATION OF TURKEYS BY SALMONELLA—ADEQUACY OF INSPECTION—IDENTIFICATION OF AREAS BY CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare is prompted by the statement made today by the Consumers' Association of Canada, to this effect: that the Consumers' Association of Canada has conducted microbiological tests on major brands of turkeys purchased in three major Canadian centres and a large number of samples were found to be contaminated with salmonella bacteria. In view of that statement issued by the Consumers' Association of Canada, is the minister in the position today to assure the House and country that there is adequate inspection capability in the department and that the confidence of Canadians will not be undermined by—may I say—this irresponsible kind of statement? It is irresponsible inasmuch as the association refused to identify the sources of contamination.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for advising me of his question. On November 20, this year, I published a press release entitled "The Salmonella Problem" in which I indicated that foodborne salmonella infection is a serious matter, and outlined what steps are being taken by the government and what steps should be taken by consumers, to reduce the incidence of this infection, particularly in the consumption of poultry products. In addition—but for the postal strike—I had intended to distribute with family allowance cheques this month an insert entitled "Bird Watching", to advise consumers about this very situation.

Salmonella contamination from poultry has been with us for many years. The problem is of serious concern to the government and people of the country, but the matter must be handled responsibly. I hope this issue will not be treated sensationally, but handled responsibly. The resolution of this matter will take years and I repeat, the problem has been with us for many years. The issue must be handled responsibly by consumers and also by those concerned about this particular subject. I refer the hon. member to the press release I issued on November 20 on this subject.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of responsibility, and as the Consumers' Association, by making that sweeping statement which fails to identify the three major centres, has put the whole country under the suspicion of contamination, if I may put it this way, may undermine the turkey industry when sales will be at their peak and undermine the confidence of Canadians who buy this traditional meat, will the minister press the Consumers' Association immediately to identify the three major centres referred to in their press release of today?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Consumers' Association of Canada plans to hold a press conference on Monday, when they will probably identify the individual centres. I will be pleased to get in touch with them about this. But I would remind the hon. member that salmonella contamination is widespread and not limited to the particular centres yet to be identified. It would be most unfair and irresponsible at this time to induce panic in the consumer market dealing with this particular product. Poultry and other foods as well must be handled properly, as most consumers have been doing for years. So far, the incidence of disease resulting from contamination has not been unduly serious in this country, but as I said, it is of concern to us.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF—SUGGESTED RESTRICTION OF FOREIGN IMPORTS AND RENEGOTIATION OF UNITED STATES QUOTAS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the extremely important and urgent meeting which is to take place tomorrow between the minister and United States Secretary of Agriculture Butz relating to the egg issue and beef and veal quotas, and in view of the present somewhat strained relations between our two countries concerning the trans-shipment, or at least, substitution of Australian carcass beef sent to the United States by way of Canada, will the minister consider supporting the Canadian Cattlemen's view that unless some form of voluntary restraint against foreign imports is instituted, or a Canadian import law enacted, we may not have access to the United States market for our Canadian beef and veal?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure I do nothing to offend the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, because they do not want government interference. I will study their brief. They are continually saying that. Yet, judging by what the hon. member said, it sounds as if they want more government interference. We shall discuss with the secretary of agriculture of the United States tomorrow all aspects of the beef trading program.

● (1430)

Mr. Hargrave: Will the Minister of Agriculture also give consideration to urging Secretary Butz that their import quotas against Canadian beef, which will end December 31 next, should be renegotiated at or near historical trade levels similar to Canada's five year average pattern instead of a 12 month August to August quota?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I met with the United States secretary of agriculture at the FAO conference in Rome where we had a frank discussion. He sent a letter to me around November 15 which I received the other day. We had already made arrangements for a meeting in Washington. He suggested that when we meet in Washington we have a frank discussion on all agricultural problems facing the two nations. We will talk about our trade problems, their tariffs and our tariffs to see whether we can come to a proper trade arrangement that does not hurt one nation or the other.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLEGED SLOWNESS IN IMPLEMENTING POLICY IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Further to the question put yesterday to the acting minister by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, Mr. Nicholson, the minister who was and is speaking for the Liberal government of Nova Scotia recently expressed great disappointment with the inaction of the minister in Nova Scotia. I realize this lack of action could easily be seen as the responsibility of the predecessor of the present minister, but what is the minister's response to the very important statement made by the Nova Scotia government?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to say that we are no happier than need be ourselves about the delays in the negotiations and the fact that we have been unable to sign a greater number of secondary agreements with the Nova Scotia government. Three agreements are now being implemented; they are very important, one especially, and the amounts of money involved are also quite considerable.

We are still negotiating with the Nova Scotia government with a view to coming up with concrete proposals. We trust we will be in a position to announce concrete proposals within the next few weeks, or months. Still, I should in no way want to blame the provincial government for the delays. One thing is sure, however: before reaching decisions, we should be satisfied with the information requested from the provincial governments, and should make sure that our files are complete and that we are in a position to arrive at a decision which, in the final analysis, will respect the provincial authority while also taking into account the priorities of my department, which is willing to intervene in matters concerning economic and industrial expansion.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be sure that I clearly understand the minister. Is it his contention that the problem is due to a lack of effective co-operation by the government of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Lessard: I would not say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a lack of co-operation but we must recognize that some situations have changed, that the questions under study contained elements which have evolved in the last few months so that the provincial government had to review some of its own priorities. We have been informed of this necessity and the necessary steps are now being taken so that the new priorities of the government of Nova Scotia will be taken into consideration.

Oral Questions

BILINGUALISM

RECLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN POSITIONS AS BILINGUAL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I noticed he left the House a few moments ago; I wonder if he can come back immediately. In his absence, I will put my question to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the fact that French-speaking civil servants in the Montreal area are showing legitimate impatience six years after the adoption of the Official Languages Act, can the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board report progress to the House on the reclassification of the positions that may be reclassified as bilingual in Quebec, tell us if he is prepared to recognize the principle of a bonus based on the degree of bilingualism required for the exercise of the functions, and whether he has been invited by the regional section of Quebec to meet them in order that, while negotiations are under way, the same climate of co-operation and the same quality of service be maintained in both official languages?

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will take up a number of the points raised by the hon. member with the minister. However, I would like to go on record as pointing out there have been a series of consultations involving staff associations and Treasury Board through the advisory committee of the National Joint Council. No fewer than ten of these have taken place since the month of August of this year. These consultations are still necessary. No doubt the minister will have further observations to make.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST THAT MANAGEMENT NEGOTIATE WITH CERTIFIED BARGAINING AGENT FOR FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, but may I say that the issue might also be of concern to the Minister of Labour. In view of the unsatisfactory state of labour negotiations between the employees and management of Air Canada's finance branch, will the Minister of Transport discuss with Air Canada the desirability of negotiating directly with the certified bargaining agent, namely the Canadian Airline Employees Association?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I consider the matter of proceeding on this question to be very much a matter for the internal management of Air Canada. I recognize, however, that there are some questions which have been brought to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Labour, and he has a role to play in this regard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I then ask the Minister of Labour whether he is using his good offices to get the two sides to this dispute to negotiate in accordance with the established principles of collective bargaining.

[Mr. Lessard.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, the mediators or industrial consultants in my department are familiar with this matter about which the hon. member is concerned. They are prepared to be of assistance of any time.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the government giving consideration to the establishment of a Canada-United States economic commission to deal with swings in the balance of automotive trade between Canada and the United States as brought about by the auto pact, such a commission having been recommended by the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association of Canada and the United States Senate Committee on Finance?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this may well turn out to be the next step in the process which is already underway. The hon. member will recall that the President and the Prime Minister agreed some months ago to set up a study of the automotive industry for his information and for that of the House. My officials met with the American officials about a month ago and agreed to initiate studies in parallel. In other words, there is a study going on in the automotive industry in the United States and a similar one going on with regard to the automotive industry in Canada. Once these studies have been completed, and we have a fairly tight timetable to get them completed in a hurry, we will decide on the next step, as to whether some kind of further joint step is necessary. I can assure the hon. member it is being examined at the present time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

USE OF CONFIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS IN COURT CASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is to the Minister of Justice. I raised this matter before. In the case of PPG Industries Limited and Pilkington Brothers versus the Attorney General of Canada, the Chief Justice of Canada criticized the use of confidential income tax information and documents, contrary to the Combines Investigation Act. He said that was unjustified, sordid and sloppy. Has the minister investigated this criticism of his department and can he assure the House and the country that confidential information will not be used again?

● (1440)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I have, Mr. Speaker. I am under constraints as to what I can say, both because of the judgment of the court and because of the further action which Mr. Buchanan may be taking. But as far as I and my officials can control the matter, I can certainly give the assurance that the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act and of the Income Tax Act will be observed by members of the public service of Canada. Because of the nature of the case, I am in the course of preparing a directive to my officials that where there is an investigation which calls for the use of auditors they should be outside auditors and not tax auditors so that there can be no confusion in the mind of the person being audited as to whether it is a tax audit or some other sort of audit, and because Mr. Buchanan may be taking further action, it is the view both of my officials and of myself that I should be advised by outside counsel on the matter, bearing in mind the nature of the case, and I am retaining outside counsel for that purpose.

Mr. Woolliams: Could the minister tell us why the documents were used in that particular case? Is he aware of the concern which will be felt by the average Canadian citizen in filing his income tax returns if they are to be used against him in litigation brought on by the Government of Canada, particularly by the Department of Justice? Why were these documents used and what made the Chief Justice so critical in that regard?

Mr. Basford: Because of the judgment of the Supreme Court and because of further contemplated action, I am under constraint in giving the hon. member the explanations he would like.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INFORMATION OBTAINED IN EXAMINATIONS FOR PILOTS' LICENCE NOT AVAILABLE TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary to the Minister of Transport based on a recent occurrence. Will he assure the House that medical and other information obtained by his department with respect to examinations conducted of Canadian citizens who apply under the licensing requirements for pilots and others in Canada will not be made available to the United States or to any other foreign country in connection with application by Canadian citizens for licensing in those countries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I would be glad if the hon. member would give me details about the matter so that I could better understand his question.

HEALTH

EXPOSURE OF EMPLOYEES OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR TO RADIATION—INQUIRY AS TO TESTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It relates to the continuing problem of waste residue emanating from the federal Crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear, Port Hope. Can the minister tell us whether there has been any collation of personal medical data or any collection of medical case histories from employees both past and present of Eldorado Nuclear?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to point out, first of all, that the problems in Port Hope and to which the hon. member referred relates to waste being disposed of by Eldorado around 1955. Investigations are being carried out both by the Ontario health authorities and by Eldorado Mining at the present time. The health protection branch of my department has offered to assist in carrying out analyses and assessing the health implications if required. It appears that medical tests are not expected to detect any adverse health effect on the school children involved in the area. As far as the mine workers are concerned, I will inquire from Eldorado Mining or from the Ontario health authorities and I will be pleased to inform the hon. member of any information I obtain.

Mr. Lawrence: Do I understand the minister as saying there is some federal agency doing surveillance work or continuing testing of both adults and children in the area who may have been subjected to radioactivity or radon gas?

Mr. Lalonde: There is no federal authority carrying out these medical checks at the present time. Any medical checks carried out are being undertaken by the Ontario health authorities. However, I am advised that the Atomic Energy Control Board is proposing to investigate, with the assistance of my department, areas of Port Hope which may possibly be contaminated as a result of the disposal of waste about 20 years ago. As far as individual medical tests are concerned, I do not know of any being carried on at the present time by federal authorities or by provincial authorities.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF LOCKHEED ORION CONTRACT ON AEROSPACE INDUSTRY IN MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to put to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could we be brought up to date with regard to a matter I have raised once or twice in the past week or ten days, that is, the fair allocation of industrial benefit arising out of the LRPA program, particularly with respect to the aerospace industry in Dartmouth affecting 400 jobs in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful for the opportunity of a private conversation with the hon. member. I have asked my officals to be in touch with the company concerned to determine precisely the basic nature of their interest and concern. I have not as yet received a report. As I understand the hon. member, he is interested in getting some activity into the plant now in the construction phase so that they will be geared to do something on the repair and overhaul. I have conveyed that representation to my officials and when I have an answer I will pass it on.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTION THAT BILINGUAL BONUS PROGRAM BE SCRUTINIZED BY ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the President of the Treasury Board? It is supplementary to that directed to him a few moments ago by the hon. member for Maisonneuve and it has to do with the government's program, presently before cabinet, with respect to bonuses for bilingual public servants. Can the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that any bilingual bonus program for public servants, whether by way of direct pay increases or indirectly through job classification, will be subject to scrutiny by the Anti-Inflation Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the commission determines for itself whether or not it has to intervene. At this moment, I do not know if we will request the opinion of the commission or proceed after agreement with the union. What is important now is to devise a system that would be satisfactory to the government and to the unions representing all employees in the public service.

AIR TRANSPORT

INTRODUCTION OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL IN PROVINCES OTHER THAN QUEBEC

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Since the introduction of bilingualism for air traffic controllers is based on constitutional grounds, can the minister inform the House as to his schedule for introducing bilingual services into airports in other provinces of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The studies which have been carried out relate essentially to the Province of Quebec, although there was an examination of the question in relation to the National Capital Region. The question of any possible extension is a very difficult one indeed because of the nature of the bilingual quality of the controllers who would be required and there is therefore no plan in this regard. Our first and obvious step is to examine the use of both languages in air traffic control in the Province of Quebec, as the statement I made the other day indicates.

Mr. Friesen: Since many of the pilots in the association in Quebec are naturally bilingual and many others are unilingual French, is it not reasonable to suppose it is only a matter of time before these pilots will request bilingual services in other provinces?

Mr. Lang: That is obviously a hypothetical question. The use of English is very desirable, if not essential, for pilots because of the use of English in international flights as a second or alternate language generally; that will still have a bearing on the question.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF OPERATION OF RAILWAY BRANCH LINES IN WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Minister of Transport heard my motion under Standing Order 43 or not, but I should like to ask him this. In view of the fact that the railways propose in the coming months to suspend operations on a number of branch lines in Western Canada, has the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board agreed to this, even though many hundreds of Canadian Wheat Board shipping orders will not be filled as a result.

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the procedures put into effect by the railways to discontinue the movement on certain lines in the wintertime is not a matter which is brought to the attention of the minister for his approval, but is action that is taken by the railways themselves. Of course, this is not new action this winter; it is a thing which has happened for many, many years.

Mr. Benjamin: That is a lot of crap, that answer.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO CURB WASTE OF FOOD

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture who has already received notice of it.

During the recent Canadian Agricultural Outlook Conference, the minister asked the Canadian people to stop wasting food. He also said that with world supplies enabling to survive only 35 days, the situation would be catastrophic if we were to have the same problem with our next North American crops as the Russians had with theirs last year. Given the gravity of these possibilities, could the minister tell this House to what extent, according to him, Canadians will agree to be more reasonable in this respect and can he also say what measures are considered by the government if the wastage goes on?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do have plans. The government has put out publications through different departments on how people can make sure food does not go to waste; by proper storing, proper cooking and by proper buying. I think we can do this by better diets, by eating better and by loving more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY AS TO DAIRY POLICY FOR 1976

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I would like to ask a question which is supplementary to the question of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Considering the present dissatisfaction among industrial milk producers, particularly in the province of Quebec, could the minister tell this House whether, be it the case or not, the leaders of the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers told him that they were satisfied with the new federal milk policies for 1976.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would not go as far as to say that they were satisfied with the effort in respect of the dairy problems we have today. They have done a remarkable job in Quebec as far as selling their own products within their province for consumption is concerned, because the consumption of fluid milk in Quebec is actually up this year over what it was last year. If most other provinces could do as good a job as they have done in Quebec, we would not have the problems we have today.

PUBLISHING

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN CANADIAN CONTENT PROVISION AFFECTING "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in view of the public confusion over the final fate of Time Canada and Reader's Digest in Canada caused by the government's delay in respect of third reading of Bill C-58, could the Secretary of State confirm that the increased representations made to him and the government over the Christmas recess may possibly lead to an accommodation in which the 80 per cent content ruling may be reduced, which would enable Time Canada and Reader's Digest to survive?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, I think the indication offered by the President of the Privy Council yesterday was quite clear, and it had to do with the fact that this House has not been able do deal with the legislative program laid before it, so some items have had to be delayed. Because this bill is a tax bill and has an effective date of January 1, it obviously could be delayed.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the same minister whether the government intends to ignore the representations made by 49 Reader's Digest suppliers who will lose $14 million a year in business due to the closing of Reader's Digest, thereby forcing some of them into bankruptcy?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I have studied all those representations with a great deal of care and I have not been persuaded.

An hon. Member: Scrooge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HIGHWAY SAFETY

GOVERNMENT ACTION WITH REGARD TO IMPAIRED AND ACCIDENT PRONE DRIVERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in view of a question I asked the Prime Minister and his answer, which appear at page 9411 of Hansard, I would now ask the Minister of Transport whether he has been in touch with his provincial counterparts concerning the appalling killing of 6,000 people on Canadian highways and the maiming and crippling for life of 160,000 more and, if so, what can we expect in the way of additional legislation covering the use of alcohol and accident prone drivers on our highway killer strips?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the courtesy of giving me notice of his question. The Ministries of Transport of the ten provincial and federal governments have been concerned about this subject in an organized fashion since early 1974, and following a meeting of the ministers there have been a number of meetings of senior officials to deal with the matter. Of course, this has led to the promotion of such things as the greater use of seatbelts and more attention to drinking and driving laws.

Some of these things are, of course, dealt with in the present legislation before the House in Bill C-71. It is primarily the responsibility of the province to identify particularly difficult strips of highway, but the federal government does work with the provinces in connection with the standards. We work also with international bodies to develop standards. I am happy to say that results seem to be coming in from this in view of the drop from something in the order of 6,700 to 6,200 deaths in 1974 from 1973, and a further drop seems to be indicated in 1975. The 11 ministers together have set a target for specific reduction in fatalities of at least 15 per cent by 1975. All this work will go forward in this way.

AGRICULTURE

COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE OF UNITED STATES APPLE GROWERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OVERCOME

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, because the Canadian apple producers from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia are meeting today in the railway conference room, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. One of the major problems these producers are discussing relates to rail transportation rates and, more especially, to the competitive advantage the United States producer has over the Canadian shipper, of up to 43 cents a box or one cent a pound shipped into Canada. In view of the fact the Minister of Transport has said he can or will do nothing about this and is hiding behind the CTC, will the Minister of Agriculture use his heavy weight in Cabinet to convince the Minister of Transport, the CTC and the railways of the need to do something about this outrageous situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that if there is anything that can possibly be done we will do it. We have met with the B.C. apple producers and have said that if at the end of their market year they can show actual figures of the loss we are prepared to use the provisions of our agricultural stabilization bill to assist.

PETITION PROTESTING CONSTRUCTION OF NUCLEAR BASE NEAR VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the twenty-first report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday we rather got into the Thursday question about the business of the House, but I wonder if I might now ask the government House leader if there have been any changes in respect of the list presented to us yesterday of the bills requiring consideration, namely, C-69, C-77 and C-52. Are there any others that require to be dealt with before the Christmas adjournment?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is possible there will be another bill, but it is contingent upon an agreement among the parties and, perhaps, an order of the House that there would be extremely limited debate. If I do not get that undertaking, I will not introduce the legislation.

INCOME TAX ACT

TABLING OF NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION RESPECTING INCOME TAX

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to lay on the table of the House notice of ways and means to amend the Income Tax Act to impose a surtax on personal incomes. I should like to explain it briefly. The motion tabled proposes the establishment, effective January 1, 1976, of a 10 per cent federal surtax for one year on the portion of taxable personal incomes in excess of $30,000 as a means of further reinforcing the national program for attacking inflation that has been launched by the federal government.

As the House is well aware, it has been our concern from the beginning that the anti-inflation program should be fair, and should be seen to be fair, to all groups in our economy. That is critical to the credibility of the program and crucial to its success. In response to a strong expression of opinion in the Commons and in the country, I indicated some weeks ago our intention of modifying the original guideline proposals as they applied to those in lower income brackets so as to provide for an exemption from restraints for those earning up to around $7,000 annually. Similar considerations have also led to a review by a number of provincial governments and the federal government of the adequacy of existing minimum wage levels.

Those at the lower end of the income scale are already heavily burdened by the sharply rising cost of living, which makes it difficult for them just to provide their basic needs. As the House is aware, my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), tonight will announce a number of spending cutbacks planned by the government in order to restrain the rise of total government expenditures. Those cutbacks, unavoidably, will affect a great many Canadians but particularly those of moderate incomes.

In terms of fairness and equity it is, we believe, only fair that those at the upper end of the income scale, who are able to absorb the impact of rising living costs without undue hardship, should be asked to shoulder some share of the burden. As members are aware, some provinces have suggested that a surtax should be applied against the earnings of self-employed professionals. In our view, however, it would not be equitable to single out the professional group alone for such treatment. We have come to the conclusion that a surtax should be levied on all those in the upper income bracket whether they be professionals, independent businessmen, corporate executives, well-to-do farmers, or senior public servants. While the guidelines do provide for a maximum increase of $2,400, it is fair to ask those who already enjoy ample means to make a proportionately greater sacrifice in the national interest.

As I indicated at the outset of my remarks, the 10 per cent surtax would apply only to the portion of the federal levy payable on taxable income in excess of $30,000. To illustrate, let me take the case of a married taxpayer with two children under 16 who next year has an earned income of $45,000. Under the existing system, he or she would be liable to pay federal tax of approximately $8,000 on the first $30,000 of taxable income and $3,957 on the balance of his taxable income over this amount. The 10 per cent surtax, which would apply against the regular federal tax of $3,957 on the income above $30,000, would come to $396. For a similar taxpayer earning $60,000, the surtax would amount to $998, and for a taxpayer in the $100,000 bracket it would amount to $2,786. It is estimated that the surtax would apply to approximately 170,000 taxpayers and yield around $115 million in additional revenue to the federal treasury. Our decision to propose imposition of a surtax was not motivated by revenue considerations. The amount of revenue generated by the surtax is not insignificant, however, and will help to reduce our future cash requirements and our resulting demand for funds from the capital market, which in turn will contribute indirectly to easing of the inflationary pressures.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding let me acknowledge that I propose this measure with mixed feelings. I am concerned that our tax system should not bear so heavily on those earning higher incomes as to stifle the individual initiative and enterprise that provides such a powerful driving force behind our economy. At the same time, I am very conscious of the necessity of subordinating many considerations to achievement of our overriding objective as a nation of bringing inflation under control.

I believe that the surtax will not prove unduly onerous in its impact during the limited period it is in effect. I think most members of the House will agree that it is fair and reasonable to expect that those enjoying an abundant share of the wealth of our economy should make a proportionate contribution to the successful outcome of the fight against inflation, a fight in which they have an important stake.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister was good enough to make a copy of his remarks available to me about half an hour ago. Even so, he will appreciate that I have not had an opportunity to give this matter the very profound reflection that he has. It has occurred to me, however, that there might be one unanticipated side-effect of this proposal which has not occurred to him: this might turn out to be a disincentive to the number of people looking for my job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is also, Mr. Speaker, a disincentive for me to meet the wishes of my Liberal friends opposite by staying on. Of course, a tax measure which touches a relatively small proportion of the population that is generally considered to be rather well off will not bring about widespread protests through the country. There may be some touch of sorrow for the top civil servants who will have to return more of the $6,000 salary increase which they received recently. I should like to say that generally it is my belief that Canadians who will have to pay this extra taxation which is being imposed would do so very willingly if they were satisfied that the government would administer the affairs of the country efficiently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I believe those Canadians, like other Canadians, would consider a little extra taxation a small price to pay for a really effective fight against inflation and against waste in governmental institutions.

Mr. Speaker, we will hear more about this aspect this evening in connection with the delightful program the minister has arranged for us at eight o'clock. I would point out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), however, that this measure is not a substitute for the control of professional fees.

● (1510)

Mr. Broadbent: Right on.

Mr. Stanfield: Indeed, those Canadians and those Canadian governments who have been concerned that some professional people may put up their fees will be even more concerned following the presentation of this resolution to the House today. I believe that a very large proportion of professional men and women in this country will voluntarily comply with the guidelines of the government, but a number of provincial administrations are apparently concerned that some will not, and the very fact that the Minister of Finance is proposing to reduce the income of anybody who is considering increasing his or her professional fees will be an additional incentive to such people to put up their fees. In that sense, this resolution will have an inflationary tendency rather than a deflationary one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: So I must say that as a control mechanism, a restraint mechanism, the minister's proposal is a bust. On the other hand, whether or not it has any beneficial psychological effect will depend upon whether the government is able to get a grip on its inflationary program and make it seem somewhat effective. In short, the acceptance of this tax will depend upon the performance of the Minister of Finance and of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), and we will be watching him tonight with a very sharp eye indeed.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that this is a shock to me. It is an absolutely cheap way for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to make a headline. This is a hoax; it is a joke; it is a move by the Minister of Finance that is not serious, because working people know their salaries will be rigidly controlled within the guidelines. The minister wants to appear to do something to control professional income, but that is just not the case in the announcement he made. The new surtax does not apply unless your taxable income is at least $30,000 a year. It does not apply to members of parliament in this chamber, it does not apply to senators in the other place, and it does not apply to the great majority of people who make big incomes in this country. It merely applies to any professional people who can get more than an increase of $2,400 a year.

The minister wants us to believe that this will be a 10 per cent tax on professional people who are increasing their income by more than $2,400 a year. I want to quote from the minister's own paper. He gives an example of how this tax will work with respect to a family consisting of a husband, wife and two children, earning $45,000 who has a taxable income of $40,320. His federal tax, before the surtax, is $11,957. He did have an exemption which is called "surtax threshold" of $8,000, which is exempt as a deduction to begin with. That is how you get to the $30,000 taxable income in the first place. That excludes me, as a member of parliament, and other members of the House. The amount subject to the surtax by the man making $45,000 is $3,957. His surtax is $396. I have had half an hour to make this calculation, and I find that in many cases people paying the additional surtax will be saving more in the increased indexing of income tax this year than they will be paying in the increased surtax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The person making $50,000, with two children, in 1976 over 1975, because of the indexing of income tax will save $700 this year, and the additional tax put on by this government is less than that. That is not what is happening to working people in this country. The person who made $50,000 last year, because of indexing saves $796, and in 1974 over 1973 would have saved $500. In the last two years a person making $50,000 has a saving of $1,996 because of indexing. Here he will have to pay a few more peanuts because of what the government has brought before the House today. It is an absolute farce, an absolute joke and an absolute shame.

This is not a 10 per cent tax. For example, if a lawyer is increasing his income from $40,000 to $45,000—lawyers will increase their salaries from $40,000 to $45,000 this year by dealing with more wealthy clients—and he is in the 40 per cent tax bracket, he pays a 10 per cent surtax on the portion of his income from $30,000 to $45,000, or on his taxable income, which is around 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the actual increase. This is a farce. That lawyer will pay around $150 on his $5,000 increase this year. It is a cheap hoax that the Minister of Finance is perpetrating on the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Our party has said that any person who has an increase of more than $2,400 this year over last year should have that amount taxed back at the rate of 100 per cent. Working people cannot rig those guidelines, so why should wealthy people have this loophole and be allowed to have an increase away in excess of $2,400?

I have one final point to make on the minister's statement. He said the announcement that is coming tonight will unavoidably affect a great number of Canadians, but particularly those with a moderate income. He is saying that he will hurt those people. He is also saying that the decision he has made this afternoon will not really hurt the professional people. He said in his statement:

Our decision to propose imposition of a surtax was not motivated by revenue considerations. The amount of revenue generated by the surtax is not significant—

The announcement today is a farce by the government and should be treated as such.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we understand very well that this measure does not satisfy socialists because it is not hard enough on the well-to-do, while Social Crediters would have preferred a measure presented today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) which would have helped the have-nots without depriving the haves.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, this measure is only the prelude to another measure which will be announced very shortly, probably tonight, and which will also enable the Minister of Finance to strangle small-earners. The measure announced by the Minister of Finance is a small blow striken at the rich in order to strike a bigger one at the poor tonight.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that this measure does not, on the other hand, apply to the financial institutions of the country, that it applies only to private individuals, because if I refer to the figures provided to us recently, banking institutions made the largest profits in Canada in 1974-75, and yet the legislation just announced by the Minister of Finance will not affect these mandarins.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will further undermine the initiative of those who, I admit, have the largest revenues in Canada; it will further undermine their initiative, which will subsequently affect and impoverish the poor. The best way to affect the poor is to destroy the initiative of the rich. I am referring here, Mr. Speaker, to a very well known saying by a former President of the United States: We cannot have prosperity if we discourage initiative. We cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.

That is what this legislation is trying to do today: weaken the strong or try to make us believe that we are going to help the weak, when it is impossible to do so, because until now, all the taxes or surtaxes which have been voted in this House in the last 20 or 30 years have always weakened the strong without ever helping the weak. He said that it is impossible to help the poor by destroying the rich. A man cannot avoid troubles by spending more than he earns.

The federal government should be the first to implement what Lincoln used to say: It is impossible to base a durable security on borrowed money. That is what the federal government is always doing. It seems they want us to believe that it is possible to base a durable security in Canada on unceasingly borrowed money. Lincoln also used to say that it is impossible for a man to have character and courage if you deprive him of his initiative and independence.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have time enough to go on quoting other memorable words, but it is deplorable to see that all our legislation tends to undermine the very initiative of those who possess something. And I am not ashamed to challenge what the socialists want us to believe, that it is possible to help the poor by destroying the rich. We Social Crediters do not believe in that; we want to upgrade the poor's standard of living without taking anything away from those who possess something. And when the Minister of Finance is bringing in such a measure, he is fully agreeing with the socialists who want to destroy the well-to-do in order to enrich the bankers whose profits of billions every year are never affected, as we can see in any government's bulletin or in any press release by the newly established Anti-Inflation Board. All our legislation adversely affects the low-wage earners as well as the affluent people, but never those who control the haves as well as the have-nots, the very ones who control the country's finances. And I regret that such a bright Minister of Finance serving such a beautiful country as Canada might be inclined towards socialism rather than individual and free initiative.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, if I could get his attention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has been our practice since last Easter that any statement made by a minister is followed by a question period of short duration in which half a dozen hon. members are able to pose questions to the minister. I therefore recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Broadbent: My colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), has pointed out that this measure will have virtually zero effect on professional incomes as they relate to the guidelines program. I should like to ask the minister if this is all the government proposes to do, and whether this is the only instrument it will introduce to deal with professional incomes in this country within the framework of its guidelines program.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The proposals have been very extensively indicated in the guidelines and in responses to questions, and there will be further details when the regulations are tabled this evening.

Mr. Broadbent: In terms of information provided by his department, could the minister inform us of, on the average, the level of income at which this proposal would become operative? We know that it is at $30,000 taxable income, but would it be accurate to say that no Canadian earning less than $40,000 per year would be affected?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That will depend directly on the circumstances of the individual. For example, an unmarried person with neither the benefit of the married exemption nor an exemption for children, obviously will pay the surtax on a lower level of gross income than would be the case of a person who had these various exemptions available.

Mr. Broadbent: Could the minister inform the House how he arrived at the $8,000 threshold figure?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This represented a relatively substantial income level above which we felt the people at that level could, as I said, without undue hardship pay the additional taxation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the minister said that this surtax would bring in revenue of approximately $150 million in the coming year. Could the minister indicate what estimate the government has made as to the loss to the federal treasury as a result of a continuation of indexing of income tax in 1976?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should correct the hon. gentleman. The level indicated in my statement was $115 million. I cannot give precise figures with regard to the indexing.

Mr. Saltsman: Could the minister remove some of the confusion about how he arrives at his decisions? A few weeks ago he was saying that he is not interested in surtaxes. We have heard various statements from the other side of the House against surtaxes. What has happened that changed the mind of the government about bringing in the surtax?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I can understand why the hon. gentleman may have had difficulty hearing my statement, but I pointed out that there will be some announcements made affecting a great many other people in the economy, including those with moderate incomes. It seems to us that in respect of that latter group, since they will have a shortfall in income because of decisions the government will be making, so particularly those at the higher income level who are less dependent upon revenues from the government for their incomes should make some contribution to the over-all national revenue.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise the House whether personal income taxes are a greater source of revenue for the government than corporate income taxes? If so, will the minister include in his forthcoming budget measures to increase, if necessary, corporate income taxes on multinationals and reduce personal income taxes, so as to set some sort of balance?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that corporate income taxes for instance are the equivalent of taxes paid on services, to the extent that the cost of such taxes are reflected in the increased cost for goods and services consumers must pay. The proposed income tax would affect only individuals in the higher income braket. An individual must pay it himself and not pass it on other Canadian consumers.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that financial institutions are allowed to deduct 1½ per cent as contingency reserve, and that the former minister of finance had already included in his May 1974 budget, I think a measure to reduce this rate to one half of 1 per cent, could the minister tell the House whether or not he intends, in his forthcoming budget, to raise this rate granted to financial institutions back to 1½ per cent?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the hon. member is referring to the reserves for instance the banks are allowed to keep to cover their losses. This is a suggestion which I feel will be worth considering when the time comes in 1976 for the government to introduce a bill to amend the Bank Act.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: For the last question I recognize the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie).

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, does this surtax supersede or in any way change the $2,400 maximum guideline already set for professionals only?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, the $2,400 guideline is not set for professionals only; it is a restriction on all recipients of earned income whatever that might be, whether corporate executives, members of the various professions or independent businessmen. That restriction will continue. What this particular measure applies to is all incomes of individuals whether or not they have enjoyed an increase in revenue during the year 1976. Someone who has not gone up from $35,000 to $40,000, who remained at the $35,000 income level, will still have to pay the surtax.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister was good enough to send copies of his statement to the various parties and I notice that two pages were attached to it, one entitled "Summary of the Surtax Proposal" and the other entitled "Surtax Payable at Various Gross Income Levels". I think I am correct in saying the minister did not read those two pages. It seems to me that the information in them is important and is really part of the statement and ought to appear in Hansard in some way, either as having been read by the minister or as an appendix. I refer to the table that shows that a person with a $35,000 income will pay an extra tax of $10 a year.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to table that, but unfortunately I do not have copies here. But I would be quite happy to table it and have it appended to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For table referred to, see Appendix "A".]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a similar point of order. I spoke yesterday to the government House leader, and unfortunately he could not give me consent at that time. The question concerned the documents tabled by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) which purportedly was correspondence from the Commissioner of Official Languages who is an officer of this parliament. I wonder if he is in a position today to advise whether those documents could be appended to Hansard, or shown in today's Hansard in some form? Appending them would be acceptable.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to append the two letters, if that is what the hon. member refers to. I would not think it necessary to append the excerpt from a newspaper report which was included.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For letters referred to, see Appendix "B".]

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I indicated that today I would seek an order of the House to return to routine proceedings at 8 p.m. for the purpose of a statement by the President of the Treasury Board and for the tabling of certain documents by the Minister of Finance. I would ask whether an order of this kind could be approved now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations, and we are prepared to approve.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree.

Mr. Beaudoin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed, and so ordered. At eight o'clock tonight this House will revert to routine proceedings for the prupose of receiving a statement by the President of Treasury Board and the tabling of certain documents by the Minister of Finance. I think the House ought to be clear that this is an interruption of the regular procedure and ought to be done without prejudice to the position of whatever might be the order of the day at that time in respect to its continuing presence on the order paper. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the usual rule about statements will apply.

Mr. Speaker: Other circumstances this afternoon notwithstanding, there certainly would be no indication to the contrary.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE OFFICE, DRUMHELLER, ALBERTA

Question No. 3,117—Mr. Schumacher:

1. On what date was the Customs and Excise office of the Department of National Revenue (a) opened (b) closed in Drumheller, Alberta?

2. For each of the years it was in operation, what were the costs for (a) rental space and utilities (b) salaries (c) how many individuals were employed?

3. On what date was the Zenith toll-free telephone number substituted for the manned office in Drumheller?

4. By year since instigated, what was the cost for service on the Zenith number and when was it discontinued?

5. What alternate service is now offered to residents in and around Drumheller?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Public Works as follows: 1. (a) May 1, 1925. (b) May 15, 1969.

2. (a) There were no lease costs as the space occupied was in a Crown-owned Building. The estimated cost of utilities for the 714 sq. ft. of space occupied between the period May 1, 1925, to May 15, 1969, is as follows: 1925 to 1935, $150 per year; 1936 to 1946, $200 per year, 1947 to 1957, $225 per year; 1958 to 1968, $250 per year; 1969, $40 per year. 13. Since January 1, 1970, how many (a) inmates (b) staff of Dorchester Penitentiary have been treated medically for injuries (c) how many of these injuries resulted in charges being laid?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Solicitor General and Statistics Canada as follows: 1 to 5 and 7 to 13. The information requested is not readily available to provide an answer to these questions. A response to these questions would require a file search of approximately 5,000 files and would involve the employment of one person for approximately 44 weeks or the equivalent of approximately $12,000 in salary. In view of the above, the government does not feel justified in undertaking such a search.

6. The information required to answer this question is not readily available as relationships would have to be made between police reports on crime occurrences, court returns on persons convicted and correctional data on parolees. Statistics Canada does not currently possess the facility to relate these series.

REVENUE YIELD OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Question No. 3,190—Mr. Reynolds:

1. How much revenue has been derived from the capital gains tax since its inception?

2. What are the estimates in revenue from the capital gains tax for the year 1975?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Question No. 3,231—Mr. Coates:

1. Was the contract for office plants, flowers, decorative plants, etc., and their maintenance on behalf of the National Museums subject to tendering and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, who was asked to submit a bid and what was the amount in each case?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows: There were four contracts placed for plant maintenance during the fiscal year 1975-76. The first one was subject to tendering. 1. (a) Only one firm was asked to quote on the second, third and fourth contracts because it is apparent that this service is only available from limited sources and past experience has indicated that it is in the best interests of the Corporation to renew previous contracts which have proven satisfactory. (b) The first was awarded to Fines Flowers Ltd., the low bidder @ $40 per month against Vlaming Tree Nursery (Bid $285 per month). Imperial Nursery (no bid) and Artistic Landscape (no bid). The second contract was for $28 per month and Fines Flowers Ltd. quote was accepted. The third contract was for $24 per month and Fines Flowers Ltd. quote was accepted. The fourth contract was for $190 per month and Fines Flowers Ltd. quote was accepted.

2. It would require an inordinate amount of research to obtain the information requested as until recent years records were not maintained in such a way as to allow easy retrieval of the data in question.

3. (a) In the current fiscal year to date, April 1, 1975 to November 1, 1975—$2,366. (b) Nil.

4. Would it be disadvantageous for the NAC to reveal the total costs of preparation and production of each of the operas specified in Question No. 3,079 and, if so, in what way?

Question No. 3,475—Mr. Stevens:

1. What productions or programmes were funded by the estimated $775,000 spent during the Festival Canada 1975 programme, and how many performances were given of each?

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—BUDGETS FOR OPERAS

Question No. 3,476—Mr. Stevens:

1. For each opera identified in Question No. 3,079, what was the expenditure budget figure prepared in the planning by the National Arts Centre Corporation?

2. Were any of the budgets exceeded by actual expenditures and, if so, by what amount?

3. What is the policy of the NAC regarding the advance costing of production and are any corrective alterations in production planning procedures made as a result of budget overruns?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows: 1. See answer to part 4 of Question 3,474.

2. Yes, by $54,183 as of October 31, 1974.

3. The Centre employs a 3-stage procedure in estimating opera production costs. Stage 1 is based on research and analysis and takes into account every item which will affect the eventual cost of production, e.g. the number and required quality of principal singers, chorus, dancers and extras, musicians, artistic and support staff, stage-crew and technicians; number of sets, costumes and properties; hours of cast, technical and orchestral rehearsal; royalties, freight, fringe benefits etc. These costs are projected some 18 months to 2 years ahead. Stage 2 follows selection of artists and artistic staff and determination of artistic concept. These decisions require some adjustments to each opera's budget. Stage 3 occurs when final designs have been received and costed. Adjustments are made both to designs and to budgets at this point and the final line-items set. During the production period all costs are recorded daily and weekly and are constantly monitored in order to keep budgets. The following corrective steps have been taken. The supervision of the work and expenditures of all departments providing services to the Festival Department has been placed with a senior officer; departmental responsibilities have been clarified; a production coordinator, responsible for monitoring costs, has been added to the staff of the Festival Department.

OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL MEDICINE

Question No. 3,487—Mr. Jones:

1. What department or agency is responsible for occupational and industrial medicine in Canada?

2. If no federal department assumes any responsibility in this field, what does each province contribute?

3. What regulations, if any, have been adopted federally and provincially with respect to the general field of occupational and industrial medicine?

4. Have any regulations been adopted which cover the manufacture of vinyl chloride?

5. Has there been any research to discover whether vinyl chloride is a possible cause of angiosarcoma and, if not, is any contemplated and on what date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: 1. 3. Of the total amount accepted for payment in the Province of Quebec under the federal-provincial agreement, what amount will be provided by the (a) government (b) provincial government?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The federal government has agreed to share costs incurred by Quebec as a result of the 1974 floods. The costs are to be shared in accordance with the established federal policy under which the amount of the federal financial contribution is determined by the application of a graduated population-based formula to the actual eligible costs incurred by the province. Accordingly, the amount of the federal financial contribution cannot be accurately calculated until a claim is received from the province and the provincial figures audited. A claim from the province has not yet been received, but the province has recently indicated that it will soon be submitting its claim for payment of the amount due, and that it is now ready for a federal audit. It is expected that the audit will be completed by the end of the 1975 calendar year.

CBC—PRESERVATION OF ARCHIVAL MATERIAL

Question No. 3,560—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Did CBC destroy one hour special documentaries covering seven years of the Dominion Drama Festival now Theatre Canada and, if so, what is the explanation for such a policy and were Theatre Canada officials asked for their advice?

2. What is CBC's policy regarding preservation of archival material?

3. Does CBC maintain archives?

4. Will the Public Archives be contacted before decisions are made about destruction of tapes?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Videotapes of CBC's coverage of Dominion Drama Festival finals have been erased to allow re-use of the tapes. Black and white television recordings on film exist for most of the final events over the past eight years. In three cases, where there is no record of the total production, color film segments of the dramatic portions exist. Theatre Canada has not been consulted.

2. CBC has developed a comprehensive policy governing preservation of archival material. In general, programs are selected for retention in accordance with a number of criteria. These relate to such matters as the history and culture of Canada, and broadcasting as a means of entertaining and informing people. The selection of programs for permanent retention is limited by the funds and space available for this purpose.

3. CBC maintains film and tape archives for radio and television at its production centers.

4. CBC and Public Archives of Canada signed an agreement in February 1975 providing for close consultation between the two organizations about retention of programs.

[Mr. Lefebvre.]

Hon. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ADD NEW CLASS OF INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 17, 1975, consideration of Bill C-69, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and of motion No. 16 of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Charles Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned yesterday, we were discussing the hardships experienced by the unemployed because of complexities in the act regarding unavailability as well as periods of disqualification and nonpayment.

And on that occasion, I recall that I mentioned there were three classes of civil servants: one that works well, another that works at delayed action and the third that does not work at all.

Yesterday evening, while looking over my heavy mail dealing with unemployment problems, I found a fourth class, the one that works backwards. And I shall prove to you how this can happen.

Mr. Beaudoin: Those who work backwards are always the highest paid!

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): I have on hand the text of various decisions given by an umpire. Please note that this means that the claimant has been subjected to a number of annoyances, and that he has tried to meet the requirements of civil servants who administer a legislation far too complicated. He has waited a long time, several months before his case was put to the umpire, and very often, and I have proof of that, the decisions taken by the UIC officials are being amended by the umpire. All this proves beyond any doubt that complications deriving from a badly drafted legislation are bound to bring about wrong decisions. The term "available" as defined in dictionaries does not imply the responsibility to look for work, it implies that one is willing to work.

For instance, the fireman is available for work, his main job is to help fight fires. But he is not expected to look for fires to extinguish and much less to cause some. Therefore, the fireman is available, is waiting, according to the definitions found in dictionaries.

The power granted to the Unemployment Insurance Commission to make certain regulations concerning the proof required is derived from section 58 of the act.

Proof that he meets the requirements entitling him to receive benefit or continue to receive benefits . . .

It is a well known principle in law that a regulation cannot exceed the scope of the act. What is complicating things in the unemployment insurance is the fact that once the act has been passed, regulations have also been established at irregular intervals that amend the act or give a different scope to the text of the act.

In section 25 three conditions are set: capability of work, availability for and incapability of work. Regulation 145(9) by associating availability and incapability of obtaining employment and by requiring as evidence of those two conditions usual and reasonable inquiries to find employment extends the scope of section 25a), because the word "availability" by its own definition does not include the idea of proceedings or inquiry, it is rather for incapability obtaining employment that evidence of proceedings to obtain employment must be given.

There is quite a difference in the interpretation of the definition. Another important restriction is made in section 25 of the bill by deleting in regulation 145(9) the word "suitable" before "employment". To obtain employment or to obtain suitable employment are two different things. Suitable employment is that which can be reasonably expected as a result of one's own qualifications. The word employment, without qualifier, does not take into account the qualifications of the claimant.

In my opinion, it is not necessary to consider the incapability of obtaining employment and the capability of work.

Section 145 of the regulations extends the meaning of the word "available" as used in section 25 of the bill. It is defined as follows in Webster:

Available: that is accessible or may obtained

Used momentarily without effective service. According to that definition "available" means that is accessible or may be obtained. It does not infer reasonable proceedings unless they are taken by the commission and that the claimant is ready to accept employment proposals. In my opinion, such a condition only applies to prove the incapability of obtaining suitable employment. I feel that the evidence required in section 145(9) of the regulations is outside the scope of section 58 of the legislation for the word "available" appearing in section 25. "Available" according to the Webster definition implies an expectancy, a state of passivity. This is, in my opinion, contrary to reasonable and usual efforts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): I thank my colleagues for giving me the opportunity to continue my explanations about the difficulties that result from this complicated legislation for the unemployed. The proof required under section 145 of the regulations does not apply to availability because otherwise the regulations would be stricter than the act under clause 25. So they wanted to complicate everything and the legislation is drafted in a style that is not understandable to workers. I mentioned this on more than one occasion and the very clear proof I bring today is likely to clarify the problem.

If unemployed workers are disqualified by officers when they submit their claims and then manage to meet the required formalities and wait out the delay set out to go before the board or referees, then the decision of the officer is maintained. If he is lucky to be supported by a member of the union or a member of Parliament who is rather well disposed towards the unemployed that guy will go up to the umpire. In many cases, the umpire decides to amend the decision of the members of the board of referees and the decision of the officer who let the unemployed suffer during six or seven months. So that is the kind of legislation we do not want to pass; that is the kind of legislation we want to see amended because it results in too many hardships for unemployed workers.

As I said yesterday, the unemployed are not responsible for the unemployment that exists now. So, since they are not responsible for it the administration, the government in the final analysis supports the cause of the difficulties generated by unemployment; it must at least try to find a formula to help, through understanding legislation, workers who are faced with this problem. Why does that exist? Hundreds of officers in all unemployment insurance offices are there to accept claims for benefits, check and then send letters and all sorts of reports—there are 20 to 25 forms prepared in advance, and it is only a matter of adding the name of the claimant. Those forms include restrictions most of the time.

I have the opportunity to discuss those problems when I am actively involved in them rather regularly; I would not want by the facts that I am mentioning people to have the impression that the officers at offices in my area—Rivière-du-Loup and Lévis—are worse than others. I get along rather well, my relationship with those employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is good. However, it is the law that is too complicated, and that is what we would want to have changed, and if most citizens, members of parliament better understood the situation of the unemployed, the hardships he goes through because of the complications resulting from a situation that he did not contribute to create, I am convinced that legislation could not be accepted without amendments. I would amend it anyway.

● (1550)

I still have much to say on that subject and I expect to continue. I shall not exaggerate as this House was kind enough to give me a few minutes more but to conclude I shall quote from the decision of the umpire.

We must establish if the claimant was available for work according to section 25(a) of the legislation.

And this was not in my area, but in the Montreal area.

Lets us note what the umpire said:

In its majority decision, the arbitration board noted that in most places where an application was made, experience was required.

She had looked for employment but the employers had asked if she had some experience related to the job. As she did not have enough experience, she was disqualified. That's all. But the umpire realized the absurdity of the situation and tried to find a solution. He added and I quote:

I am convinced that it is absurd to ask a claimant to look for employment and then to hold against her the fact that she was refused employment because of her lack of experience. This line of argument on the part of the board reveals a more serious lack: the lack of basic justice.

And we should note that the words of the umpire applied to all those who studied the file of the claimant. It was studied by civil servants and then by members of the arbitration board. As I could see myself, many decisions of the arbitration board are made in advance. It might be audacious to say this, but I think it is true. The matter is studied before the claimant appears before the board and their decision is already made. He did not make enough efforts, he did not take the necessary steps and then they make a decision that cause the unemployed to suffer and they sow the seeds of discontentment and revolution in Canada. You cannot keep people in poverty that long. This government will have to find some other solution.

An hon. Member: That is true!

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): I will end my statement on that particular item by quoting, since that has become as widespread as the difficulties of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, an editorial of November 4 1974 on CJRC entitled, quote:

"UIC-no bargain! . . ."

We have already on some occasions underlined the almost overall lack of efficiency in the UIC throughout Canada.

When I deal with another item, I will quote certain situations which occured in Chandler, in the Montreal area, in the Northwest Territories, and I will have positive proof to give. The quotation goes on:

Unemployment Insurance Act

In a previous editorial, we dealt with the lack of understanding and irresponsibility of a number of officers in the UIC as well as the arbitrary rulings they make more often than other, thus crushing the rights of unemployed workers who become the actual slaves of that plan. . . which in fact is theirs! You will remember a few weeks ago we mentioned a confidential, internal document of the Unemployment Insurance Commission which said that it was none of civil servants' business to tell people concerned when it was time to file a benefit claim or urge them to do so. . . or to inform them of their possible entitlement to benefit.

Good! That may be clever, but unfortunately this situation has been going on for too long. In that respect, a guideline will have to be sent out to all employees of the UIC.

An hon. Member: It is still going on.

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska):

The document also says that the claimant who pleads ignorance of the provisions of the act and the ensuing duties and obligations cannot have good excuse for his negligence. We are treating people as society's garbage when unfortunately they happen to be unemployed. They also think that the hundreds of thousands of unemployed in Canada should be experienced parliamentarians fully conversant with the intricacies of such legislation as the Unemployment Insurance Act.

But here is something else. A document prepared by the CNTU indicates that almost $36 million have been overpaid by the commission during 1973, due to mistakes on its part. And that because very few claimants know the duration of their benefit period and generally they are left unaware of their rights and obligations. As a result of its bad administration, the commission requires all claimants to return overpayments. It is a harassment policy for which they are not responsible at all, but for which they suffer the consequences.

Certainly, there is something wrong in the Unemployment Insurance Commission and we must clean the place to put an end to such situations. The faster the better!

And today, they try to proceed quickly. They would like this bill to be passed as quickly as possible. Indeed a number of members are as much in a hurry to leave on holidays as I am. But the Unemployment Insurance Act is not suitable for Canadians because it is too complicated and we must amend it. And I hope that those who have some responsibilities and who take to heart the well-being of our workers who are facing problems because the administration does not give them the opportunity to work, will be prepared to stay here as long as the act will not be amended.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now proceed to motion No. 17.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Was it not the decision of Mr. Speaker that at this point four motions would be put for debate? Should not all four motions be put now?

Mr. Alexander: That is correct, Mr. Speaker; motions Nos. 17, 18, 19 and 20.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves:

Motion No. 17.

That Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 22.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) moves:

Motion No. 18.

That Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 22.

The hon. member for Hamilton West moves:

Motion No. 19.

That Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 36.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North moves:

Motion No. 20.

That Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 36.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be too long with respect to the motions placed on the order paper on behalf of my party. Similar motions in support of my motions have been moved by the NDP.

Mr. Rodriguez: Come on!

Mr. Alexander: They are the same motions. What we are talking about is the benchmark. If the hon. member would only realize what is happening on the order paper in terms of what his party is doing, he would not be saying, "Come on!"

When the white paper on unemployment insurance was brought into effect by way of legislation in 1971, the then minister responsible for the implementation of the new Unemployment Insurance Act was most concerned about government participation in the scheme. He indicated that we had a tripartite arrangement. After considerable research and input from several departments, by the academics and others all over this country, the government, in its wisdom, felt that the period at which time it should be involved with unemployment insurance, in terms of additional expense, administration of benefits and what-not, would be when unemployment insurance reached 4 per cent. There is no question about that.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)).]

At that time the Economic Council of Canada indicated that full employment was, in the round, 3.6 per cent to 3.8 per cent. At that time we questioned the then minister in terms of the effectiveness of the 4 per cent unemployment insurance benchmark which he was bringing in showing whether in fact there was concern by government about the need to create full employment. We set it at 4 per cent. It appears to me that at that time the government did not recognize that the Economic Council was saying 3.8 per cent. Well, we harangued and we fought and we carried on, and in the long run the 4 per cent figure was reached.

● (1600)

All hon. members who were members of the committee at that time thought the government could be taken as telling the truth and that it would stand behind this particular benchmark. We had thought, as a result of this 4 per cent that the government had indicated, that 4 per cent was an ideal figure for the government to have in mind in terms of unemployment. As a matter of fact, the then minister, and I am quoting him, when commenting on the self-financing aspect of the white paper said:

> The government is not only willing to help the unemployed and the less advantaged by providing a system of income support during an adjustment process; it is also ready to assume the cost of extra unemployment insurance benefits when the national unemployment rate exceeds 4 per cent . . . This policy is perhaps one of the most interesting in the entire proposal. It clearly establishes the government's responsibility for the financial support of a national unemployment insurance program over and above the self-financing aspect.

In other words, below 4 per cent it was up to the employer and the employees under the tripartite arrangement to be responsible for the cost of unemployment insurance, and at 4 per cent and up the government would come in both in the initial benefit period and the extended benefit period. Now, in their usual manner of a 180-degree turn, or flipflop, taking the phrase which is more appealing, they have said, "The economic factors and the worldwide implications have led us to the conclusion that the old benchmark is no good any more. We must have another one on an eight-year average." This means that rather than having the benchmark at 4 per cent, it has moved up to something like 5 or 6 per cent this year—and the way the government treats employment and unemployment, we can expect that figure, based on an eight-year average, to move up.

It seems to me the government has done two things. First, it has opted out of its responsibility in terms of fighting unemployment. That is obvious because the benchmark has gone up. Second, it has indicated that it is not really concerned about fighting the abuses. This has been pointed out on several occasions, particularly by two or three of those who appeared before the committee in terms of giving us their expertise. I would quote from the first paper presented by the Canadian Council on Social Development dated November 20. I read from page 4 where we find: "Some Comments on Specific Proposed Amendments Contained in Bill C-69."

> The most significant change in financial terms is the provision whereby the 4 per cent threshold for determining at what point the government should assume the additional cost of insurance benefits would be altered. The current focus and rate of unemployment would still apply in the case of extended benefits but in the case of additional benefits an eight-year moving average is proposed which would lift the "trigger point" to approximately 5.6 per cent in 1976.

In addition to making an already complex piece of legislation even more complicated, this formula has all the appearance of a shell game. There are a number of elements of shiftiness in the proposal. First, the government is attempting to show its good faith to the general public in reducing expenditures when all it is doing is shifting its committed expenditures unilaterally to the other two so-called partners, the employees and employers, in financing unemployment insurance.

Then they say:

Second, we are concerned particularly about the increase in cost passed on to the employees. Although we recognize that employer contributions will also rise, we doubt whether many are under great illusions as to who will ultimately pay for those contributions. We would agree with David Dodge when he wrote in the March edition of The Review of Income and Wealth: "Both economic theory and the weight of empirical evidence indicate that 100 per cent of these employer contributions . . . are shifted back to the employee and not borne by the employer". The employee bears the cost either through his wages or as a consumer through higher prices for the employers' products.

I would also like to bring home another point with respect to this increased premium. It is registered in the same brief on page 5. Mr. Reuben Baetz, speaking on behalf of the Canadian Council on Social Development, states:

It is a moot point whether the 14 to 21 per cent increase in premiums for employees can even fall within the federal government's proposed guidelines on wages and prices.

I hope the minister will be answering that point, because it seems to me we are heading for something like a 55 per cent increase in premiums. I want to put on record another statement coming from the Canadian Labour Congress. I am reading from its brief of November 20. Mr. Chafe of the CLC gave of his time to attend the committee and tell us what he thought about the amendments. Speaking about the benchmark, he said—and these are really my main points with respect to this iniquitous portion of the bill:

This proposed change has two effects. First, it reduces the government's expenditures, giving an image of restraint. In fact, of course, the government is merely shifting the costs, via the hidden tax of premium payments, on to the private sector. Second, the government is redefining full employment from the former already too high level of 4 per cent to whatever unemployment has in fact been.

These are further criticisms expressed by a responsible organization. I should like to go back to another important point in the brief of the Canadian Council on Social Development. It indicated that the first instance of shiftiness was related to premiums and spoke of "an element of shiftiness". Then Mr. Baetz indicated there was another element of shiftiness when he said:

The other element of shiftiness in the change in financing the unemployment insurance fund is that it implies a continuing abrogation of the responsibility of the federal government for establishing full employment conditions. The minister has alluded somewhat vaguely to changes in the structure of the Canadian labour market as justifying a new and presumably a higher benchmark for normal rates of employment. I have grave suspicions that the Economic Council of Canada's current study of the labour market will support this rationale and lead to a second adjustment in their original 3 per cent target. One can only interpret this as an accommodation to past failure—

What is wrong here is that the government's archaic approach, in terms of fiscal and monetary policy in attempting to defeat high unemployment, has in effect resulted in some evidence of its ineptness and inability to deal with the problem of unemployment. Therefore, because they cannot do it, because they do not have the brains or the policy to do it, they want to move that benchmark up in order to save face in terms of their own involvement. This is wrong, because they indicated to us at one time that the benchmark was 4 per cent. But what does it do? It does not only move the government, within the scheme, to another level but it imposes a regressive tax on the employer and the employee.

We have just heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) indicate that there will be 10 per cent surtax on those who are fortunate enough to be making $30,000 a year. Thank goodness they are working. Thank goodness that the way the government is operating, they do not all quit and go on unemployment insurance. In any event, here is a tax which came in just today. Wait until the people hear about that. Wait until they really understand what has happened to the Unemployment Insurance Act in terms of this amendment.

So at this time we have another regressive tax. Back in 1971 the premium for the employee was only 9 cents per week for $100. In 1974, within three years, this had gone up to $1.40 per week per $100. By July of this year it had gone up to $2.59 per $100 per week, and now according to the announcement by the minister the other day, on January 1, 1976, it will go up to $3.30 per $100. The minister says that is only pennies because he has a formula whereby it is added and subtracted and subject to a lot of computation by the experts in his department. He says the people do not mind because on ratio it only amounts to a few pennies. But we are not talking about pennies; we are talking about dollars.

Mr. Andras: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If I understood the hon. member correctly, I think he would want to correct the figure. I believe he said it was to be $3.30 per $100. That is incorrect. Assuming the passage of this bill, it is likely to be $1.65 per $100 per week of earnings from the employee, and possibly $2.31 from the employer per $100 per week.

Mr. Alexander: I am pleased to have the minister correct me in this regard. However, it doesn't matter very much what you do with my figure—in any event, it is too high and that is my point. I do not want these silly interventions in an attempt to check me up on 50 cents. I would welcome serious interjections. My point is that as a result of the ineptness of this government, these people will have to pay more in taxes. What this government should really be doing, if it is concerned about high costs and high expenses—

An hon. Member: Refer to the bill.

Mr. Alexander: Why don't you go back to sleep? You haven't made any contribution to this debate yet, and I resent interjections from an hon. member of that sort.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Would the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) please direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: I was speaking to the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker. Let me try to move forward in my remarks, because we all know we are pressed for time. I should like to make some salient points for the edification of not only the minister but the people of Canada. What this government should be doing is looking at the rules of the game. It is in this respect the government has gone wrong. This government came out with a cosmetic approach to a very serious problem which resulted in shafting our senior citizens and the poor. We have gone through that exercise, but we have not directed the government's attention to the eight-week eligibility period and the number of weeks an individual can obtain unemployment insurance benefits after being involved in the work force for that eight-week period.

The minister says the government is looking at the benefit structure. He says he is going to bring in something—I do not want to misquote him, but I think he said he intended to bring in some "serious amendment or a "very significant" amendment. Either one will do. The fact of the matter is that this bill does not do a doggone thing in facing the problems which exists in the unemployment insurance scheme today. We are aware of this, and for that and other reasons we will vote against the bill on third reading.

There is one other thing the minister should be directing his attention to that is of extreme importance. There has been no recognition of the total family as an income unit. Has the minister thought about this, or is this part of the benefit structure to which he has referred? Is this another matter he is thinking about, or should think about? I hope he will give this matter consideration in his benefit structure review. What is the situation in respect of seasonal workers, many of whom earn up to $30,000 a year during a very limited time in the work force, perhaps seven or eight months? I am not suggesting it is wrong for them to be involved, but I want the minister and his officials to advise me and the people of Canada about what is going on.

In summing up, I have really just two or three points. It has been agreed upon, understood and generally accepted, that the benchmark for unemployment accepted by the government is 4 per cent of the labour force. Over and above this figure the government has to step in and make contributions. We reject any new formula which the minister envisages over and above this amount, and in this regard I say the government has been less than honest with the Canadian people. We resent this proposal for another reason. We resent any regressive tax being placed on employers and employees. I wonder how long employers can put up with intervention by this government. Such intervention creates a great deal of paperwork for these people. Think of the situation, now, with the government wage and price controls. I do not know how employers will survive with this added burden.

Perhaps I should not say this is all right for the Steel Company of Canada, but at least that and similar companies can afford to hire accountants and lawyers to fill out the forms required by this legislation and other legislation under the restraint program. This filling-out of forms costs money in terms of real dollars and time. What about the small businessman? He has to fill out these forms and already has an added tax in respect of unemployment insurance, all because this minister and this government have not been able to attack the high rate of unemployment. This is a shameful scenario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Alexander: We hear from another hon. member over on the other side, that very beautiful friend of mine. I do not want to start any problems with her.

An hon. Member: You should.

Mr. Alexander: No way! I know when I can win and I know when I am likely to lose. I will just let it stop there before we get another interjection. I hope hon. members realize what is going on. When this bill is passed—and it will be, with this government and its strength over there—and the Canadian people are catching up now, slowly but surely, I hope those members will go back and tell their constituents just what is happening. I hope they will tell their constituents just how honest this government has been in setting that benchmark of 4 per cent and now making their usual 180-degree turn.

I hope they will also tell their constituents how this government has shafted the people by asking for more money to put into the unemployment insurance scheme. This government believes that more money will provide a panacea, but the proposed amendments will do nothing to solve the problems that exist. These are problems of magnitude—and if the hon. member does not understand that now, he has no business being here.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Before I have said even a word I hear some rude interjection by the same voice that was interrupting the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I warned hon. members days ago that such interjections will only lengthen the time I take to discuss this matter.

Mr. Alexander: They don't understand that.

Mr. Orlikow: I invite the hon. member to continue his abuse, because sometimes it helps in making a better speech. The hon. member for Hamilton West and I have suggested the amendment should be left out of the present act. This is perhaps the most important amendment suggested to the 1971 Unemployment Insurance Act because it so drastically affects the method of financing the whole insurance plan. In 1971, the Liberals told us that keeping unemployment low was of major importance. The then minister of manpower said that our system was really on trial, if we could not operate on the basis of lower rates of unemployment than were traditional. When he said that, we had been having a rate of unemployment of between 4 per cent and 5 per cent.

• (1620)

What has happened since we passed that bill in June of 1971? Since that time, the rate of unemployment has fallen below 5 per cent in only one month. In 1971, the average rate of unemployment was 6.4 per cent; in 1972, it was 6.3 per cent; in 1973, it was 5.6 per cent; in 1974 it was 5.4 per cent; and in the first 11 months of this year it averaged over 7 per cent. The monthly rate has been above 7 per cent for the last nine months. It was only slightly below 7 per cent in the two preceding months. For the past six months we have experienced the highest rate of unemployment since the spring of 1961.

If, according to the former minister of manpower when he introduced the major revision of 1971, the whole system was on trial, and if the rate of 4 per cent to 5 per cent in the period before 1971 was on trial, then obviously the rates we have had since then, and this year's rate of 7 per cent, have settled the trial. The system has been judged, and found guilty.

What about the future? What is likely to happen in the coming year? I know the minister would consider any prediction I might use as partisan, so I shall refer the minister and hon. members to a very good analysis which appeared in the business section of the Globe and Mail for November 25, 1975, entitled, "Unemployment Could Become Canada's No. 1 Problem". This article is written by Arthur Donner and Fred Lazar who write regularly for the Globe and Mail. Let me put on the record some of the things these two, quite well-known economists have to say about the coming year:

During the third quarter of this year, Canada's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate averaged 7.2 per cent, the highest rate of unemployment since the second quarter of 1961. The sharp rise in the rate from the 4.9 per cent level in June, 1974 to the 7.2 per cent level in October of this year has been the direct result of the North American economic slowdown.

I hope hon. members will note "North American economic slowdown". They go on to say:

During the past year, jobs have not been created fast enough to keep pace with the growth of the labor force. Despite the popular rhetoric, the unemployment insurance scheme and the various provincial and federal social assistance programs have played no role in contributing to the dramatic increase in the rate.

To digress for a moment, what they are saying is that the minister's Manpower training program, the flexibility in the Manpower offices, all the assistance programs under the Canada Assistance Plan, the programs under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and under the Department of the Secretary of State, do not have any real effect in combating this serious increase in the rate of unemployment. They say, further:

Though it is quite clear that inflation is at present Canada's No. 1 political and economic problem, it is also clear to us that the combined effects of income controls, deliberately tighter monetary and fiscal policies, and the extremely low utilization rates in U.S. industry, provide little optimism for expecting any improvement in our unemployment picture. Indeed, if the labor force growth rate does not moderate significantly during the next two years, Canada's unemployment rate may rise to its highest level since the depression.

They go on to make estimates, some of which I should like to put on the record. They say later in the same article:

—it is quite likely that the unemployment rate will rise further as the industrial recovery gains momentum in 1976. This tendency for unemployment to lag behind the industrial recovery is common during the early stages of an economic recovery. Moreover, as a result of the new uncertainties, the private sector will prove more cautious in expanding its work force than during similar cyclical periods in the past. In addition, the recently announced slowdowns in new jobs in the federal public service will exacerbate the pressures on unemployment.

Let us keep that in mind tonight when we get the statement on how government expenditures are to be cut. The cut in government expenditures will probably add another 1 per cent to the unemployment rate in Canada. Then they go on to give three possible forecasts. I will put only one on the record. They say:

The most likely scenario envisages a moderation in the growth rate of the labour force to 2.5 per cent, and an acceleration in productivity growth to 3.2 per cent, and a further rise in the unemployment rate to an average of 7.7 per cent in 1976. In the absence of controls and the accompanying fiscal measures, the real growth of the economy would have been high enough to prevent the unemployment rate from rising above the 1975 level in this scenario.

In other words, what these two, quite well-known economists are saying is that we will have an increase of at least another half per cent in our unemployment. What does that mean in terms of this bill? Faced with an insoluble dilemma created by their mishandling of the economy in recent years, the Liberals have decided to let the ordinary working people of this country pay for the government's mistakes. The government has been incapable of keeping unemployment down to a reasonable level: indeed, it has gone up. This means big pay-outs from the unemployment insurance fund. Total UIC benefits paid jumped from just under $700 million in 1970 to just under $900 million in 1971, to in the neighbourhood of $2 billion in each of the last three years. In 1975 it is expected to be about $3.75 billion.

With an expected rate of unemployment, for 1976, of in the neighbourhood of 7.6 per cent, the pay-outs will easily go over $4 billion and could approach $5 billion. Under the existing legislation, using the 4 per cent benchmark which the former minister of manpower used and which he was so proud would not go any higher—indeed, he said the objective of the Liberal government would be to reduce that 4 per cent—$2 billion of the 1975 pay-out comes from employer and employee contributions and $1.75 billion comes from the government. If the 1976 pay-out approaches $5 billion, the government's contribution will just about double since it has committed itself to absorb all the extra costs of unemployment beyond the 4 per cent level.

At the same time, the government is faced with the problem of inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that we must deal with this problem. It is the same problem the government supposedly wrestled to the ground in 1969-70, which had the effect of creating a much larger number of unemployed people. Now we are promised more of the same. What will happen? The Prime Minister's friends in the business world have told him that inflation is the most important problem facing this country and that the only way to cure it is to have large lay-offs of workers so that they will not be tempted to ask for raises. "Put the fear of the Lord into the workers," says the business community.

Of course, the government, remembering what happened in 1972, is afraid to do that. Therefore, it figured out another solution: to put a heavy tax on reduced consumer demand—not to do it directly, but to do it in the form of a disguised tax by shifting some of the cost of unemployment insurance on to the backs of working people. That is precisely what changing the 4 per cent threshold in the way in which the minister is proposing will do. As usual, it is the ordinary working man, particularly the working man and working woman in the lower income bracket, who will have to pay for the government's mistake.

Under the act, the government has agreed to pay all the extra costs of unemployment insurance when the unemployment rate goes over 4 per cent. This means that the combined employer-employee contributions must pay for the first 4 per cent of unemployment. The government now says that normal unemployment, if you look at the last few years, is higher than 4 per cent. In fact, the government says that the average rate of unemployment over the past eight years has been 5.3 per cent, and in 1976 over the preceding year it will be about 5.6 per cent. So, says the government, this is where our payments will begin.

Employer-employee contributions will have to pay for the first 5.6 per cent unemployment, rather than just the 4 per cent. In 1977 it will be raised to somewhere around the first 6 per cent. The government claims that this would raise the rate of premiums of workers from $1.40 per $100 to around $1.60 to $1.70, and the government, if they said what they really mean, will shift on to the workers' backs about $500 million in 1976 through increased premiums. Other groups are likely to be closer to $2 per $100, and the government will be shifting about $800 million in 1976 to the people who are paying premiums.

As the unemployment rate goes up, moreover, the amount of the potential pay-out which the government saves will go up as well. In other words, as unemployment increases, as ordinary people do worse, the government will do better. Was there ever a greater perversion of the way in which a government, which supposedly believes in equity, should operate than that? As more people are unemployed, as the rate of inflation goes up, as the cost of living goes up, as people find it more difficult to meet the ordinary basic need for food, heat and shelter, they get rocked by a very sharp increase in a hidden tax, an increase in the unemployment insurance premium.

It is important to note that not only is this hidden tax pernicious, but it is regressive. The UIC contributions come off all incomes at the same rate, and there is a fairly low ceiling on contributions, so the UIC premiums present a larger proportion of the income of lower paid workers than of higher paid workers, and the increase will come primarily out of the pockets of lower paid workers of whom there are many more than higher paid workers.

Compare this increase, which has been estimated to run at between 30 per cent and 40 per cent a year—if unemployment continues at the present rate of increase, as I indicated it probably will—with the way in which the government has dealt with taxpayers in the upper level. We heard today, during the period allotted to statements, the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) supposedly proposing a surtax. I say "supposedly" because I am convinced that the only thing the minister wants out of his proposal today is a headline in tomorrow's newspapers and the lead story on tonight's television news on both CBC and CTV which will read something like "Surtax Imposed to Soak the Rich".

Let us compare this 30 per cent to 40 per cent increase which the minister is proposing in premiums, not just for this coming year but for the next two or three years, with what the Minister of Finance proposed this afternoon. If somebody has a taxable income of $40,000, as compared to a taxable income this last year of $30,000—in other words, if he has an increase in his income of $10,000—the surtax will not apply on the first $8,000. What is the surtax? The surtax is 10 per cent, so he will pay an extra $200 on the $10,000 which he made over and above the tax he will have paid. But keep in mind that one of the bad ideas the government has adopted in the last couple of years, an idea which was first proposed by the official opposition, was that income taxes should be indexed. As inflation goes up, income tax is reduced by the amount of the increase in the cost of living.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

An hon. Member: That was a great idea.

Mr. Orlikow: It sounds great, but let us look at what it does. The ordinary citizen at the bottom of the scale, who pays income tax, gets a tax deduction, as a result of indexing, of between $10 and $35. But for the taxpayer in the upper income bracket with a taxable income of, say, $18,000 and more, we are talking about tax reductions which run literally into hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars—keeping in mind the 10 per cent cost of living increase this year. So when the surtax which the minister proposes today is imposed on 1976 incomes, and when the taxpayer makes the deduction for indexing which was first proposed by the Leader of the official opposition and adopted by the former minister of finance in one of his recent budgets, the taxpayer in the high income bracket with a $40,000 taxable income, about whom the Minister of Finance spoke earlier today, will be paying less money in income tax than he paid in 1975. Those are the facts.

What did the indexing do? Keep in mind that the indexing mostly benefited people in the upper income bracket. Indexing cost the federal treasury $1.3 billion. This is the figure of the people in the finance department in the province of Manitoba. It cost the provinces another $300 million; so we are talking about $1.6 billion. Tonight we will get a statement showing how the government proposes to cut $1.5 billion from next year's expenditures—not $1.5 billion less than we spent last year, but $1.5 billion less than they proposed to spend in the coming year.

I am all for cutting government expenditures which are unnecessary—we will be talking about the kinds of expenditures which should be cut—and I am all for cutting programs which have outlived their usefulness. But what we will get tonight is mainly cuts in major programs which will affect ordinary people. While the government is doing that, it will have lost, through indexing, $1.5 billion in 1975 and probably substantially more in 1976. However, let us consider what some of the other government measures have done. Let us keep in mind that in the so-called tax reform of 1971 the maximum tax on personal income was reduced from 60 per cent to the neighbourhood of 40 per cent, 42 per cent or 43 per cent. That was a very substantial saving in taxes for people in upper income brackets. However, that was not the only thing the government did. The government extended the two-year fast write-off for manufacturers in a recent budget, despite the fact that there was no substantive evidence of its impact as a job creating measure, and despite the fact that even before the extension was announced, capital expenditures in manufacturing, which the measure was designed to stimulate, were expected to increase by 38 per cent. The manufacturing and processing industries continue to pay tax at only a 40 per cent corporate income tax rate, a rate lower than that applied to individuals with taxable incomes of $12,000.

Mining and petroleum corporations have their tax rates increased to 50 per cent under the budget proposals, and then effectively cut to 35 per cent if the provinces do not take up the additional federal abatements. Yet according to the latest available data of a year ago, those industries paid corporation income tax on under 50 per cent of their book profits, that is, profits determined in accordance with sound accounting principles. Although these figures predate the 1972 tax measures, there has been no evidence to suggest any major change has taken place since that time.

Until this year the tax policy of the government has led to increased corporate profits. For example, corporate profits increased by over 21 per cent in 1972, by 35.7 per cent in 1973, and by 33 per cent in the first three-quarters of 1974 over the same period in 1973. There has been a reduction in corporate profits this year, not because of anything the government has done and not because the government overtaxed or undertaxed, but because, as I indicated earlier, there was a dramatic slowdown in the world economy, particularly in those sectors of the world economy in which Canada was involved. There was a sharp reduction in the demand for Canadian lumber, Canadian minerals such as copper, nickel, zinc and iron ore—I could go down the list. As a result of that, corporate profits are down. But if the economy turns up—and the government has been banking for the last year on an upturn in the economy of the United States—the Canadian worker will be faced with a 10 per cent ceiling on increases in wages which he can receive. He will be faced with an increased cost of living which is continuing at the same rate as last year, that is, at about 10 per cent. Canadian corporations will be right back into business, making bigger profits than ever.

Let me return to the clause of the bill to which I, members of our party and, I am happy to see, members of the official opposition take exception because it is a rejection of what has been, at least in words, government policy since the end of World War II, or 30 years. I refer to acceptance of the idea that we in this country, because of our tremendous natural wealth, our well-educated work force and the times and conditions which exist in this country, can aim for and come close to full employment. What is full employment? The Economic Council used to say that it is 3 per cent. Then it said it was 4 per cent. But we can see, from the attitude of the government in this bill and from this particular clause, that if the government talks about full employment—which it does very seldom—it is talking about something around 6 per cent. We completely regret that kind of idea. We say that this country is big enough, wealthy enough and educated enough to have an unemployment rate of not more than 4 per cent. We say that when the government introduces the kind of proposal which is embodied in this clause, it has rejected its commitment to full employment.

Before I conclude, let me put on the record something I did in the case of an earlier clause of this bill, the views of the Canadian Council on Social Development. The Canadian Council on Social Development is a national agency which includes in its membership virtually all the private and public agencies interested in welfare problems and manpower problems in this country. This agency is funded by federal and provincial governments, so I assume by that funding the federal government considers it to be a responsible and knowledgeable organization. Let me quote a few paragraphs from its submission on this bill with particular reference to this clause. It says in part:

> In addition to making an already complex piece of legislation even more complicated, this formula has all the appearances to us of a shell game. There are a number of elements of shiftiness in this proposal.
> First, the government is attempting to show its good faith to the general public in reducing expenditures when, indeed, all it is doing is shifting its committed expenditures unilaterally to the other so-called two partners, the employees and the employers, in financing unemployment insurance.

Later the submission reads:

> —we are concerned particularly about the increase in cost passed on to the employees. Although we recognize that the employer contributions will also rise, we doubt if many are under great delusions as to who will ultimately pay for the employers' contributions. We would agree with David Dodge when he stated in the edition of the Review of Income and Wealth
> ... The low income earner is particularly hard hit and will feel the pinch both in absolute and relative terms more because the maximum insurable income is limited just short of $10,000.

Mr. Dodge also said the following:

> It has occurred to me that it is a moot point whether the 14 to 21 per cent increase in premiums for employees can even fall within the federal government's proposed guidelines on wages and prices because that is an increase in his costs.

That is an increase in his costs, and the increase in the cost of heating oil and gas is in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent, and more coming. We were told by the CBC last night that there will be an increase, announced tonight, of another $2 per barrel in the price of oil and an increase in the price of food which has been estimated for next year to be in the neighbourhood of 15 per cent to 18 per cent. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has told us again and again that, compared with other countries, we are getting cheap food. I have always held the view that the interests of the farmer and the urban dweller are not diametrically opposed and that it is dishonest of people to argue that point. With the exception of grain, the farmer sells virtually all his produce on the Canadian market and he needs the urban dweller who can afford to pay a decent price for it.

● (1650)

I have no complaint with the Canadian farmer. I know that for years he has been receiving far less than his cost of production, but I have been told every day this week by constituents that they cannot afford to pay the increased cost of food. On the CBC national news last night we were told that the support price of wheat for the domestic market will be cut by 25 cents per bushel, and that will mean another cent on the price of a loaf of bread. At the same time it is increasing the unemployment insurance premiums, this government is permitting the cost of food to go up, is encouraging the cost of heating and everything else to go up and is letting people in the upper income brackets off with respect to a tax. I say this is a disgrace. It would have been better if the government had not brought forward its so-called surtax on the wealthy.

I think Abraham Lincoln said that you can fool some of the people some of the time, but you can't all of the people all the time. This government will find that the people of this country are not prepared to accept as truth the nonsense put out by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration

(Mr. Andras) in the last six months. I can think of no proposal more insulting to the ordinary people, no tax so pernicious, unfair and regressive as that which the minister is proposing. He will get it, of course, because of the support of the backbench members of the Liberal party, but that does not mean that he is doing the right thing. It does not mean that this is a fair tax or that the proposal meets the needs of the Canadian people. Because it does not meet the needs of the Canadian people, it is unfair—and because it is regressive it is our intention to oppose this clause and, indeed, to vote against the bill.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this amendment regarding the benchmark clause, I find that this is a very interesting change for the government. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), when he was in charge of putting this revised bill through the House in 1971, was adamant that 4 per cent was the level above which unemployment should not rise and above which it was considered to be a national disaster. But in effect the 4 per cent seems to have been highly visionary. Although, reputedly, there are many hundreds of thousands of unemployed in various parts of the country, it certainly is true that there are many job vacancies. This poses considerable problems for the economy. Canada, of necessity, is a far northern country. We have, in our seasonal work, periods when substantial numbers are unemployed due to the weather, and so on. We rely heavily on export markets, and certain industries such as the grain industry, pulp and paper, lumber and mining which are peculiarly sensitive to the wide swings in prosperity of these industries. I think any discussion of this question is significant when speaking of the benchmark clause.

In effect, the government is going to charge, within a year or two, enough premiums to the employees and employers to take care of the benefit payments exclusive of the extended benefits portion. This would mean that for the year 1974 the initial benefit cost of approximately $16 million would have been covered by premiums. With the rapid rise in unemployment, it is obvious that the government wishes to decrease the burden on the treasury and shift the cost to the employer-employee. It certainly is an indication that this year there is a massive pay out in unemployment insurance, somewhere near the $3.5 billion mark including the cost of administration. On a rule of thumb, approximately 25 per cent of the cost of unemployment insurance is an extended benefit. This means that for the year 1975 the employee-employer contribution, to meet the total initial benefit pay outs, would have to approach $24 million or perhaps $28 million, and $24 million is a 50 per cent increase over what was collected in 1974.

Nevertheless, there is considerable merit in increasing the benchmark so that at least the initial benefit payments are met by deductions; it makes it a better insurance benefit. Increasing the benchmark is not, in itself, necessarily a good thing unless other considerations are met. At the present time, 50 per cent of this year's cost of the benefit pay-out and administration will have to come from the public treasury.

There are large numbers of people who do not qualify to draw unemployment insurance because they are self-employed, retired people or on fixed incomes. They are the ones who, in effect, must contribute through the tax system for the payment of unemployment insurance. I do not believe this is correct, because most of the people are not better off than the beneficiaries of unemployment insurance themselves. Extended benefits, particularly in a time of high unemployment, are still to be carried by the federal treasury and will amount to a substantial sum. This money is raised from the taxpayers at large.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time for private members' hour has arrived.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

AMALGAMATION OF EASTERN CANADA SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY AND CENTRAL AND NOVA SCOTIA TRUST COMPANY

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester) moved that Bill S-29, to enable the Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company and Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company to amalgamate, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, by leave, now.

Mr. Breau moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am willing to allow the bill to pass, but I would like the hon. member sponsoring this bill, who attended committee meetings and is aware of the facts, to indicate briefly what took place in the committee in relation to some questions asked previously.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and to seek clarification. Will I have the right to speak later, or will I end the debate if I speak now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That, of course, is the prerogative of the House. The hon. member, having moved the motion, is deemed to have spoken, and can speak a second time only with the unanimous consent of the House. He can speak now, as requested, but may speak a second time, according to our procedures, only with unanimous consent.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I intended to participate in the debate and ceded the floor to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), thinking he wanted to speak. I shall be happy to speak now, with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its courtesy. Bill S-29 is permissive legislation, not mandatory. It permits two companies to amalgamate. Officials of the companies appeared before the committee of the other place and the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of the House of Commons and answered questions asked by honourable members. Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company is a loan company subject to the Loan Companies Act. Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company was formed under the Trust Companies Act, by the amalgamation of the Central Trust Company of Canada and the Nova Scotia Trust Company, on January 1, 1974.

The Loan Companies Act permits the amalgamation of two loan companies. The Trust Companies Act permits the amalgamation of two trust companies. Neither act permits the amalgamation of a loan company and trust company. If Eastern and Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company are to amalgamate, a private act of parliament is required. These circumstances are set out in the preamble to the bill. The provisions of the bill may be summarized as follows. It permits the amalgamation of the two companies but does not require them to amalgamate. If the two companies are to amalgamate, they shall enter into an amalgamation agreement. For the purposes of the agreement, Eastern is to be considered a trust company. The agreement must set out all those matters which the Trust Companies Act requires two trust companies to agree on if they enter into an amalgamation agreement.

The only major technical difficulty in amalgamating a trust company and loan company is that a trust company is not permitted to issue debentures; instead, it issues guaranteed investment certificates. A loan company may issue debentures; it may not issue guaranteed investment certificates. At the time of amalgamation, Eastern will have debentures outstanding and Central and Nova Scotia Trust will have guaranteed investment certificates outstanding. Section 3 of the act provides for that difficulty. Officials of the companies explained to the Senate committee and House of Commons committee the reasons for amalgamation. In the second reading debate honourable members asked questions relating to the activities of the two companies. I agree that the matter is important, but am not competent to answer questions at the present time. I suggest that honourable members should have asked their questions in committee when officials attended.

I agreed to sponsor the bill, but not because I thought the amalgamation would be better for the Atlantic provinces, for the companies, or for Canada. Obviously, if the legislation created an entirely new corporation, substantiation would be necessary. I agreed to sponsor the bill because if both companies were loan companies existing legislation would allow them to amalgamate; if both were trust companies, existing legislation would allow them to amalgamate; but there is no provision allowing for the amalgamation of a loan and trust company. This, I think, is an anomaly in our statutes. I am, therefore, sponsoring this bill which will allow those two companies to amalgamate, if they so decide. I want to make it clear that I am not making a judgment as to whether it is better for the companies, for the region or for the country if they amalgamate. I suggest that if the shareholders of the two companies want the companies to amalgamate, they ought to be allowed to do so. At present, this is only possible if both companies are either trust companies or loan companies, as I said previously. If two trust companies, or two loan companies in Canada, can amalgamate, I see no reason why a trust company and a loan company should not do the same.

In conclusion, both companies are well known in the four Atlantic provinces and both operate many branches. Central and Nova Scotia Trust operate branch offices in many small communities. There is an office in my constituency, and the company tries—I do not know with what degree of success—to serve all my constituency; indeed, all of northern New Brunswick. The president of Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company told the committee where all the branches are located. I do not have the list with me. I suggest that if the two companies are allowed to amalgamate and so decide, Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company will provide an expanded service to the clients of the companies who now do business with them. At present, Central and Nova Scotia Trust Company operate a larger network of branch offices.

I hope I have answered the honourable member's question. I thank the House for its courtesy in allowing me, technically, to speak a second time.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), and because he is so gentlemanly a member I will not move to have the subject matter of the bill referred back to committee for further study. The hon. member is stretching a point when he says that the companies should be allowed to amalgamate because they want to amalgamate and he sees no reason to stop them. We cannot let our financial institutions always do as they like.

Because they want to do something, that does not mean it is right.

Unfortunately, because of the workings of our committee system, members cannot always attend certain committee meetings and know what is said in relation to questions one may have asked. I have been interested in the proliferation of our financial institutions, but not so much in terms of the services they render. I believe that every small community should have a financial institution that can be used for the needs and services in their area.

● (1710)

Every time we look at it, we get another bank. We will soon have banks coming out of our ears. Over the years we allowed the number of banks to decrease to the point where there were only five major ones. There are now 11, and there are requests for two more banks or pseudo-banks to be instituted. It is important that we consider whether this is, or is not, in the national interest.

In the case of this institution, a trust company—which in many ways is pseudo-bank—is amalgamating with a loan company. Our legislation is such that that kind of merger cannot take place without special permission by way of a bill. We are extending the method that this institution will have to raise money that was not available to them to the same degree when they were two separate parts. My interest, and I am sure this is the interest of the sponsor of the bill, is that the moneys raised in the maritimes by this new institution be available to the people of that area. During second reading the mover of the motion stated that this would allow this new financial institution to go into the money markets of Toronto, Montreal—

An hon. Member: And New York.

Mr. Peters: I am not sure whether the New York market was involved. It was, however, to be allowed to move into some of the other Canadian financial markets. If this institution is allowed to operate in those markets it may have the tendency to drain off the savings in a limited area. The banks do this in other areas. Rather than make expenditures where the loans are made, they invest the money in shopping centres, high-rise apartments and other forms of adventure capitalization. This does not help those in the area where the loans were accumulated.

Members representing constituencies such as that represented by the hon. member for Gloucester or my constituency in northern Ontario must be concerned about facilities to invest in the institution through deposits or otherwise for the people of that area. Top priority should be given to the benefits being available in the area in which the funds are accumulated. That was the justification for the Western Bank, the British Columbia Bank, the ethnic bank—

An hon. Member: The left bank.

Mr. Peters: I am interested in the interjections being made by the Conservatives. I presume that in the near future they will have specific desires to proliferate this field. I think even they would agree that when the rich have a bank of their own, they will want to invest for the rich rather than giving their money to the poor. This has been the wish of those starting new financial institutions. I would have been pleased if the sponsor had indicated whether those discussions took place in committee and whether they received a favourable response from the loan company and the trust company being amalgamated under this bill.

I wish this institution every success. I hope it does make its investments in the maritimes and will continue to show favouritism in the area where the money is deposited, as there is a great need there for capital expenditures.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to calling it six o'clock unless there is any possibility that the House will agree to give third reading to Bill C-208 which is on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). Believe it or not, he has given me authority to move it on his behalf. This is the bill having to do with Heritage Day.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimous consent that we proceed with Bill C-208. Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, under normal procedure we would be proceeding to that item for discussion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On that same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there would be unanimous consent to carry on with the public business and continue with Bill C-69. There would certainly be no objection to that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We would agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House the next item of business should be called.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), because there are no other private bills we must proceed to the second item which is notices of motions, papers, page 64 of last Monday's order paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Item 34, in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Shall the item stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Item 37, in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski). Shall the item stand?

Some hon. Members Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Item 39, in the name of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). Shall the item stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Item 35, in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville?

Mr. Peters: To aid you, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that all the motions stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that all these motions stand?

● (1720)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Speaking on behalf of members on this side of the House, may I say we are completely in agreement. We think it is very important that we continue to discuss Bill C-69, provided there is unanimous support. I agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I thank the government whip. I believe it is an important piece of public business. From time to time private members' hour is sacrificed in appropriate circumstances in favour of public business. In this case there is no sacrifice involved because private members' business has been dealt with. It would not be unreasonable for us to agree, on this occasion at least, that the discussion of public business ought to proceed. I hope the NDP House leader will agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We also thought that Bill C-208 was an important measure. It was dealt with by a committee of the House and reported back, and if the House is not prepared to deal with that business I suggest we should call it six o'clock.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fair to those members who were here before five o'clock and who might be interested in the debate on Bill C-69, and did not know it was to be resumed, if we were to follow the course which has been suggested and continue the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Anti-Inflation Program

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 5.24 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made earlier this day the House will now revert to routine proceedings for the tabling of documents and statements by ministers.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—STATEMENT ON CUTS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, tonight, I wish to make a statement on the steps the government is taking to limit its expenditures during the 1976-77 fiscal year.

The reductions I shall announce can be considered part of our anti-inflation program. We asked all sectors of society to show restraint; the government recognizes that it also must show moderation in its expenditures. There is real public concern about government expenditures at all levels. Canadians are asking us to slow down and pave the way for continued social progress without trying to do everything at the same time.

We have therefore carefully examined all our projected expenditures for next year and reduced them by more than $1.5 billion. We must recognize however that slowing the growth rate of government programs involves painful decisions.

There is very little, almost nothing, that can be cut without hurting someone or without restricting some worthwhile endeavour. I can be stronger than that. With inflation eating up anything there might be in the way of surplus funds in departmental programs, and with the unyielding attitude of the Treasury Board to new requests, there seems to be nothing that we can do which will not mean a reduction in a transfer payment to a province or to a citizen; or which will not cut grants or contributions to some cultural or social or industrial development activity; or which will not cause a decline in some government service; or which will not restrict the funds available for employment creation.

[English]

Despite these difficulties, we have embarked on a serious program of restraint. It is as follows:

In the white paper on inflation, we pledged ourselves to hold down the growth of the Public Service in a statement that read:

"... the federal government has decided that the growth in the authorized level for the federal public service in 1976-77 will be held to 1.5 per cent of the level authorized in the 1975-76 main estimates."

Since we said as well we would meet new priority and essential service requirements within that limit, the Treasury Board had then to cut several thousand man-years from the 1976-77 levels already approved so that many departments will find themselves with smaller manpower resources in 1976-77 than they had in 1974-75.

We are now taking further measures with respect to what I might call the government proper—parliament and the Public Service.

We are introducing a bill to freeze the pay of members of the House of Commons and the Senate for one year—including the salaries of ministers. That is, the increase in pay they would have received in January under existing legislation they will not receive when this bill is enacted into law.

We are doing the same thing to salaries of public servants in the higher pay categories. From now until April, 1977, the pay of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and all those in the senior executive and equivalent category of the Public Service—that is all those whose minimum salaries are $27,500 or more—will be frozen, except for those whose salary is determined by collective bargaining.

The freeze is extended to equivalent order-in-council appointments and to the senior officers of Crown corporations whose salaries the government controls. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will write to the heads of Crown corporations to inform them of the desire of the government that the freeze apply to higher salary levels that the corporations themselves have responsibility for setting. He will also seek the co-operation of the Speakers of both Houses in extending the freeze to senior officers who serve the House and Senate.

[Translation]

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I make your task more difficult, but I am sure you will want to co-operate with members of the House. The salaries of all judges of the Supreme Court, the Federal Court and the provincial superior courts will not be allowed to rise in 1976-77. We have decided to freeze the level of 1976-77 man-years available for higher-salaried positions—those that command a salary maximum of $30,000 and over—at the level of 1975-76.

To ensure that the freeze will be feasible we will draw from departments a portion of the man-years they have for such positions to establish a pool, to be administered by the Treasury Board, upon which we can draw to provide resources for unavoidable new demands. The freedom of departments in administrative and operating expenditures will be reduced. A series of directives will be issued designed to reduce outlays for advertising by 15 per cent, and for travel, motor vehicles, furniture and conferences. I mean, Mr. Speaker, that first-class travel for officials will be eliminated, motor vehicles will not be changed for new ones, there will not be any purchase of furniture and, of course, the amount of money available for the salaries of those who are hired to replace employees sent on language training will be cut by 20 per cent.

The agency known as Information Canada will be terminated. The book stores and the division which handles expositions for the government will continue to exist as parts of other departments.

Planned accommodation expenditures for the public service have been cut—particularly as a consequence of the greatly restricted growth in numbers. The 1976-77 main estimates provision for the construction of public buildings will be $30 million less than in 1975-76 main estimates.

We are requiring that the Department of External Affairs, which must open some new posts abroad, will do so out of available funds by cutting expenditures for other posts.

Next, government services and subsidies. The Post Office is being held to a growth in manpower very much smaller than in other years and therefore it will not be able to expand its services in the usual way in new communities; and some services will have to be curtailed.

In the field of transport, a number of subsidies will be lowered or removed. Increased charges to the users of airports, such as higher landing charges, will be made to reduce what amounts to a subsidization of those users.

The subsidy on the transcontinental rail passenger service is to be reduced along with the subsidies on the movement of certain commodities under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act.

● (2010)

[English]

Reductions are being made in a number of programs through which Industry, Trade and Commerce has given aid to industrial development and research. The reductions will be made in the program for the advancement of industrial technology, PAIT, in the defence industry productivity program, in shipbuilding subsidies, in tourist industry development and in other smaller grant items. The industrial Research and Development Incentives Act which provides for contributions of $20 million to $30 million a year for industrial research will be repealed.

The dollar and manpower resources of the Department of the Environment will be less than expected. There will be reductions in the capital budget of the fisheries and marine program, in fishing vessel subsidies, and in funds to deal with pollution caused by federal facilities. The government also intends to introduce legislation to produce savings in its contribution to crop insurance schemes.

Savings of $20 million will be made in the Canada Manpower training program by cancelling the indexing of allowances and changing the selection criteria for trainees. The federal government makes extensive grants to aid research by non-governmental organizations. Funds for grants by the Medical Research Council for medical research, by the National Research Council for physical science research, and by the Canada Council for research in the humanities and social sciences will be frozen in 1976-77 at 1975-76 levels rather than increased as in the past to at least compensate for inflation and usually to increase scope. Thus the councils will have to give fewer, or effectively smaller, grants.

While still recognizing the importance of encouraging development in slow-growth regions, the government is freezing the budget for regional economic expansion at the level of 1975-76.

[Translation]

The Department of National Defence will reduce its headquarters staff by 10 per cent, thus releasing military personnel for duties outside the National Capital Area. There will be some consolidation of military bases in the interests of greater efficiency and some bases will be closed. The government provides large amounts to finance the deficits of some Crown corporations or by way of loans for their capital expenditures. Various actions are being taken to reduce the amount that would otherwise be disbursed in this way.

The CBC obtains about 80 per cent of its funds from appropriations, the rest from revenues. Appropriations for the CBC next year will be increased only to the extent necessary to cover the inflation in operating and capital costs and the costs of covering the Olympics; previously planned growth will not be financed; the allocation to the Farm Credit Corporation is to be reduced below the allocation for 1975-76.

The Canadian National Railways and the Export Development Corporation will be directed to seek much more of their loan requirements from the same commercial sectors as private corporations so as to reduce the drain on the public purse.

Loans through the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources for energy projects will be deliberately held to substantially lower levels in 1976-77 main estimates, about $40 million less than those that appeared in the main estimates of the previous year.

Social Expenditures. We are inevitably led in an exercise such as this to social programs since they account for so very much of the total. The programs of the Department of National Health and Welfare make up more than one-quarter of all federal budgetary expenditures. There are social programs in other departments as well.

[English]

I therefore must announce that there will be no Opportunities for Youth Program next summer, and that in the winter of 1976-77 the LIP program will be reduced in cost and confined to high unemployment areas. This winter's LIP program, since it is now under way, will be allowed to continue. The government will stop providing financial support to the Company of Young Canadians at the end of this fiscal year. The travel and exchange program of the Secretary of State Department will be discontinued.

Every year, for many years, Canada has increased its aid to the less well developed countries of the world, so as to donate a greater and greater percentage of the gross national product. In 1976-77 that progress will be halted—only temporarily, I would hope, as the progress should be resumed when our fortunes improve. Next year foreign aid will still grow in dollar terms though it will decline in terms of the GNP.

● (2020)

We will also suspend for one year the indexing of family allowance payments, which would otherwise have increased by $200 million in 1976-77 over 1975-76.

Decisions about these last two items—foreign aid and family allowances—were taken with the greatest reluctance. But the fields of foreign aid, costing $1 billion, and of transfer payments to persons, costing several times that much, could not be overlooked in any serious effort to hold down expenditures.

[Translation]

I have mentioned the amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act. Several other pieces of legislation will require amendment early in the new year to give effect to these reductions, including: the National Transportation Act, the Railway Act, the Maritime Freight Rate Act, the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act, the Adult Occupational Training Act, the Company of Young Canadians Act, the Crop Insurance Act, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, the Family Allowances Act, Appropriation Act Number 2, June 26, 1970, Vote 25 (Department of Supply and Services—as it pertains to Information Canada).

[English]

Several of the expenditure reductions entail as well a reduction in manpower. I want to say a word to quieten as much as possible the concern of those public servants whose jobs will disappear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I take it very seriously.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Employees whose jobs are no longer required will, as far as possible, be reassigned to jobs which are or will become vacant in other parts of the public service. Employees will be retrained or moved to another location if this is necessary to facilitate the reassignment.

Only when reassignment efforts fail will employees be laid off or retired, and then they will receive the normal severance pay and retirement benefits.

These procedures were developed in co-operation with employee union representatives who have already been informed of areas where lay-offs could occur, and they will be further consulted in this regard.

After all the reductions are made, totalling more than $1.5 billion from the levels we envisaged in November—

Some hon. Members: Mismanagement!

Mr. Grafftey: Bungling!

Mr. Chrétien: I think that someone who cannot look after his own luggage should not be commenting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: After all the reductions are made, totalling more than $1.5 billion from the levels we envisaged in November, expenditures for 1976-77 will still grow by several billion dollars over those of 1975-76. The giant expenditure programs that we have not touched—old age security and the guaranteed income supplement; interest charges on the public debt; fiscal transfers to the provinces; other transfers to the provinces for hospital care, medicare, and welfare; payments to the Unemployment Insurance Commission—all have their own dynamics of growth that add billions of dollars to the total. The hundreds of services that remain have to be financed at higher prices and higher salary levels.

The process of controlling and cutting government expenditures is a continuous one and no single set of actions such as these we have taken is sufficient. All of us, the public, the members of parliament, ministers, and public servants, must reduce our demands on the public treasury. Good programs will have to be deferred, reduced or eliminated. Things that need doing will not be done. We must accept that fact if expenditures are to be controlled. The reductions I have announced tonight are not the end of a process; they are merely part of a continuing process of restraint.

In February I will be tabling the main estimates, and at that time I will tell you the growth in total expenditures for 1976-77 which we will be expecting. I cannot say what it will be at this time but I can assure you that it will reflect the government's strong commitment to restraint.

In conclusion I would like to thank all the ministers and the officials in every department who have spent many hours and much time trying to make their points.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: For six years, one month and three days I have been in departments where I was serving a public which needed some service, and I tell you, as I stand in my place, that I am not a very happy man now but I know that I am doing what I have to do to make sure that this country will grow more prosperous. Many of the programs which we have to stop at this time will be reintroduced in the future—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: —because we believe on both sides that a responsible government will be able to make this country grow and flourish, not only for ourselves but also for the generations to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as my own colleagues, for the very warm reception they have accorded me here this evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But I have to say to you, Sir, that Canadians are now witnessing the price that has to be paid for a government which has been slow to learn, slow to act, but quick to spend, particularly on its own trappings and its own aggrandizement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2030)

Mr. Stanfield: The same Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who sits across the aisle here this evening went around this country making $4 billion to $5 billion worth of campaign promises last year while he sold this country a bill of goods on leadership.

An hon. Member: Smile away, Pierre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want my hon. friends opposite to tire themselves out this early in the evening because we are just getting started. I think it might be good for them to listen to the truth for a few minutes.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You wouldn't know the difference.

An hon. Member: Who is the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Stanfield: I do not blame my hon. friends opposite for trying to distract attention from the performance of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), but if they want to make it difficult for me to speak tonight, I am sure Mr. Speaker will co-operate with me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: After all, I have lived with my hon. friends for a good many years in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps some of the hon. members behind the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who are shouting most vigorously at the moment should realize that they also can mar an attempt to make a contribution—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The fact of the matter is, however, that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), despite one or two incidents of intervention, did have a good, respectful attention, and I think the same ought to be given to all members of the opposition who have the opportunity to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It has to be said that it is becoming more apparent each day that the government is not a government of leadership in terms of the Canadian economy. It has been alternately dragging of foot and heavy of hand. It has not led, it has only reacted, and we have a reaction here this evening of some sorts. It has certainly not led by example in any effective way; on the contrary its own examples of extravagance and high living have had a detrimental effect in contributing to inflationary psychology and inflationary actions throughout our economy.

Where our country is today, where the government is today, and what it says it has to do today—these facts are in themselves a most eloquent condemnation of the government since it came to office.

As far as the repertoire of the Prime Minister is concerned, I suppose he has gone full circle. Early in the day we saw him with a hair shirt doing a hair shirt routine in his first so-called war against inflation. Next we saw him over the years in the arrogant routine, the complacent routine, that rather brief humble routine, then the fighting routine, the invisible routine, and now we are back again to the hair shirt routine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: However, this time around the rate of unemployment in the country is about double what it was when the first war against inflation got under way. The forecast budget deficit this fiscal year is over one quarter what total expenditures were at that time. Our forecast balance of payments deficit this year is over a third of what total government expenditures were then. The government's forecast of its cash deficit or requirements this fiscal year is roughly one half of what total government expenditures were when that first war against inflation was declared. Government expenditures have tripled since the Prime Minister took office. Despite all the histrionics we have seen in recent days, expenditures are still up by an undisclosed percentage. It is no wonder that that hair shirt is hairier in 1975 than it was in 1969. It is hairier and scarier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is the essence of the message we received tonight from the President of the Treasury Board. This minister has not had these responsibilities for a long period of time. I believe he is sincere, and I believe he is prepared to be tough about his job in this House and in the country. I think he is carrying the can for the Prime Minister, just as the country at large will be carrying the burden created by the awful economic incompetence of the government over the years.

It must be painful for the minister to stand in his place tonight and talk about restraint in terms of the examples he has given the House. If effective restraint had begun, say, three years ago when the previous minister of finance first started preaching, we in this country would be undergoing a much less traumatic experience today.

As is so often the case with the government, there is nothing restrained about the panoply with which it has wrapped and packaged this evening's statement. We have the President of the Treasury Board here in the House telling us how difficult and painful this whole affair has been for him. To hear him tell it, there would seem to be grave doubts whether some of his colleagues over there would ever speak to him again.

Shortly, of course, we will see the Prime Minister on television telling the people of Canada how it really hurts him more than it will hurt them, but reassuring one and all that, after all, this government knows best. I dare say that if you did not know the players, if you had not seen this comedy before, you would be tempted to believe it was pretty powerful stuff which was being placed before us. Unfortunately for the government, and even more unfortunately for those who have had to suffer through it, we have, to put it mildly, heard this song before, and not only once before.

The House may recall, for example, hearing the then minister of finance tell us back in 1973 that he was putting a tight rein on government spending to avoid aggravating inflation. That was the year you will recall, Sir, that government expenditures on a national basis increased by 24 per cent. Undaunted as he always was, that same minister of finance was before us in May of 1974, proclaiming a budget which, to use his own words, "reflects my determination to deal with inflation", by restricting spending. As things turned out, that was indeed a vintage year for restraint, as practised by the government. Expenditures increased during that fiscal year by 30 per cent.

● (2040)

Whatever else we granted him, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House will admit that the former minister of finance did not let failure stand in his way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He was back at it again last June. This was the year, as he so eloquently put it, of the "tough line," when the declared goal was "to ensure that outlays grow no faster than the economy as a whole". Well, the outlays are going to increase by at last 16 per cent; even the Jean who has succeeded the John concedes that. Oh, Sir, that we had that kind of economic growth!

Given that kind of historical background, Mr. Speaker, you will forgive me if my initial reaction this evening—and I venture to say the initial reaction of many Canadians—is one of profound scepticism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: For the unfortunate truth of the matter is that it is the government's sad and sorry record of any semblance of self-restraint in recent years which has brought us to where we are this evening, and which now promises to inflict new hardship on those Canadians least able to bear it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It makes me very angry, Sir, to think of the price these Canadians now must pay for the government's failure even to approach the kind of restraint in its own activities it has so constantly promised.

Take the cuts the minister talked about tonight—he is cutting $1½ billion in expenditures. That has to be described as a con game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He says he is cutting back on the estimates as they stood in November of this year. Mr. Speaker, every government in Canada goes through this exercise once a year. The requests for expenditures come in from the departments, they are cut down, gone over, and cut down again. Every government goes through this. To talk about cutting $1½ billion from estimates that the government has been working on is an indication of the mentality of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Notice that the President of the Treasury Board will not disclose the total from which he is cutting that $1½ billion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He says he had estimates of November last. Well, he must have added them up. If he cannot add them up I am sure there are some people in the public service who must have added them up. Mr. Speaker, he must know what the total of those estimates was last year.

When you claim that you are cutting a billion and a half dollars, if you are acting in good faith you would tell what you were cutting from; you would tell the House what the total was before you cut, and you would tell the House what the total is after you cut.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is a very good reason why the minister has not told the House—because a lot of this is very phony.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is a public relations job. He says he is cutting a billion and a half dollars from the estimates, Mr. Speaker. About half of those alleged cuts are non-budgetary. About half of them are outside the budget. Let us forget for a moment how hon. gentlemen opposite applauded the government when it drowned its own children, like Information Canada and CYC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The biggest single cut is outside the budget—some $330 million in direct financing to the CNR. What a cut! The CNR is being invited to go out and raise that money publicly rather than borrowing it from the government. That is the biggest single cut that the government has made.

Mr. Trudeau: What of the hardship?

Mr. Stanfield: Real hardship!

Mr. Trudeau: What are you complaining about?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the time of the House to go over what the Auditor General said.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You don't dare!

Mr. Stanfield: Well, I will. If you want it read I will read it out. The Auditor General said:

[Mr. Stanfield.]

> The study leads to one clear conclusion: the present state of the financial management and control systems of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: And that is not Maxwell Henderson.

Mr. Stanfield: Yet the President of the Treasury Board stands in this House tonight and says:

> . . . there seems to be nothing that we can do which will not mean a reduction . . . which will not cut grants or contributions to some cultural or social or industrial development activity; or which will not cause a decline in some government service; or which will not restrict the funds available for employment creation.

The minister will not admit the validity of the Auditor General's comment upon the operation of the Treasury Board and the government. The minister comes before the House trying to pretend to the Canadian people that there are not vast sums of money being wasted. I put it this way, Mr. Speaker—those fellows spill more than a billion and a half dollars each year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What is so painfully obvious tonight is that the government has no philosophy—no continuity of rationale in its economic approaches.

Mr. Jamieson: Like the Tories.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants to take the time I will be happy to take him through elections in recent years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Here is what the minister said about the government's approach to inflation. It had three main purposes; first, to reinforce its attack on inflation through encouraging increased supplies of goods and services. Well, that has taken rather a sad blow from the sloppy introduction of the controls program. The second purpose was to act directly against high prices where this was practical. And the third one—listen to this carefully—was to alleviate the adverse impact of rising prices on all Canadians, particularly those with lower incomes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: As far as the third aim is concerned—to alleviate the difficulties of Canadians on low incomes in the face of inflation—it is abundantly clear from tonight's announcement that the government is quite prepared to fight inflation on the backs of millions of Canadians who cannot afford the burden.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2050)

Mr. Stanfield: I say that removing the indexing of family allowances for this year is contrary to anything the government has stood for, if it ever stood for anything. Certainly it is contrary to what other parties in the House have advocated, namely, the protection of low income Canadians against inflation. Indeed, Sir, the mere existence of this kind of indexation gives the government some real motive to fight inflation. This is better than the sort of public relations exercises in which it keeps indulging. We want the government to eliminate inflation and have asked it to reduce inflation, rather than horse around, as it has for years, and then hit those least able to bear it. We need much more evidence of economy and efficiency in government operations before we will agree that there are not substantial expenditures of a much lower priority than family allowances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Indeed, far from giving us that evidence this evening, the President of the Treasury Board has appeared before the House and pretended that there is no possibility of waste. Indeed he indicated that the Auditor General is somewhere away out in left field. Who can believe that?

I view the government's announcement equally in sorrow and anger, and view the government's record equally with incredulity and disgust. It is hard to believe that, given the resources of this country and the resourcefulness of its people, any government could have made so large a mess in so short a time. I say to the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister through you, Sir, that it will be something for Canadians never to forget when the bill is paid.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the election campaign of 1974 the Liberal party based its claim to economic leadership on two pillars. One of those was the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) campaign against the issue of wage and price controls raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). That was the first pillar of their campaign. The Liberals then said they would have nothing to do with it. Yet on Thanksgiving Eve that first pillar came down. The Liberals said they were wrong in the campaign. We did not think they were right, but they did a 180 degree about-face and agreed with the Leader of the Opposition.

Their second pillar in the 1974 campaign consisted of all the spending they were to do. For instance, they were to spend money for housing, and make sure, through public financing if necessary, that money was spent to ensure that Canadians owned Canadian resources. They were to spend money on the east coast on the fisheries; you name it, as the Leader of the Opposition said earlier, they would spend money on it. They were to spend money all over the place, to improve, presumably, the well being of all Canadians.

This evening that second pillar came down. I suggest that never before in recent political history, at least since the depression, has any political party abandoned its central claims to political and economic leadership as completely as has the present Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: And all the time it has acted with what one may call arrogant Liberal condescension. When the opposition, my party, or Creditiste members criticize the government, we see those on the other side smiling.

An hon. Member: It is more a smirk.

Mr. Broadbent: It is a smile of condescension which seems to say, "You fellows really don't know what this is all about." Of course we know what lies behind that smile, and I say this seriously. It is simply political cynicism. It simply means that the party knows how to manipulate public opinion, as it has demonstrated in elections. The party has a capacity, unrivalled by any other party of any country in the western world, to gauge the sense or the mood of the people at any given time. Abandoning moral commitments or serious political judgment, it will lay it on thick and tell the electorate everything it seems to want to hear, at any given time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Just as this criticism applies, in my judgment, to their 1974 election campaign, so it applies to the program they announced tonight. They sense that there is a mood in the field of federal as well as provincial politics favouring a cut in government spending, and they are going to cut back. This will be a complete about face on their 1974 campaign promises.

We, of the New Democratic Party, agree that wasteful spending is bad and that bad programs should be scrapped. We agree that the salaries of over-paid members of parliament and civil servants should be curtailed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: These are all laudable objectives with which all reasonable people, I suggest, are in accord. I do not think any political party or particular section of the population will disagree with me. I suggest this is beyond dispute.

We agree with certain changes announced this evening. For years we have talked about foolish spending on programs like PAIT, PIP, IRDIA and others which have been defended by various ministers of finance and ministers of industry, trade and commerce. Finally, the government will do something it ought to have done years ago. Information Canada is to go. It ought to have gone some time ago.

We agree to cutbacks in the salaries of over-paid civil servants in the federal bureaucracy, of members of this House and the other place, and of judges of high court. These are acceptable. But the New Democratic Party does not accept the view that Canada requires a holus-bolus, across-the-board cut by the federal government in virtually every department. We categorically reject that view. Such an indiscriminate cutback affects not only bad spending and unnecessary programs, but also good spending and necessary programs. In short, indiscriminate cutbacks in federal or provincial spending are unacceptable and, I argue, have no place in the policy of any who believe in a civilized society.

Unlike the Leader of the Opposition, I believe that real cutbacks are involved in the government announcement. This is not a spurious, superficial game. Unfortunately there are to be serious cutbacks in programs right across the spectrum of federal responsibility. What does this mean? It means that the poor regions of Canada, I am tempted to include all parts east of the Ottawa River, will be adversely affected by the cutback in the spending of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Second, farmers in Canada, whether they reside on the prairies, in the north, or on the east or west coast, will be affected by the cutbacks concerning the Farm Credit Corporation and the crop insurance program.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Broadbent: Third, families on the east and west coasts will be affected by cutbacks in the fisheries program. This will create real hardship for Canadians engaged in the fisheries particularly on our eastern coasts who already are suffering.

Fourth, those dependent on railways in Canada, on our transportation system, will be hurt. Here I am particularly thinking of Atlantic Canada, the prairies, and northern Ontario. The people in those areas are going to be seriously hurt by the government's cutback aimed at the CNR.

● (2100)

Fifth, every Canadian family, particularly the poor, will suffer as a result of the family allowance cutback. Some five million or six million Canadians, including over 50 per cent of the pensioners in Canada, live at the poverty level. The poor families in particular, that is, men and women with children, will suffer by the cutback in family allowances.

The change that was announced by the government to curtail the indexing of family allowances means approximately a $27 cut per child. I hope the government is happy. I hope it is pleased with that measure that has such profound effects on the millions of Canadian families who exist at the poverty level.

As a party we would not and do not favour the cutbacks in good programs. In fact, instead of cutting back in a number of good programs there should have been some increases, particularly in those programs that effect low income people so that they would be better able to cope with inflation.

The fundamental point is that the government does not recognize that inflation in Canada is not due simply to all kinds of spending in the public sector. The New Democratic Party asserts that there is unnecessary spending in the private sector, whether it is on hotels being built in Montreal, Toronto, or Vancouver, on shopping centres being built in virtually every town in the country or, as my colleague said, on the Olympics. Spending in the private sector is every bit as inflationary in terms of its impact on the economy as is spending in the public sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In accepting the view that all federal government spending is inflationary, I say with care and seriousness that what the Liberal party has done is to accept a mode of thinking that I thought had disappeared from serious economic thought back in the 1930's. However, the Liberal party has resurrected it in 1975. I would dare to think that even McKenzie King would be surprised at the kind of announcements we have heard here tonight.

Mr. Peters: That is probably where they got them from.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Broadbent: Apart from the fact that an NDP government at this time would be cutting out the bad programs, leaving in the good ones, and indeed increasing spending in those that are necessary for low income people, I would like to say there are two particular items that have come before the House this afternoon and this evening on which I cannot forgo comment.

The first is the announcement made with a great deal of pride that the government is going to curtail any increase in the salaries of MP's and senior civil servants. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a little late to act in that regard. Last year the government made us the highest paid elected members of any parliamentary system in the world.

Mr. Dick: That's bullshit.

Mr. Broadbent: I have obviously touched a sensitive chord.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be an element of disagreement with the statement made by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that debate might be reserved for some other time. It would be preferable if the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would finish his remarks at this time.

Mr. Broadbent: It is obvious where the sense of priorities of certain people lie. They were distinctly quiet when I was talking about the poor in Canada. When I get on to the matter of their salaries, they get a little upset.

The point I was making is that the government is acting a little late with regard to MPs' salaries. It is a bit late in terms of the serious increases that came last year. However, we welcome the announcement that they are going to be curtailed. It would have been nice to see this done last year rather than bring in the increase they did.

In terms of senior civil servants, it is almost laughable. The Liberals really outdid themselves. They spent at least a half hour listening to the opposition. Now they are back to their traditional role of yapping incoherent comments from the backbenches.

During the time the Prime Minister has been in office there have been increases in senior civil servants. In 1968, there were 381 in the SX category, the top category which begins at $27,000. After 1973 that figure had increased to 895, an increase of more than 100 per cent.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) announced with a sense of self satisfaction that these upper income civil servants are not going to get another increase. I hope not. It was just four weeks ago that they received an additional $6,000, one of the highest increases ever. I do not see it as a supreme act of self denial on their part, when they just got $6,000 a few weeks ago, not to get another increase next year. My colleagues and I are not exactly impressed with that announcement.

I took a great deal of interest in the concern of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) this afternoon that the wealthiest people in Canada will bear their burden of the restraint program. I was almost moved to tears when he brought forward the tax measure and suggested that the wealthy in Canada were really going to do their bit in the restraint program. Hon. members will recall that the ceiling for low income Canadians is now almost up to $750. Ninety per cent of them have no unions, so there is no hope they will get it.

● (2110)

What has the Minister of Finance done to place the burden on the rich? He has brought in a 10 per cent surtax for upper income Canadians. It will really be hard to bear! A lawyer or a doctor struggling to get by on $35,000 a year will really be badly off. Suppose he has two children. The government's proposal will really place him in a difficult position. It plans to increase his taxes by $10 a year! That is the full force of the great burden of restraint the government has decided to place on wealthy Canadians.

A $35,000 a year man with two children will have to pay $10. Mr. Speaker, that comes as close to hypocrisy as I have seen in this House the fact of this change in family allowance announced today. The family allowance change means that an average family with three children will lose $27 on each of those children. This is because the Liberal government has decided to cut out the escalation in family allowances this year. Compare this loss of $74 to a low income family with three children, with the heavy burden the government is putting on upper income Canadians, an increase of $10 to a family earning $35,000. We do not have many tears in our party for all those rich people who will be so affected by that measure which was brought in today.

I want to conclude—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am being so loudly cheered, Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to go on for at least as long as it took the President of Treasury Board to bring in the bad news. I want to make five specific suggestions which in our view should be seen in the context of creative government action involving some cutbacks and some increases, all of which in our view would contribute positively to dealing with inflation in a much more sensible and equitable way than the program announced by the President of the Treasury Board.

First, we think the government should increase its spending on housing. This would benefit both homeowners and renters by increasing the supply.

Some hon. Members: We have done that.

Mr. Broadbent: They say they have done it. Peanuts! By increasing the supply of housing they will drive down the price for homeowners and renters. The second benefit is that such a program would provide many new jobs from one coast of Canada to the other, bearing in mind that there are more than 700,000 people presently unemployed.

Second, we think an end should be put to the $1.8 billion which, it is estimated, is being spent on tax incentives to corporations, which have not proved effective in creating jobs. I would remind the government of the study which it commissioned and which was presented in the House last June by the former minister of finance. Remember, we are talking about $1.8 billion in fast write-offs and special tax concessions during the last two years. In the study presented last June it was stated that the majority of businessmen interviewed said the concessions were not needed and that the course of action they took in expanding their operations was not influenced by the give-aways provided by the government. We say this $1.8 billion should no longer go out to the private sector in the form of a giveway but flow to the treasury via tax revenues.

Third, we would make the corporations pay their fair share of taxes in general by ending the tax deferral system. Over $7 billion is now owed by corporations in Canada to the federal government, and we think it time that a good part of that sum was paid to the treasury.

Fourth, we think the most equitable way of dealing with not only professional people in higher income brackets but other upper income people who have a variety of means of getting round the control system, is the introduction of a 100 per cent tax on all increases of income beyond the $2,400 level. Only by imposing such a tax do we think this program could be made at all equitable.

Finally, in connection with the price of Canadian produced oil, we think it is time Canadians ceased to be charged world prices for one of our own national resources. We reject the commitment of the government to allow the price of domestically produced oil to rise to the world price. The abandoning of this commitment would not only bring benefit to Canadians as consumers, as drivers of automobiles, but it would also be of great benefit to Canadian industry in helping to keep costs of production down, thus allowing more jobs to be created.

I wish to conclude by saying that not only is the government wrong in cutting back good programs as well as bad; it is also wrong because it has totally ignored the fact that more than 700,000 Canadians are unemployed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: By refusing to introduce even one program or one item intended to create more jobs, it is simply adding to the miseries which come inevitably to families experiencing unemployment to those other miseries experienced by those suffering from inflation. In short, the program announced tonight is not one which the NDP can support.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, after the statement made tonight by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) I better understand the reasons for the resignation of former Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I find it strange that each time the Minister of Finance, here in Canada, whether Progressive Conservative a few years ago or Liberal this year or in the past, each time a Minister of Finance had to resign, it was because financial or fiscal matters were so serious that he could not afford to be inconsistent in the legislation that the government made him bring following statements he had made.

The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) less than one year ago, here in this House, was always telling us that the financial and fiscal situation in our country was very satisfying, that there was no problem and surely the world was unfolding as it should. And suddenly, only a few months after his resignation, we see the President of the Treasury Board, we see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) almost sounding the alarm in front of inflation and our financial situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I always said in the House that this government was directed by "economist charlatans" who led us in the present situation. As long as this government will follow the advice of these economists, we shall go nowhere, we shall only go from debt to debt and deficit to deficit.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board announced cuts in government spending of about $1.5 billion and as the speakers before me suggested or explained, those cuts will apply primarily to hon. members when we had a legislation for those who deserved a salary increase according to the cost of living index, we had a legislation that would have given a gross income of $600,-000 to hon. members and a net income of about $400,000. This government has just done away with any indexation for members—a net amount of $400,000—in order to facilitate the acceptance of the cuts just announced for small earners. Mr. Speaker, children are the first hit by these cuts. The government just removed the indexation of family allowances. This will save them $221 million, which means that the bulk of the savings made under the program announced tonight by the President of the Treasury Board will be obtained at the expense of our Canadian children. The unemployed will have their LIP projects cut, the indexation of Manpower training will be slashed by $20 million. Our farmers, the number of which is steadily declining, will also be affected by a reduction on the Farm Credit Corporation budget. Subsidies to the OFY program will be cut by $36 million, crop insurance by $10 million.

Mr. Speaker, the group most affected by the announcement made this evening by the President of the Treasury Board are the children. They are not responsible for the current inflation rate or the government heavy spending. Alos hardest hit will be the unemployed, the young and the farmers.

● (2120)

And when I look for instance at the expenditures the government undertook to maintain at their current level, while slashes are made elsewhere, I see that over $4 billion will continue to be paid to the financial nabobs, those who were empowered to extend credit to the government instead of the government doing it itself through its own bank, the Bank of Canada. In 1976, we will be giving more than $4 billion in dividends for gratuities to the Canadian chartered banks.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

And yet, we have just read in the December 15, 1975 issue of Maclean's the following heading:

[English]

THE BITTERSWEET SMELL OF SUCCESS

[Translation]

We thus learned that the profits of the four largest banks in Canada exceeded $225 million in the period ending October 31, with profits averaging 55 per cent during their last fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, the banking system made the highest profits in Canada last Year.

[English]

—the banks, profits are unreasonably high at a time when the federal government is applying profit controls to other industries. Because of their large volume of foreign business, the banks are specifically exempted from federal profit controls.)

[Translation]

Since banks are national and international institutions, they will not be affected by the profit control system to be implemented by the federal government. Yet, Mr. Speaker, according to our national estimates, we shall be paying out the tidy sum of $4,350 million, and we shall have to keep on as good boys, good Canadians, helping foreigners before we help our Canadian children. We shall still be paying out $1 billion to foreign or developing countries; $1 billion, Mr. Speaker.

When I think that all members of this House are aware of the shameful waste in that area, Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe my eyes or my ears. One billion dollars will be spent under the item of external aid. Another $1,507 million will go to National Defence which, in my opinion, is not worth a hang in Canada. Indeed, should a group of boy scouts decide tomorrow morning to take over Canada with makeshift means, our armed forces, with a budget of $1,507 million, would be taken unaware.

Mr. Speaker, Air Canada will also be gratified with a tidy sum of $302 million—no cutbacks—and the public service will again swindle some $4,824,820,000. Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote again from the December 15 issue of Maclean's, on page 37, under the following heading:

[English]

THE MONEY-WASTERS

. . . the unveiling of Montreal's new $600-million Mirabel International Airport . . .

All in all, the little weekend celebration racked up a price tag of more than $500,000—including $12,179 in hotel bills for 10 foreign ministers, $48,840 worth of food and $20,000 worth of booze . . .

In the current fiscal year, federal spending will add up to $31.3 billion—more than the combined budgets of all three levels of government in 1967,—Out of every $100 spent on goods and services this year in Canada . . . governments will spend $40. Government has now become one of the country's biggest and fastest growing industries.

This year more than 1.2 million Canadians—or one out of every eight in the work force—will collect their pay cheques from a federal, provincial or local level of government, at a staggering cost of more than $10 billion in salaries. Of these, 332,230 are in the federal civil service, which will chalk up a payroll this year of $4,824,880,000.

[Translation]

Let me go on, Mr. Speaker, this article is too much.

[English]

Like Topsy, the Ottawa work force has just sprouted. And no wonder. While the top civil service regulars in Washington earn no more than $43,000, the highest paid Ottawa mandarins rake in as much as $62,500 a year... the senior executive categories in Ottawa had grown by an astounding 474 persons—or 82 per cent—in the past five years. The biggest single leap may well be in Trudeau's own personal staff which has now multiplied to an amazing 95 persons, with a budget of more than two million dollars...

Bank of Canada governor Gerald Bouey was calling for—

[Translation]

—he is so nice, he is so thrifty this man with $75,000 a year—

[English]

—was calling for "a sober appreciation by Canadians of the seriousness of our economic problems which will call forth sufficient will to co-operate in their solution." Lo, as he spoke, the Bank of Canada's new $40-million headquarters rose loftily behind him—12 storeys of exquisite reflecting glass that mirror the sky and surrounding panorama—the most expensive office building of its size in Canada. The castle of glass and steel just down the street from the Parliament Buildings will include a 12-storey-high, year-round enclosed garden and a two-ton round stone imported from Yap Island in the Pacific that was once used as South Seas currency—

● (2130)

—the wife of the governor of the Bank of Canada—who makes $75,000 a year—along with hundreds of other wives of Ottawa's senior civil servants and MP's have been sent to French school, free. More than 170 wives are expected to enroll in the 1976 sessions beginning January which feature two three-hour lessons each week at Ottawa's Alliance Française.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am saddened by the statement made tonight by the President of the Treasury Board. On page 9, he talk for instance about old age security. He has put senior citizens in the same category as banks. He talks about old age security and the interest on the public debt and says: "All have their own dynamics of growth." Mr. Speaker, these people have a $2.35 monthly cost of living increase compared with the banks, which made $445 million of profits last year, and this includes only the seven largest chartered banks in Canada. "All have their own dynamics of growth". Poor President of the Treasury Board!

The process of controlling and cutting government expenditures is a continuous one and no single set of actions such as these we have taken is sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the President of the Treasury Board admits that the expenditures of the government have grown like a cancer.

I would like to quote a few more figures before closing my comments on agriculture, which is such an appropriate field for Canada. In 1960, there was one public servant for 87 farmers, in 1966, there was one public servant for 59 farmers, and in 1975, there is one public servant for 44 farmers. As the number of farmers goes down, the number of public servants increases. This is called planning and administration knowledge by economists.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few other figures that have impressed me. In 1974-75, the federal deficit is $3.3 billion, while the surplus of the Royal Bank alone for 1974 is $3.5 billion. This means that the deficit of the government is equivalent to the surplus of a single chartered bank in Canada. Then, they will try to tell us that the government controls Parliament and governs something. I must say to my hon. colleagues opposite that they are in power, but govern nothing at all. The decisions are made by the nabobs of finance whom they blindly obey, Mr. Speaker, the public debt in 1967 was $21.8 billion, and in 1974 it reached $55 billion, a yearly increase of 14 per cent. In 1967, the national debt represented 32.9 per cent of the gross national product, and 39.1 per cent in 1974.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that since Confederation our national debt has increased by 60,000 per cent. So one should not be surprised to hear ministers of finance make at times political statements for their parties saying that all is well in Canada, that everything is fine, that it is fantastic, that all is well in the best of worlds, that we live in the most beautiful, the greatest country in the world, and that everything is great.

A few months later, in face of the obvious figures that do not lie, we see the Minister of Finance get up one morning and submit his resignation so as not to be caught lying because of his rosy statements, in opposition to the black cloud that was just announced today in this House.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In the bill to which he referred in his statement which is to freeze the pay of members of parliament for a year, may I ask whether that applies only to the indemnity or does it also apply to the tax-free allowance?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, that applies to the members' salaries.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the comments the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made concerning the reduction from the 1966-77 level as planned in November I think it is important, in terms of the credibility of this program, that the information which is available be either placed on the Table, appended to Hansard, or presented by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) tomorrow inasmuch as it really takes away from any credibility to say that we are taking X number of dollars away from Y figure, when no one has any idea in the world what that Y figure might be.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of members I would like to present these papers later because the only copies I have are these in my hands. I have the communiqué which gave all the expenditures in respect of all the eliminated programs and those reduced below the figures for 1975-76, and the others which are reductions from the approved level of November in the budget. I have divided these as best I could into two categories. The total of these two account for a little more than $1,500,000,000, and so members will be able to judge, in the reduction from the accepted level of November, where we have cut.

In every department we have given the area where we have reduced from the approved level. Of course there is an increase above the level of this year, but by that much less. So, at the end of the proceedings at ten o'clock I will table in both languages this information.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Just to be clear, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would be agreeable when the President of the Treasury Board presents this if it could be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Also, just to be clear, does this mean that what will be presented to us will be the original figures minus the amount that is being reduced, the further figure, and the relationship in the case of 1976-77 to the previous figure so that there will be that three-fold comparison.

Mr. Chrétien: Unfortunately, no. One of the difficulties in which I find myself is that I am not legally in a position to table the Blue Book at this time because there is a procedure of the House whereby the tabling of what we call the Blue Book will be done in February. It is not printed.

These decisions were taken only this week and the week before, so I am not at liberty to give the total figures. I have tried to inform members as best as I could under the limitations I have. I have prepared a list of all the actual cuts from the 1975-76 level, and in the second category the areas where some cuts were made. But I am not at liberty to table what would amount to the Blue Book because it is a huge book and is not in the proper form. It will not be ready before February.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, does this mean that the figures the minister has presented to us with regard to 1976-77 really will make no sense to us at all until sometime late in January or early in February, when we have next year's estimates presented to us? In the meantime we have no idea whether or not these figures reflect any substantial reductions.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is a difficulty there. I do not know exactly how I can cope with this problem. I think these are the kinds of problems we tried to explain earlier to the press, and I am prepared to give the same explanation. I would like to reply to the hon. member that when we are lending money to the CNR or to other Crown corporations of the same nature it is all in our expenditures list. When members of the opposition speak, they do not make that distinction. They accuse us, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) used to do, of spending, for example, $35 billion. That gave them an example of the kind of expenditures, of transfer payments, that we were making. Hon. members opposite do not make that distinction when they attack us. If the CNR can borrow money from the private sector, it will be that much money from the taxpayers' pockets that we will not be accused by the opposition of spending.

● (2140)

Mr. Fairweather: It is still a shell game. However it is much better than the ones I used to see at fairs and exhibitions when I was young.

I suppose each of us has our own areas of concern. Mine happens to be about the shipbuilding subsidy amounting to some $15 million. I would like to have an interpretation from the President of the Treasury Board regarding contractw shich are now in place. In other words the St. John's Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company has some eight ships in line between now and 1978 which will provide about 1,600 jobs on the basis of the subsidy program. Is it the intention of the government to interrupt this program and thereby throw out a labour force that is in place?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I believe, Mr. Speaker, there will be a gradual reduction in that program, but I doubt that it will affect the orders the shipyards have on their books at this time. Some subsidies may be reduced, but we hope that will not affect the level of employment in the shipyards.

Mr. Beaudoin When the President of the Treasury Board said to the House that there would be drastic cuts with regard to adult training schools, did he mean the manpower centre schools or those that deal with the training of those who are learning the second language?

Mr. Chrétien: Well, I believe that with regard to the Department of Manpower and Immigration the cutbacks will be very minor compared with its total expenditures. If I am not mistaken, the budget of the department provides some $500 million for adult training, and the proposals I put before the House this evening would reduce that budget by $20 million. That, however, applies to the people in charge of adult education under the programs of my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on page 9 of the minister's statement there is a reference to a reduction in manpower in the Public Service, but the statement does not indicate what that reduction will be. Has there been any decision or finding by the Treasury Board as to the number of public servants who will not be placed under the reassignment and placement program, which is also set forth on that page?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, my officials assure me that very few full-time civil servants will be affected by the suppression of some government agencies or by the important cuts in some programs. As well, very few will not be accommodated within the 1.5 per cent staff increase in the public service or in positions which are now open or will be in the next few months.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thought my question was quite precise and I hoped the minister might be able to give me a figure, give or take a hundred or so. His statement does not contain it now.

While I am on my feet may I ask the minister if it is the intention, as part of the program of restraint, to abandon, for at least a time, the decentralization program which he and I have discussed on the floor of the House?

Mr. Chrétien: In answer to the first part of the question, I think the number of employees who will be affected by the reduction of some of the programs will be about 1,000. I am not in a position to say at this time whether, of that number, all will be relocated elsewhere into other departments. My officials assure me there will be very few who will be dismissed, but there might be some who, because of their very specialized skills, because of their age, or because of their unwillingness to move, will be forced to take an early retirement or try to find a job elsewhere.

With regard to the second part of the question, I think the program of decentralization so far is taking place in areas which we have announced. We have just announced two parts of this program lately: an organization from the Department of National Revenue of the taxation branch located in Winnipeg, and the pay system in the Department of Supply and Services which has been located in Matane. There will be other announcements of that nature, all in areas in the public service where there is either a shortage of labour in Ottawa or a problem of space. This will not affect the level of employment in the national capital region.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am referring to page 5 where the minister referred to a cutback in the amounts of money available for the salaries of those who are hired to replace employees sent on language training, a cut of some 20 per cent. What is the intent of that statement, aside from the cutting of funds? Is it the intention not to hire people to replace members of the Public Service who have gone on language training, or is it the intention to reduce the number of public servants who are sent on language training?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think that the program we have announced as well as the reduction in the number of new positions will enable us to have this cut of $10 million without substantially affecting the program enabling civil servants to learn the other official language when they get a bilingual position by way of competition. We also believe that through closer control over the system we can reduce the amount of expenditures, but the majority of these $10 million will come from the reduction in the growth rate of staff in the public service. In the year 1975-76, the growth rate was 3.1 per cent and it will be only 1.5 per cent next year. All these measures will make us save money.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, first can the President of the Treasury Board tell us approximately how much Crown corporations can borrow from the Treasury Board and privately, and second, during these times of restraint will these corporations borrowing in the private market be under the control or supervision of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member the figure off the top of my head. It is many millions of dollars, perhaps $4 million of $5 million, I am not sure. He can make the calculation; I do not have the exact figure. These Crown corporations will remain under the financial supervision of the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance because we still control their budgets.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I noticed that in his presentation tonight he mentioned that there will be a 10 per cent reduction at the defence staff headquarters. Can the minister tell me why he did not consider eliminating the $200 million which he intends to spend on tanks and armoured cars from Brazil? I do not think we are in imminent danger of being invaded by enemy forces. Is that not something that could be put off? I am referring to the $200 million expenditure.

Mr. Chrétien: These expenditures will not be occurring right away. Of course one of the problems with regard to national defence with which we had to cope is that for the last five or six years the government has not spent any money on buying new equipment. Because of our commitments in NATO and NORAD we have some obligations, and after so many years of not spending on capital expenditures we have decided this year that we must proceed with some buying of capital equipment. However, most of those payments will be made in the future and not in this year so I think that is why, if the suggestion of the hon. member were to be accepted, it would not be reflected in the budget of next year, or perhaps just partly.

● (2150)

Mr. Rodriguez: With regard to family allowances, we are presently discussing a bill which would amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. One of the things that bill will do is remove the dependency rate. The minister in charge of that department argued that family allowances have been indexed, and that was the rational for eliminating the dependency rate. Can the minister who made the statement tonight, the President of the Treasury Board, tell us what is the rationale for this decision to remove indexing of family allowances? Does he not think that is contrary to what is being done in another department?

Mr. Chrétien: That is one of the difficult decisions we had to make, but hon. members should remember that we tripled family allowances in the last few years.

Mr. Rodriguez: And taxed them.

Some hon. Members: Be quiet.

Mr. Chrétien: People at the lower end of the wage scale have exemptions. This was not an easy thing to do, but we did triple family allowances over the past few years. They were increased last year because of the increase in the cost of living. We had to find the money. The money was not hanging in the air. One of the reasons for this decision is that 60 per cent or 70 per cent of families receiving family allowances earn above $12,000, and for those who are at the bottom of the scale there will be some hardship. However, they can always go to the provincial governments and receive some compensation if they really need it, and of course under such a program we pay 50 per cent of the cost.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on October 30 as reported at page 8704 of Hansard, referring to the current spending estimates of the government, the minister stated that in the current year there would be less than a 16 per cent increase compared with last year. He said, and I quote: "It will be less than 15 per cent next year," meaning the fiscal year 1977. Would the minister indicate if he still sticks by the commitment that the spending increases will not be more than 15 per cent in fiscal year 1977?

Mr. Chrétien: I am very glad that my speech brought the hon. member back into the House. We have not seen him for a long time. We all wish him well. If he can win, we will be safe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I said when I tabled the Blue Book at the beginning of last year that it was the first time it was done. I stuck my neck out and said that the Blue Book plus the supplementaries next year will be an increase of not more than 16 per cent, as the hon. member said, and I am still within that. Perhaps at the end of the year it will be around 15 per cent, and for next year I am not in a position to say it will be more than 15 per cent or 16 per cent because there are still other decisions to be made before I come into the House with the next Blue Book. I hope it will be in that range, but I cannot be precise at this time.

Next year I will try to give the complete picture and to be as accurate as possible, just as I have done this year. However, at the same time I should like to say that when expenditures were rising 24 per cent and 26 per cent before this year, the hon. member and some of his colleagues did not believe me when I said at the beginning of the year that we would keep the increase under 16 per cent. I am very happy to report to the hon. member that that will be the case this year.

Mr. Stevens: Following upon what the minister has said, would the minister agree then that he has really told us nothing new tonight concerning future spending, and that if we consider the budgetary spending this year of $30 billion, what the minister is saying is that next year it will be $34.5 billion, whereas if the $1.5 billion had not been eliminated from the requests the minister was faced with, it could have been $36 billion? If the minister wants it on a national account basis, if we stay within 15 per cent we will go from $36 billion to approximately $41 billion; is that correct?

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry I have to repeat myself, but it is very difficult to make things stick in the mind of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: However, I think those figures will speak for themselves when I table the Blue Book at the end of February.

Mr. Stevens: The minister referred in his speech to holding the increase in the public service to, I believe, a 1.5 cer cent increase. Would the minister indicate how many extra public servants that represents?

Secondly, why is it necessary to have an increase when the minister says in the same speech that there are people who may not have their jobs any longer and that the government will try to see that they are replaced in some other department?

Mr. Chrétien: There are 1,000 people involved in the exercise of cutting some programs and institutions. Those people will be kept in the civil service. I cannot be very precise at this time about the figure. I can get it for the hon. member. There will be an increase in the total of about 4,500 new civil servants. The hon. member asks why, and I must reply that we need 300 to 500 people for the anti-inflation program.

Mr. Stevens: It was 200 originally.

Mr. Chrétien: We must hire more RCMP to provide security, and we need a few more guards to keep prisoners in jail. We have some programs of that nature for which we still need people, and I think most hon. members on the other side will agree that we should have a few more good policemen. Of course, they are not included in the 1.5 per cent, but that is not a very large increase, and for the majority of departments there will not be more, but many less, people working in them than there are this year.

Mr. Leggatt: I wish to take the minister back to the problem of deciding to eliminate indexing with regard to family allowances, thereby hurting people on low incomes, yet rejecting the possibility of eliminating indexing with regard to income tax, which could have yielded millions of dollars of additional revenue to the government. Would the minister advise the House why the government rejected eliminating indexing on income tax and yet eliminated indexing of family allowances, which will deprive low income families of their family allowances?

Mr. Chrétien: The question of indexing the exemption on taxes is a problem the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) could deal with in his budget. That is not my jurisdiction, but I wish to point out to the hon. member that this method was chosen for the reason I explained earlier. It will be suspended for one year. However, if we had stayed at the level we were at in 1972 and increased by indexing every year, it would be much lower now than it is, but we had the foresight to triple family allowances. However, at the same time we cannot afford everything, and that was one of the difficult choices we had to make. Of all the social programs, we felt that to suspend this one for one year would be less painful because 60 per cent of the families receiving family allowances earn about $12,000 a year, and those people at the bottom of the scale can go to the provincial governments, and whatever they receive will be paid 50 per cent by the federal government.

Mr. Leggatt: Some of the rather agonizing problems the minister obviously had were with regard to the environment, cutting back subsidies to passengers on railways, cutting back anti-pollution equipment in federal facilities, and cutting back other environmental services. Would the minister tell us how big that latter cut is? Will the minister admit to this House that he is now trading off the environment for the economy, and that that is now the policy of his government?

Mr. Chrétien: I think the hon. member likes making sweeping statements like that. I do not know the exact amount of the cut referred to, but it is perhaps $20 million out of a program of about $500 million. I think it is a minor cut. To make a sweeping statement that we are cutting environment—what we are doing is reducing the rate of growth because we cannot afford to go as fast as we were going in the previous year.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It now being ten o'clock the hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) had indicated that at ten o'clock he would be tabling certain documents. Perhaps he would be prepared to do that.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a copy in English and French of the figures requested by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), and request that they be appended to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—SMALL BUSINESS LOANS—REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN REGULATIONS TO ALLEVIATE DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING LOANS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no provision in the Standing Orders to take a point of order on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet as you were, and began a point of order before the adjournment debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is on his feet. I rose, having allowed a question which took the clock beyond ten o'clock, a supplementary question—I rose to begin proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 40, and there is no provision to interrupt the adjournment debate or the very strict proceedings that surround the adjournment debate which begins at ten o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I was on my feet.

An hon. Member: They have gone mad, the whole damn bunch of them.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, on November 28 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) if he would consider changes in the legislation under which the government guarantees loans to small businesses at an interest rate of 8 per cent. My main concern was directed at the difficulty experienced by many small businessmen and women in rural Ontario in obtaining these loans, and I was encouraged by the minister's answer that he would take my question as notice.

I would like to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that I was not and am not finding fault with the guaranteed loans program itself, but rather with just one aspect of what is proving to be an excellent source of low interest financial aid for small businesses. Considering that the interest rate on conventional loans is in the neighbourhood of 13 per cent, then the interest rate of 8 per cent for these guaranteed loans is attractive to small business people.

In 1974, Mr. Speaker, the increase in approvals of loans under this program was approximately 150 per cent, and in Ontario the increase was about 100 per cent, which is the best possible proof that the program is providing a service. I should point out, that this high rate of increase in loan approvals under this program creates the impression that every business person who qualifies should get approval of a loan, but that is not the case.

This program was brought to my attention recently by businessmen in my riding who had applied for loans under this legislation, had them approved at the local bank level, and then had their applications rejected by a regional office of the bank. Understandably they were at a loss as to how this could happen. After checking into the matter I found that it can happen very easily, but I also found that it would be difficult to find anyone at fault.

Banks in small towns have to borrow money to lend from their area or regional offices. They are expected to pay about 9½ per cent for the money, and under the guaranteed loans program they cannot charge more than 8 per cent. And so, Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is that banks have been lending money under this program at a loss for a long time. Many banks are prepared to do this, though, in the hope of gaining it back in the long term from other types of loans.

When this is coupled with the fact that banks are not compelled to grant loans under the guaranteed loans administration, then I would suggest that the banks that do grant such loans are acting responsibly. I think that this is borne out by the increase in loan approvals under the program that I mentioned earlier.

In the case of loans that are disapproved at regional levels, Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the banks in question have examined the situation closely and decided that there would not be any advantage, in the long or short term, in granting the loan. I think that is understandable, since they must weigh the loss of one and a half percentage points on the face of the loan, in addition to the cost of processing and handling the loan, against the volume of business a particular community will generate over that period.

Having said that, I will get to the point of my question. It is obvious that the guaranteed loans program for small businesses is working, and working well. But it is also obvious from what I have said, that a great many small businesses are being shut out of the program, for one reason or another, and I would like to see something done to ensure that qualified and deserving businessmen and women in the smaller communities will have access to these low-interest loans.

I consider it a hopeful sign that the minister said he would take my question as notice, and I would suggest that it should not be too difficult to make some adjustment to the legislation that would allow businesses in rural communities to take advantage of this program.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the government guarantees against any loss all loans made to small businesses through chartered banks and other lenders named by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in view of helping to finance a large array of improvement projects. The maximum unpaid balance should not exceed $50,000 and the current maximum interest rate allowed is 8¾ per cent a year.

In 1974, credit operations in terms of the plan were in the vicinity of $35 million, that is the highest amount ever registered in any one year since the setting up of the program in 1961. During the first nine months of 1975, the number of loans approved exceeded by 42 per cent those for the same period in 1974 and by almost 95 per cent, as far as dollar value is concerned. Those figures indicate that the chartered banks continue to cooperate by granting loans to small businesses within the framework of the program. About 20 per cent of the loans which were granted were as in the past granted to Ontario businessmen.

The policy governing loans varies, of course, from one bank to another and, although all banks still participate in the system, those that feature their own plan particularly for small businesses tend to grant fewer loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

In such cases, the borrower has an alternative that may be to his advantage, for the categories of loans that are not eligible under the terms of the federal system—for example, working capital—usually are under the terms of those bank plans. It is to be expected that, when a lender considers that a business is sufficiently solvent, he may offer direct financing at commercial loan interest rates rather than depend on the government guarantee under the Small Businesses Loans Act. Let me add that most of the special bank plans offer an interest rate somewhat lower than the usual rate for commercial loans.

To summarize, the figures show that the loans granted under this system set a record in 1975 and that Ontario still get its "normal" share. It seems that the figures I just mentioned do not justify the concern of the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) about the negative effect of the interest rate applicable in that case on loans and that, therefore, it does not seem to warrant changes in the regulations concerning that credit facility.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on a couple of occasions I have put questions to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) concerning the important and prolonged national strike in the paper industry of this country. I asked the minister what he has done or intends to do to bring the two sides together. We, of the New Democratic Party, have been appalled at the government's inaction in settling this national strike, especially since a good many of the 25,400 members of the Canadian Paper Workers' Union on strike have been on strike since mid-July of this year.

The paper companies have, on many occasions, refused to sit at the bargaining table. When they have sat at the table they have presented ridiculous wage offers to the union. It is evident that pulp and paper companies bargained in bad faith, refused to negotiate, and now hide behind the federal anti-inflation wage guidelines so conveniently set up by the Liberal government.

The pulp and paper industry in Canada is a cartel; that is to say, a few companies control land and timber rights and leave no room for new companies to enter the field and promote competition. Indeed I would suggest that the companies in their pricing and labour practices should be investigated under the anti-combines act.

We have seen collusion on the part of the companies in the past. They have kept the price of newsprint and paper artificially high. They have deliberately worked their mills seven days a week to build up newsprint inventory in anticipation of a strike, not really being serious about bargaining in good faith.

The pulp and paper industry is not a poor industry. It can afford to make decent wage offers, which it has refused to do to this day.

In the past two years we have seen unprecedented profitability. In 1973 the pulp and paper companies tripled their profits over 1972 for an increase of some $320 million. In 1974 they doubled their profits again to some $685 million. In the years 1973 to 1975 the same companies increased the price of a ton of newsprint by some 52 per cent and of bleached kraft pulp by 118 per cent. However, in the same period, 1973 to 1975, pulp and paper workers lost $1.25 an hour in real wages due to inflation.

When bargaining started last spring the union asked for $2 per hour wage increase plus a cost of living allowance. Of that $2 wage demand, $1.25 was to make up for money lost due to inflation and 75 cents for their share of increased productivity and profitability of these companies during those bonanza years.

The CPU has reached settlement with Irving Pulp and Paper Company in New Brunswick without a strike. They settled for $1.04 increase in the first year of a two year contract plus a cost of living allowance clause. It is interesting to note that woodlands workers previously got an increase of $1.10 in the first year.

I have just learned that tonight the Anti-Inflation Board turned down the Irving settlement with the CPU. In other words, the federal government has played right into the hands of the companies.

Canadian workers in the pulp and paper industry were led to believe that the 10 per cent wage increase limit would be flexible to take into account historical relationships and this, of course, exists with the paper workers and the woodlands workers. They were also led to believe that under the guidelines they would be liable to special consideration for contracts which expired before 1974 and for which negotiations were under way.

The CPU, the paper workers, fall under those exemptions. However, the Anti-Inflation Board's decisions in turning down tentative wage agreements of the Toronto secondary school teachers, inside postal workers, and now paper workers prove that special exemptions and consideration clauses are a sham. We have an unfair wage control program in effect in this country.

The cabinet exempted postal workers in their settlement. How can it not now exempt the paper workers? However, I fear that it will not, knowing the anti-labour bias of the government. It will in effect destroy collective bargaining in Canada and promote labour strife in the months ahead.

How can the government expect paper workers to work for less than woodworkers with whom they have have had a traditional wage relationship? How can the government expect the CPU to accept now a limit of a 10 per cent wage increase, which is less than what the companies would have been prepared to offer all along? How can the union bargain effectively when companies are regulated by provincial law, and now the provinces are passing the buck to the federal Anti-Inflation Board?

The companies are hiding behind the Anti-Inflation Board, waiting for a decision and not bothering to bargain in good faith. The Minister of Labour says he cannot get involved because of provincial jurisdiction, but in the past we have seen appeals on the part of the postal workers to the federal cabinet. I wonder whether the federal Minister of Labour will now argue in support of the union with regard to the exemption of wage guidelines.

The Liberal government, as a result of the wage guidelines and the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board, has certainly shown itself to be on the side of the companies. It is now controlling wages, after letting the companies' prices and profits rise unhindered over the past two years. I ask the Minister of Labour again tonight: will he intercede in the cabinet when the unions appeal for an exemption from the effects of these anti-inflation guidelines to settle this long and unnecessary strike?

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Sault-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Symes) has said, the pulp and paper industry falls within the provincial jurisdiction as regards industrial relations.

[English]

However, the federal government, and in particular the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), have expressed great concern on a number of occasions over the large number of workers who are out of work. The Minister has urged the parties to return to the bargaining table and complete their collective agreements as soon as possible.

Where monetary settlements are reached at levels above the eight plus two formula of the anti-inflation program, the parties realize that their settlements would be subject to review by the Anti-Inflation Board. Both union and industry representatives appear to have been hesitating about returning to the bargaining table until the Anti-Inflation Board was in a position to give an opinion on the recent settlement between the Canadian Paper Workers Union and Irving Pulp and Paper at Saint John, New Brunswick.

The opinion of the Board has been released today, and it says, contrary to what the hon. member was telling us, that the Board had concluded that it can accept a first year increase up to 14 per cent in the total compensation of the employees at Irving Pulp and Paper Limited. This is about four percentage points above the arithmetical formula applicable to them. Accordingly, the Anti-Inflation Board has requested the parties to modify their agreement so as to give effect to this decision. The Anti-Inflation Board has also informed the parties that it will wish to review the second year of the settlement when agreements in other mills have been concluded.

Meanwhile a settlement between Domtar and the Chemical Workers has been completed in the corrugated container plant dispute in Montreal, and negotiations resumed between the paper workers and Ontario Paper at St. Catharines. Negotiations between Domtar and the Canadian Paper Workers at Cornwall have also resumed but no progress has been reported.

[Translation]

The position of our department is very clear and very positive, Mr. Speaker.

The parties must return to the negotiation table as soon as possible and negotiate in good faith to allow work to resume in that vital industry.

[English]

Industry representatives are concerned about the economic situation of the industry and the fact that a major settlement has been completed in the industry in the United States calling for a 10 per cent increase in wages. The industry in Canada claims that the Canadian industry must close the gap in wages between Canada and the United States in the current round of negotiations. At present, according to the industry, Canadian wage rates are about 15 per cent higher than comparable wage rates in the United States paper industry.

PUBLISHING—POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN SHAREHOLDERS IN "READER'S DIGEST"

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, it was an ominous sight this evening to see the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) eating crow on television, and to find the government reversing its policies in this House when only 18 months ago he was saying during the election campaign, "Don't be obsessed with inflation, we are rich."

● (2220)

I thank you, Sir, for the privilege of being granted tonight the right to speak on behalf of a group of forgotten people, namely, the approximately 600 shareholders, Canadian citizens, who own 32 per cent of Reader's Digest (Canada) Limited. Let me quote the question I directed to the right hon. Prime Minister last Friday, December 5, pertaining to the adverse effects of his government's policies in Bill C-58 upon the economic interests of these Canadian citizens:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the serious adverse effect present legislation, Bill C-58, will have on the value of stocks held by 600 Canadian citizens in Reader's Digest (Canada), will the government take action to protect their equity which amounts to about 32 per cent of the ownership of the company?

The Prime Minister said in reply:

Mr. Speaker, I apologize; the import of the question has escaped me. I will take notice of it and try to answer, unless the hon. member wants to ask the question again.

I repeated the question and added this:

Three years ago, this stock was worth $32.50 on the market. This morning it is worth $7.00.

The Canadian people know that the main stock in trade of the government under the Trudeau brand of Liberalism is a form of anachronistic and petty nationalism where their control of the country and its government has reached such a stage that they must continually have a whipping boy to divert the attention of the electors and taxpayers in Canada from the appalling financial mess the government is in. There has been a long line-up of these whipping boys, and the Prime Minister brings them on stage whenever needed, just as Lester Pearson did before him.

The latest is a narrow form of petty nationalism levelled at the United States and all things emanating from that country. I will not use the form word "American" because we Canadians are just as American as the citizens of the United States of America. We are all Americans on these two continents.

I will not go into detail about Bill C-58, which is narrow, nationalistic legislation levelled principally at the publications Time magazine and Reader's Digest. I take you back nine years ago when the then form of Liberalism under Lester Pearson granted certain taxation privileges and exemptions to Canadian advertisers in these two magazines. Liberalism of the day strongly recommended even that they incorporate here in Canada and that Canadians participate in ownership to the recommended extent of at least 25 per cent. Although I do not believe Time magazine's management availed itself of taking this course, nevertheless Reader's Digest (Canada) did so. They incorporated in the city of Montreal, where they are an established Canadian entity in every way, with a modern plant, approximately a thousand employees, with a yearly payroll of $5.5 million, and have exceeded by quite a bit the extent of Canadian ownership recommended years ago by the Pearson government.

There are 585 shareholders, 569 of whom are Canadian, and most of them live in the province of Quebec. Some four years ago Reader's Digest (Canada) stock was selling at $32.50 per share. As a result of the Trudeau government's discriminatory meddling with the affairs of this company through its narrow nationalism, permitted by the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner), this stock has now fallen to an all-time low of $7. I would remind the minister that there are some Reader's Digest (Canada) shareholders in the constituency of Peterborough, and likewise remind the Prime Minister that there are many shareholders in his constituency of Mount Royal.

As witnessed by the Prime Minister's appalling and awesome statement on austerity tonight, I say to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State, who is the member for Peterborough, you have put the country within the past four years in the appalling state in which it is, and the decline of Reader's Digest (Canada) stock is certainly one of the barometers recording your dismal record. Yes, Canada and Reader's Digest (Canada) is at an all-time low, and despite the Prime Minister's expressions of surprise, Mr. Porter, the departing American ambassador, has legitimately tried to tell you that our inter-American relations are likewise at an all-time low.

More than that, there is a half-page ad in today's Journal, a message to the Government of Canada from 50 business firms of the graphic arts and printing trades suppliers of the Canadian Reader's Digest. They are not American firms. I quote from the Journal of December 17 as follows:

Has the Government, for example, taken into consideration the effect that Bill C-58 in its present form would have on companies which have purchased and committed themselves to specialized equipment to produce the Reader's Digest Magazines and other products? If this business is lost, it could seriously jeopardize many of these companies and, in some cases, cause bankruptcy.

We urge the Government of Canada, therefore, to find a solution that will enable the Digest to continue in Canada—as a responsible publisher and as a customer for our goods and services.

I say to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State, as is suggested in the article, that if they put the Reader's Digest out of business as a result of Bill C-58, they also put 50 other businesses and/or their suppliers out of business, or at least they diminish their trade and prosperity all because of a silly Canadian content provision. Reader's Digest is a responsible publisher and there are at least 50 other firms, all reputable, who are suppliers to Reader's Digest.

I have shown, Mr. Speaker, that most of the shareholders in Reader's Digest (Canada) live in Quebec, and I am indeed surprised at the lack of vocal support in this House from the Quebec members of parliament who certainly have constituents who are shareholders in this great publishing house, Reader's Digest (Canada). I say to you, Mr. Speaker, I am not a shareholder, but I am one who has always respected legitimate, productive industry and the investments required to operate legitimate industry, and I will not stand idly by and see these things that are necessary for the social and economic good of our country sacrificed on a phony and fiery altar of Trudeaucratic nationalism.

I call upon the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State the hon. member for Peterborough, and what is left of the right-thinking members of the Liberal Party, to sober up from this phony, nationalistic binge and either amend Bill C-58 in a democratic manner or throw it out of this House to the oblivion where it belongs, so that Reader's Digest (Canada) can continue to operate legitimately in Montreal, Province of Quebec, where its approximately 1,000 employees can continue to earn salaries and wages, and in order that, last but not least, the Canadian citizen shareholders can retain some confidence in the stock in which, at the behest of Liberalism, they so willingly invested, and from which, sometime in the future, under a more stable government they might expect a reasonable financial return.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for allowing me also to refer tonight to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) appearance on television. I am sure his prelude to his question will allow me to get in my few words. I think the Prime Minister showed a continuing leadership here tonight and on television in his search for co-operation from all Canadians in following the government's guidelines on restraint and in accepting the cutbacks which were announced here tonight, and which will be followed by members on this side of the House and I am sure by the Canadian people. I think we must admit that guidelines should be followed during this period.

However, to answer the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, the government does not intend to compensate the minority shareholders of Reader's Digest Association (Canada) Ltd. for losses in the value of their stock holdings. Investors who purchase shares do so in the expectation of capital gains, and also at the risk of possible depreciation in the value of their investment.

According to current Toronto market quotations, Reader's Digest shares never exceeded $10.25 per share during 1975, and were trading at approximately $8.25 per share prior to the introduction of Bill C-58 in January. The present market price is $7.25 per share. Thus there has been no serious adverse effect on the value of the stock that can be attributed to this legislation. Moreover, a review of the trading in Reader's Digest stock during 1973 and 1974 indicates an almost uninterrupted decline in value from a high of $30.50 in 1973 to a low of $8 on January 4, 1975. It will be recalled that the government's intention to bring in this legislation was not announced until January 23, 1975.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

Summary of the surtax proposal

* The surtax is imposed only on taxpayers with taxable incomes in excess of $30,000.

* It affects only federal taxes; provincial taxes are not changed.

* The surtax is for the taxation year 1976. It is estimated to apply to 170,000 taxpayers and yield $115 million.

* The surtax is calculated as 10 per cent of federal tax payable over and above a «surtax threshold,» that is, above $8,000, which is approximately the federal tax payable on taxable income of $30,000.

Surtax calculation

Married taxpayer with two children under 16

Earnings of $45,000

Earnings	$45,000
Taxable income	40,320
Federal tax before surtax	11,957
Less «surtax threshold»	8,000
Amount subject to surtax	$3,957
Surtax (10%)	$396

To ensure that surtax liabilities of Quebec residents are the same as those of the residents of other provinces, the surtax will be computed without reference to the 24-per-cent abatement for Quebec.

Surtax payable at various gross income levels

Married taxpayer with two children under 16

Taxpayer is assumed to be under age 65 and to receive wage and salary income. Family allowances, calculated at 1975 rates, are added to income in computing tax. Taxpayer is assumed to take the standard deduction of $100 in respect of medical expenses and charitable contributions. In addition to personal exemptions, the employment expense allowance of 3% of wage and salary income to a maximum of $150 and UIC and Canada Pension Plan contributions, calculated at current rates, are deducted from income in computing tax.

December 11, 1975

Mr. Sylvain Cloutier
Deputy Minister of Transport
Transport Canada Building
Place de Ville
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0N5

Dear Mr. Cloutier,

I refer to our letter of December 10, 1975, concerning two air traffic controllers who were suspended at the Dorval Air Traffic Control Centre.

Because of the extreme urgency of the case, I visited the Control Centre last night in order to meet with the complainants and their superiors. As agreed with Mr. Walter McLeish, I was accompanied by Mr. C. G. Foy of your Department.

In addition to Messrs. M. Pitre and L. Desmarais, I met with both anglophone and francophone controllers. While consulting with these persons, I realized that finding a «technical» solution which everyone could respect would be impossible unless steps were taken rapidly to improve the psychological atmosphere of the Control Centre.

Although the question of ground-to-ground communications can, to a certain extent, be linked to that of air-ground communications (a problem I discussed in my letter of July 30, 1975), I believe they must be separated for the moment.

The discussions I had in Montreal also convinced me that your Department, while always giving overriding priority to air safety, will have to find, as quickly as possible, ways to allow the use of the French language in ground-to-ground communications between controllers who wish to use French. While I recognize that your Department's undeniable duty, from a legal and moral standpoint, is to protect the public if air safety appears to be in jeopardy, I find it abnormal, in principle, to oblige French-speaking controllers to speak to each other in English in the province of Quebec.

Without wishing for the moment to make formal recommendations which might take me into an area where I do not have your competence, I would like to propose for now, as a working hypothesis, a three-point analysis, the essential goal of which is to bring the whole question back to a level where reason will prevail over all other considerations:

1) Given the circumstances existing for several weeks at the Dorval Control Centre, the two suspensions seemed inevitable. Even though, in ground-to-ground communications, certain interested parties assess in varying degrees the importance of the purely linguistic factor in air safety, our investigation reveals that the general climate of indiscipline at the Control Centre at the time of the suspension was a very clear threat to air safety.

2) The suspended employees (Messrs. S. Cormier and R. Buisson), and their superiors (Messrs. M. Pitre and L. Desmarais), were all to a certain extent victims of a situation which had been allowed to deteriorate for too long; indeed, the suspended persons were working in an atmosphere were insults and provocations between certain anglophones and certain francophones were commonplace: consequently, one can reasonably believe that the thoughtless behaviour of the suspended persons may have been the result of exasperation, tension, as well as perplexity about the often uneven application of sometimes ambiguous directives in the past. These same circumstances obliged the two supervisors to enforce regulations in conditions which, no doubt, were very distressing to them personally and which led them to carry the blame, in a certain part of the press, unjustly in my opinion, for having taken an unpopular decision.

3) Since the department will announce today that it will be in a position, at the beginning of January, to evaluate a study now in progress which seems to offer serious hope that French may be used in certain ground-to-ground communication it might find it useful to consider softening the financial effects of the two sanctions as a freely decided gesture to lower tensions. In my view, such a gesture would constitute neither a defeat nor a victory for anyone, nor would it give other employees a licence to commit acts of indiscipline affecting air safety while a solution is being worked out in short order.

Indeed, even though my mandate is to defend linguistic equality, I consider that the safety of passengers and aircrew must not in the slightest way be jeopardized by any political consideration. The problem now is simply to find a realistic procedure allowing us, if only briefly, to take the politics out of an issue that in the final analysis is technical in nature and, in my opinion, must be settled on technical grounds. At bottom, all the interested parties, be they anglophones or francophones, controllers, pilots or departmental specialists, state that their attitudes on language use are based solely on concern for air safety. I believe that Canadians expect all these professionals to explain the soundness of their respective positions through objective arguments. Plainly, this will be possible only if the Ministry manages to establish the climate of serenity which is one of the principal goals of the steps we have taken and of the present letter.

I would appreciate receiving any comments you may have at your earliest convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Keith Spicer

Dear Mr. Cloutier,

You will find enclosed an article which appeared in The Montreal Gazette of December 10, 1975, describing the suspension of two French-speaking air traffic controllers in Montreal and of an English-speaking air traffic controller working in Quebec City.

In the course of discussions I had with English and French-speaking controllers at the Dorval Air Traffic Control Centre during the night of December 10 to 11, I learned that the English-speaking controller was actually working in Montreal. I was unable to get in touch with him at that time.

In conjunction with our investigation already in progress concerning language procedures in ground-to-ground communications at the Dorval Air Traffic Control Centre, I would like to specify that the suggestion I made in my letter of December 11, 1975, concerning the softening of the financial effects of the two suspensions also applies to the English-speaking controller who had to take a day's leave without pay.

Yours sincerely,

Keith Spicer

TREASURY BOARD

"APPENDIX C"

NOTES ON THE EXPENDITURE REDUCTIONS

The government's expenditure planning cycle for the fiscal year 1976-77 began early in 1975. Departmental expenditure proposals were received in March and following analysis, the Treasury Board developed their first recommendations on expenditures which were approved by Cabinet in July. By November because of revisions in forecasts to statutory or other highly committed programs, the total requirement was considered to be too great by about $1.5 billion. A review was begun culminating in the reductions listed below.

FURTHER EXPLANATORY NOTES ON CERTAIN ITEMS IN THE EXPENDITURE REDUCTION LIST

Crop Insurance - The federal government contributes 50 percent of the premium costs of crop insurance in all provinces except the Atlantic Provinces (except PEI) and Quebec where it contributes 25 percent of premium costs and 25 percent of administration costs.

Development and Demonstration of Pollution Abatement Technology - The federal government provides support to industry in developing technology on air and water pollution problems.

PAIT - Assistance to firms in manufacturing and processing industries, normally in the form of a non-repayable contribution for 50 percent of project costs.

DIP - There are two parts to this program:

(a) assistance to product development in defence industries in the form of grants to cover 50 percent of the cost of projects; and

(b) industrial modernization for defence exports. Grants are paid on 50 percent of the project cost supplemented by loans for the other 50 percent.

Opportunities for Youth - Part of the Student Summer Employment and Activities Program (SSEAP) was initiated for the summer of 1971-72. The budget for 1975-76 for SSEAP was about $60 million with OFY the largest component at about $35 million.

Training Allowances, Canadian Manpower Training Program - The legislation calls for changing the level of allowances for changes in the cost of living.

Transcontinental Service - Passenger train subsidies for the transcontinental service under the Railway Act are estimated at $72 million for 1976-77. Reduced service will decrease the subsidy.

Treasury Board Bilingualism Development Vote - An amount of $50 million was contained in a TB vote in 1975-76 to cover salaries of those hired to replace public servants sent on language training and a few other relatively much less significant costs under the bilingualism program. The amount will be reduced to $40 million in 1976-77.

Federal Labour Intensive Program - Additional labour intensive expenditures by the federal government to ease winter unemployment. Announced in the June 23 budget.

CIDA - Aid program for 1975-76 at $903 million is expected to equal .565 of 1 percent of GNP. The 1976-77 level of $1,000 million is expected to equal only .541 of 1 percent of GNP.

Shipbuilding Subsidies - The Shipbuilding Assistance Program provides a subsidy of 14 percent on ships constructed in Canada. The percentage will decline gradually to 8 percent in six years.

Railway Relocation and Crossing Act, Part 2 - Special assistance provided where the costs of railway grade separation projects (under Part 3) exceed statutory limits.

Treasury Board Contingencies Vote - Departments carry a prescribed partial allowance for general salary increases in their votes. The Treasury Board carries another amount to make up the difference from the expected total. With the introduction of wage guidelines with the 8 + 2 + 2 formula, it was thought safe to reduce the contingency fund.

PROPOSED MONITORING AND REPORTING OF EFFECT OF REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES IN DISADVANTAGED REGIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in light of the announcement yesterday with respect to the reduction in government expenditures this year and next, I am sure that all members of the House would want to be sure in some ongoing way that these reductions and expenditures would not inconvenience those who are least able to protect themselves, particularly those living in the disadvantaged regions of the country. Therefore, I hope this motion will find general acceptance. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be instructed by the House to monitor and report, on a monthly basis, any detrimental impact which the alteration of government expenditures might have on the present economic and social development in regions in which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has a responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED RE-INTRODUCTION OF SUBSIDY ON FLUID MILK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Since, according to the answer of the Minister of Agriculture to a question directed to him on December 18, 1975, the consumption of fluid milk in Quebec has increased in 1975 and if the same phenomenon had occurred in the other provinces we would not be experiencing such problems today, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau):

That the government draw the attention of the House to a policy aimed at encouraging the Canadian people to consume more fluid milk and that such incitement be accompanied by a consumer subsidy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECOGNITION OF RETURN TO CHAMBER OF MEMBER FOR BRANDON-SOURIS FOLLOWING ILLNESS

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with oral questions, I know that hon. members will want to join me in recognizing with appropriate warmth the return to the chamber of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed a few words on this occasion, I have had about four speeches burning in my bosom for the last few weeks. I will not try to unload them all at one time, but I should like to express appreciation, first of all, to you, Sir, for your messages on behalf of all hon. members of this House during my recent illness.

I should like especially to mention messages received from the three leading officials of this chamber. When a person has been through what I have been through in the last few weeks—and I am sure the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell will agree with me in this regard—he thinks about the chamber and the things which are taking place here, and it sort of assumes an ethereal glow. All one can see is the stained glass windows, and reflected in the glow is the halo effect which seems to reside over some figures in the chamber to a greater extent than to others. This was actually substantiated in my own experience because the warmest messages and the messages which showed the greatest concern and personal involvement came from the right hon. Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the right hon. member for Prince Albert. That is why the halo effect is stronger around these three people than any other, in my mind's eye.

House of Commons

I first became aware of the Prime Minister at the Resources for Tomorrow Conference back in 1961 when he was then a professor. He has demonstrated many hidden resources since that time since he has assumed the responsibility for the leadership of this House. The Leader of the Opposition wrote a most encouraging and helpful note at a most critical time. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, with his great sense of timing—one hour before I went for surgery—sent to my room an autographed copy of his book "One Canada". Believe me, that was a reality to hang on to for the next few days. I think it was Thomas Carlyle who said that if you want to see demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt the truth of original sin, attend a session of the House of Commons. Of course, he was referring to the British house. You might even have it demonstrated here. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a warmth and friendship that you find only in this place and I do appreciate everything that has been done and written and said on my behalf.

I should like to extend a special message to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) who is not with us this morning. He too, made a concrete gesture. He sent me a tape in quadraphonic sound so that the music was coming at me from all sides—and not of an Irish jig but a beautiful tape recording of "The Sound of Music". I was just going to suggest that he make the same gesture to Joe Davidson at this Christmas time because as we all know, music hath charms to soothe the savage breast. A wise man also has said, "Let me write the songs of a nation and I care not who makes its laws."

I should like to mention, too, the staff of the National Defence Medical Centre, one of the finest hospitals in the nation, under the leadership of Dr. Fitzgibbon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: Also the staff of the Civic hospital under Dr. Keon. It is one of the finest cardiac centres in the nation and it is going to be in the forefront when the new cardiac unit opens some time in the spring.

Perhaps I might be allowed one final message, Mr. Speaker. On the eve of Christmas I recall an old saying: plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose. The first message I receive when I come back to the House is the decree of Caesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed. It is not simple, it is not new—it is an old message. I am sure it is more than coincidence that it has been saved for the Christmas period; but we know from history that man proposes and God disposes.

I wind up my remarks by extending the greetings of the thousands of Tiny Tims and Bob Cratchets, the backbone of the nation: A Merry Christmas to all and God bless us all—and God help us all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

[English]

TRADE

EFFECT OF TAX ON EXPORTS ON MULTINATIONALS AND FOREIGN PAYMENTS DEFICIT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance relating to the tax levy on exports. In view of the tax of 100 per cent on the excess of export prices above domestic prices and the encouragement this would give multinational companies with subsidiaries in countries other than Canada to export from those countries rather than Canada, how does the government propose to offset the possibly disastrous effect upon our exports?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, reflecting on many of the major export industries in Canada, the forest products industry and minerals in particular, I would say that the hon. gentleman's expression of concern would not appear to be well founded.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, about another concern I have. In view of what seems to be the harmful effect of this tax and the probable discouragement to the processing of raw materials in Canada as opposed to multinationals using other countries with a more favourable tax arrangement to process the raw materials, how does the Minister of Finance propose to offset this?

● (1120)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I do not think that follows. Indeed, the provision for the proceeds of the tax specifically to be reinvested in additional capital facilities we fell will enhance the probability of further processing facilities being constructed in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to make certain I am right. Is it the minister's view that the proposed 100 per cent tax levy on the differential between the domestic and export price on particular exports will not affect significantly potential Canadian exports and not contribute to the already substantial foreign payments deficit which exists in Canada's trade? Is that the government's position?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the foreign trade deficit is related to the impact of recession on our major foreign markets, and the recession there has been very much more marked than the recession in Canada. We do not feel that the expected recovery of exports from Canada, as those foreign markets recover, will be adversely affected by the export levy.

EFFECT OF TAX ON EXPORTS ON EXPORT SALES NEXT YEAR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Has the minister estimated the extent of the impact of this disincentive on export sales next year and has he any plans to counteract the negative effect of this disincentive on our sales in what is already a weak international position for Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in making projections I do not think I want to use words like "disincentive" or "negative impact." I have forgotten exactly what the hon. member said. Of course, it is not possible to forecast accurately our exports next year, but my canvassing of the business community leads me to believe they anticipate an upturn, particularly in the United States if, as now seems evident, that nation's economy turns upward, in accordance with the OECD forecast for the United States and Canada. Therefore, 1976 looks as if it will be a better year for exports. By the same token, as things now stand, present export prices are not likely to result in large levies of the particular tax to which the hon. member referred. I shall continue discussions with the export community and help them, through various missions around the world, to take advantage of new opportunities next year and beyond.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister's conversation with exporters obviously took place before the tax was announced last night, does he not feel, as the Leader of the Opposition said, that the tax will be a disincentive for multinational corporations which will tend to send exports from plants in other countries rather than from plants in Canada?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, although the tax itself was announced yesterday, the white paper made clear reference to it. In the two months inbetween I have had extensive discussions with the export community. I would not want to say they are wholly satisfied with the measure. I have not had an opportunity since last night to discuss the specifics of it with them. Generally speaking, it is fair to say that, at the moment, the export community would welcome a substantial increase in the prices available in export markets. In other words, profit margins are not that high at present, and I suspect that is their number one concern, not the tax itself. As for multinationals, to the best of my recollection there was no reference made to this question by any of the major exporters to whom I spoke and with whom the Minister of Finance and I held discussions.

INCOME TAX

EFFECT OF IMPOSITION OF TEN PER CENT SURTAX

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Considering that many people in the country are under the illusion that the government has decided to impose a special 10 per cent surtax on all incomes exceeding $30,000, would the minister confirm that the bill he introduced yesterday will simply impose a 10 per cent surtax on all payable tax in excess of $8,000, and that this will result, for example, in a man earning $35,000, with two children, paying only $10 more?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the exact figures were presented in the House yesterday and are appended to Hansard.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBLE MEASURES TO INCREASE BURDEN ON THE RICH

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the confirmation. May I ask the following supplementary question? Considering that the minister said yesterday that the rich should "shoulder some share of the burden," and considering that the removal of the escalation from family allowances will ensure that low income families will do more than their share of shouldering the burden, the extent of $27 per child, can the minister tell the House if the government will be introducing other measures to increase the burden on the rich?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that with regard to the family allowance, not only does it affect everyone, including the hon. member and myself, as does the surcharge—

Mr. Broadbent: We won't suffer much.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Indeed, we won't suffer much. No one will suffer unduly from either the surcharge or the expenditure proposals of my colleague.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister stated it well when he said that none of us in the upper income group will bear much of a burden.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Since in fact we will not be suffering much or bearing much of the burden, does the minister and the government not think it is time to impose a 100 per cent surtax on all increases in income in excess of the $2,400?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have recognized from the reaction to his remarks that he did not state honestly what I just said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I said that none of us in Canada will suffer unduly from this program. I wish the hon. member would not try to put words in my mouth.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board following the cuts announced last night.

Can the minister tell the House whether other cuts in other sectors of the economy will be announced soon?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are continually considering every opportunity that might help reduce the government's expenditure program, but I do not expect any other announcement of this nature in the coming months.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since 40 per cent of the national budget is earmarked for the interest on the national debt, National Defence and civil service, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government intends to review its expenditures for $13 billion more and advocate measures that would help save money where it is wasted at the present time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not checked the figures advanced by the hon. member, but I would be very happy if he would give me more precise indications, namely where there are frivolous expenditures or where money is wasted as he indicates. Such a sweeping statement carries no weight.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEVEL AT WHICH ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION FROZEN

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but unfortunately he is not here. He may have left the country in tears, I am not sure. I therefore put the question to the President of the Treasury Board. It is with regard to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Will the minister clarify if the level at which DREE is being frozen is the level set in the main estimates or whether it includes the supplementary estimates as well? More specifically, can he indicate how these measures will affect the Atlantic region, keeping in mind that virtually all the transportation cuts were with respect to that region.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amount of money quoted yesterday in connection with the regional economic expansion program is the same as that which appeared in the estimates for 1975-76.

I wish to indicate to the hon. member that, as far as money is concerned, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be authorized to spend, I think, $30 million more that it would have spent otherwise during the fiscal year 1975-76.

[English]

REASON REDUCED EXPENDITURES HAVE GREATEST EFFECT IN ATLANTIC REGION—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Since the proposed spending reductions announced last night include increasing tariffs for east coast, gulf and coastal services, a reduction in the level of subsidies for the Maritime Freight Rate Assistance Act and the Atlantic Freight Rate Assistance Act and the total elimination of the subsidy on the movement of flour and grain for export through east coast ports, will the minister explain why the cuts in this department were not distributed more equitably or why a particular attack was made on the increasing burden of transportation costs to the Atlantic region specifically?

● (1130)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the review of subsidies for freight rates in eastern Canada is a continuing process. During the past few years we have improved other types of transportation in this area, including those by trucks. As to the second part of the question, the subsidies paid for storing grains in eastern sea ports were for export purposes, which has nothing to do with the local economy of the maritime provinces.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Having regard to the growing concern felt by the four Atlantic premiers and in the light of the result of special studies commissioned by them showing that the principal handicap to effective development in the region is transportation costs and lack of transport facilities, can the minister tell us whether any consultation has been entered into or will now take place with regard to the decision to increase this burden further, totally undercutting any programs or activities carried on by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the issues raised by the hon. member will be discussed at the ministerial level by the Minister of Transport and those responsible in the maritime provinces.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC REGION—EFFECT OF REDUCED TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDIES ON COST OF LIVING—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO OFFSET

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the impact the transportation sections of his colleague's statement will have on the cost of living in the Atlantic provinces, provinces which are already burdened by the highest rate of unemployment and, indeed, the highest cost of living in the country, has the minister undertaken any analysis of the impact these measures will have on the total cost of transportation in the Atlantic provinces? What steps does the government propose to take to offset this impact on the prices of consumer goods in the region?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): It should be appreciated that the greater part of the dollars being retained in transportation cuts in relation to the Atlantic region are on movements of grain for export and therefore there is no impact whatever from that section on any costs in the maritime region. The whole question of the appropriate approach to freight rate assistance in the Atlantic region is one which will be discussed between myself and the four Atlantic ministers. The cut in question here represents a very small portion of the total support being given to freight in that region.

TRADE

EFFECT OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM ON SALE OF CANDU REACTORS TO ARGENTINA AND SOUTH KOREA

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell us what effect the restraint program announced last night will have on the provision of the two CANDU reactors to South Korea and Argentina bearing in mind that the provision of these reactors will probably cost the Canadian taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In the case of Argentina an indication has already been given by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that renegotiation of that contract is now under way. I have not heard from him, obviously, since he has been away in Paris, how those talks are going. As to South Korea, there has been no change to the best of my knowledge in the circumstances which were announced in the House and elsewhere in recent weeks. In other words, as far as I am aware, arrangements for that sale have not been changed in any way.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA

SUGGESTION CORPORATION RAISE FUNDS FROM PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Part of the double shuffle we heard last night meant that Canadian National will in future have to raise funds from the private sector. Has the right hon. gentleman given any thought to requiring Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to raise its funds from the private sector as well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RECONCILIATION OF REDUCED EXPENDITURES ON RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE AND POLICY OF REVITALIZATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Will he reconcile the statement he made recently that in the near future he would announce what he called he called a revitalization policy with regard to passenger rail transportation movement with the reduction by some $10 million of expenditure on transcontinental and other rail passenger services announced last night?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I did indicate in earlier statements that I hoped to make a broad statement of policy pointing in the direction of the provision of rail services for passengers in Canada early in the New Year. Without any doubt, a certain part of that statement will imply a diminution in certain of the services which are very costly in proportion to the use being made of them. Other parts of the statement, however, will imply revitalization in terms of the purchase of additional equipment which in future years will lead to additional services being provided in a better way. Those two things involve more immediate cuts in some of the losses but at the same time an investment of money in the future for better service where service is retained.

SUGGESTION THAT WASTE BE ELIMINATED

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since the federal government yesterday requested Canadians, especially the poor, to make every sacrifice to fight against inflation, can the right hon. Prime Minister today assure the House that the government will act immediately with regard to several recommendations made by the Auditor General to curtail wastes and duplication still existing in several programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the President of the Treasury Board yesterday announced a great many cuts in the administrative areas themselves. We hope that will prevent the so-called wastes mentioned by the hon. member. However, I can assure the hon. member, knowing his competence and his sincerity, that if he has some particular examples of massive, significant and sustained wastes, I will be very glad to discuss them with him.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary and specific question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Will the government take immediate action about the recommendations of the Auditor General concerning the centralization of control over expenditures in order to prevent waste and duplication?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the President of the Treasury Board has already had the opportunity to tell the House in the last few days—perhaps the hon. member was not listening at the time—that we intend to implement the majority of the recommendations of the Auditor General. At the beginning of the New Year, the President of the Treasury Board will probably be in a position to present a more specific bill of the House.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN 1976—POSSIBLE MEASURES TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In view of the elimination and cutting back of many government programs announced last night and the indirect effect this will probably have on employment in this country by depressing the economy as well as the statement he made that the cutbacks will perhaps affect those of moderate means, I should like to ask the minister whether or not the government is anticipating more unemployment in 1976. If so, can he tell the House what his projections are?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we think the most important growth factor, as I mentioned to the Leader of the Opposition earlier, will be the ability of the Canadian export industry to secure an increased volume of exports to foreign markets, a situation which has been restrained by the recession affecting those foreign markets. It is of course, difficult to make a prediction about our own economy while we cannot with ease make a prediction about the economies in those countries to which we provide goods. I might add, however, that according to the OECD analysis there is the prospect of substantial growth in Canada during 1976 and this, of course, would have a positive effect on the employment rate.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact that the same OECD report also predicted an increase in unemployment, and since the Conference Board has made the same prediction, according to the newspapers this morning, will the government be announcing in the near future any new programs designed to increase employment in this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have no such announcement in prospect at the moment.

VIEW OF PUBLIC OF GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARDS RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. With the government increasing expenditures next year by 15 per cent in what will probably be an 11 per cent inflation situation, and in spite of the restraints it claims it is imposing on itself, and with a net increase of 8,000 predicted in the size of the public service, how can the government expect the Canadian public to believe it is honest and serious in its so-called belt-tightening operation?

● (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the question seems somewhat argumentative. I would suggest to the hon. member that he and his colleagues should not at one and the same time argue that we should cut more and then complain about cuts we have already made. I put to the hon. member the suggestion that I put to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi; if he has specific examples of cuts that he would like to see take place that are of any significance, I wish he would state them.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he is the leader of the government and that it is up to him to propose the cuts.

Mr. Speaker: That may be a very attractive debate but it should be reserved for some other time. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, would he put it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do have a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister stand in this House today and say honestly that he and the government are really committed to restraint and are not asking the disadvantaged to bear the greatest burden of the austerity program?

PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF PETRO-CAN RATHER THAN REDUCTION OF OTHER PROGRAMS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question also for the Prime Minister which relates to his request for suggestions. It appears that the total amount that the government projects it will save by the cuts which were proposed last night in useful social programs is somewhere in the vicinity of $1.5 billion. This is the same sum as spent on establishing Petro-Can. In view of the usefulness of some of these programs, why did the government not propose to cut Petro-Can instead, the existence of which is somewhat questionable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting suggestion which perhaps should be taken into consideration in view of the investment that Petro-Can has in Syncrude, which is in the hon. member's constituency.

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF EXCLUSION FROM UNITED STATES MARKET

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns putting Canadians to work; it is a yuletide hope addressed to the Acting Minister of the Environment in his fisheries capacity. Would he again raise with Washington the ridiculous situation that excludes Canadian swordfishermen from United States markets? I ask this question on behalf of the residents of the former swordfishing capital of the world, which is in Halifax-East Hants.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have asked my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to reassess our own situation—our own evaluation and standards—and if we can secure a progress report on the matter I am sure we will be able to make those arguments to the United States authorities.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURE ON PROFESSIONAL SERVICES AND EQUIPMENT AND RENTALS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Since the reduction in professional and special services is only 2 per cent of the 1975-76 estimates and the reduction in equipment and rentals is only 5 per cent of the 1975-76 estimates, are the Canadian people expected to believe that the reduction in these areas, two of the most abused areas for unnecessary expenditures, is anything more than tokenism?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the hon. member to be a little more precise because, when they speak of consultants, the opposition often include the whole adult extension course system which is very important and difficult to cut. If he could be precise, I could make him aware of the fact that we already made a cut in this program in July and that we propose additional cuts for next year. Of course, the cost of these programs is also affected by inflation, which means that the reduction is much greater than suggested by the hon. member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO FOLLOW PAYMENT METHOD ADOPTED IN FRANCE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of National Health and Welfare considered the system of family allowance payments in France, where only those persons below a certain income level are eligible to receive payments; and for what reason would such a system not be introduced in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. It was even considered by this House a few years ago but was turned down, thanks to one member of the opposition at that time.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DECISION ON SETTLEMENT WITH IRVING PULP AND PAPER—EFFECT ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to turn down the proposed 23 per cent wage settlement between the Irving Pulp and Paper Company and the Canadian Paper Workers Union, while at the same time approving elsewhere a similar increase for audio-visual technicians, can the minister explain where is the consistency in interpretation of the guidelines on historical relationships and expired contracts by the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board explained its reasoning and reconciliation in its statement, if the hon. member would care to study it.

Mr. Symes: In view of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the explanations are contradictory I would ask a supplementary question. In view of the decision by the Anti-Inflation Board in the Irving settlement to allow a 14 per cent wage increase and the statement made by the chairman of Abitibi that even this is too much, would the minister now recognize that, in effect, the companies have given up their obligation to bargain in good faith and that the unions are now forced, in effect, to bargain with the Anti-Inflation Board, something that the government did not want because it would destroy the collective bargaining process?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

POSSIBLE TAKEOVER OF WESTINGHOUSE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON APPLICATION AND ASSURANCE JOBS WILL BE SAVED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in regard to the Westinghouse matter, White Consolidated and General Steel Wares. In light of the fact that this will be one of the last opportunities that we will have to get a report from the minister on the cabinet committee recommendations regarding involvement of the province and, more importantly, the expediting of the application of White Consolidated, would the minister give the House some report now so we can determine what is happening with the application?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will do my very best. I think the hon. member will understand that as to the substance of the application I am not free to discuss it. As to the timing, I had conversations with Minister Bennett of Ontario yesterday and asked him to speed up as rapidly as he can the representations that the government of Ontario is, of course, entitled to make on this matter. I have also asked the Foreign Investment Review Agency to do the same. Attempting to set a specific time frame is difficult, but I hope that by the middle of January at the latest I will get a recommendation from the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which I can assure the hon. member, as I have assured the Minister of Labour, will be dealt with expeditiously.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his answer but I think the question that still remains is this. Can the minister without any equivocation whatsoever indicate that these jobs will be saved one way or another?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that one cannot answer that kind of question in the way he suggests. All I can say is that the government—I have also had strong representations from members from the Hamilton area on this side of the House as well—will do everything we possibly can to ensure continuity and maintenance of employment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS ON DELIMITATION OF CONTINENTAL SHELF—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the communiqué issued after the meeting in Ottawa on December 15 between Canadian and United States officials on the delimitation of the continental shelf in the Gulf of Maine area said only that there was a full and frank exchange of views and that talks would resume in the near future, would the acting minister shed a little light on this particular matter and give the House some indication of Canada's position at this point in time?

● (1150)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government's position remains as it has been, namely, that the principle of equidistance should be applied to the delimitation of the continental shelf off the Gulf of Maine. This principle of equidistance was enunciated at the 1968 continental shelf convention to which both Canada and the United States are parties.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, could the acting minister indicate to the House whether or not the government believes at this point in time that this problem might be nearing resolution and, particularly, whether or not we are moving any closer to a settlement with regard to the claims in respect of the Straits of Juan de Fuca, the Alaskan Panhandle and the Beaufort Sea.

Mr. Sharp: These are all different problems. Whether or not this principle of equidistance would apply on the Pacific coast as well as the Atlantic coast is a different matter. We believe, in the circumstances, with the limitation in respect of Maine on the Atlantic, that equidistance is the proper principle, but on the Pacific coast there may be circumstances which would decide otherwise.

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT COMPANIES REPORT VALUE OF GIFTS TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Because the new policy of the Department of National Revenue is to force employers, who for many years have given their employees a Christmas turkey, to now report the dollar value of such turkeys as a taxable fringe benefit and show this amount on the employee's annual T-4 slip, and in light of the fact that for one company in my riding the tax that the department will collect from these factory workers will be $1.50 to $2 per turkey, may I ask the minister if he estimated the extra revenue that this Scrooge-like policy will produce and because I have been asked by one such company in my riding, namely Spinrite Yarns Ltd. to deliver today to the minister a box of humbugs, which I hasten to do, can the minister tell me if this company is obliged to report the value of this Christmas gift and is that value treated as taxable income in the hands of the minister.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I must say I was surprised to find our officials had moved in to gobble up a few of these tax revenues. I think the hon. member should understand that Christmas gifts under a value of $25 are not taxable, except where the individual employer writes them off as an expense of the business. In this case, it would be the Canadian taxpayer not the employer who is making a gift of the turkeys.

PUBLIC WORKS

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER HAS MET PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD RELATING TO REDUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works.

Like all hon. members, last night I listened to the announcement that the Department of Public Works budget would be curtailed by $30 million. Does this mean the 1976-77 budget? If so, can the minister tell the House if the President of the Treasury Board and himself had discussions to determine what the priorities will be within the budget reductions? Also, will the minister respect the commitments he has agreed to in an official letter concerning the renovation of federal property, such as wharves, for example, and can we expect those renovations to be done as planned?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that there were some rather friendly meetings between the President of the Treasury Board and myself. They resulted in the setting up of a new program aimed at the fulfilment of our engagements. The programs which are already being implemented will continue to be but works that we expected to begin may be postponed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank the minister for answering in one of the two beautiful official languages of Parliament. I appreciate that very much.

According to his answer, do I have to conclude that the projects which have been developed and which are known to the minister will be achieved during the fiscal year 1976-77? It is very important for us to know the minister's position in that regard in order that we may give just and reasonable answers to those who are interested in these works.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have to wait for the estimates in February next year.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED ILLEGAL PURCHASE OF EGGS—POSSIBILITY OF PROSECUTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Has the RCMP investigated, or is it currently investigating, the case of an egg processor in Montreal who is alleged by the officials of the Department of Agriculture to have bought surplus eggs, which should have been destined for the breaking industry, from the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency at between 20 cents and 25 cents a dozen and to have sold them to restaurants at around 60 cents a dozen and, if so, can he tell the House how many dozens of eggs are involved and whether it is anticipated that charges will be laid against any person in this case?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not discuss police investigations in the House of Commons.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General if, in fact, he is aware of any such case discovered by officials of the Department of Agriculture and if so whether any charges have been laid to date in the case.

Mr. Allmand: I can only repeat my previous answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware of the steps being taken by C.F. Industries of Chicago to replace its Canadian sources of potash supply, amounting in total to 50 per cent of Canadian output, and if so what steps does the government propose to take to meet this serious situation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of it perhaps for the same reason, but possibly not as extensively, as the hon. member. I did read the news story and did hear about it on the air. At the present moment, I have not investigated the matter as it came to light only today, but I will be glad to look into it.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PREVENT ESCAPES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is he now in a position to reply to the questions I raised on November 25 and December 11 in respect of escapes from penal institutions.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member involves a certain amount of detail. I recently wrote him a letter outlining the details. I do not know whether he has received the letter. I think the answer would take too long to give it at this time. There have been some escapes in the Fraser Valley, but considering the total number of escapes there has been a reduction in the last few years.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the non-answers I have received up to the present on this matter, can I expect answers to these questions or is the minister's willingness to communicate information as inadequate as is his readiness to effectively deal with the inadequacies in the administration of the Canadian penitentiary service resulting from government policies.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my office has been in touch with the hon. member on several occasions. I have written to him giving the details. There are approximately five or six institutions in the Fraser Valley area. If the Speaker will allow me to give the details in respect of the escapes over the last few years from those institutions I would be pleased to do so.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or in his absence his parliamentary secretary. Can he assure the House that Eldorado Nuclear Limited is not still disposing of radioactive waste in the town of Port Hope or in the immediate area and does he have a report from Atomic Energy Canada Limited on the waste management program carried on by Eldorado Nuclear Limited at Port Hope and if so will he make it available to the House.

● (1200)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member that assurance and say that the radioactive material which was dumped in Port Hope was from an old building which was demolished many years ago in the mid-1950s. The Atomic Energy Control Board is reviewing the situation and investigating it. Two actions have been taken to date: first, the St. Mary's school has been closed temporarily while a new ventilation system is being installed; second, the Atomic Energy Control Board and the Ontario Ministry of Health will carry out an extensive radiation survey in the community. A report is being prepared for the minister on the matter and we expect it to be released at the beginning of next week.

CANADAIR—DISPOSITION AFTER ACQUISITION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the government has decided to exercise its option to purchase Canadair, may I ask the minister what disposition the government proposes to make of this company. Does it intend to operate it as a separate Crown corporation or amalgamate it with de Havilland, or, when it brings it into a viable economic situation, to dispose of it to someone else?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am not in a position to answer all these questions, but I can tell the hon. member that the closing date on the exercise of the option is January 5, and that various legal steps are now being taken. It is my intention to put in, for a brief period of two, three or four weeks, an interim board of directors to replace the present board, although there may be some members retained. In that period I will be making certain decisions with regard to the questions which the hon. member has raised, once I have had the opportunity to consult with the authorities in the aerospace industry and some of my colleagues as to whether there will be an amalgamation, whether we would continue to operate them separately, or various other permutations that are possible on those plans.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister whether this means that the government is acquiring Canadair without any clear cut policy as to how it is going to fit into the aviation industry in Canada, and will he undertake to make a statement in the House as soon as the government has reached a decision regarding this matter?

Mr. Jamieson: In answer to the first point, we have a clear cut plan. Obviously, it is to have Canadian control over the aerospace industry. My answers were on the rather narrow point of what would be the corporate structure which would be most advisable, and there are differences of opinion as to whether they should be retained as separate entities or amalgamated. But when the appropriate moment arises, I will be glad, either in the House or wherever is most appropriate, to indicate what our intentions are in this regard.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF PROGRAM OF EXPANSION RATHER THAN RESTRAINT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this may be one of the last opportunities I have before the Christmas season, and in view of the fact that the charade which has been going on for the last two months in Canada is pretty well exposed as being the wrong course for Canada, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration over the next three or four weeks to re-examining the whole course that the government is taking because I believe it is heading us toward a recession, and would he turn the whole program of the government around into one of expansion so as to give the government time to get at the basic cause of inflation, which this program is not doing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that, although he seems to differ from some of the financial critics in his own party, his concern is one which is shared by this government. I would point out to him that when he suggests the need for expansion, the federal government has had expansionary budgets. It has one now, and the forecast which the Minister of Finance has been giving is one of a substantial budget deficit, which means an expansionary budget. Therefore, I thank the hon. member for his support. I take his warning seriously and will give consideration to the matters he suggests, but I suggest he might have some missionary work to do in his own party.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Have any officials or colleagues of the Prime Minister referred him to the speech I made on Bill C-73 outlining four or five points in attacking inflation? Has anyone referred this speech to him for his examination as a serious proposal of how we can get at inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, but I thank the hon. member for drawing it to my attention. I will look at it.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SPORTING EVENTS BETTING

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-421, to amend the Criminal Code (sporting events betting).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in fact this bill complements Bill C-419 which I introduced recently and which was passed on first reading on Friday, December 5.
